"for the use and benefit of the city of Columbia, for the purposes hereinafter in this act mentioned, subject, nevertheless, to the performance of the conditions and limitations herein prescribed on the part of the said board of trustees and their assigns: Provided, that should the said canal not be completed to Gervais street within seven years from the passage of this act all the rights, powers, and privileges guaranteed by this act shall cease, and the said property shall revert to the state."

That it had been completed nearly to Gervais street, something more than half its proposed length, and the trustees were required to carry it on to the point where it was to empty into the Congaree river, as soon as practicable, and provisions were made therein for that purpose; that in 1892, in pursuance of an act of 1890, amending the act of 1887 (20 Stat. 967), the trustees conveyed it to the Columbia Water Power Company, "subject, nevertheless, to the conditions, limitations, provisos, and exceptions" contained in said acts, and in 1905 the Water Power Company conveyed it in like manner to defendant; that the chief inducement to the conveyance of the property by the state was to open navigation through the canal around the shoals in the Congaree and Broad rivers at and near their confluence, and develop the water power thereof south as well as north of Gervais street, all of which is provided for in minute detail by the terms of the acts referred to; that nothing has been done toward the completion of the canal south of Gervais street, notwithstanding it has long since been practicable to have done so, and defendant has allowed it to be obstructed, so as to prevent the navigation thereof north of that street, and has abandoned the completion thereof, and the development of the water power contemplated south of that street; that by an act of 1917 (30 Stat. 348) the Legislature declared that the rights of defendant in and to said property had been forfeited, and the same had reverted to the state, on account of the failure to perform the conditions upon which it had been granted, and the Attorney General and other agents of the state therein named were directed to take such steps and institute such action as they might deem proper to recover possession thereof, unless defendant should, within 90 days after the passage thereof, make satisfactory arrangements with said officers and agents with reference thereto, as therein provided; and that defendant declined to make any arrangements whatever with regard thereto, and denied any obligation to perform the conditions of the grant.

Defendant sought to remove the case to the federal court on the ground that the act of 1917 was in effect a denial of due process of law, and an attempt by legislative fiat to impair the obligation of the state's contract. Judge Memminger refused to order removal, on the ground that no federal right was involved, and that defendant could contest the validity of the act of 1917 in the state court as well as in the federal court. Thereafter the federal court remanded the case, on the ground that no right under federal law was necessarily involved.

[1] There was no error in refusing the application for removal. Taylor v. Anderson, 234 U. S. 74, 34 Sup. Ct. 724, 58 L. Ed. 1218; Arkansas v. Kansas & Texas Coal Co., 183 U. S. 185, 22 Sup. Ct. 47, 46 L. Ed. 144.

[2] Besides, when the federal court remanded the case it was the duty of the state court to proceed as though no removal had been attempted. Railroad Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 5, 26 L. Ed. 643; St. Paul, etc., R. Co. v. McLean, 108 U. S. 212, 2 Sup. Ct. 498, 27 L. Ed. 703; Empire Co. v. Towboat Co., 59 S. C. 549, 38 S. E. 156.

Defendant demurred to the complaint for insufficiency, on several grounds, the one chiefly relied upon being that the act of 1887 does not contain apt words to create a condition subsequent the breach of which would work a forfeiture. Judge Townsend overruled the demurrer in an opinion which will be reported. The conclusions therein announced are fully supported by the authorities cited.

[3] While courts lean against a construction which creates a condition subsequent, because that works forfeiture which often results in unconscionable hardship, they have no power by construction to make or modify contracts or statutes.

[4] Their power and duty is limited to the discovery of the intention therein expressed, and to giving it effect; and, if it is clear that forfeiture has been provided for and incurred, it is as much the duty of the court to enforce it as any other lawful provision, except, of course, in cases where the court has power to relieve against it, and the circumstances call for the exercise of that power.

[5] The purpose of construction is to find out the intention, however it may be expressed, whether in apt and technical words or otherwise; and that which is clearly implied is as good as if expressed.

[6] No particular phraseology and no technical words are necessary to create a condition subsequent; and even that which is expressed as a condition may be held to be only a limitation or restriction, and vice versa, if it clearly appears that such was the intention; and, when such condition is created, provision for reverter or re-entry for breach thereof is not indispensable, since these are but remedies which follow the breach as legal consequences.

[7] It makes little difference, therefore, that the statute does not provide for reverter or re-entry.

[8, 9] The legislative intention must be gathered from the language of the statute—not that found in any particular section or proviso, but from the statute as a whole—and it must be read in the light of all the circumstances, the situation and relation of the parties, the subject of the grant, and the purpose to be attained.

It appears from the numerous acts of the Legislature relative to the canal that the dominant purpose in providing for its construction was the improvement of navigation in the Congaree and Broad rivers, and to make it possible to obviate the obstruction caused by the shoals at and near their confluence. That purpose runs as an unbroken thread through the entire legislative history of the project, and nowhere does it appear more clearly than in the act of 1887, wherein it is so clearly expressed that no grantee thereunder can be heard to say that he did not contract with reference to it; and, so far as completed, the canal has become a part of the navigable waters of the state, and, as such, impressed by the Constitution with a trust for the public benefit. State v. Water Power Co., 82 S. C. 181, 63 S. E. 884, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 435, 129 Am. St. Rep. 876, 17 Ann. Cas. 343. The other purposes contemplated, such as the development of water power, were incidental and subsidiary, but, nevertheless, important.

[10] Having in mind the purposes and subject-matter of the grant, let us consider the words thereof. It was made, "subject to the performance of the conditions and limitations herein prescribed." These words are apt and sufficient to manifest the intention that the continuance of the estate granted was to depend upon the doing of the things prescribed; in other words, to make performance of them conditions subsequent, the breach of which would result in forfeiture.

Appellant argues that as the proviso to section 1, above quoted, does create a condition subsequent, and provides for forfeiture and reverter for breach thereof, in apt and technical language, under the rule "expressio unius" no other like condition was intended or it would have been expressed in like manner. The argument fails to appreciate the circumstances. The proviso expresses a particular intention relative to a comparatively small part of the work, and is not inconsistent with the general intention previously declared; it was not intended, therefore, to be restrictive of it. The general intention was that the grant should be subject to the performance not of one but of all the things required to be done.

[11] On the issue of waiver, appellant has called attention to the act of 1912 (27 Stat. 779), in which there is a provision which indicates the intention to allow such further time for completion of the work as might be fixed by the court. That shows no intention to waive the right to have the canal completed, but rather the contrary. Besides, the allowance of further time was conditioned upon acceptance of the terms of the act, and it does not appear that that was done. Therefore it cannot avail appellant on demurrer, which admits the allegation that a reasonable time has elapsed, and that appellant has refused to do the work at all.

[12] Whether a reasonable time has in fact elapsed, and whether, under all the circumstances, the drastic remedy of forfeiture should be adjudged, without giving further time, are questions upon which we express no opinion, since they are matters of defense, and will depend upon the facts and circumstances developed at the trial. There is authority for the proposition that where no time is fixed for the performance of a condition a reasonable time is intended, and no default can ordinarily attach until after a demand and refusal to perform. 3 Elliott on Contracts, § 2098. But, as said, all that is a matter of defense, and is not open to consideration on demurrer.

[13] The act of 1917 violates no constitutional right of defendant. The Legislature did not undertake to adjudicate anything, but merely declared that, in its opinion, a forfeiture had been incurred, and directed a judicial investigation and determination of the question in accordance with law. The action is to enforce the obligations of the contract and not to impair them.

Judgment affirmed.

GARY, C. J., and WATTS, FRASER and GAGE, JJ., concur.

(112 S. C. 457)

COMMERCIAL SECURITY CO. v. DONALD DRUG CO. (No. 10262.)

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 25, 1919.)

1. ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS §6 — CHANGE OF TIME AND PLACE OF PAYMENT MATERIAL.

A printed promissory note was materially altered, under Negotiable Instruments Law, §§ 124, 125, where the word "three," referring to the number of months after date payment was to be made, was erased, and the figure "4" interlined, and the place of payment was erased and changed.

2. BILLS AND NOTES §517—PROOF OF SIGNATURE TO NOTE AUTHORIZES ITS INTRODUCTION.

Proof of the signature is enough to allow introduction of a promissory note in evidence.

3. ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS §27(2) — BURDEN ON DEFENDANT TO SHOW MATERIAL ALTERATION NOT MADE BEFORE EXECUTION.

Where the signature to a materially altered promissory note is proved, the burden rests upon the defendant to show, under Negotiable Instruments Law, §§ 124, 125, that the alteration was not made before execution of the note.

4. ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS §25—PLEA OF MATERIAL ALTERATION A PLEA OF CONFESSION AND AVOIDANCE.

Where the defense in an action on a note is that a material alteration has been made, the plea is in the nature of confession and avoidance.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Anderson County; George E. Prince, Judge.

Action by the Commercial Security Company against the Donald Drug Company, a partnership, etc. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 96 S. E. 529.

S. M. Wolfe, of Columbia, for appellant.
Bonham, Watkins & Allen, of Anderson, for respondent.

FRASER, J. [1] This is an action on four promissory notes. The defense, so far as this appeal is concerned, is material alterations. One note is set out in the case, and is as follows:

"$225.00 P. O. Honea Path, State Ga. S. C.
4 "Date Dec. 6th, 1916.

"Three months after date, for value received, we promise to pay to the order of Partin Manufacturing Company, Incorporated, two hundred and twenty-five dollars ($225.00), at Citizens' Bank, Honea Path, S. C.

"The Donald Drug Co.,
"Per S. F. Donald."

Instead of "Honea Path, S. C.," the original had "Honea Path, Ga." "Ga." was erased, and "S. C." substituted; the printed word "three" was erased, and the figure "4" interlined; thus changing the date of payment and the place of payment. Both are material changes under the negotiable instrument statute. Laws 1914, P. 687. The statute reads as follows:

"124. Where a negotiable instrument is materially altered without the assent of all parties liable thereon, it is avoided, except as against a party who has himself made, authorized or assented to the alteration and subsequent indorsers.

"But when an instrument has been materially altered and is in the hands of a holder in due course, not a party to the alteration, he may enforce payment thereof according to its original tenor.

"125. Any alteration which changes:

"(1) The date;

"(2) The sum payable, either for principal or interest;

"(3) The time or place of payment;

"(4) The number or the relation of the parties;

"(5) The medium or currency in which payment is to be made;

or which adds a place of payment where no place of payment is specified, or any other change or addition which alters the effect of the instrument in any respect is a material alteration."

I. The record shows that the plaintiff was a holder in due course. It fails to show that it was a party to the alteration, if there was an alteration, and therefore it was entitled to enforce payment of the notes according to the original tenor. There is nothing in the record to show that the plaintiff was not entitled to enforce the payment according to the original tenor. The note was dated December 16, 1916, and assigned to the plaintiff December 27, 1916.

[2,3] II. There is another question that is fairly made and should be settled in this case, and that is: Upon whom rests the burden of proof that a material alteration in an instrument was made before its execution? Upon this subject authorities elsewhere are in hopeless conflict, and the authorities in this state are not specific. It was held in Wicker v. Pope, 12 Rich. Law, 387, 75 Am. Dec. 732, and other cases, that it is a question for the jury to determine under all the circumstances when the change was made, and whether authorized by the maker or not. That, however, does not settle the question as to the burden of proof. The note shows an alteration on its face. It does not, as a matter of law, show when the alteration was made. The way to prove the execution of a note is to prove the signature. The proof of the signature is enough to allow the introduction of the note in evidence. If nothing more appears, then the plaintiff is entitled to a directed verdict. In this case the signature is not denied. That the instrument has been altered is a matter of defense, and the burden is unquestionably on the defendant to prove his defense.

[4] Again, where the defense is that a material alteration has been made, the plea is in the nature of confession and avoidance. "While the note was good when executed, it has become void." He who alleges a change in conditions must show it. We know of no valid principle of law that throws on the holder of a negotiable instrument the burden of showing that it is valid.

A contrary holding would practically destroy many valid negotiable instruments. Banks and concerns doing a large business, dealing in negotiable instruments, must use printed forms. These forms must be printed to suit the majority of their customers. To hold that any change in the printed form to make it conform to the special contract between the parties throws upon the holder the burden of showing that the alteration was made before signing would be to practically destroy its value as a negotiable instrument. It may be said that this trouble can be obviated by a footnote, stating that the instrument was altered before signing. This overlooks the fact that the notation of alteration is a matter of as much suspicion as the alteration in the body of the instrument. It is just as easy to put in the notation of the alteration as it is to alter the instrument.

The judgment is reversed.

GARY, C. J., and HYDRICK, WATTS, and GAGE, JJ., concur.

LOVELAND v. M. S. NIMMONS CO.
(No. 10263.)

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 25, 1919.)

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Anderson County; George E. Prince, Judge.

Action by F. M. Loveland against the M. S. Nimmons Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and new trial ordered.

S. M. Wolfe, of Columbia, for appellant.
Bonham, Watkins & Allen, of Anderson, for respondent.

FRASER, J. The essential facts in this case are the same as those set forth in the case of Commercial Security Co. v. Donald Drug Co., 100 S. E. 359 (heard at this term). There two cases are governed by the same principles, and the judgment is reversed, for the reasons stated in the above-stated case.

A new trial is ordered.

GARY, C. J., and HYDRICK, WATTS, and GAGE, JJ., concur.

(112 S. C. 403)

CHAPMAN v. WILLIAMS et al. (No. 10238.)

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. July 14, 1919.)

1. CONTRACTS §143—COURTS HAVE NO JURISDICTION TO MAKE CONTRACTS.

It is not the province of the courts to make contracts for people, but only to enforce their legal contracts.

2. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS §26 — MORTGAGE CANNOT BE REFORMED BY CHANGING NAME OF PARTY.

A note and mortgage cannot be reformed by changing the name of the obligee, where there is no evidence that there was any contract between the parties.

3. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS §25—NOT GRANTED WHEN FUTILE.

An instrument will not be reformed where it would be futile to do so.

4. TRUSTS §206(1)—VALIDITY OF MORTGAGE BY TRUSTEE.

Trustees of a fund cannot give a valid mortgage to one having notice of the trust, unless the necessity for the mortgage is absolute and the trustees have the power to execute mortgages.

5. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS §7—MORTGAGE BY TRUSTEE TO DIVERT CORPUS OF ESTATE INVALID.

A mortgage executed by and in the name of an individual trustee will not be reformed because the cestui que trust, a church, had received benefits, the mortgage not being absolutely necessary, being executed by the trustee to divert to current expenses the corpus, or a considerable portion of the corpus, of the trust estate.

6. RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES §9—CHURCH NOT ESTOPPED BY CONDUCT OF TRUSTEE IN MORTGAGING PROPERTY.

A church cannot be estopped, even by an unauthorized mortgage by its trustees of land, to deny that the church property was liable therefor, although the proceeds of the mortgage were expended for the benefit of the church.

Gage, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Abbeville County; S. W. G. Shipp, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Belle Chapman against E. W. Williams, in his own right, and as Chairman of Board of Trustees of the Afro-American Presbyterian Church, and the Afro-American Presbyterian Church. Judgment for plaintiff, and the Afro-American Presbyterian Church appeals. Reversed.

J. M. Nickles, of Abbeville, for appellant.
Wm. N. Graydon, of Columbia, for respondent.

FRASER, J. The record shows that Rev. E. W. Williams was the president in charge of Ferguson and Williams College, for colored youths, located in the city of Abbeville, S. C. It was deemed for the best interest of all concerned to change the location of the college, and the defendant Williams secured an option on the tract of 40 acres of land then owned by the plaintiff respondent; the purchase price to be $3,000. The defendant Williams then went North to raise the money to buy the land. In Washington he met a lady who gave him the $3,000 with which to pay the purchase price of the land to be used for the college. He at once returned to Abbeville and called together the trustees and told them that he had the money to pay for the land; that the college was in need of supplies, but that he had an agreement with Mr. Chapman, the husband of the plaintiff, who was acting as her agent in the sale, by which the deed was to be made upon the payment of $2,500; and that he would arrange for the other $500. The trustees deny that they consented to the withholding of the $500. Be that as it may, the defendant Williams deposited the $3,000 in a bank in Washington and gave to Mr. Morse, the treasurer of Ferguson and Williams College, a check for $2,500, and this sum was turned over to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff delivered the deed. The deed as it now appears was to the trustees of the Afro-American Presbyterian Church. The transfer of the property and management from Ferguson and Williams College to the Afro-American Presbyterian Church is not in question. The church popularly known as the "Southern Presbyterian Church" assisted in the management and furnished some trustees who were white men. The defendant Williams gave, not to the grantor, but to her husband, his individual note for $500, and a mortgage of the land conveyed by the plaintiff to the defendant the Afro-American Presbyterian Church. Mr. Chapman died, and Mrs. Chapman, who was the sole beneficiary, found the note and mortgage among his papers. The note has not been paid. Mrs. Chapman brought this action to reform the note and mortgage, so as to substitute the Afro-American Church as the maker of the note and the mortgage, or in the mortgage in place of E. A. Williams, and to foreclose the same.

The case was tried in the court of common pleas, and a decree was made reforming the note and mortgage and ordering foreclosure. From this decree this appeal is taken, upon several exceptions. The appellant did not treat the exceptions seriatim, and we will not.

As this court views the record, only one question need be considered, and that is: Has the plaintiff made out a case for the reformation of the note and mortgage? The answer to that question is: She has not.

[1, 2] The plaintiff has failed to make out her case for two reasons:

(1) It is not the province of the courts to make contracts for people, but only to enforce their legal contracts.

There is no testimony in the record to show that there was any contract between the grantor or her agent on the one hand, and the Afro-American Presbyterian Church or their trustees on its behalf, that the obligation for the unpaid portion of the purchase money should become the obligation of the Afro-American Presbyterian Church. This would be the making of a new contract, and the court has no power to do so.

[3] (2) The second reason why the reformation would not be made is that it would be futile to do so.

[4] The donor made this donation for the purchase of the land. The deed was made to trustees, and the obligee had notice of the trust. This court does not say that under no circumstances will it allow trustees to put a mortgage on trust property, but three things must appear: (a) The necessity for the mortgage must be absolute; (b) the trustees must consent to the mortgage; and (c) the trustees must have the power to make the mortgage.

In this case it was convenient to use a part of the trust fund for other purposes, but it was not necessary. There was no testimony to show that the trustees consented and no testimony to show a power to mortgage.

[5] It is said that the plaintiff is in a court of equity, a court of conscience; and it is unconscionable to allow the defendant church to use the property of the plaintiff without making full payment therefor. The contract that the parties made has proven to have been very unwise, but the consequence of a reformation would be disastrous to all trust estates within the jurisdiction of this court. No trust estate would be safe if trustees were permitted to incumber trust estates with a mortgage, especially, as here, to divert to current expenses the corpus or a considerable portion of the corpus of the trust estate. The effect of a valid mortgage would be to endanger, if not destroy, the entire trust fund of $3,000. It is the duty of the courts to preserve, and not to destroy, trust estates.

[6] It is said that the defendant is estopped by conduct in the use of the property and by knowledge by the trustees of the existence of the mortgage. The defendant the Afro-American Presbyterian Church could not be estopped, even by an unauthorized mortgage by its trustees.

For these reasons the judgment appealed from is reversed.

GARY, C. J., and HYDRICK and WATTS, JJ., concur.

GAGE, J., dissents.

(149 Ga. 404)

ENGLISH v. ENGLISH et al. (No. 1257.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 27, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD ⇨68—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨519(1), 975—LIENS FOR PAVING IMPROVEMENTS ARISE BY OPERATION OF LAW AND NOT BY CONTRACT.

Liens for municipal taxes and street pavement assessments arise by operation of law, and do not depend for their validity upon contract, express or implied. Hence, where real estate of a ward is impressed by such liens, and his guardian pays them off, the guardian will be allowed, in an equitable accounting, to encroach upon the corpus of the estate for reimbursement, where there are not sufficient funds arising from income. The provisions of Civil Code 1910, §§ 3060, 3074, regulating disbursements by guardians, and limiting the power of guardians to bind their wards by contract and to create liens upon their property, do not militate against this ruling.

2. GUARDIAN AND WARD ⇨151—GUARDIAN CAN CHARGE STATUTORY COMMISSION AGAINST CORPUS OF ESTATE.

Where a guardian receives and disburses the estate of his ward, he is entitled to statutory commissions (Civil Code 1910, §§ 3071, 4062), unless he forfeits them on grounds provided by law (Civil Code 1910, §§ 4069, 4065); and in an accounting between the guardian and his ward, such commissions may be charged against the corpus of the estate, as well as the income.

3. GUARDIAN AND WARD ⇨153—SEPARATE ACCOUNTS SHOULD BE KEPT WITH EACH WARD.

Where a guardian represents more than one ward, he should keep separate accounts with them; and in an accounting with his wards, the guardian's accounts should show his status with each ward separately. If the accounts are mingled, the guardian will not be entitled to charge for such advances as are not shown to have been made for one particular ward. Hudson v. Hawkins, 79 Ga. 274, 4 S. E. 682.

4. EVEN DIVISION OF COURT.

The case was an equitable accounting between guardian and his ward, and was heard by the judge by consent without a jury. The case being for decision by six Justices, the court is evenly divided as to whether the trial judge erred in refusing the guardian any reimbursement from the corpus of the estate for permanent improvements on the ward's property constructed with money advanced by the guardian from his personal funds without any order of a court of competent jurisdiction. Fish, C. J., Beck, P. J., and Atkinson, J., are of the opinion that some reimbursement should have been allowed. Hill, Gilbert, and George, JJ., are of the contrary opinion.

5. DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL.

The foregoing rulings dispose of the controlling questions in the case. Under the rulings announced in the first and second headnotes, the judge erred in denying a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Ware County; J. I. Summerall, Judge.

Equitable accounting between guardian and ward between A. P. English and J. E. English and others. Judgment for the latter, motion for new trial denied, and the former brings error. Reversed.

J. L. Sweat and Wilson & Bennett, all of Waycross, for plaintiffs in error.

Parks & Reed, of Waycross, and Memory & Memory, of Blackshear, for defendant in error.

ATKINSON, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 431)

J. B. McCrary Co. v. City of Glenn-Ville. (No. 1075.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 3, 1919. Rehearing Denied Oct. 1, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨864(3)—CONTRACT FOR CONSTRUCTION OF LIGHT AND WATER PLANT—CREATION OF "DEBT" WITHIN CONSTITUTION.

Where a contractor enters into a contract with a municipal corporation for the construction and equipment of a light and water plant under a written agreement whereby some of the contract price is to be paid in installments through a series of years after the contract is completed, the effect of such a contract is to create a "debt" within the meaning of article 7, § 7, par. 1, of the Constitution of this state (Civ. Code 1910, § 6563), which limits the power of municipalities to contract debts, and is prohibited by that provision of the Constitution. Renfroe v. Atlanta, 140 Ga. 81, 78 S. E. 449, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1173.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Debt.]

2. SALES ⇨456—CONTRACT FOR CONSTRUCTION OF LIGHT AND WATER PLANT ONE OF "CONDITIONAL SALE."

Where the contract also provides for retention of title in the contractor until the contract price is fully paid, for delivery of the plant after its completion to the municipality as lessee, and for a rental of $1 per annum until all the deferred payments for the contract price have been made, which, when done, shall cause title to the property to vest immediately in the municipality, the contract is one of "conditional sale," as distinguished from a mere lease. Hays v. Jordan, 85 Ga. 741, 11 S. E. 833, 9 L. R. A. 373; Ross v. McDuffie, 91 Ga. 120, 16 S. E. 648; North v. Goebel, 138 Ga. 739, 76 S. E. 46.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Conditional Sale.]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS  $\Leftrightarrow$  864(3)—EXECUTORY CONDITIONAL CONTRACT OF SALE ILLEGAL AND UNENFORCEABLE.

Under former decisions of this court, where a contractor constructed and installed a light and water plant in pursuance of an executory conditional contract of sale as described in the preceding notes, and delivered physical possession to the municipality, his right of action to recover the property or to enforce the payment of the contract price by the city was necessarily dependent upon the agreement by which title was reserved in him, and that agreement, being contrary to the express provisions of the Constitution, was illegal and not enforceable in law or in equity. Abbott Furniture Co. v. Mobley, 141 Ga. 456, 81 S. E. 196; Sewell v. Norris, 128 Ga. 824, 58 S. E. 637, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1118; Bugg v. Towner, 41 Ga. 315; Thompson v. Cummings, 68 Ga. 124 (2); Watkins v. Nugen, 118 Ga. 373, 45 S. E. 262; Butts County v. Jackson Bkg. Co., 129 Ga. 801, 811, 60 S. E. 149, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 567, 121 Am. St. Rep. 244; Garrison v. Perkins, 137 Ga. 744, 74 S. E. 541 (3).

(a) A contrary result was reached in the cases of Chapman v. Douglas County, 107 U. S. 348, 2 Sup. Ct. 62, 27 L. Ed. 378, City of Bardwell v. Southern Engine Boiler Works (Ky.) 113 S. W. 97, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 110, and cases in other jurisdictions; but they are not controlling.

4. DISMISSAL OF PETITION ON GENERAL DEMURRER.

Applying the principles above announced, there was no error in dismissing the petition on general demurrer.

Error from Superior Court, Tattnall County; W. W. Sheppard, Judge.

Action by the J. B. McCrary Company against the City of Glennville. Petition dismissed on general demurrer, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

The petition alleges that in 1913 the City of Glennville desired to procure a system of electric lights and waterworks. It contracted with the J. B. McCrary Company to construct the same. The contract provided that title to the system should be retained by the McCrary Company until it was fully paid for. On December 3, 1914, the city found it impracticable, or legally impossible, to make the payments required of it under the original contract. The McCrary Company was unwilling to complete and deliver the system without payment. At this point a second contract was made. It recites the making of the contract of December 23, 1913; that the McCrary Company has furnished material and proceeded with the erection of the system to a point nearing completion; that under the original contract the city agreed that payment should be made in part by the sale of bonds issued for that purpose by the city and the balance as set forth in the contract of December 23, 1913; that it is impracticable to comply with the terms of said contract by having the banks carry the amounts specified; that the McCrary Company has refused to complete the system, except upon compliance by the city with the terms of payment; that the city is unable to make these payments; that the mayor and council of the city have, by formal resolution passed in conformity with law, authorized the execution and delivery of this contract (December 3, 1914). This contract further recites that of the original contract price the city has paid all but a balance of $4,851.21. It stipulates that the McCrary Company will complete the system and deliver it to the city, to be used by it, and that the city shall pay an annual rental of $1; that title is to remain in the McCrary Company; that for the balance remaining unpaid on the original purchase price the city shall give its check for $247.17, and four notes for stated amounts, due December 10, 1914, January 10, 1915, December 10, 1915, and December 10, 1916; that the rental provided for shall continue until all of said notes are paid, and that when this is done all amounts paid as rental shall be deducted from the notes; that upon failure of the city to pay said notes the McCrary Company shall have the right to enter upon the premises, remove all material, and sell the same, proceeds to be applied to the expense of sale, the debt due by the city to the McCrary Company, and any balance remaining to be turned over to the city. (The contract of December 23, 1913, is not in the record, and it does not appear how the payments were to be made.)

The petition also alleges that all of the notes given under the contract of 1914 have fully matured; that there is a balance of $3,802.04 due thereon, which the city refuses to pay; that the city refuses to deliver the property to the McCrary Company; that the McCrary Company has the legal title as well as the right of possession; that the question of whether the indebtedness is legally enforceable against the city otherwise than through the right of the McCrary Company to retain title to the property until the money is paid is not material to its case, but that upon payment of said notes in accordance with the terms of the contract it will release to the city of Glennville all its right, title, and interest in the property and otherwise do full and complete equity; that the action is brought for the purpose of recovering possession of the property, and that the court may determine the respective rights of the parties; that the reasonable rental value of the property is $2,500 per annum, and that the city is earning through its use $3,000 per annum or other large sum; that these earnings are being appropriated by the city to its uses and purposes, and that the plaintiff is entitled to have the same appropriated to it; that for the McCrary Company to take possession of the property, or to cause the same to be levied upon, without regard to the use to which the city is devoting the same, and the physical connections of the same to the property of private persons and consumers of the light and water, would greatly detract from its value; that 'it is necessary for the protection of the McCrary Company, as well as the city, that a receiver be appointed to take possession of the system, operate the same, collect and hold the earnings subject to appropriation to payment of plaintiff's claim or otherwise as the court may direct, and to sell the property, or otherwise dispose of it, or turn it over to plaintiff, as the court may direct. The prayers are: (1) For a decree establishing the title of the McCrary Company and its right of possession; (2) that the court adjust the equities between the parties, and by its process and decree compel the city to either pay the balance under the contract or surrender the property on such terms as may be equitable; (3) for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the property and operate or sell the same as the court may order; (4) for general relief; and (5) for process.

The petition was demurred to upon the grounds: (1) No cause of action is set forth; (2) under the facts stated the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief; (3) so much of the petition as seeks the appointment of a receiver is especially demurred to, because the facts stated do not authorize the same; (4) the petition does not show that the claim or demand was presented to the governing authorities of the city before bringing suit. The demurrer was sustained, and the petition dismissed. The plaintiff excepted.

Little, Powell, Smith & Goldstein, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

Jas. K. Hines, of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

GILBERT, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 376)

JASPER COUNTY v. BUTTS COUNTY et al.
(No. 1179.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 23, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PLEADING  $\S$ 259—IN SUIT BETWEEN COUNTIES TO APPORTION TAXES AMENDMENT OF PLEA, AFTER NONSUIT REVERSED, PROPERLY ALLOWED.

In Jasper County v. Butts County, 142 Ga. 576, 83 S. E. 217, it was held, in effect, that the taxable situs of the realty constituting the electrical plant of the Central Georgia Power Company was in Jasper county as to all of the property located in that county, and in Butts county as to all of the property located in Butts county; the boundary line between the two counties was also defined, so that Butts county should include the whole of the river where it separates the two counties. Afterwards Jasper county instituted another suit against the same defendants. It was alleged in the petition that a certain number of cubic yards of the dam constructed by the power company, as a part of its plant which lay in Jasper county, had been returned by the company and accepted by the comptroller general of the state, as located in Butts county, which would give Butts county the benefit of taxes on such part of the dam; whereas, the benefit should go to Jasper county. Certain figures were alleged, which showed the number of cubic yards returned in the respective counties to be in the ratio of one third to Jasper county and two thirds to Butts county. Other allegations were that there would be repetition of such returns so long as the "dam remains in its present form," and that in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits the court should decree the proportions in which the respective counties should share the taxes, presently as well as in future years. The answer of Butts county denied that there had been any improper return, and alleged that for want of information it was unable to admit or deny that similar returns would be made by the company in the future. At the trial a nonsuit was granted. On review the judgment of the trial court was reversed, the court holding also that certain evidence offered by the plaintiff was erroneously excluded. Jasper County v. Butts County, 147 Ga. 672, 95 S. E. 254. After that decision the plaintiff amended its petition by adding a second count which was in all respects the same as the first, except that the apportionment alleged was on the basis of the number of lineal feet of the dam in the respective counties. After that amendment the defendant Butts county amended its answer, alleging in substance that: (a) In Butts county there is a natural hill or abutment to which "the artificial structure called the dam" is affixed, which is as long as the entire artificial structure, and is used to hold back the water and serve all the uses of the dam and is a part thereof, and it should be taken into consideration as a part of the dam in ascertaining the taxable value; (b) the value of the property located in Butts county should be determined by the use in which it is employed. This amendment was allowed over objections in the nature of a general demurrer. On the trial the jury returned a general verdict for the defendants, upon which the court rendered a decree, which among other things provided "that the ratio of taxes to be returned to each of the counties [naming them], embraced in said return under the head of 'all other property,' be and the same is hereby adjudged to be in the future, so long as the said property remains in its present shape and form, of one third to two thirds, that is, one-third to be returned to Jasper county and two-thirds to Butts county, the same being the ratio observed in the return of the Central Georgia Power Company for the year 1916, which is hereby confirmed and adopted." The plaintiff made a motion for new trial, and excepted to a judgment overruling the motion. In the bill of exceptions error was also assigned on the exceptions pendente lite duly filed to the judgment allowing the amendment to the answer, and likewise upon the decree, on the ground that it was unauthorized by the pleadings and evidence. Held:

The amendment to the plea was properly allowed.

2. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The several special grounds of the motion for new trial complaining of the omission to charge show no cause for reversal.

3. EVIDENCE TO AUTHORIZE DECREE.

There was evidence to support the finding for the defendant; and the verdict, considered in connection with the pleadings, was sufficient to authorize the decree.

Error from Superior Court, Henry County; W. E. H. Searcy, Jr., Judge.

Suit by Jasper County against Butts County and others. Verdict and decree for defendants, motion for new trial denied, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

W. H. Key and Greene F. Johnson, both of Monticello, for plaintiff in error.

E. M. Smith and E. J. Reagan, both of McDonough, W. E. Watkins, of Jackson, and Hatcher & Smith, of Macon, for defendants in error.

ATKINSON, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 383)

CROSS v. CORDELL et al. (No. 1080.)
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 27, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE  $\S$ 183—CONVEYANCE BY WIFE IN PAYMENT OF HUSBAND'S DEBTS VOID.

This is an action brought by a wife against two creditors of her husband, for the recovery of a described parcel of land; the contention of the plaintiff being that the defendants hold the land under deeds made by her in payment of her husband's indebtedness, and therefore that the deeds are void. Plaintiff died pending the suit, and her administrator was made party plaintiff in her stead. On the trial there was evidence which required instructions to the jury, without request, to the effect that if creditors of a husband enter into an arrangement or scheme for the purpose of having his wife execute a deed of gift of her property to the husband, and for him, in turn, to convey it to the creditors in satisfaction of his debt, the deed from the husband to the creditors in such circumstances stands just as if the wife, without conveying her property to the husband, had made a deed directly to the creditors for the payment of the husband's debts, and would likewise be void; and this is true whether the creditors concocted such plan or scheme, or the husband did so, and they knowingly joined with him in its effectuation; and furthermore, if subsequently to the execution of such deeds by the wife to her husband, and by him to his creditors, for the purpose of paying his indebtedness with her property, another deed was executed by the wife conveying the same property to the same creditors, which expressly recited as its consideration a given sum of money paid to the wife, the ratification and confirmation of the prior deed of gift by the wife to the husband, and an agreement by the wife to withdraw a claim filed by her to the land in controversy, on a levy thereon of an execution issued upon a judgment in favor of the creditors against the husband, such transaction being entire, and not divisible, the last-mentioned deed would also be void. See First National Bank of Cartersville v. Bayless, 96 Ga. 684, 23 S. E. 851; Mickleberry v. O'Neal, 98 Ga. 42, 25 S. E. 933; Bond v. Sullivan, 133 Ga. 160, 65 S. E. 376, 134 Am. St. Rep. 199. The court in its instructions to the jury did not give them the legal principles above announced, therefore it was error to refuse the grant of a new trial upon the grounds of the motion assigning error upon the failure of the court so to do.

Error from Superior Court, Decatur County; W. C. Worrill, Judge.

Action by H. L. Cross, administrator, against Forest Cordell and others. Judgment for defendants, motion for new trial denied, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

W. I. Geer, of Colquitt, for plaintiff in error.

Hartsfield & Conger, of Bainbridge, for defendants in error.

FISH, C. J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 384)

ESTILL et al. v. ESTILL et al. (two cases).
(Nos. 1126, 1169.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 27, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. TRIAL  $\S$ 235(5)—INSTRUCTION AS TO EFFECT OF POSITIVE AND NEGATIVE EVIDENCE ERRONEOUS.

Where, upon a material issue in a case, the evidence in behalf of one party is positive, and the evidence in behalf of the opposite party is negative, it is error to instruct the jury: "The existence of a fact testified to by one positive witness is to be believed rather than such fact did not exist because many witnesses who had the same opportunity of observation swear that they did not see or know of its having transpired. This rule does not apply when, two parties having equal facilities for seeing or hearing a thing, one swears that it occurred, the other that it did not," without the qualification that the witnesses in other respects are found to be equally credible. Humphries v. State, 100 Ga. 260, 28 S. E. 25; Atlanta Consolidated Street Ry. Co. v. Bigham, 105 Ga. 498, 30 S. E. 934; Southern Ry. Co. v. O'Bryan, 115 Ga. 659, 42 S. E. 42; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. O'Neill, 127 Ga. 685, 56 S. E. 986; Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Brock, 139 Ga. 248, 77 S. E. 20; Ware v. House, 141 Ga. 410, 81 S. E. 118; Georgia Railroad, etc., Co. v. Radford, 144 Ga. 22, 85 S. E. 1006. Consequently the trial judge did not err in granting a new trial on the ground assigning error upon the instruction just quoted.

2. EVIDENCE §§291, 313—DECLARATIONS OF REPUTED FATHER SINCE DECEASED ARE ADMISSIBLE TO PROVE RELATIONSHIP.

Where the paternity of a child is the issue involved, the declarations of the reputed father, since deceased, are admissible in evidence, under section 5764 of the Civil Code of 1910, which provides: Pedigree, including descent, relationship, birth, marriage, and death, may be proved either by the declarations of deceased persons related by blood or marriage, or by general repute in the family, or by genealogies, inscriptions, 'family trees,' and similar evidence." The weight to be given the declarations is a matter for the jury.

(a) The case of Mobley v. Pierce, 144 Ga. 327, 87 S. E. 24, differs on its facts from the present case, and does not require a contrary holding.

Hill, J., dissenting in part.

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; P. W. Meldrim, Judge.

Suit by E. P. Estill, guardian, against the Citizens' & Southern Bank of Savannah, which interpleaded J. H. Estill and others. Verdict for plaintiff, motion for new trial granted, and plaintiff brings error, and defendants Estill and others take a cross-bill of exceptions. Judgment on both bills of exceptions affirmed.

John Holbrook Estill died on November 9, 1907, leaving a will the eighth item of which was as follows:

"And to the Citizens' & Southern Bank of Savannah one-sixth part, which it shall hold as trustee upon the following uses and trusts, namely, to pay the income therefrom to my son, Marion W. Estill, during the term of his natural life, for the support of himself and the support and education of his children, should he leave any, and after his death said income to be applied to the support and education of his children, the principal to be equally divided between them when the youngest child attains the age of twenty-one years. In the event of the death of either of said children during minority and without leaving issue, the share of the one so dying shall go to the survivor or survivors, children of a deceased child to represent the parent. If, however, my son, Marion W. Estill, should depart this life leaving no child or issue of a child him surviving, then the one-sixth part shall be equally distributed between the distributees of the other five-sixths in the manner provided in this item."

Marion W. Estill, the son named in the foregoing item of the will, died on December 26, 1915. Marion W. Estill married Elizabeth Pate on October 30, 1902. After the death of Marion W., Mrs. Elizabeth Pate Estill, as guardian of Virginia Estill, alleged to be the child of Marion W. Estill and Elizabeth Pate Estill, called upon the Citizens' & Southern Bank of Savannah to pay to her the income which she claimed was rightfully due to her as guardian and as next friend of Marion Virginia Estill, under the eighth item of the will of John Holbrook Estill. The bank refused to pay over the income to the guardian, and the guardian filed suit against it in Chatham superior court. The bank filed a petition for interpleader, in which it alleged that it had been notified by the other legatees and claimants under the will of John Holbrook Estill that Marion W. Estill died without children or issue or child surviving him, that Marion Virginia Estill was not his child, and that she was not entitled to receive the income under the will. The parties at interest were required to interplead. Marion Virginia Estill, by her mother, Elizabeth Estill, as guardian and as next friend, filed an answer setting up the claim of the minor to the trust fund, and praying that the trustee be directed to pay the income of the trust property to the guardian. The heirs of John Holbrook Estill, entitled under his will to the property in the event Marion W. Estill died without child or the issue of child surviving him, in their answer alleged that Marion Virginia Estill was not the child of Marion W. Estill, but that the said Marion Virginia Estill was taken as an infant by Marion W. Estill and his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Pate Estill, and claimed as their child for the purpose of securing to Elizabeth Pate Estill control of the income from the property in question and for the purpose of depriving the defendants of the same. The cause came on for trial at the November term, 1916, of Chatham superior court. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the guardian, and the defendants filed a motion for new trial, which was granted by the court. To this grant of a new trial the guardian filed exceptions, and the judgment of the court was affirmed by the Supreme Court at the October term, 1917. Estill v. Estill, 147 Ga. 358, 94 S. E. 304. In April, 1918, the case was again submitted to a jury in Chatham superior court. The plaintiff relied upon positive evidence, while some of the evidence for the defendants was negative in character.

The court, over objection of defendants, admitted in evidence the declarations of Marion W. Estill, made after September 9, 1912, tending to show that Marion Virginia Estill was his child. The ground of objection was that the declarations were made post litem motam. For the most part these declarations were contained in letters written by Marion W. Estill, while absent from his home, to his wife and to Marion Virginia. At the time the letters were written neither the paternity of the child nor her right to claim under the will of J. H. Estill, had ever been questioned by any member of the Estill family, so far as the record disclosed. In his charge the court instructed the jury as follows:

"The existence of a fact testified to by one positive witness is to be believed rather than such fact did not exist because many witnesses who had the same opportunity of observation swear that they did not see or know of its having transpired. This rule does not apply when, two parties having equal facilities for seeing or hearing a thing, one swears that it occurred; the other that it did not."

The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. The defendants moved for a new trial, which was granted, upon the ground that the court erred in giving the above-quoted instruction (30th ground of the motion). The plaintiff sued out a writ of error, excepting to the judgment granting a new trial. The defendants, by cross-bill, excepted to the refusal of the court to grant them a new trial upon other grounds set out in the motion, and especially upon the grounds assigning error upon the ruling of the court in admitting evidence of the written and oral declarations of Marion W. Estill to the effect that Marion Virginia Estill was his child.

W. B. Stubbs, G. N. Alford, and Oliver & Oliver, all of Savannah, and Jas. K. Hines, of Atlanta, for plaintiffs in error.

Osborne, Lawrence & Abrahams, Robt. L. Colding, and T. P. Ravenel, all of Savannah, for defendants in error.

PER CURIAM. Judgment on both bills of exceptions affirmed. All the Justices concur, except ATKINSON, J., disqualified, and HILL, J., dissenting from the ruling in the second headnote.

HILL, J. (dissenting). I dissent from the decision of the majority of the court, so far as the second division of the opinion is concerned. Whether the letters and declarations objected to are admissible in evidence depends upon whether they were written or made ante litem motam, before the origin of the controversy, or whether they were written or made post litem motam, after the controversy arose on the question at issue. The weight of authority is to the effect that declarations made by a reputed father or relative are admissible in evidence to prove pedigree, provided they are made without reference to any controversy which is about to arise as to such disputed fact. One of the earliest, and perhaps the leading case on the subject is that of William Fitzharding Berkeley, claiming as of right to be Earl of Berkeley, etc., reported in 4 Camp. 401. In that case it appeared that Frederick Augustus Berkeley, fifth Earl of Berkeley, died on August 8, 1810. During the same year the claimant presented a petition praying that a writ might be issued to summon him to Parliament by the title of Earl of Berkeley as eldest son of the late Earl, by Mary, Countess of Berkeley. The petition was referred to the House of Lords. The petitioner alleged that his father and mother were married in the parish of Berkeley, in the county of Gloucester, on the 30th of March, 1785. They were likewise married in the parish of St. Mary Lambeth on the 16th of May, 1796, till which time Lady Berkeley did not appear as his lordship's wife. The claimant, William Fitzharding Berkeley, was born before the second marriage, and was not until some time after the second marriage treated as their legitimate son. They had several children after the second marriage. The question to be decided in that case respected the legitimacy of the claimant, and that depended upon the reality of the first marriage alleged to have taken place between his parents. The Earl of Berkeley was one of the witnesses examined by interrogatories for the plaintiff, and in his depositions he swore positively to the reality of the first marriage and the plaintiff's legitimacy. Counsel for the claimant, after other evidence adduced, proposed to read this deposition as a declaration by the Earl of Berkeley as to the matter of pedigree respecting the legitimacy of his son. The admissibility of this evidence was objected to, and upon the question being submitted it was held that the deposition could not be received as evidence of the declarations of the alleged father as to the matter of pedigree. In delivering one of the opinions Bayley, J., said:

"But the father may have views of his own and a personal interest to serve by establishing the legitimacy of his eldest son. His eldest son may be of an age to cut off an entail, which cannot be done by means of the younger. There may be various other considerations in point of interest to influence the father, which, if exhibited by cross-examination, might in a great degree impeach, if not completely destroy, the effect of the evidence he has given. So it might turn out on cross-examination that he had made other contrary declarations, perhaps equally solemn as those to which he has been asked, and that his conduct towards his children and towards other persons had been such as to throw an entire discredit on his present asseverations. The learned judge then made some observations on the case of Whitelocke v. Baker, 13 Ves. 511, and Goodright v. Moss, Cowp. 591, and concluded by submitting it to their lordships as his opinion that the depositions of J. S. as evidence of declarations in the matter of pedigree ought not to be received."

Wood, B., in the same case said:

"The admission of hearsay evidence of the declarations of deceased persons in matters of pedigree is an exception to the general law of evidence; and it has ever been received with a degree of jealousy, because the opposite party has had no opportunity of cross-examining the persons by whom the declarations are supposed to have been made. But declarations, to be received in evidence, as I have always understood, and as was said in the case of White-locke v. Baker, must have been the natural effusions of the mind of the party making them, and must have been made on an occasion when his mind stood in an even position, without any temptation to exceed or fall short of the truth. Upon this principle it has been the general rule, as far back as my experience and knowledge go, to reject hearsay evidence of the declarations of deceased persons, not only relative to matters in actual suit, but in dispute and controversy prior to the commencement of judicial proceedings. Though such declarations may in some instances be founded in truth, I have always understood it to be a general rule to reject them because of the possibility, nay probability, that they may have been made to serve one or other of the contending parties."

Also in the same case Mansfield, O. J., said:

"In England, where the jury are the sole judges of the fact, hearsay evidence is properly excluded, because no man can tell what effect it might have upon their minds. (a) To the general rule, with us, there are two exceptions: First, on the trial of the rights of common and other rights claimed by prescription; and, secondly, on questions of pedigree. With respect to all these, the declarations of deceased persons, who are supposed to have had a personal knowledge of the facts, and to have stood quite disinterested, are received in evidence. In cases of general rights, which depend upon immemorial usage, living witnesses can only speak of their own knowledge to what has passed in their own time; and to supply the deficiency the law receives the declarations of persons who are dead. There, however, the witness is only allowed to speak to what he has heard the dead man say respecting the reputation of the right of way, or of common, or the like. A declaration with regard to a particular fact, which would support or negative the right, is inadmissible. In matters of pedigree, it being impossible to prove by living witnesses the relationships of past generations, the declarations of deceased members of the family are admitted; but here, as the reputation must proceed on particular facts, such as marriages, births, and the like, from the necessity of the thing, the hearsay of the family as to these particular facts is not excluded. General rights are naturally talked of in the neighborhood, and family transactions among the relations of the parties. Therefore what is thus dropped in conversation upon such subjects may be presumed to be true. But, after a dispute has arisen, the presumption in favor of declarations fails; and to admit them would lead to the most dangerous consequences. Accordingly I know no rule better established in practice than this, that such declarations shall be excluded. With respect to questions of prescription, I have known many instances in which the rule has been acted upon. I never heard the contrary contended either as counsel or judge. I think the rule is equally applicable to questions of pedigree; and the violation of it here would be still more alarming. There is no difference between the declarations of a father and those of any other relative; and if the declarations of a father after the suit has begun be receivable, so must the declarations of all related to the parties, whatever their station in society, and whatever their private character. I do not feel that much mischief is likely to arise from such declarations being rejected. This question supposes J. S. to be the reputed father; and evidence of reputation must previously be given aliunde to render the declaration admissible. If the father is proved to have brought up the party as his legitimate son, this is sufficient evidence of legitimacy till impeached, and indeed it amounts to a daily assertion that the son is legitimate. On principle I think the evidence inadmissible. The weight of authority, I think, inclines to the same side. In the famous Douglas Cause hearsay evidence of all sorts was received, but that cause was tried by the law of Scotland, according to which it was receivable. In the Anglesea Cause many declarations of deceased persons were given in evidence; but after an attentive examination I cannot find that any of these had been made after the dispute had occurred. I myself took a note at the time of the case before Lord Camden, which states that on a question of the legitimacy of the son the declarations of the mother as to her marriage, made after the commencement of the suit were received after objection taken and debate had; but not a word appears to have been said of the prior decision of Lord Chief Baron Reynolds. Had it been cited I make no doubt that I should have enriched my store of notes with some account of it. In Goodright v. Moss the objection to the answer that it was post litem motam does not seem to have been taken; and upon examination it will be found that the new trial was granted on the ground that the general declarations of the father and mother had been rejected. I am not aware of any other authority upon the subject in our law; but the distinction of declarations ante litem motam and post litem motam is clearly taken in a foreign treatise of great learning, entitled De Probationibus. I have now only to notice the observation that to exclude declarations you must show that the lis mota was known to the person who made them. There is no such rule. The line of distinction is the origin of the controversy, and not the commencement of the suit. After the controversy has originated, all declarations are to be excluded, whether it was or was not known to the witness. If an inquiry were to be instituted in each instance, whether the existence of the controversy was or was not known at the time of the declaration, much time would be wasted, and great confusion would be produced. For these reasons I conceive that the deposition now offered in evidence is not admissible."

In Greenleaf on Evidence it is said:

"Declarations made during the course of a legal controversy are to be regarded as lacking in the guarantees of trustworthiness; it is generally conceded that declarations made post litem motam are inadmissible. To have this effect, the dispute must have been upon the very point in controversy, though there is room for much latitude in applying this limitation. On the other hand, it is immaterial whether litigation had actually begun, if the controversy existed." 1 Greenleaf on Evidence (16th Ed.) § 114e, pp. 201, 202.

Prof. Wigmore (2 Wigmore on Ev. § 1484) says:

"The existence of a controversy is only one circumstance (though the most common one) likely to produce a bias fatal to the trustworthiness of the declaration. Judicial opinion seems to hold, and properly, that other considerations may under certain circumstances operate to exclude the declarations. In general, they would be excluded where there is any specific and adequate reason to suppose the existence of a motive inconsistent with a fair degree of sincerity. In Lord Eldon's words, they must appear to be the natural effusions of a party standing in an even position."

In Byers v. Wallace, 87 Tex. 503, 29 S. W. 760, the Supreme Court of Texas held:

"The declarations of the father of the plaintiff W. that he had a nephew who went to Texas, and was killed in 1836, at what was known as the 'Fannin Massacre,' was inadmissible, because it established the declarant to be the sole heir of the deceased, and was contrary to the rule that the statement must be such as is not under the influence of any interest that would be active in inducing the declarant to depart from the truth."

Brown, J., after citing a number of authorities, said:

"In pedigree, matters of public interest, and ancient boundaries the law excludes declarations of all persons made post litem motam, because it presumes that even that interest one may feel in the success of his friend might bias the statement, and deprive it of its value as a statement impartially made."

There can be no rational distinction between a case where a declarant manufactures it for the benefit of a friend who is to profit by it after his death. In either case the evidence, if made post litem motam, must be excluded as being self-serving. In Monkton v. Attorney General, 2 Russ. & Mylne, 147, where the question of pedigree was involved, it was said on pages 160, 161, by the Lord Chancellor (Brougham):

"One restriction, however, clearly must be imposed; the declaration must be ante litem motam. If there be litem mota, or anything which has precisely the same effect upon a person's mind with litem contestatio, that person's declaration ceases to be admissible in evidence. It is no longer what Lord Eldon calls a natural effusion of the mind. It is subject to a strong suspicion that the party was in the act of making evidence for himself. If he be in such circumstances that what he says is said, not because it is true, not because he believes it, but because he feels it to be profitable, or that it may hereafter become evidence for him, or for those in whom he takes an interest after his death, it is excluded, both upon principle and upon the authority of the cases, and among others of Whitelocke v. Baker. There is still more distinct authority in the Berkeley Peerage Case, where Mr. Justice Lawrence adopts almost the very language of Lord Eldon in Whitelocke v. Baker, and where, proceedings in equity having been instituted to perpetuate testimony, evidence of declarations was rejected upon the ground of litem contestatio. * * * It was then asked, as an argument for a further restriction of the rule, 'If a man may sit down to frame a pedigree, how can you receive that pedigree in evidence like an ordinary declaration, when, non constat, he may not have been in the act of making evidence for himself, by preparing a document which would afterwards profit him, or those in whom he is interested?' To that I answer: Shew me that the pedigree in question was prepared with that view; bring it within the rule of either Whitelocke v. Baker or of the Berkeley Peerage Case; prove that it was made post litem motam, not meaning thereby a suit actually pending, but a controversy existing, and that the person making or concocting the declaration took part in the controversy; shew me even that there was a contemplation of legal proceedings, with a view to which the pedigree was manufactured; and I shall then hold that it comes within the rule which rejects evidence fabricated for a purpose, by a man who has an interest of his own to serve. The question then always will be (and so far I agree with the argument of the Crown): Was the evidence in the particular circumstances manufactured, or was it spontaneous and natural? If I thought that this came within the description of manufactured evidence, manufactured for a purpose connected with the present controversy, I should, of course, at once have rejected it."

Thus it will be seen that the doctrine of post litem motam extends not only to those who have a personal interest in the controversy, but if the declarations are made in the interest of those in whom the declarant takes an interest after his death, such statements are to be excluded. This does not change the general rule as to proving pedigree by hearsay evidence, as provided by our statute nor the rule which prevents living, interested witnesses from testifying, for in that case they can be cross-examined. Section 5764 of the Civil Code is as follows:

"Pedigree, including descent, relationship, birth, marriage, and death, may be proved either by the declarations of deceased persons related by blood or marriage, or by general repute in the family, or by genealogies, inscriptions, 'family trees,' and similar evidence."

But this section is subject to the qualification that the declaration must have been made ante litem motam. Mobley v. Pierce, 144 Ga. 327, 87 S. E. 24. Section 5768 of the Civil Code provides:

"The declarations and entries of a person, since deceased, against his interest, and not made with a view to pending litigation, are admissible in evidence in any case."

The converse of this proposition is equally true. Therefore, if such declarations were made with a view to a pending controversy and in the interest of declarant's friend, they should be excluded.

In the case of Mobley v. Pierce, supra, this court held:

"Declarations of deceased persons, related by blood or marriage to the family in question, are admissible in matters of pedigree, but before such declarations are receivable in evidence the relationship of the declarant with the family must be established by some proof independent of the declaration itself." "The foregoing rule is further qualified in that the declaration must have been made ante litem motam."

This ruling is in accord with the general weight of authority in outside jurisdiction. In the Mobley Case, supra, the Supreme Court of Georgia cites section 5764 of the Civil Code, and puts a construction on our statute with reference to proving pedigree in consonance with the authorities cited in this opinion and numerous others of like import. Such proposed testimony should be free from suspicion. 2 Wigmore on Ev. § 1481, and notes.

In view of the foregoing authorities, how stands this case? At the time of the probate of the will of John H. Estill, Marion W. Estill, the writer of the letters objected to as evidence, had been married 10 years, and had no children by his wife, Elizabeth Pate Estill; and there was evidence tending to show that it was impossible for her to bear children. Under the terms of item 8 of the will of his father, Marion W. had only the income from a one-sixth interest bequeathed to him during his natural life for the support of himself and the support and education of his children, should he leave any, until their majority, when it was to be theirs absolutely. His wife took nothing under the will. The interest of Marion in the estate terminated at his death; and if he left no child or issue of child surviving him, the share bequeathed to him was to be equally divided between the distributees of the other five-sixths interests, as provided in the will. If he left children, the principal was to be equally divided between them when the youngest child attained the age of 21 years. The motive, therefore, was present for adopting a child as his own, so that his widow, who took nothing under the will, and who, so far as the record discloses, had no separate estate of her own, could handle, as natural guardian of the alleged child, her remainder interest in the estate until she arrived at 21 years of age, and then under the will her interest, whatever it was, could be shared by her mother. But it is argued that Marion had no interest in the estate after his death, and therefore no motive or interest in manufacturing testimony. As already pointed out, his widow was without property, and this he knew; and as Lord Chancellor Brougham well said in the Monkton Case, supra, if the declarant made statements, not because they were true, not because he believed them, but because he feels it to be profitable, or that they might become evidence for him, or for those in whom he takes an interest after his death, the evidence is excluded. Besides, Marion had no property of his own that he could leave his wife and thus provide for her. In the instant case the declarant doubtless loved his wife, for he so expressed himself repeatedly in his letters; and after the adoption of the child, if it was adopted, he doubtless loved the child, and he so declared. In one of the letters to his wife he said: "Yes, dear, I love you and baby, and nobody else." He doubtless wanted to see both provided for so far as he could after his death, and therefore the powerful motive of making the declarations as to the child's paternity subsequently to the origin of the controversy; and if so made they should not be received as evidence. Such declarations, in order to be admissible, as before observed, must be above suspicion. A reading of the entire record in this case will result in causing a strong suspicion as to the motive for this evidence; and if it does, under the authorities cited, it must be excluded. The fact that every letter was written and preserved is suspicious in view of the circumstances. Dr. Stothart, who had been the family physician, and who was a witness in the case, and to whom some of the letters objected to were written, and who had been the confidential friend and financial agent of Marion W. Estill, was asked on the trial if he had ever discussed with Mrs. (Elizabeth Pate) Estill and Marion W. Estill the terms of the will of Col. John H. Estill, as to where the income to "Joy Estill [Marion W.] would go after his death in the event he did not have a child." "Whether it would revert to the other heirs." He answered: "Yes; we talked about it. I possibly talked to Mr. Estill and Mrs. Estill—maybe both." This witness also testified that he was "on intimate terms with Mr. and Mrs. Estill," and he declares that the matter of the will and to whether the legacy left to "Joy" (Marion) Estill would revert to the other heirs after his death without his leaving a child or children was discussed. Here, then, is evidence that Marion had discussed the matter, and a powerful motive is shown for the adoption of a child, and making statements with reference to her in the interest of the wife, or widow, of Marion Estill, and the child after his death; and the rule excluding statements as to pedigree made post litem motam, as already shown, extends not only to the persons making the declarations in their own favor, but to declarations made in the interest of those in whom he takes an interest after his death.

Under the principle ruled in the foregoing authorities it was error to admit in evidence the letters and declarations of Marion Estill, since deceased. See, besides the authorities already cited, 1 Gr. Ev. (16th Ed.) 217, § 131; Walker v. Countess of Beauchamp, 6 C. & P. 552, 561; Elliott v. Peirsol, 1 Pet. 328 (3), 7 L. Ed. 164; Rollins v. Wicker, 154 N. C. 559, 70 S. E. 934; Byers v. Wallace, 87 Tex. 503, 28 S. W. 1056, 29 S. W. 760; Monkton v. Attorney General, 2 Russ. & Mylne, 147.

(149 Ga. 463)

NOTTINGHAM et al. v. McKELVEY et al.
(No. 1129.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 1, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

2. WILLS §602(3) — DEVISE TO ONE AND, FAILING ISSUE, REMAINDER TO ANOTHER, CREATES DEFEASIBLE FEE.

A will declared: "I give and bequeath to my nephew, Willie H. Stubbs, the two-thirds interest in all the land that was deeded to me by my father on the 23d day of June, 1873, to have and to hold the same in fee simple. * * * I give and bequeath to my nephew, Alpheus B. Stubbs, the remaining one-third interest in the land deeded to me by my father on the 23d day of June, 1873." By a codicil, executed on the same day the will was executed, it was provided: "I will and desire that if my two nephews, Willie H. Stubbs and Alpheus B. Stubbs, should die without heirs of their body, then that all my property that is willed and given to them go and be the property of [other named persons], to them and their heirs forever, in fee simple." Held, the words in the above items of the will and codicil give the land to the above-named nephews of the testatrix in fee simple, defeasible upon their dying without child or children, although such nephews survived the testatrix. Civ. Code 1910, § 3662; Gibson v. Hardaway, 68 Ga. 370; Ewing v. Shropshire, 80 Ga. 374, 7 S. E. 554; Brown v. Lane, 147 Ga. 1, 92 S. E. 517.

(a) The cases of Patterson v. Patterson, 147 Ga. 44, 92 S. E. 882; Heath v. Rhea, 149 Ga. —, 99 S. E. 298, are distinguishable upon their facts.

2. ERRONEOUS CONSTRUCTION OF WILL.

The trial court erred in construing the will and rendering judgment in accordance with the erroneous construction given.

Beck, P. J., dissenting.

Error from Superior Court, Bartow County; M. C. Tarver, Judge.

Action between W. D. Nottingham and others and J. N. McKelvey, administrator, and others. Judgment for the latter and the former bring error. Reversed.

Milner & Farkas, of Albany, Watt H. Milner, of Cartersville, and W. D. Nottingham, R. Curd, and Hardeman, Jones, Park & Johnston, all of Macon, for plaintiffs in error.

G. H. Aubrey, of Cartersville, for defendants in error.

PER CURIAM. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, P. J. (dissenting). I dissent from the rulings made by the majority of the court in this case. See the case of Wilcher v. Walker, 144 Ga. 526, 87 S. E. 671, and cases there cited. See, also, the cases collected in the note to the case of Smith v. Smith, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045. Some of the cases there collected support the ruling of the majority, but a large number of them are in accordance with this dissent, and state clearly and convincingly the doctrine upon which it is based.

(149 Ga. 379)

KNOX v. REESE et al. (No. 1223.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 23, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ACTION §46, 50(3)—NUISANCE §32—PETITION TO ENJOIN OPERATION OF PUBLIC GINNERY IN RESIDENTIAL SECTION STATES CAUSE OF ACTION.

Several citizens owning homes in the main residential section of a town joined in a petition to have the defendant enjoined from the erection and operation of a public ginnery and feed-crushing outfit or mill in close proximity to the residences and homes of the respective petitioners, alleging, for various reasons set forth, that the operation of the plant by the means and in the manner stated would be a nuisance, and would result in damages in stated amounts to their respective dwellings; the market value of each being alleged. At a preliminary hearing an interlocutory injunction was refused. At the trial term the petitioners were allowed to amend their original petition by alleging that since the refusal of an interlocutory injunction the defendant had erected the ginnery and feed-crushing mill, and was operating the same as petitioner alleged in the original petition he intended to do, that it constituted a nuisance for the reasons set forth in the original petition, and that each of the petitioners had been damaged in designated amounts by the operation of the nuisance. The amendment included a prayer that each of the petitioners recover the damages which he had sustained by the erection and operation of the nuisance. The defendant demurred to the amendment, on the ground that it contained a misjoinder of parties plaintiff and causes of action. Held, that the petition set forth a cause of action, the amendment was properly allowed, and the special demurrers were without merit.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

2. PLEADING  $\S$ 214(1)—ALLEGATIONS OF PETITION TAKEN AS TRUE AGAINST DEMURRER.

The allegations of a petition, as well as those of an amendment thereto, are to be taken as true as against a general demurrer.

3. EQUITY  $\S$ 39(1)—HAVING JURISDICTION, WILL GRANT COMPLETE RELIEF.

A court of equity, having jurisdiction to enforce a common right of all the plaintiffs to enjoin the alleged nuisance, will seek to do complete justice by granting them all appropriate relief, whether legal or equitable.

George, J., dissenting in part.

Error from Superior Court, McDuffie County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Suit for injunction by R. W. Reese and others against P. S. Knox. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Archibald Blackshear, of Augusta, for plaintiff in error.

P. B. Johnson and J. B. Burnside, both of Thomson, for defendants in error.

FISH, C. J. Four citizens, owning homes in the main residential section of the town of Thomson, brought an action against the defendant, alleging in substance as follows: The defendant is preparing to erect on a lot near the respective homes of the plaintiffs a public ginnery, and a feed-crushing outfit or mill, and for the purpose of operating the same to use a steam engine or engines and boilers; that the dust, dirt, and lint necessarily escaping from the gins will be thrown into the air and continuously blown into the residences of the plaintiffs, greatly to their hurt, vexation, and injury, and causing them a great amount of extra work in sweeping and dusting, in order to keep their homes clean and habitable, and will be injurious to the health of the inmates of plaintiff's homes; that the smoke from the engines and boilers used for running the ginnery and mill will be continuously blown into their homes, damaging their furniture and furnishings, and smoking and blacking their residences; that public gins and mills are run throughout the day, and frequently late at night, and the noise made by the machinery and the blowing of whistles will render the homes of the plaintiffs almost uninhabitable; that, if the ginnery and mill should be erected and operated, numbers of wagons and teams will be around the same, and the noise, confusion, and crowding of wagons and teams will greatly disturb and annoy plaintiffs while in their homes; that the respective homes of plaintiffs are of stated values, and the erection and operation of such ginnery and mill, for the reasons stated, will decrease the market value of their respective homes in designated amounts; and that the operation of the ginnery and mill, for the reasons stated, will be a nuisance, and will result in damage to the health, peace, and property of the plaintiffs. The prayer was for an injunction restraining the erection of such ginnery and mill. After the filing of demurrers, general and special, to the petition, and the answer of the defendant, the judge refused an interlocutory injunction.

The plaintiffs thereafter amended the petition substantially as follows: Since the refusal of an interlocutory injunction, the defendant has erected the ginnery and mill, and is operating the same, greatly to the damage of the plaintiffs in the respects and for the reasons set forth in the original petition. The amount in which each plaintiff has been damaged by the operation of the ginnery and mill since the refusal of the interlocutory injunction is set out, and there are prayers that the further operation of the ginnery and mill be enjoined as a nuisance, and that each of the plaintiffs recover against the defendant the amount of damage which each had suffered by the operation of the ginnery and mill. When the case came on for final trial, the defendant demurred, generally and specially, to the petition as amended—one of the grounds of demurrer being that distinct and separate claims are sought to be asserted by each of the plaintiffs against the defendant in one action; that the damages sought by each plaintiff are for different sums alleged to have been done the several plaintiffs by the defendant, the interest of each of the plaintiffs being several, and not joint; and that therefore there is a misjoinder of causes of action and parties plaintiff. All of the demurrers were overruled, and the defendant excepted.

[1] A nuisance is anything that worketh hurt, such inconvenience as would affect an ordinary reasonable man, or damage to another. Civil Code,  $\S$  4457. The maintenance and operation of a cotton ginning plant, in which machinery is used which separates dust and sand from the cotton and drives them with smoke into the air, and which produces noises by steam whistles and otherwise, and where the plant is so near residences that the comfortable enjoyment thereof is interfered with, and the market value thereof depreciated for the reasons indicated, constitutes a nuisance which will be enjoined. Ponder v. Qultman Ginnery, 122 Ga. 29, 49 S. E. 746; Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Overby, 136 Ga. 69, 70 S. E. 664; Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Overby, 139 Ga. 209, 76 S. E. 999; Tate v. Mull, 147 Ga. 195, 93 S. E. 212. A public nuisance may be enjoined at the suit of individuals, when it appears that they will suffer special damage not shared in by the public. Civil Code, § 4455; City of Sylvester v. Tison, 133 Ga. 518, 66 S. E. 246, and citations.

[2] The allegations of the petition, as well as those of the amendment thereto, which are to be taken as true as against a general demurrer, are sufficient to show that the erection and operation of the ginnery and mill constitute a nuisance which may be enjoined at the instance of the plaintiffs. Therefore the general demurrer was properly overruled.

[3] While distinct and separate claims of different persons against another cannot be joined in the same action (Civil Code, § 5515), yet, where there is one common right to be established by several persons against another, they may join in the same suit against him, and equity will determine the whole matter in such action. Civil Code, § 5419. The several plaintiffs need not have an interest in all matters embraced in the suit; it is sufficient if each of them has an interest in some matter common to all; and where there is one common right sought to be established by several against one, equity will determine the whole matter. Civil Code, § 5419. All the plaintiffs in the present case have the common right to have the alleged nuisance complained of enjoined. The petition, as amended, embraces both equitable and legal rights. The equitable right is to have the operation of the alleged nuisance enjoined, and the legal right is to recover damages done each of the plaintiffs by the operation of the nuisance. Since the adoption of the Uniform Procedure Act of 1887 (Acts 1887, p. 64), legal and equitable rights may be enforced in the same suit. De Lacy v. Hurst, 83 Ga. 223, 9 S. E. 1052; Cohen v. Wolff, 92 Ga. 199, 17 S. E. 1029; Vaughn v. Georgia Co-operative Loan Co., 98 Ga. 288, 25 S. E. 441; Booth v. Mohr, 122 Ga. 333, 50 S. E. 173, and citations. A court of equity, having jurisdiction to enforce the common right of all of the plaintiffs to enjoin the alleged nuisance, will seek to do complete justice by granting them all appropriate relief, whether legal or equitable. The demurrer on the ground of misjoinder of parties plaintiff and causes of action was not meritorious.

The special demurrers on the ground that the petition was not sufficiently definite in setting forth wherein the erection and operation of the ginnery and mill would constitute a nuisance were not good.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

GEORGE, J. (dissenting in part). All persons whose property is affected by a nuisance, though they own the property in severalty and not jointly, may join in an action to abate the nuisance. The nuisance is a common injury to all of them, though the damages to each resulting from it are separate and distinct. The relief granted must be such as is common to all the plaintiffs. Therefore in such action the plaintiffs cannot have judgments for the damages done to the property of each. The precise question has been ruled in Grant v. Schmidt, 22 Minn. 1; Murray v. Hay, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 59, 65, 43 Am. Dec. 773, and City of Paducah v. Allen (Ky.) 49 S. W. 343. The insertion of the prayer for the damages which the plaintiffs have respectively sustained by the alleged nuisance renders the petition multifarious. Neither the general principles of equity nor the Uniform Procedure Act of this state authorize a court of equity to grant such relief. The prayer for the damages which the plaintiffs respectively have sustained by reason of the alleged nuisance should have been stricken.

(149 Ga. 377)

EDENFIELD v. BRINSON. (No. 1227.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 23, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DEEDS  $\S$  38(8) — EVIDENCE  $\S$  353(14) — DEED NOT VOID FOR UNCERTAINTY OF DESCRIPTION.

Mrs. N. A. Dickerson brought ejectment against John Edenfield, Jr., executor of the will of John Edenfield, Sr. After the filing of the suit, the plaintiff died, and W. A. Brinson was appointed administrator upon her estate, and was made party plaintiff in the action. The description of the property in the deed alleged to have been executed by the defendant's testator to the plaintiff's intestate, and upon which the plaintiff relied for recovery, was as follows: "A certain tract of land lying in 58th district G. M., of said county [Emanuel], containing one hundred and fifty (150) acres [and not an indefinite number of acres, expressed by the words "more or less"], bounded as follows: East by the Oliver Mill branch; south by lands of John Edenfield, Jr.; west by the Bare Bay; north by lands of the said John Edenfield, Sr. [grantor]. Said lands to be cut from the place whereon I now reside." Held, that the deed was not void on its face for uncertainty or insufficiency of description, and, in view of the extrinsic evidence, which applied the description to the subject-matter, there was no error in admitting the deed in evidence.

2. EVIDENCE  $\S$  375 — PROOF OF GENUINENESS OF SIGNATURE BY MARK AFTER DEATH OF WITNESSES THERETO.

Where the alleged maker of an unrecorded deed, who signed by his mark, and the two subscribing witnesses to the instrument, are dead, proof that the signatures of the two latter upon the instrument are in their genuine handwriting is evidence of the fact of execution; and the charge of the court, which in effect instructed the jury that such proof was prima facie evidence of the fact of the execution of the deed, was not contrary to law. Civil Code 1910, § 5834; McVicker v. Conkle, 96 Ga. 584, 24 S. E. 23 (1).

3. APPEAL AND ERROR §=981—DISCRETION OF COURT AS TO NEWLY DISCOVERED CONFLICTING EVIDENCE AS GROUND FOR NEW TRIAL NOT REVIEWABLE.

Where newly discovered evidence is relied upon as a ground for a new trial, and it appears from an examination of the approved brief of evidence that the alleged newly discovered evidence was cumulative and impeaching in character, and, from a counter showing made, that the evidence is conflicting as to the truth of some of the facts claimed to be newly discovered, the reviewing court will not interfere with the discretion of the court below in refusing a new trial upon such ground. Civil Code 1910, §§ 6085, 6086; Atlanta Consolidated Street Railway Co. v. McIntire, 103 Ga. 568, 29 S. E. 766 (2).

4. APPEAL AND ERROR §=302(3)—SUFFICIENCY OF ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR AS TO ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Mrs. N. A. Dickerson died intestate. Her husband, one of her heirs at law, was a subscribing witness to the deed under which the plaintiff administrator claimed. The husband was permitted to testify that he signed the deed as a subscribing witness. The admission of this evidence is assigned as error in one ground of the motion for new trial. Held, that the assignment is insufficient. "To make an objection to evidence available in the reviewing court, it must appear that objection was made and upon what grounds it was made in the trial court." Donaldson v. Chance, 144 Ga. 469, 87 S. E. 395. It is not sufficient that the evidence was admitted over objection, nor that certain grounds of objection are contained in the amended motion for new trial. Central of Georgia Railway Co. v. James, 143 Ga. 753, 85 S. E. 920 (2), and cases cited.

5. TRIAL §=85—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE IN PART.

A son and an heir at law of the plaintiff's intestate was sworn as a witness for the plaintiff. His evidence was objected to as a whole, upon the ground that, as a party interested in the result of the case, he was incompetent to testify to any transaction had with the defendant's testate. Held, that the overruling of the objection to certain testimony of the witness in bulk, some of which was not open to the objection made (conceding, without deciding, that some of it was subject to the objection urged), is not ground for new trial. M., D. & S. R. Co. v. Anchors, 140 Ga. 531 (2), 536, 79 S. E. 153; Fambrough v. De Vane, 141 Ga. 794, 82 S. E. 249 (3); L. & N. R. Co. v. McHan, 144 Ga. 683, 87 S. E. 889 (2).

6. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

The evidence authorized the verdict, and the assignments of error sufficient to raise any question for decision in this court do not show cause for reversal.

Error from Superior Court, Emanuel County; R. N. Hardeman, Judge.

Ejectment by Mrs. N. A. Dickerson against John Edenfield, Jr., executor of John Edenfield, Sr., in which, after plaintiff's death, W. A. Brinson, administrator of her estate, was made party plaintiff. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

F. H. Saffold, of Swainsboro, for plaintiff in error.

Williams & Bradley, of Swainsboro, and B. T. Rawlings, of Sandersville, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 379)

EDENFIELD v. BOYD. (No. 1223.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 23, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

COMPANION CASE.

This case is controlled by the rulings made in the case of Edenfield v. Brinson, 100 S. E. 373, this day decided.

Error from Superior Court, Emanuel County; R. N. Hardeman, Judge.

Action between John Edenfield, Jr., executor, and W. B. Boyd. Judgment for the latter, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

F. H. Saffold, of Swainsboro, for plaintiff in error.

Williams & Bradley, of Swainsboro, and B. T. Rawlings, of Sandersville, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

§= For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

(149 Ga. 422)

McKINNEY v. POWELL et al. POWELL v. McKINNEY et al. HULSEY v. SAME.
(Nos. 1262, 1263, 1264.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 27, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EQUITY —22—EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO SHOW GROUNDS FOR EQUITABLE INTERFERENCE WITH ADMINISTRATION.

Under the facts contained in this record, no grounds are shown for the interference by a court of equity with the administration of the estate in question, and the general demurrer to the petition was properly sustained.

2. PLEADING —218(4)—SUSTAINING GENERAL DEMURRER BY PART OF DEFENDANTS GROUND FOR DISMISSAL.

The general demurrers filed by certain of the defendants went to the substance and merit of the entire petition; and having held that they were properly sustained, it was proper that the entire petition should be dismissed.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

3. COURTS —472(4)—EQUITY HAS CONCURRENT JURISDICTION WITH ORDINARY ON DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATE.

Equity has concurrent jurisdiction with the court of ordinary for the purpose of distributing estates when a proper case is made.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; Geo. L. Bell, Judge.

Suit by Charles D. McKinney, as administrator with will annexed of Mary J. Rucker, deceased, against Frank A. Powell, John M. Hulsey, executor of Martha A. J. Powell, deceased, and others. General demurrers filed by certain of the defendants sustained, and petition dismissed, motion for rehearing and to vacate judgment denied, and Frank A. Powell, administrator, made a party defendant by amendment, and amended demurrer by him and other defendants sustained, and petition dismissed as to all defendants except Frank A. Powell, administrator, John M. Hulsey, executor, and others, retaining the case as to such defendants. Plaintiff excepts, and Frank A. Powell, administrator, and J. M. Hulsey, executor, also separately except. Affirmed on plaintiff's exceptions, and reversed on the exceptions of defendants Powell and Hulsey.

Charles D. McKinney, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Mrs. Mary J. Rucker, filed his equitable petition in Fulton superior court against Frank A. Powell, Herbert A. Sage, John M. Hulsey, Mrs. Maude Powell Turner, Ernestine Turner, Atlanta Trust Company, H. Chapman Powell, Travers Leigh Powell, T. P. Hinman, W. F. Young, W. J. Houston, and others, the defendants named being legatees, or representatives of legatees, or heirs of deceased legatees, or persons having claims against legatees under the will of petitioner's testator. In his petition he sets forth the circumstances under which he became such administrator, succeeding the executor, Herbert A. Sage, who served in that capacity for a short time, and recites also the history of his administration from the date of his appointment in January, 1911, up to the time of filing the equitable petition now under consideration, in August, 1917. Among the first acts of petitioner was his filing of a petition in the superior court for the construction of certain items of the will of his testator, one of which was item 3, reading as follows:

"I give to my sister, Mrs. Martha A. J. Powell, $20,000.00 during her natural life, she to enjoy the income from the same, and at her death said amount with the accumulations, if any, to be equally divided between her children. If I should survive my sister Martha, then the legacy herein to be equally divided between her children."

In construing this item of the will the court held that the administrator should pay said fund of $20,000 to a trustee, and not directly to the life tenant. A bequest of $5,000 as an endowment fund for the Presbyterian Hospital of Atlanta was construed by the court to be a lapsed legacy, inasmuch as the said hospital had surrendered its charter and ceased to exist. And other items of the will, not necessary here to be mentioned, were construed in pursuance of the petition filed by McKinney, administrator.

In the present case the petitioner asks for a further construction of item 3 of the will, alleging that at the time of the aforementioned decree construing this item Mrs. Martha A. J. Powell, the life tenant, was in life and had four children, to wit, Frank A. Powell, Miss Ella M. Powell, Ned Powell, and H. Chapman Powell; that H. Chapman Powell died on or about January 20, 1915; that his mother, Mrs. Martha A. J. Powell, died in June, 1917; that the language of said item is such as to make it uncertain whether or not the remainder interest in said $20,000 legacy vested in the four children of said Mrs. Martha A. J. Powell at the time of the death of the testator, or whether it was contingent; that H. Chapman Powell left two sons, who are his sole heirs at law and are parties to this litigation, who claim that said remainder interest vested and that they are entitled to the interest in said $20,000 that would have gone to their father had he survived his mother; that upon the death of H. Chapman Powell, who died in Hall county, Ga., Frank A. Powell, his brother, applied to the ordinary of that county for letters of administration upon the estate of H. Chapman Powell, deceased, alleging in his application that he was the next of kin of the said deceased, and upon this application an order was passed by the ordinary purporting to appoint Frank A. Powell administrator of the estate of H. Chapman Powell; that subsequently the administrator thus appointed filed his petition to the court of ordinary, praying leave to sell the remainder interest in said $20,000 legacy, one-fourth of which he claimed vested in the estate which he represented. But McKinney, administrator, alleges that the language of the petition to sell, and the order passed thereon, are vague and inconsistent, and because of this indefiniteness there is a grave doubt as to whether or not any title passed under the attempted sale which was had pursuant to said petition; that at the time of said attempted sale Mrs. Martha A. J. Powell was in life and claimed to have purchased the remainder interest, which she alleged vested in the estate of H. Chapman Powell, deceased; that during her life she notified petitioner that she claimed this remainder interest by reason of her purchase of the same at said alleged sale; that subsequently to the death of Mrs. Martha A. J. Powell, John M. Hulsey, the executor of her will, also notified petitioner that he, as such executor, claims the one undivided fourth interest in said $20,000 legacy; that the two sons of H. Chapman Powell, to wit, H. Chapman Powell, Jr., and Travers Leigh Powell, being his sole heirs at law, claim that said sale was void, for the reason that, in the first place, the appointment of Frank A. Powell as administrator was void, he having fraudulently stated in his application for appointment that he was the next of kin of the deceased, H. Chapman Powell, and that all proceedings predicated upon his appointment thus fraudulently procured were void. Frank A. Powell filed in the court of ordinary what purported to be his final return as administrator and obtained an order purporting to grant him a discharge.

In an amendment to the petition it was alleged that subsequently to the filing of the original petition Frank A. Powell filed another petition with the ordinary of Hall county, alleging that he is one of the next of kin of H. Chapman Powell, deceased, and praying that he be appointed administrator de bonis non of the latter's estate, and thereupon an order was passed by the ordinary, purporting to appoint him such administrator; and it is alleged that the sons of H. Chapman Powell, deceased, claim that this further action on the part of Frank Powell was a fraud upon the court and upon them, and that the order appointing him administrator de bonis non is void; and to determine this question petitioner McKinney asks a ruling of a court of equity, stating in his petition that he has paid over no part of the one-fourth undivided interest in the $20,000 legacy in controversy.

One provision contained in a codicil to the will reads as follows:

"I appropriate from my estate the sum of $4,000.00 to be invested by my executor in a home suitable for Maude Powell Turner and her daughter Ernestine. It is my intention that this realty when purchased shall be made over by my executor to Maude Powell Turner for her life, with remainder in fee to her daughter Ernestine."

At the time of the original petition for the construction of the will of Mrs. Rucker, Mrs. Maude Powell Turner and her daughter were residing together in the city of Atlanta; but now they reside apart and in different states, and do not contemplate again making their home together. Under this changed condition, petitioner alleges that it becomes necessary again to construe this provision of the will; and he desires the direction of the court as to the disposition of this $4,000 legacy. He asks that the court determine, also, whether said legacy participates in the residuum of the estate of his testator.

By one item of her will Mrs. Rucker bequeathed to Mrs. Maude Powell Turner an individual legacy of $1,000. This legacy has not been paid directly to Mrs. Turner, but at her request petitioner deposited in the Sixth Ward Bank of Atlanta, in his name as administrator, the amount estimated to be due to Mrs. Turner as her individual legacy, so as to enable her to secure a loan from said bank, which she did secure; the assets of that bank were afterwards taken over by Travelers' Bank & Trust Company, and petitioner as administrator allowed the deposit referred to to remain in said last-named bank, and, when Mrs. Turner renewed her note with Travelers' Bank & Trust Company for the sum of $500, it took from Mrs. Turner an assignment by her of her individual legacy as security for the debt. When Travelers' Bank & Trust Company failed, its receiver, Atlanta Trust Company, brought suit against Mrs. Turner upon her promissory note, and sought to subject to its payment her individual legacy in the hands of petitioner and which had been assigned by her as above stated. Petitioner in the present suit seeks to enjoin the prosecution of that suit, and asks judgment against Atlanta Trust Company for an amount equal to the difference between Mrs. Turner's indebtedness to the bank and the amount of her individual legacy on deposits in the name of petitioner as administrator. Other suits are pending against Mrs. Turner, in which summons of garnishment have been served upon petitioner, and petitioner seeks to have these enjoined and an order requiring all such litigants to become parties to this suit and have their claims herein determined. Petitioner recites at length the transactions of his predecessor, Herbert A. Sage, in the administration of the estate, and the allowance to him of the sum of $3,000 as extra compensation; but, as there has never been a final settlement with said Sage, petitioner asks the court to determine whether under all the facts the estate is due Sage anything now, or whether he owes the estate an amount to be set off against this unpaid compensation allowed him by a former decree.

Petitioner sets forth a history of protracted litigation during the several years of his administration, involving, among other things, the title to certain city property belonging to the estate. He shows that this various litigation, together with the petitions filed, seeking the construction of several items of the will, consumed much of his own time but much more time and professional services on the part of his counsel; that the counsel employed by him were the members of his law firm, Green, Tilson, & McKinney; that their services were reasonably worth stated amounts; and petitioner asks the court to determine and authorize the payment of same. Petitioner also shows that whereas he did agree with his predecessor, Herbert A. Sage, that petitioner would accept the administration of the estate at one-half the legal fees allowed for receiving and distributing the estate, he did not contemplate at that time that there would be so much litigation, covering a period of several years, as it has; and that he is reasonably entitled to extra compensation in an amount not less than $2,000 for his services as administrator.

To the position certain of the defendants named filed general and special demurrers. Upon consideration of the same, the court passed an order sustaining the general demurrers and dismissing the petition, and stated in the order that the special demurrers were not considered. To this ruling the plaintiff tendered his exceptions pendente lite, and these were duly certified. The judgment dismissing the petition was rendered on January 31, 1918; and on February 5, 1918, during the term of court at which the judgment was rendered, the plaintiff filed his motion for rehearing and to vacate the judgment sustaining the general demurrer, and upon this motion a rule nisi was issued and served upon the demurrants. Upon the hearing of the motion the court reserved his decision thereon and passed an order retaining jurisdiction of the case for the purpose of deciding the same during vacation. Thereafter, February 26, 1918, the court passed an order upon the motion for a rehearing and to vacate the judgment, in which it was adjudged that the rehearing be denied, but it was adjudged and ordered that the order of January 31st be so modified as to allow the plaintiff to present and file an amendment to his petition within 10 days. Within the 10 days thus allowed, the plaintiff filed a motion, with an amendment to his original petition attached, which amendment prayed, among other things, that Frank A. Powell, as administrator of H. Chapman Powell, deceased, be made a party defendant to the case. After objections made and urged, this amendment was allowed. Subsequently Frank A. Powell and others of the defendants filed an amendment to their original demurrer, and the case was admitted to the court upon the original demurrer as amended, and the court thereupon passed an order sustaining said demurrer and dismissing the petition as to all of the defendants except as to Frank A. Powell, administrator de bonis non, John M. Hulsey, executor, H. Chapman Powell, Jr., and Travers Leigh Powell, retaining the case as to these defendants. To this judgment the plaintiff excepted; Frank Powell, administrator, and John Hulsey, executor, also separately excepted; and the questions raised were brought to this court for review.

J. Howell Green and W. J. Tilson, both of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error in No. 1262.

R. B. Blackburn, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error in Nos. 1263 and 1264.

R. B. Blackburn, R. C. & P. H. Alston, Hughes Roberts, C. T., L. C. & J. L. Hopkins, Candler, Thomson & Hirsch, Evins & Moore, H. W. Belfor, W. J. Laney, and J. W. Bachman, all of Atlanta, for defendant in error in No. 1262.

J. Howell Green, W. J. Tilson, and R. C. & P. H. Alston, all of Atlanta, for defendants in error in Nos. 1263 and 1264.

BECK, P. J. (After stating the facts as above). [1] We are of the opinion that the court did not err in sustaining the general demurrer to the petition and dismissing the same. None of the questions raised are of such character as to render them peculiarly subjects of equity jurisdiction, but are all questions cognizable in a court of law and in the court of ordinary, which first had jurisdiction of the issues involved in this case. As will be observed from the statement of facts, a petition for construction of the will and direction had, some years prior to the filing of this petition, been brought in the superior court and there disposed of by a judgment and decree, construing certain parts of the will and giving the direction sought upon certain questions raised. Subsequently, on July 10, 1917, certain legatees under the will of Mrs. Mary J. Rucker, deceased, alleging that the estate was ready for settlement, filed their petition for settlement in the court of ordinary of Fulton county. Petitioner in the present suit prays that those legatees be enjoined from prosecuting their petition for settlement in the court of ordinary, and that they be required to come into the case made by this petition and raise all the questions and issues sought to be raised in said petition and citation against petitioner for settlement; that the Atlanta Trust Company, as receiver of the Travelers' Bank & Trust Company, be enjoined from prosecuting its petition against petitioner, and be required to come into the case and set up all rights that it may claim or have, as set forth in its suit; that the question of the right of petitioner to extra compensation, and the attorneys fees claimed, be also decided in this suit; and that all the conflicting claims of those named as defendants and interested in the estate be settled in this one suit. While it is apparent from the reading of this lengthy petition that numerous questions are raised, they are such, as we have already said, as may be settled in a court of law and are cognizable in the court of ordinary under the petition for a settlement.

So far as relates to the question made by the amendment which brings in as a defendant Frank A. Powell, administrator of the estate of H. Chapman Powell, is concerned, it may be said that while there are allegations contained in the petition that the sons of Chapman Powell, Frank Powell's intestate, are claiming that the appointment of Frank Powell as administrator was procured by fraud, there is no direct attack in this petition upon the appointment nor any attempt to have it set aside. If he is now administrator, the distributive share of the estate going to Chapman Powell, being in cash, may be paid to him, or, if he is not administrator, paid to the heirs of Chapman Powell, or, if they are minors, to a guardian duly appointed. The character of the bequest to Chapman Powell and the nature of the latter's interest in the estate of Mrs. Rucker, and the question as to whether Mrs. M. A. J. Powell bought Chapman Powell's interest in the estate, raised no question peculiarly cognizable in a court of equity; and there was no good ground for the court's retaining the petition as to Frank Powell, and his exceptions to the judgment overruling his demurrer to the petition were well taken.

The item of the will of Mrs. Rucker, giving to Mrs. M. A. J. Powell the sum of $20,000 during her life, with remainder to her children, was under consideration in the first petition filed for construction and direction referred to above, and in the decree passed upon that petition the court gave direction ordering:

"That the bequest of $20,000 left to Mrs. M. A. J. Powell during her natural life, with remainder to her children, be paid into the hands of a trustee; and said trustee shall be appointed by the court upon application of the administrator with the will annexed."

Under the terms of this decree, the duty of the executor, Sage, and of his successor, McKinney, administrator de bonis non, is perfectly clear. If Sage paid over to Mrs. M. A. J. Powell money that she was not authorized to receive under this bequest, his liability is clear; and the question of that liability, the nature and the extent of it, are questions for settlement in the court of ordinary, or other court of law, and affords no ground for retaining this petition in equity as against Hulsey, the executor of Mrs. Powell, nor against Herbert Sage, executor of Mrs. Rucker. Nor does the claim of Hulsey for the estate of Mrs. Powell, on account of the alleged purchase of the interest of Chapman Powell in certain realty, raise any equitable issue or question and the court should not have retained the petition against Hulsey.

The suit at law of Atlanta Trust Company against Mrs. Turner and the petitioner affords no ground for retaining this equitable petition. The facts and questions involved may be somewhat complicated, but they are strictly legal questions depending for their settlement upon the establishment of the facts alleged in the suit and in the answer thereto and the law controlling the issues raised. Certainly the legacies going to the other beneficiaries under the will of Mrs. Rucker should not be withheld while this question is being fought out in the courts.

One item in a codicil to the will contains the following provision:

"I appropriate from my estate the sum of $4,000.00 to be invested by my executor in a home suitable for Maude Powell Turner and her daughter Ernestine. It is my intention that this realty when purchased shall be made over by my executor to Maude Powell Turner for her life, with remainder to her daughter Ernestine."

Nothing in this provision nor the facts alleged in connection therewith renders it proper that the petition should be retained for a construction of this item or for the giving of direction in regard to it.

The residuary clause of the will is as follows:

"The balance of my estate not herein devised I give to the legatees herein named, to be divided between them in proportion to the amounts devised, except Irvin Powell and his wife Urailla. I do not wish them to have any more of my estate than is given them in item 8 of this will."

We do not think the provisions contained in the residuary clause have any complications making it necessary to retain this petition in a court of equity.

In the petition there are set forth certain small claims, one by Hinman, another by Young, and still another by Houston, against Mrs. Turner, it being alleged that suit upon these claims had been filed and petitioner garnished; and petitioner prays that the prosecution of these suits be enjoined. Purely legal questions are raised in these proceedings, and they afford no ground for maintaining the suit in equity.

The claims made in the petition for the allowance of extra compensation for services rendered by petitioner as administrator and for the attorneys fees which it is alleged were necessarily incurred in protecting the estate and defending it in the protracted litigation are questions peculiarly within the jurisdiction of the court of ordinary, and they can there be determined and allowed in accordance with the facts.

[2] It is insisted that it was error for the court to dismiss the entire petition, because certain of the defendants did not join in the demurrers. But the demurrers which were filed, and which we have ruled were properly sustained, go to the substance of the whole petition and challenge the plaintiff's right to any relief in a court of equity. That being true, the demurrers inured to the benefit of all. Tate v. Goode, 135 Ga. 733, 70 S. E. 571, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 310. There it was ruled that—

"Where some of several joint defendants demur to the plaintiff's petition, and the demurrer goes to the substance of the whole petition and challenges the plaintiff's right to any relief, such demurrer inures to the benefit of all, though some may be in default."

[3] Upon consideration of the entire case, though we recognize that equity has concurrent jurisdiction with the court of ordinary for the purpose of distributing estates, when a proper case is made, we do not think that this is a case where equity should interfere with the regular administration of the estate, especially where the administrator has the benefit of the direction given by a decree rendered under a former petition regularly filed and disposed of.

Judgment affirmed in the case first stated (1262), and reversed in the other two cases.

All the Justices concur, except GEORGE, J., disqualified.

(149 Ga. 396)

MATHIS et al. v. CROWLEY.

CROWLEY v. MATHIS et al.

(Nos. 1167, 1178.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 27, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇄ 123—PETITION INSUFFICIENT TO CHARGE FRAUD IN EXECUTION OF CONTRACT.

A vendee of land, upon payment of part of the purchase price, was admitted into possession under a deed, and thereupon executed certain promissory notes for the balance of the purchase price, and executed a security deed. After some of the notes fell due, all of the notes and the security deed were transferred by the payee to his mother-in-law, upon a consideration less than the face value. When the land was about to be sold under a power contained in the security deed, the purchaser instituted a suit against his vendor and his transferee, alleging, in addition to the facts as just indicated, that some of the land included in the purchase was not embraced in the deed, because at that time it was not owned by the vendor, but it was in contemplation to be purchased by him from other persons, and it was omitted from the deed by consent of both parties, in order to facilitate the purchase of the property by the vendor; that the purchaser had made certain improvements on the property, of a stated value; and that, the vendor having failed to purchase the outstanding property and having refused to do so, the plaintiff elected to rescind the contract and offered to turn back the property upon restitution of the part of the purchase money paid and the purchase-money notes and the value of the improvements, and that the defendant refused to comply with his contract or to rescind. It was prayed that the contract be rescinded, and that the plaintiff have a judgment for a stated amount, and for such other relief as might be appropriate under the allegations in the petition. The judge overruled a demurrer to the petition, and on exception the judgment was reversed, this court holding: "A purchaser of land, who is in undisturbed possession under an absolute warranty deed, cannot have rescission and recover from the grantor partial payments made on the purchase price, or have damages covering the cost of improvements made on the land, solely upon the ground of a defect in the grantor's title. Such relief is dependent upon the grantee's equitable right of rescission or cancellation, which does not exist unless he allege that the grantor is insolvent or a nonresident, or allege fraud, mutual mistake, or some other fact which would make it inequitable for the grantor to hold the purchase money already paid and to collect the balance." Mathis v. Crowley, 146 Ga. 749, 92 S. E. 213 (2). After the case was returned to the trial court, the plaintiff amended his petition by alleging that he was induced to make the agreement to leave out the land from the contract by the promises of the vendor to purchase the land, which promises were made falsely and intentionally to defraud the petitioner, without any intention of carrying them out; that the vendor and his transferee were both insolvent; and that the plaintiff had no remedy except rescission or abatement of the purchase price. The defendants renewed their grounds of general demurrer to the petition as amended, which was overruled. Afterward the transferee amended her answer by filing a plea in the nature of a cross-petition, setting up the purchase-money notes and the security deed, and seeking to have a judgment for the amount of the notes and the lien of the security deed established. It appeared that the purchaser was not in a position to rescind; but evidence was introduced as to the parol contract to convey certain land not included in the deed, and its value. In the charge the judge, in effect, instructed the jury that there could be no rescission, and restricted the issue to the right of the plaintiff to a reduction of the amount sought to be recovered in the cross-petition, on account of the alleged deficiency in the land agreed to be sold. The jury returned a verdict, on conflicting evidence, for the transferee (plaintiff in the cross-petition), for less than the amount of her demand. She and the plaintiff's vendor, being dissatisfied with the amount of the verdict, moved for a new trial. The motion was overruled, and they excepted. The plaintiff filed a cross-bill of exceptions. Held, the allegations contained in the amendment were insufficient to charge fraud in the execution of the contract. Brousseau v. Jacobs' Pharmacy Co., 148 Ga. 651, 98 S. E. 79; Capps v. Edwards, 130 Ga. 146, 60 S. E. 455 (4). Under the former decision of this court, the petition did not set forth a cause of action for rescission or abatement of the purchase price of the land.

2. EVIDENCE ¶442(6)—PAROL EVIDENCE AS TO AGREEMENT RESULTING IN DEED INADMISSIBLE.

It was erroneous to admit evidence as to a parol agreement to the effect that other lots than those described in the deed were, by consent of the parties, omitted therefrom, and were to be subsequently purchased by the vendor and conveyed to the vendee, and as to breach of such agreement, in abatement of the purchase price, and to charge the jury that there might be an abatement of the purchase-price on the basis of such evidence. Coleman v. Barber, 137 Ga. 22, 72 S. E. 399(2).

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ¶123—ISSUES IN PURCHASER'S ACTION TO RESCIND LIMITED TO ABATEMENT OF PRICE.

The judge did not err, as against the plaintiff, in restricting the issue to a failure of consideration and abatement of the purchase price of the land.

Atkinson and Gilbert, JJ., dissenting.

Error from Superior Court, Berrien County; W. E. Thomas, Judge.

Action by M. L. Crowley against P. N. Mathis and his transferee, with plea by the transferee in the nature of a cross-petition. Verdict for the transferee for less than demanded, motion by defendant and his transferee for a new trial overruled, and they except and bring error, and plaintiff takes a cross-bill of exceptions. Reversed on main bill of exceptions, and affirmed on the cross-bill.

See, also, 146 Ga. 749, 92 S. E. 213.

J. J. Murray and E. K. Wilcox, both of Valdosta, for plaintiffs in error.

R. A. Hendricks, of Nashville, for defendant in error.

HILL, J. Judgment reversed on the main bill of exceptions, and affirmed on the cross-bill. All the Justices concur, except ATKINSON and GILBERT, JJ., who dissent from the rulings announced in the first and second divisions. Pavlovski v. Klassing, 134 Ga. 704, 68 S. E. 511; Garner v. State, 100 Ga. 258, 28 S. E. 24; Wilson v. State, 138 Ga.

489, 75 S. E. 619; 1 Black on Rescission and Cancellation, 220 et seq., §§ 89, 90; S. F. & W. Ry. Co. v. Atkinson, 94 Ga. 780, 21 S. E. 1010.

(149 Ga. 434)

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. LANCASTER et al
LANCASTER et al. v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Nos. 1122, 1123.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 1, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶329—MOTION TO DISMISS FOR FAILURE TO MAKE PARTY PLAINTIFF IN ERROR DENIED.

The motion to dismiss the writ of error, on the ground that the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company has not been made a party plaintiff in error, is not meritorious. If that company was a party to the action, it is apparent from the record and the assignments of error in the bill of exceptions that its proper place would be as a coplaintiff in error; and the plaintiff in error moves in this court to make such company a coplaintiff in error, which motion can prevail without notice.

2. RAILROADS ¶143—PARTY TO CONSOLIDATION AGREEMENT DE JURE CORPORATION.

Under the consolidation agreement of August, 1866, by the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, the Georgia & Alabama Railroad Company, and the Dalton & Jacksonville Railroad Company, and the statutes of Alabama and Georgia approving and adopting it, the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company became a de jure corporation, and was legally authorized to construct and operate a railroad from Selma, Ala., to Dalton, by way of Rome, Ga.

3. RAILROADS ¶144(1)—ADOPTION OF CONSOLIDATION AGREEMENT EXTINGUISHED CONSTITUENT COMPANIES.

Such agreement and statutes approving and adopting it did not so extinguish the constituent companies that the new company could not adopt as its own the charter with its amendments of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, and exercise all its charter rights, powers, and privileges.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ¶64—RATIFYING RAILROAD CONSOLIDATION AGREEMENT NOT DELEGATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWER.

The Georgia statute, enacted December 13, 1866 (Laws 1866, p. 124), approving and ratifying the consolidation agreement, was not unconstitutional as seeking to delegate legislative power to the new company by authorizing its board of directors to adopt for its name "Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company," and to adopt as its charter that of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company.

5. RAILROADS ¶144(1)—MORTGAGE OF FUTURE-ACQUIRED PROPERTY VALID.

The Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company had lawful charter power, when it executed the first mortgage, to mortgage future-acquired property; and the lien of the first mortgage was superior to that of the second mortgage on all of the property acquired by the company after the date of the first mortgage, there being then in existence no constitutional inhibition of the enactment of a special law in any case for which provision has been made by an existing general law.

6. RAILROADS ⇐144(1)—SECOND MORTGAGEES ESTOPPED TO DENY MORTGAGOR DE JURE CORPORATION.

The second mortgagees are, in view of the facts of this case, estopped to deny that the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company was a de jure corporation, and that the lien of the first mortgage was a valid lien superior to that of the second mortgage.

7. RAILROADS ⇐144(1)—SECOND MORTGAGEES ESTOPPED TO DENY STATEMENTS IN FIRST MORTGAGE.

As privies in estate of the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, the second mortgagees are estopped to deny the statements of material facts made by that company in the first mortgage.

8. RAILROADS ⇐144(1)—SECOND MORTGAGEES ESTOPPED TO DENY RECITAL OF FACTS IN FIRST MORTGAGE.

They are also estopped to deny the recital of material facts made by the company in the second mortgage.

9. RAILROADS ⇐144(2)—SECOND MORTGAGEES ESTOPPED BY LACHES TO FORECLOSE CANNOT ENFORCE LEGAL RIGHTS.

The second mortgagees are also estopped from foreclosing their mortgage in equity, because by the lapse of time and their laches it would be inequitable, in view of the facts of the case, to allow them to enforce the legal rights claimed by them.

10. RAILROADS ⇐144(2)—SECOND MORTGAGEES BY LAPSE OF TIME AND LACHES ESTOPPED TO REDEEM FROM FORECLOSURE OF FIRST MORTGAGE.

Even if the right of redemption by a mortgagor, or his privies in estate, exists in this state, as to realty sold under a foreclosure in equity to which the mortgagor or his privy was not a party, the second mortgagees, under the facts of this case, on account of the lapse of time and because of their laches, are barred from exercising such alleged right.

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; W. J. Nunnally, Judge.

Suit by G. D. Lancaster for himself and others similarly situated who may join him against the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company to foreclose a trust deed or second mortgage, in which Samuel W. Winn intervened and was made a party plaintiff, and in which the Southern Railway Company petitioned for leave to intervene and was made a party defendant. Cause referred to an auditor to whose report plaintiffs excepted, and on a hearing, the court sustained in whole nearly all of the exceptions and several of the exceptions in part and rendered a decree of foreclosure and sale, and the Southern Railway Company excepted and brings error, and plaintiffs and those joining them by intervention in the cause take a cross-bill of exceptions. Reversed on main bill of exceptions, and affirmed on cross-bill.

George D. Lancaster, for himself and others similarly situated who might join him in the action, brought an equitable petition in Floyd superior court, returnable to the July term, 1910, against the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, to foreclose a trust deed or mortgage dated July 1, 1870, given to James P. Wallace as trustee, on the railroad of the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, extending from Selma, Ala., via Rome, to Dalton, Ga., with all its appurtenances, etc., to secure an issue of $6,000,000 of second mortgage bonds and the interest thereon; the foreclosure sought being upon the railroad and all property connected therewith of the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company situated in the state of Georgia. The bonds matured at the end of 30 years, with the stipulation for earlier maturity upon default in payment of interest, etc. Lancaster alleged that he was the holder and owner of 62 of such bonds, numbered as set forth in the petition, together with the interest coupons thereto attached, aggregating, January 1, 1910, $311,187.08. Wallace died in 1897, and had no successor as trustee. The petition alleged, upon information and belief, that the board of directors of the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company last elected had for many years failed to hold meetings, maintain an office, or otherwise perform duties; and that, if there were any directors of such company in office, their names and addresses were unknown. Service of the petition was sought to be effected by publication. On October 5, 1910, Samuel W. Winn intervened in the case, claiming to be the owner of 100 of such bonds, numbered as set forth. He was made a party plaintiff.

On October 27, 1910, the Southern Railway Company filed its petition for leave to intervene in the case, claiming title to the railroad and all the property upon which the plaintiffs sought to foreclose, and that its title was derived by virtue of judicial sale to lines of road and property in Georgia, made on November 3, 1874, by virtue of a decree previously rendered in the same year, in Floyd superior court, in an equitable action brought by James Boorman Johnston and John A. Stewart, as trustees, to foreclose a mortgage given to them as trustees, on October 1, 1867, by the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company on all of its lines of roads both in Georgia and Alabama, extending from Selma, Ala., via Rome, Ga., to Dalton, Ga., to secure $5,000,000 of bonds with interest thereon. The petition for intervention alleged that the commissioners appointed to make the sale, which sale was duly confirmed, executed a deed to Cowan to all of the property sold, and further set up that a good title was acquired to the properties by Cowan, who, with certain associates, reorganized the railroad properties in Georgia, incorporating themselves as the Georgia Southern Railroad Company, such reorganization being under an act of the Georgia Legislature approved March 2, 1875 (Laws 1875, p. 223); that subsequently the Georgia Southern Railroad Company, under a power given by such act, sold the line of road to the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia Railroad Company, a corporation of the state of Tennessee, the southern terminus of which at the time was Dalton, Ga.; that the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia Railroad Company was later sold under foreclosure, and the purchasers thereof reorganized under the corporate name of the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia Railway Company, the property, including the lines of the old Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company in Georgia, having passed by deed dated June 28, 1886, to the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia Railway Company; that the last-named company became insolvent, and all of its properties were sold under foreclosure on July 7, 1894, and on July 14, 1894, the special master of the court in which the foreclosure was had, and by which the sale was decreed and ordered, conveyed all of the properties, real and personal, of every kind whatsoever, to certain purchasers for the Southern Railway Company, and in this way the Southern Railway Company secured the lines of railroad of the old Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company in Georgia; that it acquired legal title to the same, and had been in rightful and adverse possession thereof from July 14, 1894, up to the time of filing the intervention; that the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company had long since gone out of existence; that it had neither officers nor agents who could answer in the cause; that the proceeding begun by Lancaster, if allowed to continue, would be in effect ex parte, would necessarily result in default on the part of the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, and a decree of foreclosure would be inevitable; that such a situation would cause incalculable inconvenience, harassment, and damage to the Southern Railway Company, in that its title would be clouded, securities which it had issued upon the faith of the property would be affected, and its credit damaged; and that a decree of foreclosure and sale would, in all probability, result in the seizure of the properties and in an interference with its possession, to its manifest hurt, damage, and inconvenience.

The court, after a hearing, granted an order making the Southern Railway Company a party defendant to the action. (Plaintiffs filed exceptions pendente lite to this order, but error was not assigned thereon in the Supreme Court.) The cause was referred to Hon. Joel Branham as auditor, with instructions to hear and pass upon all questions of fact and law. The auditor made and filed a report to which Lancaster and his coplaintiffs filed exceptions. These exceptions came on to be heard before Hon. W. J. Nunnally, Judge of the city court of Floyd county, who took jurisdiction by reason of the fact that the judge of the superior court held himself to be disqualified.

The Southern Railway Company made a motion to strike all the exceptions of fact and law, which motion was overruled, to which ruling that company excepted pendente lite; but the exceptions pendente lite were expressly withdrawn in the brief of counsel for the Southern Railway Company filed in this court.

On the hearing the court sustained in whole nearly all of the exceptions of law and of fact to the auditor's report, and several of such exceptions in part. A decree was then rendered giving effect to the rulings and decisions made by the court, and a bill of exceptions was sued out by the Southern Railway Company. A cross-bill of exceptions by Lancaster and the other plaintiffs who joined him in the cause through interventions was also sued out, basing error upon the decision of the court to the effect that the auditor correctly held that the petitioners did not have the right to redeem the mortgaged property upon the terms offered. The Judge in the decree stated that there were no conflicting issues of fact to be submitted to a jury; and, from an examination of what are called exceptions to the findings of fact by the auditor, it appears that practically all such findings were really in effect rulings of law rather than of fact; and, moreover, the brief for Lancaster et al., filed in the Supreme Court, states that the evidence was not conflicting.

The facts as they appear in the record, and material to be here considered, are to the following effect: The act of the Legislature of Alabama approved March 4, 1848 (Acts 1848, p. 265), chartering the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, and the amendment thereto approved November 4, 1862 (Laws 1862, p. 143), authorized that company to construct and operate a line of railroad from Selma, Ala., through certain designated counties in the state of Alabama, to the Georgia state line, and in the direction of Rome in the state of Georgia, and to connect with a railroad to be constructed within the state of Georgia from a point at or near Rome. An act of the Legislature of Alabama, approved February 20, 1866, amending the charter of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company (Acts 1865-66, p. 340), in the third section thereof—

Gave the company acting by its board of directors the power and right to connect, unite, and consolidate that company with any other railroad company or companies in that state or any other state "on such terms as may be agreed on by and with the interested and contracting companies. * * * The objects of these provisions being to promote and facilitate, as far as practicable, connections between the railroads and system of roads in this state, and the railroads and system of roads in adjacent states, constructed and to be constructed. All the rights, powers and privileges possessed and to be possessed by the said Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, under their act of incorporation and other acts, may and shall be extended and applicable to all railroads and railroad companies which may become connected, or united, or consolidated with the road, or stock, or franchise, in whole or in part, of said Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, or any road to be constructed by them under the provisions of this act, so far as said rights, powers and privileges may be pertinent or applicable, or can be rendered pertinent or applicable to the companies or roads which may be united or consolidated with [it] in whole or in part. All contracts or agreements which may be made by said company with any other railroad company or companies, in pursuance of the provisions of this act, and having in view the objects and purposes of these enactments as above declared (that in promotion of connections between the railroads of this and any other states,) shall be valid according to the terms thereof, so far as the same shall not be contrary to law."

This act provides for the issuance of bonds by the corporation, and that—

"The said company, acting by their board of directors, shall have power to create a lien or liens by mortgage, or deed or deeds of trust, in such form and with such provisions and conditions as their board of directors shall prescribe, on all the property, means, effects, and rights of every kind, or any part thereof, possessed and to be possessed by said company, which shall be valid and binding according to the tenor and effect of such deed."

The Legislature of Georgia, on February 18, 1854 (Acts 1853-54, p. 438), chartered the Georgia & Alabama Railroad Company, with power to build a railroad from the city of Rome in Floyd county, Ga., to the Alabama state line, to connect with any railroad which might be chartered and authorized to be built by the state of Alabama to the Georgia line. On February 14, 1866, an act was passed by the Georgia Legislature (Acts 1865-66, p. 210) amending the charter of the Georgia & Alabama Railroad Company. In section 6 of this act, it was provided that this corporation could consolidate its road, stock, and franchise with those of the Dalton & Jacksonville Railroad Company, a corporation of this state, and any other railroad company of Georgia or an adjacent state, to such extent and on such terms as might be agreed on by the companies entering into the agreements of consolidation. In the fourth section of this act, power was given the corporation, acting through its board of directors, to issue bonds "in such form and for such amounts, as may be deemed necessary in providing means for the completion and equipment of the railroad authorized to be constructed by them"; and to secure such bonds by mortgages or deeds of trust "covering the railroad of said company as constructed and to be constructed, and including all other property and rights possessed and to be possessed by said company," etc.

On February 18, 1854, the Legislature of Georgia (Acts 1853-54, p. 420) chartered the Dalton & Gadsden Railroad Company, with power to construct and operate a railroad from or near Dalton, Ga., along and over the most eligible route to the Alabama state line in the direction of Gadsden, Ala., on the Coosa river. On December 15, 1859, an act was passed by the Legislature of Georgia (Acts 1859, pp. 335-338) authorizing the Dalton & Gadsden Railroad Company to consolidate with any railroad company chartered by the state of Alabama; the consolidated company to be known as the Dalton & Gadsden Railroad Company. In the same year the Legislature of Georgia changed the name of the Dalton & Gadsden Railroad Company to that of the Dalton & Jacksonville Railroad Company. Acts 1859, p. 335.

By act of the Legislature of Georgia of December 19, 1860 (Acts 1860, p. 191), the Dalton & Jacksonville Railroad Company and the Georgia & Alabama Railroad Company were authorized to consolidate, and when consolidated to have all the powers, privileges, and immunities to which either of said companies were then entitled by their acts of incorporation; and the Dalton & Jacksonville Railroad Company was further authorized by that act to connect with, unite, and become consolidated with any railroad companies in the states of North Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama, as by the laws of the states of North Carolina and Alabama may be authorized to unite and be consolidated with them; and it was provided that the said companies thus consolidated should have all the rights, powers, and privileges of the said companies thus consolidating.

The act of February 23, 1866, of the Legislature of Georgia (Acts 1865-66, p. 209), amending the charter of the Dalton & Jacksonville Railroad Company, provided, in the sixth section, a method by which the corporation could raise money for the construction and completing of its line. It provided that the board of directors could issue bonds and could make mortgages or deeds of trust, creating liens thereby upon the railroad "as constructed and to be constructed, and all the other property and rights possessed and to be possessed, by said company, including their franchise," etc. On February 23, 1866, the Legislature of Georgia further amended the charter of the Dalton & Jacksonville Railroad Company (Acts 1865-66, p. 207), and in the eighth section of this act provided for the consolidation of its stock, road, and franchise with the stock, road, and franchise of the Georgia & Alabama Railroad and any other railroad of Georgia or any adjacent state, on such terms and to such extent as might be agreed upon by the companies entering into consolidation agreements.

On August 8, 15, and 16, 1866, a tripartite consolidation agreement was entered into between the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, the Dalton & Jacksonville Railroad Company, and the Georgia & Alabama Railroad Company. The material parts of this agreement are set forth in the opinion, infra. On December 13, 1866, the Legislature of Georgia passed an act approving and ratifying this consolidation agreement. This act is set out in the opinion.

On February 8, 1867 (Acts 1866-67, p. 379), the Legislature of Alabama passed an act ratifying and approving the consolidation of the Dalton & Jacksonville Railroad Company, and the Georgia & Alabama Railroad Company, both of the state of Georgia, with the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, of the state of Alabama, so as to form one consolidated railroad company for the construction and use of the railroad to be constructed from Blue Mountain in the state of Alabama, and a continuation of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, by way of Rome, to Dalton in the state of Georgia; the terms of this act of the Alabama Legislature being to the same effect as that of the Legislature of Georgia above referred to.

On October 1, 1867, the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company executed and delivered to James Boorman Johnston and John A. Stewart, as trustees, a mortgage on its line of railroad from Selma, Ala., by way of Rome, Ga., to Dalton, Ga., together with all of the appurtenances of the road. This mortgage contained a detailed statement of the history of the creation of the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, including the charter rights, powers, and privileges of the constituent companies, the consolidation agreement, and the statutes approving and ratifying the same, and the adoption by the consolidated company of the name of "Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company," as well as the adoption of the charter of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, and other material facts referred to in the opinion. This mortgage was duly recorded.

On July 1, 1870, the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company executed and delivered to James P. Wallace, as trustee, a mortgage on all of the same property described and set forth in the first mortgage dated October 1, 1867, to secure a series of bonds executed by the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company aggregating $8,000,000, due July 1, 1900; these bonds being designated on the face thereof as second mortgage bonds. There was, both in the mortgage and in the bonds, a provision for their earlier maturity in case of default by the mortgagor in the payment of interest, taxes, etc. This mortgage contained, among others, recitals of all the material facts embodied in the first mortgage, as hereinbefore referred to. One of the recitals was to the effect that the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company was, at the time of the execution of the first mortgage, a corporation in and duly organized under the laws of the states of Alabama and Georgia. Other recitals were that the said three railroad companies were the owners of the respective portions of said Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company mentioned in said second mortgage, and that said Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company was the owner of the entire line of railroad constructed and to be constructed from Selma, in the state of Alabama, to Dalton, Ga., as described in said second mortgage; that said three pre-existing railroad companies, in conformity with express power and authority conferred upon them by the states of Georgia and Alabama, respectively, made and entered into an agreement whereby said three railroad companies became and were lawfully united and consolidated into one company existing and to exist and to organize under the laws of said states, and said consolidated company did business under the name and style of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company for a certain period of time and until the adoption of the name of the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company mentioned in said second mortgage; that said consolidation agreement of said railroad companies was expressly ratified and approved by the Legislature of said states of Georgia and Alabama, respectively; that said consolidated company was duly authorized and empowered to adopt the corporate name and style of the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, and also to adopt as its charter the charter of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, with all of its amendments and with all of the rights and powers granted to it in said charter and in the amendments thereto; that said railroad company adopted said charter and became a body corporate and politic, having and using a common seal, and as such it became and was vested with and entitled to all the rights, powers, and privileges, franchises, rights of way, and other property which had theretofore belonged to or was vested in or owned or possessed or claimed by either and each of the three above-named railroad companies; that said three railroad companies, with intent to give full power and effect to the terms of the consolidation, executed and delivered to the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company deeds or conveyances of all the railroads, franchises, rights, lands, and property of said companies; that said Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company was the owner of the entire railroad, franchises, rights of way, ties, rails, and other property appurtenant to said railroad, acquired or to be acquired for the construction and operation thereof, as described in said second mortgage; that said second mortgage was given subject to all mortgages that had been theretofore made and duly recorded by the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, on the same property; that said railroad extended from Selma, Ala., in a northeasterly direction, continuously through that state 172 miles, more or less, to the line of the state of Georgia, thence in the state of Georgia through the counties named therein to the town of Dalton, 63 miles, more or less, making, at the point of connection with the Western Atlantic Railroad and the East Tennessee & Georgia Railroad, the entire line thereof 235 miles more or less; that all rights of way and other property appurtenant to said railroad, owned and to be owned or used and acquired by the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company in and for the construction repairs, renewals, operation, and improvement thereof, constituted a part of the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company; that the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company also owned all charter rights, privileges, and franchises then possessed, or that might thereafter be acquired, by said company, appurtenant to said railroad, completed or to be completed, with all other property, of every kind either in law or in equity; that a series of 6,000 bonds secured by said second mortgage was so denominated in the resolution of the board of directors authorizing the issue of the mortgage, so denominated in the deed of trust, and so denominated in the face of the bonds; and that both of said mortgages covered the same property. This mortgage contained a general warranty, and it was duly recorded.

When the first mortgage was executed, the Georgia & Alabama Railroad Company held eight deeds to rights of way over designated lots of land in the state of Georgia. The Dalton & Gadsden Railroad Company, which, prior to the execution of the first mortgage, had become the Dalton & Jacksonville Railroad Company, had 31 conveyances to rights of way over designated lots of land in the state of Georgia, and the Dalton & Jacksonville Railroad Company at that time had two deeds to rights of way over designated lots of land in the state of Georgia. When the second mortgage was executed, the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company held 56 deeds to rights of way over designated lots of land in the state of Georgia, all executed subsequently to the date of the first mortgage.

100 S.E.—25

On March 1, 1873, Johnston and Stewart as trustees under the first mortgage, brought an equitable action returnable to the July term, 1873, of Floyd superior court, against the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, for the foreclosure of the first mortgage on the entire line of railroad from Selma, Ala., to Dalton, Ga., and all appurtenances, fixtures, rolling stock, etc., of such railroad; praying for the appointment of a receiver, and the grant of an injunction. This action was consolidated with a proceeding which had been begun against the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company by Alfred Shorter, for the foreclosure of a mortgage held by him and given by the same mortgagor on the same property in Georgia. Upon the motion of the plaintiffs in both bills a receiver was appointed for the lines in Georgia. A similar bill was brought in March, 1873, by the trustees in the first mortgage, and against the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, and for the same purpose as the Georgia bill, in the chancery court of Dallas county, Ala. The Alabama court having appointed a receiver, the Georgia court appointed the same person as receiver. A decree was rendered by the Alabama court as prayed for. A verdict and decree in the Georgia case were rendered, by virtue of which all the railroad lines and other property connected therewith of the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company were sold by commissioners appointed by the court in the year 1874, at which sale Cowan became the purchaser of all the properties; and a commissioners' deed was executed and delivered to him for such property on November 6, 1874. A statement as to the successorship of the Southern Railway Company to Cowan's title was shown to be as appears hereinbefore set forth in the petition of that company to intervene in the present case.

It is unnecessary to set forth in detail all of the auditor's findings of fact and of law, the exceptions thereto, and the rulings of the court thereon. It will suffice to say, in brief, that the auditor's findings were, in effect, that the three consolidating companies, under their respective charters, were authorized to lay out, construct, and operate their respective lines of railroad as designated, and to connect and consolidate with any other railroad corporation or corporations in the states of Alabama and Georgia; that each of such companies had power to mortgage future-acquired property to be used in connection with the construction and operation of its railroad; that the consolidation agreement executed by the three railroad companies was duly and legally made by them under their respective charters, and such agreement was duly and legally approved and ratified by the Legislatures of Georgia and Alabama; that under such legislative authority the name of the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, and the charter of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, were duly and legally adopted as the name and charter of the consolidated company; that the consolidated company—the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company—had legal authority to mortgage both property owned or possessed by it, or to which it had the right of possession, and also future-acquired property, for the purpose of constructing and operating its lines of railroad; that the first mortgage legally created a lien on all the line of railroad from Selma, Ala., by way of Rome, to Dalton, and all its appurtenances, fixtures, etc., as set out in that mortgage; that the first and second mortgages covered the same property; that the mortgagees in the second mortgage had both constructive and actual notice of the first mortgage, and therefore of all of its recitals, and were estopped to deny the recitals, both in the first and in the second mortgage, they being practically the same; that they were also estopped by their laches to foreclose the second mortgage; that the second mortgage could not be foreclosed against the property therein described, and therefore that the holders of the bonds secured by the second mortgage did not have the right to redeem the property at Cowan's bid, with interest thereon.

The court, in effect, sustained the exceptions to all such findings of the auditor, except as to the right of the petitioners to redeem the property at Cowan's bid, with interest thereon at 7 per cent., less the earnings of the property. The court decreed that the respective plaintiffs, the second mortgagees, are entitled to recover stated amounts of principal and interest; and that the Southern Railway Company pay into court $172,000 principal, and $1,575,532.60 interest, and all future interest at 7 per cent., within three months from the date of the decree, and that it pay all court costs, and, upon failure to pay as directed, the second mortgage is foreclosed, and all equity of redemption of the Southern Railway Company is barred as to all the Georgia end of the railroad, real estate, and improvements thereon acquired by the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company subsequently to the execution of the first mortgage; that the clerk of the court make the sale at public outcry; that the plaintiffs have no right to redeem so much of the property as was held by the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company at the date of the execution of the first mortgage; that the second mortgage is a first lien on all the property ordered to be sold; that if the Southern Railway Company pay into court, as ordered, the sums of money designated, then the case will be held open for future direction and decree. The Southern Railway Company filed exceptions to all the findings of the court made against it; and the plaintiffs filed a cross-bill of exceptions, assigning error upon the ruling of the court that they did not have the right to redeem upon the terms offered.

L. E. Jeffries, of Richmond, Va., Maddox, McCamy & Shumate, of Dalton, McDaniel & Black, of Atlanta, and Hamilton & Hamilton, of Rome, for plaintiffs in error.

Dean & Dean, Maddox & Doyal, and R. A. Denny, all of Rome, Louis Marshall, of New York City, and G. H. Aubrey, of Cartersville, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The defendants in error move in this court to dismiss the main bill of exceptions, on the ground that the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company is not made a party to the bill of exceptions, citing the rule that, when one of two or more defendants against whom a decree has been rendered brings a writ of error to reverse it, it is necessary for him to join his codefendants as plaintiffs in error. The motion is not meritorious. While this case was brought originally against the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, the petition alleges that the company has no known place of business and no officer or agent in this state upon whom service could be made; and it does not appear that service was perfected upon that company. The petition for intervention on the part of the Southern Railway Company contains practically the same allegation. However, the rulings, decisions, and decree upon which error is assigned in the main bill of exceptions demonstrate that they were adverse to the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company. It follows therefore that even if, in the circumstances stated, the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company could be made a party to the bill of exceptions, its proper position would be as a coplaintiff in error; and the plaintiff in error has moved to make that company such coplaintiff. This can be done without notice. See Macon Navigation Co. v. Schofield's Sons, 111 Ga. 881, 38 S. E. 965, and cases cited; Ramey v. O'Byrne, 121 Ga. 518, 49 S. E. 595.

[2, 3] One of the contentions urged in behalf of the petitioners Lancaster et al., whom we denominate the second mortgagees, which contention the trial judge sustained, is that the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, the consolidated company, was never more than a de facto corporation, for the alleged reason that the consolidation of the three constituent corporations worked a dissolution of them all, and an extinguishment of all rights, privileges, and powers held under their respective charters; that the consolidation, if effective, created a new corporation; that none of the rights, privileges, and powers of the old corporations was transmitted to the new corporation; that the new company could exercise only such powers, etc., as were granted it by the act of consolidation; and that the powers, etc., which it undertook to exercise, and which are contested in this case by the second mortgagees, were never legally conferred upon the new company. Another reason advanced in support of the contention that the consolidated company was a mere de facto corporation is that the act of the General Assembly of Georgia, approved December 13, 1866, purporting to authorize the consolidation of the three constituent corporations, is unconstitutional and void, on the ground that it was an attempt to delegate a legislative power to the board of directors of the consolidated company to adopt for it the name of "Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company"; and, further, to adopt as its charter the charter of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, as then existing, with the amendments thereto.

Generally, the consolidation of two or more corporations operates to dissolve them, and to create a new one, and the rights, privileges, and powers of the old corporations are not transmitted, by the act of consolidation, to the new corporation. Whether the rights, privileges, and powers of one or more of the old corporations are vested in the new corporation by the consolidation depends, however, in each case upon its own peculiar facts. The very purpose of the consolidation agreement, and of the statute authorizing it or ratifying and adopting it, may, in a given case, be to confer upon the new corporation some or all of the rights, privileges, and powers of any one or more of the old corporations, and thus to enable it, under a new name, to exercise such rights, privileges, and powers; and whether this be true is to be determined by the terms of the agreement of consolidation, and of the statute under authority of which the consolidation is affected. See Wabash, St. Louis & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Ham, 114 U. S. 587, 595, 5 Sup. Ct. 1081, 29 L. Ed. 235. In the case now under review it is apparent from the respective charters granted by the General Assembly of Georgia to the Georgia & Alabama Railroad Company, and to the Dalton & Jacksonville Railroad Company, and the charter granted by the General Assembly of Alabama to the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, that it was the purpose of such Legislatures that the charters granted respectively by them to these companies should enable them to connect and consolidate with each other, in the interest of the public, as well as for the benefit of the companies, and to construct and to operate an interstate railroad from Selma, Ala., by way of Rome, to Dalton, Ga. Each of the companies was given authority in its charter by which such purpose could be consummated on such terms as might be agreed on by and with the interested and contracting companies.

In August, 1866, the three companies, in pursuance of their respective charter rights, duly executed a consolidation agreement for the purpose stated therein, "so as to complete and own and use one continuous railroad from Selma, by way of Rome, to Dalton, under the authority and control of one set of officers." Under this agreement all the rights, powers, privileges, franchises, and all the properties (real, personal, and mixed) belonging to either one and all of the contracting corporations, were declared to be the property and franchises of the consolidated company; each stockholder who had paid for his stock in any one of the contracting companies should be, to the extent of his stock, a stockholder in the consolidated company; the president and board of directors of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company should exercise full power and control over all the property of all of the contracting companies, thereby made the property of the consolidated company, until it should be given a new name by legislation, and should cause the railroad then completed from Selma to Blue Mountain, Ala., to be extended and completed from the latter place, by way of Rome, to Dalton, Ga.; and to enable them to do so they were authorized to issue bonds and to execute mortgages on any part or all of the property and franchises of all of the companies, including the roadbed and right of way from Selma to Dalton; all the debts, contracts, obligations, and liabilities of each of the contracting companies were assumed by the consolidated company; all the obligations upon, and made or assumed by, the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, should be valid and binding on all the companies consolidated into one; until a common name should be lawfully given under which the franchises of each of the companies should be united, the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company was to be the active and controlling corporation, though the organizations of the other companies were to be continued until the consolidated corporation should come into active and authorized being; at the next annual meeting of the stockholders of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, each stockholder of the contracting companies should have the right to vote according to the amount of his stock; and each of the contracting companies should ask of the Legislature which chartered it the enactment of a law giving one name to all of the companies consolidated under the agreement. Subsequently, the Legislatures of Georgia and Alabama each passed a statute in reference to such consolidation, that of Georgia in December, 1866, that of Alabama in February, 1867; both acts employing the same language, and the statute of Georgia being as follows:

"An act approving the consolidation of the Dalton & Jacksonville Railroad Company, and the Georgia & Alabama Railroad Company, of the state of Georgia, with the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, of the state of Alabama, and to authorize the consolidated company to adopt a corporate name and charter, and act under the same.

"Section 1. Be it enacted, etc., that the consolidation of the Dalton & Jacksonville Railroad Company, and the Georgia & Alabama Railroad Company, of the state of Georgia, with the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, of the state of Alabama, so as to form one consolidated railroad company for the construction and use of a railroad to be constructed from Blue Mountain, in the state of Alabama, as a continuation of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, by way of Rome, to Dalton, in the state of Georgia, be, and the same is hereby ratified and approved, and the said consolidated company, acting by its board of directors, shall be, and it is hereby authorized and empowered to adopt the corporate name and style of the 'Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company,' and to adopt as its charter the charter of the said Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, as now existing, with the amendments thereto, and under and by the said name and style and charter so authorized, may and shall have, possess, enjoy and exercise all its lawful rights, functions, powers and privileges, and shall be subject to all lawful liabilities and responsibilities incurred or contracted, or to be incurred or contracted, by said consolidated company: Provided, always, that nothing in this act shall be so construed as to release either of said companies from any obligation or liability incurred or contracted by them, or either of them, prior to their said consolidation."

Section 2 repeals conflicting laws.

It is perfectly clear, therefore, in view of the terms of the consolidation agreement, and so much of the statute above quoted as expressly satisfied and approved the agreement, that the new or consolidated company was vested with all the franchises and rights, privileges and powers, and all the properties of the three constituent corporations. Moreover, the latter part of the act expressly authorized the board of directors of the consolidated company to adopt the name of the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, and also to adopt as its charter that of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, as then existing, with the amendments thereto. However, if it should be granted, for the sake of the point, that under the terms of the consolidation agreement, and the statute ratifying and approving it, when the whole of the statute is considered, the three old companies were dissolved, it is nevertheless certain that the statute conferred upon the new or consolidated company the right and power to adopt the then existing charter of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, with the amendments thereto, which contained all the powers and privileges of either of the other two contracting companies. Accordingly, if the statute be valid and the name and charter designated by it were adopted by the consolidated company, a new corporation with a new name and charter came into existence, becoming what has been termed "an interstate corporation," for the ownership and management of an interstate line of railway, and entitled to the privileges and subject to the obligations imposed upon it by the laws of this state and of the state of Alabama. See the extensive and valuable notes of Judge Freeman in the case of Morrison v. American Snuff Co., 89 Am. St. Rep. 598, 650.

[4] Is the Georgia statute unconstitutional, and therefore void, for the reasons assigned? We think not. It must be conclusively presumed that the Legislatures of Georgia and Alabama, when they respectively enacted a statute ratifying and approving the consolidation agreement previously made by the three consolidating corporations, and authorizing the consolidated or new corporation to adopt as its name "Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company," and to also adopt the charter, with the amendments thereto, of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, were actually cognizant of and fully understood all the terms of such agreement, and of course the full import of the statute respectively enacted by them. It was not essential that either the consolidation agreement so ratified and approved, or the charter with its amendments of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, should be incorporated in the statutes approving and ratifying such agreement, and authorizing the new corporation to adopt as its own the charter of the Alabama corporation. Bibb County Loan Association v. Richards, 21 Ga. 592; Neal v. Todd, 28 Ga. 335; Central of Ga. Ry. Co. v. Georgia, 104 Ga. 831, 31 S. E. 531, 42 L. R. A. 518, and cases cited on this point.

The charter of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company and the amendments thereto were fixed. There was no uncertainty or contingency as to the powers which the consolidated corporation would take by the adoption of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company's charter, with its amendments. The consolidated company had no authority to add to the powers granted, nor to take away from the responsibilities created by that charter. Frequently laws are enacted by Legislatures and made dependent for their operation upon future events and contingencies. Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations (7th Ed.) 164, 165, after stating that it is one of the settled maxims of constitutional law that the power conferred upon the Legislature to make laws cannot be delegated to any other body or authority, says:

"But it is not always essential that a legislative act should be a completed statute which must in any event take effect as law, at the time it leaves the hands of the legislative department. A statute may be conditional, and its taking effect may be made to depend upon some subsequent event. Affirmative legislation may in some cases be adopted, of which the parties interested are at liberty to avail themselves or not at their option. A private act of incorporation cannot be forced upon the incorporators; they may refuse the franchise if they so choose. [Citing Angell and Ames on Corp. § 81.] In these cases the legislative act is regarded as complete when it has passed through the constitutional formalities necessary to perfected legislation, notwithstanding its actually going into operation as law may depend upon its subsequent acceptance."

Among the cases cited in the text is that of Lothrop v. Stedman, 42 Conn. 583, Fed. Cas. No. 8,519, holding that it is not a delegation of legislative power to make the repeal of a charter depend upon the failure of the corporation to make up a deficiency which is to be ascertained and determined by a tribunal provided by the repealing act; as well as the case of State v. New Haven, etc., Co., 43 Conn. 351, in which it is held that it is competent to make an act take effect on condition that those applying for it shall erect a station at a place named. Our own court in several cases has held that a statute can be enacted by the Legislature and its operation be made contingent upon the will of bodies and persons other than the Legislature. Some of the cases are Murphey v. Educational Board of Burke County, 91 Ga. 856 (provision of law for payment of school officers not to operate in a county after grand jury shall otherwise recommend); Haney v. Commissioners of Bartow County, 91 Ga. 770, 18 S. E. 28 (road law to go into effect in county on recommendation of grand jury). In the case at bar the consolidated corporation was given legislative authority and power to adopt the name of "Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company," and to also adopt as its charter that of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, with the amendments thereto, etc. Accordingly, an acceptance of such charter by the new corporation was only necessary for its actual existence with all the rights, privileges, and powers embodied in the charter of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company. The legislative power conferred upon the directors of the new corporation, to adopt as its own the charter of one of the constituent corporations, did not seek to confer upon them any legislative authority, but merely the option to adopt as its charter that of the named constituent corporation. There is evidence in the record showing that the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, the consolidated company, after the statutes authorizing it to do so, did duly accept and adopt as its own charter that of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, together with the amendments thereto. The Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company in its name created debts, issued bonds, and executed mortgages (including the one under which the second mortgagees seek to set up their alleged rights), and also purchased rights of way and took conveyances thereto.

The contention made by the second mortgagees, that the charter of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, with the amendments thereto, gave that company the right to lay out, construct, and operate a railroad within certain prescribed limits only within the state of Alabama, is not meritorious as clearly appears from the charter and amendments thereto of that company, as well as the statutes ratifying and approving the consolidation agreement. And moreover, the second mortgagees themselves dealt with the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company operating under the charter of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, because it had no other charter, whilst it was constructing and operating the end of the railroad situated in Georgia.

[5] Another contention made by the second mortgagees is that the first mortgage never operated as a lien upon so much of the railroad and other properties situated in Georgia not in the possession of the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, or to which it did not have the right of possession at the time of the execution of first mortgage, but that all of such properties were covered by the lien of the second mortgage; and that the foreclosure and sale under the first mortgage did not pass the title to the property in Georgia acquired by the mortgagor between the dates of the first and second mortgages. We cannot concede the soundness of this contention. The Civil Code, which went into effect on January 1, 1883, declared (section 1956):

"A mortgage in this state is only a security for a debt, and passes no title. It may embrace all property in possession, or to which the mortgagor has the right of possession at the time," etc.

This was the statute law at the time of the execution of the first and second mortgages involved in this case. The act of 1899 (Acts 1899, p. 32) made a provision for mortgaging future-acquired property to secure an issue of bonds. There are a number of decisions by this court to the effect that (under the old statute) neither a corporation nor a natural person has a right to mortgage property which may be acquired after the execution of the mortgage. However, the charter of the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, including the amendments thereto, which was given by statute to the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, and which was adopted in accordance with the statute as its own charter, expressly authorized the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company to mortgage after-acquired property; and in pursuance of its charter so adopted the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company executed the first mortgage on its entire line of railroad, and all its properties situated in Georgia, including that of which it was then in possession, as well as that to which it then had the right of possession, and also that which it had legislative authority to subsequently acquire for the construction and operation of its railroad. Notwithstanding the provisions of the general law as stated in the Code section just above quoted, the special statute authorizing the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, under its adopted charter, to mortgage after-acquired property, was valid. The Constitution of 1865 (which was in effect at the time of the enactment of the statute authorizing the consolidation involved in this case) declared:

"Laws should have a general operation, and no general law affecting private rights shall be varied in a particular case by special legislation, except with the free consent, in writing, of all persons to be affected thereby; and no person being under a legal disability to contract, is capable of such free consent." Civil Code of 1868, § 4904.

It will be observed that the Constitution of 1865 did not contain the provision of our present Constitution (1877) that—

"No special law shall be enacted in any case for which provision has been made by an existing general law."

In Mattox v. Knox, 96 Ga. 405, 23 S. E. 307, it was said:

"The Legislature was not prohibited, before the Constitution of 1877, from enacting special laws for particular localities, varying or changing a general law."

To the same effect is Burks v. Morgan, 84 Ga. 627, 10 S. E. 1096; Massey v. Bowles, 99 Ga. 216, 25 S. E. 270; Thorpe v. Butt, 106 Ga. 52, 31 S. E. 793.

We accordingly hold that the first mortgage was a valid lien on all the property covered by it, and which the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, the mortgagor, then owned or had in possession, or to which it then had the right of possession, and also upon that acquired subsequently to the execution of that mortgage; that the foreclosure and sale under it passed the title to all such property.

[6-8] Furthermore, aside from the rulings hereinbefore announced, and in view of the facts of the case as set forth in the statement preceding this opinion, the trustee in the second mortgage was, and the holders of the bonds secured by that mortgage are, estopped to deny that the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company was a de jure corporation, and had, under its charter, authority to execute the first mortgage on all of its railroad property, including that after acquired, situated both in Georgia and in Alabama; and they are further estopped to deny the validity of the first mortgage and the priority of its lien over that of the second mortgage as to all the property involved in the case. There was embodied in the first mortgage a statement of certain facts which the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, the mortgagor, was estopped to deny; and the trustee in the second mortgage and the holders of the bonds secured thereby, being privies in estate of the mortgagor, are likewise estopped to deny such facts. The first mortgage gave a detailed history of the creation of the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, denominating it as a corporation existing in and duly organized under the laws of the states of Alabama and Georgia. It set forth explicitly the respective charters of the three constituent companies, and the powers given them thereby. Among them, that each of the companies had the right to connect and consolidate with the others, and that each of them had express authority to mortgage future-acquired property for the construction and operation of their designated railroads; that the three companies, duly authorized so to do, entered into a consolidation agreement, under the terms of which each constituent company agreed to transfer all of its charter rights and powers to the consolidated company, and did so; that such agreement was approved and ratified by certain statutes of the state of Georgia and Alabama, which authorized the consolidated company to adopt the name of "Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company," and also to adopt the charter of one of the constituent companies, viz., the Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company; that the consolidated company, duly and regularly authorized to do so, did adopt such name and charter. This mortgage contained a general warranty clause. These facts were material as to the parties to the first mortgage. They were certainly material, at least in one view; that is, that the first mortgagees were given facts by the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company which, in effect, constituted it a de jure corporation, with authority to mortgage all of its railroad property, including that to be after acquired, which facts were valuable not only to the first mortgagees, but to all who might desire to invest in the bonds secured by that mortgage. In other words, they tended to enhance the market value of the bonds. The mortgage was duly recorded. In Galveston Railroad Co. v. Cowdrey, 11 Wall. 459, 482 (20 L. Ed. 199), it was held:

The "holder of the fourth mortgage is an assignee of the railroad company [the mortgagor in all the mortgages], claiming under it, with full notice of the other mortgages. He is in privity with the company, and is bound by the estoppel."

Moreover, the petition of the second mortgage is brought against the Selma, Rome &

Dalton Railroad Company, to foreclose the second mortgage given by it. The original petition alleged that the defendant "is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Georgia." This last allegation was, however, stricken by an amendment to the petition.

There are other reasons for holding that the second mortgagees are estopped in respect of the matters above stated. On the face of the bonds secured by the second mortgage appear these words:

"Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, chartered by the states of Alabama and Georgia—second mortgage bonds."

They attached to their petition, as an exhibit made a part thereof, a copy of the second mortgage, which contains the same recitals of facts as stated in the first mortgage, showing in detail the various steps taken in the creation of the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company. The second mortgage itself contained the after-acquired property clause, which fact strongly indicated that the second mortgagees understood that the mortgagor company had the charter power to execute a lien upon such property. One of the recitals in the second mortgage is as follows:

"And whereas the said union and consolidation of the several railroad companies, so made as aforesaid, was expressly ratified and approved by laws duly enacted by the said states of Alabama and Georgia, respectively, in and of which said laws the consolidated company, the party of the first part hereto, was and is duly authorized and empowered to adopt as its corporate name and style the name of the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, and to adopt as its charter the charter of the said Alabama & Tennessee River Railroad Company, with all of its amendments, and to have, possess, exercise, and enjoy all of its rights, franchises, powers, and privileges; and whereas said consolidated company did lawfully adopt said name and the said charter."

Another recital is:

"And whereas the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company, the said party of the first part, is the owner of a certain railroad above mentioned, and which is hereinafter particularly described, and all the franchises, rights of way, track, ties, rails, railway, culverts, structures, rolling stock, and all other property appertaining to said railroad and acquired or to be acquired for the construction and operation thereof as hereinafter more particularly described and set forth, subject to the lien of such mortgages thereon as have heretofore been made by said above-named corporation and duly recorded."

The second mortgage, by express provision, therefore, is subject to the first mortgage, which had been given and duly recorded prior to the date of the second mortgage, as to all the property "acquired or to be acquired." Our holding that the second mortgagees, under this view of the case, are estopped from attacking the validity and the priority of the first mortgage under the facts stated, is to our minds so conclusive as to need no citation of the numerous authorities supporting it.

[9] We are also of the opinion that, as the bondholders secured by the second mortgage have brought their action for its foreclosure in a court of equity, they are subject to an equitable bar by reason of their laches in proceeding to establish the rights claimed by them. This equitable bar, though analogized as far as possible to the statutes of limitations prevailing at law, nevertheless exists apart from and independent of such limitations.

"The limitations herein provided [statutory limitations as to various actions] apply equally to all courts; and, in addition to the above, courts of equity may interpose an equitable bar, whenever, from the lapse of time and laches of the complainant, it would be inequitable to allow a party to enforce his legal rights." Civil Code, § 4369.

Again:

"Equity gives no relief to one whose long delay renders the ascertainment of the truth difficult, though no legal limitation bars the right." Id. § 4536.

In Wilkes v. Phillips, 120 Ga. 728, 48 S. E. 113, it was said:

"A person who is injured by fraud must be prompt in seeking redress, and he must prosecute his suit with diligence. Laches and neglect are always discountenanced. Nothing can call a court of chancery into activity but conscience, good faith, and reasonable diligence; and, where these are wanting, the court is passive and does nothing. A court of equity does not encourage stale claims, and a party may lose his right to complain of fraud by his delay"—citing Bish. Eq. § 260.

Some of the other cases in which this court has applied the equitable bar from the lapse of time and laches of the complainant are: DeLaigle v. Denham, 65 Ga. 482; Pierce v. Middle Georgia Land Co., 131 Ga. 103, 61 S. E. 1114; Basch v. Frankenstein, 134 Ga. 518, 68 S. E. 75; Aken v. Bullard, 134 Ga. 665, 68 S. E. 482; James v. Hill, 140 Ga. 739, 79 S. E. 782. In Alsop v. Riker, 155 U. S. 448, 459, 461, 15 Sup. Ct. 162, 39 L. Ed. 218, the holder of certain construction bonds was held to be barred on account of his inaction and laches for a period of about seven years. In the opinion the court said:

"The record discloses no element of fraud or concealment upon the part of the trustees or of any of them. What they did was done openly and was known or might have been known by the exercise of the slightest diligence upon the part of every one interested in the property of the old corporation. The plaintiff unquestionably knew, or could easily have ascertained, before the trustees bought the property at the foreclosure sale—at any rate, before they transferred it to the new corporation—that their purchase would be, and was, exclusively for the benefit of certificate holders interested in the trust. Although his bonds had not then matured, he could have taken steps to prevent any transfer of the property that would impair his equitable rights in it or instituted proper judicial proceedings, of which all would be required to take notice, to have his interest in the property adjudicated."

The court then said, in effect, that the plaintiff was barred by the statute of limitations of New York, to wit, six years, but added:

"But, without placing our decision upon that ground, and independently of the statute of limitations, the case is one in which a court of equity should refuse to interpose, because of laches upon the part of appellant in asserting the rights he now claims. Looking at all the circumstances, particularly the nature of the property, good faith demanded that if he intended to question the right of the trustees to acquire, hold, and transfer it for the exclusive benefit of certificate holders, he should have done so by formal proceedings, commenced within a reasonable time after he became cognizant of all the facts. The case is one peculiarly for the application of the rule that equity, in the exercise of its inherent power to do justice between parties, will, when justice demands it, refuse relief, even if the time elapsed without suit is less than that prescribed by the statute of limitations."

There are many other decisions of that court to the same effect. We cite only one of them, however, that is, Waller v. Tex. & Pac. Ry. Co., 245 U. S. 398, 38 Sup. Ct. 142, 62 L. Ed. 362; some of the facts there being quite similar to those in the present case. In the case last cited certain holders of bonds were refused relief on account of delay over 10 years after their maturity, and 40 years after their issue. In Scott v. Scott, (Ala.) 80 South. 82, it was said:

"As a matter of public policy, antiquated demands will not be considered by the courts, and, without regard to any statute of limitations, there must be a time beyond which human transactions will not be inquired into."

See cases cited in notes to that case in 88 Central Law Journal, 161. See Walker v. Warner, 179 Ill. 16, 53 N. E. 594, 70 Am. St. Rep. 85.

In the present case the sale of the property covered by both mortgages occurred in 1874, under foreclosure proceedings instituted by the trustees in the first deed of trust or mortgage, and by Shorter Cowan, the purchaser, and his successors went into possession of the property soon thereafter, under deeds conveying full title, including the equity of redemption, changed the names of the railroads as successorship in ownership occurred, so that the Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company practically went out of existence in name, as well as in fact. The Southern Railway Company became the purchaser of the property in July, 1894, and has since remained in continuous possession of the same, has spent large sums of money in improving the railroad and its appurtenances; that part of the line between Dalton and Rome becoming a part of a trunk line from Chattanooga to the Atlantic Ocean, and the line from Rome to Selma becoming a part of another trunk line. Mortgages were placed on the properties, and debts incurred on account of them; there being no evidence that any of the owners, from Cowan down to the Southern Railway Company, had any notice that the bondholders under the second mortgage expected to make any claim until this suit was filed. The second mortgage was executed on July 1, 1870, and the bonds secured thereby matured in 1900, although there was a condition in them for earlier maturity upon default in the payment of interest and taxes. The present action was instituted in 1910. No reason whatever is alleged for the delay. The Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad Company was always in default as to interest payments; and therefore, under the conditions in the bonds, the principal could have been declared due upon such default, and the second mortgage bondholders could have instituted foreclosure proceedings even before the sale of the property under the foreclosure of the first mortgage. Yet they waited, without any excuse whatever, for about 35 years before instituting an action for the establishment of their claims.

[10] There is one more question presented for decision, and that is whether the petitioners in this case have the right to redeem the railroad properties covered by the second mortgage and located in the state of Georgia; their counsel insisting that they have the right of redemption upon payment of the amount "as represented by the bid made by the purchaser at the foreclosure proceedings of the first mortgage, instituted in Floyd superior court, together with the 7 per cent. interest thereon, from which amount there should be deducted [net?] earnings made from the property." The auditor and the trial judge both held against the claim of the petitioners to redeem, and we concur in their decision. As already stated, "A mortgage in this state is only security for a debt, and passes no title." In Suttles v. Sewell, 105 Ga. 129, 31 S. E. 41, it was held:

"Neither the defendant in fi. fa. nor any person representing him has a right to redeem property sold at a mortgage foreclosure sale."

And in the opinion it was said:

"A mortgagor in this state cannot redeem after a sale has been had under a foreclosure judgment."

And it follows, of course, that his privies, such as assignees, and second mortgagees, cannot do so. It does not appear either from the report published in that case, or from the record of file in this court, whether the foreclosure judgment and sale thereunder were had in a statutory proceeding to foreclose the mortgage, or in an equity suit. Why there should be any difference in respect of the conclusiveness of the judgment of foreclosure in the two procedures is not apparent, though, in the view we take of this case, we are not required to render a decision as to that point. Nor do we decide whether the right of redemption, even where given by statute, is applicable after railroad properties in their entirety have been sold under mortgage foreclosure proceedings. See Hammock v. Loan & Trust Co., 105 U. S. 77, 28 L. Ed. 1111, and cases collated in 10 Rose's Notes, 260. Nor are we called upon to decide whether the petitioners who hold only 172 of the 6,000 second mortgage bonds could in any event maintain the right to redeem; nor whether they could redeem on the terms they offer. We do decide, with confidence, that, if the petitioners ever had the right of redemption, they have lost it by their laches in seeking to enforce it. As we have seen, the first mortgage was given in 1867, and the second in 1870. The first mortgage was foreclosed in equity, and a decree of foreclosure rendered in 1874. A commissioners' sale under the decree, the confirmation thereof, and a deed to all the mortgaged property, were made in that year. The purchaser went immediately into possession, and he and those holding the properties under him by mesne conveyances down to the Southern Railway Company, which purchased in 1894, have all had open and continuous possession ever since. Large sums have been expended by the last-named company in betterments and improvements, and it has continuously and openly operated the railroad since its purchase. The second mortgage bonds matured in 1900, with a provision, however, for accelerated maturity upon default in payment of interest, etc., as designated therein. The petitioners instituted their equitable petition to foreclose the second mortgage in 1910. They sought to amend it in 1914, by asserting their claim to redeem. Surely, a court of equity will not aid them in the enforcement of such a stale claim; and this aside from any statute of limitations. It is needless to cite the many adjudicated cases in support of our holding. It has been said that the right to redeem and the right to foreclose are mutual and reciprocal, and that when the one is barred the other is barred.

We have already decided that these holders of the second mortgage bonds were estopped by laches from foreclosing the second mortgage. It must follow that they are also estopped by laches from asserting their claim to redeem.

In view of the holdings above announced, the court erred in not enjoining the petitioners from prosecuting the action.

Judgment reversed on the main bill of exceptions, and affirmed on the cross-bill.

All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 464)

WARNER et al. v. HILL et al. (No. 1177.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 1, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS' SALE ON THE PREMISES WITHOUT ORDER FROM COURT INVALID.

This was a suit by certain parties to recover land formerly owned by an ancestor who died intestate, which land was subsequently sold at an administrator's sale, on the grounds that there was an irregularity in the sale, the same having been held on the premises without an order from the court of ordinary authorizing that the sale be so held, and that the sale was voidable because the administrator was actually the purchaser at his own sale, though he had gone through the form of knocking off the land to a by-bidder, who almost immediately thereafter conveyed the land to the administrator, and that the defendant at present in possession of the land purchased from the individual who was the administrator, with notice of the invalidity in the sale. Among other things, the plaintiffs pray for recovery of the land and for cancellation of the deeds by which title passed to the defendant in possession. Held:

(1) Under all the evidence in the record, the court erred in granting a nonsuit at the conclusion of the introduction of testimony by the plaintiffs.

(a) The evidence of the plaintiffs was insufficient to show notice to the last purchaser, the defendant in possession of the premises, that the sale by the administrator was virtually a sale to himself, or that he was chargeable with notice of the alleged defect in the title; and if the plaintiffs' case had been based entirely upon the alleged infirmity in title just referred to the grant of a nonsuit would not have been error.

(b) But while an order by the court of ordinary was regularly granted for the sale of the land by the administrator, the sale was not had at the courthouse of the county in which the land was situated, but was had upon the premises in another city in the same county, and there was sufficient evidence to authorize a jury to find that there was no order granted by the ordinary authorizing the sale upon the premises, and that the defendant in possession of the property had notice of the fact that the necessary order for a sale upon the premises had not been granted; which irregularity would render the sale invalid and voidable at the suit of heirs.

2. EVIDENCE ~~§~~256—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE OF SALE BY ADMINISTRATOR TO HIMSELF.

The admission of the purchaser at the administrator's sale that he was not a bona fide purchaser, but that he was a by-bidder, and that as an ostensible payment he delivered to the administrator his check, which was not cashed but was torn up, and that he immediately deeded the property back to the administrator, can only be competent in the event, upon the next trial, there is evidence showing notice to the last purchaser of the alleged invalidity of the administrator's sale, and should then be admitted in evidence under instructions limiting the effect of such testimony to the party making it, and should not be considered by the jury in passing upon the question of notice to the defendant in possession of the invalidity of the sale or of the existence of the order authorizing the sale upon the premises.

3. QUESTION NOT DETERMINED.

Whether certain of the plaintiffs are estopped from maintaining their suit because of their receipt of certain sums, which were a part of the proceeds of the sale of the land at the administrator's sale, is a question that can be determined under all the circumstances as they are developed at the next trial under proper instructions of the court.

Error from Superior Court, Troup County; J. R. Terrell, Judge.

Suit by Mary Warner and others against B. H. Hill and others. Judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed.

T. T. Miller, of Columbus, and Hatton Lovejoy, of La Grange, for plaintiffs in error.

Little, Powell, Smith & Goldstein, of Atlanta, and E. T. Moon, of La Grange, for defendants in error.

PER CURIAM. Judgment reversed.

FISH, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

(124 Va. 736)

BROOKS v. CLINTSMAN.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.)

GIFTS ~~§~~25—PAROL GIFTS OF LAND NOT ENFORCEABLE.

The history and express purpose of Code 1904, § 2413, providing that no estate in lands for a term of more than five years shall be conveyed unless by deed or will, discloses a legislative policy to deny the right to enforce parol gifts of such estates.

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied, and former determination upheld.

For former opinion, see 98 S. E. 742.

WHITTLE, P. In the petition of Ida R. Brooks for a rehearing in the above case, our attention is called to a mistake in the printed record of the date of the probate of the will of Leslie L. Clintsman, deceased. The date as printed was February 2, 1904, instead of February 2, 1914, the correct date. From that circumstance the argument is again stressed that the right to maintain the suit was barred by laches. In the majority opinion, it is true, the question of laches was discussed from the standpoint of the former date; yet it by no means constitutes a bar to the suit when considered from the correct date. Even if it were conceded that a gift of the land was intended, the case would still be controlled by section 2413 of the Code, abolishing the enforceability of parol gifts of estates of inheritance or freehold, or a term for more than five years, in land, "although * * * followed by possession thereunder and improvement of the land by the donee or those claiming under him." The history and expressed purpose of the section shows a legislative policy to deny the right to enforce parol gifts of such estates.

This statute was recently considered, and relief refused in a much stronger case for relief on the facts than those presented in this record. Wohlford v. Wohlford, 121 Va. 699, 93 S. E. 629.

Rehearing denied.

(84 W. Va. 500)

MORLANG et al. v. CITY OF PARKERSBURG.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Sept. 23, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DEDICATION ~~§~~15, 16(1), 43—INTENT NECESSARY TO EXPRESS DEDICATION AND IMPLIED DEDICATION.

The law recognizes two classes of dedications of a street to a city, express and implied, the intent to dedicate being essential to both, though in the latter case it may be shown by acts of the owner justifying the public authorities in believing the intention exists, where they act upon such belief, even though the owner may never have actually intended a dedication.

2. DEDICATION ~~§~~44—WHEN NOT SHOWN AS TO STRIP BETWEEN PROPERTY LINE AND BUILDING.

Dedication being an exceptional and peculiar mode of passing title to interest in land, the proof thereof must be full and clear; and the acts proved, which it is claimed constitute such dedication, must be inconsistent with any construction other than that of a dedication. Merely building the front of one's house back from the property line is alone not sufficient to prove intent to dedicate to the public the strip of land between the property line and the front of the house.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §665 — RIGHT OF ABUTTING OWNER TO STRIP BETWEEN STREET LINE AND BUILDING.

A municipal corporation cannot prevent the use by its owner, in a lawful way, of a paved strip between the street line and a building set a few feet back from the street, where it is not shown that the strip has become a part of the highway, or that the municipal authorities have so treated it.

4. DEDICATION §20(5) — WHEN DEDICATION OF PAVED STRIP NOT SHOWN BY IMPLICATION.

Where the owner of property abutting upon a city street constructs the building upon his property  $3\frac{1}{2}$  feet back from the street line, and paves the same in the same manner as the sidewalk is paved, and permits the public using such sidewalk to also use such paved strip between the front of his building and the street line as a sidewalk, he will not be held to have thereby dedicated the same to the public by implication, unless it be further shown that the public authorities, with his knowledge, exercise acts of dominion thereon indicative of their belief that the same has been dedicated to the public.

5. DEDICATION §44 — PAYMENT OF TAX BUT SLIGHT EVIDENCE TO DEFEAT DEDICATION.

Payment of taxes assessed by a municipality upon a strip of land claimed to have been dedicated to it, while evidence tending to defeat the presumption of a dedication, is, under most circumstances, of little probative force.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wood County.

Suit for injunction by Bertha Morlang and others against the city of Parkersburg. Temporary injunction granted, defendant's counter injunction dissolved, and temporary injunction made perpetual, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

McCluer & McCluer, of Parkersburg, for appellant.

Van Winkle & Ambler, of Parkersburg, for appellees.

RITZ, J. In the year 1878 one Fred R. Rose was the owner of a lot situate in the city of Parkersburg, fronting 23 feet on the east side of Market street, and extending back a distance of 90 feet. This lot is part of what is known on the original plat of the city as inlot No. 92, and is between what is now known as Fourth street and Fifth street in said city, the north line of the same being at a distance of 49 feet from the corner of said Market street and Fifth street. At that time, to wit, in the year 1878, there were erected upon this lot, and upon the adjoining lots to the north and south of it, frame structures which were used for various sorts of retail mercantile business. In May of that year a fire occurred which destroyed all of the buildings from the corner of Fifth street down to a point more than halfway in the block, where a brick building stood owned by one Randolph Logan. Immediately thereafter the owners of the lots began to erect new buildings thereon. Rose, who owned the lot in question, as well as the lot next to it on the south, when he erected his new buildings, placed the front of them back  $3\frac{1}{2}$  feet from the street line. The two buildings on the two lots north of Rose, and between his lots and the corner of Fifth and Market streets, were erected upon the old line. South of Rose's the buildings were erected on a line  $3\frac{1}{2}$  feet from the street line down to the Logan brick building, which was not destroyed. This brick building stood some distance back from the street, and was occupied as a residence. Shortly after this time Logan extended this building to the street line, and it was occupied in this condition for many years as a cigar store. In 1913 it was torn down and replaced by a large brick building, the front of which was placed at a distance of  $2\frac{1}{2}$  feet from the street line. South of this Logan property new buildings have been erected at various times upon the lots, the fronts of none of which were placed upon the actual street line, being from  $2\frac{1}{2}$  to 3 feet back therefrom. In the block between Third and Fourth streets, on the east side thereof, all of the buildings are placed 3 feet back from the actual line of the street. After Rose and the adjoining property owners had erected the buildings, as above indicated, they paved the space between their buildings and the curb with brick at their own expense, making the sidewalk in front of their premises  $14\frac{1}{2}$  feet wide instead of 11 feet, as it had been prior to that time. In the year 1888 Rose sold the lot in controversy, together with the house thereon, to Theodore Morlang, the husband of one of the plaintiffs and the father of the other two. At that time the space in front of the building, between it and the curb, was paved with brick, and the whole thereof used as a sidewalk. Some time after this Morlang and the owners of the adjacent properties took up the brick paving, and put down concrete pavement in front of their premises. This pavement was extended clear back to the front of the buildings. The building on the lot immediately to the north of the Morlang lot extended out to the street line—that is,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  feet further than the Morlang building—and that condition has existed up until this time. The space of  $3\frac{1}{2}$  feet between the front of the Morlang building and the actual street line is in no way distinguished from the other part of the sidewalk. It is paved with the same character of material, and there are no marks to indicate where the street ends and the Morlang lot begins. A number of years ago the Morlang built a balcony on the front of their building at the level of the second floor, extending out over this  $3\frac{1}{2}$  feet of space. No permission was asked of the city authorities to construct this balcony, nor was any objection made to the construction thereof by the city authorities without permission, although an ordinance of the city requires that permission be obtained from the city authorities before any structure may be erected overhanging any of the streets or public places of the city. It is further shown that this lot has been assessed and taxes paid thereon at all times as a lot 23x90 feet, no deduction having ever been made therefrom because of this 3½-foot strip. It is further shown that at various times this controverted strip was used by the merchants and others doing business in the buildings along this street for the display of their wares and merchandise, for the storage to some extent of boxes and barrels thereon, but it does not appear that this was done to any greater extent than was done by other merchants in other parts of the city, where the buildings were erected flush with the street line. There is some evidence indicating that in 1878, at the time of the fire above referred to, Rose, who was then the owner of the lot in question, had conversations with some of the owners of adjoining lots in regard to setting their buildings back. Some refused to do so, and some apparently followed the example set by Rose. The witnesses who testify upon this question say that they understood Rose's purpose to have been to create better conditions for the conduct of the business carried on in the buildings. Some of the witnesses say that Rose expressed the view that by setting the buildings back the owners would always have a clear space where the occupants of the storerooms could display their merchandise without obtaining permission from the public authorities to use part of the street. Not one of them testify that he ever suggested that the strip of land left between the building line and the actual street line was to be dedicated to the city or become a part of the public street. No ordinance was ever passed by the city of Parkersburg widening Market street at this point, nor is there any evidence that the city or its officers ever acted upon any supposed dedication of this strip to the city by Rose and the adjoining property owners. In 1914 Rose's tenant desired to extend the front of the building out to the street line. He was engaged in the business of selling ladies' wearing apparel, and this business required his goods to be displayed in such manner that passers-by would have a ready view thereof. This could not be with the wall of the adjoining building on the north projecting out 3½ feet. Prior to the time this tenant went into the building it was occupied as a saloon. At the request of this tenant the owners of the property made application to the mayor of the city of Parkersburg for permission to erect the front upon this 3½-foot strip. They were informed by the mayor that he would submit the matter to the council. This was done, and the council, upon the advice of the city's attorney, refused the permission, claiming for the first time, so far as this record shows, that this 3½-foot strip had been dedicated to the city as a public street. The owners of the property, when informed by the mayor of this contention, immediately repudiated the same, and insisted that it was their private property, and that they would build thereon. Much is made in argument of the fact that they made the application to the city instead of proceeding with the building as above indicated. They say that it was their understanding that it was necessary to get a permit from the city authorities to make any such extensions or improvements to a building, and it was for such permission that they were applying. We cannot doubt their statements in this regard, inasmuch as the mayor to whom they made this application is not introduced by the city, and in no way contradicts their statements. Again, in 1917, when new city officers came in, they took it up with the city authorities through the new mayor, for the purpose of seeing if authority would not be granted to them to make this improvement of the building without, as they say, having a lawsuit. They had a conference with him and explained the situation, submitted to him a plan of the improvements contemplated, and, as they state, he advised them that he saw no objection thereto, but that he would submit the same to the council for its action. This was done, and the council, upon the advice of the city solicitor, refused to grant the permit. This action of the council was communicated to the plaintiffs by the mayor, and he advised them that it seemed to be a difference of opinion between the city's lawyer and the plaintiffs' lawyer as to who had the right to control the 3½-foot strip; that in his view the proper way to test it would be for the plaintiffs to go on with the improvements, regardless of the city's action in refusing the permit, and, when the city attempted to stop them, to apply for an injunction to enjoin the city's interference therewith. Plaintiffs adopted the mayor's advice in this regard. These negotiations with the mayor by the plaintiffs are testified to fully by them, and are in no wise contradicted by that officer. Plaintiffs did begin to make the improvements in accordance with the plan submitted to the mayor as aforesaid. The city authorities immediately stopped them from going on with the work, and the plaintiffs thereupon filed their bill, asking that the city and its agents be enjoined from interfering with them in making the improvements contemplated. A temporary injunction was granted, and the improvements proceeded with, when the city made application for a counter injunction to prevent the plaintiffs from making the improvements pending the litigation. This injunction was also granted, but was subsequently modified so as to allow the improvements to be so far completed as to prevent damage to the building. Upon the hearing of the case the circuit court dissolved the injunction granted upon the city's cross-application, and perpetuated the injunction granted to the plaintiffs, holding that the strip of land belonged to the plaintiffs, and that the city had acquired no easement therein.

[1, 2] The chief reliance of the city upon this appeal is that there was an implied dedication of this strip of land to the city for public use, which implied dedication was accepted by the user thereof. There is no contention that there was an express dedication, either in writing or orally, nor that there was an express acceptance of any dedication by the city. Upon the other hand, the plaintiffs contend that there has never been any such conduct upon their part, or upon the part of their predecessors in title, in connection with this strip of land, as would imply a dedication thereof to the public. That an owner of real estate, under circumstances like this, may dedicate an easement therein to the public without any expression of his intent in that regard, or without any writing conveying the same, there is no doubt. It must be borne in mind that title to real estate, or any interest therein, is ordinarily passed by deed or will, and, while one may lose his land without an actual conveyance of the same, the acts and conduct upon his part, and upon the part of the one claiming to have acquired such title in such way, must be so unequivocal and positive as to leave little doubt that it was the intention of the owner to dedicate the same to the public use, and the intention of the public authorities to accept the same for that purpose. McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, § 1568, and authorities there cited. It may be said that, in order to the validity of such implied dedication, it must be shown that the owner intended to part with the easement in his property for the public use. By this we do not mean that an expression of such intent upon his part need be proven. In fact, he may not have actually had such purpose in his mind, but his acts and conduct in regard to the property must be of such character that the public, dealing with him upon the strength of such conduct, could not but believe that his intention was to vest an easement therein in the public. There seems to be no trouble about this general principle of law, but it is the application of it to the facts existing here which leads to the controversy.

[3, 4] Counsel for the city contend that the owners' conduct in connection with and treatment of this 3½-foot space, since the year

1878, was such as to indicate the clear intent and purpose upon their part to dedicate it to the public for public use, while the plaintiffs contend that the conduct shown is entirely consistent with the permissive use thereof by the public. As above stated, it is not proven that the plaintiffs, or Rose, under whom they claim, ever made any declaration of dedication of this property, nor is anything further shown than that Rose, in connection with some of the adjoining owners in erecting their buildings, left this space in front thereof. His purpose in doing so, some of the witnesses say, was to widen the sidewalk in order that the business conducted in the buildings might be more advantageously carried on. By others it is said that the purpose was to leave a space in front of the buildings so that merchants doing business therein could display their goods upon the outside without trespass upon the city street, and without getting any leave from the city therefor. That this space was used in the display of goods there can be no question. It appears that the balcony above referred to was erected, extending over this space, without permission from the city authorities. It also appears that cellar gratings were put in in front of the building in this space without any authority from the city. The only thing which it can be said that the owners of the property have done upon which an implied dedication can rest is that they permitted the public to travel over this part of the sidewalk constructed by them at their own expense, and not under any requirement imposed upon them by the city. Will a dedication be implied from this state of facts? Counsel for the respective parties, with commendable zeal and thoroughness, have examined the authorities bearing upon this question, and have given the result of their efforts to this court, not only in oral argument at the bar, but in elaborate printed briefs. From the textbooks may be gleaned the general statements of law above declared, but we must look to the decided cases to discover the application that has been made of these general principles to particular states of fact.

Counsel for the city cite and rely upon many cases wherein municipal corporations were held liable for damages for personal injury upon proof of a user of a street by the public, and insist that such proof is sufficient to show title to the public in the easement over the land. There is quite a different question involved when a contest arises between the owner of the fee and the public claiming an easement thereover than the one that arises between the public and a party injured because of the improper condition of what is used as a public street. As between a citizen using a street laid out and worked by the public officers as a public street, it has been frequently held that proof of the exercise of acts of dominion over the street by the public is sufficient to charge liability upon a municipal corporation for an injury received because of the bad condition of such street. Proof that the city authorities expended the public moneys in improving such street or in working thereon has been held sufficient to establish it as a public street for the purpose of recovery for an injury caused by defects, but it could not be said that such proof would be sufficient to deprive the owner of land of his title thereto unless it could be further shown that he knew of such acts of ownership by the public and acquiesced therein. The proof in this case on behalf of the city is far short of that which has been required in the suits to recover damages for injuries above referred to. In those cases it has generally been required that it be shown that the public authorities have exercised dominion over the particular street or way by expending the public moneys thereon in the way of improvements, or by some such unequivocal conduct. In this case it is not shown that any public officer ever did anything indicating the intention upon the part of the city authorities to claim an interest in this strip of land. No public moneys were ever expended thereon. No public officer ever made any declaration or committed any act which indicated an intention upon the part of the public authorities to adopt this strip of land as a public way, but, even if they had, it would not be conclusive against the landowner, unless done with his full knowledge and acquiescence.

The case of Denning v. Roome, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 651, is cited and relied upon by counsel for appellant as controlling in this case. It is true that case in its facts is somewhat similar to the case here. However, it has its distinguishing characteristics, and it is because of these elements, existing there which do not exist here, that there was held to be an implied dedication of the strip of land involved. In that case a street 40 feet wide extended in front of the plaintiff's property. This street by an ordinance was widened to the width of 60 feet, and after the passage of this ordinance so widening the street, which took a strip off the front of the plaintiff's lot, the same was used in this widened condition for a period of 19 years. During that time the street thus widened had been paved by the city, and an assessment for the cost thereof made against the abutting property owners, including the plaintiff, which assessment plaintiff paid without objection. It will thus be seen that in that case not only was the strip of land involved used by the public, but the public authorities, by passing an ordinance widening the street to 60 feet, incorporated it in the street as thus laid down, and by paving the same exercised dominion over it entirely inconsistent with the plaintiff's contention that the city had no easement therein, and by his payment of this assessment for improving the street in its widened condition he acquiesced in the adoption of the same as a public street. Had the city of Parkersburg passed an ordinance widening Market street the additional distance of  $3\frac{1}{2}$  feet in front of the plaintiffs' property, and paved the same for this additional distance, and assessed the cost thereof against the plaintiffs or their predecessor, and collected such costs from them, it might be said that by the passage of such ordinance, and the making of such improvements, the city unequivocally claimed the right to the street in its widened state, and by the payment of such assessment the plaintiffs or their predecessor acquiesced in and approved that contention of the public authorities. These elements, however, which were controlling in that case, do not exist here.

This case is more like that of Keppler v. City of Richmond (Va.) 98 S. E. 747. In that case the plaintiff owned a lot fronting on one of the streets of the city, and extending back along another of the city streets to an alley. More than 50 years before the litigation arose plaintiff had built upon this lot a building fronting on the street in front thereof, and three other buildings fronting on the street at the side of the lot, leaving a space extending all the way across the rear of his lot, 11 feet wide, unoccupied by any building. About the time the buildings were erected the alley at the rear of the lot was paved by the plaintiff with cobblestones, including not only the public part of the alley, but the strip off the rear of his lot above referred to. A sidewalk next to the building about 3 feet wide was made, and a side entrance into the building from this walk. This paving, including the public alley and the strip off the rear of plaintiff's lot, was all of the same character. The public used all of the space thus paved, that part of it on the plaintiff's lot as well as the part thereof included in the public alley, and it so used the same for more than 50 years. There had been no improvement made upon this land of the plaintiff by the public authorities, and dominion had never been exercised thereover by such authorities. It will thus be seen that that case in its facts is very nearly like the case at bar. In the case we have here the erection of the balcony a few years ago, extending out over the  $3\frac{1}{2}$ -foot strip, by the plaintiffs, indicates upon their part that they did not consider this strip of land as belonging to the public. This element was lacking in the case above cited. In a well-reasoned opinion, in which the authorities are numerous cited and commented upon, the Court of Appeals of Virginia held that the public acquired no easement in the plaintiff's land by reason of the use of it for all that time; that this use was merely permissive, and was not inconsistent with his right to claim the same thereafter.

The case of Weiss v. Borough of South Bethlehem, 136 Pa. 294, 20 Atl. 801, is very similar in its facts to the case here. There a strip off of plaintiff's lot had been used for many years by the public in connection with the use made thereof by himself, but, because of the fact that such public use was not inconsistent with the idea that it was permissive upon the part of the plaintiff, an implied dedication of the easement therein was denied. A similar holding was made upon a very similar state of facts in Griffin's Appeal, 109 Pa. 150.

In the case of Gowen v. Philadelphia Exchange, 5 Watts & S. 141, 40 Am. Dec. 489, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania had before it a very similar question. The controversy there arose between adjoining property owners. The Philadelphia Exchange had erected a building upon its property, leaving in front thereof a space which had been paved by it and used in connection with the sidewalk in front of the same. The public had continuously used this space for many years, as though it had been part of the public sidewalk, without objection upon the part of the owners of the building; but it did not appear that the public authorities had ever laid any claim to the property or had ever done anything thereon. The owner of the adjoining property, whose building extended out to the actual street line, made a side-door opening upon this vacant space in front of the defendant's property. The defendant thereupon built a brick wall upon its property in front of this door, extending the same to the street line, blocking up plaintiff's side door. Suit was then brought to compel the removal of this wall, upon the theory that the defendant had impliedly dedicated the strip of land in front of its building to the public, and that the plaintiff had a right to have access to his building from this public street. The court, however, denied the relief, holding that there was no such state of facts as would raise a dedication by implication.

In the case of Palmer v. City of Chicago, 248 Ill. 201, 93 N. E. 765, it appeared that the public had been allowed to travel over a strip of plaintiff's land lying vacant adjoining a public street for a long time without objection upon his part. During all of the time there had been no denial of the right of the public to travel over the land. No public street was ever extended over the same, nor had the public authorities ever exercised any dominion thereover. It was held that such public use was not inconsistent with the ownership thereof by the plaintiff, and the theory of an implied dedication was denied. In the case of Rose v. Village of Elizabethtown, 275 Ill. 167, 114 N. E. 14, a similar holding upon a very analogous state of facts to that involved here was made.

[8] In the case of City of Clatskanie v. McDonald, 85 Or. 670, 167 Pac. 560, the Supreme Court of Oregon had before it the question of an implied dedication arising from the use of a strip of land in front of a building, and held that where the owner of land built his hotel back from the street with a sidewalk to the street line, and with a roof over it, and induced other builders to conform to his building line, he was not estopped from claiming the title to the actual street line, in the absence of a showing that the other property owners constructed their buildings on the line because of their belief that they could use the sidewalk in front of the hotel. It was also held in that case that the fact that the whole of the lot continued to be assessed for taxation without any deduction for the part thus claimed to have been dedicated was evidence tending to rebut the presumption of the dedication. We think the probative force of such evidence would ordinarily be very slight, however.

From these authorities it would seem clear that to create a dedication by implication the owner of the real estate must have done some act from which a positive intent upon his part to dedicate the land to the public can be drawn. The fact that the public was permitted to use a strip of land under circumstances such as exist here, without objection by the owner, is not sufficient from which to imply a dedication. It is not shown that either the plaintiffs, or Rose, under whom they claim, ever did anything of an affirmative character, expressing an intention to dedicate, but during the time that the public have been permitted to use this strip of land it appears that the owners of it have made uses of it inconsistent with the theory that they had dedicated it to the public use. It is shown that the ordinance of the city of Parkersburg required any one desiring to erect any structure overhanging a street or sidewalk to obtain permission to do so. The owners of this property erected such a structure overhanging this space without obtaining this permission, and without their right thereto being questioned by the authorities. It is shown that they put in cellarways on this strip without authority from the city, and without their right thereto being questioned. During all of the time that the public have been permitted to use this strip of land the plaintiffs, and Rose, under whom they claim, have paid the taxes thereon to the city of Parkersburg; and while this, of itself, is not very strong evidence, still it is some evidence that they did not intend to dedicate it to the public, and likewise that the public authorities did not accept the dedication, else they would not have collected taxes from the plaintiffs upon the land. The first time, so far as this record discloses, that the public authorities ever asserted an interest or right in this strip of land was when the plaintiffs desired permission to erect an extension to their building over the same, and, instead of acquiescing in the city's claim at that time, the same was resisted and contested by the plaintiffs, and their complete title to the land asserted and claimed.

Counsel for the city rely upon section 56aX of chapter 43 (sec. 1777) of the Code, and the construction placed thereon by the case of Yates v. West Grafton, 33 W. Va. 507, 11 S. E. 8, to support the city's contention of an implied dedication in this case. The construction given that statute in that case does not support counsel's contention. It is quite true, as we have above asserted, that if the public was permitted to use this strip of land, and the city had accepted the same and made claim thereto, then a dedication might be implied. In that case it was held that there had been no such user by the public or acquiescence therein by the owner, or recognition or acceptance by the town authorities, as constituted an easement by implication. The theory upon which acts of dominion over the property by the public officers is held to be evidence of an easement by implication is that such acts are inconsistent with any other theory than that the public has such easement in the property, and the owner, being fully cognizant of such acts and acquiescing therein, will be taken, without other proof, to have by such acquiescence shown an intent upon his part to appropriate the property to the use which the public is making of it. Nothing of that kind, however, is shown in this case.

Finding, as we do, that the state of facts disclosed by this record is not sufficient to show an implied dedication of this strip of land to the public, the court's decree perpetuating the injunction inhibiting the defendant from interfering with the plaintiffs in the construction of their addition thereon is clearly right, and the same is affirmed.

(84 W. Va. 600)

GOLDMAN v. DANIEL FEDER & CO.
(No. 3851.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 30, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT §76(2)—COVENANT NOT TO SUBLET NOT BROKEN BY ASSIGNMENT OF LEASE.

A covenant in a lease not to sublet the premises, the terms of which are not enlarged by anything in the context, nor otherwise, accompanied by a forfeiture and re-entry clause, is not broken by an assignment of the lease.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT §76(1)—SHORT COVENANT AGAINST ASSIGNMENT DOES NOT ENLARGE COVENANT AGAINST SUBLETTING.

The statute, section 21, c. 72, Code (sec. 3800), providing a short and simple form of covenant against assignment, does not enlarge a covenant against subletting.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT §76(3)—ON CONVEYANCE BY LESSOR HE CANNOT CONSENT TO ASSIGNMENT OF LEASE.

A covenant in a lease not to sublet without lessor's written consent is for benefit of the lessor and his assigns, and after lessor has conveyed the premises within the term of the lease he has no interest in covenant, and no right thereafter to give assent to an assignment of the lease or of a subletting of the premises.

Error to Circuit Court, Kanawha County.

Action of unlawful detainer by M. B. Goldman against Daniel Feder & Co. Judgment for defendant in justice's court, judgment for plaintiff on appeal to the intermediate court, writ of error to such judgment refused by the circuit court and plaintiff brings error. Reversed, verdict set aside, and case remanded.

Morton & Mohler, of Charleston, for plaintiff in error.

Morgan Owen and E. B. Dyer, both of Charleston, for defendant in error.

POFFENBARGER, J. The judgment now under review is one for the plaintiff in an action of unlawful detainer, commenced in a justice's court, in which the defendant prevailed. On an appeal in the intermediate court of Kanawha county, the plaintiff prevailed, and the circuit court of said county refused a writ of error to the judgment.

The plaintiff having acquired the title to the premises in question, within the term prescribed by a lease thereof executed by his grantor, two years, commencing March 1, 1917, and while the lessee was in possession, on or about May 1, 1917, proceeds upon the theory of a forfeiture of the lease, occasioned by an assignment thereof by the lessee, executed April 3, 1918. It contains a covenant not to sublet the premises without the written consent of the lessor, but no covenant not to assign. The claim is that the assignment constitutes a breach of the covenant against subletting.

The lessor was U. G. Young; the lessee Adleberg & Berman, Incorporated; the purchaser of the property, M. B. Goldman; and the assignees of the lease, Daniel Feder & Co. The premises are described as the store at 25 Capitol street, in the city of Charleston.

[3] Failure of the plaintiff to disprove consent to the assignment, by his grantor, is relied upon by the defendant, as a defect in the case made by the evidence. Such consent, given long after the grantor had parted with his title, would have been unavailing. Such a covenant is for the benefit of the lessor and his assigns. The former no longer has any interest in it; wherefore he clearly has no right to give assent to an assignment of the lease or a subletting of the premises.

[1] The vital question in the case is whether the assignment constituted a breach of the covenant not to sublet, and, as to it, there is some conflict in the authorities. That it does has been distinctly held in at least two cases. Greenaway v. Adams, 12 Ves. 395; Den v. Post, 25 N. J. Law, 285. But the latter was overruled in Field v. Mills, 33 N. J. Law, 254. It is claimed that Upton v. Hosmer, 70 N. H. 493, 49 Atl. 96, asserts this doctrine, and there are some expressions in the opinion that seem to countenance it; but the covenant not to sublet was read in connection with other provisions of the lease, which, in the opinion of the court broadened its scope. In conclusion, the court said:

"The purpose of the restrictive clause appears to have been, not so much to control the sale of the cottage, as to prohibit the lessee, his heirs and assigns, from making an assignment of the lease without first obtaining the consent of the lessor, his heirs and assigns."

Hence the covenant was construed to be one not to assign as well as one against subletting. In Railroad Co. v. Railroad Co., 65 N. H. 393, 23 Atl. 529, the covenant was not to assign, and the court held it had been broken by an assignment, not an underletting. In Berry v. Taunton, Cro. Eliz. 331, the tenant devised the term, and the question was whether his act violated a covenant not to demise for more than from year to year. The court merely held that a devise was within the meaning of the word "demise." In Gregson v. Harrison, 2 T. R. 425, the covenant was against both subletting and assignment, wherefore either constituted a breach. In Holland v. Worsley, 1 Camp. 20, the covenant was not to assign or otherwise part with the premises. It obviously included both, as the court held. In Shattuck v. Lovejoy, 8 Gray (74 Mass.) 204, the covenant by its terms went beyond a mere subletting. The tenant bound himself not to permit any other person or persons to occupy or improve the premises, without written consent of the lessor. Such, also, was the character of the covenant in Austin v. Harris, 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 296. Under a statute providing that, "if lands or tenements are rented by the landlord to any person or persons, such person or persons renting said lands or tenements shall not rent or lease said lands or tenements during the term of said lease to any other person without first obtaining the consent of the landlord, his agent or attorney," both assignment and underletting, without consent, are forbidden. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Settegast, 79 Tex. 256, 11 S. W. 228. This conclusion was arrived at by application of the liberal rule of construction, which is generally held to be inapplicable to statutes imposing forfeitures.

Against this meagerness of authority for the proposition that an assignment is within the meaning of a covenant not to sublet, there stands a very considerable array of authority holding the contrary. Field v. Mills, 33 N. J. Law, 254; Lynde v. Hough, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 415; Tiffany, Land. & Ten. § 48; Taylor, Land. & Ten. § 403. Covenants against assignments and against underletting are both strictly construed, because they are penal in character, working forfeitures, and because they are restraints upon alienation. 18 R. C. L. p. 832; Tiffany, Real Prop. § 46; Minor, Real Prop. § 417. To be within the operation of such a covenant, the thing done must fall within its terms, its letter, as well as within its spirit or purpose. This is the rule of strict construction. Besides, there is a vast difference in principle between an assignment and a sublease, as well as between their legal results. These differences render it impossible to say an assignment is within the terms of a covenant against subletting.

[2] In the argument submitted for the defendant in error, section 21 of chapter 72 of the Code (sec. 3800), defining the scope and effect of a covenant not to assign without leave, is invoked; but it clearly has no application. It does not define a covenant not to sublet. It merely provides a short and convenient form of the common-law covenant against assignments, or a substitute therefor; and all of its terms fall within the meaning of "assignment," not "demise" or "sublet." Though Kanawha-Gauley C. & C. Co. v. Sharp, 73 W. Va. 437, 80 S. E. 781, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 968, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 786, involved a lease containing a covenant not to sublet, and an assignment seems to have been treated by the parties as a possible breach, a decision as to its effect can hardly be said to have been rendered, since the case turned upon an issue as to waiver, and the court did not enter upon any inquiry as to the interpretation and effect of the covenant.

Under the principles and conclusion stated, there was no breach of the covenant, and the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Hence the judgment must be reversed, the verdict set aside, and the case remanded.

(84 W. Va. 570)

ALFORD v. KANAWHA & W. V. R. CO.
(No. 3872.)(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 30, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. EVIDENCE ⇨481(3)—COMPETENCY OF WITNESS AS TO DISTANCE IN WHICH TRAIN CAN BE STOPPED.

One who is not familiar with the stopping and starting of railroad trains is not a competent witness to give an opinion as to the distance within which such a train can be stopped under a particular state of circumstances.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1050(1)—ADMISSION OF IMPROPER EVIDENCE REVERSIBLE ERROR, UNLESS CLEARLY HARMLESS.

Where improper evidence is admitted over the objection of a party, it will be cause for setting aside the verdict, unless it clearly appears that the objecting party was not prejudiced thereby.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨171(1)—WITHOUT EVIDENCE OF NEGLIGENCE, ALLEGED NEGLIGENCE IN ANOTHER RESPECT IMMATERIAL.

Where an action having for its basis the alleged negligence of the defendant is tried in the court below upon the theory that such negligence arises from defendant's failure in a particular regard, which turns out to be unsupported by any competent evidence, a verdict and judgment rendered thereon cannot be supported, because it may appear that the defendant might be negligent upon another theory, not presented at the trial.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1050(1)—ON TWO THEORIES VERDICT SET ASIDE, WHERE IMPROPER EVIDENCE AS TO ONE IS ADMITTED.

Where plaintiff's cause of action is based upon two separate theories of negligence upon the part of the defendant, one of which is supported only by improper evidence admitted over defendant's objection, and the court submits the same to the jury upon both of such theories, a verdict rendered in favor of the plaintiff will be set aside, for the reason that it is impossible to tell upon which theory the verdict is based; it being as likely that the jury based its verdict upon the theory supported only by improper evidence as upon the other.

Error to Circuit Court, Kanawha County.

Action by J. R. Alford against the Kanawha & West Virginia Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed, verdict set aside, and cause remanded for a new trial.

W. N. King and Leroy Allebach, both of Charleston, for plaintiff in error.

M. M. Robertson and C. J. Van Fleet, both of Charleston, for defendant in error.

RITZ, J. [1, 2] By this writ of error defendant seeks reversal of a judgment against it for damages for the alleged negligent killing of stock by one of its trains. The steer which it is contended was negligently killed was struck by defendant company's passenger train, consisting of eight passenger coaches and a locomotive. Approaching the place at which the steer was struck from the direction in which the train came, there is a curve about 250 to 300 feet from the point of the accident, which prevented the trainmen from seeing the point of accident until within that distance thereof. It was shown that the plaintiff's steer was on the track when the train came around this curve, and the fireman on the engine admits this, and says that he immediately communicated the fact to the engineer. This the engineer admits, and says that he did everything he could to stop the train before striking the animal. The sole theory upon which the case was tried in the court below was that by the use of reasonable diligence those in charge of the engine could have stopped the train after the animal was discovered on the track in time to have prevented striking it. To sustain his contention in this regard the plaintiff introduced a witness who had never operated a locomotive, and whose only familiarity with the distance within which passenger trains could be stopped was that he had seen one stopped on one occasion within 100 feet; that the train which he saw stopped was composed of two coaches and a locomotive, and from this he says that it is his opinion that the train in the instant case could have been stopped within from 75 to 100 feet. This evidence was permitted to go to the jury over the objection of the defendant. The engineman and the fireman in charge of the train, who were men of long experience, both testified that such a train as they were handling on that occasion could not be stopped in a less distance than 500 feet.

It is earnestly insisted by the defendant that the admission of the opinion of the witness above referred to was error, and that, inasmuch as this was all of the evidence upon which the plaintiff's contention was based, the court below should have directed a verdict in its favor. Was this evidence competent? The purpose of producing evidence in any particular case is to enlighten those charged with the duty of deciding the controversy. It would be difficult to procure a witness with less knowledge than the plaintiff's witness on the question about which he testified. Certainly it would be hard to find very many witnesses who had only seen a passenger train stopped on one occasion. Opinions of witnesses are not ordinarily admissible at all. It is only where such opinions are based upon expert knowledge. Where a transaction, in order to its understanding requires possession of technical knowledge or skill, one possessing the same is competent to give his opinion in regard thereto; the reason being that the jury, not possessing such knowledge and skill, would not be enlightened by a simple statement of fact. Aglonby v. N. & W. Ry. Co., 80 W. Va. 687, 93 S. E. 812. It cannot be doubted that in order to express an intelligent opinion upon the question as to the distance within which a railroad train can be stopped requires possession of mechanical skill and technical knowledge. In order for such an opinion to be enlightening, it must be by one who has knowledge of the operation of such trains, who is familiar with the workings of the machinery, and the time required to put the same in operation. This being true, the opinion of such a witness would be competent upon this question; but the opinion of one not possessing such knowledge would not be competent, for the very good reason that it would not tend in any degree to enlighten the jury trying the case.

The only ground upon which opinion evidence is admitted is because those giving the same have knowledge not ordinarily possessed. It is an exception to the general rule that opinions are not competent, being merely conclusions drawn from facts which, in cases not calling for expert or technical knowledge, the jury are as competent to draw as the witness. Purkey v. Transportation Co., 57 W. Va. 595, 50 S. E. 755. As directly bearing upon the question that one unfamiliar with the operation of railroad trains is not competent to express an opinion as to the distance within which such a train can be stopped, see Gourley v. Railway Co., 35 Mo. App. 87; Igo v. Railroad Co., 38 Mo. App. 377; Railroad Co. v. Burch, 155 Ky. 731, 160 S. W. 252; Railway Co. v. Corletto, 100 Va. 355, 41 S. E. 740; Passenger & Power Co. v. Racks, 101 Va. 487, 44 S. E. 709; Barry v. Railroad Co., 1 Misc. Rep. 502, 20 N. Y. Supp. 871; Rogers on Expert Testimony, § 104; Lawson on Expert and Opinion Evidence, pp. 92, 93. Clearly there was no competent evidence upon which to submit to the jury the question of defendant's negligence in failing to stop the train.

[3, 4] The plaintiff says that there is another theory of negligence upon which he is entitled to recover, and that is that it is not shown that the defendant sounded an alarm for the purpose of frightening this animal off the track. It does not appear whether or not such an alarm was sounded. The act of negligence upon which recovery was sought was the failure to stop the train after the animal was discovered. The question of alarm is only mentioned in the most incidental way. The railroad employes do not testify upon this question at all, and none of the witnesses introduced on behalf of the plaintiff made any statements as to whether an alarm was sounded or was not sounded. Of course, it is ordinarily the duty of those in charge of a railroad train, upon discovering animals upon the track, to do everything that prudence dictates to prevent striking them, and this includes sounding the alarms provided, for the purpose of frightening the animals away, as well as making every reasonable effort to stop the train in time to avoid the impending accident. Where, however, a plaintiff tries his case upon one theory, and fails to produce competent evidence to support it, he will not be allowed to say that there is another theory which entitles him to recover, when that other theory was never presented to the trial court, and the defendant given an opportunity to meet it.

But, even if the plaintiff had presented this theory of negligence in failing to sound an alarm in the court below, the introduction of the incompetent evidence above referred to would require a reversal. Certain it is, where there are two theories of negligence upon which a plaintiff seeks recovery, and he submits the case upon both of them, one of which is not supported by any competent evidence, a judgment rendered upon a verdict in such case in favor of the plaintiff will be reversed, because it is impossible to tell upon which one of the theories the verdict is based, the one supported by the proper evidence, or the one not so supported. By submitting both theories to the jury, the court in effect told it that it might find liability on either thereof, and it is as probable that the jury found the verdict upon the theory supported by only incompetent evidence as upon the other. In fact, it is perfectly certain in this case that the jury's verdict was based upon the theory supported only by the improper evidence above mentioned, for the other theory is only incidentally touched upon.

It follows from what we have said that the judgment will be reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

(84 W. Va. 655)

AYERS v. EADS. (No. 3611.)(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 30, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)APPEAL AND ERROR — 1002—VERDICT—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

A judgment rendered upon a verdict based upon conflicting oral testimony will not be set aside by this court, unless the testimony so decidedly preponderates in favor of the complaining party as to indicate that the jury were unduly influenced, or were controlled by passion or prejudice.

Error to Circuit Court, McDowell County.

Action by Mrs. C. C. Ayers against T. J. Eads. From a judgment for plaintiff rendered upon a verdict on trial of an appeal from a like judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Cook & Howard, of Welch, for plaintiff in error.

Litz & Harman, of Welch, for defendant in error.

RITZ, J. By this writ of error reversal is sought of a judgment of the circuit court in favor of the plaintiff, rendered upon the verdict of a jury upon the trial of an appeal from a like judgment rendered by justice of the peace.

The sole ground of error is insufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence to support the verdict and judgment in her favor. Plaintiff's claim is for a balance which she contends the defendant owes her for commissions or compensation for sales of sewing machines, pianos, organs, and phonographs, made by her and her husband for the defendant. It appears that the plaintiff bought a sewing machine from the defendant and agreed with him to make sales of other machines and musical instruments for certain compensation to be allowed her as a credit upon the price of the machine purchased by her. Plaintiff's husband assisted her in making such sales. The amounts to be paid under this arrangement as compensation for making these sales were fixed and determined by the contract, and about this there is no dispute. After a few sales were made under this arrangement plaintiff and her husband testify that the defendant desired to secure their services permanently in the conduct of his business, and with this view made a new contract with the plaintiff, by which he agreed that he would pay to her one-half of the profits upon each sewing machine, and upon each musical instrument sold by her and her husband, and that such one-half of the profits would be at least the sum of $15 for each sewing machine, $17 for each organ, and $50 for each piano, but no mention is made as to what his representations were, if any, as to the profits on phonographs. Pursuant to this contract, the plaintiff and her husband sold, according to their testimony, a number of sewing machines and musical instruments for the defendant's account, to wit, 12 sewing machines, 6 pianos, 22 organs, and 8 phonographs. It will thus be seen that at the minimum amounts which the plaintiff says she was to receive on each sale she was entitled to $180 for the sale of the 12 sewing machines, $300 for the 6 pianos, $374 for the 22 organs, and so far as the phonographs were concerned plaintiff introduced no evidence as to what the profit was on each of these instruments, and consequently there is no basis in her evidence upon which to determine what she was entitled to therefor. However, the defendant in his evidence says that the profit on each of the phonographs was $20, $10 for the plaintiff, and $10 for himself. This would entitle the plaintiff, therefore, to $80 on the sale of the 8 phonographs, or a total of $934 upon all of the sales which she claims were made by her and her husband. She admits that the defendant is entitled to a credit upon this amount for the sum of $546.54, which would leave remaining unpaid a balance of $387.46. She contends that the amount due her is very much more than this, but when we analyze the evidence of herself and her husband, this is the conclusion which must be reached, assuming that her contentions are true.

The defendant denies that he made any contract with the plaintiff, but claims that it was with her husband. He admits that he was to pay one-half of the profit made on each sale, but he denies that the profits were any such amounts as claimed by the plaintiff. He asserts that one-half of the profit on sewing machines was from $6 to $9, on organs about $11, on pianos about $40, and on phonographs $10. He further claims that a number of the sales which she claims were made by her and her husband were made by himself, and that she is not entitled to charge him one-half of the profits on such sales. He also claims, in some instances, that the instruments delivered were not paid for, and had to be reclaimed, and in others that no such sales as plaintiff claims she and her husband made were ever in fact made by any one. So far as his contention is concerned as to who was to have the benefit of the contract, the plaintiff and her husband both state that the distinct understanding was that the contract was with her, and that she was to receive the benefit therefor, notwithstanding the work, or a large part of it, was to be done by her husband. The jury has found in her favor upon this contention, and we will not disturb their finding. So far as his evidence goes as

CARTER v. UNITED STATES COAL &amp; COKE CO. et al. (No. 3775.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 30, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)*1. MASTER AND SERVANT  $\S$ 341—ONE INDUCING BREACH OF CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT LIABLE IN DAMAGES.

One who by himself or conspiring with others induces another to break his contract of employment with a third person, to the injury of that person, is liable in damages for the injury sustained by him, whether the injury done was for the benefit of the wrongdoer or not.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR  $\S$ 837(12)—ON EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE APPELLATE COURT MAY CONSIDER ALL EVIDENCE.

On a motion to exclude the evidence, sustained by the trial court, an appellate court on writ of error may, if the record discloses it, consider all the evidence including any improperly rejected, in reaching a conclusion on the merits of such motion.

3. CORPORATIONS  $\S$ 433(1) — AUTHORITY OF CORPORATE AGENTS INDUCING BREACH OF CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT IS QUESTION FOR JURY.

The evidence in this case as to the authority of the respective representatives or agents of the defendants, and of the company employing the plaintiff, to do the acts complained of, was sufficient to carry the case to the jury on the question of such authority. Rua v. Boyer Smokeless Coal Co., 99 S. E. 213.

Error to Circuit Court, McDowell County.

Action by W. R. Carter against the United States Coal & Coke Company and others. Judgment for defendants upon a directed verdict, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed, verdict set aside, and a new trial awarded.

Greever, Gillespie & Divine and Cook & Howard, all of Welch, for plaintiff in error. Anderson, Strother, Hughes & Curd, of Welch, for defendants in error.

MILLER, P. In an action by the plaintiff against the United States Coal & Coke Company, and Edward O'Toole and J. M. Tully, for maliciously and unlawfully causing his discharge from employment by the Consolidated Engineering Company, in the construction of a public road in McDowell County, the case averred is that being so employed and engaged by said engineering company and earning therein at least ten dollars per day and thereby supporting himself and family, and the said United States Coal & Coke Company being at the same time owner and operator of numerous coal mines near the place where said road was being constructed and where plaintiff was so employed, and said coal company being then and there into the profits made on each of these instruments, it is based on nothing but his own oral statements. He does not produce any records or invoices to show what these profits are. If, as the plaintiff and her husband claim, he represented to them what the minimum profit would be at the time he made the contract, the jury were warranted in believing that he was telling the truth then, when he procured the services of the plaintiff and her husband, instead of at the time he was testifying in a suit in which he was defendant. It was within his power to produce the invoices showing what these various instruments actually cost him, and to fix the amount of such profits by indisputable evidence. He did not choose to do this, but elected to go before the jury upon his unsupported statements, in opposition to the testimony of the plaintiff and her husband as to the representations he had made to them in this regard at the time he procured them to enter into the contract. As to his contention that some of the sales for which the plaintiff claims compensation were made by himself, the plaintiff and her husband testify that they made the same, and the plaintiff in rebuttal showed to the jury a book, according to the record, in which, as she swears, these very sales which the defendant claims were made by him were indicated in this book, in the handwriting of the defendant, as sales made by the plaintiff. The same state of facts is true in regard to certain sales which the defendant claims were not made at all. Plaintiff exhibited this book to the jury, as shown by the record, and testified that entries therein showing such sales as the defendant claims were fictitious were actually entered in this book in the defendant's handwriting as sales made by the plaintiff. The book is not in the record in this case, but the plaintiff testifies without objection as to what the entries therein show, and to the fact that the defendant made them, and the defendant does not contradict this testimony. As to the sales which he admits were made by the plaintiff and her husband, but which he contends were not completed because the instruments had to be reclaimed for failure to pay, it is not quite clear from his evidence just how many of these there were. However, they were inconsiderable, and were not sufficient to reduce the amount claimed by the plaintiff below the sum of $300, for which the verdict was rendered. The jury might have allowed him credit for all he claimed in this regard, and there still would have been due the plaintiff, according to her contention, as much as she recovered. The verdict is based upon conflicting oral testimony, and the jury, having adopted the theory supported by plaintiff's evidence, we will not disturb it.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

terested in preventing workmen located near their said mines from working at any other work or employment or for any other employer, and well knowing that plaintiff had the right to work for and be employed by said Consolidated Engineering Company without any interference or molestation by them, nevertheless in utter disregard of plaintiff's rights defendants did wickedly and maliciously and with intent to prevent him from continuing in said employment, in the month of July, 1917, by threats and other means induce, procure and compel the said Consolidated Engineering Company to discharge plaintiff from its service and to refuse him further employment, without any just cause, and thereby prevented plaintiff from working for or being further employed by said company and from making a living at such work, and whereby he was deprived of all employment for the space or time of eight weeks, to his damage five thousand dollars. A second count sets forth the same cause of action in substantially the same way, but averring in addition that plaintiff at the time of his alleged grievances was relying upon the said employment for the support of himself and family.

There was a demurrer to the original declaration, and as amended at the bar in some particulars not shown by the record, sustained as to the original, but overruled as to the declaration so amended; and issue was joined on the defendants' plea of not guilty. Upon the trial before the jury, at the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence, to which numerous objections were interposed by defendants, overruled as to some and sustained as to others, the court sustained the motions of the defendants respectively to strike out the evidence and direct the jury to return a verdict for them, and each of which was done; and the judgment thereon was that the plaintiff take nothing by his suit and that the defendants recover their costs.

[1] Counsel for plaintiff in their printed brief have not fairly complied with the rules of this court. It furnishes no practical aid to the court in arriving at a proper conclusion. The only legal proposition advanced, which is unsupported by citation of any authority or argument, is "that one who intentionally, without legal justification, procures any employer to discharge his employé, to the damage of the latter, is liable in an action for damages at the suit of the employé," a proposition, say counsel, so clear that they do not deem it necessary to cite authorities in support thereof.

But the proposition thus assumed to be so clear and applicable to this case as to excuse counsel from supporting it by any authority, even if generally true, is vigorously challenged by counsel for defendants as being inapplicable to the case at bar. They cite us to West Virginia Transportation Co. v. Standard Oil Co., 50 W. Va. 611, 40 S. E. 591, 56 L. R. A. 804, 88 Am. St. Rep. 896, and to the note thereto, and quotations at page 626 of 50 W. Va., page 597 of 40 S. E., from the noted case of Allen v. Flood, L. R. Appeal Cases of 1898, which they say is the nearest authority they have found in this State applicable to the liability of one for securing the discharge of an employé. There are, however, at least two other decisions of this court in which the proposition laid down in the principal case and in the English case referred to was considered and in which the facts are more nearly analogous to those involved in this case. They are Thacker Coal Co. v. Burke, 59 W. Va. 253, 53 S. E. 161, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1091, 8 Ann. Cas. 885, and Hendricks v. Forshey, 81 W. Va. 263, 94 S. E. 747, L. R. A. 1918C, 150. The proposition there affirmed is that one who by himself or conspiring with others induces another to break his contract with a third person, to the injury of that person, is liable in damages for the injury sustained by him; and this is the law according to these cases whether the injury done is for the benefit of the wrongdoer or not. In the first case the action was by the coal company for damages for enticing servants from the plaintiff's services; in the Hendricks case the suit was for conspiracy to deprive plaintiff of the benefit of his contracts with each of the defendants to haul their milk to market.

The proposition of Allen v. Flood, mainly relied on by counsel for defendants, is that an act lawful in itself is not converted by a malicious or bad motive into an unlawful act so as to render the doer of the act liable to a civil action. In the English case the court of appeals had held that Allen, a member of a boiler-makers' union, who had induced Flood's employers, shipbuilders, to discharge him, was liable. But the House of Lords reversed the judgment upon the ground that the defendant had violated no legal right of plaintiff, done no unlawful act, and used no unlawful means in procuring the discharge of the plaintiff. There was no proof in that case of any contract violated. The only proof relied on was that in the ordinary course plaintiff's employment would have continued, a fact which we think distinguishes it from the case at bar and from the three cases decided by this court.

Another case cited and relied on by counsel for defendants as particularly applicable to the case proven here, is Raycroft v. Tayntor, 68 Vt. 219, 35 Atl. 53, 33 L. R. A. 225, 54 Am. St. Rep. 882. It was held in that case that if one in the exercise of a lawful right threatens to terminate a contract between himself and another unless the latter dismisses an employé not engaged for any definite time, the discharged employé has no right of action for damages against the party making the threat, although his motive in procuring the discharge may have been inspired by malice. We call attention to the provision which we have italicised, "not engaged for any definite time." We find the Maryland case of Lucke v. Clothing Cutters and Trimmers' Assembly, 77 Md. 396, 26 Atl. 505, 19 L. R. A. 408, 39 Am. St. Rep. 421, a well considered case, reviewing many English and American decisions, and distinguishing the cases involving term contracts from those in which no term contracts were the subject of transactions. It was held that the fact that plaintiff was not employed for any definite time made no difference, as his employment was to continue as long as his work proved satisfactory, though with the understanding that his employer might discharge him at the end of any week, but would not have discharged him but for the interference of defendants, made the conduct of defendants actionable. And answering a criticism of counsel that a recovery could not be had because plaintiff had only declared on a supposed contract when in point of fact there had been no contract violated, the court, citing cases and quoting from one or them, said:

"We concur in this view, and are clearly of opinion that the declaration sets out a cause of action, which the proof fails to sustain. The question of a contract vel non enters into the consideration of this case, but upon proper averment in the declaration ought to play but a small part in its determination. 'Where a contract would have been fulfilled, but for the false and fraudulent representations of a third person, an action will lie against such person, although the contract could not have been enforced by action.' Benton v. Pratt, 2 Wend. [N. Y.] 385, 20 Amer. Dec. 623."

In Johnson Harvester Co. v. Meinhardt, 9 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 396, 397, one of the cases cited in the Maryland case, it was said:

"A distinction has been sought to be made between cases when there was an unexpired time contract, and cases where the services were by the day or by the piece; but I do not think that such distinction rests upon any sound reason."

In Kentucky we find two cases somewhat pertinent, at least to one phase of the case here, Chambers v. Baldwin, 91 Ky. 121, 15 S. W. 57, 11 L. R. A. 545, 34 Am. St. Rep. 165, and Bourlier v. Macauley, 91 Ky. 135, 15 S. W. 60, 11 L. R. A. 550, 34 Am. St. Rep. 171. The first involved contracts for tobacco, not personal services; the other contracts of rival theatre owners with the same dramatic performer, in which the owner of one theatre, with notice of the previous contract, had induced the manager of the dramatist to break his contract with the owner of the other theatre. It was decided that the transaction though wrongful was not actionable, and that the petition presented no cause of action. That holding was based on the fact that the wrongdoer, a competitor, owed no duty to the other contractor, and was engaged simply in promoting his own interest and business.

The declaration in this case avers employment, but it is not alleged as proven that plaintiff was employed for any length of time, or that he had a contract with the engineering company for work for any time. The declaration probably ought to have been amended so as to cover the case made by the evidence, agreeably to the practice pursued in Lucke v. Clothing Cutters and Trimmers' Assembly, supra; and as we have concluded to reverse the judgment, the plaintiff may be permitted to amend his declaration if so advised, in order to avoid another mistrial.

[2, 3] With these principles in view the question remains whether the court erred in directing a verdict and pronouncing judgment for defendant. The motion to exclude must be viewed as upon a demurrer to the evidence. While not fraught with all the dangers nor all the advantages of a demurrer, such motion challenges the sufficiency of the evidence to carry the case to the jury, and we may look not only to the evidence admitted but also to that which was improperly excluded, which is made a part of the record. Plaintiff proved that he had a contract with the engineering company for hauling with two teams in building the public road, beginning on July 1, 1917, at six dollars per day for each team, twelve dollars per day for both, which employment was to continue from fifteen to eighteen months or two years; that he was employed for such length of time as the engineering company had work, and that payment was to be made every two weeks; that at the time of his discharge he had been at work under the contract about six weeks; and that his work was entirely satisfactory, so far as he knew, for no complaint had been lodged by his employers, and that he knew of none. This is certainly sufficient evidence of a contract for definite employment, and partial execution thereof, and of right to its benefits.

But it is claimed by defendants that there was no proof that plaintiff was discharged by anyone in authority, nor that his discharge was the result of any unlawful interference by the coal company or any officer or agent with authority to act. We think the evidence was such that the jury in the absence of any evidence to the contrary might have concluded that plaintiff was discharged by the engineering company. That he was discharged and denied further employment is fully proven. The evidence is that he was twice discharged; that after the first time he was again put to work and shortly thereafter was a second time and finally discharged or laid off by the engineering company; that the first time he was discharged by Houck, the time keeper for the engineering company, but that when he went to the company's office for his pay, plaintiff swore that Smith, the "super," on learning from him that he did not live in the coal company's house, at the direction of Stansbury, who appears to have been the higher officer in charge, ordered plaintiff back to work, and he did go back and continued on the job after that time for about twelve days, when he was again discharged or laid off by one Wilson, another officer or agent of the engineering company, described as the walking boss, and was thereafter denied further employment.

The circumstances of plaintiff's first discharge, as related by him and other witnesses, connecting defendants with responsibility therefor, were that he was laid off by Houck, the time keeper, about the time O'Toole and Tully had notified Stansbury to cut off another employé, Thompson, and that Tully was on his horse going down the road when Houck cut him off; that afterwards when plaintiff was discharged the second time, Tully met him and Wilson going up the road, and that Tully said to Wilson, referring to plaintiff, "I thought I had told you to cut that man off," and said to him, "You can get rid of him or you can pull up your camp and get off our premises;" that the next morning Wilson came over where plaintiff and one Hawkins were taking the horses out of the barn, with a list of names, and that Wilson then cut him off; and that he had not thereafter worked for the Consolidated Engineering Company. Plaintiff further swore that afterwards he met Tully and inquired of him why he had been cut off, and Tully replied that it was Col. O'Toole's orders, and said, "I want you to understand that Col. O'Toole, Mr. Eavenson and myself is running this country, and you'll do what we say;" that afterwards plaintiff tried to get work from Tully, and that Tully answered that he would not give him one bit of employment.

The contention of counsel for defendant is that neither this evidence nor any other evidence in the case sufficiently shows authority of O'Toole or Tully, for the coal company; nor that of Smith, Houck or Wilson to bind the engineering company in the premises, or to make either of the defendants responsible for the act or conduct of the others. We think, however, that although the evidence is not as strong as it might have been, nor the facts as well developed as they should have been, the evidence was sufficient to carry the case to the jury on the main facts in issue, and that it should not have been withdrawn from them by the motion to exclude. This conclusion, we think, is justified by the principles stated in Rua v. Boyer Smokeless Coal Co., 99 S. E. 213.

Our conclusion is to reverse the judgment, set aside the verdict, and to award the plaintiff a new trial.

(84 W. Va. 619)

STANLEY v. KANAWHA COUNTY COURT
et al. (No. 2907.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 30, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. COUNTIES  $\S$ 178—PUBLICATION OF ORDER FOR ROAD BOND ELECTION SUFFICIENT.

Section 56aXXVa, chapter 43, serial section 1793, Code 1913, providing for the posting and publishing thirty days before the poll is taken, orders of the county court providing for the holding of elections for the purpose of taking the vote of the legal voters upon the question of issuing bonds the proceeds of which are to be used in permanently improving the public roads, considered in the light of a subsequent amendment of said act, and with reference to the decisions of this court interpreting other statutes on the subject of notice, is satisfied by the publication of such order once a week for four consecutive weeks, and the contract of the county court for the publication of such order for thirty consecutive days or oftener than once a week for four consecutive weeks, is illegal and void, and payment of a greater sum than the legal rate for four insertions of such publication should be enjoined.

2. COUNTIES  $\S$ 178—LIBERAL CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE FOR NEWSPAPER PUBLICATIONS ADOPTED.

In construing such statute the liberal rather than the technical rule of construction should be applied.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Kanawha County.

Bill for injunction by I. J. Stanley against the County Court of Kanawha County and others. From a decree sustaining a demurrer to the bill, dissolving a preliminary injunction, and dismissing the bill, complainant appeals. Decree, so far as undertaking to dissolve the injunction and dismiss the bill, reversed and in other respects affirmed and injunction reinstated until further order, and cause remanded.

Linn & Byrne, of Charleston, for appellant.

MILLER, P. The decree below sustained the demurrer to the bill, dissolved the preliminary injunction awarded by four of the judges of this court on the 17th day of May, 1915, and dismissed the bill. The object of the bill was purely one for an injunction, and the injunction so awarded enjoined and restrained the defendants, the county court of Kanawha County, M. P. Malcolm, D. A.

Brawley and Grant Copenhaver, commissioners composing said court, from paying to the defendants, Daily Gazette Company, the Post Company and the Charleston Mail Association, corporations, or either of them, for or on account of the publication of the order described in the bill, out of the public revenues of Kanawha County, or any district thereof, any sum in excess of the legal rate for one insertion of said publication.

The order mentioned in said bill to which said injunction related was an order of said county court providing that a special election be held on the 29th day of May, 1915, in the districts of Pocahontas, Jefferson, Charleston, Loudon, and Malden, for the purpose of taking the vote of the legal voters of the said districts respectively, upon the question of the issuance of bonds, the proceeds of which were to be used for the purpose of making permanent improvements upon certain public roads of said districts.

The suit brought by plaintiff, as a citizen and taxpayer suing on behalf of himself and all other citizens and taxpayers, was, first, to enjoin the holding of a special election ordered, and, second, to enjoin the payment out of the public revenues, to the publishers, anything for such publications; but the preliminary injunction so granted was limited to payments in excess of the legal rates for one insertion thereof as already stated.

The bases of the relief so sought were, first, that the order for various reasons were illegal and that any election thereon would be wholly void; second, that under section 56aXXVa, chapter 43, serial section 1793, Code 1913, providing for the holding of such special elections and the posting and publication of the order therefor, the provisions of law respecting such posting and publication is that "such order must be published throughout the said district thirty days at least, before the poll is taken, as follows." Then follows the paragraph relating to posting the same in the clerk's office, at the front door of the court house, and by the sheriff at all the polling places. In the succeeding paragraph is the following provision:

"The court shall direct a copy to be published in one or more newspapers if they are published in said county."

The bill alleges that by proper construction of these provisions of the statute read together the court was limited to one publication in each newspaper, and was unauthorized by law, as the bill alleges it had undertaken to do, to contract with the Post Company for thirty insertions thereof, or one insertion each day for thirty consecutive days, at the aggregate price of $2000, and with the other publishers for one insertion each week for four consecutive weeks preceding the election, for the aggregate price of six hundred dollars to each publisher, and from which payment defendants should be enjoined.

[1] Counsel for defendants have not followed the case to this court, and we have not the benefit of their views except as disclosed by the answers. Nor have the counsel for plaintiff, either in their brief filed or in oral argument, cited us to any authority outside of the statute itself in support of their contention that the county court was limited to a single insertion of the order in each of the newspapers in which it was published. We find however many decisions of the courts holding that where a statute requires ten, twenty, thirty or any other number of days' notice, daily publication is not required but that the statute is satisfied with a single insertion thereof. Southworth v. Glasgow, 232 Mo. 108, 132 S. W. 1168, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1267, and note p. 1274, where all the cases are collected. Many cases hold, however, that where publication is required "for" a given number of days or weeks, it must be for each day or each week for the required number of days or weeks, thereby giving force to the preposition "for," and distinguishing that class of statutes from those where continuity is not contemplated or so indicated by the use of the preposition. We have at least two cases bearing on the question in this State, that of Benwood v. Railway Co., 53 W. Va. 465, 44 S. E. 271, and Atkinson v. Washington and Jefferson College, 54 W. Va. 32, 46 S. E. 253; the first holding that a statute requiring notice to be given by publication for thirty days in some newspaper of general circulation is sufficiently complied with by publication in the successive issues of a weekly newspaper through the period of time mentioned; the second holding that where a deed of trust provided that sale under it should be given by advertisement published thirty days previous thereto in some newspaper, the requirement was sufficiently complied with by publication in such newspaper once a week during such period of thirty days.

But we are not disposed to pursue the decisions further. We find that pending the publication of the order in this case, and pending this suit, the Legislature, in the second extraordinary session, on May 24, 1915, probably with reference to this very controversy, and in view of the different constructions put upon the statute involved, and the general and indefinite character thereof, by section 5 of chapter 8 of the acts of said session, put legislative construction upon said statute by providing that:

"The court shall direct a copy to be published once each week for four successive weeks, prior to the date of said election in one or more newspapers, if they are published in said county or district."

[2] We have said in a number of cases that in construing statutes requiring newspaper publication, the liberal rather than the technical rule should be applied. Marling v. Robrecht, 13 W. Va. 440; Miller v. Neff, 33 W. Va. 197, 10 S. E. 378, 6 L. R. A. 515; Sandusky v. Faris, 49 W. Va. 150, 38 S. E. 563. This was the rule applied in the two cases cited. Our conclusion is based on our own cases and the interpretation of the Legislature by the amendment of 1915, that the interpretation which the record shows was put upon the statute by the Attorney General at the time, is the correct one, and that the statute was satisfied by the publication of the order for four consecutive weeks as directed with respect to the Daily Gazette Company and the Charleston Mail Association, and that as to the contract for payment to these companies to the extent of the legal rates, the injunction was properly dissolved, but that the county court was not authorized by law to incur the extraordinary expense of daily publication of the order in the Charleston Post, and that its contract with the Post Company for payment of a sum in excess of the legal rate for four insertions, was illegal and void, and upon the record now presented, payment of a greater sum should be enjoined.

Another point urged is that at the time of the decree appealed from, the cause was still at rules and not matured for final hearing, and that the final decree pronounced over the protest of the plaintiff, who represented that further time to mature the cause was desired, was erroneous. There can be no doubt that this point is well founded.

Our conclusion is that in so far as the decree undertakes to dissolve the injunction against payment to the Post Company for publication of said order in excess of the legal rate for four insertions thereof and to dismiss the bill before maturity, the final decree should be reversed and in all other respects it should be affirmed. Accordingly the injunction to the extent indicated will be reinstated until the further order of the circuit court, and the cause will be remanded for further proceedings to be had therein, in accordance herewith, and further according to the rules and principles governing courts of equity.

(34 W. Va. 593)

CUNNINGHAM v. DUNN et al. (No. 3802.)
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 30, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. WILLS §191—"CHILD," IN STATUTE OF WILLS, MEANS CHILDREN.

The word "child," as used in section 16 of chapter 77 of the Code (sec. 3881), means "child or children"; the singular number having been adopted for convenience and brevity.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Child.]

2. WILLS §191—AFTER REVOCATION BY BIRTH OF ISSUE, REQUESTS DO NOT VEST UNTIL DEATH OF CHILDREN WITHOUT ISSUE.

The will of a person leaving two or more children at his death, made when he had no children and omitting provision for, and mention of, any child he might have, does not vest any of its devises or bequests, unless or until all of such children die unmarried and without issue.

3. WILLS §191—REVOCATION BY BIRTH OF ISSUE—DEFEASIBLE ESTATES VEST IN CHILDREN.

In such case, defeasible estates in the subject-matter of the will vest in the children by virtue of the statute of descents and distributions, and have all the qualities and characteristics of other defeasible estates.

4. CURTESY §11(2)—WILLS §191—DEVISE BY CHILDLESS WIFE TO HUSBAND REVOKED BY BIRTH OF ISSUE—DEFEASIBLE ESTATES.

If a devise be made by a wife to her husband, by a will executed when she had no children, and omitting provision for, and mention of, any child she might have, and she die leaving two children, the land descends to the children, subject to the husband's right of curtesy, and the devise does not take effect unless nor until both children die unmarried and without issue; but the estates so taken by the children are defeasible estates in fee simple, or base fees.

5. WILLS §191—DEFEASIBLE ESTATE OF CHILD BECAME ABSOLUTE BY MARRIAGE AND ISSUE.

If in such case one of the children dies unmarried and without issue, while the father is living, his share in the land goes to the father, by virtue of the statute of descents, subject to defeasance by the death of the other child unmarried and without issue; and by the marriage of such other child, and birth of issue, the father's estate in the part of the land so inherited by him becomes absolute.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Monroe County.

Suit by Elvira Cunningham against Gertrude Dunn and others. Demurrer to bill sustained, and bill dismissed, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, demurrer overruled, and cause remanded.

John L. Rowan, of Union, and J. A. Meadows, of Athens, for appellant.

W. M. La Fon, of Union, for appellees.

POFFENBARGER, J. The correctness of the decree complained of depends upon the construction of section 16 of chapter 77 of the Code (sec. 3881), reading as follows:

"If any person die leaving a child, or his wife enceinte of a child, which shall be born alive, and leaving a will made when such person had no child living, wherein any child he might have is not provided for or mentioned, such will, except so far as it provides for the payment of the debts of the testator, shall be construed as if the devises and bequests therein had been limited to take effect, in the event that the child shall die unmarried and without issue."

The will involved was construed for certain purposes in Cunningham v. Cunningham, 30 W. Va. 599, 5 S. E. 139; the court holding that the will and the circumstances under which it was made brought it within the operation of the statute just quoted, wherefore the husband and devisee of the testatrix took under it only a contingent estate in fee simple. At the date of the making of the will purporting to give the land to the husband absolutely, his wife, the testatrix, had no children; but she afterwards had two children, both of whom survived her. As both of the children were then living, the court had no occasion to enter upon any inquiry as to what estate the husband would take, in the event of the death of one of the children unmarried and without issue. It held that, by operation of the statute, the devise to the husband was limited, to take effect only in the event the children should die unmarried and without issue. Some time after the rendition of that decision, one of the children died unmarried and without issue, and the effect this event has upon the construction of the will is the problem submitted upon this appeal. The other child survives, is married, and has children. She is one of the defendants, and the plaintiff was a subsequent wife of her father.

The tract of land involved was conveyed by James Philips and wife to Jane Cunningham, by a deed dated November 6, 1878, and originally contained 118 acres. By deed dated March 20, 1880, Jane Cunningham and George W. Cunningham, her husband, conveyed 21 acres and 3 poles of it to William H. Dunn. By her will, dated August 19, 1879, the wife devised and bequeathed all of her estate, real and personal, to her husband, George W. Cunningham. This will was probated May 7, 1883. The character and extent of the estate of George W. Cunningham, under the will, were determined by the court in 1888. Some time after the death of Jane Cunningham, George W. Cunningham married the plaintiff in this cause, Elvira Cunningham. He died testate in April, 1917, and by his will, after having made certain specific bequests, gave all of the residue of his property of every kind to his wife, for and during her natural life, and the remainder in fee therein to his children.

Claiming a life estate in one-half of the tract of land by virtue of this will, on the theory that her husband had inherited title to one-half of it from his son, who died unmarried and without issue, or that the devise to him failed as to only one-half of it, this son and Gertrude Dunn having been the two children of Jane Cunningham, born between the date of the making of her will and her death, Elvira Cunningham filed the bill in this cause, praying for partition of the land, to which the defendant Gertrude Dunn filed her demurrer and answer. George W. Cunningham was survived by four other children, issue of his subsequent marriage or marriages, all of whom were made parties defendant. A purchaser of the alleged interest of one of them came into the cause by petition and filed an answer, by which he virtually joined in the prayer of the bill. By a decree entered April 12, 1918, the court adopted the theory of the plaintiff's bill and awarded her partition of the land; but on the next day this decree was set aside, by an order reciting unauthorized entry thereof. By a decree entered November 19, 1918, the court adopted the opposite theory, sustained the demurrer and dismissed the bill.

[1-4] The origin and purpose of the statute are well defined in Wood v. Tredway, 111 Va. 526, 69 S. E. 445. At common law, a will was not revoked by the subsequent birth of a child of the testator. Wood v. Tredway, cited; 2 Min. Inst. (3d Ed.) 1036, 1038; Schouler on Wills, 424. After the enactment of the statute of wills in England, the chancery court established a rule of constructive revocation of a will, as to the interest of a child not mentioned therein, nor otherwise provided for, founded upon a presumption that the testator did not intend to disinherit his child. 2 Min. Inst. (4th Ed.) 1026, 1027. This rule was also adopted in Virginia. Yerby v. Yerby, 3 Call (Va.) 334; Savage v. Mears, 2 Rob. (Va.) 570. Deeming it to be wise, equitable, and just, the General Assembly of Virginia made it, with some modifications, a part of the statutory law of wills at an early date. In the form in which it was originally passed, it had some defects or imperfections, which were eliminated by subsequent amendments. It substantially assumed its present form in Code 1849, c. 122, § 17, and has not since been changed in Virginia. With one slight alteration, it was adopted in our Code of 1868 (chapter 77, § 16). As found in the Code of 1860 (chapter 122, § 17) it made the will take effect in the event of the death of the child under the age of 21 years, unmarried, and without issue. Our statute makes it effective in the event of the death of the child unmarried and without issue.

The revocation recognized and enforced by the chancery courts, though equitable and just in the main, sometimes wrought unjust results by reason of its generality and far-reaching consequences. It wholly destroyed the devises and bequests made by the will, even though it happened that the child or children were infants and died in infancy, and no doubt sometimes let into the estate, by inheritance, persons to whom the testator never would have given it. In the judgment of the Legislature, it was more just and expedient to make the devises and bequests conditional, and not wholly void, in such cases. Accordingly it was provided that they should take effect only in the event of the death of the child unmarried and without issue. While the child lives, the will vests no estate in the donee. At most, he has a mere possibility or expectancy of an estate. His interest is purely and manifestly contingent only. In the event of the death of the child unmarried and without issue, the estate given by the will vests in him, and, in this case, the devisee would have taken an estate in fee simple, if both children had died unmarried and without issue. Whether the death of only one of the two children let him into an estate in one-half of the land depends partly upon the sense in which the term "child" is used in the statute.

The word "child" in the statute under consideration obviously means child or children, and was adopted for convenience and brevity. It cannot be supposed that the Legislature intended the birth of one child to effect a partial revocation of a will under certain circumstances, and the birth of two or more children not to have such effect under the same or similar circumstances. The statute deals with a subject in which heirs, actual and prospective, including children, are interested. Wills step in between them and their ancestors, cutting off their inheritances and depriving them of what they otherwise would be entitled to. In dealing with wills, the Legislature incidentally dealt with and affected children and heirs and descents and distributions. It made a saving in the case of one class of heirs. It may well be assumed, therefore, that it dealt with them as classes, and not as individuals. When there are two or more of them, they take by classes and are excluded by classes. In Cunningham v. Cunningham, 30 W. Va. 599, 5 S. E. 139, the will under consideration was held to be within the statute, notwithstanding the testatrix left two children, neither of whom was in being at the date of the execution of the will. In Kyle v. Kyle, 18 Ind. 108, a statute providing that, if a husband or wife should die intestate, leaving no child, and no father or mother, the whole of his property, real and personal, should go to the survivor, was construed as if it had used the terms "children or their descendants," instead of the word "child."

The old equity rule and its successor, the statute, were designed to preserve rights under the statute of descents and distribution, under the circumstances upon which they are predicated. As between parent and child, there is a natural and moral duty on the part of the former, which the statute recognizes and enforces. It rests upon the presumption that a person who has made a will when childless, and died leaving children born after the making of the will, did not intend to disinherit them, break the highest obligation that can be imposed on a human being, and deprive his offspring of the protection and assistance to which they are naturally enti-

led. Upon this presumption, it is assumed that, under such circumstances, the breach of the obligation was not intended, and that the will was inadvertently allowed to stand, after the birth of children. To make this presumption effective, the statute provides that the will shall not take effect, unless the child dies unmarried and without issue. A necessary implication arising from this provision is that, under such circumstances, the statute of descents and distribution shall be operative and carry the estate to the child. It must go to him by virtue of that statute, for it does not vest in the devisee, nor in the child, by the will, and the testator does not take it with him. In the case of a devise of real estate, under such circumstances, the child takes by descent a defeasible estate in fee simple, a base fee. If he dies unmarried and without issue, the estate is defeated by that event, and the estate given by the will goes to the devisee in that instrument. If, on the contrary, he marries and has issue, the estate so taken becomes absolute, and the will never takes effect.

It is impossible to give the word "child" in the latter part of the statute a meaning different from what it has in the first part of it. If the birth of two or more children, after the making of the will, brings it within the statute, the death of all of them unmarried and without issue is essential to the vesting of any estate given by the will. While Cunningham v. Cunningham and Wood v. Tredway, cited, do not so decide, they both assert it by way of dicta. The language of the statute is the same in each case, wherefore the intent of the Legislature must have been the same in each. Not a word found in the statute indicates legislative purpose to let the devisee into an estate in the part of the property that goes to one of the children, on his death unmarried and without issue, in the event of the existence of two or more after-born children. Its plain purpose is to give the estate to the children of the testator, and that purpose would be largely defeated, in many cases, if the devisee were allowed to take the share of one child at his death unmarried and without issue, when there are two or more children. He may be a total stranger to the estate, and yet he would be let into a part of it by the will, as against children, the other children. In the case of the existence of one child, the statute intends that he shall have the whole of the estate; wherefore it is perfectly consistent to say that if, in the case of two or more children, one of them should die unmarried and without issue, his share should go to his heirs, who, ordinarily, would be his brothers and sisters. Under this construction, the survivor of the two children, the sister, would have taken an estate in the one-half of the land the title to which vested conditionally in her brother, if her father had not been living. If the devisee had been some person other than her father, she would have taken that interest, and, on her marriage and the birth of her children, she would have had an absolute fee simple estate in all of the land. Under the circumstances of this case, the construction adopted keeps the land as nearly within the reach of the children as the law itself places it in the absence of a will. The daughter was the prospective heir of her father and would have taken a share of the brother's half, but for his will; and, but for the will and the existence of other children, she would have succeeded to all of it.

[6] The qualified or conditional fee-simple estates taken by the two children were inheritable estates, passing to the heirs, subject to the possibility of defeasance. 2 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 78; 2 Bl. Com. 111, note. Hence, on the death of the son, his share went to his father as his heir, and, when the daughter married and had issue, that estate in him became absolute, and was disposed of by his will, giving his then wife a life estate in it and the remainder in fee therein to his children.

This conclusion makes the decree complained of clearly wrong, and calls for reversal thereof. It will be reversed, the demurrer overruled, and the cause remanded.

(84 W. Va. 546)

STATE v. RINGER.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 23, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION §129(2)— BREAKING AND ENTERING RAILROAD CAR— INDICTMENT—MISJOINDER OF OFFENSES—DE- MURRER.

The charge in the second count of an indictment for house breaking and larceny that the defendant "afterwards" without breaking did enter the particular car alleged to have been broken and entered in the first count but referring to the same car by number and alleging the commission of the offense on the same day as the offense alleged in the first count, is not bad on demurrer for misjoinder of offenses unrelated to the same transaction, and the demurrer is properly overruled.

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION §129(2)— BREAKING AND ENTERING RAILROAD CAR— INDICTMENT—MISJOINDER OF OFFENSES.

Nor is the third count in such indictment bad on demurrer for misjoinder of unrelated offenses, which charges the larceny of certain goods not specifically described in either of the two preceding counts but which lays the time on the same day as the offenses charged in the previous counts.

3. CRIMINAL LAW §1169(11)—BREAKING AND ENTERING RAILROAD CAR—HARMLESS ER- ROR IN ADMITTING EVIDENCE.

On the trial of such indictment the admission of evidence of the possession of other goods by defendant in the same room where the goods alleged to have been stolen were stored, and which the evidence tends to show were also stolen by defendant, does not constitute reversible error, in the absence of evidence showing that defendant was prejudiced thereby.

4. CRIMINAL LAW §789(11)—INSTRUCTION— REASONABLE DOUBT.

An instruction on the subject of reasonable doubt telling the jury that "what they believe from the evidence as men they should believe as jurors," many times condemned, is erroneous and may constitute reversible error.

5. CRIMINAL LAW §785(3)—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESS—INSTRUCTION.

An instruction telling the jury that they may believe or refuse to believe any witness is erroneous. An instruction covering this subject should state the law substantially as the one approved in State v. Staley, 45 W. Va. 792, 32 S. E. 198.

6. CRIMINAL LAW §823(1)—ERRONEOUS IN- STRUCTION CURED BY GOOD INSTRUCTION.

A bad instruction is not cured by a good one properly stating the law of the case, given at the instance of the same or another party to the action.

7. CRIMINAL LAW §814(3) — ABSTRACT IN- STRUCTION—REFUSAL.

An instruction containing a mere abstract proposition of law not applicable to the facts proven is properly rejected by the trial court.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

8. CRIMINAL LAW §815(11)—WEIGHT OF TES- TIMONY—INTEREST OF DEFENDANT—INSTRU- TION.

An instruction that there is no different rule for the jury to follow in weighing the testimony of the defendant than that of any other witness would disregard the interest, bias, and prejudice of defendant, always present in a criminal indictment, and would be misleading.

9. BURGLARY §42—POSSESSION OF PROPERTY RECENTLY STOLEN.

The exclusive possession and control of property recently stolen are circumstances tending to show guilt, which the jury may consider in connection with all the other circumstances and facts in proof.

10. BURGLARY §45—BREAKING AND ENTER- ING CAR—OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY.

In a prosecution for breaking and entering a car and stealing goods therefrom, evidence that the car bore the initials "C. & N. W.," a waybill in evidence showing those initial letters, with testimony that they indicated that it was the property of that company, was sufficient to carry the ownership of the car to the jury.

Error to Circuit Court, Wood County.

Glen B. Ringer was convicted of breaking and entering a railroad car, etc., and he brings error. Reversed, verdict set aside, and a new trial awarded.

W. R. Brown, of West Union, and R. E. Bills, of Parkersburg, for plaintiff in error.

E. T. England, Atty. Gen., Charles Ritchie, Asst. Atty. Gen., and James S. Wade, of Parkersburg, for the State.

MILLER, P. Found "guilty as charged in the within indictment," the judgment upon the verdict of the jury complained of was that defendant be confined in the penitentiary of this State for the period of three years.

Numerous points of error are relied on for reversal. The first we will consider is that the court upon the prisoner's motion should have quashed the indictment and each of the three counts thereof, upon two grounds: (1) That each of the counts charges a separate and distinct offense; (2) that the third count in no way connects the offense therein charged with the offenses alleged to have been committed by the defendant in the first and second counts by reference thereto or in time, place or circumstance, wherefore not properly joined in an indictment for the other offenses with which he is therein accused.

The first count charges the defendant with having on the — day of December, 1917, feloniously broken and entered a railroad car number 67658 belonging to the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company, a corporation, in the possession of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, with intent the goods and chattels of the latter company in the said car feloniously to steal and carry away. The second count charges the defendant afterwards, to-wit, on the — day of December, 1917, without breaking did enter the same car, with like intent. The third count avers that defendant, on the — day of December, 1917, in Wood County, twenty-three (23) quarts of whiskey of the value of one dollar and fifty cents per quart and of the aggregate value of thirty-four dollars and fifty cents, the goods and chattels of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, then and there being found, unlawfully and feloniously did steal, take and carry away.

[1] To sustain their contention that the second count is in no way connected with or related to the crime charged in the first count, counsel for defendant lay much emphasis on the word "afterwards," contending that by the use of that word the grand jury intended another and distinct crime, not related to the one alleged in the first count, or arising out of the same transaction. We think this contention not well founded. Though the two counts charge different and distinct offenses, they are related to each other by reference to the same car number, the ownership and possession thereof, and of the goods therein, and we do not think the word "afterwards" in the second count should be construed as referring to a different transaction than that charged in the first count and so as to render it improper within the rules of criminal pleading to include the two offenses in the same indictment. If after breaking and entering, the defendant at the same time and in the same connection re-entered without breaking with the same intent charged, the acts would be so connected as to constitute one continuous act, and the two offenses might well be said to arise out of that transaction, justifying the joining of the two counts. If all of the offenses charged in one or more counts of an indictment represent but one continuous transaction, it is well settled in this State and in Virginia that they may be so joined as distinct offenses in different counts, and that where properly joined as distinct offenses, and unless they appear on the face of the indictment to involve a different transaction, a motion to quash for misjoinder should be overruled. State v. Smith, 24 W. Va. 814, 818; State v. Shores, 31 W. Va. 491, 495, 7 S. E. 413, 13 Am. St. Rep. 875; State v. McClung, 35 W. Va. 280, 282, 13 S. E. 654, and cases cited; Dowdy v. Commonwealth, 9 Gratt. Anno. 728, and note, 60 Am. Dec. 314; Benton's Case, 91 Va. 782, 21 S. E. 495; Hausenfluck v. Commonwealth, 85 Va. 702, 8 S. E. 683.

[2] It is said however of the third count that the offense charged appears in no way connected in time, place or circumstance with those charged in the first and second counts. But the time is the same in all three counts; the offense is of the same general character, and while the goods alleged to have been stolen are not identified as those referred to in the previous counts, it does not appear that they are not, and the rule is that where it does not appear on the face of the indictment that the offenses charged represent distinct transactions, a motion to quash should not prevail. Should it afterwards appear, however, that the offenses charged in the several counts are not properly joined, the court may then require the State to elect upon which of the counts it proposes to stand, and proceed with the trial. State v. Shores, State v. Smith, and Hausenfluck v. Commonwealth, supra, and other cases cited supra. So we think the motion to quash and the subsequent motion in arrest of judgment, so far as based on the ground of misjoinder, were properly overruled.

[3] Numerous exceptions were taken and saved by bills of exception to the rulings of the court on the admission of testimony of several witnesses as to the finding of other goods in the room and possession of the defendant, some of which were identified as having been taken from the railroad car mentioned in the indictment. Among them is an exception to the admission of a statement in writing signed by defendant and proven by the officers who searched his room and found the whiskey described in the third count, in which statement defendant purported to confess to the taking of the goods from the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, of which he was an employee. We do not see how this evidence, though not particularly relevant, could have misled the jury or prejudiced the defendant. If the jury believed he made the written statement confessing the offenses charged in the indictment as testified to by the witnesses, and that the goods other than the whiskey were stolen by him, the evidence tended to show guilty intent, one of the issues on the case. For such purpose evidence of other crimes and of goods found in defendant's possession is sometimes admissible. People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 264, 61 N. E. 286, 62 L. R. A. 193, note relating to larceny page 231, and cases annotated.

Complaint is made of the instructions to the jury, six in number, given at the instance of the State. Instructions number 1, 2, 4, and 6 present correct legal propositions pertinent to the issues and evidence in this case, and having been frequently approved in prior decisions, it is unnecessary to repeat what has many times been said of them in other cases. Instructions numbers 3 and 5 have been repeatedly condemned by this court, number 3 as not necessarily calling for reversal unless shown to have been prejudicial, but not so as to instruction number 5. Number 3 told the jury "that a reasonable doubt is not a vague or uncertain doubt and that what the jury believe from the evidence as men they should believe as jurors." Number 5 told the jury "that they are the sole judges of the evidence and that they may believe or refuse to believe any witness and that when passing upon credibility of witnesses they may take into consideration his interest in the matter in controversy, the reasonableness or unreasonableness of his statement, his bias or prejudice in the matter, if any appear, and his demeanor upon the witness stand."

[4] Instruction number 3 we have many times and recently considered and said that it ought not to be given. We do not understand why counsel and some of the trial courts persist in the use of this instruction. The last case referred to and citing the previous cases considering it is that of State v. Price, 83 W. Va. 71, 97 S. E. 582. The giving of this instruction always imposes upon us the burden of determining in the particular case whether the party resisting it has been prejudiced thereby, not always an easy deduction, and one which the court ought not to be called upon to determine. In this case we have concluded that the judgment must be reversed upon another ground, and we are relieved thereby from determining whether the instruction was prejudicial.

[5] Instruction number 5, we think, was wrong and prejudicial. It was plainly intended to apply alone to the evidence of the prisoner. Section 19, chapter 152 (sec. 5476), of the Code, makes the accused competent to testify in his own behalf, and it is not proper on his trial when accused of crime to tell the jury that they may at their will believe or refuse to believe his testimony, or that of any other witness. The only authority cited by the State to justify this instruction is State v. Staley, 45 W. Va. 792, 797, 32 S. E. 198, approving instruction number 4 given in that case. But instruction number 4 in that case is quite different in its terms and import from number 5 in this case, condemned in State v. McCausland, 82 W. Va. 525, 96 S. E. 938. The instruction approved in State v. Staley did not tell the jury they might believe or refuse to believe any witness. After telling them that they were the sole judges of the weight of the testimony and that they had the right to take into consideration the credibility of each witness as disclosed from his evidence etc., it did not tell them that they might believe or disbelieve the witness, as the jury were told in this case, but that if they believed any witness had testified falsely as to any material fact, they had the right to disregard all the evidence of such witness, or any part thereof, or give it such weight as in their opinion it was entitled to. That instruction properly embodied the law on this subject, but it is unlike the instruction here, which was specifically condemned in State v. McCausland. In the recent case of Siever v. Coffman, 80 W. Va. 420, 92 S. E. 669 referring to the previous case of State v. Wilson, 74 W. Va. 772, 780, 83 S. E. 44, we held it to be error to tell the jury they might disregard the entire testimony of a witness unless told in the same connection that they might give it such weight as in their judgment under all the facts and circumstances in the case it was entitled to.

[6] Defendant's instruction number 4 is substantially the instruction approved in State v. Staley, but as a general rule a bad instruction is not cured by the giving of a good one. Cobb v. Dunlevie, 63 W. Va. 398, 60 S. E. 384; State v. Michael, 74 W. Va. 613, 621, 82 S. E. 611, L. R. A. 1915A, 533; Stuck v. K. & M. Ry. Co., 78 W. Va. 490, 89 S. E. 280. The instruction does not represent an incomplete statement of the law which, under authority cited by counsel, may be cured by another complete instruction, but propounds a proposition which is not law, and is not cured by another instruction propounding the law correctly.

[8] Of the rejection of defendant's instructions complaint is also made. Ten were proposed on his behalf. Numbers 3, 5, 7, 8, and 10 were rejected. Of those rejected 3 and 7, relating to the burden of proof and reasonable doubt, were substantially covered by number 1, given. Instruction number 5 would have told the jury that there is no different rule for them to follow in weighing the testimony of the defendant than that of any other witness. This would be to disregard the interest, bias and prejudice of the defendant, always present in a criminal indictment, and would be misleading. The correct rule was stated in defendant's instruction number 4 given to the jury. State v. Staley, supra.

[7, 8] Instruction number 8 would have erroneously propounded the abstract proposition "that the mere possession by one of stolen property is not prima facie evidence that he is the thief." If a correct statement of the law, it does not cover the case, because much other evidence was before the jury tending to show defendant's guilt. Such possession may not amount of itself to prima facie evidence of guilt, as we held in State v. Littleton, 77 W. Va. 804, 88 S. E. 458. But as this case holds the exclusive possession and control of property recently stolen are circumstances tending to show guilt, which the jury may consider in connection with all the other circumstances and facts in proof. The instruction being wholly abstract was properly refused. Parker v. National Mut. Bldg. & Loan Association, 55 W. Va. 134, 48 S. E. 811.

Instruction number 10 proposed to tell the jury that if they believed from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant did take and carry away the whiskey mentioned and described in the indictment, but the evidence left them in doubt as to the value thereof and as to whether it was worth twenty dollars or more, at the time and place taken, then they should find the defendant guilty of petit larceny, a misdemeanor punishable by confinement in jail not to exceed one year. But there stand counts 1 and 2 charging defendant with the offense of house breaking, and entry without breaking, with felonious intent, and as to which the value of the property stolen is not material, wherefore this instruction would have withdrawn from the jury the questions depending on those counts. We know it is contended that there was no evidence of the breaking, or entry without breaking with felonious intent, but that question will be disposed of when we come to consider the alleged error in overruling defendant's motion for a new trial and in arrest of judgment. It is proper to say in this connection, however, that in our opinion the value of the twenty-three quarts of whiskey found in the possession of defendant at the time and place alleged was more than twenty dollars, sufficient to constitute the felony charged in the third count.

The motion of defendant to set aside the verdict and award him a new trial, and in arrest of judgment, overruled, are relied on as errors. These motions were predicated on three grounds: (1) The theory of a bad indictment, already disposed of; (2) alleged variance between the allegata and probata; (3) the theory that no lawful judgment could be pronounced against defendant on the general verdict of guilty not limited to the third count, for want of sufficient evidence to support either of the other counts. As there is to be another trial we do not wish to be understood as expressing any opinion on the weight and credibility of the evidence on the question of the defendant's guilt of breaking or entering without breaking the railroad car as charged in the first and second counts. All that it is necessary for us to say at this time is that there was evidence tending to show guilt of these offenses. That the car was broken and entered is fully established; that the whiskey and containers found in the possession of the defendant were a part of the goods contained in the car is supported by the evidence, and unless defendant's written admission to the officers causing his arrest was changed after he signed it, a fact for the jury, he confesses taking the liquor from the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, though not specifying the car from which it was taken. But can it be doubted that this and much other evidence was competent to go to the jury on the question of defendant's guilt of the crimes charged in the first and second counts? We think not. So that on the principles of State v. McClung, syllabus 4, and State v. Littleton, syllabus 1, relied on, there was evidence enough to go to the jury on the question of guilt or innocence of the defendant of these offenses, and in support of the offense of house breaking. Counsel for defendant are in error in assuming that the State did not attempt to prove defendant broke or entered the car.

[10] Nor is counsel for defendant correct in assuming that the State wholly failed to prove the car broken open and from which the whiskey and other property was taken was the car of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway. There was ample evidence that the car bore the initials "C. & N. W." The way bill in evidence showed these initial letters, and witnesses explained that these letters indicated that it was the property of that company. True, it was held in State v. Hill, 48 W. Va. 132, 35 S. E. 831, that the charge in an indictment that the accused broke and entered a sealed box car, the property of the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad Company was not sustained by proof tending to show that the accused broke and entered a freight car belonging to the Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad Company, or the C., C. & St. L., or the B. & O. R. R. Co. But there was no proof of ownership in this case other than that the initial letters on the car indicated that it was the property of the company described in the indictment. In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, we think the proof was sufficient to carry the case to the jury on the question of ownership of the car.

For the errors referred to committed on the trial, the judgment will be reversed, the verdict set aside, and the defendant will be awarded a new trial.

(78 N. C. 370)

MONTAGUE et al. v. LUMPKIN & PERRY.
(No. 249.)(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 15, 1919.)1. JUDGMENT  $\S$ 106(1)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT ON FAILURE TO ANSWER.

Where a regularly verified complaint alleged an express promise to pay a definite sum of money, it was not irregular to enter a judgment in favor of plaintiff by default final upon failure to answer.

2. JUDGMENT  $\S$ 145(3) — To SET ASIDE DEFAULT, NECESSARY TO SHOW FACTS CONSTITUTING DEFENSE.

A judgment by default for want of an answer will not be set aside unless facts are alleged, which, if true, would establish a defense.

3. CONTRACTS  $\S$ 176(1) — CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT FOR COURT.

The construction of a contract is a question of law for the court.

4. CONTRACTS  $\S$ 175(1)—SALES  $\S$ 75—WRITTEN CONTRACT TO PURCHASE PRESUMED TO COVER ALL REASONABLE CONTINGENCIES.

Contract reciting that buyer had bought seller's tobacco crop "for one thousand dollars, not less than three thousand pounds," payable "six hundred dollars when tips is delivered, three hundred when next load, and one hundred when the last is delivered, if there is 3,000 pounds," did not leave buyers, in the event that the crop did not weigh 3,000 pounds, to pay nothing or upon a quantum valebat, but was an agreement to pay $1,000, if crop weighed 3,000 pounds, and, if less, $900; for the presumption is that a written contract covers the different contingencies that may arise as far as they can be reasonably foreseen.

5. JUDGMENT  $\S$ 159—AFFIDAVIT TO SET ASIDE DEFAULT BY ATTORNEY SPEAKING FROM HEARSAY INSUFFICIENT.

In an action upon motion to set aside a default judgment, on the ground of excusable neglect, to recover a balance due under contract for sale of tobacco, defendant's allegations as to damage to the tobacco held too indefinite, and as not showing that plaintiffs were in any way responsible therefor, and particularly where the affidavit was that of the attorney who could only speak from hearsay and not of defendants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Allen, Judge.

Action by Lonza Montague and another against Lumpkin & Perry. Default judgment for plaintiffs, defendants' motion to set aside the judgment denied, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

This is a motion to set aside a judgment on the ground of excusable neglect.

The action is to recover a balance of $300 alleged to be due for tobacco sold and delivered to the defendants under the following contract:

"This is to certify that I have bought Lonza Montague's crop of tobacco for one thousand dollars, not less than three thousand pounds, one lot of tips, next to tips, and primings graded. He is to draw six hundred dollars when tips is delivered, three hundred when the next load, and one hundred when the last is delivered, if there is 3,000 pounds.

"October 16, 1918.

"[Signed] Lumpkin & Perry, per J. R. P."

The plaintiffs filed a duly verified complaint, alleging the delivery of the tobacco to the defendants, and the payment of $600 thereon.

It was not alleged that there were 3,000 pounds of the tobacco.

The plaintiffs also alleged that the defendants owed them $24.16 for stripping the last load of tobacco, which they had promised to pay.

One of the defendants filed an affidavit in support of the motion to set aside the judgment, and in it he stated no facts showing a meritorious defense. The following affidavit was also filed:

"J. W. Bunn, being duly sworn, says that he is attorney for the defendants in the above-entitled action; that the said defendants have a good and meritorious defense to the cause of action alleged in the complaint as follows:

"The plaintiffs failed to comply with the terms of the contract, which is set forth in the complaint, in that they delivered to the defendants only about 2,500 pounds of tobacco, when, according to the defendants' construction of the contract, the quantity of tobacco should have been three thousand pounds; that the tobacco, as delivered to the defendants, was in such damaged condition as to greatly decrease its value, and that it did not measure up in quality and condition to what it was at the time it was purchased by the defendants from the plaintiffs. That taking into consideration the quantity of tobacco and the condition at the time of its delivery by plaintiffs to the defendants, the defendants are indebted to plaintiffs in the sum of about one hundred and eighteen dollars ($118), which sum has been tendered by the defendants to the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs refused to accept same in payment of the balance due them under the terms of the contract.

"J. W. Bunn.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 19th day of June, 1919.

"Vitruius Royster, Clerk Superior Court."

There were other affidavits filed on the question of excusable neglect.

The motion was denied, and the defendants appealed.

J. W. Bunn and Murray Allen, both of Raleigh, for appellants.

J. G. Mills, of Wake Forest, and Douglass & Douglass, of Raleigh, for appellees.

ALLEN, J. [1] The complaint, which is verified, alleges an express promise to pay a definite sum of money, and under the authorities it was not irregular to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiffs by default final upon failure to answer. Hartman v. Farrlor, 95 N. C. 177; Miller v. Smith, 169 N. C. 210, 85 S. E. 379.

[2] It is also equally well settled that a judgment by default will not be set aside unless facts are alleged which, if true, would establish a defense.

"The court having jurisdiction of the subject and the parties, there is a presumption in favor of its judgment, and the burden of overcoming this presumption is with the party seeking to set aside the judgment. He must set forth facts showing prima facie a valid defense, and the validity of the defense is for the court, and not with the party. Although there was irregularity in entering the judgment, yet unless the court can now see reasonably that defendants had a good defense, or that they could now make a defense that would affect the judgment, why should it engage in the vain work of setting the judgment aside now, and then be called upon soon thereafter to render just such another between the same parties? To avoid this, the law requires that a prima facie valid defense must be set forth." Jeffries v. Aaron, 120 N. C. 169, 26 S. E. 696, approved in Miller v. Smith, 169 N. C. 210, 85 S. E. 379, and in other cases.

[3, 4] Counsel do not contest the correctness of these principles, and they further admit that no defense has been shown unless the contract sued on required the plaintiffs to deliver 3,000 pounds of tobacco, which has not been done.

The determination of the appeal turns then on the construction of the contract, which is a question of law for the court (Young v. L. Co., 147 N. C. 26, 60 S. E. 654, 16 L. R. A. [N. S.] 255), and in the effort to ascertain the intent of the parties, which is the purpose of all construction, we must deal with the contract as an entirety.

"In Paige on Contracts, § 1112, we find it stated: 'Since the object of construction is to ascertain the intent of the parties, the contract must be considered as an entirety. The problem is, not what the separate parts mean, but what the contract means when considered as a whole.'" Railroad v. Railroad, 147 N. C. 382, 61 S. E. 190, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 223, 125 Am. St. Rep. 550, 15 Ann. Cas. 363.

Following this principle and looking at the whole contract and not at separate parts, it seems to us clear that the plaintiffs sold their entire crop of tobacco, and that the defendants agreed to pay $1,000 if it weighed 3,000 pounds, but if less only $900.

Provision is made for the payment of $600 "when tips is delivered," $300 "when the next load," "and then $100 when the last is delivered, if there is 3,000 pounds."

If this is not what the parties intended, they have made a contract for the sale of a crop of tobacco, making no provision for the purchase price if it should not weigh 3,000 pounds, leaving the defendants in that event to pay nothing or upon a quantum valebat, which is contrary to the presumption that a written contract covers the different contingencies that may arise as far as they can be reasonably foreseen.

We are therefore of opinion no defense has been shown, and that the motion was properly denied.

[5] The allegations as to damage to the tobacco, contained in the affidavit, are too indefinite, and do not show that the plaintiffs are in any way responsible; and, besides, these allegations are in the affidavit of the attorney, who could only speak by hearsay, and not in the affidavit of either of the defendants.

Affirmed.

(178 N. C. 273)

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. W. A. SIMPKINS
CO. et al. (No. 255.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 15, 1919.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⇨189—MORTGAGOR AGENT OF MORTGAGEE IN SALE OF GOODS FREE OF LIEN.

A chattel mortgagor, left in possession of goods which in the contemplation of the parties are to be disposed of by the mortgagor in the ordinary course of trade, is the agent of the mortgagee to the extent that he may pass the title to the goods, sold in the usual way to a purchaser, freed of the mortgage lien, and he has implied authority to use the necessary and proper means to that end.

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⇨145(2)—UNDISCLOSED PRINCIPAL IGNORANT OF FREIGHT UNPAID NOT LIABLE TO RAILROAD ON SETTLEMENT WITH CONSIGNEE.

Where a railroad marked bills of lading "freight prepaid" and gave credit solely to shipper, who represented an undisclosed principal, the principal was not liable to the railroad for the freight, where such principal without objection by the railroad settled with the shipper in good faith without notice that the freight had not been paid.

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⇨133—LIABILITY OF UNKNOWN PRINCIPAL WHERE CREDIT GIVEN EXCLUSIVELY TO AGENT.

Where one dealing with an agent with knowledge of his agency gave credit exclusively to the agent, he cannot thereafter recover from the principal who has in good faith settled with the agent.

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⇨142—REGISTRATION OF CHATTEL MORTGAGE NOTICE TO RAILROAD OF OWNERSHIP OF GOODS SHIPPED.

Where a chattel mortgage was registered, it was notice to a railroad shipping the mortgaged goods, as far as the ownership of the goods and the liability for freight were concerned.

5. CARRIERS ⇐194—ASSIGNMENT OF BILLS OF LADING FOR COLLECTION DOES NOT RENDER ASSIGNEE LIABLE FOR FREIGHT CHARGES.

Where a bank takes drafts with bills of lading attached for purpose of collection, the title does not pass so as to render the bank liable for freight charges.

6. ESTOPPEL ⇐95—CARRIERS MARKING BILL OF LADING "FREIGHT PREPAID" CANNOT AFTER THREE YEARS COLLECT OF SHIPPER.

Where a carrier taking goods from an agent for shipment marked the bill of lading, "Freight prepaid," gave agent credit, allowed principal to settle with the agent, remained silent for three years, and did not notify the principal that the freight had not been paid, thus preventing the principal from indemnifying itself when it had several opportunities, it was estopped as against principal to deny that the freight had been paid.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Allen, Judge.

Suit by the Southern Railway Company against the W. A. Simpkins Company and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This is a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover the freight charges on seven cars of cotton seed shipped from Raleigh, N. C., in interstate commerce, in the name of, W. A. Simpkins Company; three cars being shipped October 18, 1912, to W. A. Simpkins Company order notify J. P. Savant, New Orleans, La., and three cars being shipped October 31st to the same order notify and the same consignee, and one car being shipped October 24th by W. A. Simpkins Company to itself order notify Frierson Company, Limited, Frierson, La. The complaint sets forth three causes of action, being: (1) That W. B. Drake, Jr., cashier, by virtue of a chattel mortgage not yet due, as mortgagee consenting, was liable for the shipping out and the turning into money by the mortgage; (2) that the arrangements between the W. A. Simpkins Company and the Merchants' National Bank and W. B. Drake, Jr., cashier, were such as to constitute a partnership; and (3) that the assignment of the draft and bill of lading before these shipments left Raleigh to W. B. Drake, Jr., cashier, for the Merchants' National Bank, made them liable for the freight charges as assignee of the bill of lading.

There is no dispute as to the amount of the freight charges and the chattel mortgage on 28,000 bushels of cotton seed, the same reciting a $10,000 indebtedness due November 30, 1912 (four to seven weeks after the shipment took place), was introduced.

This mortgage was to Drake, cashier, and was executed in July, 1912, and was registered.

In October, 1912, W. A. Simpkins Company made seven shipments of cotton seed over the Southern Railroad to Southern points. The custom, which had existed between the said shipper and railroad for six or seven years, was that the railroad charged the freight, and "in ten days, two weeks or thirty days collection was made." "The Simpkins Company had a line of credit with the railroad, at the time these shipments were made." Referring to the B. L. it will be seen that the same had been marked "prepaid" before the seed left Raleigh. Plaintiff's witness states "that although the bill of lading was marked 'Freight prepaid,' it had not been prepaid, but credit had been extended to the Simpkins Company by the railroad and is still due the railroad."

Sight drafts were drawn on Savant and others, with bills of lading attached, and the defendant bank collected the drafts, in the usual course, and placed the proceeds to the credit of the Simpkins Company, and this company, by its checks on said bank, from time to time, drew out said funds, paying its debts and paying in part a mortgage debt to the bank.

The collections from the drafts amounted to about $6,000, of which $4,000 was retained by the bank on debts due by the Simpkins Company and the remainder paid out on its check.

At the conclusion of the evidence, his honor entered judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff excepted and appealed.

A. B. Andrews and W. B. Snow, both of Raleigh, for appellant.

Robert W. Winston and J. C. Biggs, both of Raleigh, for appellees.

ALLEN, J. The plaintiff's counsel admit that there is no evidence of a partnership between the Simpkins Company and either of the defendants, and this cause of action is abandoned.

They, however, insist that the defendants are liable for the freight upon two grounds:

(1) That the Simpkins Company was the agent of Drake, cashier, in making the contract of shipment, and that Drake is liable on the contract as an undisclosed principal.

(2) That the defendant bank, having taken an assignment of drafts with bills of lading attached, and having collected the money thereon, is liable for the freight as the owner of the property.

[1] There is no evidence of agency except such as arises from the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee, and while the mortgagor, left in possession of goods, which, in the contemplation of the parties, are to be disposed of by the mortgagor in the ordinary course of trade, is the agent of the mortgagee to the extent that he may pass the title to the goods, sold in the usual way, to a purchaser, freed of the mortgage lien (Bynum v. Miller, 89 N. C. 393), which carries with it "the im-pled authority to use the necessary and proper means to that end" (Etheridge v. Hilliard, 100 N. C. 253, 6 S. E. 572), the plaintiff is not in a position to take advantage of this principle.

[2] In the first place, if we assume that Drake is an undisclosed principal, and as such ordinarily liable on the contract of the agent, there is no evidence that either of the defendants had any notice that there was anything due for freight, and, on the contrary, the plaintiff marked the bills of lading "Freight prepaid," credit was given solely to the agent, the defendants afterwards, without objection by the plaintiff, settled with Simpkins Company, paying out on its check from the proceeds of the draft more than enough to pay the freight, and the plaintiff waited nearly three years before making any demand on the defendants, during which time the defendants had numerous opportunities to reimburse themselves, if liable for the freight.

"The qualification of the principal's liability to respond to his agent's contract, as stated in the earlier authorities mentioned, was narrowed by the interpretation adopted in Heald v. Kenworthy, 10 Exch. 739, to the effect that the principal is not discharged from full responsibility unless he has been led by the conduct of the seller to make payment to or settle with the agent; and the doctrine of this case has been reiterated in many subsequent cases, both in England and in this country, where the agent did not contract as for himself, but as a broker, or otherwise as representing an undisclosed principal. One of the more recent English cases of this class is Davison v. Donaldson, L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 623.

"But, as is shown in Armstrong v. Stokes, L. R. 7 Q. B. 599, the version of Heald v. Kenworthy, while a correct interpretation of the rule of the principal's liability, when applied to cases in which the seller deals with the agent relying upon the existence of an undisclosed principal, is not to be applied in those in which the seller has given credit solely to the agent, supposing him to be the principal. This case decides that the principal is not liable when the seller has dealt with the agent supposing him to be the principal, if he has in good faith paid the agent at a time when the seller still gave credit to the agent, and knew of no one else. See, also, Irvine v. Watson, L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. 102.

"Under such circumstances, it is immaterial that the principal has not been misled by the seller's conduct or laches into paying or settling with his agent. It is enough to absolve him from liability that he has in good faith paid or settled with his agent. In that case the court was dealing with a contract made by an agent which was within the scope of the authority conferred on him, but which was nevertheless made by the agent as though he were acting for himself as principal."

Fradley v. Hyland (C. C.) 37 Fed. 51, 2 L. R. A. 750.

The same principle is stated in 31 Cyc. 1580, as follows:

"An undisclosed principal may be relieved from liability by reason of a changed state of accounts between him and the agent, the rule being formerly laid down in England, and now very generally followed in the United States, that where the principal, acting in good faith, has settled with the agent so that he would be subjected to loss were he compelled to pay the third person, he is relieved of liability to the latter. This doctrine is now held in England and in a few cases in the United States to be too broad, and in these jurisdictions the better rule is stated to be that the principal is discharged only where he has been induced to believe that such person has settled with the agent or has elected to hold the latter. In any event, the principal is relieved from liability where he has been induced by the conduct of the third person to settle with the agent."

And in Taintor v. Prendergast, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 73, 38 Am. Dec. 619:

"It may be admitted, as was urged in the argument, that, whether the principal be considered a foreigner or not, his agent, omitting to disclose his name, would be personally liable to an action. Even in case of a foreign principal, however, I apprehend it would be too strong to say that when discovered he would not be liable for the price of the commodity purchased by his agent. This may indeed be said when a clear intent is shown to give an exclusive credit to the agent."

[3, 4] And the same result would follow if Drake is a disclosed principal on the facts in this record.

He has no relation to the transaction except as mortgagee, and his mortgage was registered, which was notice to the plaintiff, the contract was made with the Simpkins Company as principal, not as agent, the Simpkins Company had property rights in the cotton seed, credit was given exclusively to the Simpkins Company, and the bills of lading were marked "Freight prepaid," pursuant to the contract between the plaintiff and the Simpkins Company.

The editor, in the note to Fradley v. Hyland, supra, cites numerous authorities in support of the proposition that—

"Where a third party, knowing that the agent acts for his principal, elects at the time of the making of the contract to give exclusive credit to the agent, he cannot afterwards sue the principal."

And in 31 Cyc. 1570, the author says:

"A person who upon entering into contractual relations with an agent, has full knowledge of the principal, but extends credit to the agent exclusively, cannot thereafter resort to the principal, and the latter is not bound, although the agent acted in the course of his employment and for the principal's benefit."

[5] We are therefore of opinion the plaintiff cannot recover on the ground of agency, and its cause of action against the bank as the owner of the property is equally without foundation, as the undisputed evidence is that the bank took the drafts with bills of lading attached for collection, and in such case no title passes. 3 R. C. L. 633; Packing Co. v. Davis, 118 N. C. 553, 24 S. E. 365.

The plaintiff does not seek to recover against the bank as assignee of the bill of lading under the authority of Finch v. Gregg, 126 N. C. 176, 35 S. E. 251, 49 L. R. A. 679, recognizing that it has been overruled by Mason v. Cotton Co., 148 N. C. 495, 62 S. E. 625, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1221, 128 Am. St. Rep. 635.

[6] Again, every element of an equitable estoppel is present in this case which "arises when any one, by his acts, representations, or admissions, or by his silence when he ought to speak out, intentionally or through culpable negligence induces another to believe certain facts to exist, and such other rightfully relies and acts on such belief, so that he will be prejudiced if the former is permitted to deny the existence of such facts." Boddie v. Bond, 154 N. C. 365, 70 S. E. 826. Or as stated in different language in Mason v. Williams, 66 N. C. 571, quoting from Barnwell, B., in Cornish v. Abingdon, 4 Hurl. & Nor. 549, and approved in Redman v. Graham, 80 N. C. 235:

"The rule is that if a man so conducts himself, whether intentionally or not, that a reasonable person would infer that a certain state of things exists, and acts on that inference, he shall be afterwards estopped from denying it."

The plaintiff represented to the defendants that the freight had been paid, and relying on this representation, and without knowledge that it was not true, the defendants, having in hand more than enough money to pay the freight, turned it over to the Simpkins Company, and thereafter, during numerous dealings between the Simpkins Company and the defendants, when there was the opportunity for indemnity, the plaintiff remained silent and did not notify the defendants that the freight had not been paid and made no demand for the freight for near three years.

Under these circumstances, the plaintiff ought not to be permitted to assert its claims, if there was liability on the part of the defendants originally.

Affirmed.

(178 N. C. 170)

BOARD OF COM'RS OF SURRY COUNTY
v. WACHOVIA BANK & TRUST CO.
(No. 358.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 8, 1919.)

1. STATUTES  $\S$  97(2) — SPECIAL LEGISLATION RELATING TO HIGHWAYS VALID.

Pub. Loc. Laws 1919, c. 235, creating a highway commission for Surry county, is not invalid, as violating Const. art. 2, § 29, prohibiting passage of local or special acts authorizing the laying out, opening, or maintaining, etc., of highways.

2. COUNTIES  $\S$  174 — STATUTE RELATING TO ROAD BONDS VALID.

Pub. Loc. Laws 1919, c. 235, creating a highway commission for Surry county, which, in section 24, provides that $349,000 of the $500,000 bond issue might be used to retire certain township road bonds, if that could be arranged, but, if not, the issue of bonds should be restricted, is valid.

3. COUNTIES  $\S$  181 — LIMITATIONS AS TO ASSESSMENT FOR SINKING FUND TO PAY ROAD BONDS VALID.

Pub. Loc. Laws 1919, c. 235, creating a highway commission for Surry county, and authorizing the issuance of highway bonds, but which limits the levy for sinking fund to 40 cents on the $100 and $1.20 per poll, is not invalid for that reason, because, if there should arise a possibility of the levy not raising a sufficient amount, the bondholders could proceed by mandamus to compel application of proceeds to payment of interest and maintenance and corresponding reduction of the sinking fund, leaving the principal to be provided for at maturity.

4. COUNTIES  $\S$  174 — ASSESSMENT OF TAXES TO MEET ROAD BOND VALID.

Highway bonds issued under Pub. Loc. Laws 1919, c. 235, creating a highway commission for Surry county, are for necessary expenses, and sufficient taxes therefor can be levied under Laws 1917, c. 103, as amended by Laws 1919, c. 185, authorizing counties to construct roads and bridges.

5. COUNTIES  $\S$  190(2) — GENERAL APPROVAL SUFFICIENT AS TO SPECIAL LAWS AS TO ROAD BONDS.

Pub. Loc. Laws 1919, c. 235, creating highway commission for Surry county and authorizing issuance of bonds, held not open to attack on the ground that permission to levy taxes in excess of constitutional limitation can be granted under article 5, § 6, only by special approval of the General Assembly, for special approval is not required to be given by special act to a single county, but may be given by general statute giving option to any county which may see fit to avail itself of the permission.

6. COUNTIES  $\S$  182 — PUBLICATION OF NOTICE OF SALE OF ROAD BONDS SUFFICIENT.

Publication of notice of sale of bonds once a week for 5 consecutive weeks, beginning more than 30 days before sale, is a sufficient advertisement for 30 days, as required by Pub. Loc. Laws 1919, c. 235, § 23, authorizing Surry county to issue bonds.

7. COUNTIES  $\S$  182 — NOTICE OF PUBLIC SALE OF ROAD BONDS UNNECESSARY.

In view of amendment to the general bond sales act, made by Laws 1919, c. 185, § 6, which authorizes the board of commissioners to sell bonds at public or private sale, held, that the provisions of Laws 1917, c. 147, as to notice of sale, are no longer mandatory.

8. COUNTIES ~~§~~183(2) — ALL ROAD BONDS NEED NOT BE CALLABLE OR OPTIONAL BONDS.

Laws 1917, c. 147, relating to highway bonds, does not require all bonds to be made callable or optional bonds, but merely provides for calling designated bonds before maturity, where they contain such provision.

9. COUNTIES ~~§~~183(1)—COUNTY ROAD BONDS NOT SUBJECT TO RESTRICTIONS IN GENERAL ACT AS TO ISSUANCE.

While taxation may be levied under Laws 1917, c. 103, as amended by Laws 1919, c. 185, to discharge bonds issued by Surry county under Pub. Loc. Laws 1919, c. 235, held, that such bonds are not subject to restrictions in the general act as to their issuance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Surry County; McElroy, Judge.

Submission of controversy between the Board of Commissioners of Surry County and the Wachovia Bank & Trust Company. From a judgment for the County, the Wachovia Bank & Trust Company appeals. Affirmed.

This is a controversy submitted upon an agreed statement of facts without action, in regard to $151,000 of Surry county road bonds which were awarded to the defendant at its bid of par and accrued interest; this bid being the highest bid submitted pursuant to the published notice of sale. The defendant afterwards declined to take the bonds, alleging they were unconstitutional. The court sustained the validity of the bonds, and defendant appealed.

Manly, Hendren & Womble, of Winston-Salem, for appellants.

Carter & Carter, of Mt. Airy, E. M. Linville, of Winston-Salem, and Wm. Henry Hoyt, of New York City, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. On March 3, 1919, the General Assembly ratified chapter 235, Public Local Laws 1919, entitled "An act to create a highway commission for Surry county for the improvement of the public roads." This act created the highway commission of Surry county, and among other provisions authorized in sections 21, 22, and 23, the issuance of $500,000 of "Surry county good roads bonds," to be made payable at such times as the Board of County Commissioners may designate, not exceeding 30 years, and bearing interest not exceeding 5 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually to carry out the purposes of the act. Section 22 provided that for the creation of a sinking fund for the payment of the bonds, and for the payment of interest thereon and for maintenance of the said roads, the county commissioners should annually levy taxes "not to exceed 40 cents on the $100, and not exceeding $1.20 on the poll."

The defendants attack the constitutionality of this act upon two grounds:

[1] I. That the act was passed in violation of section 29, art. 2, of the Constitution, which prohibits the passage of "any local, private or special act * * * authorizing the laying out, opening, altering, maintaining or discontinuing of highways." This objection has been fully discussed and similar acts to this held constitutional in Brown v. Com'rs, 173 N. C. 598, 92 S. E. 502, which was approved and affirmed in Mills v. Com'rs, 175 N. C. 215, 95 S. E. 481, and reaffirmed at this term in Martin v. Trust Co., 100 S. E. 134, and Davis v. Lenoir, 101 S. E. 260. It is unnecessary to repeat what has been so fully discussed and so recently decided. We can add nothing thereto.

[2] II. The defendant further contends that section 24 of the act before us is unconstitutional. That section provides that $349,000 of this issue of $500,000 of bonds authorized by this act may be used to retire certain township bonds of said county which have been issued for road purposes in exchange for said township bonds, if this can be arranged; but that if the holders of said township bonds, or any of them, refuse to accept these county bonds in exchange, then the issue of county bonds under this act shall be reduced to that extent.

We do not see that the defendant, who has purchased and is to receive the other $151,000 of this bond issue, is at all concerned in the validity of the $349,000 of bonds to be issued in exchange for the township bonds. But, as the question is presented, it may be well to state that this provision is an almost exact copy of similar provisions in the act in regard to Person County which was held valid in Wagstaff v. Highway Commissioners, 174 N. C. 377, 93 S. E. 908, and which we reaffirm.

The object of this provision is to equalize the burden by relieving the townships, which have already issued bonds for this purpose, by substituting county bonds to the same extent by exchange with the holders of said township bonds, and, where this cannot be done, by abating the proposed issue of $500,000 to the extent that said township bonds cannot be retired by exchange with the holders thereof. The object of the statute is as far as possible to make this road system a county and not a township burden. The cases of Bladen v. Boring, 175 N. C. 105, 95 S. E. 43, and Johnston v. State Treasurer, 174 N. C. 141, 93 S. E. 482, 2 A. L. R. 726, cited by the defendant, have no application to the provisions of this statute.

[3] The defendant further attacks the validity of the bonds and their issue by the county commissioners because of the limitation, in the act, of the levy to 40 cents on $100 and $1.20 per poll, to create a sinking fund for the ultimate payment of the bonds, for the payment of interest, and for the maintenance of the roads. There is no evidence, or finding of fact, that it will be insufficient for that purpose, and it is to be presumed that those who drafted the act made an estimate whether the sum which would be raised by such levy would be sufficient, especially in view of the steadily increasing wealth of Surry county and the policy of revaluation of property at its full value which has been adopted by the state. But, if it should prove insufficient, it in no wise affects the constitutionality of the bonds or their validity in any respect. The defendant purchased with full notice of that provision in the act, and the bonds in any view will be a valid obligation of the county of Surry. The defendant, if there arose a possibility of this not raising a sufficient amount, could proceed by mandamus to compel the application of the proceeds of the levy to the payment first of interest and maintenance and a corresponding reduction in the sinking fund, if necessary, leaving the principal of the bonds to be provided for at maturity, if the sinking fund is not sufficient, since the indebtedness in any event is a valid obligation of the county.

[4] The bonds being issued for a necessary expense, "sufficient" taxes can be levied under the general statute authorizing counties to construct roads and bridges (chapter 103, Laws 1917, amended by chapter 185, Laws 1919). Martin v. Trust Co., at this term.

[5] The objection that permission to levy taxes in excess of the constitutional limitation can be granted under article 5, § 6, only by "special approval" of the General Assembly; and that by the decision in Railroad v. Cherokee, 177 N. C. 86, 97 S. E. 758, it was held that such approval could not be given by a general act was fully met by the decisions in Parvin v. Commissioners, 177 N. C. 508, 99 S. E. 432, and Martin v. Trust Co., at this term, which held that "special approval" is not required to be given by a "special act" restricted to a single county, but may be by general statute giving an option to any county which shall see fit to avail itself of such permission. In Parvin v.

Com'rs, Railroad v. Cherokee, was distinguished.

The defendant further contends that section 24 required, by implication, that notice shall be issued to the holders of township bonds to give them an opportunity to exchange them for county bonds, and that it does not appear that this was done. This in no wise concerns this defendant, for these $151,000 of bonds are not a part of the $349,000 to be used for the exchange with the holders of township bonds.

[6, 7] Publication of the notice of sale of these bonds was made "once a week for 5 successive weeks, beginning more than 30 days before the sale of the bonds." This is sufficient advertisement "for 30 days" as required by section 23 of the act. We know of no precedent or reasoning that can sustain the objection on this ground. We presume that it was put in ex abundanti cautela. Besides, the express grant of power in the general act to sell bonds "at public or private sale as the board of commissioners may determine," in section 6, c. 185, Laws 1919, ratified March 8, 1919, 5 days after this special Surry County Act was passed, makes it clear that the 30 days' advertisement was not absolutely necessary. Such restriction in the bond sale act (Laws 1917, c. 147) is no longer mandatory.

[8, 9] There is no merit in the contention that the general act of 1917 (chapter 147) requires that the bonds issued under it shall be "callable" or "optional" bonds. In subdivision (f) of section 1 of that act, following the provisions for calling designated bonds before maturity, are the following words: "Provided, the bonds designated shall express such condition on their face." Such proviso means that only such bonds can be called as have that provision expressed on their face, and there is no requirement that it shall be so expressed on any bond. Besides, these bonds are issued under this special act for Surry county, which has no such requirement. While taxation may be levied for the payment of these and other bonds in any county under chapter 103, Laws 1917, amended by chapter 185, Laws 1919, when issued for roads and bridges these bonds are not subject to any restrictions and provisions as to their issue and sale, other than those provided in this act under which they are issued.

Affirmed.

(178 N. C. 243)

POWELL et al. v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY. CO. et al. (No. 253.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 15, 1919.)

1. RAILROADS ⇨94(2)—RIGHT OF CITY TO REQUIRE CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGES.

A city government, both under its police powers and Revisal 1905, §§ 2569-2700, can require railroads to construct bridges along streets running over their tracks.

2. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇨20(1)—INVASION OF PROPERTY RIGHTS OF ABUTTING OWNER BY RAILROAD THROUGH CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE A "TAKING."

Railroad's invasion of the proprietary rights of an abutting owner through construction of a bridge, when wrongfully made, pursuant to requirement by the city, constitutes a "taking," within the principles of eminent domain, and cannot be lawfully insisted on, except on compensation duly made.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Taking.]

3. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇨271—RAILROAD'S LIABILITY TO ABUTTING OWNER DAMAGED BY BUILDING BRIDGE.

Where a railroad constructs a bridge, causing injury to an abutting owner, of its own motion or for its own benefit, the road is liable, though it has acted under plans submitted to a municipal board and approved by them.

4. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇨101(2)—CHANGE OF GRADE OF HIGHWAY IN FAVOR OF RAILROAD REQUIRES COMPENSATION.

Though a city may alter the grade of a highway ordinarily without making further compensation to abutting owners, the right exists for public benefit, and may not be used or sanctioned by the city in favor of a railroad controlled by private owners, thus creating additional burdens to the injury of abutting owners, except on compensation duly made.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1026—REVERSAL ONLY FOR SUBSTANTIAL PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

Where a cause requiring much time and work has been fully and carefully tried, with the assistance of competent and diligent counsel, and the decisive issues have been fairly decided, the results of the hearing should not be disturbed, except on reasonable showing of substantial and prejudicial error.

6. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇨124—DAMAGES FROM CHANGE OF GRADE TO BE DETERMINED AS OF TIME CHANGE WAS MADE.

The measure of damages to a property owner through an elevation in grade of the adjacent street is the difference in value of the property caused by the elevation in grade, more properly at the time when the structure causing the elevation was completed by the railroad doing the work under authority of the city.

7. EVIDENCE ⇨474(18)—OPINION TESTIMONY AS TO DAMAGES FROM CHANGE IN GRADE RELEVANT.

Opinion of witnesses predicated on personal examination of the property in 1916 held relevant on the question of the value of the property injured in 1914 by the alteration in grade of the adjacent street through the building of a bridge by a railroad under authority of the city.

8. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇨298—EVIDENCE OF COST OF REGRADING LOT, ON ALTERATION OF GRADE, ADMISSIBLE.

In an action for damage to property through change in grade of adjacent street by building of bridge by railroad under authority of city, evidence as to what it would cost to restore lot by jacking up house and hauling in earth held admissible, though not the measure of damages, and not to be considered to make them greater than depreciation in market value.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1056(1)—ON QUESTION OF VALUE OF PREMISES EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE OF OWNER'S ATTEMPT TO REDUCE ASSESSMENT HARMLESS.

In an action against a railroad and the city for damages to adjacent property from change in grade of a street, exclusion from evidence of the circumstances that, where the board of valuation had assessed the property at a higher rating after the injury, the then owner, ancestor of plaintiff, endeavored to have the assessment reduced, held harmless to defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Allen, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Jennie S. Powell and others against the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company, the Norfolk Southern Railroad Company, and the City of Raleigh. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant Seaboard Air Line Railway Company appeals. No error.

The action is to recover damages alleged to have been caused to the lands of plaintiffs, a house and lot, in Raleigh, N. C., by the construction of a concrete bridge on Hillsboro street, in said city, over the tracks of the railroad companies raising the approaches to said bridge, to the injury of plaintiffs' lot abutting on the street. During the progress of the cause a nonsuit was as to the Norfolk Southern Railroad Company and the city of Raleigh, and the issues were determined as between plaintiffs, owners of the lot, and the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company; liability being resisted chiefly on the ground that the bridge in question had been constructed by the railroad pursuant to an ordinance and requirement of the Raleigh city government.

On issues submitted, the jury rendered the following verdict:

(1) Are the parties whose names are set forth in the amended complaint the owners of the property alleged to have been damaged? A. Yes.

(2) Are T. C. Powell and R. H. Merritt the duly appointed and qualified executors of the will of Jennie S. Powell, as alleged in the complaint? A. Yes.

(3) Are the parties named in the amended complaint the devisees in the will of Jennie S. Powell, as alleged? A. Yes.

(4) Was the defendant Seaboard Air Line Railway Company required by the city of Raleigh to construct a bridge over its tracks on Hillsboro street? A. Yes.

(5) Did the defendant Seaboard Air Line Railway Company construct the bridge according to plans approved by the board of aldermen of the city of Raleigh? A. Yes.

(6) Did the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company, in constructing the bridge over its tracks on Hillsboro street, of its own accord increase or cause to be increased the grade of said street abutting upon the land described in the complaint? A. Yes.

(7) Did the defendant Seaboard Air Line Railway Company, in building said bridge, increase or cause to be increased the grade of said street for the benefit of said Seaboard Air Line Railway Company? A. Yes.

(8) Was the land (house and lot) described in the complaint damaged by reason of the building of said bridge and the alleged increase in the grade of the street in front of said land, as alleged in the complaint? A. Yes.

(9) If so, what damages did plaintiffs sustain as a consequence thereof? A. Three thousand dollars ($3,000).

Judgment on the verdict for plaintiffs, and said defendant Seaboard Company appealed, assigning errors.

Murray Allen, of Raleigh, for appellant.

Jones & Bailey, of Raleigh, for appellees.

HOKE, J. [1] The right of the city government, both under its police powers and the several statutes applicable, to require railroads to construct bridges along streets running over their tracks, is fully established in this jurisdiction, and is recognized in well-considered cases elsewhere. Railroad v. Goldsboro, 155 N. C. 356, 71 S. E. 514; State ex rel. City of Minneapolis v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co., 98 Minn. 380, 108 N. W. 261, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 298, 120 Am. St. Rep. 581, 8 Ann. Cas. 1047; Cleveland v. City Council of Augusta, 102 Ga. 233, 29 S. E. 584, 43 L. R. A. 638; Railroad v. Duluth, 208 U. S. 583, 28 Sup. Ct. 341, 52 L. Ed. 630; 3 Elliott on Railroads (2d Ed.) § 1092; Revisal, §§ 2569-2700, etc. And there is high authority for the position that, when such a bridge has been constructed pursuant to the city's requirement, and the bridge itself, or the necessary and proper approaches thereto, "invade the proprietary rights of an abutting owner, causing material injury to the same, recovery may be had by such owner against the company"—this for the reason, among others, that the railroad acquires and holds its right to pass under public streets subject to all reasonable orders of this kind; and when they are obeyed, and the structure is completed, or while it is being built the undertaking is considered as being in the exercise of its chartered rights and duties, and so becomes the act of the company for which it may be properly held accountable. Bur- ritt v. City of New Haven, 42 Conn. 174; English, Treas., v. New Haven & Northampton Co., 32 Conn. 240; Baltimore & Ohio R. R. v. Kane and Wife, 124 Md. 231, 92 Atl. 532.

[2] In this connection it may be well to note that under the law prevailing in this state an invasion of this kind, when wrongfully made, constitutes a taking within the meaning and application of the principles of eminent domain, and cannot be lawfully insisted upon, except on compensation duly made to the owner. Caveness v. Railroad, 172 N. C. 305, 90 S. E. 244.

[3] While we are disposed to approve the position above stated, it is not necessary for appellees to rely upon it in order to sustain the recovery had by them in this instance, as the jury, under a charge free from reversible error, have determined that the raising of the grade of the Hillsboro bridge was done by the company of its own motion and for its own benefit. See verdict on sixth and seventh issues. A perusal of the record will show that, because the old wooden bridge had become "rotten and unsafe," the city ordinance required the company to substitute a steel or concrete bridge without specifications as to any elevation of grade, and that while the plans were approved by the city, the elevation which worked the injury complained of was done, as stated, for its own benefit; there being facts in evidence permitting such inference and that it was done for the reason that the company thereby procured a greater clearance from the top of the tracks to the bottom floor of the bridge, rendering the operation of their trains less liable to accidents and injuries, the evidence on part of plaintiff being that the additional clearance amounted to as much as 2 feet and 7 inches. And where this is true—that is, where the road has constructed the bridge so as to cause injury to an abutting owner of its own motion or for its own benefit—all of the authorities, so far as examined, concur in the ruling that the company may be held liable, notwithstanding it has acted under plans submitted to the municipal board and approved by them. Bennett v. R. R., 170 N. C. 389, 87 S. E. 133, L. R. A. 1916D, 1074; Brown v. Electric Co., 138 N. C. 534, 51 S. E. 62, 69 L. R. A. 631, 107 Am. St. Rep. 554; White v. R. R., 113 N. C. 610, 18 S. E. 330, 22 L. R. A. 627, 37 Am. St. Rep. 639; Midland Co. v. Williams, 92 Ala. 277, 9 South. 203; Shrader v. Cleveland & City Ry., 242 Ill. 227, 89 N. E. 997, reported also with an instructive note in 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 226. In this last publication the general principle referred to is stated in the first headnote as follows:

(1) "A railroad company is, under a constitutional provision requiring payment of damages for property injured for public use, liable for injury to property abutting on the street, by the construction of a viaduct, under authority of the municipality, to carry a street over its tracks which intersect it, if the work is done for its benefit, to enable it to lay its tracks through the municipality."

[4] While it is fully recognized here and elsewhere that a municipal corporation may alter and change the grade of an established highway in their discretion and ordinarily without making further compensation to abutting owners (Wood v. Land Co., 185 N. C. 367, 81 S. E. 422, and authorities cited), this right and immunity only exists for the public benefit, and may not be used or sanctioned by contract or ordinance of the municipality in favor of a private or public service corporation controlled by private owners and creating additional burdens to the injury of abutting owners, except on compensation duly made. Thus it was held, in the well-considered case of Bennett v. Railroad, that:

"The right conferred upon a municipality to grade its streets without liability to abutting owners, within the proper exercise of its discretionary power, is for the public benefit, and cannot be transferred to a railroad company to do so for the furtherance of its own business."

And in Brown v. Electric Co., supra, it was held that:

"1. The right acquired by a city by condemnation of a street and sidewalk is confined to the public necessity and to the uses for which property is taken or burdened with the easement and for any additional burden placed upon the servient tenement compensation must be made.

"2. The power of the city to confer upon the defendants a franchise to lay their tracks, erect their poles, and string their wires along the streets or sidewalks cannot affect the right of abutting owners to demand compensation for any additional burden placed upon their property."

The verdict, therefore, having established, as stated, that this elevation of the bridge, rendering necessary an elevation in the approaching street, was done by defendant company of its own motion and for its own advantage, it is liable for the damages thereby caused to abutting owners, notwithstanding the plans for the bridge were approved by the governing authorities of the city and the defendant's motion for nonsuit has therefore been properly disallowed.

[5] It was objected to the charge on the seventh issue that the same does not state and apply the law to the evidence with sufficient fullness and was no proper compliance with section 535 of the Revisal, appertaining to the instructions of the trial court to juries; but, considering his honor's charge on this issue as an entirety, we do not think it is justly open to the objection. The issue referred to was very largely one of fact, with the pertinent testimony very restricted in its nature, and the court, after stating the position of the parties concerning the issue and the evidence, putting the burden on the plaintiff, left it to them to determine the question involved. No jury could have been misled or failed to apprehend fully the significance of the issue and the evidence relevant to its proper determination, and assuredly there is no case presented for reversible error. This cause, requiring much time and work, has been fully and carefully tried, with the assistance of competent, alert, and diligent counsel on both sides. The determinative issues have been fairly decided and the results of the hearing should not be disturbed, unless it is reasonably made to appear that the appellant's defense has been in some way prejudiced by substantial error. In a well-considered case at the last term, Brewer v. Ring, 177 N. C. 478, 99 S. E. 358, opinion by Associate Justice Walker, it was said:

"Courts do not lightly grant reversals, or set aside verdicts, upon grounds which show the alleged error to be harmless or where the appellant could have sustained no injury from it. There should be at least something like a practical treatment of the motion to reverse, and it should not be granted except to subserve the real ends of substantial justice. Hilliard on New Trials (2d Ed.) §§ 1 to 7."

Appellant also insisted on several exceptions to the rulings of the court as to the reception of evidence on the issue as to damages:

[6, 7] (1) That D. F. Fort, V. O. Parker, and perhaps one or two others were allowed to give their opinion as to the difference in the value of the property caused by changes of grade in the approach to the bridge, their opinion being predicated on examination of the property and conditions attending the change, three years before the trial—i. e., 1916—when the time of the estimate should have been when the bridge was completed, to wit, in 1914.

Undoubtedly the time when this estimate of damages should be made is the difference in value of the property caused by the elevation of grade, and more properly at the time when the structure was completed, and the court so instructed the jury. But, conceding that the bridge was completed in 1914, as defendant contends, though this does not very satisfactorily appear, under permanent physical conditions of the kind presented here, and in the absence of any definite testimony showing, meantime, a substantial change in values, we think that the opinion of these witnesses, qualified by extended experience and from personal examination of the property in 1916, is relevant on the question of value and was properly admitted. Myers v. Charlotte, 146 N. C. 246, 59 S. E. 674; Creighton v. Water Com'rs, 143 N. C. 171, 55 S. E. 511, 10 Ann. Cas. 218; Blevins v. Cotton Mills, 150 N. C. 493, 64 S. E. 428.

[8] (2) That evidence was received over defendant's objection as to how much it would cost to restore the lot, by jacking up the house and hauling in earth to restore the same to its former relative grade.

This was admitted by his honor as a relevant circumstance on the question of injury to market value and in so far as it tended to provide a reasonable method of relief. His honor, however, was careful to tell the jury that this was not the measure of damages, and should in no event be considered or allowed for, so as to enhance the damages and make them greater than the depreciation of market value. So restricted, the testimony was properly allowed. 10 R. C. L. pp. 175, 176, title "Eminent Domain," § 152. As a matter of fact both the evidence and the ruling thereon had a natural tendency to moderate the damages, and could not have worked harm to defendant's position on the issue.

[9] (3) That the court excluded the circumstance that, where the official board of valuation had assessed property at a higher rating after the alleged injury, the then owner, ancestor in title of the present plaintiff, appeared before them and endeavored to have same reduced.

So far as the action of the board of assessors was concerned it has been generally ruled irrelevant on the question of valuation. Hamilton v. Railroad, 150 N. C. 193, 63 S. E. 730. And as to the action of plaintiff's predecessor in title, his action, as indicated, tended to favor his own position on the issue, and its exclusion could in no sense be held to have prejudiced defendant's case.

His honor's instructions as to the exclusion of damages and benefits common to the community at large is in general accord with our decisions on the subject, and we concur in his view that there are no facts in evidence which called for or permitted a reduction by reason of benefits or advantages peculiar to the property. Phifer v. Commissioners, 157 N. C. 150, 72 S. E. 852; Bost v. Cabarrus County, 152 N. C. 531, 67 S. E. 1066.

On careful consideration of the record and the many exceptions, we are of opinion that no reversible error has been shown, and the judgment of the superior court must be affirmed.

No error.

CLARK, C. J., did not sit.

(178 N. C. 257)

MCDONALD et al. v. HOWE et al. (No. 286.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 15, 1919.)

1. JUDGMENT  $\S$  282—VALID WITHOUT SIGNATURE BY JUDGE.

The requirement that a judgment be signed by the judge is only directory, and a judgment passed in open court and filed with the papers as a part of the judgment roll is valid, though not signed.

2. JUDGMENT  $\S$  282 — COMPLETION OF UNSIGNED RECORD NUNC PRO TUNC AT SUCCEEDING TERM.

Even if the judgment had not been signed by the judge, the record could have been completed nunc pro tunc at a succeeding term of court.

3. WILLS  $\S$  439—INTENTION OBJECT IN CONSTRUCTION.

In the construction of a will the object is to arrive at testator's intention.

4. WILLS  $\S$  630(3)—DEVISE CREATING FEE ON HAPPENING OF CONTINGENCY.

Under a will devising property to a sister, to use until her two daughters became of age, when it should become theirs, and providing that, should they die leaving sisters or brothers of their mother's children, the sisters or brothers should inherit, but, should they die, the property was to be sold and the proceeds divided between the children of testatrix's brothers, the two daughters acquired a fee simple absolute on their arriving at 21.

5. WILLS  $\S$  629—VESTING OF ESTATE DEVISED FAVORED.

It is the policy of the law that a devise shall take effect at the earliest moment the language permits.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Hanover County; Calvert, Judge.

Action by Nada R. McDonald and another against Alfred G. Howe and others. From judgment dismissing the action, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Mary Washington Howe, the aunt of the plaintiffs, provided in her will as follows:

"The remainder of my property I give to my sister, Rebecca Jane McDonald, for her use until her daughters, Nada Roberta and Alfreda Eloise, become of age, when it becomes theirs. Should Nada and Alfreda die, leaving sister or sisters, brother or brothers, of their mother's children, the sister or sisters, brother or brothers, shall inherit the property here mentioned. Should they die, the property is to be sold and proceeds divided between the children of my brothers, John T. Howe and A. P. Howe."

This proceeding is to have the adverse claims of the defendants set aside and to have the plaintiff declared the owner in fee of the land described in the will. The plaintiffs, Nada Roberta and Alfreda Eloise

McDonald, are both of age. The defendants are their minor sisters, who through their guardian ad litem demurred to the complaint upon the ground that it does not state a cause of action, because it appears from the will under which the plaintiffs claim the land that they—"were only given a life estate in said property and not the fee, and at most they only own a determinable fee, and that in the event they should die leaving a brother or sister of their mother's children that the fee simple estate would be given to such brother or sister; and this being true, the plaintiffs are not entitled to have the court adjudge that these defendants have no interest in said property and that the plaintiffs own the same in fee simple."

The other defendants are the sons of John T. and A. P. Howe. The case coming before Stacy, Judge, at Fall term, 1918, he sustained the demurrer and held that the plaintiffs were not the owners in fee of the land described in the complaint, but the court adjourned before the judgment sustaining the demurrer was signed.

The case was brought before Calvert, J., at April term, 1919, of the same court, who ruled that "plaintiffs are not the owners in fee of the land, but only have a life estate therein, or at most a determinable fee, and therefore are not entitled to the relief prayed for," and dismissed the action. Appeal by plaintiffs.

A. S. Williams, of Wilmington, for appellants.

CLARK, C. J. [1] There was no irregularity upon the face of the proceedings. This court has repeatedly held that the requirement that a judgment should be signed by the judge is "only directory, and a judgment passed in open court and filed with the papers as a part of the judgment roll is a valid judgment, though not signed by the judge." Range Co. v. Carver, 118 N. C. 328, 24 S. E. 352, citing Rollins v. Henry, 78 N. C. 342; Matthews v. Joyce, 85 N. C. 258; Keener v. Goodson, 89 N. C. 273; Spencer v. Credle, 102 N. C. 68, 8 S. E. 901; Bond v. Wool, 113 N. C. 20, 18 S. E. 77.

[2] Even if the judgment should have been signed, the record could be completed by entering judgment nunc pro tunc at a succeeding term of the court. Ferrell v. Hales, 119 N. C. 212, 25 S. E. 821, and cases there cited, which has been approved in Taylor v. Ervin, 119 N. C. 274, 25 S. E. 875; Knowles v. Savage, 140 N. C. 374, 52 S. E. 930; Brown v. Harding, 171 N. C. 687, 89 S. E. 222; Hardware Co. v. Holt, 173 N. C. 311, 92 S. E. 8; and especially in Pfeifer v. Drug Co., 171 N. C. 216, 88 S. E. 343, where the authorities are fully cited.

[3, 4] In the construction of a will the object is to arrive at the intention of the testator. The testator here gave her daughter the property until her daughters, the plaintiffs, should become of age, "when it becomes theirs." These words indicate an intention that the property should be theirs absolutely upon the happening of that contingency. The words, "Should Nada and Alfreda die, leaving sister or sisters, brother or brothers, of their mother's children, the sister or sisters, brother or brothers shall inherit the property herein mentioned" indicate, we think, an intention that, should the contingency fall upon which the plaintiffs should have the property absolutely, i. e., should they die before arriving at age, then this property should go to their sisters or brothers. The further clause, "Should they [evidently meaning such sisters or brothers] die, the property to be sold and the proceeds divided between the children of my brothers, John T. Howe and A. P. Howe," presents more difficulty; but we need not consider that, since, the property having become absolutely the property of Nada and Alfreda by their arriving at age, the contingency upon which the property should go over to the children of John T. and A. P. Howe cannot happen.

[5] It is the policy of the law that a devise should take effect at the earliest moment that the language will permit, which in this case is the arrival at age, at which time the property should become vested in fee. The act of 1827 (now Rev. § 1581), construing limitations contingent upon any person dying without heirs, has no application to this case.

The plaintiffs, we think, acquired a fee simple absolute upon their arriving at 21.

Reversed.

(178 N. C. 254)

ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO. v. BRUNSWICK COUNTY. (No. 285.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 15, 1919.)

1. TAXATION §543(2)—DEMAND REQUIRED BY STATUTE SUFFICIENT IN SUIT FOR TAXES ILLEGALLY COLLECTED.

A railroad's demand against a county for taxes unlawfully collected having averred full compliance with all preliminary requirements of Revisal 1905, § 2855, such statute explicitly authorizes the suit, though there was no demand by plaintiff further than protest and demand on the county treasurer under the statute.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR §960(1) — PLEADING §222—DISCRETIONARY TO PERMIT DEFENDANT TO ANSWER OVER AFTER FRIVOLOUS DEMURRER.

Even when a demurrer is frivolous in the first instance, the matter is referred to the sound discretion of the trial judge, and his judgment permitting the demurring defendant to an-answer over will not be interfered with, except perhaps in case of great abuse, nor can his action be reviewed by appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Brunswick County; Calver, Judge.

Action by the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company against Brunswick County. From a judgment overruling the defendant's demurrer, it appeals. Affirmed.

Civil action under section 2855, Revisal, to recover an amount of taxes agreed to have been unlawfully and wrongfully collected from plaintiff, heard on demurrer to complaint. There was judgment overruling demurrer, and defendant excepted and appealed.

C. Ed. Taylor, of Southport, for appellant.

Rountree & Davis, of Wilmington, and Cranmer & Davis, of Southport, for appellee.

HOKE, J. The statute under which the present action is instituted (Revisal, § 2855), on matter relevant to this inquiry, provides as follows:

"Whenever any person shall claim to have a valid defense to the enforcement of a tax or assessment charged or assessed upon his property or poll, such person shall pay such tax or assessment to the sheriff; but if, at the time of such payment, he shall notify the sheriff in writing that he pays the same under protest, such payment shall be without prejudice to any defenses or rights he may have in the premises, and he may, at any time within thirty days after such payment, demand the same in writing from the treasurer of the state or of the county, city or town, for the benefit or under the authority or by request of which the same was levied; and if the same shall not be refunded within ninety days thereafter, may sue such county, city or town for the amount so demanded, including in his action against the county both state and county tax; and if upon the trial it shall be determined that such tax or any part thereof was levied or assessed for an illegal or unauthorized purpose, or was for any reason invalid or excessive, judgment shall be rendered therefore, with interest, and the same shall be collected as in other cases."

In the present instance the complaint alleges that for the year 1914 there was collected from plaintiff company illegal taxes to the amount of $824.67, setting forth with fullness and detail the facts showing the illegality complained of and the amount as stated. It also states that at the time of payment the company, through its duly authorized officers, filed a written protest with the sheriff of the county, and within 30 days made formal demand in writing on the county treasurer, containing notice that, if the tax so wrongfully collected was not refunded in 90 days, action would be brought under Revisal, § 2855, etc.

Defendant's demurrer is on the ground that no previous demand had been made of the proper municipal authorities that the claim be audited and examined as required by section 1384, Revisal, nor to the chairman of the board of county commissioners as contemplated and directed by section 396.

[1] The complaint having averred full compliance with all the preliminary requirements of section 2855, the statute in explicit terms authorizes the suit. There is no reason for requiring further demand, when in the protest and the demand on the treasurer, which was required to be made in writing, the county officials were fully informed of the nature and amount of the claim, and we are of opinion that by correct interpretation this section confers a present right of action, without making the presentation and demands referred to in the sections of the Revisal upon which defendant relies. Railroad v. Reidsville, 109 N. C. 494, 13 S. E. 865. Under proper construction, this later act, under which the suit was brought, must be regarded as an exception withdrawing claims controlled by it from the operation and effect of the general requirements of the former portions of the law. Cecil v. High Point, 165 N. C. 431, 81 S. E. 616; Rodgers v. United States, 185 U. S. 83, 22 Sup. Ct. 582, 46 L. Ed. 816; 1 Lewis' Sutherland, Stat. Construction, § 268.

[2] While we approve his honor's judgment overruling the demurrer, we do not concur in the view insisted upon by the appellee that the demurrer is so devoid of merit that it should be held frivolous and judgment entered in this court for the sum demanded. Apart from this, the question has not been passed upon in court below, and our later decisions on the subject are to the effect that, even when frivolous, this matter in the first instance is referred to the "sound discretion" of the trial judge, and that his judgment permitting a defendant to answer over will not be interfered with, except perhaps in case of great abuse, nor can his action be reviewed by appeal. Parker v. Railroad, 150 N. C. 433, 64 S. E. 186, citing Dunn v. Barnes, 73 N. C. 273; Clark's Code (3d. Ed.) § 272, p. 295, and notes; Morgan v. Harris, 141 N. C. 360, 54 S. E. 381; Walters v. Starnes, 118 N. C. 842, 24 S. E. 713; Abbott v. Hancock, 123 N. C. 89, 31 S. E. 271. There is no error, and judgment overruling demurrer is affirmed.

Affirmed.

(178 N. C. 702)

STATE v. BRYANT. (No. 274.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 15, 1919.)

1. HOMICIDE  $\S$ 254 — CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE SUSTAINING CONVICTION OF SECOND DEGREE MURDER.

Circumstantial evidence held to sustain conviction of murder in the second degree of a woman with whom defendant had been intimate.

2. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$ 448(7, 11) — EVIDENCE AS TO APPEARANCES OF LOCATION AND DECEDENT NOT INADMISSIBLE OPINION.

In a prosecution for murder of defendant's mistress, objections to the testimony of a doctor, describing the situation, surroundings, and the appearances at the place of killing, and also the condition of deceased's person, were properly overruled, not being inadmissible opinion, but instantaneous conclusions of the mind.

3. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$ 1137(3)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE HARMLESS TO DEFENDANT.

In prosecution for murder of defendant's mistress, where the court admitted evidence of a difficulty between the parties, but later, convinced that he had erred, announced he would order mistrial, and defendant's counsel insisted trial should go on, and that they would be content with his honor instructing the jury to disregard the testimony, which he did repeatedly, any error in the matter was harmless to defendant.

4. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$ 1172(2) — INSTRUCTION HARMLESS TO DEFENDANT.

In a prosecution for murder of defendant's mistress, the part of the charge in which the court told the jury they might consider evidence of defendant's not fleeing when he had an opportunity as a circumstance in his favor was harmless to defendant.

5. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$ 775(1)—INSTRUCTION ON ALIBI.

In a prosecution for murder of defendant's mistress, the court's charge on alibi held not erroneous, and therefore not prejudicial to defendant.

6. HOMICIDE  $\S$ 268—IDENTITY OF VOICES A JURY QUESTION.

In a prosecution for murder of defendant's mistress, the question as to certain voices heard by a witness, and whether they were those of defendant and deceased, held for the jury to determine on all the evidence, which suggested they were the voices of defendant and deceased, and that defendant was threatening deceased, and using angry and abusive language.

7. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$ 1059(2) — GENERAL ATTACK ON CHARGE WILL NOT BE CONSIDERED.

A general or broadside attack on the charge cannot succeed, but the error must be specified, both as to the charge and failure to give all instructions when there are more than one; for if any of the instructions are correct, or any of the requests should not have been given, the exception fails.

Appeal from Superior Court, Brunswick County; Calvert, Judge.

Jake Bryant was convicted of murder in the second degree, and appeals. No error.

Indictment for murder.

The defendant was indicted for the murder of Susie Spicer, and was convicted at March term, 1919, or Brunswick superior court, Judge Calvert presiding, of murder in the second degree. From the judgment upon the verdict, he appealed to this court.

There is no doubt that there was evidence of the corpus delicti, so the principal question in the case is: Who killed Susie Spicer? The state's evidence is circumstantial, while the defendant set up an alibi. If the state's evidence was believed by the jury, and they made the proper deductions therefrom, then he was properly convicted; whereas, if they believed defendant's evidence, there was no time in which he could commit the murder, which was unaccounted for.

The principal circumstances upon which the state relied to justify the verdict of guilty were as follows:

There were intimate relations between the deceased and the defendant extending over a considerable period of time prior to the homicide. When the defendant went to Beaufort for work, the deceased accompanied him, and they lived together there. At this time, the defendant admitted, in his testimony, that he was married; but while he was in Beaufort his wife was at home with her folks, and died there. In March or April the defendant went to Beaufort and stayed there until July 6th. He also stated that on September 3d, of the same year (1918), he married Frances Livingstone in Wilmington. On the afternoon of Saturday, September 21, 1918, he was at the house of Florence Hendricks, the mother of the deceased, where deceased also lived. There was an interview between them there, and the defendant told the deceased to meet him at Burton's crossroads. He went off in the direction of the crossroads, and the deceased soon followed. She was seen no more alive, and her body was found the following Monday morning in a thicket near the crossroads. The deceased was soon to leave for Philadelphia, and had made preparations for leaving on Monday, the 23d, which was probable known to defendant. She had money, which was usually carried in her stocking, and no money was found on her person or about the house after her death; and when found one stocking was pulled down, the other being in place. When defendant called at the house to see deceased he was in a bad humor, at least. He said to the deceased:

"Meet me at Ed. Burton's crossroads. We had just as well have a war here as to go to France and have it."

He then went out at the gate and up the road towards Burton's crossroads, and the deceased soon followed him, going in the same direction. The prisoner had given the deceased a ring, which she wore with other rings, and when she was found all the rings were in place except the one ring that the prisoner had given her. The deceased's finger nails on the left hand were trimmed to the quick; those of the right hand were long.

The Hendricks house was about 250 yards from where the body was found, and it was about three-quarters of a mile from where the body was found to the defendant's house at the mill, near Lanvale. The prisoner was seen at home lacing his shoes late in the afternoon by George Morriss, and he wore different clothes from those he had on at the home of Susie Spicer, the deceased, a few hours before; and, on the search by the officer in his house, no clothing of defendant could be found. Defendant's conduct, when asked to assist in the search for Susie on Sunday afternoon, was thus described by the witness Ed. Burton:

"I told Jake, the defendant: 'Susie is missing. I feel uneasy about her. Won't you come and help me hunt her?' Jake said, 'Yes,' and they walked with me to Lanvale station. When we got about 200 yards from the fence where we started, Jake said, 'Now, Ed, if there is anything the matter, I am expecting the blame to be put on me.' I said: 'Well, I don't accuse you of anything. I don't know where the woman is.' He said, 'I have been around there so much, if there is anything the matter, the blame will be put on me.'"

He was in a visibly unnerved condition when he talked with Florence Hendricks on the train Sunday afternoon, the day after the homicide, and also when examining the knife before Coroner Boyette.

There was some evidence of robbery. Susie Spicer was preparing to go to Philadelphia on Monday, the 23d. She had at least $40 to her mother's knowledge, and usually kept her money in her stocking. When her body was found that Monday morning, the witness Dr. Boyette testified:

"The right foot was pushed out and the knee kind of turned up, and her stocking was below the knee. The right stocking was down. The left stocking was intact. Her leg was perfectly straight."

The state contended that this evidence pointed to the defendant, a man who had been intimate with her and who must have known where she kept her money, as the murderer, particularly when taken in connection with the missing ring referred to above.

There was testimony of Dr. Boyette, and other witnesses, who viewed the body and its surroundings, before it was moved, which tended to refute any suggestion of suicide. This evidence also tended to show that there had been sexual intercourse by consent between the parties before the murder. The act of copulation had taken place about 50 yards from the place the body was found. After this, it appears that the parties had gone about 50 yards towards the road. One of them sat down at the root of a gum tree. The state contends that it is quite likely there was a quarrel here between the parties, there being evidence that Susie Spicer, the deceased, carried the knife with her from her home; that in the quarrel she may have attempted to use it upon the defendant, who, grasping her wrist and wringing it from her, threw her upon the ground and cut her throat. The jury seems to have taken this view of the case, convicting the prisoner of second degree murder.

The state further contends that the killing could have been done and the defendant have been at Evans' store in Lanvale at 3 o'clock the same afternoon, as the distance from the place where the body was found to this store, as estimated by the witnesses, was three-fourths of a mile; in other words, about ten minutes for a moderately rapid walker. George Morriss, who, the state contends, seems to have been perhaps the most intelligent of the negro witnesses, and not connected with any of the parties, says:

"On the Saturday she was missing, I went from my work (railroad section) between 1 and 2 o'clock. I passed by the home of Susie and saw Jake Bryant and her two little boys there. Jake was eating grapes under an arbor. I stopped and talked with him about 20 minutes. I did not see Susie at this time."

The state further contends that it is evident the time referred to by George, he being a railroad hand, was new time, so that, compared with the time used by all the other witnesses, he was at Susie's house between 12 and 1 o'clock. It was after this that Jake went off and Susie followed him. But as the state insists, assuming that an hour intervened between the time that Morriss saw the defendant at the deceased's house and the time that Needham saw him at Evans' store at Lanvale, said by the witnesses to have been 3 or 3:10 p. m., there would have been ample time for the murder to have been committed and the defendant afterwards to have gone to Lanvale. Of course, if Needham's watch had been set by sun time, there would have been two hours instead of one, and it is noticeable that all the witnesses for the defense are evidently alluding to sun time. To them the mill whistle blew at 5 o'clock. To account for the interval of time not accounted for by the other witnesses, the defendant introduced an old colored woman, named Mary Anderson. She does, if believed, account for it, but the jury refused to yield any credence to her testimony on this point. It does seem to have been "tongued and grooved" to fit in with defendant's own testimony. The same may be said with reference to the testimony of Turner Hazel and Ivey Hobbs. The deceased by no possibility could have been sitting on her front porch dressed in silk the afternoon of September 21st about 3:45 o'clock. There was evidence of threats to break her neck made by the prisoner against deceased prior to the time of the homicide, and of his angry words heard by one of the witnesses at a distance from the two, and that the woman was crying.

This is the material evidence, and the contentions of the state, based thereon, to identify the prisoner as the murderer. The state therefore insisted that the motion for a nonsuit was properly overruled.

Cranmer & Davis, of Southport, for appellant. James S. Manning, Atty. Gen., and Frank Nash, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] We have stated above only those facts which the evidence tended to prove, and which are material to the case, upon the motion to nonsuit. We do not see how we could well decide that there was no evidence of the prisoner's guilt. It is true that the evidence was circumstantial; but sometimes, and not infrequently, such evidence is of the most convincing character. The prisoner was the last person who was seen with the deceased before the homicide was committed. She followed him, at his request to the place named by him for their meeting, Burton's crossroads, and for some reason, not disclosed, they had quarreled, for he said to her, when he asked her to meet him at the crossroads, "We had just as well have a war here as to go to France and have it." She followed him, and was not seen again until her body was found in a thicket near the crossroads. The jury might have fairly and reasonably inferred that they had a difficulty of some kind, and that he was the aggressor; but they took a milder view of the facts, and reduced the grade of the homicide to the second degree. There was ample evidence to prove that the deceased had been killed, that she did not commit suicide, and further that she was murdered by the prisoner. And this is true, without considering the testimony as to his conduct, the missing money and ring, and what the prisoner said after the homicide had been committed.

The facts in State v. Bridgers, 172 N. C. 879, 89 S. E. 804, if stronger to support a verdict of guilty in that case than those we have here, are very slightly stronger, and not enough so to prevent that case, where the conviction was sustained, from being an authority in support of our present conclusion. It would unreasonably extend the discussion if we attempted any further statement or analysis of the evidence. There is so plainly sufficient evidence for the jury, that any further comment would add nothing to the force or strength of the evidence itself.

[2] The objections to the testimony of Dr. Boyette, describing the situation, surroundings, and the appearance at the place of the homicide, and also the condition of the deceased's person, were properly overruled.

"The instantaneous conclusion of the mind as to the appearance, condition, or mental or physical state of persons, animals, and things, derived from observation of a variety of facts presented to the senses at one and the same time, are, legally speaking, matters of fact, and are admissible in evidence." State v. Leak, 156 N. C. 643, 72 S. E. 567; Renn v. R. R., 170 N. C. 128, 86 S. E. 964; State v. Spencer, 176 N. C. 709, 97 S. E. 155.

This covers, also several of the other exceptions.

[3, 4] The judge admitted evidence of a difficulty between deceased and defendant on July 6th preceding. Afterwards, having convinced himself that he had erred in this, he announced that he would order a mistrial. Defendant's counsel insisted that the trial should go on, and that they would be perfectly content with his honor instructing the jury to disregard this testimony. He did so, instructed them at the time, and again in his charge. If there was any error in this, it was clearly not against the defendant. State v. Johnson, 176 N. C. 722, 97 S. E. 14. The same may be said as to that part of the charge in which he told the jury they might consider evidence of defendant's not feeling, when he had an opportunity to do so, as a circumstance in his favor. 2 Wharton's Evidence in Criminal Cases, p. 1498.

[5] The judge's charge on the question of alibi was, it seems to us, not prejudicial to the defendant. He charged substantially that the prisoner relies upon an alibi, which means that he was not, and could not have been, at the place of the homicide when it was committed, as he was elsewhere at that time. He is not required to satisfy the jury of the truth of his allegations beyond a reasonable doubt, but if the jury is satisfied from the evidence that he was not at the place when the homicide was committed, and at the time when the deceased met her death, then a verdict of not guilty should be returned, etc. But if the jury is not so satisfied, then it is for the jury to consider all the evidence, and say whether or not they are satisfied from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the prisoner killed the deceased, etc. This instruction was not erroneous, but followed our decisions. State v. Jaynes, 78 N. C. 504; State v. Reitz, 83 N. C. 634; State v. Starnes, 94 N. C. 973; State v. Freeman, 100 N. C. 429, 5 S. E. 921; State v. Rochelle, 156 N. C. 641, 72 S. E. 481.

[6] The question as to the voices heard by the witness R. L. Garrison, and whether they were those of the prisoner and Susie Spicer, was for the jury to determine upon all the evidence relating thereto. The jury might well have found that they were the voices of those two persons, and that the prisoner was threatening the deceased, and using angry and abusive language addressed to her.

[7] The other exceptions to evidence have no merit and require no discussion. The objections to the charge of the court and to the refusal to give instructions are entirely too general to be considered. McKinnon v. Morrison, 104 N. C. 354, 10 S. E. 513, and the cases cited in Anno. Edition. See, also, Hendricks v. Ireland, 162 N. C. 523, 77 S. E. 1011; State v. Herron, 175 N. C. 754, at page 759, 84 S. E. 698, at page 701. A general, or what has been called a "broadside," attack on the charge of the court, will not do. The error must be specified, both as to the charge, and the failure to give all of the instructions when there is more than one, for if any of the instructions in the charge are correct (and that surely is the case here), or any of the requested instructions should not have been given, the exception fails. State v. Ledford, 183 N. C. 714, 45 S. E. 944; Nance v. Telegraph Co., 177 N. C. 313, at page 315, 98 S. E. 838; State v. Evans, 177 N. C. 564, at page 570, 98 S. E. 788.

We have carefully considered and reviewed this case, and have not been able to discover any error therein.

No error.

(178 N. C. 285)

SEARS v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.
(No. 289.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶230—OBJECTION TO INSTRUCTIONS NOT TAKEN UNTIL MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL TOO LATE.

Objection that the charge of the court did not summarize the party's contentions fully, not taken until motion for new trial, cannot be considered on appeal.

2. TRIAL ¶255(1) — NECESSITY OF REQUEST FOR INSTRUCTIONS.

If instructions other than those given are desired, there must be a special request for them.

Appeal from Superior Court, Pender County; Calvert, Judge.

Action by J. W. Sears against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. No error.

The plaintiff alleged that he had recently been married; that he had been for a short while at the seashore with his bride, and started on his first trip to visit his parents after the marriage; that he arrived a little late at the station in Wilmington, N. C., but in time to get his ticket and to get on the train; that his wife had gotten on, and that he was getting on, with suit cases and other impedimenta in his hands, when the conductor abused him and pushed him off the train, and he fell upon the ground and was injured; that he was left behind, and suffered excruciating mental agony, for fear his wife should be grieved at his failure to accompany her. He admitted that his people met her at the proper station, Watha, N. C., with a conveyance and took her out home. He says that it cost him $1.50 for hotel accommodation, and that he went home the next morning. The conductor told him that he was on the wrong train and shoved him off rudely. The defendant denied these allegations, and especially denied that the conductor, or any other employé of the defendant, used abusive language to the plaintiff and pushed him off the train.

Both sides offered evidence, which appears in full in the record. Issues were submitted to the jury, and the jury answered in favor of the plaintiff and assessed his damages at $500. Counsel for defendant moved to set aside the verdict upon the ground that the damages were grossly excessive, which was denied. Counsel then moved for a new trial, for error in the charge. The record discloses that both sides offered considerable testimony in support of their respective contentions. Plaintiff's counsel argued strongly, persuasively, and successfully, as defendant alleges; but this he had a right to do, and it was his duty, in loyalty to his client, that it should be done. It is not contended that he exceeded the limit of fair and legitimate debate. Defendant's counsel urged that plaintiff's statement of the facts was unreasonable; that, unless there was some animus on the part of the employés against him, they could not, and would not, have shoved him off the car, especially if he had gotten on it; that the transaction had occurred several years previously, and that plaintiff had forgotten the details; that the truth is that plaintiff, as he himself admits, had arrived late, and had to go to the baggage room to get his luggage, which had been brought up from the beach, and that, if his story had been true, his wife, who was also called as a witness, would have testified to the act of violence. Defendant also argued that it had called both the conductor and the flagman of the train, which plaintiff alleges he took, and both of them denied plaintiff's statement. Defendant further argued that Miss Newton was a friend and neighbor of the plaintiff, that she had seen the plaintiff the morning after he had gotten left, and that she ought to be believed when she stated that the plaintiff had told her the next day that the reason he had gotten left was that he was late and had to go to the baggage room for his luggage, and that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff, and that it had not been sustained.

There was a verdict for plaintiff, as above stated, and judgment. Defendant appealed.

Rountree & Davis, of Wilmington, for appellant.

C. E. McCullen, of Burgaw, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). It is assigned as error that the court did not summarize the defendant's contentions, but stated the plaintiff's rather fully, and that the court laid special stress upon the issue as to damages, which led the jury to believe that there should be a recovery. We state the exceptions in defendant's own words, as they appear in its brief:

"The defendant assigns as error the charge of the court, and particularly the following: 'On the other hand, the defendant contends that you cannot so find from the evidence and by the greater weight of it. The defendant contends that you should find from the evidence that the plaintiff and his wife were late, and that he put his wife on board the train, and then went back to get tickets and baggage, and that before he returned to the train that the train had left.' The defendant submits that this charge of the court is inadequate and not in compliance with the statute [Revisal 1905, § 535], which is as follows: 'He shall state in a plain and correct manner the evidence given in the case, and declare and explain the law arising thereon.' The only question in the case, then, is: Whether the charge of the court is sufficient, under Revisal, § 535, the last clause of which reads: 'But he shall state in a plain and correct manner the evidence given in the case, and declare and explain the law arising thereon.' We insist that there was an utter failure of the court to comply with that provision of the statute."

[1] We are not persuaded that the criticism of the charge in the respect indicated is justified; but, if it is, we have held repeatedly that such objections must be taken promptly, or at the proper time, so that the judge may have opportunity to make the needed correction, if he has misstated the contention of either party. In the absence of any such action on the part of the appellant at the trial, we must assume that it was satisfied with what the judge had done. Manufacturing Co. v. Building Co., 177 N. C. 103, 97 S. E. 718; Alexander v. Cedare Works, 177 N. C. 139, 98 S. E. 312.

[2] But we do not think that, in this case, the statement of the plaintiff's contentions and the statement of the defendant's were so unequal as to bring the case within the principle of Jarrett v. Trunk Co., 144 N. C. 299, 56 S. E. 937, and Lea v. Utilities Co., 176 N. C. 511, 514, 97 S. E. 492. The defendant's contentions were sufficiently stated, so far as appears, and especially is this true, in the absence of any suggestion, at the time, from the defendant that it was not so. We have no doubt that, if the matter had been brought to the judge's attention, he would have added any other contention of defendant, which had been inadvertently omitted. The invariable rule is that, if other instructions than those given are desired, there must be a special request for them. Simmons v. Davenport, 140 N. C. 407, 53 S. E. 225; Davis v. Keen, 142 N. C. at page 502, 55 S. E. 359; Ives v. Railroad Co., 142 N. C. 131, 55 S. E. 74, 115 Am. St. Rep. 732, 9 Ann. Cas. 188; Turrentine v. Wellington, 136 N. C. 313, 48 S. E. 739; State v. Kinsauls, 126 N. C. 1097, 36 S. E. 31. We said in Davis v. Keen, supra:

"Any omission to state the evidence, or to charge in any particular way, should be called to the attention of the court before verdict, so that the judge may have opportunity to correct the oversight. A party cannot be silent under such circumstances, and, after availing himself of the chance to win a verdict, raise an objection afterwards. He is too late. His silence will be adjudged a waiver of his right to object."

The defendant did not ask for any additional statement of its contentions, but elected to abide by the one made by the court, and there was no complaint until the verdict had been returned. This is too late. Silence seems to give consent.

The case of Blake v. Smith, 163 N. C. 274, 79 S. E. 596, is not an authority in favor of defendant's position. There the judge only said to the jury: "Take the case and settle it as between man and man." There was no attempt to instruct the jury, but it was simply leaving it to them to decide the issues "as between man and man," without any rule, or principle, at all to assist them. But in the opinion it was said by the court:

"The manner in which the judge is to state the law and evidence for the assistance of the jury must necessarily be left to a great extent to his sound discretion and good sense."

And in State v. Beard, 124 N. C. 811, 32 S. E. 804, the court stated the same rule:

"The manner in which" the judge is to state the law and assist the jury to apply the law to the facts "must be left, to a very great extent, to the good sense and sound judgment of the trial judge."

We cannot sustain the exception.
No error.

(178 N. C. 379)

SORRELL v. MCGHEE et al. (No. 257.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 15, 1919.)

1. WITNESSES ⇨125—COMPETENCY IN TRANSACTIONS WITH PERSONS SINCE DECEASED.

Revisal 1905, § 1631, relating to competency of witnesses as to transactions with persons since deceased, disqualifies parties to the action, persons interested in the event, and persons through or under whom parties or those interested claim, but those witnesses disqualified are incompetent only to testify in behalf of themselves, etc., and only as to personal transactions between the witness and the person since deceased, etc.

2. WITNESSES ⇨171—TESTIMONY AGAINST INTEREST AS TO TRANSACTIONS WITH DECEASED.

In an action for goods sold and delivered to intestate, the son and administrator of the intestate might be called by plaintiff to testify that he made a part payment on the account, etc.; the witness testifying against his own interest.

3. WITNESSES ⇨178(2)—RIGHT TO CALL ADMINISTRATOR AS WITNESS.

In an action against the estate of a deceased person, plaintiff may call the administrator to testify against his interest, and testimony of the administrator cannot be excluded on the ground that if he testified it would open the door to plaintiff's testimony, for that result follows only when the administrator is a voluntary witness testifying in his own behalf.

4. WITNESSES ⇨138—COMPETENCY OF TENANT AS TO TRANSACTIONS WITH LANDLORD SINCE DECEASED.

In an action for goods sold and delivered to intestate, a tenant of intestate who was furnished with goods from plaintiff's store, and who had settled with the intestate, is competent to testify in plaintiff's behalf as to intestate's delivery to him of the merchandise.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Allen, Judge.

Action by R. L. Sorrell against J. C. McGhee and R. L. McGhee, administrators, begun in justice court and appealed to the superior court. From a judgment there of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

This is an action to recover $54.66, alleged to be due by account for goods sold and delivered, commenced before a justice of the peace and heard on appeal in the superior court.

The plaintiff introduced evidence showing that he was a farmer and also had a gin and store, and he produced upon the trial his account book or ledger, in which he kept the account against the intestate of the defendants in his own handwriting. This book was excluded upon the trial.

There are several exceptions to the exclusion of evidence which will be referred to in the opinion.

At the conclusion of the evidence, his honor entered judgment of nonsuit, and the plaintiff excepted and appealed.

W. G. Briggs, of Raleigh, for appellant.
R. N. Simms, of Raleigh, for appellees.

ALLEN, J. [1,2] In Bunn v. Todd, 107 N. C. 266, 11 S. E. 1043, the present Chief Justice gives an accurate and valuable analysis of section 1831 of the Revisal, as follows:

"It disqualifies—Whom?

"(1) Parties to the action.

"(2) Persons interested in the event of the action.

"(3) Persons through or under whom the persons in the first two classes derive their title or interest.

"A witness belonging to one of these three classes is incompetent only in the following cases:

"When—To testify in behalf of himself, or the person succeeding to his title or interest, against the representative of a deceased person, or committee of a lunatic, or any one deriving his title or interest through them.

"And the disqualification of such person, and in such instances, is restricted to the following:

"Subject-matter—A personal transaction or communication between the witness and the person since deceased or lunatic.

"And even in those cases there are the following

"Exceptions.—When the representative of, or person claiming through or under the deceased person or lunatic, is examined in his own behalf, or the testimony of the deceased person or lunatic is given in evidence concerning the same transaction."

This is a guide and standard for determining the competency of evidence under this section, and, when properly applied, we are of opinion error has been committed in the exclusion of evidence, which entitles the plaintiff to a new trial.

The plaintiff offered evidence tending to prove that he kept his account against the intestate of the defendants in a book at his store, and he then called one of the administrators and a son of the intestate, and he offered "to show by the witness, who is a defendant in this action, that in the lifetime of his father, and a short time before his death, the witness went to the store of the plaintiff for his said father and made a part payment on this specific account in this particular ledger, taking a written receipt therefor from plaintiff, and then and there setting a day when he would return and get a statement of the amount of balance his said father owed, but never did so; and further to show that this account was known by the witness and the deceased to exist and to be due the plaintiff."

This evidence was excluded, and plaintiff excepted.

The witness is a party, but he was testifying against his own interest, and not in his own behalf, and he is therefore not excluded by the statute.

"In Tredwell v. Graham, supra [88 N. C. 208], it was said that, 'Notwithstanding the statute, a party may be called to testify touching a transaction of the opposite party, when it is against his own interest.' In Weinstein v. Patrick, 75 N. C. 344, Justice Reade said that 'it would seem that there could be no objection against allowing a witness to testify against his own interest.' It is not within the spirit or letter of the statute, as his own interest is supposed to be a sufficient protection for the opposite party against false or fabricated testimony. This appears to be well settled by the cases." Seals v. Seals, 165 N. C. 412, 81 S. E. 614, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 134.

[3] The apprehension of the defendant that if we permit a plaintiff to call an administrator as a witness it will open the door to testimony of the plaintiff, which would otherwise be incompetent, is groundless, as this result only follows when the administrator is a voluntary witness testifying in his own behalf, and not when he is forced upon the witness stand to testify against his interest.

[4] The plaintiff also introduced Ell Thompson, and offered to prove by him that he was a tenant of the intestate during the years 1916 and 1917 and lived on the farm with him; that the intestate furnished him from the store of the plaintiff, and offered to show, the sale and delivery by the plaintiff to the witness of articles of merchandise which were charged in the account against the defendant. This was objected to, and the plaintiff excepted.

The witness stated, without objection, that he had settled in full with the intestate for all he owed him.

This witness is not a party to the action, and, as the record now stands, he is not interested in the event of the action, as it does not appear that the plaintiff has any charge against him or holds him in any way responsible for any part of the account.

The evidence was material, and we see no reason for its exclusion, as the witness does not come within any of the prohibitions of the statute.

These errors are material, and a new trial is therefore ordered.

Reversed.

(178 N. C. 282)

FUTCH v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.
(No. 288.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 15, 1919.)

1. CARRIERS ⇨69(5)—INSTRUCTION AS TO ORDER FOR CARS NOT ERRONEOUS IN VIEW OF THE TESTIMONY.

Where, in an action for failure to furnish a refrigerator car to receive lettuce, the one ordering the car testified that he also ordered two cars for another, designating the number of cars by raising two fingers and then one, an instruction to find for plaintiff if order was given and "understood" by defendant's agent was not erroneous, in that use of quoted word referred to understanding of terms of order.

2. CARRIERS ⇨69(5)—MAKING OF PROMISE TO PLACE CAR FOR SHIPPER A QUESTION OF FACT.

In an action against a railroad for failure to place a refrigerator car to receive lettuce, whether a new promise was made, on the day after the first attempt to order the car, to place it by 2:30 p. m., held a question for the jury.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨216(2)—SPECIAL INSTRUCTION WAIVED BY FAILURE TO REQUEST BELOW.

Where, without a special instruction on a point, the instruction given was sufficient, plaintiff, who asked no special instruction concerning it, cannot complain.

4. CARRIERS ⇨44—REASONABLE NOTICE NECESSARY WHEN CAR IS ORDERED.

A railroad company is entitled to reasonable notice when a freight car is ordered.

5. TRIAL ⇨256(3) — NECESSARY TO CALL COURT'S ATTENTION TO OMISSION FROM CHARGE.

If the trial court failed to state any of plaintiff's contentions in its charge, the omission should have been called to its attention.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Hanover County; Calvert, Judge.

Action by D. K. Futch against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. No error.

E. K. Bryan, of Wilmington, for appellant.
Rountree & Davis, of Wilmington, for appellee.

WALKER, J. The grievance alleged by the plaintiff is that the defendant failed to place a refrigerating car for him at Wrightsboro, by 2:30 o'clock p. m., on May 16, 1918, to receive a certain lot of lettuce, which he had cut for shipment, as it had promised the day before to do. The evidence was conflicting, and we think it was submitted to the jury under proper instructions from the court.

[1] The plaintiff specially complains of the judge's instruction to the jury, that if the order for the three cars, two for the Wilmington Truckers' Association and one for the plaintiff, was given by Freeman and understood by the defendant's agent, they should answer the first issue "Yes," or in favor of the plaintiff, or if the next morning, the 16th of May, the car not having arrived, defendant's agent promised to have it at Wrightsboro by 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon, they should answer the issue in the same way. The particular objection is to the use of the words, "and understood by the defendant's agent"; the contention being that it made no difference whether the agent understood the terms of the order, if it was in fact given. This may or may not be so. The word "understood" was manifestly not used in any such sense, that is, whether he was intelligent enough to understand it, but its meaning is whether it was understandingly given by Freeman. Freeman, plaintiff's own witness, had testified that the agent may not have "understood" that he ordered the third car for Futch, as he gave the number of cars with his fingers, raising two first, and then the one. He further testified:

"After I got home in the afternoon of May 15th, I told Mr. Moore that I thought perhaps the clerk did not understand me, and that I had phoned down to the office, and it was closed. I told them this in Mr. Elliott's office, when I went down there with Mr. Futch; that after I left there I began to think about it, and remember the surroundings and what was taking place down there at the office at the time. I was not positive in my mind whether the young man who took the order understood me or not, so I phoned back to the office to find out, but the office was closed. That was after 6 o'clock."

The judge only submitted this evidence to the jury, that they might say whether the order was so given as to cause a prudent man to mistake it. That was all he meant. It was a question of fact, and the jury settled it.

[2] Whether a new promise was made on the 16th to place the car by 2:30 p. m. was another question of fact, and the judge sufficiently stated it to the jury. The car ordered at 9 o'clock on May 18th was placed in the first train out that day. It was contended by the defendant before us that to have given a special or quicker service, by using an extra engine, would have been a discrimination, which is forbidden by the Interstate Commerce Act; this being an interstate shipment moving from Wrightshoro, N. C., to Buffalo, N. Y., and C. & A. Railroad Co. v. Kirby, 225 U. S. 155, 32 Sup. Ct. 648, 56 L. Ed. 1033, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 501, was cited to support the position. But we need not consider it, as the jury have decided the facts against the plaintiff. We have considered the question of discrimination and rebates at this term in Edenton Cotton Mills v. N. S. Railroad Co., 100 S. E. 341.

[3] The judge stated and explained fully—and if not, sufficiently, as we think—the question whether the defendant had abandoned its rule, or regulation, that it should have 24 hours' written notice, when a car is ordered. After stating that a railroad company may adopt reasonable regulations for placing a car under an order, the court said that the regulation might be waived orally by a promise or agreement to place the car at an earlier time. This exception is not open to the plaintiff, as he asked for no special instruction concerning it, and without one the instruction was sufficient. If plaintiff desired more to be said, he should have requested it. We said in Alexander v. Cedar Works, 177 N. C. 137, 149, 98 S. E. 312, 318:

"If the instructions of the court to the jury were not sufficiently full and explicit, or plaintiffs desired any particular phase of the case to be stated, they should have submitted a special request for what they wanted"—citing Simmons v. Davenport, 140 N. C. 407, 53 S. E. 225; Potato Co. v. Jeanette, 174 N. C. 237, 93 S. E. 795.

And in Power Co. v. Power Co., 175 N. C. 668, 680, 96 S. E. 99, we said that, if a party deems the charge not full enough in a particular phase of the case, he should ask that it be enlarged and made more definite, citing McKinnon v. Morrison, 104 N. C. 354, 10 S. E. 513; State v. Yellowday, 152 N. C. 793, 67 S. E. 480; Orvis v. Holt, 173 N. C. 231, 91 S. E. 948. The rule is a familiar one and must be complied with. Gay v. Mitchell, 146 N. C. 509, 60 S. E. 426. The law will not permit a party to be silent, when he can so easily, by asking for an instruction, bring the charge to such shape as he may consider is required by the contentions and the evidence. He must guard his own interests as the trial is progressing. But we think the jury understood the matter, and that the verdict is fully warranted by the evidence. He told the jury that if, upon all the circumstances revealed by the evidence, they found that the company had agreed to place the car at a different time that it was required to do by its own regulation, this was a departure from its rule, and an abandonment of it. Power Co. v. Power Co., supra.

[4, 5] The company is entitled to reasonable notice, when a car is ordered. Elliott on Railroads, § 1476, and also section 202a; Revisal, § 2632. If the court failed to state any of plaintiff's contentions, the omission should have been called to its attention, and the judges, we are sure, will always correct any error in this respect. Manufacturing Co. v. Building Co., 177 N. C. 103, 97 S. E. 718; Jeffress v. Railroad Co., 158 N. C. 215, 73 S. E. 1013; Alexander v. Cedar Works, supra.

We have considered the plaintiff's exceptions with some detail, because they were argued with zeal by counsel; but the case really was reduced to a very few questions of fact, which the jury decided for the defendant after a fair contest in an open field.

No error.

(178 N. C. 708)

STATE v. O'HIGGINS. (No. 273.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 15, 1919.)

1. ABDUCTION  $\S$ 12—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE TO SHOW VIRTUE OF MARRIED WOMAN BEFORE ELOPEMENT.

In a prosecution for elopement with a married woman, evidence of the woman's husband held to show she had been innocent and virtuous since her marriage, as required by statute to authorize the prosecution.

2. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$ 369(2)—EVIDENCE OF ABANDONMENT OF CHILDREN TO ELOPE WITH MARRIED WOMAN COMPETENT.

In a prosecution for elopement with a married woman, evidence that defendant abandoned his motherless children to elope with the woman was competent to prove the strength of his infatuation.

3. ABDUCTION  $\S$ 1—"ELOPEMENT" DEFINED.

An "elopement" was correctly defined by the court, in a prosecution for abduction, as the act of a wife who voluntarily deserts her husband to go away with and cohabit with another man.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Elopement.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Cumberland County; Stacy, Judge.

Charles L. O'Higgins was convicted of elopement with a married woman, and he appeals. No error.

H. McD. Robinson, W. C. Downing, and Robert S. McNeill, all of Fayetteville, for appellant.

Jas. S. Manning, Atty. Gen., Frank Nash, Asst. Atty. Gen., and Sinclair & Dye, of Fayetteville, for the State.

BROWN, J. The statute under which the defendant was indicted (Rev.  $\S$  3360), is as follows:

"If any male person shall abduct or elope with the wife of another he shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction shall be imprisoned not less than one year nor more than ten years: Provided, that the woman, since her marriage, has been an innocent and virtuous woman: Provided, that no conviction shall be had upon the unsupported testimony of any such married woman."

[1, 2] The points presented by this appeal may be stated as follows: (1) Was there any evidence that the eloping wife had been since her marriage an innocent and virtuous woman? (2) Was evidence that the defendant abandoned his two motherless children, when he eloped with the woman, admissible?

The husband testified that his wife was not a bad woman, that he was "wrapt up in her," and that he knew that his wife was an innocent and virtuous woman. We think this evidence tends very strongly to establish the virtuous character of the wife by the person who had opportunity to know her better than any one else, and that it was amply sufficient to justify the verdict of the jury. The evidence that the defendant abandoned his motherless children in order to elope with Mrs. Miller was competent to prove how strong the infatuation was which induced him to leave his own children in a helpless condition in order to elope with another man's wife.

[3] In charging the jury his honor placed the matter clearly before them, and we think his definition as to what constitutes elopement is in accord with established authority. 2 Bl. Com. p. 130; Black's Law Dict. p. 418. These authorities declare an elopement to be the act of the wife, who voluntarily deserts her husband to go away with and cohabit with another man. This is substantially what the judge told the jury.

No error.

CLARK, C. J., concurs fully in all that is said by BROWN, J., in his very clear and terse opinion in this case and adds:

It is proper that attention should be called to the following anomalous and extraordinary provision in Rev.  $\S$  3360, under which this indictment is had:

"Provided, that no conviction shall be had upon the unsupported testimony of any such married woman."

This is without any parallel in the laws of North Carolina, except in the similar provision in Rev.  $\S$  3354, for seduction under promise of marriage, which provides:

"The unsupported testimony of the woman shall not be sufficient to convict."

In these two cases the witness summoned by the state steps upon the witness stand branded with the provision of law that the jury shall not believe her, even though, on their oaths, they do believe her, unless some one else swears to the same state of facts. There is no such provision discrediting the woman when a witness on an indictment for rape, or for an assault with intent, yet such provision would not have been more illogical or unjust than this.

Parties to civil actions and defendants in criminal actions were formerly disqualified to testify; but when made competent by statute there was no such provision branding them as unworthy of belief, as in this case.

On the contrary, notwithstanding their interest, the court must tell the jury that, if they believe their testimony, they must give it the same weight as that of any other witness. Even an unsupported accomplice is sufficient to convict for any crime, if the jury shall believe him. State v. Jones, 176 N. C. 703, 97 S. E. 32; State v. Barber, 113 N. C. 711, 18 S. E. 515. A convict is competent and entitled to exactly the same credit as any witness, if believed. Negroes were formerly incompetent, and some other classes of citizens. But now any witness who is competent to testify has the weight to be given to his testimony left entirely to the judgment of the jury, save and except women. There is no class discrimination in the administration of justice permitted, much less required, by our laws in any other instance.

In these two cases, though the woman is ordinarily the most necessary witness and goes to the stand at the call of the state, she is branded as unfit to be believed, and the jury are forbidden to give her testimony any weight whatever, unless some one else, of whatever character he may be, possibly a convict, shall testify to the same purport.

It must be an oversight that such class discrimination on the witness stand has been permitted to remain upon our statute book. It is a slur and a brand upon those who know more about the transaction to be investigated than any one else, except the defendant himself, and as to him his testimony is not only not discredited, but if he is a witness in his own behalf, or offers other witnesses (or even his silence, if he offers no testimony), has such enhanced weight that he must be found not guilty unless the jury shall find him guilty "beyond a reasonable doubt." Why this discrimination in a court of justice between the two sexes, when it is absolutely unknown in any other instance, or as to any other class, under our laws?

(149 Ga. 434)

ERWIN et al. v. BROOKE et al. (No. 1095.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 1, 1919.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. APPEAL AND ERROR §80(6)—DECREE NOT DISPOSING OF ENTIRE CASE REVERSED.

The plaintiffs in an equitable action sought relief as to several distinct matters. Certain pleas were filed, which sought affirmative relief. On submission to the judge without a jury a decree was rendered, granting certain relief and denying relief as to some of the particular matters, leaving undisposed of other matters of relief of a substantial and material character, and declaring that as to such matters the case would be held open for future disposition, and further providing for the filing of additional pleadings. The plaintiffs excepted. Held, the decree is somewhat confused, but it sufficiently appears, in so far as it affects the plaintiffs, that it did not dispose of the whole case. Without dealing with other questions made by the bill of exceptions, the assignment of error which complains that the whole case was not decided requires a reversal.

2. ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—EXCEPTIONS PENDENTE LITE.

The assignments of error in the bill of exceptions to the judgment overruling the demurrer to certain pleas are not now decided; but, under the peculiar facts of the case, leave is granted to treat and consider the official copy of the bill of exceptions on file in the trial court as exceptions pendente lite.

Error from Superior Court, Bartow County; M. C. Tarver, Judge.

Equitable action by T. C. Erwin, receiver, and others against G. W. Brooke and others, with pleas seeking affirmative relief. From the decree, plaintiffs bring error. Reversed.

Winfield P. Jones, of Atlanta, and J. T. Norris, of Cartersville, for plaintiffs in error.

Jones & Chambers and Walter A. Sims, all of Atlanta, and Paul F. Akin, W. C. Henson, and J. T. Norris, all of Cartersville, for defendants in error.

PER CURIAM. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except FISH, C. J., absent on account of sickness.

(149 Ga. 405)

CITY OF ATLANTA et al. v. ATLANTA GASLIGHT CO. et al. (No. 1193.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 27, 1919.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. GAS §14(1) — GEORGIA RAILROAD COMMISSION CAN FIX GAS RATES.

The Railroad Commission of this state has by statute authority to fix just and reasonable gas rates to be paid by the consumers to the corporation owning or operating public gas plants.

2. GAS §14(1)—RATE-FIXING ORDER MAY BE ATTACKED AS VOID FOR ANY CAUSE.

An order of the Railroad Commission, fixing gas rates, is presumed to be valid, but may be attacked in the courts on the ground that it is unjust and unreasonable, or void for other cause, and where such order is attacked as being void the burden of proof is upon the party attacking it.

3. ORDER OF GEORGIA RAILROAD COMMISSION FIXING GAS RATES VALID—INJUNCTION REFUSED.

Under the pleadings and the evidence, the trial judge was authorized to hold that the order of the Railroad Commission was valid, and there was no error in refusing an injunction.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. GAS $\S$ 14(1)—ORDER OF RAILROAD COMMISSION INCREASING RATES BECAUSE OF NATIONAL CONDITIONS VALID.

An order of Railroad Commission as to gas rates was not void because adopted because "of an emergency arising out of national conditions existing at this time," resulting in an advanced cost of production, as it was to meet just such conditions that Legislature provided in Civ. Code 1910,  $\S$  2631, that commission, from time to time and when circumstances required, should change and revise schedules of rates.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Suit for injunction by the City of Atlanta and others against the Atlanta Gaslight Company and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Jas. L. Mayson, S. D. Hewlett, R. R. Arnold, C. E. Cotterill, and E. E. Pomeroy, all of Atlanta, for plaintiffs in error.

Jas. K. Hines, Smith, Hammond & Smith, and Jones & Chambers, all of Atlanta, for defendants in error.

HILL, J. The Atlanta Gaslight Company petitioned the Railroad Commission of Georgia, in April, 1918, for authority to increase its gas rates in the city of Atlanta. Due notice of the application was given to the city of Atlanta and the citizens thereof, and pursuant to such notice a public hearing was had by the commission, at which the city and citizens appeared by counsel and opposed the granting of the proposed increase in rates. At the conclusion of an elaborate hearing the commission granted an increase in the gas rates, and the present suit is brought by the city of Atlanta and its citizens against the Railroad Commission of Georgia and the Atlanta Gaslight Company, to enjoin as void the order thus promulgated by the commission. The trial judge, after hearing evidence, decided in effect that the challenged order was not unreasonable and void, and refused an injunction, and the plaintiffs in error excepted.

[1] Civil Code 1910,  $\S$  2631 (Acts 1878-79, p. 127), provides that—

"The railroad commissioners are required to make for each of the railroad corporations doing business in this state, as soon as practicable, a schedule of just and reasonable rates of charges for transportation of passengers and freights and cars on each of said railroads; and said schedule shall, in suits brought against any such corporation, wherein is involved the charges of any such corporation for the transportation of any passenger or freight or cars or unjust discrimination in relation thereto, be deemed and taken in all the courts of this state as sufficient evidence that the rates therein fixed are just and reasonable rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freights and cars upon the railroads; and said commissioners shall, from time to time and as often as the circumstances may require, change and revise such schedules."

And section 2862, codified from section 5 of the act of 1907 (Acts 1907, p. 74), amending the act of 1878, 79, declares that—

"The powers and duties hereinbefore conferred by law upon the Railroad Commission are hereby extended and enlarged, so that its authority and control shall extend * * * over gas and electric light and power companies, corporations, or persons owning, leasing, or operating public gas plants or electric light and power plants furnishing service to the public."

It will thus be seen that the Legislature has conferred on the railroad commissioners the power and authority to make just and reasonable gas rates. Orders of the Railroad Commission fixing rates are presumed to be valid, just, and reasonable. The courts may inquire into the validity of rates prescribed by the Railroad Commission, and where such rates are attacked in the courts for one cause or another, such, for instance, as that the Railroad Commission is without authority to make them, or that they are not just and reasonable, the burden is upon the plaintiff, or attacking party, to show that the rates are void. Union Dry Goods Co. v. Ga. Public Service Corp., 142 Ga. 841, 83 S. E. 946, L. R. A. 1918E, 358; Id., 145 Ga. 658, 89 S. E. 779; Id., 248 U. S. 372, 39 Sup. Ct. 117, 63 L. Ed. 309; Southern Ry. Co. v. Atlanta Stove Works, 128 Ga. 208, 57 S. E. 429; Interstate Commerce Com. v. Pacific R., 222 U. S. 541, 32 Sup. Ct. 108, 56 L. Ed. 308; L. & N. R. Co. v. United States, 238 U. S. 1, 11 (3), 35 Sup. Ct. 696, 59 L. Ed. 1177; R. Com. of La. v. Cumberland Tel. Co., 212 U. S. 414, 29 Sup. Ct. 357, 53 L. Ed. 577; R. Com. v. L. & N. R. Co., 140 Ga. 817, 832, 833, 80 S. E. 327, L. R. A. 1915E, 902, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1018.

No fixed or arbitrary rule for rate making has been prescribed by law. Many elements may enter into the fixing of just and reasonable rates—those that are just and reasonable both to the corporation and to the public. Each case must in a measure stand upon its special facts. In the following case the Supreme Court of the United States has clearly set forth some of the elements entering into the question of rate making. In Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 467, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819, it was held:

←For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

"The basis of all calculations as to the reasonableness of rates to be charged by a corporation maintaining a highway under legislative sanction must be the fair value of the property being used by it for the convenience of the public; and in order to ascertain that value, the original cost of construction, the amount expended in permanent improvements, the amount and market value of its bonds and stock, the present as compared with the original cost of construction, the probable earning capacity of the property under particular rates prescribed by statute, and the sum required to meet operating expenses, are all matters for consideration, and are to be given such weight as may be just and right in each case. What the company is entitled to ask is a fair return upon the value of that which it employs for the public convenience; and, on the other hand, what the public is entitled to demand is that no more be exacted from it for the use of the public highway than the services rendered by it are reasonably worth."

Mr. Justice Harlan, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"A corporation maintaining a public highway, although it owns the property it employs for accomplishing public objects, must be held to have accepted its rights, privileges, and franchises subject to the condition that the government creating it, or the government within whose limits it conducts its business, may by legislation protect the people against unreasonable charges for the services rendered by it. It cannot be assumed that any railroad corporation, accepting franchises, rights, and privileges at the hands of the public, ever supposed that it acquired, or that it was intended to grant to it, the power to construct and maintain a public highway simply for its benefit, without regard to the rights of the public. But it is equally true that the corporation performing such public services and the people financially interested in its business and affairs have rights that may not be invaded by legislative enactment in disregard of the fundamental guaranties for the protection of property. The corporation may not be required to use its property for the benefit of the public without receiving just compensation for the services rendered by it. How such compensation may be ascertained, and what are the necessary elements in such an inquiry, will always be an embarrassing question. As said in the case last cited: 'Each case must depend upon its special facts; and when a court, without assuming itself to prescribe rates, is required to determine whether the rates prescribed by the Legislature for a corporation controlling a public highway are, as an entirety, so unjust as to destroy the value of its property for all the purposes for which it was acquired, its duty is to take into consideration the interests both of the public and of the owner of the property, together with all other circumstances that are fairly to be considered in determining whether the Legislature has, under the guise of regulating rates, exceeded its constitutional authority, and practically deprived the owner of property without due process of law. * * * The utmost that any corporation operating a public highway can rightfully demand at the hands of the Legislature, when exerting its general powers, is that it receive what, under all the circumstances, is such compensation for the use of its property as will be just both to it and to the public.' We hold, however, that the basis of all calculations as to the reasonableness of rates to be charged by a corporation maintaining a highway under legislative sanction must be the fair value of the property being used by it for the convenience of the public. And in order to ascertain that value, the original cost of construction, the amount expended in permanent improvements, the amount and market value of its bonds and stock, the present as compared with the original cost of construction, the probable earning capacity of the property under particular rates prescribed by statute, and the sum required to meet operating expenses, are all matters for consideration, and are to be given such weight as may be just and right in each case. We do not say that there may not be other matters to be regarded in estimating the value of the property."

And to the same effect are the cases cited supra. The attack in the instant case on the order of the commission is by the consumers of gas in Atlanta for the alleged reason, amongst others, that the rates are higher than the services are reasonably worth. The presumption is that the commission has considered all the elements entering into the making of just and reasonable rates.

[2, 3] It is insisted in this case that the order of the Railroad Commission is void, because it is not based upon any competent evidence submitted to the commission, and particularly because there was not submitted to the commission at the hearing any evidence showing, or tending to show, the kind, quantity, quality, age, condition, or other elements of value of the gas company's properties devoted to the public service in Atlanta, and consequently that under the ruling in the cases of Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819, and subsequent cases elaborating the doctrine—viz. Knoxville v. Knoxville Water Co., 212 U. S. 1, 29 Sup. Ct. 148, 53 L. Ed. 371; Willcox v. Consolidated Gas Co., 212 U. S. 19, 29 Sup. Ct. 192, 53 L. Ed. 382, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1134, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034; Omaha v. Omaha Water Co., 218 U. S. 180, 30 Sup. Ct. 615, 54 L. Ed. 991, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1084; Cedar Rapids Gaslight Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 223 U. S. 655, 32 Sup. Ct. 389, 56 L. Ed. 594; Minnesota Rate Cases, 230 U. S. 352, 33 Sup. Ct. 729, 57 L. Ed. 1511, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1151, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 18; Des Moines Gas Co. v. Des Moines, 238 U. S. 153, 35 Sup. Ct. 811, 59 L. Ed. 1244; Denver v. Denver Union Water Co., 246 U. S. 178, 38 Sup. Ct. 278, 62 L. Ed. 649—there was no legal basis upon which the Railroad Commission could determine whether the defendant gas company was then deriving a fair return upon the reasonable value of its property devoted to the public service at the time of the inquiry. The answer to this contention is, as already observed, that the presumption is in favor of the validity of the order fixing the rate, and the burden of showing that it was void is upon the party attacking the rate. The evidence submitted to the court upon the trial, though voluminous, was insufficient to show that the rate was unreasonable, unjust, or arbitrary.

[4] Another contention was that the order was void on the ground that it was adopted because "of an emergency arising out of national conditions existing at this time." It was shown on the trial that on account of the advance in material, wages, the cost of operation, additions, etc., the expense of the corporation had enormously increased on account of war conditions, and that its net income had correspondingly decreased, etc. It was to meet just such conditions, no doubt, that the Legislature provided in the act of 1879, supra, that the "commissioners shall, from time to time and as often as circumstances may require, change and revise such schedules" of rates. When circumstances are such that the price of everything else has increased, it may well be that the commission may see the necessity, under the mandate of the law, of increasing the price of gas to the consumers as being required by the circumstances. From a careful review of the entire record, and numerous authorities bearing upon the subject, we cannot say that the judge erred in refusing to hold that the rate fixed by the order of the commission was unjust and unreasonable, or was greater than the service was reasonably worth to the consumer, under the then existing circumstances, or that it was void for any reason assigned. The trial judge did not err in refusing an injunction.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 411)

CITY OF ATLANTA et al. v. GEORGIA RY. & POWER CO. et al. (No. 1192.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 27, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ELECTRICITY ☞11—POWERS OF RAILROAD COMMISSION TO FIX RATES FOR ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER COMPANIES.

The Railroad Commission of this state has statutory power to prescribe schedules of "just and reasonable rates" of charges for services by electric light and power companies.

2. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS ☞7—POWERS OF RAILROAD COMMISSION APPLY TO ALL COMPANIES SPECIFIED IN ACT.

The provisions of Civil Code 1910, § 2862, which restrict the power of the Railroad Commission in regard to contracts existing at the time of the passage of the act embodied in that section, and contracts which might be made subsequently to that act, apply alike to all of the several classes of companies specified in the act.

3. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS ☞7—POWER OF RAILROAD COMMISSION TO REVISE RATES NOTWITHSTANDING MUNICIPAL CONTRACT OR ORDINANCE.

That part of the proviso of the act just mentioned which declares "that this act shall not * * * impair nor invalidate any future contract or ordinance of any municipality, as to the public uses of such company, that shall receive the assent of the Railroad Commission," does not deprive the Railroad Commission of power, after assenting to a contract or ordinance of the character mentioned in such provision, made after the passage of the act, to revise or make new rates, where future conditions render the rates specified in the contract or ordinance unreasonable and unjust to the companies or to the public.

4. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS ☞17, 21 — RAILROAD COMMISSION NEED NOT AFFORD HEARING BEFORE MAKING NEW SCHEDULE OF RATES.

The statutes creating the Railroad Commission of Georgia and giving it power over public service corporations do not require the Railroad Commission to afford a hearing before it in the exercise of its function to make schedules of rates to be applied in the future; and where, in the formation of rates, the Railroad Commission considers a document on file in its office as to the value of the property of a company for which rates are to be prescribed, without formally introducing such document in evidence at a hearing which has been held, the fact that such document is so considered will not be sufficient ground to authorize the courts to set aside as void the order of the Railroad Commission prescribing rates.

5. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS ☞22 — COURT MAY DECLINE TO COMPEL RAILROAD COMMISSION TO PRODUCE ORIGINAL PAPERS IN ITS FILES.

Under the statutes providing for the production of papers in court by a party to a case after written notice by his adversary, the court may decline to require the Railroad Commission to produce in response to such notice original papers of file in the office of the Railroad Commission.

6. ORDER OF RAILROAD COMMISSION INCREASING RATES—REFUSAL OF INJUNCTION.

Under the pleadings and evidence, there was no error in refusing the injunction.

Fish, C. J., dissenting.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Suit for injunction by the City of Atlanta and others against the Georgia Railway & Power Company and others. Interlocutory injunction denied, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Jas. L. Mayson, S. D. Hewlett, R. R. Arnold, C. E. Cotterill, and E. E. Pomeroy, all of Atlanta, for plaintiffs in error.

Jas. K. Hines, King & Spalding, Rosser, Slaton, Phillips & Hopkins, Colquitt & Conyers, and Chas. T., L. C. & J. L. Hopkins, all of Atlanta, for defendants in error.

ATKINSON, J. The Railroad Commission of Georgia passed an order allowing an increase of rates to be charged by the Georgia Railway & Power Company for electric service rendered to its customers. The increase allowed over the old rates for residential lighting was 12½ per cent., for retail power 20 per cent., and for wholesale power 25 per cent. After the order was promulgated, a suit was instituted in the superior court by the city of Atlanta and certain customers of the Georgia Railway & Power Company, seeking to set up an alleged contract between the city and the company, fixing rates less than those specified in the order, to declare the order null and void, and to enjoin the company from putting it into effect. An interlocutory injunction was denied, and the plaintiffs excepted.

[1] 1. Civil Code, § 2631 (Ga. Laws 1878-79, p. 127), provides:

"The railroad commissioners are required to make for each of the railroad corporations doing business in this state, as soon as practicable, a schedule of just and reasonable rates of charges, * * * and said commissioners shall, from time to time and as often as the circumstances may require, change and revise such schedules."

Sections 2630, 2626, and 2662, codified from section 5 of the act of 1907 (Ga. Laws 1907, p. 72), amending the act of 1879, supra, declare:

"The power to determine what are just and reasonable rates and charges is vested exclusively in said commission. The printed reports of the Railroad Commission, published by its authority, shall be admissible as evidence in any court in Georgia without further proof, and the schedules of rates made by the commission and any order passed or rule or regulation prescribed by the commission shall be admissible in evidence in any court in Georgia upon the certificate of the secretary of the commission. The powers and duties heretofore conferred by law upon the Railroad Commission are hereby extended and enlarged, so that its authority and control shall extend to street railroads and street railroad corporations, companies or persons owning, leasing or operating street railroads in this state: Provided, however, that nothing herein shall be construed to impair any valid, subsisting contract now in existence between any municipality and any such company; and provided that this act shall not operate as a repeal of any existing municipal ordinance; nor shall it impair nor invalidate any future contract or ordinance of any municipality as to the public uses of such company, that shall receive the assent of the Railroad Commission; over docks and wharves and corporations, companies or persons owning, leasing or operating the same; over terminals or terminal stations and corporations, companies or persons, owning, leasing or operating such; cotton compress corporations or associations, and persons or companies owning, leasing or operating the same; and over telegraph or telephone corporations, companies or persons owning, leasing, or operating a public telephone service or telephone lines in this state; over gas and electric light and power company corporations or persons owning, leasing or operating public gas plants or electric light and power plants furnishing service to the public."

It thus appears that the Legislature conferred on the railroad commissioners the power to make schedules of "just and reasonable rates of charges" for service by electric light and power companies. City of Atlanta v. Atlanta Gaslight Co., 100 S. E. 439, this day decided.

[2] 2. As just noted, Civil Code, § 2662, contains the following:

"Provided, however, that nothing herein shall be construed to impair any valid, subsisting contract now in existence between any municipality and any such company; and provided that this section shall not operate as a repeal of any existing municipal ordinance; nor shall it impair nor invalidate any future contract or ordinance of any municipality, as to the public uses of such company, that shall receive the assent of the Railroad Commission."

It is urged that the provisos quoted above refer only to street railroad companies, and do not affect the power of the Railroad Commission in regard to fixing rates for the other enumerated kinds of companies. The language quoted is a proviso in the middle of the section, which renders that part of the section awkwardly expressed. Its meaning would be more apparent if the language quoted were transposed from the middle to the end of the section in which it is contained. In construing the law the context must be considered, and the better view is that the proviso applies alike to all the specified kinds of companies. There is no reason why they should apply to street railroad companies, and not to companies engaged in the other classes of business.

[3] 3. Another contention was that the proviso, "that this act shall not * * * impair or invalidate any future contract or ordinance of any municipality, as to the public uses of such company, that shall receive the assent of the Railroad Commission," protected an ordinance subsequently (in 1912) passed by the city of Atlanta and agreed to by the electric light and power company, which was alleged to have received the assent of the Railroad Commission; such ordinance and contract providing a lower rate than that specified in the order of the Railroad Commission which was under attack. Assuming, without deciding, that the words "public uses," as employed in this part of the statute, comprehend rates that the company might charge the public, and likewise assuming, without deciding, that certain stipulated rates, when assented to by the Railroad Commission, were contemplated, the statute, properly construed, leaves it to the municipalities by contract or ordinance to specify rates, not unconditionally, but subject to the assent of the Railroad Commission. The annexing of such condition amounts to affirmation rather than a denial of the power of the railroad commissioners to say what rates might be stipulated by contract or specified by ordinance, which after all would amount to the commission making rates. The rates which might be so fixed would be subject to the continued approval of the Railroad Commission and authority to revise them. If it were otherwise, the commission, by assenting to rates reasonable at one time under existing conditions, would be stripped of the power to revise them at other times, however unreasonable they might become under changed conditions. No such result was intended. This view makes the proviso harmonize with that part of Civil Code, § 2631, which provides:

"Said commissioners shall, from time to time and as often as the circumstances may require, change and revise such schedules."

Under this construction any rates fixed by contract or ordinance, assented to by the Railroad Commission in 1912, would not prevent the commissioners from prescribing just and reasonable rates under conditions existing in 1918.

[4] 4. It appeared that the Railroad Commission, before passing the order complained of, had a public hearing on the application of the power company to increase its rates for electric light and power, and among other things granted to the applicant, and also to the city and various customers who were protesting the application, the right to be heard and to offer evidence. The hearing consumed many days, and the evidence took a broad range. Several years previously an engineer had made a report as to the value of certain property then and now employed by the power company, which was on file and included among the records of the Railroad Commission. An expert employed by the protestants was given permission and opportunity to investigate the files of the Railroad Commission, and was aware of this report. This report was not formally introduced at the hearing before the Railroad Commission, but after the hearing it was called for and taken into consideration by the commission in determining what rate the company should be allowed to charge. It is contended that the order of the Railroad Commission, fixing the rate which the company might charge for electric light and power, was void, because the Railroad Commission took this report into consideration in prescribing the schedules of rates which they finally made. Under the ruling in Wadley Southern Ry. Co. v. State, 137 Ga. 497, 73 S. E. 741, if the Railroad Commission had been engaged in the determination of a judicial question, affecting an existing right of some person, that person would have been entitled by constitutional guaranty to a hearing. The right to a hearing would carry with it the right to object to the admissibility of the evidence, and the right to meet it by other evidence. The case cited was where the Railroad Commission of Georgia, under its statutory powers, was conducting a quasi judicial inquiry based upon a complaint made against certain railroad companies, charging an unlawful discrimination. It was held that the Railroad Commission was vested with power to determine what would be an unlawful discrimination, and that—

"Section 6 of the Railroad Commission Act of 1907 (Civil Code 1910, § 2663) contemplates that notice and an opportunity of a hearing be given to persons, railroads, or other corporations interested in the orders issued by the commission, and that provision may be made for such notice either by statute or rule of the commission. This section is to be construed to mean that the commission shall not issue a special order in a particular case, directed to a person or corporation, without first giving notice and an opportunity for hearing to the person or corporation so to be affected thereby."

Whether a hearing should be afforded by the Railroad Commission on a quasi legislative question, or a question that was not quasi judicial, was not before the court, and the decision did not purport to deal with such a question. In Carr v. Augusta, 124 Ga. 116, 52 S. E. 300, in discussing the difference between a quasi legislative and quasi judicial question, it was said:

"The duties of a municipal council are varied. Some are merely ministerial, some are legislative, some are executive; but there are still others which are judicial in their nature, and the determination of where the legislative or ministerial duty ends and where the judicial duty begins is often attended with extreme difficulty. Harris on Certiorari, § 48. Where the duty is purely ministerial, or purely legislative, the error cannot be corrected by certiorari; but where the duty imposed upon the municipal council clearly requires the exercise of judicial powers, or even the exercise of quasi judicial powers, the general rule is that an error committed may be reviewed on certiorari. 1 Smith on Mun. Corp. § 561. When a municipal council passes an ordinance, it acts in its legislative capacity, and certiorari will not lie; but when, after having passed an ordinance, it proceeds to enforce the same, according to its terms, against one who has become liable to a penalty provided by the ordinance, in the determination of whether such person has violated it, and has thereby become subject to be proceeded against under its provisions, a municipal council is exercising a judicial power of the same nature that any court would exercise in investigating whether a given person has violated a given law. The action of the council, no matter by what name it might be called, order, resolution, or otherwise, which declares that a person has laid himself liable to penalties prescribed in the ordinance, is a judgment of the council, which can only be reached by the exercise of judicial functions; that is, an application of the law as laid down in the ordinance to the facts that appear before the council at the time the resolution is passed. The ordinance in effect imposed a penalty upon one holding a license to sell liquor when he did any one or more of the acts referred to in the ordinance. The ordinance devolved upon the council the determination of the question of fact as to whether he had been guilty of the acts declared illegal. Without reference to whether the ordinance was invalid for not providing notice to the party proceeded against for a forfeiture of his license, the act of the council declaring the person proceeded against guilty of a violation of the ordinance was in its very nature a judicial act. See Black on Intoxicating Liquors, § 195."

The doctrine here announced was approved and applied in Daniels v. Commissioners of Pilotage, 147 Ga. 297, 93 S. E. 887, holding that the commissioners of pilotage, in declining to authorize licensed pilots upon the bar of Tybee and river of Savannah to operate a boat separate and independent from the pilot boat to which, under the rules of the commissioners, all pilots are required to be attached, were not exercising a judicial function. In that case the commissioners took under consideration certain letters and reports obtained from other boards which were material, but were not formally introduced as evidence before the commissioners. In Union Dry Goods Co. v. Georgia Public Service Corporation, 145 Ga. 658, 89 S. E. 779, it was held:

"An order of the Railroad Commission, fixing a schedule of rates to be charged by public service companies in a given municipality, is not invalid solely because a contract holder of one of the public service companies was not made a party and notified of the proceedings before the commission."

The soundness of this decision rests upon the proposition that on the question of making rates for future application the Railroad Commission was not bound to afford a hearing, because the act of the commission in fixing such rates was quasi legislative; and if prescribed rates are unreasonable or void for any reason, there is a remedy by resort to the courts, as held in Union Dry Goods Co. v. Georgia Public Service Corporation, 142 Ga. 841, 83 S. E. 946, L. R. A. 1916E, 358 (s. c. 248 U. S. 372, 39 Sup. Ct. 117). The Railroad Commission of Georgia may afford a hearing on such questions, by rule or otherwise, as a matter of discretion. Such hearings are permitted, but not required. On investigation of an order prescribing rates in the courts, the order is presumptively reasonable and just; but the complaining party will be permitted to submit any evidence tending to show the order unreasonable or unjust, or otherwise illegal, without restriction on account of the action of the Railroad Commission in passing the order. See City of Atlanta v. Atlanta Gaslight Co., supra. Under the circumstances it would not be obligatory to afford, to a person to be affected by a schedule of rates applicable in the future, a hearing before the Railroad Commission on the question of making such rates. It is recognized generally that in prescribing rates for future application a rate-making body does so in the exercise of quasi legislative functions. Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 154 U. S. 362, 14 Sup. Ct. 1047, 38 L. Ed. 1014; Knoxville v. Water Co., 212 U. S. 1, 8, 29 Sup. Ct. 148, 53 L. Ed. 371; Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Garrett, 231 U. S. 298, 305, 307, 34 Sup. Ct. 48, 58 L. Ed. 229.

For the reasons indicated, the fact that the Railroad Commission may have acted in part upon information not formally introduced in evidence before it, would not render void its order fixing a schedule of rates to be applied in the future. The plaintiffs in error rely, among others, upon the rulings in Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 227 U. S. 88, 33 Sup. Ct. 185, 57 L. Ed. 431; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 222 U. S. 541, 32 Sup. Ct. 108, 56 L. Ed. 308. Both of those cases had reference to the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and related to the action of the commission while exercising its quasi judicial functions under section 15 of the Hepburn amendment to the Interstate Commerce Commission Act (Act June 29, 1906, 34 Stat. 584, c. 3591, § 15), which required them to afford a hearing. The reasoning employed in those cases is inapplicable to the present case, where the power of the state Railroad Commission was under a different statute that authorized the Railroad Commission, in the exercise of a quasi legislative function, to prescribe rates applicable in the future, and does not require them to afford a hearing, and where the order of the Railroad Commission under attack was passed in the exercise of a quasi legislative function.

[§] 5. In the suit of City of Atlanta et al. v. Railroad Commission of Georgia, the Georgia Railway & Power Company, and the Georgia Railway & Electric Company, to enjoin the order of the Railroad Commission referred to in the preceding division, the plaintiffs served the Railroad Commission with notice to produce—

"the following papers and documents to be used as evidence for the plaintiffs: (a) All reports, returns, or schedules made by the Georgia Railway & Power Company or under its authority or by any of its officers or agents for it, and whether under oath or not, in the years 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, 1917, and 1918, showing for any periods the net earnings of said corporations, and likewise showing in any way the value of any of the property and assets or franchises of said corporation. (b) The record and report which you have in your possession of all the evidence, oral or documentary, delivered upon the application of the Georgia Railway & Power Company for increased rates for electric current for light, power, and other purposes, which application was decided by your body on August 14, 1918. (c) A detailed inventory and appraisal of the property of the Georgia Railway & Electric Company, as made March 18, 1912, by W. A. Baehr. (d) All applications made to your body at any time by the Georgia Railway & Power Company or the Georgia Railway & Electric Company, for permission to issue stocks or bonds, together with the action of the commission thereon. All the documents and papers aforesaid are in your possession; and the plaintiff gives this notice in order to use them at the hearing of the injunction as hereinbefore set forth. The file containing the petition of the city of Atlanta against the Georgia Railway & Electric Company or Georgia Railway & Power Company, asking for a reduction in the electric current for heat, light, and power. (e) All papers accompanying said file just mentioned, whether the same be petitions by other persons for like reduction in rates, and also papers showing the proposed rates finally agreed on between the city of Atlanta and said electric company. (f) All schedules of rates for light, heat, or power filed by the Georgia Railway & Electric Company, or the Georgia Railway & Power Company, during the years 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, 1917, and 1918. (g) Any action by the Railroad Commission of Georgia upon any of the applications or schedules hereinbefore referred to. Said papers and documents to be used as evidence by the plaintiff upon the hearing of the injunction above referred to."

The Railroad Commission declined to respond to the notice, on the ground that the papers and documents called for were public papers required to be kept in the office of the commission, and that the Railroad Commission was not subject to the process of notice to produce. The court held that the Railroad Commission was not bound to produce the papers, and error was assigned on this ruling. Error was also assigned upon the ruling of the court declining to require the Railroad Commission to produce, in response to a notice to produce, certain "green books" kept by the Georgia Railway & Power Company, which contained a statement of the assets and liabilities of the power company and its subsidiary companies, which "green books" had been turned over to the Railroad Commission by the Georgia Railway & Power Company and were used at the hearing before the Railroad Commission. The judgment refusing to require the Railroad Commission to produce such "green books" was upon the ground that it was not required by law to produce its original documents. It is declared in Civil Code, § 5798:

"The certificate or attestation of any public officer, either of this state or any county thereof, shall give sufficient validity or authenticity to any copy or transcript of any record, document, paper of file, or other matter or thing in their respective offices, or pertaining thereto, to admit the same in evidence in any court of this state."

Section 5 of the act of 1907, supra, in part declares:

"The printed reports of the Railroad Commission, published by its authority, shall be admissible as evidence in any court in Georgia without further proof, and the schedules of rates made by the commission and any order passed or rule or regulation prescribed by the commission shall be admissible in evidence in any court in Georgia upon the certificate of the secretary of the commission." Ga. L. 1907, p. 73.

In Richardson v. Whitworth, 103 Ga. 741, 30 S. E. 573, it was held:

"Since administrators' bonds are required by law to be recorded and kept of file in the ordinary's office, a duly certified copy of such a bond is admissible as primary evidence. Consequently, the introduction of 'the record' of such a bond was properly allowed over objection thereto based on the ground that the original had not been produced nor a copy thereof 'established.'"

In Metropolitan Street Railroad Co. v. Johnson, 90 Ga. 500, 16 S. E. 49 (3), it was held:

"A municipal ordinance may be proved by the production of the original book of ordinances, identified as such by the clerk of the corporation and shown to have come from his custody. Notwithstanding the statute of September 19, 1891 (Acts 1890-91, p. 109), make an official certified copy evidence, it is not the exclusive evidence."

In Civil Code, § 5837, it is provided:

"The several courts shall have power on the trial of any cause cognizable before them respectively, on notice and proof thereof, being previously given by the opposite party or his attorney, to require either party to produce books, writings, and other documents in his possession, power, custody, or control, which shall contain evidence pertinent to the cause in question, under circumstances where such party might be compelled to produce the same by the ordinary rules of proceeding in equity."

Under the strict letter of this law, it might have been in the power of the court to have required the Railroad Commission to produce the papers called for by the notice; but all of the papers held by the commission called for by the notice were public records of the commissioners, who were public officers of this state. As such they were open to inspection by the public under proper regulation, and certified copies of any part of these records were admissible as primary evidence. It would be a great inconvenience to the Railroad Commission, and at the risk of losing the papers of file in that office, if it should be required to remove original documents from that office to the several courts of this state, to be used as evidence. If the commission should be required to produce its original papers on notice to produce in cases where the commissioners were themselves parties to a suit, it would likewise be done under a subpoena duces tecum in a case in which the commissioners were not parties. These and other reasons might be suggested why the court should not require the production of the original papers.

[8] 6. Under the pleadings and the evidence, the judge was authorized to hold that the order increasing the rates was not shown to be unreasonable or unjust, or void on any ground of attack. Under such circumstances there was no error in refusing an injunction.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except FISH, C. J. (dissenting). I am constrained to dissent from so much of the opinion of the majority of the court as is embodied in the third headnote and the corresponding division of the opinion. In my judgment the express provisions of the statute set out in section 2662 of the Civil Code preclude the Railroad Commission from impairing or invalidating any contract, made with its assent subsequently to the passage of the act of 1907, between a municipality and a public utility corporation such as the one which is a party to this case.

HILL, J. (concurring specially as to division 3 of the opinion). The authority to determine what are just and reasonable rates is vested exclusively in the Railroad Commission of Georgia; and regardless of contracts between the city of Atlanta and the Georgia Railway & Power Company fixing rates, and whether the commission assented thereto, the commission properly exercised its power in fixing the rates under review.

(149 Ga. 397)

COWART v. STRICKLAND.

STRICKLAND v. COWART.

(Nos. 1236, 1238.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 27, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. NEW TRIAL §9—MAY BE GRANTED ON PART OF ISSUES.

Where, in an ejectment case, the plaintiff recovers a verdict for the premises, with mesne profits, the trial judge may grant a new trial on the issue of mesne profits alone for errors of law, or if he disapproves the verdict on that issue, and the judgment being divisible, refuse a new trial on the issue of title, if that issue was adjudicated without error of law, and if the trial judge approves the verdict.

2. NEW TRIAL §35—WITNESSES §269(2)—EXTENT OF CROSS-EXAMINATION OF WITNESS CALLED TO FORMAL POINT ONLY.

Where a witness is voluntarily called by a party and examined, even though to a formal point only, the court cannot restrict the right of cross-examination of the witness to the formal point upon which the party has examined him; but the opposite party has the right to cross-examine the witness as to all points in the case.

(a) Nevertheless, where the trial judge requires a party to call a witness on whom the party has caused a subpoena duces tecum to be served, and at the time announces that the examination will be restricted to the sole question of the witness' ability to produce the original document called for by the subpoena, and the examination is limited to that question alone, it is not error to refuse to allow the opposite party to cross-examine the witness generally on the merits of the case.

(b) Nor is it error requiring a new trial to permit the witness to be examined, in the presence of the court, but in the absence of the jury, on the sole question of his ability to produce the original of the document described in the subpoena.

3. DEEDS §193, 207—BURDEN OF PROOF IS ON PARTY ALLEGING DEED A FORGERY.

Where, on the trial of an ejectment case, a deed is attacked as a forgery, the burden is on the party asserting the affirmative of the issue to establish his contention by a preponderance of the testimony. He is not required to prove the forgery of the deed beyond a reasonable doubt.

4. TRIAL §255(3)—FAILURE TO INSTRUCT ON CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE IN ABSENCE OF REQUEST NOT ERROR.

In the absence of a request, the failure of the judge on the trial of an ejectment case to give in charge to the jury the rule of circumstantial evidence as applicable to civil cases is not cause for new trial, even though the evidence upon a single and controlling issue is entirely circumstantial.

5. DEEDS §207—EJECTMENT §110—TRIAL §251(3)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE TO SUSTAIN JUDGMENT FOR PLAINTIFF.

The evidence authorized the verdict, and none of the assignments of error show cause for reversal of the judgment to which exception is taken in the main bill of exceptions.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR §977(4)—FIRST GRANT OF NEW TRIAL WILL NOT BE DISTURBED.

The judgment granting a new trial on the issue of mesne profits alone, assigned as error in the cross-bill of exceptions, is within the rule that the first grant of a new trial will not be disturbed, unless the evidence demands the verdict rendered.

Error from Superior Court, Calhoun County; W. M. Harrell, Judge.

Ejectment by E. P. Strickland against J. S. Cowart. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff, motion for new trial denied in part and granted in part, and defendant brings error, and plaintiff takes a cross-bill of exceptions. Affirmed on both bills of exceptions.

Miss Eunice Price (now Mrs. Eunice Price Strickland) brought an action of ejectment against J. S. Cowart for the recovery of two lots of land and for mesne profits. The plaintiff relied for recovery upon a demise from herself as the sole heir at law of her father, J. N. Price. She contended: (1) That her father died in possession of the land. (2) That the defendant claimed under a chain of title which originated in Margaret Williams, running (a) from Margaret Williams to J. C. Price; (b) from J. C. Price to J. N. Price; (c) from J. N. Price back to J. C. Price; (d) from J. C. Price to J. L. Boynton; (e) from J. L. Boynton to the defendant. The plaintiff attacked the alleged deed from J. N. Price to J. C. Price as a forgery. The trial of the case resulted in a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff for the premises in dispute, and for $1,960 mesne profits. The defendant filed a motion for new trial, which was subsequently amended. The court denied the motion "in so far as the recovery of the land is concerned," but granted the defendant a new trial "on the issue as to mesne profits," and "as to the issue of mesne profits only," for the following reasons, as set out in the order:

"This judgment of the court granting a new trial on the issue of mesne profits is based solely on the ground that the plaintiff could not recover mesne profits, except for such time as the plaintiff might by evidence show that the defendant was in possession of the premises in dispute; and plaintiff having failed to show that defendant was at any time in possession of the premises, the recovery for mesne profits was without any evidence to support it."

To this judgment the defendant excepted, assigning error thereon in the main bill of exceptions. The plaintiff filed a cross-bill of exceptions, in which she complains that the court erred in granting to the plaintiff a new trial on the issue of mesne profits.

B. W. Fortson, of Arlington, Pope & Bennett, of Albany, and Samuel H. Sibley, of Union Point, for plaintiff in error.

R. C. Bell, of Cairo, and W. V. Custer, of Bainbridge, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. [1] 1. The plaintiff in error contends that the court may only grant an entire new trial, either of the cause or of a collateral issue (Civil Code, § 6079); that the court cannot separate the case into two distinct issues, to be tried separately by the jury, especially in an action of ejectment, with a prayer for recovery of mesne profits, since a separate action cannot be maintained for the recovery of mesne profits. It is therefore insisted that the legal effect of the judgment of the trial court on the motion for new trial is either (1) to grant a new trial of the entire cause, or (2) to deny the motion entirely, on condition that the recovery for mesne profits be written off. The case of McCarthy v. Lazarus, 137 Ga. 282, 73 S. E. 493, was an action of ejectment, with a prayer for mesne profits. The trial court directed a verdict in behalf of the plaintiff for the premises in dispute and for mesne profits. The judgment was affirmed "as to the direction of a verdict for the recovery of the premises," but a new trial was ordered "on the sole question as to mesne profits, with direction that the issue as to mesne profits alone be submitted to a jury on another trial." It is true that the power of the Supreme Court to give direction depends on special statute (Civil Code, § 6205), but it is also true that—

"Where a judgment appealed from can be segregated, so that the correct portions can be separated from the erroneous, the court will not set aside the entire judgment, but only that portion which is erroneous." Chicago Building Co. v. Butler, 139 Ga. 816(1), 819, 78 S. E. 244, 246.

It is not to be assumed that in an ejectment suit this court would order a new trial "on the sole question as to mesne profits, with direction that the issue as to mesne profits alone be submitted to a jury on another trial," unless it were in the first instance permissible, in a proper case, for the trial court itself to so direct. Where in an ejectment case the issue as to title is adjudicated in favor of the plaintiff, and the trial court is of the opinion that the adjudication was without error of law, and is satisfied with the verdict, a new trial may be denied as to the issue of title, and a new trial granted on the issue of mesne profits, if the trial court is of the opinion that errors of law were committed upon the latter issue, or if he disapproves the verdict. Brooke v. Lowry Nat. Bank, 141 Ga. 493, 81 S. E. 223 (5). The fact that the case is one of ejectment, with a prayer for mesne profits, is immaterial. While section 5576 of the Civil Code declares:

"No plaintiff in ejectment shall have and maintain a separate action in his behalf for the recovery of mesne profits which may have accrued to him from the premises in dispute"

—it is sufficient to say that in such case the action is not a separate one. In the practical administration of the law, an issue once adjudicated without error may remain closed, where the judgment is divisible, while at the same time the trial court has it within his power to grant a new trial upon a separate, distinct, and independent issue involved in the same case.

[2] 2. The plaintiff in the court below desired to put in evidence a certified copy of a deed from J. C. Price to J. N. Price, conveying the lands in controversy. She had duly served the defendant with a notice to produce the original. During the progress of the trial the plaintiff testified that she did not have the deed in her possession, power, custody, or control, and that she had made diligent search for it and had failed to find it. She then exhibited to the court an affidavit of B. Isler, administrator of the estate of J. N. Price, filed by him in response to a subpoena duces tecum, calling upon him to produce the original of said deed. The administrator in his affidavit averred that he did not have and had never had the original of said deed in his power, custody, or control, and therefore could not produce it. The plaintiff insisted that she be allowed to introduce the certified copy of the deed in question upon the showing made, whereupon the court directed and required the plaintiff's counsel to put the administrator upon the stand, with the statement that the examination would be confined to the question of his ability to produce the original deed. The witness was then examined by the plaintiff's counsel touching his possession of the deed in question, and testified in substance that he did not have the deed and that the same had never been in his possession, power, custody, or control. He was then fully examined by the defendant's counsel upon the same point, and the court ruled that the witness could not be cross-examined by the defendant's counsel upon other and separate and distinct issues in the case. However, the defendant was given the privilege to swear the witness in chief; and the witness was sworn and examined in behalf of the defendant after the plaintiff had closed her case. In the motion for new trial error is assigned on the ruling of the court in refusing to permit the defendant to cross-examine the witness generally upon the merits of the case, and also because the court permitted the examination of the witness on the question of his ability to produce the deed out of the presence of the jury. The rule in this state is that—

"When a witness is called and examined, even to only a formal point, by one party, the other party has the right to cross-examine him as to all points." Aiken v. Cato, 23 Ga. 154; News Publishing Co. v. Butler, 95 Ga. 559, 22 S. E. 282.

The rule undoubtedly applies when the witness is voluntarily called by the party. In that event the court cannot restrict the right of cross-examination to the points upon which the party has examined the witness in chief. If, however, in response to a subpoena duces tecum, the court is not satisfied with the affidavit of the witness, but is yet unwilling to exclude the secondary evidence offered, and directs and requires counsel for the party by whom the witness was subpoenaed to call the witness in person and examine him orally in the presence of the court, we are of the opinion that it is not reversible error to refuse the right of cross-examination to the opposite party generally on the merits of the case. The plaintiff may have preferred to insist upon the introduction of the secondary evidence upon the showing made; and in this case it appears that the plaintiff did insist upon the sufficiency of such showing. It would be manifestly unfair to compel counsel to call a witness, or to compel him to examine a witness called by the direction of the court, upon the sole question of the ability of the witness to produce an original document, with the right to the opposite party to cross-examine the witness on the merits of the case. If error at all, it was certainly not reversible error to permit the witness to be examined, out of the presence of the jury, on the sole question of his ability to produce the deed described in the subpoena duces tecum. See Civil Code, § 5759; Powell on Actions for Land, 241, 242, § 198.

[3] 3. The vital issue in the case was whether the deed from J. N. Price to J. C. Price was a forgery. The plaintiff did not file an affidavit of forgery. She relied entirely upon circumstantial evidence to establish her contention that the deed was a forgery. The court in effect instructed the jury that the plaintiff, had the burden of showing, by a preponderance of evidence, that the deed from J. N. Price to J. C. Price was a forgery. The plaintiff in error contends that the court should have charged that the forgery of the deed must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. The case of Williams v. Gunnels, 66 Ga. 521, is cited in support of this contention. It was there said that to support a plea of justification, in a suit for slander on account of words imputing a crime, "the same degree of evidence is required as would be necessary to convict the plaintiff on a criminal prosecution for the offense." But see Atlanta Journal v. Mayson, 92 Ga. 640, 18 S. E. 1010, 44 Am. St. Rep. 104, where it was ruled that the question was neither directly made nor decided in Williams v. Gunnels, supra. Where in an ejectment suit a deed is attacked as a forgery, the burden is upon the party asserting the affirmative of the issue to establish his contention by a preponderance of the testimony. The case falls within the rule announced in section 5730 of the Civil Code, as follows:

"Moral and reasonable certainty is all that can be expected in legal investigation. In all civil cases the preponderance of testimony is considered sufficient to produce mental conviction."

[4] 4. It is also insisted that the court erred in failing to charge, without request, the rule of circumstantial evidence as applicable to a civil case. We cannot agree with this contention. It is true, as pointed out by counsel for the plaintiff in error, that in a criminal case, where the evidence is entirely circumstantial, it is error for the court to fail to charge the rule applicable to a case of that character, with or without a request to so charge. The rule announced by this court in criminal cases has no application to the issue of forgery in a civil action. As a rule in criminal cases, it must have resulted, in part at least, from the positive requirement of section 1010 of the Penal Code, which is as follows:

"To warrant a conviction on circumstantial evidence, the proved facts must not only be consistent with the hypothesis of guilt, but must exclude every other reasonable hypothesis save that of the guilt of the accused."

[5] 5. In one ground of the motion for new trial error is assigned upon the following charge of the court to the jury:

"Referring again to the question as to whether the deed referred to from J. N. Price to J. C. Price was a forgery, this involves a question of fraud; and I charge you in this connection that fraud may not be presumed, but, being subtle in its nature, slight circumstances may be sufficient to carry conviction of its existence."

It is insisted that this charge was inapplicable to the issues in the case, and misled and confused the jury. In Smith v. Stone, 127 Ga. 483, 56 S. E. 640 (3), it is held:

"Upon the trial of the issue of forgery, * * * when a registered deed is offered in evidence, nothing is involved except the factum of the deed assailed; and when the uncontradicted evidence shows that the deed was executed, a finding that it was a forgery is unauthorized, notwithstanding there may be evidence tending to show that the grantee had, by his conduct and sayings, estopped himself from asserting title under the deed, as against certain persons."

We agree with counsel for the plaintiff in error that the charge was inapplicable to any issue in the case, but we cannot say that it either misled or confused the jury. The court clearly stated the issues to the jury, and instructed them that the burden was upon the plaintiff to show that the deed from J. N. Price to J. C. Price was in fact a forgery. In immediate connection with the excerpt to which exception is taken, the court charged as follows:

"You would have no right to find for the plaintiff in this case unless you should, by the testimony or the circumstances, determine that the deed in question was never in fact executed by J. N. Price; but you may consider all the circumstances of the case in determining whether the deed was genuine or whether it was a forgery."

In view of the entire charge, considered in the light of the evidence in the record, we do not feel authorized to reverse the case upon this ground. The evidence authorized the jury to find that the plaintiff's intestate died in possession of the land in controversy, that the defendant claimed under the plaintiff's intestate, and that the deed from the plaintiff's intestate to J. C. Price was a forgery. None of the assignments of error upon the rulings of the court in admitting or rejecting evidence, in charging the jury, or in failing to charge, assigned as erroneous in the motion for new trial, will require a reversal of the case on the main bill of exceptions.

[6] 6. The grant of the new trial on the issue of mesne profits, assigned as error in the cross-bill of exceptions, is within the rule that the first grant of a new trial will not be disturbed, unless the evidence demands the verdict rendered, nor will the court undertake to make any ruling with respect to the reason assigned by the trial judge as the basis of his action, although the new trial be granted upon a special ground of the motion. Van Glesen v. Queen Insurance Co., 132 Ga. 515, 64 S. E. 456, and cases cited; Ballenger v. Ballenger, 147 Ga. 351, 94 S. E. 237. It goes without saying that the verdict for $1,960 for mesne profits was not demanded, under the rule recognized in this state. See McCarthy v. Lazarus, 137 Ga. 282, 73 S. E. 493.

Judgment affirmed on both bills of exceptions.

All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 474)

BOARD OF COM'RS OF BERRIEN COUNTY et al. v. FIRST NAT. BANK OF ADEL et al. (No. 1269.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

GRANT OF INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTION.

Under the pleadings and evidence in this case, the court did not err in granting an interlocutory injunction.

Error from Superior Court, Berrien County; W. E. Thomas, Judge.

Action between the Board of Commissioners of Berrien County and others and the First National Bank of Adel and others. Judgment for the latter, and the former bring error. Affirmed.

W. D. Bule and R. A. Hendricks, both of Nashville, for plaintiffs in error.

J. Z. Jackson, of Adel, for defendants in error.

GEORGE, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 474)

McKENZIE v. MERRY. (No. 1484.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1919.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTION.

Under the pleadings and evidence in this case, the court did not err in granting an interlocutory injunction.

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Action by W. D. Merry against J. H. McKenzie. From a judgment granting an interlocutory injunction, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Wm. H. Fleming, of Augusta, for plaintiff in error.

C. Henry & R. S. Cohen, of Augusta, for defendant in error.

GEORGE, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 470)

TOOLE v. TAYLOR. (No. 1274.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1919.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTION.

Upon the hearing of this case on the petition and answer alone, the court did not err in granting an interlocutory injunction.

Error from Superior Court, Effingham County; W. W. Sheppard, Judge.

Action between W. B. Toole and R. J. Taylor. Interlocutory injunction granted, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

W. Inman Curry, of Augusta, for plaintiff in error.

FISH, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 483)

STACER v. WHITE & HAMILTON LUMBER CO. et al. (No. 1276.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 16, 1919.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTION — CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Under conflicting evidence, the court did not err in refusing to grant an interlocutory injunction.

Error from Superior Court, Hancock County; J. P. Park, Judge.

Action between G. L. Stacer and the White and Hamilton Lumber Company and others.

Interlocutory injunction denied, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

Robert H. Lewis, of Sparta, for plaintiff in error.

Burwell & Fleming, of Sparta, for defendants in error.

GEORGE, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 475)

MOBLEY v. DICKERSON, Tax Collector, et al. (No. 1308.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1919.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL.

Under the evidence in this case the verdict was demanded, and the court did not err in refusing a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Clinch County; J. I. Summerall, Judge.

Action between W. H. Mobley and C. H. Dickerson, Tax Collector, and others. Judgment for the latter, motion for new trial denied, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

S. Burkhalter, of Homerville, and E. K. Wilcox, of Valdosta, for plaintiff in error.

Franklin & Langdale, of Valdosta, and Parker & Parker, of Waycross, for defendants in error.

HILL, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(24 Ga. App. 207)

JACKSON v. MULKEY. (No. 10301.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Oct. 9, 1919.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)OVERRULING OF CERTIORARI.

The judge of the superior court did not err in overruling the certiorari.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Action between P. P. Jackson and Jesse Mulkey. Judgment for the latter, certiorari overruled, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

R. R. Jackson, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

M. Herzberg, of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 229)

LOFTIS BROS. & CO. v. CREEL
(No. 10442.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 9, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)OVERRULING OF ORAL MOTION TO DISMISS PETITION.

The petition in this case does not set out a cause of action, and the judge erred in overruling the oral motion to dismiss it.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Action by J. F. Creel against Loftis Bros. & Co. Oral motion to dismiss petition overruled, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Rosser, Slaton, Phillips & Hopkins, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

W. H. Terrell, of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment reversed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 268)

BROWN v. STATE. (No. 10662.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. CRIMINAL LAW §1178 — OBJECTION NOT REFERRED TO IN BRIEF ABANDONED.

The second ground of the amendment to the motion for new trial is not referred to in the brief of counsel for plaintiff in error, and will be treated as abandoned.

2. CHARGE OF COURT.

When read in connection with the entire charge, there is no error in any of the excerpts from the charge of which complaint is made.

3. CRIMINAL LAW §826, 829(1) — REQUEST TO CHARGE MUST BE MADE BEFORE JURY RETIRE.

As far as legal and pertinent, the principle embraced in the request to charge was fully covered in the charge given. Besides, it does not appear that the request was made before the jury retired "to consider of their verdict."

4. VERDICT SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE AND APPROVED BY TRIAL COURT—REVIEW.

The evidence supports the verdict which has the approval of the trial judge, and this court will not disturb it.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; H. A. Matthews, Judge.

Proceeding between the State and Charlie Brown. From the judgment, Brown brings error. Affirmed.

John R. Cooper, W. A. McClellan, and W. O. Cooper, Jr., all of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

John P. Ross, Sol. Gen., of Macon, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 267)

PARKER v. STATE. (No. 10661.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. CHARGE ON CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

The court properly charged the law of circumstantial evidence.

2. ANIMALS §34—CRIMINAL LAW §824(4) —FAILURE TO SUBMIT DEFENDANT'S CONTENTIONS REVERSIBLE ERROR.

The defendant was charged with the violation of a rule and regulation of the state veterinarian, approved by the commissioner of agriculture, to wit, regulation 16, paragraph 3, of Bulletin 14, Series A, which prohibited the sale of hogs exposed to, or infected with, hog cholera. The defendant's main contention, supported by his statement and by the testimony of witnesses, was that he did not know that the hogs sold by him were infected with, or had been exposed to, hog cholera. It was therefore reversible error for the court, even in the absence of a timely and appropriate written request, to fail to submit to the jury this contention of the defendant, with instructions that, if they found this contention to be true, the defendant should be acquitted.

Error from City Court of Dublin; R. D. Flynt, Judge.

C. H. Parker was prosecuted for a violation of a rule and regulation of the state veterinarian, prohibiting sale of hogs exposed to or infected with hog cholera, and from the judgment he brings error. Reversed.

Geo. H. Carswell, of Irwinton, and J. S. Adams, of Dublin, for plaintiff in error.

T. E. Hightower, Sol., and R. Earl Camp, both of Dublin, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment reversed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 242)

VAUGHN-CARLTON CO. v. STUDEBAKER CORPORATION OF AMERICA et al.
(No. 10614.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 9, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

None of the assignments of error is meritorious.

2. COSTS  $\S$ 260(1)—DAMAGES AWARDED ON APPEAL FOR DELAY ONLY.

It appearing that this writ of error was prosecuted for the purpose of delay only, the petition of the defendant in error that 10 per cent. damages be awarded against the plaintiff in error is granted.

Error from Superior Court, Colquitt County; W. E. Thomas, Judge.

Action between the Vaughn-Carlton Company and the Studebaker Corporation of America and others. Decree for the latter, and the former brings error. Affirmed, with damages.

See, also, 22 Ga. App. 684, 97 S. E. 99.

Shipp &amp; Kline and D. P. Starr, all of Moultrie, for plaintiff in error.

P. Q. Bryan, of Moultrie, for defendants in error.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed, with damages.LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 275)

ETTER v. STATE. (No. 10633.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$ 824(9) — FAILURE TO CHARGE ON CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE IN ABSENCE OF REQUEST NOT ERROR.The defendant was indicted and tried for the offense of assault with intent to murder, and was convicted of the offense of shooting at another. By motion for a new trial she assigned error upon the court's failure to charge the jury the law of circumstantial evidence, and upon the charge on the defense of alibi. The person alleged to have been shot having testified positively that the defendant shot her, and the state's case not depending wholly upon circumstantial evidence, it was not error (there being no request so to do) to fail to charge the law as to circumstantial evidence. See Nobles v. State, 127 Ga. 212, 56 S. E. 125. The charge on alibi was full and in accord with Ransom v. State, 2 Ga. App. 828, 59 S. E. 101, and cases cited. For no reason assigned, there being evidence to authorize the verdict approved by the trial judge, was it error to overrule the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Walker County; Moses Wright, Judge.

Nora Etter was convicted of the offense of shooting at another, and she brings error. Affirmed.

O. N. Chambers, of Rossville, and Rosser &amp; Shaw, of La Fayette, for plaintiff in error. C. H. Porter, Sol. Gen., of Rome, and E. S. Taylor, of Summerville, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 280)

RABURN v. STATE. (No. 10694.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)REFUSAL OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The special grounds of the motion for new trial are without merit. There is evidence to support the verdict, and a new trial was properly refused.

Error from City Court of Carrollton; Jas. Beall, Judge.

Proceeding by the State against Babe Raburn. From the judgment, Raburn brings error. Affirmed.

Leon Hood, of Carrollton, for plaintiff in error.

Willis Smith, Sol., of Carrollton, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 284)

CLINE v. STATE. (No. 10705.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. EXCERPTS FROM CHARGE.

In the excerpts from the charge of which complaint is made we find no error.

2. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$ 1160 — VERDICT SUPPORTED BY SOME EVIDENCE AFFIRMED.

The verdict is supported by some evidence, has the approval of the trial judge, and, under the law governing this court, the judgment must be affirmed.

Error from Superior Court, Cherokee County; N. A. Morris, Judge.

Proceeding by the State against Charlie Cline. From the judgment, Cline brings error. Affirmed.

John S. Wood, of Canton, for plaintiff in error.

John T. Dorsey, Sol. Gen., of Marietta, and Wm. Butt, of Blue Ridge, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(125 Va. 604)

BLIZZARD et al. v. SALYER et al.
(two cases).

(Supreme Court of Appeal of Virginia.
Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨220—UNRECORDED CONVEYANCE INEFFECTIVE AGAINST BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

To be protected by Code 1904, § 2465, against a prior unrecorded deed, one must have been a complete purchaser for valuable consideration without notice of such prior unrecorded deed.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨240—SUBSEQUENT PURCHASER IN ACTION BY GRANTEE IN UNRECORDED DEED MUST PLEAD BONA FIDE PURCHASE.

In an action by a grantee, who failed to record his deed under Code 1904, § 2465, to set aside a subsequent transfer by the grantor, the subsequent purchaser, if entitled to the protection of such statute, must affirmatively plead and set up such defense.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨240—SUBSEQUENT PURCHASER MUST PLEAD IGNORANCE OF PRIOR UNRECORDED TRANSFER THOUGH AN INFANT.

The rule that a purchaser of land, to protect himself under the registry statute (Code 1904, § 2465) from prior unrecorded deed, in an action by the prior grantee to set aside the transfer to him, must affirmatively plead and prove that he was a purchaser without notice, etc., applies to infants who seek under section 3424 to show cause against a decree setting aside a transfer to them.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨240—PLEADING INSUFFICIENT AS DEFENSE OF PURCHASERS FOR VALUE.

An allegation in a bill that a deed to plaintiff was made in consideration of $150 is not a sufficient allegation that plaintiff was a purchaser for a valuable consideration under the registry statute (Code 1904, § 2465); it being necessary to plead actual payment by plaintiff of the whole consideration.

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨240—PLEADING INSUFFICIENT TO ALLEGE PURCHASE WITHOUT NOTICE OF UNRECORDED DEED.

Allegations in a bill, from which it might be deduced by calculation that the plaintiffs were of a very tender age when a deed to them was made, was not a sufficient allegation that they were purchasers without notice of a prior unrecorded deed under the registry statute (Code 1904, § 2465).

6. PLEADING ⇨48—NECESSITY OF STATING FACTS DISCLOSING RIGHTS.

When parties, whether infants or adults, seek the aid of courts to enforce their rights, it is essential that they should allege the facts disclosing what those rights are, as a court cannot base its decree on facts not alleged or put in issue by the pleadings.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Russell County.

Bill by Reed G. Blizzard and another against one Salyer and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

The appellants were plaintiffs in the court below, and the object of their bill was to show cause against a certain decree which will be hereinafter more particularly mentioned, which was entered in a certain chancery cause to which they were infant parties defendant at the time of such decree.

The appellants are two in number, namely, Reed G. Blizzard and Rawle Payne Blizzard. The former had but recently attained the age of 21 years, and the latter, being about 2 years younger, was still an infant when the suit was instituted in which the bill aforesaid was filed.

In filing such bill the adult appellant proceeded under section 3424 of the Code, which, so far as material, is as follows:

"It shall not be necessary to insert in any decree or order a provision allowing an infant to show cause against it within a certain time after he attains the age of twenty-one years. But in any case in which, but for this section, such provision would have been proper, the infant may, within six months after attaining the age of twenty-one years, show such cause in like manner as if the decree or order contained such provision."

The proceeding by the infant appellant was of the same character, the suit being instituted by him, suing by his next friend, before attaining the age of 21 years, he having the right to so proceed. Harrison v. Walton's Ex'r, 95 Va. 721, 30 S. E. 372, 41 L. R. A. 703, 64 Am. St. Rep. 830.

The allegations of the said bill, so far as material to be mentioned, are in substance, as follows:

That appellants are the owners of two-thirds undivided interest in a certain tract of 19 acres of land. That such land was conveyed to appellants and an elder brother, Beecher B. Blizzard, by deed of date of June 28, 1897, from one Nellie Meade and husband, it being alleged in the language of the bill that—

"The consideration for said conveyance being the sum of $150 cash, * * * all of which will more fully and at large appear by a reference to the said deed recorded in the clerk's office of Russell county, Va., in Deed Book No. 30, page 636, and a duplicate copy of which is herewith filed as a part of this bill marked 'Exhibit Deed No. 1,' and prayed to be read and taken as if the same were herein copied at large."

That this deed was declared to be null and void and set aside by the decree aforesaid which was entered on September 14, 1909, in the chancery cause first above mentioned. That Susie A. Blizzard, the mother of appellants was the complainant in that suit, and appellants and their elder brother were infant defendants along with other adult and infant defendants. That their said mother in her bill in that suit alleged that she was the equitable owner of said land by virtue of an alleged title bond, bearing date May 12, 1897, signed by one Elam and wife, a copy of which was filed with such bill. That such bill further alleged that said Elam derived title to said land from the aforesaid Nellie Meade and husband by deed prior in date to that to appellants aforesaid, to wit, by deed of January 10, 1894, a copy of which was filed with such bill, but which deed the bill of appellants alleges has never been recorded. That the prayer of the bill of their said mother was that the said deed to appellants "be set aside and declared null and void, and also that a deed be caused to be made to said complainant in said cause," conveying the title to said land from said Elam's heirs, he having died before making conveyance in accordance with said title bond. That a formal answer of appellants as infants along with their elder brother and certain Elam heirs, who were also infants, was filed by their guardian ad litem in said cause in which their mother was complainant as aforesaid, which answer stated that by reason of their age said infants knew nothing of the allegations of the complainant's bill, but supposed that they had rights involved in the cause, and placed appellants under "the protection of the court," and asked "that the complainant be required to make out her case to the satisfaction of the court." That none of the adult Elam heirs demurred, pleaded, or answered, and the bill was taken for confessed as to them. That no proof was introduced in said cause to justify the decree aforesaid other than the exhibits of said title bond and deeds from Nellie Meade and husband to Elam and to appellants. That nevertheless upon such status of the pleadings and proof such decree was entered. The bill of appellants thereupon alleges that the adult appellant reached his majority within 6 months next preceding the commencement of appellants' suit, and that the younger appellant is still within the age of 21 years and states that appellants are advised that by virtue of the foregoing allegations of fact they are entitled to come into a court of equity praying the court to review the said decree, and that "the court will set aside said decree for the manifest errors therein committed appearing on the face of the record, * * * and that the court will cause the said two-thirds interest in the tract of land mentioned in the bill to be reconveyed to your complainants, * * * or will set aside and decree null and void the said decree and deeds mentioned that affect their two-thirds interest in said tract or which create a cloud upon their title to their two-thirds interest"; and the prayer of the bill is for relief accordingly and for recovery of rents of the land.

There was a demurrer to the bill which was sustained by the court below on the ground that the bill did not contain an allegation that appellants were purchasers of the land for valuable consideration without notice of the deed to Elam aforesaid, whereupon the decree under review was entered accordingly, sustaining the demurrer, with provision therein giving appellants leave to file an amended bill, if they should be so advised.

Other material facts are referred to in the opinion of the court below.

Joseph E. Duff, of Lebanon, for appellants.

W. W. Bird, of Lebanon, for the appellees.

SIMS, J. (after stating the facts as above). There were a number of assignments of error in the petition for the appeal all of which, however, were stated in oral argument by counsel for appellants to be waived or not relied on, except one, which so far as material, is as follows:

(1) "The court erred in the original suit" (above referred to, in which Susie A. Blizzard, the mother of appellants, was complainant, and appellants and the Elam heirs were defendants) "in decreeing the deed to petitioners set aside, when the suit was heard and determined only upon the bill and exhibits filed with the bill and the denial in toto of the allegations of the bill by the answer of the infants by their guardian ad litem * * * and no proof or depositions taken and filed in support of the allegations made in the bill."

It will be seen from the statements preceding this opinion that the bill in the cause before us assails the decree entered in the original suit mentioned as void because of lack of sufficient proof in the record to sustain it in setting aside a recorded deed to appellants in favor of a prior unrecorded deed from the grantors of appellants to another (one Elam) from whom the complainant in such original suit derived equitable title to the land in controversy by purchase as evidenced by a certain title bond given her by said Elam.

[1] It is plain from the bill in the cause before us that the decree in the original cause was amply supported in proof by the exhibits filed with the bill in such original cause and that such decree was right in setting aside the deed to appellants, unless, indeed, they were protected by the registry statute (section 2465 of the Code) against the said prior unrecorded deed of their grantors to another. To be so protected appellants must have been complete purchasers for valuable consideration without notice of such prior unrecorded deed.

From the bill in the cause before us it does not appear that such an issue as that last named was made by the pleadings in said original cause. And on referring to the bill in such original cause we see that it is not disclosed by its allegations that appellants were purchasers for valuable consideration without notice of the deed to Elam or that the deed to Elam was unrecorded. So far as appears from that bill the issue made thereby, to the extent that the suit concerned appellants, was whether the deed to appellants could have operated to convey to them the legal or equitable title to land which their grantors had theretofore conveyed away to another by a prior deed which was in proper form and in every way valid and sufficient to so operate at law and in equity; it not appearing from the allegations of the bill or other pleadings in the cause that the registry statute had any application to the case. That such statute had any application to the case was not put in issue by any other pleading therein.

[2, 3] Such being the nature of said original suit, if the appellants were entitled to the protection of the registry statute aforesaid, that was a matter of defense to the benefit of which they could entitle themselves only by affirmative pleading, setting up such defense and by proof sustaining such pleading. Lamar v. Hale, 79 Va. 147, 157; Rorer Iron Co. v. Trout, 83 Va. 397, 414, 417, 2 S. E. 713, 5 Am. St. Rep. 285 and authorities cited; 39 Cyc. pp. 1778-1780. Such is the general rule applicable to such defense. The same rule applies to infants who seek to show cause against a decree affecting them. See Pierce v. Trigg, 10 Leigh, 406 and note to that case in Va. Rep. Anno.

[4] The allegation in the bill in the cause before us of the recital in the deed to appellants that the deed was made in consideration of $150 is not a sufficient allegation that appellants were purchasers for valuable consideration. As said in Lamar v. Hale, supra (79 Va. at page 157), quoting with approval from Perry on Trusts, § 219:

" * * * It is not enough that the consideration was secured to be paid, nor is a recital of payment in the deed sufficient; there must be actual payment." (Italics supplied.)

Hence the bill should have alleged actual payment by appellants of the whole consideration.

[5] And there is no allegation anywhere in the bill that appellants were purchasers without notice of the prior unrecorded deed aforesaid. It is true that it may be deduced by calculation based on the age of the elder appellant as alleged in the bill that both of appellants were of a very tender age when the deed to them was made which bears date June 28, 1897 (so young that it may have been impossible for them to have had notice of said prior deed at that time), but that goes only to the matter of proof, if an issue had been made by the pleading sufficient to have rendered such proof admissible. Moreover, the bill does not allege when the deed to appellants was delivered, or when the consideration therefor was paid, if actually paid, or that it was in fact paid for their benefit.

[6] So far as is disclosed by the allegations of the bill in the cause before us, the appellants may have been of sufficient age to have known, and they may have in fact known, of the prior purchase by their mother before any purchase money was paid by or for them for the land and before the deed to them was delivered, or it may have been that no purchase money for the land was ever paid by or for them. It may have been that their grantors supposed that they could disregard the prior deed they had made to Elam because such deed had been lost or destroyed and had not been recorded, and they may have mistakenly supposed that the purchase from Elam by the mother of appellants was for appellants' benefit, and have, without authority from the mother, undertaken to convey the land to appellants in disregard of the prior deed to Elam. The bill in said original suit rather indicates that the latter may have been the true state of the case, as it alleges that "said Nellie Meade and husband, without authority," attempted to convey the land to appellants and their said elder brother. The facts touching this subject have not been alleged in the pleadings in the original suit or in the bill of appellants. When parties, whether infants or adults, seek the aid of courts to enforce their rights, it is essential that they should allege the facts disclosing what those rights are. Neither the court below nor can this court base its decree on facts not alleged or put in issue by the pleadings, nor safely grant relief, except upon issues both made by the pleadings and sustained by the evidence in the cause.

It is plain, therefore, that there is no error in the decree under review and it will be

Affirmed.

KELLY, J., absent.

(125 Va. 723)

FREY'S EX'RS v. TILLET.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Sept. 17, 1919.)1. ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS
⌘323—RIGHT OF CREDITOR OF SECOND CLASS ON RELINQUISHMENT BY CREDITOR OF FIRST CLASS.

If property conveyed to a creditor of the first class by the debtor's trustee for creditors was in good faith applied to debts of the first class, the estate of a creditor of the second class has no right to complain, though after the application was made the creditor of the first class relinquished part or all of his interest to the debtor's wife.

2. ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS
⌘161—NECESSITY CLEARLY TO CHARGE AND PROVE FRAUD.

Though the evidence may point strongly to fraud, unless the fraud complained of is clearly charged in the pleadings and clearly established by proof, it cannot be made the basis of a decree for relief.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⌘437
(1)—LACHES IN SUIT BY EXECUTORS OF CREDITOR AGAINST GUARDIAN OF DEBTOR'S CHILDREN.

Executors of a preferred creditor of the second class, of a debtor who assigned to a trustee for creditors, held barred by their own laches and the laches of their decedent from collecting from funds in the hands of the guardian of the children of the debtor the balance due on the debt.

Appeal from Corporation Court of Roanoke.

Suit by Frey's executors against one Tillet, as guardian. From a decree dismissing the bill, complainants appeal. Affirmed.

Jas. D. Johnston and Johnston & Izard, all of Roanoke, for appellants.

Dillard & Dillard, of Bluefield, W. Va., for appellee.

KELLY, J. In the year of 1894 Owen Duggan, a liquor dealer, became involved in debt and executed a deed of assignment conveying all of his real estate and personal property to Edward Lyle, trustee, for the benefit of his creditors. In this deed he placed in the first preferred class only two debts, one to James A. Martin for about $1,800, and the other to Louis Obermeyer for about $8,000. The second preferred class embraced a number of smaller debts aggregating about $2,800, the largest of which was the debt of Otto Frey, for about $800. The other debts provided for in the deed of assignment are immaterial to this controversy.

In 1897 Lyle, trustee, acting under the deed of assignment, sold and conveyed the real estate held by him thereunder to Obermeyer for a recited consideration of $9,500 in cash, and in 1899 Obermeyer conveyed the greater part of the real estate thus acquired by him to M. A. Duggan, the wife of Owen Duggan, for a total consideration of $8,000, $2,081.70 cash, and the balance in two equal installments, of $2,959.15 each, represented by negotiable notes to the order of Obermeyer, payable in one and two years, and secured by vendor's lien. These notes were assigned by Obermeyer to Lyle, trustee, without recourse and without consideration. The purpose of this assignment is not satisfactorily explained by any evidence in the case. The subsequent disposition of them by Lyle, trustee, would seem to indicate that Obermeyer, as a gratuity to Mrs. Duggan, accepted in full settlement of his debt the cash payment she made to him and such of the Owen Duggan real estate as he did not convey to her, and donated to her his interest in the notes, subject to the rights of Martin, the other creditor of the first class, a due proportion of whose debt was afterwards paid from the proceeds. At any rate, Mrs. Duggan, who seems to have taken over and acquired a license to continue her husband's business, became indebted to the Virginia Brewing Company in the sum of $1,200, and Lyle, trustee, transferred the Obermeyer notes to that company as collateral security. Mrs. Duggan died in 1900, owing the brewing company a balance of about $500 and having paid nothing on the two Obermeyer notes. Thereupon the brewing company, through its attorney, Edward Lyle (who was also the trustee aforesaid), brought a suit in equity, making Mrs. Duggan's administrator and her two infant children, Charles and Margaret, and the trustee, defendants, for the purpose of enforcing the vendor's lien which secured the notes held by it as collateral. The bill in that suit contained the following allegation:

"Your orator [Virginia Brewing Company] further shows unto your honor that the said notes referred to are held for the security of a debt due your orator in the sum of $—, with interest, etc., and that residue of the said notes is payable to Edward Lyle, trustee, by whom they were delivered to your orator as collateral security for the above debt, and that your orator is informed that the said trustee has an equity in the residue of said notes after the payment of the above amount due your orator, to secure certain beneficiaries of his trust, the details of which is not sufficiently informed to incorporate into his bill."

About this time the American Credit Indemnity Company filed a general creditors' bill against the administrator of Mrs. Duggan and others, and this cause was brought on to be heard with the vendor's lien suit of the Virginia Brewing Company. In these causes a commissioner, appointed to report upon sundry questions, incorporated in his report the following note:

"It appearing from the statement of Obermeyer that he has been satisfied in full, and he having transferred the notes indorsed without recourse on him to Edw. Lyle, trustee, as collateral to secure his commission for making the sale under the trust deed from Duggan to Lyle, trustee, and the amount due Mrs. ——— Martin under the sale, Obermeyer having paid no cash thereunder, but taking credit for the amount of his debt secured in said deed of trust, which amount due Mrs. Martin is admitted to be $1,200, and to be prorated with other debts of the said Mrs. Duggan."

The only deposition of Obermeyer taken in these causes, so far as the record before us shows, does not cover all the facts stated in the note above quoted. His deposition was very brief, however, and there was no cross-examination. The deposition is not inconsistent with the commissioner's note, and the commissioner may not and perhaps did not base his report solely upon the information therein contained. As a matter of fact the proceeds of the note appear to have been actually applied, so far as Lyle, trustee, was concerned, substantially in conformity with the report of the commissioner in respect thereto.

Pursuant to a decree rendered in the two causes above mentioned, the real estate conveyed by Obermeyer to Mrs. Duggan was sold, and after paying certain delinquent taxes, funeral expenses, and other obligations of her estate, and certain commissions to Lyle, trustee, and a pro rata payment upon the Martin debt, there remained a balance of $2,883.62, which, pursuant to a decree of November 12, 1903, was paid to T. R. Tillett, guardian of Charles and Margaret Duggan.

In March, 1906, the causes aforesaid still pending on the docket, Otto Frey was permitted to file his petition, in which he alleged that when Obermeyer bought the Duggan property there was an agreement between him and Frey to give the latter a lien thereon for his debt, that Obermeyer disregarded this agreement, that Mrs. Duggan had full knowledge of the agreement, and that the conveyance from Obermeyer to Duggan was without consideration, fraudulent and void. No evidence of any such agreement appears in the record. The order allowing this petition to be filed directed Tillett, guardian, to retain the funds then in his hands until the further order of the court.

Shortly after Frey's petition was filed, Charles Duggan attained his majority, and by his authority the guardian paid over to the attorney for Frey the sum of $600, which discharged in full one-half of the principal and accrued interest on the Frey debt. No other steps or action seem to have been taken on this petition from the time it was filed in March, 1906, until April 24, 1915, when, on motion of the defendants thereto, it was dismissed on the ground that the decree of November 13, 1903 (directing the fund to be paid to Tillett, guardian), was a final decree, and the petition came too late.

In June, 1915, shortly after the petition was dismissed, the present suit was brought by the executors of Otto Frey, the purpose of which was to collect from the funds in the hands of Tillett, guardian, the balance of the debt due from Owen Duggan to Otto Frey. The bill made no allusion to any such agreement between Obermeyer and Frey as was alleged in the above-recited litigation, and made no attack on the deed from Obermeyer to Duggan, but charged Lyle with a breach of trust in transferring the notes to the Virginia Brewing Company and in his subsequent course of dealing with regard thereto, and sought to recover the balance of the Frey debt by treating the funds in the hands of Tillett, guardian, as a trust fund for the benefit of the Duggan creditors.

The lower court, on final hearing, being of opinion that the complainant had failed to establish his claim as set out in the bill, and further that the claim was barred by the statute of limitations, entered a decree dismissing the bill. From that decree this appeal was allowed.

The case on both sides has been very fully and ably argued before us, orally and in briefs. The argument took a wide range and dealt with a number of interesting questions. We are of opinion, however, that the decree complained of was right, for reasons which may very briefly be stated.

[1, 2] 1. The complainants manifestly cannot maintain their contention, and secure the relief which they seek, unless they are entitled to have the court treat the deed of trust from Owen Duggan to Lyle, trustee, and the indebtedness therein secured to Obermeyer as fraudulent and fictitious. In other words, if there was an indebtedness of over $9,500 from Duggan to creditors of the first class, and the property conveyed in the Lyle deed of trust was in good faith applied to those debts, then Otto Frey's estate has no right to complain, even though after the application was made Obermeyer should have seen fit to relinquish any part or all of his interest to Mrs. Duggan. There is no allegation in the bill, and no proof, of any fraud on the part of Owen Duggan in the execution of the deed of trust, or of anything fictitious in the first preferred debts mentioned therein. It is argued, and with some reason, that the transaction as it appears in the record before us is a very suspicious one; but it is a familiar rule that, although evidence may point strongly to fraud, unless the fraud complained of is clearly charged in the pleadings and clearly established by proof, it cannot be made the basis of a decree for relief. Fleenor v. Hensley, 121 Va. 367, 93 S. E. 582.

[3] 2. It is apparent from the petition filed by Otto Frey in his lifetime and by the allegations of the bill filed by his executors that he himself was fully apprised of the transfer of the property from Obermeyer to Mrs. Duggan and the assignment of the notes by Lyle to the Virginia Brewing Company. He made no attack on these transactions until 1906, when he filed his petition. Within a few months thereafter he collected one-half of his debt from one of the children of Mrs. Duggan. As appears from what has already been said, it would seem highly probable that, if young Charles Duggan had seen fit to resist the demand made upon him, the petitioner, Frey, being a creditor in the second class, would have been unable to show that he was in any way interested in the funds in the hands of the guardian. As a matter of fact, both Charles Duggan and his sister make that exact claim in their answer to the bill in this case. However this may be, nothing further was done from 1906 until 1915, and we think it clear under this state of facts that the complainants are barred from recovery by their laches and the laches of their decedent, Otto Frey. Owen Duggan, Martha Duggan, and L. Obermeyer are dead, and the record indicates that Lyle, trustee, himself has disappeared, or that his whereabouts are unknown. It is true that Obermeyer's deposition was taken in the litigation which we have recited, but that deposition was not taken with reference to any attack upon bona fides of the Obermeyer deed, nor any attack upon the transactions of the trustees. The deposition was very meager and the witness was not cross-examined.

Upon the record before us, we are unable to say that the complainants are entitled to any relief, and the decree of the lower court must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

(125 Va. 648)

COVER v. WIDENER et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

HABEAS CORPUS §—99(4)—GRANDMOTHER ENTITLED TO CUSTODY OF CHILD AS AGAINST FATHER.

Maternal grandmother of 13 year old girl held, in habeas corpus proceedings, entitled to her custody as against her father, awarded access merely, who had deserted his wife, the child's mother, during the child's infancy, and never thereafter supported them, but had left such obligation to be met by the grandmother; his intention being to place the girl with his sister.

Error to Circuit Court, Washington County.

Habeas corpus by Edward L. Cover against Mrs. Davis Widener and others. To review an order dividing the custody of the child involved between the respective parties, Cover brings error. Order affirmed.

Oglesby & Burks, of Roanoke, for plaintiff in error.

L. P. Summers, of Abingdon, for defendants in error.

SIMS, J. This is a habeas corpus proceeding involving the custody and control of the infant daughter of appellant.

The sole assignment of error is, in substance, that under the facts of the case the custody and control of the child should have been given to the father as most likely to promote the welfare and best interest of the child.

The order under review is as follows:

"This day Mildred Roberta Cover was brought before the court, in obedience to the writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum awarded on the 30th day of September, 1918, against the defendants. And the said defendants made answer that they had cared for and maintained said child for about 11 years, said child now being 12 years of age, and who had been abandoned by her father, the petitioner; and the court, having heard the evidence and arguments of counsel, is of opinion that the said cause of detention is legal and sufficient. It is therefore ordered that the custody of the said Mildred Roberta Cover shall remain in the said defendants. It is further ordered that said child shall remain with said defendants from the 1st day of September to the 1st day of June, and that the plaintiff, the petitioner, may have the child from the 1st of June to the 1st of September, respectively, until the further order of the court."

The material facts and the reasons for the decision of the court below will appear from the opinion of the learned judge of that court which is adopted as a part of this opinion and is as follows:

"Edward L. Cover, a citizen of Bristol, has filed his petition in this court, alleging that his infant daughter, Mildred Cover, is illegally detained in the custody of Davis Widener and wife.

"The record shows that more than 14 years ago, in the city of Bristol, Edward L. Cover intermarried with Miss Sally De Busk of Abingdon, Va. As a result of this union one child was born, who is the subject of this controversy. For several years Cover and wife seemed to live together very happily. It is then testified by Cover that his wife became addicted to the use of laudanum, which caused, according to his statement, an estrangement between him and his wife. Their marital differences became such that Cover sent his wife and infant daughter to her mother, Mrs. Davis Widener, who lives at Damascus, Va. From the time of this separation, according to the evidence, Cover seems to have relinquished all claims to the custody of his child, and to have forgotten all obligations resting upon him as to the support of his wife.

"During the period Mrs. Cover remained at the home of her mother, Cover did not contribute one cent to her support, nor did he even so much as write a letter to his wife, or make inquiry as to her state of health or the condition of his child. Every effort, according to letters filed in the record, was made by Mrs. Cover to ascertain the whereabouts of her husband, but without avail for a long period of time. Cover, when at work, was usually found in the employ of some tanning extract company, and it was to a number of these concerns that Mrs. Cover directed her inquiries as to his whereabouts, eventually writing to his brother, seeking information as to Cover's whereabouts, which he, the brother, was unable to give.

"Finally Cover was located in the city of Asheville, N. C., and it was there that Mrs. Cover, who took her child with her, found him. Mrs. Cover's condition while in Asheville became such that Cover notified her mother, Mrs. Widener, to come to Asheville, which she did, and Mrs. Cover was placed in a hospital, and the expense of her stay in the hospital was borne in the main by Mrs. Widener.

"When Mrs. Cover was taken to the hospital, the infant Mildred, who at the time was a few months old, was placed in the care of Mrs. Widener, with the full consent and knowledge of Cover, who brought the child to her home in Damascus, Washington county, Va.

"After remaining in the hospital for some time, Mrs. Cover went to Knoxville, in search of her husband, who had disappeared from Asheville. Being unable to find him, in a fit of despondency, as evidenced by a note written by her to her mother, the supposition is that she took an overdose of laudanum, which resulted in her death.

"Cover's whereabouts being unknown, Mrs. Widener was communicated with, and went to Knoxville, and brought back the remains of her daughter, which were buried in Washington county. The efforts of Mrs. Widener to locate Cover were unsuccessful.

"As he himself states, he did not know of the death of his wife until some 2 or 3 months thereafter. The testimony of Cover himself is that he had been unsuccessful in business, that the principal disturbance in his married life was his wife's use of opiates, that for 10 years after the death of his wife he wandered from place to place seeking employment, that during all this period of 10 years he held no communication whatever with Mrs. Widener in regard to his infant daughter, that he contributed very little, if any, to her support, and that he only saw her one time, and that was when he was walking or tramping from Mountain City, Tenn., to the coal fields of Virginia, and passed through the town of Damascus, and saw a child playing in a yard at the home, as he understood, of Mr. Widener, and he supposed that it was his child.

"He did not stop to make inquiry, nor to linger long enough to speak to his child, but passed on through the town of Damascus.

"No evidence was introduced as to his financial or moral standing, except the testimony of petitioner himself. In answer to a question propounded by counsel for Mrs. Widener, Cover stated that he had been guilty of about the entire category of crimes; that his life in the past had not been what it should have been, but for the past 2 years he had reformed from his evil way, and was in the employment of the Dixie Tannery Company at a salary of $112 per month; that he lived in a boarding house; that he had no relatives in this section of the state; that during the summer of 1917, since he had rehabilitated himself in business, as he states, he began to take an interest in his child Mildred; that he visited the home of Mrs. Widener, who received him cordially and affectionately; that he gave his child money and clothing to the amount of about $50; that with the consent of Mrs. Widener he took his daughter on a visit to his sister, Mrs. John L. Cover, of Elkton, Va., where she remained during the summer months.

"That it is not his intention to look after the rearing and training to his child himself, but that, if awarded the custody of his child, Mildred, that it is his intention to place her in the home of his sister, Mrs. John L. Cover, of Elkton, who as he states is the wife of a very wealthy extract manufacturer of Rockingham county.

"That his sister, Mrs. Cover, is a woman of mature years, is the mother of four boys, all grown; two are married and have children of their own. The reason assigned by Cover for desiring the custody of his child is to take her away from her grandmother, as he does not deem the social position of Mrs. Widener conducive to the best interest of his child. No charge is made by Cover that Mrs. Widener is not a proper and fit person to have the care and custody of the child Mildred, except that, as he alleges, she is unable to properly educate the child, and that Mrs. Widener is not capable of properly rearing his daughter to be an ornament to the society in which he would see her placed.

"The only evidence of the willingness of Mrs. John L. Cover to take the child Mildred and educate and care for her are several letters, filed in the record by Cover.

"On the other hand, Mrs. Widener testifies that from the time the child Mildred was placed in her hands in Asheville, N. C., that she has given it her constant care and attention; that she is 67 years of age, in a fair state of health; that she resides with her husband, Mr. Davis Widener, in the town of Damascus, and that while she is not a woman of wealth, or, as she expresses it, 'a society woman,' she is fully able, with the help of her husband's son, who is devoted both to her and the child, to amply provide for the child so long as she (Mrs. Widener) may live; that she has always permitted the father of the child to visit it whenever he saw fit; that it is her earnest desire that the relation between father and child may be as close and affectionate as possible; that she has no desire to deprive the father of any pleasure he may derive from associating with his child, and that she is willing for the child to visit him at all convenient times and is more than willing that Mr. Cover, after a neglect of 10 years, may have an opportunity of furnishing the child with means with which to clothe and educate it; that all she shall ask of him is to let the child remain with her a few years longer, and then she is willing to relinquish any claim she may have upon it.

"That the child has been given all Christian instruction of which she is capable; that it is a constant attendant upon the Methodist Sunday school and church, and that since it became of school age it has been a pupil of the Damascus high school, which is one of the very best in the state, employing 10 teachers, and, that the child is successfully progressing from the school grades, until now it is in the fifth grade, the highest grade permissible, according to her age.

"That the child's associates are the children of Henry Diggs.

"Mrs. Widener further testifies that she is the daughter of Daniel Musser, of Abingdon, Va., and the sister of Wm. H. Musser; that her first husband was Isaac De Busk, of Washington county, and that her second husband, to whom she has been married for 20 years or more, is Davis Widener; that there are no children as a result of this union. It was agreed by counsel, inasmuch as the court was personally acquainted with the father and husband of Mrs. Widener, that no evidence would be introduced as to their moral, religious, and financial standing. This being conceded to be good, Mrs. Widener further stated that she had reared three sets of children; that her mother died leaving a house full of young children, and that upon her, as the elder daughter, fell the responsibility of their rearing; that by her former husband, Isaac De Busk, she was the mother of three children; that since her marriage to Mr. Widener, who was a widower with several children, upon her had fallen the responsibility of the care and rearing of his children; that she had been a consistent member of the Methodist Church for 50 years, and that, while she was unable to leave as a heritage, either to her own children now living or to the grandchild Mildred, worldly goods of any large amount, yet she had the consolation of knowing that of those who had been intrusted to her care not a single one had ever gone astray.

"The child Mildred, who is now in her thirteenth year, testifies that her grandmother, to whom she is devoted, has given her every care and attention possible; that until last summer she had never seen her father, nor did she know that she had a father; that she sleeps in the room with her grandmother, and that, while she desires to know her father better and to love him more, she does not wish to leave her grandmother and to live with her aunt, whom she only met twice in her life; that she was treated kindly by her aunt when she visited her last summer, and that she wishes to become better acquainted with her father's people, but that she cannot bear the idea of being separated from her grandmother, who has been to her, up to this time, the only father or mother she has ever known.

"I have been somewhat tedious, perhaps, in trying to detail the evidence, in order to present the situation exactly as I see it is.

"As I understand the rule of law laid down by our Supreme Court, that in controversies over the custody of children, while our law fully recognizes the primary right of the father to the custody of the child, the court will exercise its discretion according to the facts and what appears to be best calculated to promote the infant's welfare, having due regard to the legal rights of the party claiming the custody. Coffee v. Black, 82 Va. 567; Parrish v. Parrish, 116 Va. 476, 82 S. E. 119, L. R. A. 1915A, 576.

"As has been repeatedly stated by the courts, there is no duty which a court has to perform more difficult than that which confronts a court when it comes to the disposition of a child in a habeas corpus proceeding.

"I have given a careful consideration to the evidence in this case, and I cannot resist the conclusion that, however strong the naked legal right of the parent, Edward L. Cover, to the custody of his child may be, the best interest of the child at the present time demands that he be denied the custody thereof.

"Inasmuch as to the court was left the consideration of the standing and character of Mrs. Widener, I deem it but proper to state that the state of facts shows that for womanly virtue, Christian character, and motherly devotion Mrs. Widener is without a superior, in my opinion. Her father, Daniel M. Musser, was one of the most esteemed citizens the town of Abingdon has ever produced, a man who had lived to the ripe old age of 70-odd years, was a consistent member of the Methodist Church for 60 years, against whom, so far as the agreed facts show and so far as I know of my own knowledge, naught of evil was ever spoken. He was a successful contractor and builder, and there are many evidences of his constructive work in the town of Abingdon, which bear testimony to the fact that he was a laborer who wrought well and honestly. Though he was the architect and builder of the majority of homes and buildings in the town, the court records fail to disclose any evidence of any litigation whatsoever in regard to his many contracts. The brother of Mrs. Widener, W. H. Musser, has followed closely in the footsteps of his father. So firmly has his reputation for honesty been established that in business dealings with his fellow men it is seldom that a bond is required, conditioned upon the faithful performance of his contract.

"As an evidence of what I mean, but recently the board of supervisors of Washington county has awarded him the contract to remodel and repair the county courthouse, calling for an expenditure of several thousands of dollars, and this without requiring him to execute bond for its performance.

"For 100 years or more the ancestors of Mrs. Widener have lived and dwelt in the county of Washington, and not once has there ever been a charge against any male member of the family of a violation of the laws of the land, nor against any female member of the family for any departure from the strict paths of morality.

"As stated by Mrs. Widener, she does not belong to the set known as the society set, but the heritage which she will leave to those who come after her, that 'no one who has ever been intrusted to her care has ever gone astray,' is a heritage any one should be proud to leave behind. Petitioner, Cover, states that he wished to place his child in a different environment. The evidence shows that the child's associates are the children of Henry Diggs. Those who are acquainted with the Diggsses, Grays, and Bakers, who are the pioneer families of Washington county, could not desire more suitable companions for their children than the members of this most distinguished family.

"It is not contended by the petitioner that he personally is in a position to administer to the wants of his adolescent daughter, nor is it contended that, if the court would give him the custody of his child, his sister, Mrs. Cover, would make this child her daughter or the beneficiary of her means.

"All that he contends for is that the court take this child out of a home of comfort, refinement, and Christianity and place it in a home of luxury.

"That it be placed in a situation by which it will acquire luxurious habits, without the prospect of a father, who is past the meridian of life, and who now earns only $112 a month, in a subordinate position, ever being able to minister to the luxurious habits acquired by the child.

"As stated by Judge Keith, in delivering the opinion in the case of Stringfellow v. Somerville, 95 Va. 701, 29 S. E. 685, 40 L. R. A. 623: 'The question is not which of the two claimants can surround the infant with greater luxury, or which of the two will be able to give or bequeath him the greater amount of money or property, but with which of them is he likely to be reared and trained so as to make him the better man and the better citizen.'

"Mr. Cover seems fully resolved as far as he is able to atone for the long neglect of his flesh and blood and to be willing to look after the comfort and welfare of his child. His statement that he had been guilty of every crime in the category of crimes conveys to my mind the impression, not that he is a criminal, but that he had been in the past a man of dissipated habits, moral and otherwise, and that now he is seeking to rehabilitate himself in the estimation of society in general. And while the court according to its best judgment is constrained to deprive him of the legal custody of his child, an order will be entered, giving to him the freest access possible, in order, as the child stated, that she may become better acquainted with her father, to whom she is growing firmly attached. I think that during the school months, beginning with September and ending with June of each year, the child should remain with its grandmother, and that during the remainder of the year it should remain with its father, and that he should have the right to take the child upon visits to the members of his own family. It is his, and the best interest of the child, in my opinion, require that it should have some associations with the members of its father's family. The court, instead of dismissing the proceedings, will retain same upon docket for any future disposition that the welfare of the child may require."

The features of the case and the considerations adverted to in the opinion above quoted, which seems to us especially controlling in favor of the correctness of the decision of the court below, are the following: That the father is not in a position to administer to the wants of the daughter, or to himself provide for or to assure a provision for her in the future of a home with any better associations or advantages than those of the present home of the child, if as good. That "it is not contended that, if the court would give him the custody of his child, his sister, Mrs. Cover, would make this child her daughter or the beneficiary of her means." And, indeed, the record does not show that Mrs. Cover has any wealth of her own. That the court is asked to take the child from her present home "of comfort, refinement, and Christianity, and place it in a home of luxury. That it be placed in a situation" (which so far as the record discloses may be but temporary) "by which it will acquire luxurious habits, without the prospect of the father * * * ever being able to minister to the luxurious habits acquired by the child." And while it is true that the record shows that Mrs. Cover, from the bounty of her husband, may give the child better educational and social advantages than it now enjoys, which are not to be undervalued, such advantages are not always unmixed blessings; for, if they are to be but temporary surroundings, they might and would most likely prove to be adverse, instead of beneficial, in influence upon the future character, happiness, and welfare of the child. Hence, in view of the present showing of the record as to the probable future position in life of the child, we are of opinion that the court below acted wisely and rightly in the premises.

As to the future: The suit still remains upon the docket of the court below, and should Mrs. Cover be willing, or the father demonstrate his ability, to make such provision for the child that the latter may be assured both of better educational advantages and of adequate means during the coming years to minister to the tastes and habits which would be the normal result of the changed environment, the court may make such future orders in the cause as may best subserve the welfare and best interest of the child.

The order under review will therefore be affirmed.

KELLY, J., absent.

(125 Va. 638)

DAVIS et al. v. BOSTIC et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

EJECTMENT ⇐13—EQUITABLE TITLE INSUFFICIENT TO MAINTAIN ACTION.

In ejectment to recover the coal under certain land, it appearing that plaintiffs claimed under a deed given when common grantors had no title, that eight years after such deed such grantors acquired legal title and thereupon conveyed to defendants' grantor by general warranty deed, reciting, after description of the land in question, "on this survey a coal bank, timber room and some privileges was sold to" plaintiffs, but no title paper was introduced effecting a severance of the surface from the underlying coal or investing plaintiffs with legal title thereto, plaintiffs could not recover; for plaintiffs' title must be a legal title.

Error to Circuit Court, Russell County.

Ejectment by Davis and others against Bostic and others. To review judgment for defendants, plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Finney & Wilson, of Lebanon, for plaintiffs in error.

W. W. Bird, of Lebanon, and A. G. Lively and A. T. Griffith, both of Honaker, for defendants in error.

WHITTLE, P. Plaintiffs in error brought ejectment against defendants in error to recover the coal under 59 acres of land in Russell county. There was a verdict and judgment for defendants, to which judgment this writ of error was awarded.

The plaintiffs claim title to the coal in controversy under a deed from Meshack Vencill and wife to Thomas J. Davis and William R. Davis, dated June 10, 1880. At that time neither of the grantors had the legal title to the land, and the record does not disclose that they or either of them owned the equitable title or had any claim thereto. On February 22, 1888, nearly eight years after the date of the first-named deed, Meshack Vencill acquired the legal title to the land by deed from George Warder; and on the same day Vencill and wife conveyed the land to James B. Call, by deed with covenants of general warranty. In this deed, following the description of the 59 acres thereby conveyed, this language occurs:

"On this survey a coal bank, timber room and some privileges was sold to Thomas J. Davis and Wm. R. Davis, all of which is understood by the parties."

By deed of October 7, 1895, James B. Call conveyed the land with general warranty to Electra C. Call, his wife; the deed making no reference to any coal or other privileges sold to the Davises. And by deed of July 13, 1907, Electra C. Call and her husband conveyed the same land with special warranty to defendants in error, who are the defendants in the action of ejectment. The defendants purchased the land two years prior to receiving a conveyance under a title bond, and have had continuous and exclusive adverse possession of the land under actual inclosure hitherto.

In Burks' PL. & Pr. pp. 195, 196, the general rule that in ejectment the basis of plaintiff's right to recover depends upon his own legal title is stated as follows:

"Generally, a plaintiff in ejectment must recover solely on the strength of his own title, and not on the weakness of that of his adversary, and this title of the plaintiff must be a legal title. * * * There can be no recovery except in special instances (none of which are present in this case), unless the evidence shows that at the time the action was brought the plaintiff was the owner of the legal title."

This fundamental principle is too well settled to call for the citation of additional authority to sustain or illustrate it.

No title paper has been introduced which operates a severance of the surface from the underlying coal or invests the plaintiffs with the legal title thereto. In these circumstances, it is unnecessary to notice in detail the assignments of error, since in no view of the case are the plaintiffs entitled to recover.

The judgment of the circuit court is plainly right and must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

KELLY, J., absent.

(125 Va. 586)

BLANCHARD v. DOMINION NAT. BANK.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Sept. 17, 1919.)1. EQUITY ⇐207—EFFECT OF GENERAL REPLICATION.

General replication cannot have the effect of denying a statement of the answer, which was merely a concurrence in admissions of the bill.

2. MORTGAGES ⇐338—BURDEN OF PROOF IN SUIT TO ENJOIN SALE.

Bill in suit to enjoin sale under deed of trust to secure a debt evidenced by notes and any renewal thereof, not charging that the original debt had been paid, but simply that the original notes had been discharged, statement of the answer that the notes now held by defendant were renewals of the originals is not an affirmative allegation, which defendant must prove.

3. MORTGAGES ⇐338—IN SUIT TO ENJOIN SALE, RENEWAL NOTES PART OF DEBT SECURED.

Bill to enjoin sale under deed of trust to secure a debt evidenced by notes and renewals thereof, admitting that notes of a later date were part of the debt secured, no evidence to show they were renewals was necessary; production of the original notes and checks for the amount thereof, stamped "paid," not being inconsistent with the claim and admission that the later notes were part of the debt secured.

4. EQUITY  $\Leftrightarrow$  316—WAIVING IN BILL ANSWER UNDER OATH.

Where it is desired to waive an answer under oath, it is better form for the bill to simply pray that the desired parties "be made defendants to this bill, and, waiving an answer under oath, that," etc.

5. MORTGAGES  $\Leftrightarrow$  338—DECREE FOR DEFENDANT IN SUIT TO ENJOIN SALE, REFERRING IT FOR ACCOUNTING, SUFFICIENT.

The decree for defendant, in suit to enjoin sale under deed of trust, not finally disposing of the case, but referring it to a commissioner to take accounts, is not objectionable because failing to state from what time the amounts due shall bear interest.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Washington County.

Suit by F. T. Blanchard against the Dominion National Bank. From an adverse decree, complainant appeals. Affirmed.

Hutton & Hutton, of Abingdon, and A. H. Blanchard, of Bristol, for appellant.

Peters & Lavinder, of Bristol, for appellee.

BURKS, J. The object of this suit was to enjoin the sale of certain real estate under a deed of trust executed December 31, 1912, by the appellant, to secure a loan made to the F. T. Blanchard Company. The deed was made to secure a debt of $9,500, evidenced by bonds of the company, indorsed by F. T. Blanchard and W. T. Neeley, and any renewal or renewals of said bonds, or any part thereof. One of these bonds was for $2,000, payable at 60 days after date, and the other for $7,500, payable 4 months after date, each with 6 per cent. interest. The deed also provided that, when this debt was reduced to $7,500 or less, certain designated portions of the real estate conveyed should be released. This release was made on October 13, 1913. Afterwards the trustee, at the request of the bank, advertised the residue of the property for sale on November 24, 1914. Thereupon an injunction was obtained from the circuit court of Washington county to enjoin the sale. The grounds upon which the injunction was prayed for and granted were: That the debt was a debt of the company, upon which Neeley was the first indorser, and the appellant second indorser; that he was a mere surety for the debt; that he had taken active steps to induce the bank to collect the debt out of Neeley, who was bound as first indorser, and he was then amply solvent and about to remove his effects to a distant state, but that he was unable to induce the bank to take any steps against Neeley, and as a result of its failure to take the necessary steps all recourse against Neeley had been lost; that he had given the bank written notice to sue Neeley, which it had not done, and that therefore the appellant was released; that the amount due on appellee's debt had not been ascertained and there should be no sale of the property until the amount of the debt had been ascertained; that the notice for the sale by the trustee was, for several reasons, insufficient; that there were outstanding assets of the company in controversy, and, if the controversy were decided in favor of the company, it would have ample assets with which to pay its debts; that it would be inequitable and unjust to sell the property under the deed of trust until all remedies against the principal debtor had been exhausted; and that there was a prior deed of trust on the property, the amount of which should be ascertained before the property was sold. The bill makes no suggestion that the debt secured by the deed of trust has been paid. It admits the power and duty of W. T. Neeley, the secretary and treasurer of the company, "to handle the finances and books of the company," and nowhere in any of the subsequent pleadings is this power denied, or is any suggestion made that the company does not owe the debts for which he issued its notes. The bill sets forth the making on April 30, 1913, of the notes of the company by Neeley, as secretary and treasurer, now held by the appellee, and their indorsement by Neeley as first indorser and by the appellant as second indorser, and alleges that they are subject to certain enumerated credits leaving due thereon $4,584 of principal upon which there is interest due. The bill then admits that—

"The trust deed is a collateral security simply for the payment of any balance on said notes that is not liquidated by the F. T. Blanchard Company or W. T. Neeley as first indorser of said notes."

The answer of the appellee to this bill states that the bill of complaint correctly describes the amounts of the notes making up the said $9,500; that the sum was secured by a deed of trust upon the storehouse of the said F. T. Blanchard; and that—"It is further true that the amounts have been paid which are referred to in said bill of complaint, and that the balance unpaid on the said deed of trust is correctly stated."

The answer denies that the bank was under any obligation to go out of the state into the state of Tennessee to pursue remedies against Neeley, who was a resident of Tennessee, and not of the state of Virginia, and further denies that there was any uncertainty as to the amount of its debt, or of the prior deed of trust on the property. No replication was filed to this answer at the time the answer was filed. A special replication was made a part of the amended and supplemental bill hereinafter referred to. This replication will be referred to later.

At the February term, 1917, the appellant filed an amended and supplemental bill. This bill sets out more in detail than the original bill the efforts of the appellant to get the bank to collect the notes or bonds of Neeley and its refusal to do so, and indirectly charges collusion between the bank and Neeley. It alleges, for the first time, payment of the notes secured, and produces the checks of the company, and the original bonds to show their payment, but it is significant that it does not allege that the debt secured had been paid. It further charges that the position of the indorsers had been changed since the original bonds were given, whereby Neeley had become the first indorser and the appellant second indorser, and alleged the release of the appellant by reason of the bank's failure to make the money out of Neeley unless it could be shown that Neeley was insolvent. It also makes a special replication to the defendant's answer to the original bill in these words:

"That all of the averments of defendant's answer which are not heretofore referred to in this amended and supplemental bill are here denied and issue is taken upon the same as fully and completely as if a general replication had been filed to said answer."

The prayer of this bill, among other things, is that the original bill be treated as a part of this amended and supplemental bill as fully as if said original bill were here copied into this bill. There is a further prayer that the defendant be required to answer each and every allegation of said amended and supplemental bill, and that it answer all of said allegations fully and truthfully, but not on oath.

[1-3] The complainant does not profess to have discovered any new evidence since the filing of his original bill, and in fact assigns no reason or necessity for filing it. If the debt of the appellee had been paid, the appellant knew it as well when the original bill was filed as when he filed his amended and supplemental bill, and yet no reference is made in the original bill to any such payment. It is a significant fact that nowhere in the pleadings does the appellant charge that the debt of the appellee has been paid. The deed which he executed secured the debt and not merely the evidence of it. It not only secured the debt, but all renewals thereof, in whole or in part, and it remained a security for the debt until it was paid, unless there was some novation of the debt, which is not claimed. The defendant, in answer to this bill, says that the notes were not paid—

"except those particular notes might have been paid as stated, but notes in their stead were given, which is frequently the custom of the bank where notes are not paid, but only renewed."

And further:

"This defendant insists that the notes now held by it are not paid, and are covered by the deed of trust in question, and are a charge upon the storehouse and lot."

There was a general replication to this answer. Inasmuch as the appellant had, in his original bill, admitted that the trust deed was a security for the notes dated April 30, 1913, and that the balance due thereon was $4,458, and the defendant, in its answer to that bill, had stated that complainant had correctly set forth the notes held by it and the balance due thereon, the replication made to this answer cannot have the effect of denying this statement of the answer, which was simply a concurrence in the admissions of the bill. There is nothing in the answer to the amended bill which is in any wise in conflict with this statement in the answer to the original bill. Indeed, in the latter answer it is said:

"This defendant now says that there is owing to it by the said complainant the sum of $4,584, which bears interest from the — day of —, 19—; that the same is just, due, and unpaid; and that it is secured by the said deed of trust involved in this suit."

In view of the fact that the appellant makes no charge in either of his bills that the original debt has been paid, but simply that the original notes have been discharged, the statement of the answer to the amended bill that the notes now held by the bank were renewals of the original notes cannot be taken as an affirmative allegation which the defendant was bound to prove. The deed secured the original debt, and was a continuing security for the debt and every part thereof until it was paid. If the appellant relied upon its payment, it was incumbent upon him to allege and prove such payment, as that is an affirmative defense. But, as already pointed out, the appellant does not anywhere in his pleadings allege the payment of the debt, but, on the contrary, admits in his original bill that the notes dated April 30, 1913, are a part of the debt secured by the deed of trust, and correctly states the balance due thereon. Furthermore, the amended bill prays specifically that the original bill be treated as a part thereof as fully as if it were copied into the amended bill. Under these circumstances, the production of the original bonds secured and of checks for the amount thereof, stamped "paid," dated about the time said bonds fall due, is entirely consistent with the claim of the appellee and the admissions of the appellant that the notes dated April 30, 1913, which are the notes now held by the appellee, are a part of the debt secured by the deed of trust, and no further evidence was needed to show that said notes were renewals of the original bonds secured. An allegation that the original debt had been paid was as necessary as the proof thereof, but there was no such allegation, and even if there had been the proof offered was insufficient, in view of the appellant's admission in his pleadings. Sundry payments were made to the appellee on the notes dated April 30, 1913, by the F. T. Blanchard Company after that date. There was no oral testimony in the case, and the indorsement of credits on the notes does not show by whom the payments were made, but they do show in each instance what per cent. of the principal of the note was paid each time. The aggregate of these is 52 per cent., which is exactly the amount which the pleadings show was paid from the assets of the F. T. Blanchard Company.

The other questions involved in this cause were abandoned, as will appear from the following statement in the reply brief for the appellant:

"It is contended on the part of the appellant that the notes secured in the deed of trust of date December 21, 1912, are paid, and the appellees contend that they are not paid, and the only question to be decided is whether they are or are not paid."

The real controversy in the case is whether the debt secured has been paid. We are of opinion that such payment has not been shown.

[4] As to the effect of calling for answers to specific interrogatories or allegations, and then waiving oath thereto, see Johnson v. Mundy, 123 Va. 730, 97 S. E. 564. If it is desired to waive an answer under oath, we would suggest that, instead of the form in common use, the bill should simply pray that the desired parties "be made defendants to this bill, and, waiving an answer under oath, that," etc.

[5] Objection is made to the decree appealed from on the ground that it is uncertain, because it fails to state from what time the amounts due the bank should bear interest. The decree did not finally dispose of the case, but referred it to a commissioner to take certain accounts, which would of necessity disclose, not only the amount of the bank's claims, but the time from which it bore interest. This decree properly ordered accounts of liens and their priority, before directing a sale under the trust deed.

The other assignments of error have been sufficiently disposed of in what has already been said. We find no error in the decree of the circuit court, and its decree will therefore be affirmed.

Affirmed.

KELLY, J., absent.

(125 Va. 701)

DUDLEY v. CARTER RED ASH COLLIERIES CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. PLEADING $\S$ 400—WAIVER OF REQUIREMENT THAT PLEA BE SWORN TO.

In an action of assumpsit on a contract, not to pay money, but to do a collateral thing, if it was necessary that defendant's plea should be sworn to, under Code 1904, § 3286, plaintiff had the right to waive the provision of the statute enacted for his benefit.

2. PLEADING $\S$ 87—DEFENSE TO BE MADE BY DEMURRER OR PLEA AND NOT BY MOTION TO DISMISS.

In actions at law, where no question is raised as to the validity of the process and its due execution, while the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and parties, defense can be made only by demurrer or plea, and motion cannot be made to dismiss on the ground there is no liability of defendant to plaintiff.

3. CORPORATIONS $\S$ 514(2)—MOTION TO DISMISS ON GROUND AMOUNTING TO GENERAL ISSUE ERROR.

In an action of assumpsit against a coal company for failure to deliver coal according to contract, the court erred in dismissing the action, on motion of an administrator, not a party to the action, for dismissal on the ground that defendant company was not a corporation, etc., a defense amounting to the general issue and which should have been so pleaded.

4. ASSUMPSIT, ACTION OF $\S$ 20—MATTER AMOUNTING TO GENERAL ISSUE MUST BE PLEADED.

In assumpsit, matter which amounts to the general issue of non assumpsit must be so pleaded.

5. CORPORATIONS $\S$ 517—AFFIDAVIT DENYING INCORPORATION WITH PLEA RAISING ISSUE WHERE DEFENDANT NOT INCORPORATED.

If defendant, sued in assumpsit, as a corporation, desired to contest the fact of its incorporation, and to throw on plaintiff the necessity of proving it, it was necessary, under Code 1904, § 3280, that with the plea putting the matter in issue there should have been an affidavit denying the incorporation.

6. PLEADING $\S$ 8—ON AFFIDAVIT DENYING DEFENDANT'S INCORPORATION, ACCOMPANYING PLEA NEED NOT BE WRITTEN.

In an action of assumpsit against a corporation, if the affidavit denying the fact of defendant's incorporation accompanied a plea of non assumpsit, it was not necessary that the plea should have been in writing.

7. PLEADING $\S$ 339—WITHDRAWAL OF DEFENDANT'S PLEA ON MOTION OF ONE NOT A PARTY ERROR.

In assumpsit against a coal company, the trial court erred in allowing defendant company's plea of non assumpsit to be withdrawn on the motion of an administrator not a party.

Error to Circuit Court, Tazewell County.

Action by Dudley, trading, etc., against the Carter Red Ash Collieries Company. To review judgment of dismissal, plaintiff brings error. Judgment reversed and annulled, and cause remanded with direction.

R. O. Crockett, of Tazewell, and Jas. S. Kahle, of Bluefield, W. Va., for plaintiff in error.

BURKS, J. The plaintiff brought his action of assumpsit against the defendant to recover damages for failure to deliver according to contract certain coal which he had purchased of the Domestic Coal Company. The declaration contained the general counts and two special counts. The special counts set out, in varying form, the contract between the plaintiff and the Domestic Coal Company, and averred that the latter company had, in due form, changed its name to that of the Carter Red Ash Collieries Company, and that this company had assumed and taken over all existing contracts of the said Domestic Coal Company, with all liabilities on account of the same, and especially the liabilities of said last-mentioned company to the plaintiff. The special counts then set forth with the necessary particularity the undertakings of the defendant and the breach thereof. There was no demurrer to the declaration. It averred that the defendant was a corporation, and it is not claimed that it does not state a case for recovery if the facts therein alleged were proved. There was filed with the declaration an itemized statement of the plaintiff's claim against the defendant, supported by his affidavit to its correctness.

[1] The case was regularly matured at the rules, and, at the next succeeding term of the court, the defendant appeared and pleaded non assumpsit, and issue was joined thereon and the case continued. This plea was not sworn to. This was not an action on a contract for the payment of money, but to do a collateral thing, and, if it was necessary that the plea should have been sworn to, the plaintiff waived the provision of the statute which was enacted for his benefit, as he had the right to do. Code 1904, § 3286; Price v. Marks, 103 Va. 18, 48 S. E. 499; Lewis v. Hicks, 96 Va. 91, 30 S. E. 466; Spencer's Adm'r v. Fields, 97 Va. 38, 33 S. E. 380. For discussion and citation of cases, see Burks' Pl. & Pr. § 91.

[2-6] At the next term of the court, after issue had been thus joined, Garland H. Carter, administrator of the estate of E. R. Carter, deceased, by his attorneys, moved the court that the plea of the general issue theretofore filed by the Carter Red Ash Collieries Company be withdrawn, which motion was resisted by the plaintiff, and the court allowed such plea to be withdrawn, to which ruling of the court the plaintiff excepted. Thereupon the plaintiff moved the court to require the Carter Red Ash Collieries Company to again plead, and that the writ of inquiry be executed, which motion was overruled and the plaintiff excepted. Garland R. Carter, administrator of the estate of E. E. Carter, deceased, then tendered his motion in writing supported by affidavit, to dismiss the case upon the grounds that the Carter Red Ash Collieries Company was not a corporation, stating that the name of Domestic Coal Company has never been changed, and that Carter Red Ash Collieries Company is not the new or changed name of Domestic Coal Company, to the filing of which motion the plaintiff objected, which objection was overruled. The motion was filed and the plaintiff excepted. The plaintiff then moved the court to strike out such motion, which motion was overruled and the plaintiff excepted, and all matters of law and fact were then submitted to the court for adjudication. Evidence was introduced before the court, and by its final order entered in September, 1918, the said court dismissed the case, to which ruling of the court the plaintiff excepted.

The effect of this procedure was to permit a third person, to wit, Garland R. Carter, administrator of E. E. Carter, deceased, not sued nor in any way a party to the action, to come into the action by motion and deny that the defendant was, or ever had been, a corporation; to deny that the Domestic Coal Corporation had ever changed its name, or that the defendant had ever undertaken or promised as is in the declaration alleged, and to aver that "the said promises and undertakings in the declaration mentioned, if any such were made, were made by the Domestic Coal Company, a corporation," and not by the defendant. Such a procedure is unknown to the common law or to the practice in this state. Not only did Garland R. Carter, administrator, have no right to thus inject himself into litigation of other persons, but the defendant itself could not have made such a motion. In actions at law where no question is raised as to the validity of the process and the due execution thereof, and the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, defense can only be made by demurrer or plea. A motion cannot be made to dismiss a case because there is no liability on the defendant to the plaintiff. We have no such practice. The defense sought to be set up by the motion went to the foundation of the plaintiff's right of recovery, and denied facts which the plaintiff was obliged to prove in order to maintain his action. This amounted to the general issue and hence should have been so pleaded. Baltimore &

O. R. Co. v. Polly, 14 Grat. (55 Va.) 447; Catron v. Bostic, 123 Va. 355, 96 S. E. 845. But Garland R. Carter, administrator, was not before the court, and could not tender this or any other plea in the cause, nor could he, indirectly by motion, accomplish any such result. He was not before the court, and could not be either required or allowed to plead. Even the defendant, who had been served with process and was before the court, could not have made such defense by motion, but would have been required to plead the general issue of non assumpsit, because matter which amounts to the general issue must be so pleaded. The general issue of non assumpsit on an unsealed contract is one of the broadest general issues known to our system of pleading, and it is said that anything may be shown under it except tender, bankruptcy, and the act of limitation, and that these defenses are excepted because they do not contest liability, but only that no action can be maintained therefor. Va. Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Buck, 88 Va. 517, 519, 13 S. E. 973; 4 Minor's Inst. 641.

The defendant, however, was sued as a corporation, and, if it desired to contest the fact of its incorporation and to throw upon the plaintiff the necessity of proving it, it was necessary, under section 3280 of the Code (1904), that, with the plea which put the matter in issue, there should have been an affidavit denying such incorporation. If the affidavit accompanied a plea of non assumpsit, it was not necessary that the plea should have been in writing. Moreland v. Moreland, 108 Va. 93, 60 S. E. 730. In the case at bar, an affidavit accompanied the motion, but the motion itself was unavailing.

[7] A further error was committed in allowing the plea of non assumpsit filed by the defendant to be withdrawn on the motion of Garland R. Carter, administrator of E. E. Carter. The defendant alone, in person or by its attorney, could withdraw its plea. Carter had no power over it. The result of the errors aforesaid was to try an issue between the plaintiff and a third person whom he had not sued, and who was not a party to the suit. A recognition of the validity of such a proceeding would destroy the orderly conduct of judicial proceedings and seriously jeopardize the rights of litigants. The judgment of the circuit court will therefore be reversed and annulled, and the cause remanded to that court with directions to set aside all orders and proceedings in the cause subsequent to its order of December 12, 1917, and to proceed to the trial of the case upon the pleadings as they then stood and such additions thereto as may seem to the court proper to attain the ends of justice between the parties litigant.

Reversed.

(125 Va. 626)

CLARK et al. v. REYNOLDS.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. TRIAL  $\S$ 105(2) — HEARSAY TESTIMONY, UNOBJECTED TO, GOOD.

Hearsay testimony, unobjected to, is good.

2. EASEMENTS  $\S$ 5—EVIDENCE OF RIGHT OF WAY BY PRESCRIPTION.

Complainants, in suit to enjoin and restrain defendant from interfering with the use of a private road or right of way through his premises, under the facts held entitled to a right of way by prescription.

3. EASEMENTS  $\S$ 5—PRESCRIPTIVE RIGHT OF WAY NOT AFFECTED BY OTHER ACCESS TO LAND.

A prescriptive right in a right of way, implying an original grant, is in no way dependent upon or affected by the fact that there may be other ways of reaching the dominant land.

4. ESTOPPEL  $\S$ 78(3) — VIOLATED CONTRACT NO DEFENSE IN SUIT TO ENJOIN INTERFERENCE WITH RIGHT OF WAY.

Defendant, in suit to enjoin and restrain interference with complainants' use of a private road or right of way through his premises, cannot defend his position by the terms of a contract regarding the right of way which he himself had disregarded.

5. EASEMENTS  $\S$ 51—USE OF RIGHT OF WAY FOR OTHER LAND THAN AGREED.

A landowner has a right, as owner of an undivided interest in two tracts, served by a right of way over the premises of another, to use of the way in going to and from both of his tracts; but he cannot go out of the limits of the way, nor use it as an easement for the benefit of any other place than that for which it was originally established.

6. EASEMENTS  $\S$ 31 — ABUSE OF RIGHT OF WAY DOES NOT EXTINGUISH IT.

That the owners of right of way over private premises have abused the easement, by driving out of the limits of the way and trespassing on the servient land, does not extinguish the easement; the injured owner of the servient land having an adequate remedy by action for damages or suit for injunction.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Washington County.

Suit by Mrs. Martha Clark and another against Johnson Reynolds. From a decree for defendant, complainants appeal. Decree reversed, and decree entered for complainants.

L. P. Summers, of Abingdon, for appellants.
Jno. J. Stuart, of Abingdon, for appellee.

KELLY, J. This suit in equity was brought by Mrs. Martha Clark and her son, William Clark, against Johnson Reynolds, to enjoin and restrain him from interfering with their use of a private road or right of way through his premises. The relief prayed for was denied them by the circuit court, and the Clarks brought this appeal.

There is some marked conflict of testimony, but a careful consideration satisfies us that the weight of the evidence supports the following statement:

Shortly prior to November 13, 1874, Traynor Sullins, who was the father of Martha Clark and the grandfather of William Clark, acquired a small tract of land from John Thompson, and on the last-named date conveyed a part thereof containing  $8\frac{1}{2}$  acres to Samuel Clark, his son-in-law, and the husband and father, respectively, of the complainants in this suit. Subsequently William Clark purchased (from Abel Clark, who in turn had purchased from Sullins) an additional 4 acres of the tract originally acquired by Sullins from Thompson. This 4 acres is adjacent to and immediately north of the  $8\frac{1}{2}$  acres. Samuel Clark is dead. His widow and children still own the  $8\frac{1}{2}$  acres, and William Clark still owns the 4 acres. Mrs. Clark resides upon the former tract, but William Clark resides upon a nearby piece of land acquired from another source.

The land bought by Sullins from Thompson lay within the exterior lines of a larger boundary, which was and is traversed by one of the public roads of the county. This larger boundary was owned by one A. R. Mallicote, and Thompson acquired from him a part thereof, which embraced the Sullins land. The Thompson land, including the part conveyed to Sullins, all lay north of the county road, but did not extend to or touch it at any point.

When Sullins purchased from Thompson, Mallicote still owned the land between that purchase and the public road, and there was a private road leading from the Thompson land to the public road on the south. At that time Thompson and Mallicote pointed out the road to Sullins, and told him that was his road. This fact is shown by the testimony of Mrs. Clark and of Joseph Sullins, a son of Traynor Sullins, both of whom were familiar with the transaction and testified with convincing clearness and definiteness upon the subject.

[1] Some of the statements of Mrs. Clark appeared to be based upon what her father and husband repeated to her as having been said to them by Thompson and Mallicote; but this portion of her testimony was elicited from her upon cross-examination, and was not made the subject of objection or exception, either in this court or in the court below. Hearsay testimony not objected to is good. Newberry v. Watts, 116 Va. 730, 736, 82 S. E. 703. The testimony of Sullins was a direct account of what he heard Thompson and Mallicote say. There was objection to his testimony on the ground that Mallicote was dead, but the objection was manifestly not well taken. Joseph Sullins was no party to the transaction, and had no pecuniary interest therein.

Soon after the purchase of the  $8\frac{1}{2}$ -acre tract of land by Traynor Sullins, he and his son-in-law, Samuel Clark, each built homes thereon and moved into the place over the road which led to it, and which had been previously pointed out to them as theirs by Thompson and Mallicote. The road thus pointed out to and traveled by them is the road in controversy here, and from that time on for 40 years they used the same without question from anybody, and to all substantial intent and purposes it was not used by any other persons except those owning or subsequently acquiring parts of the original Mallicote lands. There was more or less occasional use of the road by strangers, but no general use by the public in any such sense as rendered the use by the Clarks dependent upon or in common with its use by others. For many years after the purchase by Sullins, Mallicote remained the owner of the land lying to the south and extending to the public road, and never once raised a question as to the use of the right of way by Sullins or the Clarks. Phillip Reynolds, the father of Johnson Reynolds, the defendant here, succeeded Mallicote as the owner of this intervening land, and continued to own the same for about 20 years, during all of which time he likewise acquiesced in its use by the Clarks without complaint or question. There are some expressions in the testimony for the complainants to the effect that they used the road with the consent or permission of Mallicote and Reynolds, but it is abundantly clear from the testimony as a whole that the meaning of the witnesses was that this so-called consent and permission was merely such an acquiescence and recognition of a right as would be expected from and obligatory upon the owner of lands through which other persons were lawfully using an established right of way. There is no just foundation in the evidence for any contention that the use of the way was in a legal sense by permission or under a license.

About 3 years before this suit was brought Johnson Reynolds, the defendant, became the owner of the land over which the right of way passes. Shortly thereafter unpleasantness arose between him and some of the Clarks, with the result that he finally put a lock on the gate opening from the county road into the private way, and denied, as he now denies in his answer, that complainants had any legal right to the way through his place.

Pending the difficulties which had arisen between Johnson Reynolds and the Clarks, Reynolds and Davis Clark, one of Mrs. Martha Clark's sons, agreed upon a settlement, and Reynolds signed a contract evidencing the same, which was introduced in evidence over his objection, but upon which he now seems to rely to some extent as sustaining his position in this case. This contract will be adverted to again, but is not in our view very material to a decision of the controversy.

[2] Upon the foregoing facts, we have no difficulty in holding that the complainants have shown themselves entitled to a right of way by prescription. The roadway was in existence when Traynor Sullins bought from Thompson. Its origin was not shown. It may have been actually granted by Mallicote to Thompson, the grantor of Traynor Sullins. It is true that James H. Thompson, a son of John Thompson, testified that he did not remember that his father ever claimed a right of way over the road in question, but the testimony of this witness, taken as a whole, is altogether too vague, uncertain, and non-committal to be entitled to much weight.

The case, so far as concerns the right of complainants to the road in question as a means of ingress and egress to and from the Sullins' land, is controlled by well-settled and familiar principles which are fully discussed in a number of comparatively recent cases decided by this court. Reid v. Garnett, 101 Va. 47, 43 S. E. 182; Williams v. Green, 111 Va. 205, 68 S. E. 253; Kent v. Dobyens, 112 Va. 586, 72 S. E. 139; Witt v. Creasey, 117 Va. 873, 86 S. E. 128; Muncy v. Updyke, 119 Va. 636, 89 S. E. 884.

[3] There was evidence tending to show that there had formerly been and was still probably available to the Clarks a right of way leading through what is now and has for many years been an abandoned lane to an open private, but uncontested, roadway extending down to the county road at the opposite side of the Clark land from that at which the controverted road enters the premises; and it is contended that this latter road is the route the Clarks ought to use to the exclusion of the other way. There are several very satisfactory answers to this contention. The Clarks clearly have a right to go the other way. This is a prescriptive right, which implies an original grant in no way dependent upon or affected by the fact that there may be other ways of reaching the land. Furthermore, the right of way suggested as a substitute for the one in controversy so far as it involves the use of the old abandoned lane, is one to which it is not shown that the complainants have any established legal right. The lane has been closed for many years, and could only be opened again as a matter of grace on the part of the owners of the land through which it passes. Still further, although the suggested substitute is a somewhat shorter way of going from the Clark land to the public road, parts of it are practically impassable for wagons and teams.

Coming now to deal briefly with the contract mentioned above, David Clark, in an effort to settle the controversy with Johnson

Reynolds, met with him in Abingdon, and the two agreed upon the following paper, which was signed, acknowledged, and recorded, to wit:

"March 16, 1914.

"This is to certify that Johnson Reynolds this day has agreed that Mrs. Martha Clark, the widow of the late Samuel Clark, shall have a right of way on the old road that has been used by her and her heirs airs and the said David Clark and heirs of the said Martha Clark, has this day paid the said Johnson Reynolds $5.00 on gates on said road, and also the said David Clark is to help the said Johnson Reynolds to make the gates on said road and the said Johnson Reynolds that any one looking after the interest of the said Martha Clark shall have the same privilege to the said road.

"Witness the following:

"Johnson Reynolds. [Seal.]"

[4] As already indicated, this contract was introduced in evidence, not by Reynolds, but by the complainants themselves, and its introduction was strenuously opposed by Reynolds. There seems to be some contention now on the part of Reynolds that this contract can be construed as a recognition on the part of Mrs. Clark and William H. Clark of the right of Reynolds to stop their use of the way. We do not take this view of the contract. While it is true that David Clark paid Reynolds $5 for the contract, the paper on its face shows a recognition of the old road, and although it does not purport to accord the Clarks the full rights to which they are entitled under their prescriptive right of way, it does give them very much wider rights than those which Reynolds is now willing to allow them. As a matter of fact, he has, according to the record, plainly violated the terms of this contract, and it is very certain that he cannot be allowed to defend his position in this suit by the terms of a contract which he himself has disregarded.

We are of opinion that the complainants are entitled to the relief prayed for in their bill, which is the establishment and protection of the right of way in question from the 8½ acres to the public road.

[5] It appears, however, from the evidence that William Clark, who, as shown above does not live on the 8½-acre tract, has at times been using the private road in question for the purpose of hauling to and from the land upon which he now resides, and that he proposes to continue such use of the private road when it may suit him. He has no legal right to do this. He has a right, as the owner of an undivided interest in the 8½-acre tract and as the sole owner of the 4 acres subsequently acquired by him from Sullins, to the use of the way in going to and from both of the last-named parcels of land (Lankenhooker v. Graybill, 80 Va. 839; 14 Cyc. 1190, 1191); but he cannot go out of the limits of the way, nor use it as an easement for the benefit of any other place than that for which it was originally established (Springer v. McIntire, 9 W. Va. 196; Shaver v. Edgell, 48 W. Va. 502, 37 S. E. 664).

[6] There is some evidence in the record tending to show that at times the use of the right of way in question has been abused by the complainants by driving out of the limits of the way and trespassing on the adjoining land. There is not, as we understand counsel, any contention that such misuse has amounted to an extinguishment of the way, and if there were such contention it could not be upheld. The defendant has an adequate remedy by action for damages, or, if occasion should demand by a suit for injunction, to correct abuses in the exercise of the complainants' rights.

It follows, from what has been said, that the decree complained of must be reversed, and this court, proceeding to enter the decree which the lower court should have entered, will decree the establishment of the way, but will limit the same to its use as a passageway between the Sullins land and the road, and will enjoin and restrain William Clark from using it for any purposes in connection with his home place.

Reversed.

(125 Va. 730)

HAYNES et al. v. PETERSON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. DEEDS ⇨196(2) — BURDEN ON PLAINTIFF TO PROVE FRAUD AS BASIS FOR CANCELLATION.

In suits for cancellation of deeds on the ground of fraud, the burden of proof rests on plaintiff to prove the allegations on which he seeks relief by satisfactory proof.

2. CONVICTS ⇨3, 4—POWER TO CONTRACT OR CONVEY NOT PROHIBITED BY STATUTE.

There is no statute in Virginia depriving a convict of the power to make contracts or conveyances of his real estate; corruption of blood and forfeiture of estate on conviction of felony as at common law having been abolished by Code 1904, § 3883.

3. CONVICTS ⇨3—RIGHT TO TAKE AND DISPOSE OF PROPERTY NOT AFFECTED BY ATTAINDER OF FELONY.

In Virginia, the right of a person to take, hold, and dispose of his property, real and personal, is not affected by his attainder of felony.

4. CONVICTS ⇨3—APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE, WHERE CONVICT HAS DISPOSED OF ESTATE, UNNECESSARY.

The procedure of Code 1904, §§ 4110-4173c, authorizing the appointment of a committee for the estate of a convict to administer his estate and to sue and be sued in respect to it, does not apply where the convict has exercised the right to dedicate his property to the payment of debts and support of his family before the appointment of a committee.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wise County.

Suit by A. T. Peterson against J. K. Haynes and others. From decree for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed, and bill dismissed.

Coleman & Carter, W. S. Cox, and S. H. Bond, all of Gate City, for appellants.

Bond & Bruce, of Wise, for appellee.

WHITTLE, P. The material facts of this case are these: Appellee, A. T. Peterson, was convicted on two indictments for forgery at the June term, 1910, of the circuit court of Scott county, and on July 9th following was sentenced to confinement in the penitentiary for six years. At the time of his conviction Peterson was heavily indebted, and at the suit of some of his creditors his lands had been rented to pay liens, and other creditors were threatening to bring suit to subject his entire real estate to sale to satisfy their liens by judgments and deeds of trust. In that emergency, on July 8, 1910 (after verdict but before sentence), Peterson executed a power of attorney, appointing his brother, W. P. Peterson, his attorney in fact to sell such of his lands as might be necessary to discharge his debts, and to execute and deliver deeds of conveyance to purchasers. He furthermore authorized and directed his attorney in fact to apply the purchase money as follows: (1) To the payment of all his just debts; (2) to meet the necessary expenses of his family; and (3) the remainder, if any, to be placed in some safe bank to his credit. Then followed a general grant of power to the attorney in fact to do and transact any and all such business for and in behalf of his principal as the latter could do, if present and acting for himself. The instrument was signed, sealed, and acknowledged, and admitted to record.

The attorney in fact subsequently sold the 179 acres of land in controversy to appellants, J. K. Haynes and his wife, B. V. Haynes, for $2,000, and on January 21, 1911, conveyed the property to them by deed in which the wife of A. T. Peterson united. Several years later Haynes and wife sold and conveyed the land, together with certain live stock, to their coappellant, J. A. Jessee, Jr., for $3,000. In May, 1914, A. T. Peterson was pardoned and discharged from the penitentiary, and shortly thereafter filed the bill in this case, alleging that at the time of the execution of the power of attorney he had been convicted of felony and was civilly dead and incompetent to contract or transact business of any character, and therefore the power of attorney executed by him was void and of no effect and conferred no authority upon W. P. Peterson to sell or convey his real estate. The bill also charged that before W. P. Peterson sold the land to Haynes and wife complainant had revoked the power of attorney, and that W. P. Peterson and his grantees and J. A. Jessee, Jr., had notice of the revocation at the dates of their respective purchases; that the sale to Haynes and wife was for a grossly inadequate price; that the parties knew there was no necessity to sell the land for the purposes set forth in the power of attorney, and that only $1,250 of the purchase money was applied to the purchase mentioned therein; and that Haynes and wife conspired with W. P. Peterson wrongfully and fraudulently to deprive complainant of his property.

After the execution of the power of attorney, and the sale and conveyance of the land to the purchasers and application of the purchase money as directed by the power, W. P. Peterson qualified as committee for A. T. Peterson.

So far as the case involved in this appeal is concerned, the bill prays that the deeds from the attorney in fact to the Hayneses and from the latter to Jessee be canceled and the land restored to complainant. The defendants demurred to the bill, and, their demurrer having been overruled, answered, denying all the material allegations of the bill affecting their good faith, or the validity of their title to the land, and insisting that they were purchasers for valuable and adequate consideration, without notice of any rights or equities in any way impairing their title. The circuit court, by the decree appealed from, set aside both deeds, but made provision for the return of the purchase money in each instance, with interest and the actual cost of permanent improvements put upon the land, subject to a rebate for its use and occupation and any damage that might have been done to the same while in the possession of the purchasers, and that each of the parties pay his own costs, and that no attorney's fee be taxed.

[1] The law is settled that in suits for the cancellation of a deed on the ground of fraud the burden of proof rests upon the plaintiff to prove the allegations upon which he seeks relief by satisfactory proof; the cases generally even holding that fraud must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

In this instance, the evidence upon all material allegations is conflicting and, to say the most for it, falls far short of proving bad faith on the part of appellants. It utterly fails to prove a conspiracy between the attorney in fact and appellant J. K. Haynes wrongfully and fraudulently to deprive A. T. Peterson of the land in controversy. To the contrary the evidence preponderates in favor of the view that Haynes and wife were bona fide purchasers of the land at a fair price and without notice of any circumstance affecting the validity of their title. The same may be affirmed of appellant J. A. Jessee, Jr., who, as stated, subsequently purchased the land from the Hayneses. It is true the decree of the circuit court is silent as to the grounds on which cancellation was granted; yet it bears internal evidence of the fact that it was not decreed on the theory that the defendants had been proved to be guilty of bad faith or fraud, since it restores as far as practicable the status quo of the litigants, and directs that no attorney's fee be taxed, and that each party pay his own costs.

[2, 3] We shall notice briefly the remaining contentions of appellee in support of the decree. The point is stressed that the conviction of A. T. Peterson of a felony and his sentence to the penitentiary rendered him civiliter mortuus and incapable of executing a valid power of attorney. There is no statute in Virginia that deprives a convict of the power to make contracts or conveyances of his real estate, and corruption of blood and forfeiture of estate on conviction of felony as at common law has been expressly abolished by statute. Code, § 3883. So, in Virginia, the right of a person to take, hold, and dispose of his property, real and personal, is not affected by his attainder of felony. 2 Min. Inst. (4th Ed.) pp. 655, 659; 2 Minor on Real Property, § 1096. The above is the prevailing doctrine on the subject in this country in the absence of statutory inhibition. Clark on Contracts (2d Ed.) § 89; Elliott on Contracts, § 266; note to Harmon v. Bower, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 502.

It is also contended that while A. T. Peterson was confined in the penitentiary he expressly revoked the power of attorney to W. P. Peterson by a letter written to his wife, of which letter his attorney in fact and the purchasers of the land from him had notice before the sale was made. It is denied that the power of attorney in question was a mere naked power, revocable at the will of the principal, because it not only empowered the attorney in fact to sell and convey the land, but moreover dedicated the proceeds of sale to the payment of debts and support of the family, and imposed upon the attorney a trust relation to effectuate those objects, and to deposit the remainder in bank to the credit of the principal. 2 Kent's Com. p. 1057, § 644; Hunt v. Rousmanier's Adm'r, 8 Wheat. 174, 5 L. Ed. 589; Sulphur Mines v. Thompson, 93 Va. 293, 25 S. E. 232.

It is not necessary, however, to decide that question, since we do not think the evidence sustains the contention that A. T. Peterson wrote such a letter to his wife. He did not testify on the subject, and the evidence of his wife with respect to the letter is weakened by the fact that after the alleged receipt of it she voluntarily united with the attorney in fact in conveying the land to the purchasers and acknowledged the deed for record.

The remaining contention is that the provisions found in chapter 202 of the Code, authorizing the appointment of a committee for the estate of a convict sentenced to confinement in the penitentiary for more than one year, to administer his estate, and to sue and be sued in respect to it, afforded the only remedy by which his estate could be subjected to the payment of debts.

[4] There is no statute or decision in this state that denies to a convict the right to contract, acquire, hold, and dispose of property, and obviously the procedure provided by chapter 202 does not apply where the convict has exercised the right to dedicate his property to the payment of debts and support of his family before the appointment of a committee.

Upon the whole case, we are of opinion that the decree of the circuit court is erroneous and must be reversed, and this court will enter such decree as the trial court ought to have entered, and dismiss the bill, with costs. Reversed.

(125 Va. 530)

ADAMS EXPRESS CO. v. ALLEN.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. CARRIERS $\S$ 105(2) — CHARGEABLE WITH NOTICE OF INTENDED IMMEDIATE USE OF HOG CHOLERA SERUM.

Express company, by which the department of agriculture of Virginia made a shipment of hog cholera serum, informed that it was such serum, and of the importance of prompt dispatch, while the words "Please rush" appeared on the face of the express receipt, held chargeable with notice that the serum was intended by the consignee for preventive treatment of hogs.

2. DAMAGES $\S$ 5—RECOVERED BY CONSIGNEE FROM CARRIER FOR DELAY IN SHIPMENT GENERAL AND NOT SPECIAL.

Damages recovered by the consignee of hog cholera serum from the express company which carried the shipment, and which was chargeable with knowledge of its intended use as a preventive, being for the loss of hogs through disease which might have been prevented but for delay in delivery, held "general" and not "special" damages, having been such as arose naturally from the breach of the contract itself and such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties.

3. CARRIERS $\S$ 153—PROVISIONS IN EXPRESS RECEIPT NOT LIMITATION OF LIABILITY BY DECLARATION OF VALUE.

Provisions in the face and on the back of an express receipt for hog cholera serum shipped held not to have limited the liability of the express company to the sum of $50, there having been no value declared by the shipper, but merely the C. O. D. charge stated.

4. CARRIERS $\S$ 150—LIMITATION OF LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE IS VOID.

Under Code 1904,  $\S$  1294c, subsec. 24, an attempted limitation of the liability of a common carrier is void where the injury or loss is occasioned by the negligence or misconduct of the carrier.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 861(2), 757(3)—ASSIGNMENT COMPLAINING OF ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE NOT POINTED OUT NOT CONSIDERED.

Where neither in the petition for writ of error nor in the brief is the evidence pointed out which plaintiff in error charges was illegally admitted over objection, under the rule the assignment of error will not be considered.

Error to Circuit Court, Lee County.

Action by W. P. Allen against the Adams Express Company. To review judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

This is an action at law by notice of motion instituted in the court below by the defendant in error against the plaintiff in error to recover $1,500 damages for the loss of 52 hogs by death from hog cholera alleged to have resulted from the deprivation of the plaintiff of the use of certain hog cholera serum as a preventive treatment of the hogs for that disease by reason of the unreasonable delay in the transportation of such serum.

The parties will be hereinafter referred to in accordance with their positions in the court below.

There was a trial by jury; a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff.

The following are the material facts bearing upon the assignments of error of the defendant:

On October 6, 1917, between 2 and 3 o'clock p. m., the department of agriculture of the state of Virginia, through its chief clerk, delivered to the defendant at its receiving office in Richmond, Va., a package, containing sufficient hog cholera serum for treatment of 100 hogs, to be transported "C. O. D." to the plaintiff, W. P. Allen, at Wheeler, Va., and such chief clerk of the department of agriculture at the time "personally urged upon the receiving clerk" (of the defendant) "the importance of the prompt dispatch of the package on the Norfolk & Western train leaving * * * (Richmond) at 9:35 p. m." of that day. The package was accepted by defendant and an express receipt (the draft of which was prepared by the department of agriculture by using a printed form therefor and filling in the words underscored in the copy given below) was given by the defendant therefor, which, so far as material, was as follows:

"Please Rush.

"Uniform Express Receipt.

"The company will not pay over $50 in case of loss or 50 cents per pound, actual weight, for any shipment in excess of 100 pounds, unless a greater value is declared and charges for such greater value paid.

"Adams Express Co.

"Nonnegotiable Receipt. 10-6-1917.

"Received from Dept. of Agriculture, subject to the Classifications and Tariffs in effect on the date hereof, 1 box hog cholera serum. Value herein declared by shipper to be C. O. D. fifty-six and 75/100 dollars.

"Consigned to W. P. Allen, at Wheeler, Va.

"Which the company agrees to carry upon the terms and conditions printed on the back hereof, to which the shipper agrees and as evidence thereof accepts and signs this receipt.

"NOTE.— * * * If the shipper desires to release the value to $50.00 for any shipment of 100 pounds or less, or not exceeding fifty cents per pound actual weight for any shipment in excess of 100 pounds, the value may be released by inserting 'not exceeding $50' or 'not-exceeding fifty cents per pound,' in which case the company's liability is limited to an amount not exceeding the value so declared or released.

"3 P. M."

There are the following material provisions on the back of the receipt:

"1. The provisions of this receipt shall inure to the benefit of and be binding upon the consignor, the consignee, and all carriers handling this shipment. * * *

"2. In consideration of the rate charged for carrying said property, which is dependent upon the value thereof and is based upon an agreed valuation of not exceeding fifty dollars for any shipment of 100 pounds or less, and not exceeding fifty cents per pound, actual weight, for any shipment in excess of 100 pounds, unless a greater value is declared at the time of shipment, the shipper agrees that the company shall not be liable in any event for more than fifty dollars for any shipment of 100 pounds or less, or for more than fifty cents per pound, actual weight, for any shipment weighing more than 100 pounds, unless a greater value is stated herein. Unless a greater value is declared and stated herein the shipper agrees that the value of the shipment is as last above set out and that the liability of the company shall in no event exceed that value."

The foregoing was all that is material which transpired between the shipper of the serum, or any one else, and the defendant at the time of the contract of shipment.

The further material facts shown in evidence in the case are as follows:

That hog cholera serum is used but for one purpose, namely, for treatment of hogs as a preventive of the disease of hog cholera. That at the time of the shipment aforesaid such serum could not ordinarily be obtained in Virginia elsewhere than from the department of agriculture aforesaid. That the chief clerk of that department did not know "of any other person or firm that handles this serum outside of (his) office." That the plaintiff knew of no other source in Virginia from which it could be obtained. And that according to the laws of the adjoining states of Tennessee and Kentucky it could not be obtained from the agricultural department of those states by a citizen of Virginia and those departments alone handled the serum in those states. That it is recognized to be effective in preventing cholera in 90 per cent. of cases treated. That the plaintiff being apprehensive of cholera among his hogs (which were 69 in number), and "knowing that Richmond was the place to order this serum from," on October 5, 1917, wired an order to Mr. Kolner, the commissioner of agriculture, to send to him at Wheeler, Va., his express office, serum for 100 hogs. This order was received at the office of said department the next day, and the shipment was delivered to the defendant for transportation that afternoon as aforesaid.

Instead of being shipped from Richmond on October 6th by the 9 p. m. train as urged by the said department, as above stated, the shipment was not started from Richmond by the defendant until October 13th, seven days later; and there is no evidence in the case tending to justify or explain this delay.

The jury found, upon ample evidence to support the verdict, that the 52 hogs were lost by death from hog cholera by reason of said delay in the transportation of the serum aforesaid, and that the value of the hogs so lost was $1,000; that being the amount of the verdict of the jury in favor of the plaintiff.

Coleman & Carter, of Gate City, for plaintiff in error.

J. C. Noel, of Pennington Gap, for defendant in error.

SIMS, J. (after stating the facts as above). The assignments of error by the defendant raise but three questions for our consideration, which we will pass upon in their order as stated below.

[1] 1. Will it be considered that the defendant, at the time of its acceptance of the hog cholera serum for transportation to the plaintiff, knew of the purpose for which the plaintiff had ordered the serum, namely, for use by him as a preventive treatment of his hogs for the disease of hog cholera, merely from the information given defendant at the time by the shipper, namely: That it was hog cholera serum; that the words "Please rush" appear on the face of the express receipt asked of and given by defendant; and that the shipper at the time urged upon the defendant the "Importance of the prompt dispatch of the package on the Norfolk & Western train leaving * * * at 9:35 p. m." of that day? or was express notice, in so many words, of the use for which the article shipped was intended necessary to be given the defendant at the time of its acceptance thereof, before the defendant can be considered as having had knowledge at such time of such intended use?

The first portion of the question must be answered in the affirmative, and the latter portion in the negative.

As shown in evidence, as set forth in the statement preceding this opinion, hog cholera serum is used but for one purpose only, and that is the purpose in question. In the absence in the record of any evidence showing that the defendant may have had some other understanding of what was the use to which the serum might be put, it must be assumed that, when defendant was informed that it was hog cholera serum which it was asked to transport, that information also conveyed to it the further information that its intended use was for preventive treatment of hogs for the disease of hog cholera. That was the ordinary, the usual, and the only use to which such article could be put. It is well settled that special information does not have to be given to a carrier of the ordinary and usual use to which an article shipped is to be put in order to render the carrier liable for damages resulting from the loss of such ordinary and usual use, by reason of unreasonable delay in the transportation of the article. Indeed, such rule has never been questioned since the leading case of Hadley v. Baxendale. Actual notice to the carrier of the precise use to which the article shipped is to be put has never been held by the authorities on the subject as requisite, except when damages are claimed for loss of some special use to which the article was intended to be put, different from its usual and ordinary use. And, even in such cases, information given the carrier of peculiar features of an article having a special as well as an ordinary use, or that information as given by the name of the consignee and the appearance of the article itself, may often be sufficient to charge the carrier with knowledge of the special use to which the consignee of the goods intends to put them. Story Lumber Co. v. So. Ry. Co., 151 N. C. 23, 65 S. E. 460, and cases therein cited; 8 R. C. L. § 28, p. 462.

The only source from which we feel that any uncertainty could have arisen in the mind of the defendant in the instant case as to the intended use by the consignee of the hog cholera serum would have been over some uncertainty as to whether the consignee was a merchant or dealer in serum, rather than the intended user of it. But the evidence in the instant case excludes all probability of such an uncertainty having arisen, for there is nothing in the name of the plaintiff, the consignee, as it appears on the express receipt, or waybill, in evidence, to suggest that he was a merchant or dealer in the serum; and the other evidence in the case, noted in the statement preceding this opinion, negatives the idea that there was any merchant or dealer in the serum in the state other than the shipper, the department of agriculture of the state. It was easily in the power of the defendant to have shown that it had transported or expected to be called upon to transport shipments of such serum to others than intended users of it, if such had been the fact. In the absence of such proof, in accordance with the well-known rule on the subject of the inference to be drawn under such circumstances from evidence not in itself conclusive, the conclusion is irresistible that such was not the fact, and that there was no uncertainty on the subject in the mind of the defendant at the time of the contract of carriage, and that it knew that it was to transport the serum to the plaintiff for his use and for the ordinary and only use aforesaid to which it was expected to be put.

[2] 2. The purpose for which the serum was intended to be used, being the ordinary (and indeed only) purpose for which it is used, and that purpose being actually or constructively known to the defendant at the time of the contract of carriage, are the damages which the plaintiff recovered by the verdict and judgment under review general or special damages?

In such case it is obvious that the damages in question are general and not special damages.

The damages in the case before us arose, not out of any special circumstances not likely to have been in contemplation of the parties at the time they made the contract, but they arose "naturally—that is, according to the usual course of things—from the breach of the contract itself," and were such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it. Hadley v. Baxendale, supra (9 Exch. 341, 23 L. J. Exch. 179, 18 Jur. 358, 5 Eng. Cas. 502). They fall directly under the definition of general damages in the leading case just cited and quoted. Such rule is in force in this state as well as generally elsewhere. Kendall Bank Note Co. v. Commonwealth Saving Fund, 79 Va. 573; 8 R. C. L. § 25, p. 455.

As said in 3 Sutherland on Damages (3d Ed.) § 913:

"Damages are given against a carrier with reference to a particular use for which property is delivered for transportation when such use is brought to his notice at the time of contracting. In a late English case the principle is stated, and said to be settled, that whenever either the object of the sender is specially brought to the notice of the carrier, or circumstances are known to him from which the object ought in reason to be inferred, so that it may be taken to have been within the contemplation of the parties, damages may be recovered for the natural consequences of the failure of that object."

As pointed out above, the property delivered for transportation in the case before us had but one use; and that was also its particular, and ordinary, as well as its only possible, use. Hence the statement of the law by the learned author last quoted is directly applicable to the case before us.

The case is the same in principle as those involving delay in transportation of traveling theatrical companies or their properties, in which the authorities are generally in accord in holding the carrier liable for damages occasioned the consignee by the loss of the peculiar use to which the theatrical company and their properties would have been put but for the unreasonable delay in their transportation. As held in these cases, in substance, while the use in question is peculiar and the resultant damages for the loss of such use are peculiar, as compared with such cases involving delay in delivery of a different character of shipments, the damages are not for that reason special damages. The damages are different from the ordinary damages in cases of delay in the transportation of ordinary merchandise, but they are nevertheless but the ordinary damages from delay in transportation of such peculiar kind of freight. Weston v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 190 Mass. 298, 76 N. E. 1050, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 569, 112 Am. St. Rep. 330, 5 Ann. Cas. 825; Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Byrne, 205 Ill. 9, 68 N. E. 720. See, also, 1 Sutherland on Damages, § 50, and cases of Hammer v. Schoenfelder, 47 Wis. 455, 2 N. W. 1129, and Jones v. George, 61 Tex. 345, 48 Am. Rep. 280, cited in such section and in the note thereto at page 150, for the same principle involved in the determination of what are special and what are general damages in cases of breach of contract other than contracts of carriage.

The defendant especially relies on the case of Chapman v. Fargo, 223 N. Y. 32, 119 N. E. 76, L. R. A. 1918F, 1049, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1054, as sustaining a contrary view of the law. But an examination of that case discloses that it sustains, in principle, the view above expressed. That case involved the shipment of a moving picture film, and the court held that it did not fall within the principle under consideration, because, while the carrier was held to have had notice at the time of the contract of carriage that the films were to be exhibited by some one, yet, in view of the fact that such films are sent out originally by a central company and are shipped from one place of exhibition to another and finally back to the original sender, it was held that the carrier had no notice that the plaintiff and consignee was to be the exhibitor; or that he owned a theater for which exhibition of the films on an important holiday like Christmas had been specially advertised; or that such films possessed such particular attractiveness for the public that they could not be readily replaced; or that on failure to deliver them on a certain day it would be necessary to close the theater or supply their place with films less attractive and less profitable. And the court refers to the theatrical company or scenery cases above cited with approval, distinguishing the case before it from them on account of the features of the facts to which we have above adverted. In this connection, the court in the Fargo Case has this to say, concerning the theatrical company or scenery cases aforesaid:

"But the decisions in these cases are entirely in accordance with the general rules which have been stated. As was pointed out in the Weston Case, the ordinary result of failure to transport a traveling theatrical company or its properties would be prevention of a performance, and the loss of expected returns from such entertainment would not be special profits or damages but ordinary damages such as were to be anticipated."

And the same is true in the case before us of the loss of the expected benefit from the use of the hog cholera serum.

A great number of other cases are cited and relied on by the defendant. But all of them are either cases involving the transportation of parts of mill machinery, as to which the rule has been settled, since the Hadley and Baxendale Case, that loss of profits resulting from the shutting down of the mill cannot be recovered as general damages; or they involve transportation of articles of which the intended use was unusual, being different from their ordinary use; or the damages claimed were unusual, being different from those which would ordinarily arise from the loss of the ordinary use of the article. These cases involve the transportation of articles and claims of special damages for loss of special uses of them, of the character which may be briefly alluded to as follows: Harper Furniture Co. v. So. Express Co., 148 N. C. 87, 82 S. E. 145, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483, 128 Am. St. Rep. 588, shaft for mill machinery; So. R. R. Co. v. Langley, 184 Ala. 524, 68 South. 545, empty bottles (unusual use and damages); So. R. R. Co. v. Moody, 169 Ala. 292, 53 South. 1016, stoves (unusual use and damages); Plicher v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 155 Ala. 316, 46 South. 765, material for making boxes (unusual use and damages); Murrell v. Pacific Ex. Co., 54 Ark. 22, 14 S. W. 1098, 26 Am. St. Rep. 17, fruit trees (loss of special contract of sale); Williams v. Atlantic Coast Line, 56 Fla. 735, 48 South. 209, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 134, 131 Am. St. Rep. 169, orange boxes (loss due to ensuing illness of men employed to pick the oranges); Produce Reporter Co. v. Adams Ex. Co., 176 Ill. App. 74, 77, credit book shipped in part performance of special contract (loss of the special contract); Stone v. Adams Ex. Co. (Ky.), 122 S. W. 200, shaft for machinery in electric plant; Franklin v. L. & N. R. R. Co. (Ky.), 116 S. W. 765, trunk of goods intended to be followed and sold by plaintiff (loss of time and expenses of latter); Mather v. Am. Ex. Co., 138 Mass. 55, 52 Am. Rep. 258, architect's plan for house, but contents of package undisclosed in any way to defendant; U. S. E. Co. v. Root, 47 Mich. 231, 10 N. W. 351, printed posters advertising time, place, etc., of a concert to be given by plaintiff, but contents of package undisclosed in any way to defendant; Am. Ex. Co. v. Burke, 104 Miss. 275, 61 So. 312, broken part of printing press shipped as model for duplication of the part (same in principle as mill machinery shipment); Dunne v. St. Louis, etc., 166 Mo. App. 372, 148 S. W. 997, wagons and buggies to be sold during a certain session of court (no notice to defendant of special purpose of shipment); Higgins v. U. S. Ex. Co., 83 N. J. Law, 398, 85 Atl. 450, castings for mill machinery; Harris v. Fargo (Sup.) 113 N. Y. Supp. 577, camping outfit (notice to defendant that early delivery was "urgent," but none that a camping party would be at the expense of staying at a hotel awaiting arrival of outfit); Lichenstein v. Fargo, 66 Misc. Rep. 149, 121 N. Y. Supp. 327, millinery goods of which acceptance refused by consignee (delay in notice of return, loss due to change of style, of the likelihood of which the defendant had no notice); Cent. R. R. Co. v. Johnson, 116 Tenn. 624, 94 S. W. 600, piping (unusual use, notice that the piping was "needed very badly," but not for what use, loss that of a special contract of pumping oil); Pacific Ex. Co. v. Darnell, 62 Tex. 639, a part of mill machinery.

As to details of fact concerning the quantum of damages, such as, in the instant case, the number of hogs the plaintiff might lose because of unreasonable delay in the transportation of the serum for their treatment and the value of such hogs, the law never requires notice of such details as a basis for recovery of general damages. The sole requisite as to the general damages recoverable is that they must arise "naturally—that is, according to the usual course of things—from the breach of the contract itself," as aforesaid, for then they are "such as may be reasonably supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time they made the contract as the probable result of the breach of it," as aforesaid. Hadley v. Baxendale, supra. It is not required that the parties should have then actually considered such damages. The law in such case itself draws the conclusion that they were so considered on the ground that it may be fairly supposed they were so considered. 8 R. C. L. §§ 25, 26, pp. 458, 459.

[3. 4] 3. Do the provisions on the face and on the back of the express receipt set forth in the statement preceding this opinion limit the liability of the defendant to the sum of $50?

This question must be answered in the negative.

This is not a case in which there was a declared or released valuation of the article shipped. The amount of "fifty-six and 75/100 dollars" is entered in the express receipt as the "C. O. D." charges which the carrier was to collect; and there is no "inserting" of the words "not exceeding $50," as the value by which the rate of charge for transportation was to be fixed, and "in which case the company's liability is limited to an amount not exceeding the value so declared or released," as stipulated in the "Note" on the face of the receipt. In view of such express provisions, those on the back of the receipt set forth in the statement preceding this opinion are ambiguous, and it is not clear therefrom or from the other provisions on the subject on the face of the receipt that there was in fact any actual reduction of rate of charge in view of an actually agreed valuation of the article shipped—I. e., it is not entirely clear that this particular contract attempted to limit the liability of the carrier.

But if it were conceded that the contract of carriage attempted to limit the liability of the defendant to the sum of $50, in consideration of the rate of charge for the transportation of the property, notwithstanding some differences of opinion on the question when it arose under another statute (see Richmond & Danville R. R. Co. v. Payne, 86 Va. 481, 10 S. E. 749, 6 L. R. A. 849, and C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Beasley, 104 Va. 788, 52 S. E. 566, 3 L. R. A. [N. S.] 183), the rule in this state is now firmly settled that under our statute (subsection 24 of section 1294c, 1 Pollard's Code 1904, which was enacted subsequently to the decisions last cited and in addition to and different in its phraseology from the statute in this state on the subject previously existing, section 1296, Code 1887; subsection 25, § 1294c, 1 Pollard's Code 1904), as to intrastate shipments, such attempted limitation of liability is void where the injury or loss is occasioned by the negligence or misconduct of the carrier. C. & O. R. Co. v. Pew, 109 Va. 288, 64 S. E. 35; So. Ex. Co. v. Keeler, 109 Va. 459, 64 S. E. 38. We cannot be governed therefore by a contrary rule in other jurisdictions, which is unaffected by such a statute as we have in Virginia, and hence a discussion of authorities from such jurisdictions relied on by defendant would be fruitless and will not be here entered upon.

[5] 4. What is said above disposes of all of the assignments of error save one, which, as stated in the petition, is that the court below erred, "in admitting, over defendant's objections, certain illegal evidence offered by the plaintiff." Neither in the petition nor in brief for defendant is such evidence pointed out. Therefore, under our rule on the subject, such assignment of error will not be considered.

On the whole, therefore, we find no error in the judgment complained of, and it will be Affirmed.

(125 Va. 558)

W. L. BECKER & CO. v. NORFOLK & W. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS §46(11) — ACTION FOR FREIGHT ACCRUED TO RAILROAD ON DELIVERY OF CAR.

A railroad's cause of action against the consignee of goods for the freight arose on the date when the railroad delivered the car to the consignee, for the purpose of initiating the running of the statute against the railroad's demand.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS §28(1)—CAUSE OF ACTION FOR FREIGHT AGAINST CONSIGNEE BARRED IN THREE YEARS.

Under Code 1904, § 2920, a railroad's cause of action for the recovery of freight from the consignee, despite provisions of the bill of lading, held barred in three years from the date when the cause of action, based on an implied or express parcel promise, and not on an express promise in writing in the bill of lading, accrued.

Error to Corporation Court of Roanoke.

Action by the Norfolk & Western Railway Company against W. L. Becker & Co. To review judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Reversed, and judgment entered for defendant.

Jackson & Henson, of Roanoke, for plaintiff in error.

Boy B. Smith, of Roanoke, for defendant in error.

PRENTIS, J. These are the facts out of which this controversy arises: W. L. Becker, trading as W. L. Becker & Co., bought of the Griffin-Skelley Company, of Fresno, Cal., a carload of dried fruit and raisins, which on October 27, 1908, was shipped by the vendor to the vendee at Roanoke. The bill of lading shows that the car was "consigned to the order of Griffin-Skelley Company, notify W. L. Becker & Co., Roanoke, Va." The vendor assigned this bill of lading to the vendee, and the company delivered the car on the 17th day of November, 1908. It was promptly unloaded, the empty car was sent out by the company on November 22d, and on November 24th the vendee paid the amount of the freight demanded by the company, shown by the freight bill, $406.05. The proper rate was $1 per 100 pounds. By some unexplained error in the calculation of the gross weight, the freight bill only charged as for 40,605 pounds, whereas the true weight of the shipment was 69,465 pounds. Although the company should have collected $694.65, it collected only $406.05, which left a balance of $288.60 due. The error was apparently not discovered for some time, though the detailed weights of the packages which disclose the error was then known and this action by the company against the vendee was instituted November 23, 1911.

The defendant pleaded the statute of limitations, claiming that the action was barred within three years from the date on which the right of action accrued, and, the case being submitted to the judge of the trial court, there was a judgment in favor of the company, of which the defendant is here complaining. The only question submitted for determination is whether or not the action is barred.

It is necessary, then, to determine when the cause of action arose, and the limitation which is applicable thereto.

The freight bill was paid on November 24, 1908, and it is claimed for the company that this is the date upon which the cause of action accrued. The learned judge of the trial court appears to have taken this view, and cites Grove v. Lemley, 114 Va. 202, 76 S. E. 305, as authority for the proposition that "in a court of law the limitation runs from the date of settlement and payment." That case, however, was an action to recover an overpayment, and there can be no doubt that, when one erroneously pays money to another which he does not owe, his cause of action for the recovery of such overpayment arises on the date when payment is made. That rule, however, has no application whatever to such a case as this. This payment was made in settlement of a debt for which the company already had a cause of action which had arisen previous to such payment. By no course of reasoning could the payment of less than the amount originally due be construed to change the date when the original cause of action for the whole amount arose. Under the Virginia statute of limitations, the partial payment of debts already due does not affect the running of the statute or operate to create a new cause of action.

[1, 2] We have no doubt that this cause of action against the vendee of the goods arose on the date when the company delivered the car to him—that is, on November 17, 1908. The company had a lien upon the goods for the sum due it for freight, hence could have refused to deliver the car until the freight was paid, and under the circumstances of this case the defendant must be presumed to have promised to pay the freight when he accepted and unloaded the car. The question raised is whether this cause of action is based upon an implied or express parcel promise, or whether, as claimed by the company, its cause of action is based upon an express promise in writing contained in the bill of lading, which was signed by the Griffin-Skelley Company in California when the shipment was made. It is contended that, in signing this bill of lading, the vendors acted as agents for the vendee, and that, therefore, the limitation is five years, as upon such express promise in writing.

This contention is based upon these provisions in the bill of lading:

☞ For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

(a) "It is further stipulated that the service to be performed hereunder shall be subject to the conditions, whether printed or written, herein contained, and said conditions are hereby agreed to by the shipper and by him accepted for himself and his assigns as just and reasonable."

(b) "Charges.—The owner or consignee to pay freight charges as per specified rates upon the goods as they arrive."

Such a clause as to payment of freight charges by the owner or consignee is an ancient one in bills of lading. It was construed by Lord Ellenborough, C. J., in the case of Shepard v. De Bernales, 13 East, 565. He says this:

"The first is the chief and most material question; and it depends upon the effect of this clause in the bill of lading, 'he or they paying freight for the said goods.' If this clause were introduced with a view to the defendant's security, and made it incumbent upon the plaintiff, at his peril, to look to the consignee under the bill of lading for payment of the freight, the plaintiff had no right to deliver to the defendant's agent, without first receiving such payment; and his delivery, without payment, was in that case not 'a right and true delivery.' But if this clause were introduced for the plaintiff's (the master's) benefit only, and merely to give him the option, if he thought fit, to insist upon his receiving freight abroad before he should make delivery of the goods, he had a right to waive the benefit of that provision in his favor, and to deliver without first receiving payment, and is not precluded by such delivery from afterwards maintaining this action. And the latter seems to us the true construction of this contract."

See Grant v. Wood, 21 N. J. Law, 292, 47 Am. Dec. 163; Holt v. Westcott, 43 Me. 445, 60 Am. Dec. 75.

This is said in Wooster v. Tarr, 8 Allen (Mass.) 270, 85 Am. Dec. 707:

"The usual clause in bills of lading, that the cargo is to be delivered to the person named or his assignees, 'he or they paying freight,' is only inserted as a recognition or assertion of the right of the master to retain the goods carried until his lien is satisfied by payment of the freight, but it imposes no obligation on him to insist on payment before delivery of the cargo. If he sees fit to waive his right of lien and to deliver the goods without payment of the freight, his right to resort to the shipper for compensation still remains. Shepard v. De Bernales, 13 East, 565; Domett v. Beckford, 5 Barn. & Adol. 521, 525; Christy v. Row, 1 Taunt. 300."

The carrier has a lien upon the consignment and can refuse delivery thereof until the freight is paid. From this there has grown up a custom of business whereby the carrier waives his lien, delivers the consignment and relies upon the promise of the consignee to pay the freight. So that in the case in judgment, when the company delivered and the defendant received the shipment, there was either an express or implied promise by the defendant to pay the carrier's charges. This cause of action arises out of this promise alone. This is well supported by the cases. Union Pacific R. Co. v. American Smelting & Ref. Co., 202 Fed. 722, 121 C. C. A. 182; N. Y., N. H. & H. R. Co. v. York & Whitney Co., 215 Mass. 36, 102 N. E. 366; Coal & Coke Ry. Co. v. Buckhannon River Coal & Coke Co., 77 W. Va. 309, 87 S. E. 376, L. R. A. 1917A, 663; Hatch v. Tucker, 12 R. I. 501, 34 Am. Rep. 707; Old Colony R. Co. v. Wilder, 137 Mass. 536; Central R. Co. of N. J. v. MacCartney, 68 N. J. Law, 165, 52 Atl. 575; 4 R. C. L. 858.

We find no ground whatever to support the contention that the vendor in California was the agent of the vendee in signing the bill of lading. He was acting in his own interest in the performance of his own contract to deliver the goods to the carrier, which he had sold to the vendee, to be transported to Roanoke. The defendant had the right to examine the goods and the power to reject them. If he had rejected the goods, it is clear that the company would have had no claim upon him for the freight, but could only have asserted its lien therefor against the goods, or collected it of the consignor. This demonstrates that the company's claim against the defendant for the freight bill does not arise out of the original contract which the consignor made with the company. It arises only out of the defendant's own express or implied agreement with the company upon the acceptance of the shipment in Roanoke.

We are referred to Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. Luke, 19 Ga. App. 100, 90 S. E. 1041, in which it is held that by accepting the freight the consignee became liable under the written contract of the consignor, as his assignee or transferee. We think that the weight of authority is against the rule which is established in Georgia. Certainly, in Virginia it is otherwise, as has been determined by this court in the recent case of Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Virginia Manufacturing Co., 119 Va. 5, 89 S. E. 103, in which the three-year limitation was applied in an action against a consignee for freight.

The same rule is applied to bills of lading as is applied to deeds. In Virginia it is held that if the grantee of a deed assumes the payment of bonds given by his grantor for purchase money, and does not sign the deed, that this creates a simple contract debt which is barred within three years from the time when it is assumed. Taylor v. Forbes, 101 Va. 658, 44 S. E. 888; Harris v. Shields, 111 Va. 646, 69 S. E. 933.

We conclude, therefore, that the trial court erred in not sustaining the defendant's plea of the statute of limitations. In our opinion, the debt due to the company upon the promise of the defendant to pay the freight was barred on the 17th day of November, 1911—that is, within three years from the date when the cause of action accrued. Code, § 2920. This court will, therefore, enter judgment in favor of the defendant.

Reversed.

(84 W. Va. 526)

CLARK v. NORFOLK & W. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 23, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CARRIERS §284(1, 2) — SHOULD NOT PROTECT PASSENGER AGAINST PUBLIC OFFICER.

Although a carrier is obliged to use reasonable diligence to protect its passengers against unlawful assaults by other passengers, its own servants, and third persons, its servants are under no duty to resist or interfere with a known officer in making an arrest of a passenger, unless they know or by reasonable diligence ought to know that the arrest is unlawful; neither are they bound to make inquiry into such known officer's authority.

2. CARRIERS §381(2)—INTOXICATING LIQUORS §249—WHEN SEARCH WARRANT INVALID AND NO PROTECTION TO CARRIER EXPELLING PASSENGER.

A warrant issued by a justice of the peace, commanding search to be made of a certain passenger train, to ascertain if intoxicating liquors are being carried thereon contrary to law, is not proper evidence to be considered by the jury against the plaintiff in the trial of an action by him against the carrier for his unlawful expulsion from the car. Such warrant is void.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

3. CARRIERS §352—NOT LIABLE FOR EXPULSION OF PASSENGER BY ONE NOT ITS AGENT.

Where one was not acting as agent of a carrier, but was deputized by prohibition officers to assist them in searching a train, he was acting outside of his duty to the carrier, even if a special agent of carrier, and his assistance in expelling plaintiff was no ground of carrier's liability therefor.

Error to Circuit Court, McDowell County.

Action by A. F. Clark against the Norfolk & Western Railway Company. Verdict for plaintiff was set aside on defendant's motion, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed, and remanded for new trial.

Froe & Capehart, of Welch, for plaintiff in error.

Sale & Tucker, of Welch, for defendant in error.

WILLIAMS, J. In an action of trespass on the case plaintiff recovered a verdict against defendant for $500, which, on motion of defendant, the court set aside, and plaintiff brings error, asking that the judgment be reversed, and judgment entered here on the verdict.

[1] Plaintiff purchased a ticket from Iron-ton, Ohio, to Iaeger, W. Va., and boarded one of defendant's trains as a passenger on December 16, 1916. He and a number of others had gone to Iron-ton on the day previous to purchase liquor. It was not then unlawful for a person to carry more than 2 quarts of liquor into the state for personal use, provided the container thereof was properly labeled, showing the kind and quantity thereof. A coach was attached to the rear of the train just behind a Pullman car at Iron-ton for the accommodation of those passengers who were carrying liquor, and plaintiff was told to get in that coach and did so. In fact, that coach seems to have been filled with such passengers. Plaintiff admits he had 16 quarts of whisky and one quart of alcohol in a suit case, but swears it was properly labeled, and the jury evidently believed him, which they had a right to do, although his testimony on this point is contradicted by other witnesses for defendant. When the train arrived and stopped at Williamson, W. Va., which is the end of one of defendant's divisions, where a change of crews is made, and which is a long distance west of Iaeger, the prohibition officer and his deputies, four or five in number, armed with pistols, entered the coach and forced a number of the passengers, including plaintiff, to alight. Three or four of them, but not the plaintiff, were arrested for not having labels on their packages of whisky. Plaintiff did not attempt to reboard the train, but spent the night at a hotel and took another train the next morning for Iaeger. Plaintiff swears the train stopped some distance before it reached the depot at Williamson, and, quoting his language, says:

"Some men came in and told us to get off that train, and drewed their guns, and some of them unloaded, and I didn't have time to get off until after the train had done started out. I went on into Williamson, and they made us get off."

He was asked:

"Who made you get off? A. Well, there was the brakeman and these here officers."

And, being asked if he was frightened, he replied:

"Yes, sir; I was scared not to get off the train, after I didn't know what they were going to do to me."

He was further asked what the brakeman did to him, and replied:

"The brakeman didn't do anything; just asked me to go ahead off."

And, the question being repeated, he added, "To further any more trouble," meaning, of course, to avoid any further trouble. Some of plaintiff's answers are hardly intelligible; but it fairly appears from his testimony that, when the officers entered the car, it caused a great deal of commotion among the passengers, some of whom got off immediately, and others a little later, after the train had pulled up to the depot, and that none of the train crew protested, or did anything to protect plaintiff from being ejected. Plaintiff's counsel rely on the cases of Gillingham v. Ohio River R. R. Co., 35 W. Va. 588, 14 S. E. 243, 14 L. R. A. 798, 29 Am. St. Rep. 827, and Anania v. Norfolk & Western Ry. Co., 77 W. Va. 105, 87 S. E. 167, L. R. A. 1916C, 439, in support of their contention that, under the state of facts established by plaintiff's evidence, the defendant is liable; that a carrier is under obligation to protect its passengers from unlawful arrest or ejection from its train.

In the Gillingham Case the conductor of the train actually caused plaintiff's arrest for an offense committed in his presence, and which, by the exercise of proper diligence, he was bound to know plaintiff was innocent of. After sending for the officer to make the arrest, the conductor pointed out Gillingham to him as the guilty person; whereas the guilty party was shown to be another passenger occupying a seat behind him. The assault for which the arrest was made was committed on the conductor, and he pointed out to the officer the wrong man as the one who had committed it.

In the Anania Case, the officer, who happened to be on the train at the time, arrested Anania and some other passengers for disorderly conduct, which occurred in the presence of the conductor and the officer. Anania had been guilty of no misconduct. The opinion in that case states that the conductor knew, or if reasonably diligent ought to have known, that fact. It was clearly the duty of the conductor in that instance to have protested, at least, against Anania's arrest.

But here the facts are quite different. It is a fact, proven and not disputed, that the conductor and brakeman in charge of the train all knew that the men who forced plaintiff to alight were officers, and in such case the law imposes no duty upon the carrier or its servants or agents to inquire into the officer's authority, or substitute their opinions for his, or to protest against his arresting a passenger. A passenger train is not intended as a place of refuge for criminals, and unless a passenger is arrested for an offense of which the carrier's agent knew, or by proper diligence ought to have known, he is not guilty, he is not obliged to interfere or protest against the arrest. The rule, however, is different where the carrier's servants know, or by the exercise of proper diligence ought to know, that the arrest of the passenger is unlawful, as was the case in Anania v. Norfolk & Western Ry. Co., supra.

In Bowden v. Atlantic Coast Line Ry. Co., 144 N. C. 28, 56 S. E. 558, 12 Ann. Cas. 783, it appears that plaintiff ran away with a 16 year old girl for the purpose of marrying her. They were passengers on defendant's train. In response to a telegram from a brother of the girl to the chief of police of Jacksonville, N. C., notifying him that the parties had eloped, the moment the train arrived at Jacksonville he boarded the train to make the arrest. Apprehending his arrest, plaintiff, without the knowledge of the conductor, took refuge in the water closet and bolted the door on the inside. The officer demanded the key of the conductor, and he instructed the porter to deliver it to the officer. Finding he could not open the door with the key, the officer presented his pistol through the window of the closet, and compelled plaintiff to unbolt the door and surrender. He then took the couple from the train. The court held the carrier not liable, and in its opinion says that plaintiff having concealed himself in the closet without the knowledge of the conductor, the fact that the conductor surrendered the key is no evidence of a purpose to aid and abet the officer, nor is the fact that the train remained at the station a few minutes longer than usual any evidence of the conductor's intent to aid the officer in making the arrest. Says the court:

"The most that can be said is that the conductor did not resist the officers in executing their purpose to arrest plaintiff. It is not the duty of a conductor to resist a known officer of the law in making an arrest."

In this case the brakeman's advice to plaintiff to "go ahead off," if he said it, which the brakemen all deny, and plaintiff was not able to identify the person who, he says, told him, is not evidence of any intent to aid the officers. According to plaintiff's testimony, the request was made simply to avoid further trouble. There is no evidence whether or not defendant's servants knew that plaintiff's suit case was properly labeled as containing whisky, or that they knew why the officers ejected him from the car. Knowing that they were officers, the defendant's agents were under no duty to inquire into the legality of their acts. The following authorities are in point and support the principles announced in this opinion: 4 R. C. L. 1194; 10 C. J. 908; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Crosby, 183 Ala. 237, 62 South. 889; Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Byrley, 152 Ky. 35, 153 S. W. 36, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 240; Brunswick & Western R. Co. v. Ponder, 117 Ga. 63, 43 S. E. 430, 60 L. R. A. 713, 97 Am. St. Rep. 152; and Thompkins v. M., K. & T. Ry. Co., 211 Fed. 391, 128 C. C. A. 1, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 791.

[3] Counsel for plaintiff insist that I. W.

Clark, although appointed by the Governor of the state, was a special agent of the railway company, and assisted the officers in ejecting plaintiff and other passengers from the train. Said Clark was not acting as agent of the railway company on this occasion. He swears he was deputized by Mr. Keadle and Mr. Slater the prohibition officers, to assist them, and his testimony is not denied. He was acting outside of his duty to the railway company and as a deputized officer, and his assistance in expelling plaintiff constitutes no ground of liability on defendant.

[2] The justice's warrant, under which the prohibition officers acted in searching the car, was introduced and read as evidence over the objection of plaintiff. This was error. The law does not authorize a justice of the peace to issue his warrant commanding search to be made of the coaches of a passenger train in transit, to ascertain if liquor is being carried therein in violation of the law. A passenger train in transit is not one of the places mentioned, or contemplated by section 9, chapter 32A, Barnes' Code 1918 (Code 1913, c. 32A, § 9 [Section 1288]) of which search may be made under the provisions of that section.

Under the state of evidence appearing from the record, defendant's peremptory instruction should have been given, and the court was justified in setting aside the verdict and ordering a new trial, and we therefore affirm the judgment and remand the cause for a new trial.

(84 W. Va. 575)

CASWELL v. CASWELL et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 30, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. JUDGMENT §818(3)—JUDGMENT IN ANOTHER STATE SUBJECT TO COLLATERAL ATTACK FOR WANT OF JURISDICTION.

A judgment or decree rendered in another state is liable to collateral attack for want of jurisdiction in the court that rendered it.

2. DIVORCE §326—FOREIGN DECREE OF DIVORCE ENTITLED TO FULL FAITH AND CREDIT.

In the absence of any showing of fraud upon the court, or lack of jurisdiction, a decree of divorce rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction in another state or territory of the United States, upon an order of publication duly executed pursuant to the laws of such state or territory, is entitled to the same faith and credit in the courts of this state as in the state or territory wherein rendered.

3. DIVORCE §328—ORDER OF PUBLICATION NAMING DATE YEAR BEFORE SUIT NOT VOID.

An order of publication, otherwise regular, defective only in that it names a date in a year prior to the bringing of the suit, instead of the year in which the suit was brought, is not void, and a decree based thereon cannot be collaterally attacked for that reason. Such error is self-correcting, and does not affect the jurisdiction.

4. EQUITY §249—EXCEPTIONS TO ANSWER ADMIT ALLEGATIONS OF NEW MATTER.

Exceptions to an answer which sets up affirmative matter in bar, being analogous to a demurrer to a bill or plea, admit the truth of the allegations excepted to.

5. PLEADING §310—EXHIBITS IN SUPPORT OF PLEADING A PART THEREOF—EFFECT.

Exhibits filed in support of a pleading are considered parts thereof, and, if they contradict the matters alleged, will control.

6. WILLS §782(5)—GIFT OF ANNUITY NOT IN LIEU OF DOWER REQUIRING RENUNCIATION OF WILL.

Where a husband settles an annuity upon his wife, payable during her life, and thereafter dies testate, devising all his property to another, and provides in his will that his wife shall have no other part of his estate, except the annuity previously settled on her, such provision in the will is not a gift in lieu of dower, and she is not required to renounce the will in order to be entitled to claim dower.

7. JUDGMENT §818(5)—RECITAL OF JURISDICTIONAL FACTS IN JUDGMENT OF FOREIGN COURT OF GENERAL JURISDICTION PRESUMED CORRECT.

When it does not appear from a certified copy of the record of proceedings in a court of general jurisdiction of another state or territory that such court was without jurisdiction, a finding by it of jurisdictional facts recited in its decree is presumably correct.

8. JUDGMENT §818(5)—OF COURT OF GENERAL JURISDICTION OF ANOTHER STATE—WHERE DEPOSITION DOES NOT SHOW JURISDICTION, PRESUMPTION OTHER EVIDENCE DID.

Where a court of another state or territory may hear and receive evidence ore tenus as well as by depositions, a certified copy of the record, in a proceeding showing only one deposition to have been filed, which fails to prove all the jurisdictional facts, it will not be presumed that such deposition is all the evidence taken or heard, when the court in its decree recites a finding of all jurisdictional facts.

9. DIVORCE §327—AVERMENTS OF BILL AS TO RESIDENCE CONCLUSIVE IN ABSENCE OF EVIDENCE TO CONTRADICT.

The allegation, in a sworn petition or bill in a divorce proceeding in another state or territory, that plaintiff is, and for more than 90 days prior thereto has been, a resident of such state or territory, such residence being essential to jurisdiction, proves the fact averred, in the absence of anything in the record to contradict it.

Certified to Circuit Court, Wood County.

Suit by Mattie R. Caswell against Cora C. Caswell, executrix of W. S. Caswell, deceased, and others, to establish dower and for an accounting. Plaintiff's motions to strike out certain parts of the answers overruled, and the rulings certified. Reversed in part and affirmed in part, and decision ordered certified back to circuit court.

W. M. Straus and Geo. W. Johnson, both of Parkersburg, for plaintiff.

McCluer & McCluer and Smith D. Turner, all of Parkersburg, for defendants.

WILLIAMS, J. W. S. Caswell departed this life testate in July, 1910, devising his property, real and personal, to Cora C. Caswell, his second wife, and appointed her his executrix without bond. Mattie R. Caswell, claiming to be the lawful wife of said W. S. Caswell at the time of his death, brought this suit praying to have her dower assigned in the real estate of which said W. S. Caswell was seized during coverture, and also for her distributive share in his personal estate. Plaintiff alleges that by writing dated 26th of October, 1891, said W. S. Caswell settled upon her the sum of $750 per year, payable at the rate of $62.50 each month during her life; that the personal property which passed into the hands of the aforesaid executrix is liable to the payment of the same, and that said executrix is in possession of, using, and converting the same to her own uses to such an extent that there will be none of it left to pay her the aforesaid annuity. She prays for an accounting of the personal fund by said executrix, including the rents, issues, and profits derived from the real estate since her said husband's death, and for an assignment of dower in the real estate.

W. S. Caswell, after his marriage to plaintiff, conveyed to third parties certain portions of his real estate, and his grantees, and those claiming under them, are made parties to the bill. Cora C. Caswell and the other defendants demurred to the bill, which demurrers were overruled. They then filed their answers, averring that W. S. Caswell was married to plaintiff May 2, 1877; that he died June 15, 1916, testate, and by his will dated March 31, 1909, probated in Wood county, July 3, 1916, devised and bequeathed all his property, both real and personal, to his wife, Cora C. Caswell, except the annuity of $750, to be paid in monthly installments of $62.50 each to the plaintiff during her lifetime, but that she should have no other share in his estate; that Cora C. Caswell was appointed his executrix; that the will was duly probated in Wood county, and the probate order of the county court of said county is now in full force and effect; that said executrix has paid to plaintiff, since the death of the testator, the aforesaid monthly installments, and the same have been accepted by the plaintiff; that whether or not Mattie R. Caswell was the wife and is now the widow of said testator, she is, nevertheless, barred of any other interest in his estate.

The answer further avers that a suit was instituted in the district court of Logan county, Okl., then a territory, but now the state of Oklahoma, in which W. S. Caswell was the plaintiff and Mattie R. Caswell was the defendant, and that on the 29th of July, 1893, a decree was rendered therein granting said W. S. Caswell an absolute divorce from Mattie R. Caswell; that said decree became absolute on the 29th of January, 1896, and has not been reversed, and is now in full force and effect. The answer exhibits a transcript of the record of the proceedings and decree rendered in said Oklahoma suit, and further avers that in July, 1893, this plaintiff left her then husband, the said W. S. Caswell, without such cause as would entitle her to a divorce either from the bonds of matrimony or from bed and board, and, without just cause and of her own free will, lived separate and apart from him, and was so living at the time of his death; wherefore it is alleged that, under the provisions of section 7 of chapter 65 (sec. 3655) Code, she is barred of dower, and of all right to claim a distributive share in his personal estate. It also avers that W. S. Caswell was not seized, at any time during the existence of his marriage to Mattie R. Caswell, of an estate of inheritance in any of the parcels of real estate mentioned and described in the bill, except a lot on Avery street conveyed to him by Mrs. C. L. Caswell by deed dated September 3, 1888. The answer admits that W. S. Caswell, previous to obtaining the divorce in the district court of Logan county, Okl., settled upon the plaintiff an annuity of $750, payable at the rate of $62.50 per month during her life, and secured the same by a deed of trust on a lot situated in Parkersburg at the corner of Market and Eleventh streets, which property it avers rents for at least $94 per month, and that said annuity constitutes the first lien upon said property. The executrix also admits that, under the terms of the will, she has received the personal property devised to her by the testator, but denies that she has made no provision for the payment of the monthly installments, and denies that she is converting and making such use of the personal property as to deplete it to the injury of plaintiff, and denies that plaintiff is entitled to any relief.

The other defendants also answered averring substantially the same matters set up in the answer of the executrix.

Plaintiff filed written exceptions to, and moved to strike out certain portions of, the answers, for the alleged reason that they constituted no defense. These motions were overruled, and the court on its own motion has certified its rulings thereon to this court.

The first exception and motion to strike relates to that part of the answers setting up, as a bar to plaintiff's claim, the decrees of divorce and proceedings in the Oklahoma court, evidenced by a certified copy of the record of said proceedings made a part of the answer as Exhibit "No. 2A." The next exception was taken to that part of the answer setting up the annuity as a provision made for plaintiff in testator's will in lieu of her dower, and therefore a bar to the present suit.

As grounds for the first exception, it is claimed that the certified copy of the record from the district court of Logan county, Okl., shows want of jurisdiction; that this plaintiff was not a resident of Oklahoma, was proceeded against by order of publication, and made no appearance to the suit; and, second, because it appears from the order of publication therein that the defendant was summoned to appear at an impossible date, the date being prior to the order of publication; and, third, because it does not appear that the defendant received any notice of the pendency of the suit.

[1-3] This is a collateral attack upon the decree of the Oklahoma court, but the judgment or decree of a foreign court may be assailed collaterally for want of jurisdiction, as in such case the judgment is void, not simply voidable. If the certified record from the Oklahoma court shows want of jurisdiction, the first exception to the answer should have been sustained. Roberts v. Hickory Camp Coal Co., 58 W. Va. 276, 52 S. E. 182.

Under the statutes of Oklahoma existing at the time the divorce decree was rendered, a party who had been an actual bona fide resident of the territory for 90 days could bring a suit for divorce. The plaintiff averred in his petition or bill that he was then, and had been for more than 90 days, such resident; that he was married to defendant in Parkersburg, W. Va., May 1, 1877; that plaintiff and defendant lived together as man and wife until September, 1889, when defendant abandoned plaintiff without any cause therefor, and lived separate and apart from him until March, 1893, at which time she returned to him and resided with him until July, 1893, when she again abandoned him without any cause therefor, and since then has continued to live separate and apart from him; that thereafter she has continuously lived separate and apart from him, which was a period of more than one year prior to the filing of his petition; that plaintiff had always supported defendant in a reasonable manner, and conducted himself toward her in a kind and generous manner, and had never abused her in any way, or given her any cause or occasion to abandon and desert him; wherefore he prays judgment that the bond of matrimony between defendant and petitioner be dissolved, and that petitioner be granted an absolute divorce from her. Petitioner made affidavit to the foregoing facts in compliance with the Oklahoma law, and those facts show that the court had jurisdiction to entertain such suit.

Plaintiff made another affidavit that he is plaintiff in the suit of W. S. Caswell against Mattie R. Caswell, brought for the purpose of obtaining a divorce from the defendant therein; that the defendant resided out of the territory of Oklahoma, and service of summons could not be made upon her in said territory, and that plaintiff, with due diligence, is unable to make service within said territory. On this affidavit an order of publication was had, the sufficiency of which is attacked. It styles the cause, names the county and territory of Oklahoma wherein the suit was pending, and notifies the defendant that the plaintiff had filed his petition in the district court of Logan county in said territory, praying judgment against her for an absolute divorce, and concludes as follows:

"You are hereby notified that you must answer the said petition on or before the 25th day of April, 1893, or the said petition will be taken as true and judgment rendered divorcing the said plaintiff from you.

"[Signed] William S. Caswell."

This was published in the Oklahoma Leader, a newspaper printed and published in Logan county, Okl. T., and F. B. Lucas, acting manager of said newspaper, made affidavit that the notice was published in the regular issue of each number of said Oklahoma Leader for four consecutive weeks, "the first publication, as aforesaid, being made on the 14th day of March, A. D. 1895, and the last on the 25th day of April, A. D. 1895." A discrepancy appears between the date named in the publisher's affidavit and the date stated in the published notice, whereon the defendant was required to appear and answer plaintiff's petition, the year stated in the notice being 1893, whereas it should have been 1895. It is contended this mistake is fatal to the notice, and renders the decree based thereon void. But we do not think so, because the mistake could not have misled the defendant. The publication appearing in a newspaper issued in March, 1895, being for the purpose of notifying defendant to appear at a future date and defend a pending suit, could not possibly have misled an intelligent person by stating a year for such appearance, which had then passed. This notice must be read in connection with the Oklahoma statute, authorizing the summoning of nonresidents by order of publication, and, so reading it, any one must know that the year 1895, and not a year which had passed before the suit was brought, was intended. The Oklahoma statute requires that the date to which a defendant is notified by an order of publication to appear should not be less than 41 days from the date of the first publication, and, reading the date 1893 as if it were 1895, the notice gave the defendant 42 days from the date of the first issue of the newspaper containing the notice within which to appear. The publication is defective only in that it states the wrong year in which the defendant was required to appear. It is not thereby rendered absolutely void, because the error relates only to the year, and not to the day or month, and is self-correcting, and therefore in no wise misleading, and the default decree of divorce rendered thereon against the defendant is not void for any fatal defect in the order of publication. Ambler v. Leach, 15 W. Va. 677; Town of Pt. Pleasant v. Greenlee & Harden, 63 W. Va. 207, 60 S. E. 601, 129 Am. St. Rep. 971; Miller v. White, 46 W. Va. 67, 33 S. E. 332, 76 Am. St. Rep. 791; Land Co. v. Koontz, 77 W. Va. 583, 87 S. E. 930; and Core v. Smith, 23 Okl. 909, 102 Pac. 114.

The law of Oklahoma also requires that a copy of the petition, with a copy of the publication of notice attached thereto, should, within three days after the first publication is made, be inclosed in an envelope, addressed to defendant at his or her place of residence, postage paid, and deposited in the nearest post office, unless the plaintiff shall make and file an affidavit that such residence is unknown to plaintiff, and cannot be ascertained with any means within plaintiff's control.

It appears from a registered return receipt signed by Mrs. M. R. Caswell, sent from the post office at Guthrie, Okl., March 16, 1895, that she received a registered letter sent to her from Guthrie, Okl., on said date; and the court found as a matter of fact, and so states in its decree entered on the 29th day of July, 1895, that the defendant Mattie R. Caswell had received a copy of the complaint, and that said copy was delivered to her more than 15 days before the cause was set down for trial. The court also found, and likewise states in the decree respecting the published notice, as follows:

"Which notice was in due and proper form, and which notice was published for four consecutive weeks in the Oklahoma Leader, a weekly newspaper printed and published in the city of Guthrie, in the territory of Oklahoma, the last of which publication was made more than thirty days before this cause was set down for trial on the docket of this court."

The district court of Logan county, Okl., has therefore passed upon these jurisdictional facts, and has found them to exist in favor of its jurisdiction. That court being a court of general jurisdiction, with authority to entertain suits for divorce, a presumption exists in favor of the correctness of its finding on the jurisdictional facts.

[8.] A copy of the deposition of one John J. Cain, taken in Parkersburg on behalf of the plaintiff, and filed in the suit in Oklahoma, is all the evidence appearing in the record on which the court based its decree, and it is contended by plaintiff's counsel in this suit that said deposition falls to prove certain jurisdictional facts; that it does not prove W. S. Caswell was then, nor how long prior to the time he brought his suit for divorce he had been a resident of Oklahoma. The deposition is silent as to where said Caswell then resided. But said Caswell himself made affidavit to his petition, or bill, which stated that he was then, and had been for more than 90 days prior thereto, a resident of the territory of Oklahoma, and the record does not contradict this fact. The deponent does prove that Mattie R. Caswell then resided in Parkersburg, W. Va.; that she left W. S. Caswell 15 or 16 months prior to the time he gave his testimony; and that they had been living separate and apart for 15 months or more. Abandonment for a year is cause for divorce under the laws of Oklahoma. Moreover, it does not appear that this deposition is all the evidence the court heard; other evidence, ore tenus, may have been taken by the court, according to the laws of Oklahoma.

[4] Counsel insists that W. S. Caswell practiced a fraud upon the Oklahoma court by claiming to be a bona fide resident of that territory, when, as a matter of fact, he was all the time a resident of Parkersburg, W. Va. A sufficient answer to this contention is that it does not so appear from the certified copy of the proceedings of the Oklahoma court. Exceptions to an answer, being somewhat analogous to a demurrer to a bill, admits the truth of the averments in the answer. The exception is tantamount to saying that the averment in the answer, if true, constitutes no defense to the bill. Blair v. Core, 20 W. Va. 265, and Keys Planing Mill Co. v. Kirkbridge, 114 Va. 58, 75 S. E. 778.

[5] If, however, the exhibits filed to support the averments of the answer in fact contradict them, the former will generally be taken as true. Board of Education of Flatwoods Dist. v. Berry, 62 W. Va. 433, 59 S. E. 169, 125 Am. St. Rep. 1975; Richardson v. Ebert, 61 W. Va. 523, 56 S. E. 887; Atlantic Terra Cotta Co. v. Moore Construction Co., 73 W. Va. 449, 80 S. E. 924; and Freeman v. Carnegie Natural Gas Co., 74 W. Va. 83, 81 S. E. 572.

[7] The copy of the proceedings from the district court of Logan county, Okl., being duly and properly certified, and it not appearing therefrom that the court was without jurisdiction, and the decree being such as is entitled to full faith and credit in the courts of that territory, now the state of Oklahoma, the policy of our law, as declared in section 19 of chapter 130 (sec. 4875) Code, entitles it to the same faith and credit in the courts of this state. Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 26 Sup. Ct. 525, 50 L. Ed. 867, 5 Ann. Cas. 1, on which plaintiff relies, does not determine the law of this state. That was a case, which went up from the Court of Appeals of the state of New York, and the decision therein turned upon the policy of that state, which was not to recognize as binding upon one of its citizens a decree of divorce obtained in a court of a sister state, upon a service of process by order of publication, when it appeared that the parties had never cohabited as man and wife in the state wherein the divorce was decreed. It was held in that case, by a divided court, that section 1 of article 4 of the Constitution, requiring the courts of each state to give full faith and credit to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state, did not compel a state court, in violation of the state's own policy, to give full faith and credit to a default decree of divorce, based upon an order of publication, when it appeared there had been no matrimonial residence of the parties in the state wherein the divorce was obtained. But the policy of our state, as shown by the statute above referred to, differs from the policy of the state of New York. No lack of jurisdiction in the Oklahoma court appearing, our conclusion is that the lower court properly overruled the first exception to defendant's answer. Beach v. Beach, decided by the Oklahoma Supreme Court, reported in 4 Okl. 359, 46 Pac. 514, on which plaintiff also relies, has no application to the points arising on this certificate. That was a direct appeal from the lower court, and the defendant therein had appeared and answered the petition. A collateral attack of the decree is not there involved.

[8] The second exception to the answer, however, should have been sustained. Because it appears from the averments of the answer, and a copy of W. S. Caswell's will exhibited therewith, that the testator made no provision whatever for Mattie R. Caswell in his will. He made no gift to her in lieu of dower. The will simply expressed testator's intention not to give her anything more than he had previously given her. The $750 annuity mentioned in his will is a settlement which he had made upon her in his lifetime, for which his estate was already bound. We therefore reverse in part and affirm in part the rulings of the lower court, and will order our decision certified back to the circuit court of Wood county.

(94 W. Va. 532)

JOHNSTON et al. v. BEE et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 23, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. WITNESSES §164(3) — WHEN WITNESS COMPETENT AS TO HANDWRITING OF DECEDENT.

The handwriting of a deceased person is not necessarily nor always a personal transaction or communication between such person and another living and claiming rights under or against a document purporting to have been signed by the former; and if the latter knows the handwriting of the former, and has obtained his knowledge thereof otherwise than by observation of the deceased person's act of writing, or some other personal transaction, he is competent to express his opinion as to the genuineness of the signature in question.

2. EVIDENCE §474(14)—WHEN GRANDCHILDREN COMPETENT AS TO HANDWRITING OF GRANDMOTHER.

Grandchildren, who have obtained their knowledge of their grandmother's handwriting only by inspection and repeated readings of letters from the grandmother to their mother, preserved by the family for a long period of time for sentimental reasons, are qualified to testify to their opinions as to the genuineness of the grandmother's signature.

3. EVIDENCE §474(14), 568(3)—WHEN OPINION EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE THOUGH OF LITTLE VALUE.

The opinion of a witness as to the genuineness of a signature, based upon limited opportunities for knowledge of the handwriting of the person whose signature is in question, may have but little probative value, but it is admissible.

4. EVIDENCE §561 — ONLY EXPERTS CAN TESTIFY AS TO GENUINENESS OF SIGNATURE.

As the opinions of nonexpert witnesses testifying merely from comparison of signatures, as to the genuineness of a particular signature, are entitled to no greater weight than the opinions of the jurors or the judge, only experts can so testify.

5. EVIDENCE §563 — WHAT CONSTITUTES HANDWRITING EXPERT STATED.

To be competent for such purpose, however, a witness need not be a professional handwriting student, critic, or expert. It suffices that in some way he has acquired peculiar knowledge and skill respecting the determination of the genuineness of written instruments and signatures—more of such skill and knowledge than men ordinarily have. Bank cashiers are handwriting experts within the meaning of the rule.

6. EVIDENCE §564(2) — ANCIENT WRITINGS ADMISSIBLE FOR COMPARISON AS TO GENUINENESS OF SIGNATURE.

Ancient letters, shown by the testimony of members of a family to have been written by the person whose signature is in question to her daughter, and preserved, for sentimental reasons, long after the daughter's death, and ancient deeds purporting to have been signed by such person and found in a public office in which they were lodged for recordation, may be used as standards of comparison on the issue as to the genuineness of the signature.

7. TRUSTS §372(3) — WHEN EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO SHOW INVESTMENT OF TRUST FUND.

A written and sealed, but unacknowledged, declaration by a married woman of her intention to invest a trust fund in her hands in a certain tract of land then owned by her and her husband jointly, reciting the source of the fund, the previous conveyance of the land, and intent thereafter so to invest the fund, is not sufficient to prove actual investment of the fund in the land.

8. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⇨152, 193 — WIFE CANNOT COVENANT TO STAND SEISED OF LAND TO ANOTHER'S USE.

Being unable to dispose of or incumber her real estate, without the joinder of her husband in a deed or other contract respecting it, in the manner prescribed by law, a married woman cannot alone covenant to stand seized of her land to the use of another, nor declare a trust in it. Though she may bind her equitable separate estate by her sole contract so as to make it liable in equity, her separate statutory estate stands upon a different footing, and cannot be so bound.

9. DEEDS ⇨22, 24 — HUSBAND AND WIFE ⇨179—WIFE CANNOT COVENANT TO STAND SEISED OF HER STATUTORY REAL ESTATE.

While a declaration of intent to create a trust in property, made by a feme sole or other person having unlimited power of disposition of his property, may be binding upon him as a covenant to stand seized, or as a bargain and sale of the property, if founded upon a valuable consideration, a married woman is incapable of binding her separate statutory real estate in such manner.

10. TRUSTS ⇨354—DECLARATION OF INTENT TO INVEST TRUST FUND DOES NOT CREATE TRUST.

A mere declaration of intention to invest a trust fund in certain property does not create a trust therein. Impression of a trust upon the property requires actual investment of the fund in it.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1121 — EQUITY ⇨427(3)—UNDER PRAYER FOR GENERAL RELIEF THERE MAY BE DECREE FOR TRUST FUND.

Under the prayer for general relief in a bill seeking enforcement of an alleged trust in land, praying specially therefor, disclosing prima facie liability for a sum of money on the part of the alleged trustee, but failing as to the trust in the land, for lack of proof of investment of the fund in the land, there may be a decree for the trust fund, upon a prayer therefor at the bar of the court. But if the bill has been dismissed without the interposition of such a prayer in the court below or the award of such relief, the decree will be reversed in so far only as it dismissed the bill, and the cause remanded, with leave to the plaintiff to ask a decree for the amount of the trust fund.

12. COSTS ⇨230 — ALLOWANCE ON APPEAL TO THE PARTY SUBSTANTIALLY PREVAILING.

In such case, costs in the appellate court will be awarded to the appellants, as the parties substantially prevailing.

Williams, J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Mercer County.

Suit by Pearl McCreery Johnston and others against I. E. Bee and others. From a decree dismissing the bill on final hearing, plaintiffs appeal. Decree, so far as dismissing the bill, reversed, and cause remanded.

P. H. M. Patterson, of Beckly, R. D. Bailey, of Balleysville, and French & Easley, of Bluefield, for appellants.

Hugh G. Woods and John M. McGrath, both of Princeton, for appellees.

POFFENBARGER, J. The decree complained of dismisses, on final hearing, a bill filed for enforcement of an alleged express executed trust in real estate, founded upon a valuable consideration.

The relationship of the parties is unquestioned. If there is such a trust as is set up and claimed in the bill, the plaintiffs are entitled to the benefit thereof. They are the heirs at law of M. H. Lacey, who departed this life intestate prior to the year 1865, and at the date of his death owned a tract of land in Loudoun county, Va., containing 160 acres. On his death the title to this land vested by descent in his two children, Mollie K. McCreery, who died in 1887, leaving several children, and her brother, Andrew J. Lacey, who died intestate in 1906, subject to the dower right of Mary L. Lacey, the widow, who afterwards married Dr. Isalah Bee, of Mercer county, and became a resident of Princeton, W. Va. She died in 1907, leaving as her survivors her second husband and a son by him. The former died in November, 1912. The plaintiffs are the children of Mrs. McCreery and Andrew J. Lacey, claiming under the alleged declaration of trust made by their grandmother, Mrs. Mary L. Bee, in 1875, and the defendants are the representatives of the estate of Dr. Isalah Bee, and the devisees under his wife's will. Before his death, Dr. Bee conveyed to his son, I. E. Bee, and his daughter-in-law valuable real estate and gave them the balance of his estate by will. Mrs. Bee gave all of her estate to her husband, in trust for a little girl reared by the family, and known in this record as Nellie Bee Campbell.

The bill proceeds upon the theory of a substitution of certain real estate at or near Princeton, in Mercer county, for one-third of the Loudoun county land, to the rents and profits of which the widow was entitled for the period of her natural life. By a deed dated January 11, 1875, Andrew J. Lacey, Mrs. McCreery, and her husband, and Mrs. Bee and her husband, conveyed the Loudoun county tract of land to John Ritcor for a cash consideration of $1,600. Of this sum two thirds belonged to the heirs absolutely, and they owned the other third, subject to the right of the widow to have the interest on it for and during her natural life. The bill charges that this one third, less its pro rata share of the expenses of sale, was invested by Mrs. Bee in a tract of 130 acres of land, situated at or near Princeton, in Mercer county, and conveyed to her and her husband by a deed dated March 3, 1875, and executed by William A. Wiley and Rhoda V. Wiley, his wife. The deed conveying the Loudoun county tract of land was admitted to record March 8, 1875, and the one conveying the Mercer county land March 10, 1875. The former was acknowledged on the day of its date, and the latter on the day after that of its date. After an unavailing effort to set aside the will of Mary L. Bee, and after the death of the late Senator John W. McCreery, the plaintiffs found among his papers, between June 1 and June 15, 1917, a paper relied upon as a written declaration of the trust claimed by the bill. Senator McCreery had been a lawyer, a business man, and no doubt the legal adviser of Mrs. Bee in the sale of the Loudoun county land. The paper in question reads as follows:

"$523.00. Recd of John W. McCreery the sum of Five hundred & twenty three dollars, one-third of the amount realized from the sale of Laceyville, (a tract of 160 acres of land lying in the County of Loudoun, in the State of Virginia, which belonging to the estate of my late husband Dr. M. H. Lacey Deed.) after deducting costs and expenses for selling said land, total sum $1569.00, which said sum of five hundred and twenty three 00/100 Dollars, one third of the $1569.00, I am going to invest in a tract of land, lately bought of Wm. Wiley & wife, lying near Princeton & containing 130 acres & receive the rents and profits of said land, during my life time in lieu of interest on said sum (said land was conveyed by said Wiley & Wife to Dr. I. Bee & myself March 3rd /75, & recorded in Deed Book No. 7.

"Witness my hand and seal, Mary L. Bee.
[Seal].

"May 5th 1875."

The principal grounds of defense were:

(1) Nonexecution by Mary L. Bee of the paper relied upon as a declaration of trust; (2) lack of actual investment of the said sum of $523 in the Mercer county land; and (3) legal inability or incapacity of the alleged declarant to carry the trust into execution, her right and title in the land having been irrevocably fixed, it is claimed, by the deed from Wiley and wife before the date of the declaration of trust. On the trial the court below found for the plaintiffs on the first issue thus tendered, and for the defendants upon the second. This result rendered it unnecessary, in the opinion of the court, to enter upon any inquiry as to the soundness of the third position taken by the defendant. A contention of the plaintiffs is that the instrument relied upon creates an executed trust, since a court of equity regards what a party has agreed to do as having been done.

[1-3] The objection interposed to the evidence of some of the plaintiffs as to the handwriting of the signature to the declaration of trust on the ground of incompetence by reason of interest is not well founded, if we are to be governed by the weight of authority. Of course, none of these parties would be competent as witnesses to prove the actual signing of the paper by Mrs. Bee, nor to qualify themselves by observation of her act of signing any paper; for that would have been a personal transaction within the meaning of the law. State ex rel. v. Maxwell, 64 N. C. 313; Rush v. Steed, 91 N. C. 226; Wilber v. Gillespie, 127 App. Div. 604, 112 N. Y. Supp. 20. A decided weight of authority affirms the right of an interested person or party to testify to the handwriting of a signature purporting to be that of a deceased person, if he is otherwise qualified, even though he would be an incompetent witness to testify to the act of signing. In Iowa, Massachusetts, New York, North Carolina, Texas, and Wisconsin the courts hold that such testimony involves no more than a matter of opinion, and does not relate to a personal transaction or communication between the witness and the decedent. 40 Cyc. 2327; Ware v. Burch, 148 Ala. 529, 42 South. 562, 12 Ann. Cas. 669, note 671; 25 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. 261. On the other hand, the contrary has been held in Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky, Missouri, and Pennsylvania, as will be seen by reference to the books already cited. The intermediate court of appeals of Indiana has apparently held both ways as to such testimony. Merritt v. Straw, 6 Ind. App. 360, 33 N. E. 657; Shirts v. Rooker, 21 Ind. App. 420, 52 N. E. 629. The decisions adopting the minority rule take the view that, inasmuch as proof of the signature authenticates or validates the document constituting the basis of the action, it virtually covers the whole case, and impliedly proves the entire transaction represented by the document. If, however, the ultimate effect of evidence admitted against the estate of a deceased person were the sole test of admissibility, much evidence not relating to personal transactions or communications would be inadmissible. Much authority and the terms of the statute deny that it is the true test. As to facts not amounting to or involving such transactions or communications, interested witnesses are competent. This is an unqualified and unlimited implication arising from the very words of the statute. There is no proviso saying they are competent only in the event that the fact has only limited probative force respecting the right involved or none at all. The statutory test is whether the fact in question is a personal transaction or communication or involves one. Davidson v. Browning, 73 W. Va. 276, 80 S. E. 363, L. R. A. 1915C, 976. The chief purpose of the statute is to prevent the living party to a transaction from testifying because the other, being dead, cannot be produced to contradict him, in case of false swearing. Denial of right to the former to testify puts them on an equality. Faulkner v. Thomas, 48 W. Va. 148, 35 S. E. 915. If so, its reason does not apply here. One party cannot very well contradict another's mere opinion. Whether the witnesses in question were competent depends upon the means by which they obtained the knowledge of the handwriting of the decedent, constituting the basis of their opinions. They are not disqualified by reason of the nature of the fact to which their testimony relates.

The witnesses now under consideration, parties plaintiff, derived their knowledge of the handwriting of Mrs. Bee from letters written by her to their mother, in their early childhood, preserved by their mother until her death, and by them afterwards, for sentimental reasons, and frequently read and perused. These letters were not communications between them and Mrs. Bee, and they make no claim to any other source of knowledge of her handwriting.

Their inspection of these letters also qualified them to express opinions as to the genuineness of the signature in question. There could scarcely be a better index to the genuineness of the letters than their preservation as heirlooms, tender remembrances, or sacred relics for more than 40 years. Besides, it is clearly revealed by their contents—messages of solicitude, advice, and love from mother to daughter. What is better calculated to make an impression on the minds of grandchildren than the written messages of their living grandmother to their dead mother? An administrator, having examined the papers of his intestate, may testify to his signature. Sharp v. Sharp, 2 Leigh (Va.) 249; Tucker v. Kellogg, 8 Utah, 11, 28 Pac. 870. A clerk through whose hands the correspondence of a deceased person with his employer has passed may testify as to the signature of the decedent. Rex v. Slaney, 5 C. & P. 213; Reid v. Hodgson, 1 Cranch C. C. 491, Fed. Cas. No. 11,667; Reyburn v. Belotti, 10 Mo. 597; Titford v. Knott, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 211. A member of a family is qualified by reason of his knowledge of family correspondence in which he had no part. Tuttle v. Rainey, 98 N. C. 513, 4 S. E. 475.

Disqualification for lack of knowledge is charged against S. F. Cleghon and E. M. Senter, the former having had business transactions with Mrs. Bee in 1886, 1887, and 1888, and the latter having received two letters from her in 1890 or 1891. On the question of admissibility, the extent of the knowledge of the witness is not controlling. However limited it may be, he is entitled to express his opinion. Meagerness of knowledge or limitation of opportunity goes only to the weight of the evidence. Flowers v. Fletcher, 40 W. Va. 103, 20 S. E. 870; Pepper v. Bar- nett, 22 Grat. (Va.) 405; Cody v. Conly, 27 Grat. (Va.) 313; Rogers v. Ritter, 12 Wall. 322, 20 L. Ed. 417; 25 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. 259, 262.

[4, 5] The clerk of the county court of Mercer county, after having produced and filed five deeds dated in the years 1882, 1883, 1892, and 1893, and purporting to have been executed by Mary L. Bee, was permitted to testify, from his comparison of the signature in question with those found on the deeds, that said signature was, in his opinion, genuine. He did not claim to know the signature of Mrs. Bee, nor did it appear that he had had any extensive experience in any business requiring particular attention to signatures. Ten witnesses, holding positions in banks, most, if not all, of whom were cashiers, though admitting themselves not to be experts, were permitted to give their opinions, based upon comparison, that the signature was genuine. Their business involved and required close attention to signatures, but they did not deem themselves to be experts. Our statute permitting comparison of writings (section 21a, c. 130, Code [sec. 4877]), does not in terms require witnesses testifying from comparison to be experts. It provides that genuine writings may be used with or without the testimony of witnesses, for the purpose of comparison. In some jurisdictions it is held, under similar statutes, that only experts can testify from comparison. Nonexperts are excluded because the members of the jury or the judge is as capable of making the test in that way as they are. Griffin v. State, 90 Ala. 506, 8 South. 670; Spottiswood v. Weir, 80 Cal. 448, 22 Pac. 289; Wimblish v. State, 89 Ga. 294, 15 S. E. 325; Woodman v. Dana, 52 Me. 9; Bank v. Lierman, 5 Neb. 247; McKay v. Lasher, 42 Hun (N. Y.) 270; 25 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. 276; Wigmore, Ev. § 1997; Greenleaf, Ev. §§ 576, 578; Lawson, Ex. & Op. Ev. p. 445. But such experts need not follow the profession of determining the genuineness of handwritings, nor possess anything more than peculiar or exceptional skill and knowledge of the subject of handwriting. It suffices that they are better qualified to express opinions on that subject than men usually are. Lawson, Ex. & Op. Ev. p. 453; State v. Webb, 18 Utah, 441, 56 Pac. 159; Com. v. Nefus, 135 Mass. 533; Fairbank v. Hughson, 58 Cal. 314; State v. David, 131 Mo. 380, 33 S. W. 28; Sweetser v. Lowell, 33 Me. 446; Tower v. Whip, 53 W. Va. 158, 44 S. E. 179, 63 L. R. A. 937; Clay v. Alderson's Adm'r, 10 W. Va. 53. The bank officials, testifying as witnesses, come within this definition. It is a part of their daily business to pay out money on their belief in the genuineness of signatures, wherefore they devote more attention to handwriting than laborers, farmers, merchants, or men engaged in the ordinary professions, and obtain more knowledge and skill respecting signatures. They were competent witnesses, but the clerk of the county court, not having shown any evidence of more than ordinary knowledge of signatures, was not competent.

[6] The objection that the deeds used as standards of comparison are not sufficiently authenticated is not well taken. They are solemn instruments, carefully prepared and executed, and taken from the files of a public office in which they were lodged as muniments of title, some of them more than 30 years before this controversy arose, and when Mrs. Bee still possessed the health and strength incident to middle age. Similar standards were admitted for comparison in Luco v. United States, 23 How. 515, 541, 16 L. Ed. 545. A deed more than 30 years old, and recorded is presumed to be genuine. Geer v. Lumber & Mining Co., 134 Mo. 85, 34 S. W. 1099, 56 Am. St. Rep. 489; Webb v. Ritter, 60 W. Va. 193, 233, 54 S. E. 484.

The evidence thus produced by the plaintiffs, tending to prove the genuineness of the signature, is as full, complete, and satisfactory as they could be expected to make it under the circumstances, and is equally as reliable as that adduced by the defendants. The trial court's finding on this issue must, therefore, be permitted to stand.

[7-10] The record discloses no direct or positive evidence of actual investment of the money received by Mrs. Bee from her first husband's estate in the Mercer county land. And the alleged declaration of trust says, by implication, that she did not pay that money for the land at or before the conveyance of one-half thereof to her. The two land transactions were completed in March, 1875, and the paper declaring her intention to invest trust money in it and make it a trust subject was not executed until May 5, 1875, almost two months later. That declaration was prospective in its terms. Her language was, "I am going to invest in a tract of land lately bought," etc. This implies that she had not then invested it, and says the land had been bought. The paper adds, agreeably to the fact, that it had been conveyed to herself and her husband. The title had already vested in her without any qualification or limitation of any kind, and, according to competent evidence, the cash payment of $730 had been made by the husband alone, in live stock, and the deferred payments, amounting to $470, had not been paid as late as 1878 or 1879. It may be that the two land transactions were intended to be one, and to effect a substitution of the Mercer county land for the other; but this is indicated only by some of the circumstances, the ownership of the Loudoun county land, Mrs. Bee's right and duty, and the relation of the two transactions in point of time. On the other hand, the money received from the estate does not seem actually to have been invested. It was not equal in amount to half of the purchase money of the land, and two months after the land had been conveyed and the cash payment made Mrs. Bee declared it to be her intention to invest the money in that land. If resort could be had to surmise and conjecture, it might be said Dr. Bee made her a present of a half interest in the tract, or that he made the cash payment in live stock, expecting her to reimburse him to the extent of one-half of the payment. But such guesses are altogether uncertain, and for that reason cannot be indulged in the disposition of a controversy of this kind.

Besides, there is an insuperable legal obstruction to the view that she could, by this declaration, impress a trust upon land the title to which had previously vested in her. She could neither convey nor incumber such land otherwise than by an instrument executed in the manner prescribed by law. She could only do so by means of a deed or contract signed, sealed and acknowledged by herself and her husband. Graham v. Long, 65 Pa. 383. This was not a separate estate which she might have bound in equity by her contract. It was her absolute property, which she could not charge, either at law or in equity, except by the joint action of herself and her husband and in the prescribed manner. Pickens' Ex'rs v. Kniseley, 36 W. Va. 794, 15 S. E. 997.

The argument submitted under the invocation of the maxim that equity regards what ought to be done, or what parties have agreed to do, as having been done, accords a scope to that doctrine much wider than any text-writer or reported decision indicates or warrants. If Mrs. Bee had actually bought the land in question with the trust fund she had in her hands, declaring her intention to take and hold it in trust, but had in fact taken an absolute conveyance to herself, equity would treat her as if she had done what she had declared it to be her intention to do. It would make her a trustee, and compel her to perform the trust in disregard of the terms of the deed. But her failure to invest the money in the land left her only a trustee of the money. She could become a trustee of the land only by actual investment of the money in it. Mr. Pomeroy states the doctrine clearly in his work on Equity Jurisprudence (4th Ed.) § 587, as follows:

"Whenever a trustee or other person standing in fiduciary relations, acting apparently within the scope of his powers, has trust funds in his hands, which he ought, in pursuance of his fiduciary duty, to employ in the purchase of property for the purposes of the trust, and he does purchase property with such funds, but takes the title thereto in his own name, without any declaration of trust, then a trust with respect to such property at once arises in favor of the original cestui que trust or other beneficiary.

Equity imputes an intention to fulfill the obligation resting upon the trustee; and, independently of any element of fraud, it regards the trustee as intending to perform the obligation—as intending to act in accordance with his fiduciary duty, and not in violation thereof. It therefore treats the purchase as made for the benefit of the person beneficially interested. This doctrine is one of wide operation, of great efficiency, and is applied to every variety of persons occupying fiduciary relations."

In section 422 of the same work emphasis is laid upon actual investment as an essential element of creation of the trust. It says:

"Whenever a trustee or other person in a fiduciary position, acting apparently within the scope of his powers—that is, having authority, by virtue of his trust or other fiduciary relation, to do what he does do—purchases land or personal property with trust funds, or funds in his hands impressed with the fiduciary character, and takes the title to such property in his own name, without any declaration of a trust, a trust with respect to such property at once results in favor of the original cestui que trust or other beneficiary; the purchaser becomes, with respect to such property, a trustee. Equity regards such a purchase as made in trust for the person beneficially interested, independently of any imputation of fraud or fraudulent design, because it assumes that the purchaser intended to act, and was acting, in pursuance of his fiduciary duty, and not in violation thereof. This doctrine is one of wide operation, and is used by courts of equity with great efficiency in maintaining and protecting the beneficial rights of property. It has been applied to trustees proper, to executors, and administrators, directors, and managers of corporations, guardians of infant wards, guardians or committees of lunatics, agents using moneys of their principals, partners using partnership funds, husbands purchasing property with funds belonging to the separate estate of their wives, and to all persons who stand in fiduciary relations towards others. In order that this rule may apply, however, it must be made to appear with reasonable certainty that trust or other fiduciary funds were actually used in making the purchase. A court of equity, in order to raise a resulting trust, will not assume, from the mere fact that the purchaser had or might have had trust moneys in his hands, that he used them in paying for the property purchased, in the absence of evidence clearly showing such use by him."

The effort to make a distinction here on the ground of the character of the declaration fails, because it was one of unexecuted intention only. If the instrument had actually created a trust, the rights of the parties would have been governed strictly by the terms of the declaration. It would have defined the trust. But it admits no more than a trust in the money received. It shows on its face the title to the land had vested in Mrs. Bee while she still held the money. No trust in the land had been created, and it was legally impossible for her to impress a trust upon it, without prescribed co-operation of her husband. The argument erroneously assumes the existence of an express trust in the land.

Our concurrence in the view of the trial court that actual investment of the money in the land is essential to the establishment of the trust claimed, and that there is a total lack of proof of such investment, renders it unnecessary to enter upon an inquiry as to the admissibility of evidence of declarations of Mrs. Bee, admitted as matter of explanation of her possession, and as tending to prove she had spent all of the money she received from her husband's estate in the education of her son and payment of his expenses. The defendants prevail without the aid of that testimony. It is manifestly not admissible merely to prove payment of the money to the heirs.

[11, 12] Under the prayer of the bill for general relief, there might have been a decree for the money Mrs. Bee received as shown by her receipt and declaration of trust, but without interest for any time prior to her death. But the plaintiffs did not ask for such a decree and their right to the fund was in no way litigated. If demanded, it might be paid, or defenses of some kind might be set up against such demand. For this reason there can be no decree here for the money, though prima facie right to it is disclosed by the record. To decree it here might work surprise and injury. Under such circumstances, the practice is to remand the cause for the award of such relief, upon a proper application and successful resistance of any defense that may be set up. Furbee v. Furbee, 49 W. Va. 191, 38 S. E. 511; 3 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 349.

Failure of the trial court to award such relief or afford the plaintiffs an opportunity to claim it constitutes an error for which the decree, in so far only as it dismisses the bill, must be reversed. Costs will be awarded to the appellants as the parties substantially prevailing.

WILLIAMS, J. (dissenting in part). I concur in all of the foregoing opinion except so much of it as remands the cause for entry of a decree by the lower court. The case is one which, in my opinion, calls for entry by this court of such decree as the lower court should have entered. Having reached the conclusion that plaintiffs had failed to establish a trust in the land in the hands of Mrs. Bee for their use, and seeing that they had proven a clear case entitling them to a decree against her separate estate for the money, the court should have given them such a decree, with interest thereon from the time of her death, and made it a lien upon her lands in the hands of her devisees. Her interest in the Princeton land, having been conveyed to her since the creation by statute of separate estates of married women, was her separate estate, and is liable, in equity, for her just obligations. Such decree is consistent with the special relief prayed for, and is such relief as ought to be accorded under the prayer for general relief, and I would enter such decree here.

(84 W. Va. 697)

BURGER et al. v. MCCARTHY et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 7, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. TRADE UNIONS §3—REGULATION OF BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN, NOT AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY NOT REVIEWABLE BY COURTS.

A new regulation adopted by a general grievance committee, the constituted authority of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen to make regulations for the benefit of the members of said order, and to contract with the railroad on behalf of its members respecting those regulations, and thereby to modify or destroy the right of preference to man trains making runs over certain sections of the railroad, acquired by some members of the order under a former regulation basing such preference on seniority of service, having been adopted in the manner provided by the constitution and by-laws of the order, which is not in conflict with any rule of public policy, nor destructive of vested property rights, is not reviewable by the courts.

2. TRADE UNIONS §3—RIGHT OF PREFERENCE IN SELECTION OF TRAINMEN SUBJECT TO MODIFICATION BY SUBSEQUENT REGULATION OF BROTHERHOOD.

The right of preference in the selection of trainmen to man certain trains, acquired under an existing regulation by certain trainmen by virtue of their seniority, is not such a vested right as cannot be denied or modified by a subsequent regulation or rule, adopted in the manner and by the authorities provided by the constitution and by-laws of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of which complainants are members.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Summers County.

Suit for injunction by W. F. Burger and others against T. J. McCarthy and others. Temporary injunction dissolved on final hearing, and bill dismissed, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

E. C. Eagle, of Hinton, for appellants.

R. L. Blackwood and Geo. I. Neal, both of Hinton, for appellees.

WILLIAMS, J. This suit was brought in the circuit court of Summers county by W. F. Burger, E. T. Miles, and R. F. Beasley, railroad conductors residing in the city of Hinton, W. Va., and employed by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, against T.

J. McCarthy and 13 others, constituting the general grievance committee of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen of the said Chesapeake & Ohio Railway, for the purpose of enjoining said general grievance committee from putting into operation by agreement with said railway company a new regulation affecting the right of preference acquired by plaintiffs under an old regulation respecting the same matter which had existed for a number of years, thus taking away from them a preference in making runs of passenger trains over certain districts or divisions of the railroad, acquired by them under the former regulation based on seniority of service.

The general grievance committee is the legislative body for the organization known as the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and its jurisdiction extends throughout the length of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company's lines. It is made up from one member selected from the local committees of the several Brotherhood lodges, located at different places along the lines of the railroad, and is given power and authority by the constitution and by-laws of the Brotherhood to make rules and regulations governing the members of the Brotherhood, and to contract with the railway company in respect thereto. A temporary injunction was awarded, but on final hearing on the 14th of October, 1918, was dissolved, and plaintiffs' bill dismissed, and from that decree plaintiffs have taken this appeal.

[1, 2] The new rule, modifying the old one, the operation of which the bill seeks to enjoin, reads as follows:

"Paragraph 7. In Passenger Service.—All passenger trains that run over more than one freight district will be manned by the oldest man from either district over which the train runs; passenger trains that are confined to one freight district, or run over a part or all of only one district, shall be manned by men of that district; branch lines will be manned by men from the freight district with which they intersect, except Piney Creek, Loup Creek, Hawks Nest, Powelton, Paint Creek, Cabin Creek, Laurel Creek, Keeney's Creek, and South Side branches, which will be manned from New River & Kanawha Coal District crews; this to mean all service performed on these branches. The foregoing not to be operated west of Huntington. Crews, baggagemen, brakemen and flagmen will not be run from one passenger division to another; nor will they be run through terminals, where it is now being done. This agreement provides for future vacancies. Men now assigned to passenger runs not to be disturbed."

The old rule on the same subject reads as follows:

"Paragraph 7. Trainmen who have served the longest on any division or district of the road shall, if other things are equal, be given preference."

erence to runs on that division or district, except that men assigned to any division prior to July 1, 1892, shall not be affected."

The bill avers that plaintiffs have been in the railroad service from 15 to 18 years, having commenced as brakemen and worked up to the position of conductors, and have been members of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen for 13 years or more, and have thereby acquired property rights under the old rule or regulation, a right growing out of contract between themselves and their employer, and therefore a sacred property right, which the new rule, if put into operation, would destroy. It is seriously contended in brief of counsel that this right of seniority is a thing of value; that it is one of the cherished rights of railroad men, gained only by long and arduous years of service.

It is established by the evidence that the new regulation was adopted in the manner and by the body of representatives provided for by the constitution and by-laws of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. It was adopted by the general grievance committee at a meeting held in Cincinnati in September, 1917, by a vote of 7 for to 6 against it, after it had been submitted to and approved by a vote of the members of a majority of the local lodges of which, at the time the rule was submitted to them, to wit, in 1914, there were 10; 7 of said lodges voting for, and 2 of them against, said rule—one lodge not voting. Ten local lodges existed in 1917, and were represented on the general grievance committee, which then consisted of 13 members. After it had been adopted by the general grievance committee, Lodge No. 232, at Hinton, W. Va., of which plaintiffs are members, and Lodge No. 389, at Richmond, Va., applied to the board of directors of the grand lodge, located at Cleveland, Ohio, for an appeal from the action of the general grievance committee, according to the provisions of the constitution and by-laws of the order. After hearing and considering the complaint of said local lodges, the board of directors denied the appeal, and notified the lodges of its action. The constitution and by-laws of the order also provide for a further appeal to the grand lodge of the order, but no further appeal was taken. It appears that the action of any subordinate committee or board in the organization, upon a matter over which it has jurisdiction, is conclusive upon all members of the Brotherhood until it is reversed by some higher authority within the order having appellate jurisdiction. Plaintiffs have not, therefore, pursued their remedies within the order to the full extent provided by its constitution and by-laws. They had a right to appeal from the board of directors to the grand lodge but failed to do so. Plaintiffs should have exhausted the remedies provided in the constitution and by-laws of the Brotherhood before applying to a court for relief. Robinson v. Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, 80 W. Va. 567, 92 S. E. 730, L. R. A. 1917E, 995; and Simpson v. Grand International Brotherhood of Railroad Engineers, 98 S. E. 580, 83 W. Va. 355.

Presumably the action of the general grievance committee was for the general good of the Brotherhood; nothing appears to the contrary. We are furthermore of the opinion that the old rule, giving preference in making runs of trains according to seniority, did not create a property right in plaintiffs such as to justify the interference by a court of equity to prevent the operation of the rule.

We affirm the decree of the circuit court.

(84 W. Va. 687)

STATE ex rel. BOSWELL v. HAYMOND,
Circuit Judge. (No. 3940.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia,
Oct. 7, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

MANDAMUS  $\Leftrightarrow$  176—SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS WILL CONSTRUER AND CORRECT MISTAKE OF LOWER COURT IN CONSTRUING MANDATE.

It is proper for this court, on application for a writ of mandamus, to construe its own mandate in connection with its opinion; and if it finds that the circuit court has erred, or acted beyond its province, in construing the mandate and opinion, to correct the mistake now and here, and to do so by writ of mandamus.

Mandamus by the State, on the relation of Thomas T. Boswell, against Hon. Wm. S. Haymond, Judge, etc. Peremptory writ awarded.

Martin & Seibert, of Martinsburg, and Sperry & Sperry, of Clarksburg, for relator.

John J. Coniff, of Wheeling, H. S. Lively, of Fairmont, and Austin V. Wood, of Wheeling, for respondent.

LYNCH, J. In the chancery cause of Howard A. Oberman, trustee, against Red Rock Fuel Company and others, brought to this court by Thomas T. Boswell, a defendant therein, upon appeal from a decree of the circuit court of Marion county, decided here March 4, 1919 (99 S. E. 66), there was involved the inquiry whether Boswell was entitled to demand and have executed to him by Red Rock Fuel Company a coal-mining lease upon certain parcels of its coal properties, possession of which he took with the acquiescence, knowledge, and consent of the company, but which subsequently was taken from him by an interlocutory order entered in the cause and delivered to George De Bolt, receiver, about January 22, 1918, where such possession remained at the date of the decision rendered by this court upon the appeal.

This right to demand the execution of a coal-mining lease Boswell introduced into the cause for the first time by his answer to the bill filed by Oberman, trustee, in the nature of a cross-bill, setting up new matter and predicated his right to a lease thereon. The right so asserted by him grew out of negotiations conducted between himself and the officers and agents of the Red Rock Fuel Company in the city of Baltimore on or about the 1st day of October, 1915, and as a result of which negotiations, as he contends, a provisional agreement was arrived at by the parties then so assembled, whereby the company granted him the right to enter upon the land at once and begin operations thereon, and bound itself to execute to him upon certain terms and conditions a coal-mining lease upon that portion of the company's properties which was the subject-matter of the agreement, one of the terms of which was that the contract was to be effective as of the date last mentioned, and he was to pay for the coal mined and removed therefrom at the rate of 11.2 cents per ton during the life of the contract, with the usual provision concerning payment of an annual minimum royalty.

Upon the hearing of the cause this court found for Boswell, and by its order required Red Rock Fuel Company, through its officers and agents, to execute such a contract, to become effective as of the date aforesaid, and required De Bolt, the receiver, to account to Boswell for the coal mined during the receivership upon the royalty basis of 11.2 cents per gross ton, but without liability on the part of Boswell for any portion of the compensation usually allowable to receivers in such cases.

Upon the remand of the cause the circuit court, instead of limiting the settlement of the special receiver's receipts and disbursements, as so prescribed, in effect required the commissioner, to whom the cause was referred for the purpose of settlement, to ascertain the amount of the royalties paid, due, and unpaid by the defendant Thomas T. Boswell to the Red Rock Fuel Company, with the further and additional provision that—

"If said 11.2 cents per ton, or the royalty at the rate agreed upon, shall be less than the minimum royalty provided in the contract specifically enforced under this decree, and to be effective as of October 1, 1915, then in the settlement of the accounts * * * there shall be charged to Thomas T. Boswell the minimum royalty provided in the contract dated October 1, 1915, and specifically enforced under the terms of this decree."

To prevent the execution of the order of reference so authorized, and to compel the circuit court to observe the mandate of this court, read and construed in the light of the opinion rendered in the cause March 4, 1919, Boswell applied for and obtained a preliminary alternative writ commanding Hon. William S. Haymond, judge of the circuit court of Marion county, to recall, rescind, or annul the order of reference so entered, or modify it so as to exclude the provision therein contained as to the payment of the minimum royalty, or show cause why he should not peremptorily be compelled to do so.

The return admits the variance between the method of accounting contended for by Boswell and that prescribed in the order of the circuit court, and the probability of a substantial difference in the final results between the two methods, but disclaims any intention of disregarding the order of this court, and defends the reference order on the theory that the opinion of this court of March 4, 1919, left open and undetermined all matters relating to the enforcement of the coal-mining contract which the Red Rock Fuel Company was required to execute to Boswell. In other words, the reference order proceeds upon the assumption that it was the duty of the circuit court to enforce specifically the contract, the execution and delivery of which was required by this court. The specific performance of the mining contract was not an issue before this court upon the appeal in the original cause, because, as we have said, the issue was whether the parties had come to an agreement as to the form, effect, and substance of such a lease at the Baltimore meeting. That issue was resolved in favor of Boswell and the Red Rock Fuel Company was required to execute and deliver such a lease, and in addition to that relief De Bolt was required to settle with Boswell for the money collected by De Bolt during the receivership, less the cost of mining and marketing the coal, but without diminution by way of compensation to the receiver in that regard. Stated differently, the object of the settlement contemplated by this court, and as sufficiently appears from the opinion itself, as we think, was an ascertainment of the balance remaining in the hands of De Bolt on March 4, 1919, after the payment of all charges for mining and marketing the coal during the receivership, except the compensation usually allowed for the services of the receiver; but from this balance was to be deducted for the benefit of the company, and according to the terms of the contract, 11.2 cents per ton royalty on the coal actually mined by De Bolt while the property remained in his custody. Beyond that our order did not, and no order of this or any other court can now, go. To the extent the order of reference entered by the circuit court of Marion county exceeds the bounds of our holding, it is without warrant of law. As between the parties to the suit the adjudication is irrevocable. No court can now alter that result.

Under the authority of Koonce v. Doolittle, 48 W. Va. 592, 37 S. E. 644, King v. Mason, 60 W. Va. 607, 56 S. E. 377, and Gaines v. Rugg, 148 U. S. 228, 13 Sup. Ct. 611, 37 L. Ed. 432, Boswell is entitled to the peremptory writ, and we allow and direct its issuance in conformity with the prayer of his petition.

(84 W. Va. 713)

STATE ex rel. HENSLEY v. DAMRON,
Judge. (No. 3880.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 7, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §991(1/2)—SENTENCE FOR FINE AND IMPRISONMENT SHOULD DIRECT WORK ON PUBLIC HIGHWAYS.

Section 109, chapter 43, Barnes' Code 1918 (Code Supp. 1918, c. 43, § 108 [sec. 1940—108]), makes it the mandatory duty of the court or justice, where any male person over sixteen years of age is convicted of an offense punishable by fine and imprisonment in the county jail, to also sentence the prisoner to labor on the public roads of the county, and the fact that such court or justice may not have orally included such sentence in pronouncing the judgment of fine and imprisonment, will not affect the judgment and sentence entered of record which does include sentence to work on the public roads.

2. MANDAMUS §164(4) — RETURN CONCLUSIVE AS TO WHETHER BILL OF EXCEPTIONS DIRECTED TO BE SIGNED IS TRUE.

Upon a writ of mandamus to compel a trial judge to sign a bill of exceptions, his return is conclusive on the fact whether or not such a bill of exceptions as presented is true.

3. CRIMINAL LAW §996(2)—DURING TERM COURT ON CONVICTION OF MISDEMEANOR MAY CORRECT JUDGMENT.

In the case of one convicted of a misdemeanor the trial court may during the same term of court in the absence of the defendant amend or correct its judgment so as to make it record the judgment actually pronounced and which the law requires the court to pronounce.

Original mandamus by the State, on the relation of Rufus Hensley, against Hon. James Damron, Judge, etc. Writ denied.

S. B. Avis, of Charleston, for relator.

W. H. Bronson, of Williamson, and John T. Simms, of Charleston, for respondent.

MILLER, P. By mandamus petitioner seeks to compel respondent to settle and sign his bill of exceptions No. 2, presented on May 26, 1919, within thirty days after adjournment of the term at which petitioner was tried and convicted and judgment pronounced against him for the offense of having brought into the State within the period of thirty days more than one quart of intoxicating liquors prohibited by law.

The averments of the petition and the alternative writ are that upon conviction by the verdict of the jury on April 19, 1919, the court proceeded to pronounce judgment and sentence upon petitioner as recited in its order, in accordance with said verdict and in accordance with law, and assessed against him a fine of one hundred dollars and imprisonment in the county jail for the period of sixty days, and finally the consideration and judgment of the court was that the State of West Virginia do recover of and from petitioner said sum of one hundred dollars, the fine assessed as aforesaid, together with its costs in that behalf expended, including an attorney's fee of ten dollars as allowed by law, omitting, as it is averred in the petition and alternative writ, thereby further to adjudge against him the fine and imprisonment according to the sentence aforesaid, or any other punishment that might be lawfully imposed.

It is further averred that afterwards, on the 7th day of May, 1919, on the last day of the term at which the judgment was so entered against petitioner, respondent, in the absence of petitioner and without any notice or capias ad audiendum served upon him, caused said final judgment to be amended by inserting after the final words "as according to law," the following:

"And that the defendant be imprisoned and confined in the county jail of this county, and that he be worked upon the county roads of this county under the direction of the county road engineer."

It is further averred that petitioner did not know of said alteration of the record until after the adjournment of the term, and that the record was so altered after he had given notice in the previous order of his purpose to prosecute a writ of error to this court.

By the said bill of exceptions No. 2, it was proposed to have the record show the fact of the amendment of the judgment as alleged in the petition and alternative writ, but the averment is that respondent declined to sign and make the same a part of the record.

The return of respondent is that the judgment originally ordered was in accordance with the judgment as finally amended on the 7th day of May, 1919, and that all respondent did on May 7, before the adjournment of the term, on discovery of the omission, was to have the clerk in the clerk's office correct the judgment to correspond with the fact, and that it was not true as averred, that in addition to judgment of imprisonment defendant was not also adjudged to be worked on the public roads.

Petitioner undertakes to support his petition and alternative writ by his own and the evidence of two or three persons present at the time judgment was originally pronounced against him. They all say that the judgment was that petitioner be fined one hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail sixty days. But the return of respondent shows that in addition to the judgment of fine and imprisonment the order as directed was that defendant be also worked on the public roads of the county.

[1] But conceding the fact to be as petitioner contends, that respondent did not at the time of the judgment orally announce the labor sentence, we do not think this omission would invalidate the judgment as corrected. The statute, section 109, chapter 43, Barnes' Code 1918 (Code Supp. 1918, c. 43, § 108 [sec. 1940—108]), provides that:

"Whenever, hereafter, any male person over the age of sixteen years shall be convicted of an offense, the punishment of which by law is confinement in the county jail, before any court or justice of the peace, and sentenced by such court or justice of the peace to imprisonment in the county jail and to pay a fine and costs, he shall be sentenced by such court or justice of the peace to labor on the public roads of the county under the direction of the county road engineer or other representative of the county court having such work in charge, during the time of such imprisonment and until said fine and costs are satisfied," etc.

So that whether originally announced as a part of the judgment of the court, the law imposes this as a part of every punishment of fine and imprisonment in the county jail and makes it the mandatory duty of the court to include it in its judgment.

[2] But we have the return of respondent saying that as a matter of fact he did at the time pronounce the judgment found in the record as amended, and our decisions say that on an application for a writ of mandamus to compel a trial judge to sign a bill of exceptions, his return is conclusive of the fact whether or not the bill of exceptions as presented is true. Douglass v. Loomis, Judge, 5 W. Va. 542, point 6 of the syllabus; Poteet v. County Commissioners, 30 W. Va. 58, 3 S. E. 97; State v. Cunningham, 33 W. Va. 607, 11 S. E. 76; Cummings v. Armstrong, Judge, 34 W. Va. 1, 11 S. E. 742.

[3] But it is contended that the court could not lawfully so amend its judgment in the absence of the accused. This proposition is negated by Price v. Commonwealth, 33 Grat. (Va.) 819, 36 Am. Rep. 797. During the same term the orders of the court are always in the breast of the court to make corrections according to the fact.

Our conclusion is to deny the writ.

(84 W. Va. 604)

VINTROUX v. CHILTON et al. (No. 3793.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 30, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CORPORATIONS §116—RATABLE CONTRIBUTION BY STOCKHOLDERS UNNECESSARY TO SALE BY CORPORATION OF PART OF STOCK.

Though ordinarily a contract by which a corporation and some of its stockholders, for a valuable consideration moving to the corporation, bind themselves to a sale of a portion of its capital stock to a stranger, all of which has been issued and is owned by its stockholders, might require ratable contribution by all of the stockholders of a sufficient number of shares to make up the amount of stock sold, a sale of stock so made for a consideration moving in part to the contracting stockholders, and evidenced by a contract indicative of purpose to bind them to a sale or transfer of the required amount of stock from their own holdings, does not, as matter of law or equity, require such ratable contribution.

2. CORPORATIONS §116—NONCONTRACTING STOCKHOLDERS NOT BOUND TO CONTRIBUTE ON CONTRACT OF CORPORATION TO SELL PART OF STOCK.

In such case, participation of a noncontracting stockholder in a stockholders' meeting authorizing negotiation of the contract, by a resolution which is silent as to the sources from which the stock is to be obtained, and a meeting of the board of directors at which the contract was ratified, and his joinder in a contract pooling practically all of the stock, including his, creating a voting trust, required by the contract of sale, and declaring the deposit of the stock to have been made for the uses, objects, and purposes set forth in the contract, do not conclusively bind such stockholder to contribute, nor make out a clear case of contract on his part so to do.

3. CORPORATIONS §116—IN CONSTRUCTION OF AMBIGUOUS CONTRACT CONDUCT OF PARTIES CONSIDERED.

As to the sources of contribution, a contract so made and evidenced is ambiguous and indefinite, and, on the interpretation thereof, the acts and conduct of the parties in the application of its terms and carrying them into effect, amounting to contemporaneous or practical construction, are entitled to great weight.

4. CORPORATIONS §116—EVIDENCE SHOWING STOCKHOLDER NOT BOUND TO CONTRIBUTE TO SALE OF STOCK BY CORPORATION.

The issuance of trustee's certificates to such noncontracting stockholder, representing all the shares originally owned by him and deposited with the trustee, and acquiescence therein for a period of more than three years, is practically conclusive in his favor, under the circumstances above indicated.

Appeal from Circuit Court, McDowell County.

Bill by L. T. Vintroux, revived after his death by J. A. Vintroux, administrator, etc., against the Holley Oil & Development Company, Joseph E. Chilton, trustee, etc., and James A. Holley and Samuel Stephenson, as directors, with cross-bill answer by Holley and Stephenson, and answer by Joseph E. Chilton, in his own right and as trustee, to the bill and cross-bill answer, and separate demurrer and answer to the bill by the United Fuel & Gas Company, a former stockholder, with replication to answer of defendants Holley and Stephenson. Bill and cross-bill dismissed, and complainant appeals. Decree entered against the Holley Oil & Development Company, and cause remanded for such further relief as plaintiff may show himself entitled to.

McClintic, Mathews & Campbell, of Charleston, for appellant.

Davis, Davis & Hall and Koontz & Hurlbutt, all of Charleston, for appellees.

POFFENBARGER, J. The controversy brought up for determination by this appeal arose out of a distribution of assets of a corporation, the Holley Oil & Development Company, among its stockholders, in the form of a dividend; the corporation having converted all of its assets into cash and terminated its operations. At that time L. T. Vintroux claimed to be the owner of 30 shares of the capital stock of the corporation, and his title to 15 shares thereof was admitted by the board of directors and the trustee, in whose hands the certificates of all of the shares were deposited, but they denied his right to the other 15 shares. They paid him what was estimated to be his dividend on 15 shares, and they say that, in view of the dispute as to his right to the dividend on the others, the money applicable to them, as estimated, was deposited in a bank, the Union Trust Company of Charleston, W. Va. At that time there seems to have been no controversy as to the amount of the dividend. At August rules, 1914, Vintroux filed his bill, praying for a decree against the corporation, the trustee, and the members of the board of directors for the amount of money in dispute, $14,000. At September rules, 1914, James A. Holley and Samuel Stephenson, two members of the board of directors and large stockholders of the corporation, filed their answer to the bill, in which they set up new matter and prayed for affirmative relief against Vintroux. On May 17, 1917, Joseph E. Chilton, who had no beneficial interest in the company, but was a trustee holding practically all of the stock and a director, filed his answer in his own right and as trustee, to both the bill and the cross-bill answer. On September 16, 1914, the United Fuel Gas Company, a corporation which had been a large stockholder in the Holley Oil & Development Company, just prior to the sale of its assets, filed its separate demurrer and answer to the bill.

Vintroux having died, the cause was revived in the name of his administrator, J. A. Vintroux, by an order entered January 3, 1918, and he filed an amended and supplemental bill and bill of revivor, containing a special replication to the matters set up in the answer of Holley and Stephenson as grounds of their prayer for cross-relief, May 15, 1918. On the motion of Holley and Stephenson it was ordered that their answer to the original bill should stand and be treated as their answer to the amended and supplemental bill. By the decree appealed from, both bills were dismissed.

The transaction involved began some time prior to the year 1905, with the organization of the Holley Oil & Development Company, having a subscribed capital stock of $7,500. Before its organization, James A. Holley, Samuel Stephenson, and L. T. Vintroux, the last-named party acting for and on behalf of the other two, had obtained leases upon various tracts and parcels of land in the counties of Putman, Lincoln, and Kanawha for oil and gas development. The leases were assigned to the corporation, and, on April 10, 1905, the former owners thereof entered into what was termed an agreement of settlement, by which Vintroux was to have 30 shares of the capital stock of the company, and Holley and Stephenson 300 shares each. It was further agreed that Holley and Stephenson should contribute for development and expenses the sum of $35,000, or such portion of that amount as they had not already expended. It was recited that Vintroux's $3,000 had been paid into the company, by cash and services rendered. At a meeting of the stockholders of the company, held on the same day, the provisions of this agreement were ratified, and it was provided that an additional 675 shares of stock should be issued, making a total of 750 shares, or $75,000; the shares being $100 each. Of the original stock, 36 shares were issued to Holley, 36 to Stephenson, 1 to Ira P. Champe, 1 to A. J. Guill, and 1 to Ira G. Sayre. Of the 675 new shares, representing the purchase price of the leases, 30 were issued to Vintroux, 321 to Holley, 321 to Stephenson, 2 to Champe, and 1 to W. E. R. Byrne. All of the shares were issued as being fully paid up and nonassessable.

At a meeting of the board of directors, held a little more than 2 months later, June 26, 1905, and attended by Holley, Stephenson, Vintroux, and Byrne, a resolution was adopted, reciting a proposition of the United States Natural Gas Company, a corporation, for acquisition by it of one-half of the stock of the Holley Oil & Development Company, upon terms to be agreed upon by the holders of the stock of the company, and upon condition that the former company should pay over to the president of the Holley Company a sum not less than $25,000, to be used and expended in further development of certain territory held under lease by the Holley Company, and authorizing and empowering the president, J. A. Holley, to accept the proposition, for and on behalf of the corporation, and to impose such other and further conditions, favorable to the corporation, as in his judgment might be proper and expedient, and to execute, acknowledge, and deliver on its behalf all apt and proper writings necessary to the carrying of such agreement into effect. This resolution set forth several of the material provisions of the contract afterwards made between Holley, Stephenson, and the Holley Oil & Development Company, of the one part, and the United States Natural Gas Company, of the other.

By that contract, dated July 6, 1905, the United States Natural Gas Company agreed to pay to the Holley Oil & Development Company $25,000, within 15 days from the date thereof, to be used in the work of testing and developing the territory, under the general direction of James A. Holley. It provided for a reorganization of the board of directors of the Holley Company in such manner as to make it consist of Stephenson, Holley, and Joseph E. Chilton, and for deposit of all of the shares of stock of that company, except 3 used for qualifying directors, and the 30 shares not then owned by Holley and Stephenson, in the hands of Joseph E. Chilton, to be held by him in trust for the purposes of the agreement, and, further, for like deposit of the 30 shares they did not then own, the Vintroux shares, if Holley and Stephenson should acquire them. Another provision of the contract, the one most vitally and directly involved here, gave the United States Natural Gas Company, upon certain conditions, the full one-half of the capital stock of the corporation, 375 shares, and obligated it to pay, as and for the purchase price thereof, to Stephenson and Holley, a sum equal to the amount of money actually expended prior to the date of the contract in procurement of the leases and development of the property, which is shown to have been $43,354.51. The condition precedent to this transfer of stock and obligation to pay was production from existing wells, and others to be drilled, of a daily open flow of 25,000,000 cubic feet of gas. The shares of stock to be transferred to Joseph E. Chilton, trustee, were to remain in his hands until the expiration of the trust created by the contract. To secure payment of the amount to become due Stephenson and Holley, the United States Natural Gas Company bound itself to deposit with the trustee $50,000 of its bonds, the coupons from which he was to detach from time to time and return to the company. Holley guaranteed that, at the date of the deposit of the shares, his company should be free from indebtedness, should not become indebted, except for expenses of usual and ordinary development of its property, and should not, during the period of deposit, distribute, declare, or pay a dividend upon any shares of its stock, or divide or apportion any of its property among its stockholders. About 5,000 acres of the company's territory was expressly excepted from the operation of the contract.

In case of the failure to produce an open flow of 25,000,000 cubic feet of gas per day, by the expenditure of the $25,000 advanced, the United States Natural Gas Company was to be under no obligation to purchase the 375 shares, or to pay Stephenson and Holley the purchase price thereof; but it should, nevertheless, have right of election to take and acquire the stock at and for the purchase price thereof, as defined by the contract, and, in the event of its failure to take such 375 shares, they were to be returned by the trustee to Stephenson and Holley, and the bonds deposited by the United States Natural Gas Company were to be returned to it, and the $25,000 advanced by that company to become a debt against the Holley Oil & Development Company and constitute a lien upon its property. The United States Natural Gas Company also bound itself within a reasonable time, to construct a pipe line from the territory of the Holley Company to connect with one then owned or subsequently to be constructed by itself, and also to take and receive through such pipe line 5,000,000 cubic feet of gas per day, at the price of 4 cents per 1,000 cubic feet. The stock deposited with the trustee was to remain in his hands for a period of 10 years, unless the United States Natural Gas Company should elect not to acquire one-half thereof, and during that period the trustee was to vote the stock in such manner as should be agreed upon between the parties. In the event of any dispute or disagreement that might arise in the execution of the contract, the trustee was constituted an arbitrator for settlement thereof. The United States Natural Gas Company was given an option to purchase the other stock of Holley and Stephenson, if they should desire to sell, and Stephenson and Holley were given a like option on the stock of the United States Natural Gas Company.

At a meeting of the board of directors held on July 6, 1905, the date of the contract, and attended by Vintroux, the contract was approved, ratified, and confirmed, and on the same day all of the stockholders entered into an agreement with Joseph E. Chilton, trustee, referring to the contract of the United States Natural Gas Company, reciting its provision that, upon certain terms and conditions to be performed by that company, "the said Holley and Stephenson will sell and transfer to the said United States Natural Gas Company 375 shares, or 50 per cent., of the stock of the said Holley Oil & Development Company," and the provision for deposit of the stock with the said trustee, and granting, conveying, assigning, and transferring to the trustee 747 shares, contributed as follows: Holley, 356; Stephenson, 356; Vintroux, 30; Champe, 3; Guill, 1; and Byrne, 1. This agreement provided that the shares so transferred should be held "for the uses, objects, and purposes as set forth and stipulated in the said writing of the 6th day of July, 1903, for the period of 10 years from said date, unless sooner terminated by the limitations in said writing provided." In the event of the acquisition of one-half of the shares by the United States Natural Gas Company, the trustee was to hold those shares for the benefit of itself and its assigns. Plenary authority was conferred upon the trustee to vote the stock held by him during the period of the trust. It was further agreed that, if the United States Natural Gas Company should buy the 375 shares, the trustee should execute and deliver to any person holding any shares, if required, a trustee's certificate, "showing the interest which such person may have in such stock and his right to participate in dividends declared thereon."

The condition precedent to vesting of title to 375 shares of stock of the Holley Oil & Development Company in the United States Natural Gas Company, production of sufficient gas to make a daily open flow of 25,000,000 cubic feet, was accomplished on a date not clearly disclosed by the record. It seems to have occurred prior to June 23, 1910, for on that day the trustee issued to Vintroux his certificates, representing 30 shares. The agreement pooling the stock and constituting the voting trust did not contemplate nor provide for issuance of such certificates, except in the event of the acquisition of one-half of the stock by the United States Natural Gas Company. The happening of that event was essential to determination of the ultimate rights of the parties as to the stock and the number of shares they should have, for the 375 shares going to the United States Natural Gas Company had to be contributed from the shares deposited with the trustee as the stock of Holley, Stephenson, Vintroux, Champe, Guill, and Byrne. That company seems to have acquired the 375 shares prior to September 4, 1909, for on that date it executed a deed by which it conveyed, assigned, and set over to the United Fuel Gas Company said 375 shares of stock together with other property.

On April 24, 1914, the property of the Holley Oil & Development Company was sold directly or indirectly to the Wayland Oil & Gas Company, apparently for the sum of $740,000, out of which a commission of $30,000 was paid for effectuation of the sale. A payment of $10,000 to the United Fuel Gas Company, in connection with the transaction, introduces an element of uncertainty as to the exact amount of the purchase price. If it is to be included, the property sold for $750,000; otherwise, for $740,000. As it was the owner of one-half of the stock, its assent to the sale of the property to the Wayland Oil & Gas Company was essential, and it seems to have been unwilling to give its assent. At least, its unwillingness is suggested in an argument founded upon facts and circumstances disclosed by the record, and averred by the trustee's answer. Its answer avers that, on March 24, 1914, it gave Stephenson an option until the 24th day of April, 1914, to purchase its 375 shares at the price of $370,000, of which sum $10,000 was then paid, and the balance of which was to be paid on or before April 24, 1914, by deposit thereof to its credit in the Charleston National Bank. It further avers that, prior to April 24, 1914, Stephenson did deposit or cause to be deposited to its credit the said sum of $360,000, and thereby became the owner of said stock. The trustee avers in his answer that the Wayland Oil & Gas Company paid the $10,000 to the United Fuel Gas Company, in order to obtain its consent to an option for the purchase of the Holley Oil & Development Company's property. Nor does the case seem to be fully developed as to the amount of commissions properly chargeable. The propriety of one payment, $30,000, is not questioned; but there are two other items, one of $5,000 and the other of $2,500, which, according to the answer of the trustee, were paid by stockholders out of their dividends, the $5,000 item by Holley, Stephenson, and Champe, and the $2,500 item, by Stephenson. The board of directors seem to have disbursed $691,000 to the stockholders and deposited $14,000 in the bank; the latter item being in dispute, making $705,000, leaving undistributed $35,000, an amount equal to the aggregate of two of the commission items. These uncertainties constitute the occasion of the claim set up in the amended and supplemental bill for an accounting and a decree going beyond the $14,000 admittedly applicable as a dividend to the 15 shares, the title to which is in dispute.

[1-3] The sources from which the 375 shares obtained by the United States Natural Gas Company were to be made up constitute the subject-matter of the basic inquiry in the cause. The theory of the bill and amended and supplemental bill is that Holley and Stephenson obligated themselves to furnish the 375 shares out of their holdings, and that they did so. On the contrary, it is insisted by the respondents that all of the holders of stock, including Vintroux, were to contribute ratably to the shares disposed of to the United States Natural Gas Company, and that one-half of his stock was included in the sale. In support of his position, the plaintiff relies largely upon the recital of the contract of April 10, 1905, saying Vintroux's stock had been paid for in cash and services, and the provision thereof obligating Holley and Stephenson to furnish at least $35,000 for development purposes and expenses; the provision of the contract of July 6, 1905, obligating the United States Natural Gas Company conditionally to pay to Holley and Stephenson, as and for the purchase price of the stock it was to obtain, a sum of money equal to the amount of cash actually expended by or on behalf of the company prior to that date, $43,354.51; the provision of the contract of July 6, 1905, between the stockholders and Joseph E. Chilton, trustee, reciting that Holley and Stephenson had conditionally agreed to sell and transfer one-half of the stock of the company to the United States Natural Gas Company; the issuance to Vintroux, presumably after the performance of the condition vesting title to one-half the stock in the United States Natural Gas Company, of trustee's certificates for 30 shares; and the fact that the certificates were issued by the trustee, upon the demand of Vintroux, after the former had communicated with Gen. Holley by telephone, and had been informed by Holley that Vintroux was entitled to 30 shares. In support of their position, the defendants strongly invoke the fact that the contract with the United States Natural Gas Company was made largely for the benefit of the Holley Oil & Development Company; the actual use of the $25,000 procured by that contract, in the development of the latter company's property; the provision of the contract of April 10, 1905, saying, "The profits and losses, if any may arise, from the said Holley Oil & Development Company in the future, to be shared by the parties holding the stock therein, in proportion to their respective interests;" the participation of Vintroux in the meeting of the board of directors of July 6, 1905, at which the contract for the sale of the shares was ratified and confirmed; the transfer of the shares of Vintroux to the trustee; and the recital of the trust agreement that the deposit was made for the uses, objects, and purposes set forth in the contract with the United States Natural Gas Company.

The inferences arising from Vintroux's participation in the meeting of the board of directors of June 26, 1905, authorizing and empowering Holley to enter upon the proposed negotiation with the United States Natural Gas Company, and that of July 6, 1905, at which the contract was ratified, his joinder in the contract of July 6, 1905, creating the trust and declaring the deposit of the stock to have been made for the uses, objects, and purposes of the contract, and his knowledge of the use to which the $25,000 advanced was devoted, are by no means conclusive, when viewed in the light of all the conditions and the express terms of some of the documents, indicating the contrary thereof. By the agreement of April 10, 1905, Holley and Stephenson, presumptively on account of the large amount of the stock assigned to them, bound themselves to expend for the benefit of the company at least $35,000, and there was no provision in that contract for reimbursement of that amount from the treasury of the company or otherwise. The context of this provision indicates that this money was to be expended on account of stock, by way of equalization. Vintroux was relieved from any such payment, on the ground of his having paid for his stock in cash and services. If this is the true interpretation of that contract respecting the advancement of the $35,000, the benefit derived from expenditure thereof belonged to the company and had been paid for, in so far as Vintroux or the company had any interest therein. Holley and Stephenson could not claim reimbursement of that money, in whole or in part, either from Vintroux or the corporation. It constituted the bulk of what had been expended on the property at the date of the execution of the contract of July 6, 1905. By the terms of that contract, provision was made for return of that sum of money to Holley and Stephenson. It was to come from the United States Natural Gas Company. No doubt it was sought in that direction and from that source, because it could not be claimed from the Holley Oil & Development Company or any of its stockholders. It may be that what was expended by them in excess of $35,000 might have constituted an indebtedness of the corporation, but it does not appear ever to have been asserted or claimed as such. The $25,000 advanced by the United States Natural Gas Company was not treated as purchase money of the stock to be obtained.

The status of that fund is not exactly defined by the contract. Under certain possible conditions foreseen, it was to become a debt of the Holley Oil & Development Company. The inference that it was to be considered as a part of the purchase money of the stock is clearly negated by that provision of the contract, which required the United States Natural Gas Company to pay to Holley and Stephenson "a sum equal to the amount of cash money actually expended prior to the date of the contract, by or on behalf of the Holley Company, in acquiring and developing the territory, as and for the purchase money" of such 375 shares of stock. Tested by its letter, therefore, the contract seems to have been intended to secure, conditionally, reimbursement of Holley and Stephenson for the money they had expended in the development of the property, and enhancement of the stock to be retained by them and all other stock in the company, by the increased development to be effected by the expenditure of the $25,000 advanced by the United States Natural Gas Company, connection of the leased territory with that company's pipe line, and its purchase of gas produced at 4 cents per 1000 cubic feet. For such reimbursement they had no just or equitable right to sell the stock of anybody but themselves. By the sale of 375 shares out of their 620 shares, they obtained the return of the $43,000 they had expended, and effected an arrangement by which the remaining 245 shares were greatly enhanced in value. Hence it does not appear that they necessarily contemplated a contribution of stock on the part of Vintroux. There was no provision in the contract for payment to him of any part of the $35,000 or $43,000 paid to Holley and Stephenson, on account of the money they had expended for the company. Inasmuch as at least $35,000 of that money had been invested in the company by them and was not to be returned, they had no right to take it to themselves in part consideration of the sale of the stock of Vintroux. In other words, they could neither sell any interest in the company, nor any stock of Vintroux, as a means of procuring payment of any part of $35,000, for there was no obligation upon the company or Vintroux to repay any part of it.

While it would be equitable and just to require Vintroux to contribute, if a contract had been made purely and solely for the benefit of the corporation and he had accepted the benefit thereof, it would be manifestly unjust to require him to contribute one-half of his stock in a sale that would involve large repayment of money to Holley and Stephenson, which they had no right to exact either from the company or from him. If, under the circumstances of this case, he should be required to contribute at all, his contribution should be determined with reference to the disposition of the proceeds of the sale of the stock. As neither he nor the company got any part of the $43,000, there is no reason for requiring him to exchange his stock for it. If he had received part of that money, he might be required to contribute pro rata to the stock. Omission to provide any such basis of contribution in the contract, any resolution of the directors, or by any other means, argues very strongly that no contribution from him was contemplated or expected. The recital in the trust agreement of July 6, 1905, saying it had been stipulated and agreed in the contract with the United States Natural Gas Company that, upon certain terms and conditions to be performed, Holley and Stephenson would sell and transfer to that company 375 shares of stock, amounted to an interpretation of that contract, in a contract signed by Vintroux, as well as by Holley and Stephenson, and weighs very strongly against any inference of intent on the part of Vintroux to contribute, arising from his having signed that contract, and, on the same day, ratified the other contract by his participation in the meeting of the board of directors.

Moreover, the declaration of the purpose of the deposit, made in the contract of July 6, 1905, creating the trust, must be read and considered in the light of this recital. It must be read, also, in the light of those provisions of the contract which show the uses and purposes for which the deposit of the stock was made. It was not made for the purpose of determining the basis of contribution to the shares to be taken by the United States Natural Gas Company, for that contract is entirely silent as to that matter. Some of the principal purposes of that deposit were to effect and maintain a particular organization of the board of directors; to secure the United States Natural Gas Company its 375 shares, if it should elect to take them; to shield the Holley Oil & Development Company from indebtedness, except such as should be necessary for preservation of its properties and development in the usual and ordinary way; to prevent declarations or payments of any dividends and division of any of its property among its stockholders, pending the election of the United States Natural Gas Company to take or reject the stock; and to guarantee the voting of the stock in accordance with the mutual agreement of the parties to the contract, or in such manner as the trustee should determine, in the event of a disagreement. Finally, the contract declares it to be the intent of the parties to vest the title to the stock in the trustee for voting purposes. These are the direct and declared uses, objects, and purposes of the deposit of the stock.

Of course, all of the stipulations and undertakings of the contract were in some measure dependent upon the deposit of the stock. In other words, the deposit of the stock was a means by which the parties undertook to safeguard or guarantee performance of all the stipulations of the agreement. But the performance of those stipulations, agreements, and conditions was not the objects of the trust, as refined by the contract. The clause under consideration has reference to the uses, objects, and purposes of the trust, set forth and stipulated in the contract, not to all the stipulations, objects, and purposes of the contract. The scope of the trust was much narrower than the scope of the contract. It related to the stock only, while the contract embraced a great many other things. The former did not touch the subject of contribution. As to division of shares, it had only one purpose, the holding of 375 shares for the United States Natural Gas Company, without reference to the sources from which they came.

[4] As to the sources of contributions to make up the 375 shares, the contract evidenced by the resolutions and contracts disclosed by the record is, to say the least, thoroughly ambiguous. If, construed in the light of all the facts and circumstances, it does not clearly absolve Vintroux from liability to contribute. It is uncertain and indefinite as to imposition of such liability. In the interpretation of such contracts, the definition or construction put upon them by the parties, in carrying them into execution, is allowed very great weight. The trite expression of Lord Chancellor Sugden, with reference to the rule, will bear repeating again:

"Tell me what you have done under such a deed, and I will tell you what that deed means." Chapman v. Coal & Coke Co., 54 W. Va. 193, 200, 46 S. E. 262, 264; Caperton v. Caperton, 36 W. Va. 486, 15 S. E. 257.

Nearly four years before any question arose as to the manner in which the 375 shares of the United States Natural Gas Company were to be made up, the trustee, who was also a member of the board of directors, issued to Vintroux trustee's certificates representing 30 shares of stock. Before that time the condition upon which the title to the 375 shares was to vest in the United States Natural Gas Company had been performed, and it had taken the stock under the terms of the contract. After that had occurred, the trustee was at liberty to issue trustee's certificates representing stock, but not before. Prior to the happening of that event nobody could say whether the United States Natural Gas Company owned any of the stock, for its contract of purchase was conditional. Mr. Chilton swears that, according to his recollection, he called up Gen. Holley and asked him how many shares Vintroux was entitled to, before he issued the certificates to him, and was informed that he was entitled to 30 shares. Gen. Holley and Maj. Chilton were two of the directors, and, evidently, managing directors. They were no doubt more familiar with the contract and understood its terms and provisions better than anybody else connected with the Holley Oil & Development Company. The company and all of the other stockholders acquiesced in the issuance of these certificates and their possession by Vintroux from June, 1910, until April, 1914. Hence it may well be said that the corporation and its directors and stockholders construed the contract evidenced by the resolutions and agreements referred to as not requiring any contribution on the part of Vintroux.

Our conclusion is that Vintroux did not part with his title to any of his shares, nor bind himself to do so. He is therefore entitled to a decree against the Holley Oil & Development Company for the sum of $14,000, the amount admitted to be due by way of dividend upon 15 shares of his stock. If the fund has been wrongfully paid out or misappropriated, he is entitled to a decree against the directors responsible for such invasion of his right. He is also entitled to interest on said sum of $14,000 from April 24, 1914, until paid. Cresap v. Brown, 96 S. E. 66. Inasmuch as the record does not fully develop the facts relating to the exact amount of the purchase money and the commissions and expenses chargeable against it, nor show necessity for a personal decree against any director, a decree will be entered here against the Holley Oil & Development Company for said sum of $14,000 and interest thereon as aforesaid, and the cause will be remanded for such further relief as the plaintiff may show himself to be entitled to.

(84 W. Va. 709)

CARDER et al. v. JOHNSON et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 7, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ↔439—
PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES OF VENDORS NECESSARY PARTIES TO SUIT FOR SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

In a suit by the vendee to compel specific performance of a contract of sale of land made by two vendors, both of whom are dead, the personal representative of the one who survived his covendor is a necessary party, and omission to make him a party is not excused by the joinder of the personal representative of the other.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ↔439—
NONJOINDER NOT EXCUSED BY LAPSE OF TIME, RAISING PRESUMPTION OF PAYMENT.

Nor does lapse of time excuse such omission; the presumption of payment being a rebuttable one, and not conclusive.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ↔1178(7)—ON WANT OF NECESSARY PARTIES COURT WILL REVERSE AND REMAND.

On an appeal from a decree entered in a cause in which the record discloses on its face omission of a necessary party defendant, the appellate court will reverse the decree, decline to pass upon the merits of the cause, and remand it, with leave to the plaintiff to amend by bringing in the omitted party.

4. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ↔106(1)—IN AC-TION BY PURCHASER, CLAIMANTS OF EASE-MENT NECESSARY PARTIES.

Claimants of an easement on land which has been sold by an executory contract of sale, purporting to have been granted by the vendor, his heirs or assigns, while the vendee was in possession of the land, are proper parties to a bill seeking specific performance of the contract.

5. COSTS ↔236—ON REVERSAL FOR WANT OF NECESSARY PARTY COSTS IN APPELLATE COURT AWARDED APPELLANT.

When the trial court has improperly overruled a demurrer to a bill and dismissed it as upon the merits, and the decree is reversed for want of a necessary party, costs in the appellate court are awarded to the appellant.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Doddridge County.

Suit for specific performance by Otto Carder and others against Aaron Johnson and others. Demurrer to bill sustained as to certain defendants, and as respects the named defendant, overruled, and bill dismissed on final hearing, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed, demurrer sustained, in so far as not sustained below, and cause remanded, with leave to plaintiffs to amend.

G. W. Farr, of West Union, and F. O. Sutton, of Clarksburg, for appellants.

J. Ramsey, of West Union, for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, J. The decree under review dismissed, on final hearing, a bill filed for specific performance of an alleged written contract of sale of a 70-acre tract of land purporting to have been executed for and on behalf of the owners or vendors, by an agent, after the overruling of a demurrer thereto. The contract, a title bond, is dated July 8, 1875, and the plaintiffs and their predecessors in title have been in possession of the land since a date near that of the paper relied upon as a contract.

The alleged vendee was Manley Carder, great-grandfather of the plaintiffs; Daniel Sherwood and Robert Johnson were the vendors; and E. O. Sperry was the agent. The purchase price, as set forth in the bond, was $280, of which $50 was paid on delivery of the bond, $50 to be paid on the 1st day of September, 1875, and the residue in two equal annual installments with interest. Manley Carder seems never to have occupied the land. The theory of the bill is that he put his son, Jacob H. Carder, in possession thereof, and delivered to him the bond. That instrument bears a written assignment by J. H. Carder to R. A. Carder and D. F. Carder dated December 20, 1876. According to the testimony of D. F. Carder, the only living party to the transaction, he sold his interest, so acquired, to R. A. Carder, in consideration of the amount of money he had paid to Jacob H. Carder. The sale by J. H. Carder to R. A. and D. F. Carder seems to have been further represented by a title bond executed by the vendor and three notes executed by the vendees, two for $60 each, and one for $105. The remainder of the purchase price, $75, seems to have been paid in cash. Rufus Carder resided on the land until the date of his death, October, 1910, and died intestate, leaving ten children, seven of whom, together with the widow, conveyed their interests in the land to Otto Carder, one of the sons, and he and the other two, as well as an infant sister, brought this suit; the infant joining merely to validate her deed, the bill says.

Robert Johnson, one of the vendors, died a great many years ago, and Daniel Sherwood, the other alleged vendor, died about the year 1900. Aaron Johnson, a son of Robert Johnson, purchased the interests of all of his coheirs, and, at a judicial sale made under a decree settling the estate of Daniel Sherwood, he purchased all of the Sherwood interests in the land. By a deed dated June 26, 1906, he conveyed the coal in the land to W. F. Baird. He leased the land for oil and gas purposes to John B. Hoffmiller, by an agreement dated November 30, 1910. This lease seems to have been passed by assignment to the Pocahontas Oil & Gas Company, a corporation. By a deed dated June 28, 1905, he granted a pipe line right of way to the Philadelphia Company of West Virginia, a corporation, which company, by deed dated July 31, 1914, leased it to the Pittsburgh & West Virginia Gas Company, a corporation.

[1] The parties defendant to the suit are Aaron Johnson, Henry Ash, administrator of the estate of Robert Johnson, deceased, and the above-named grantees of Aaron Johnson and their assigns. Though Daniel Sherwood survived Robert Johnson, the personal representative of his estate is not made a party. The administrator or executor of a deceased vendor of real estate is a necessary party to a bill filed for specific performance of the contract. Richmond v. Richmond, 62 W. Va. 206, 219, 57 S. E. 736; Hill v. Proctor, 10 W. Va. 59. Similarly, the personal representative of the vendor is the proper party to sue for the purchase money. Steenrod's Adm'r v. Railroad Co., 27 W. Va. 1. Another line of cases asserting the same principle are suits to compel releases of vendor's liens reserved by vendors who have died. The personal representative of the vendor is, in such case, an indispensable party. Thompson v. Hern, 62 W. Va. 497, 59 S. E. 504. So the personal representative of the creditor in a deed of trust is a necessary party to a bill to remove a cloud and enforce the lien of the deed of trust. Bryan, Trustee, v. McCann, 55 W. Va. 372, 47 S. E. 143.

On the assumption that Johnson and Sherwood were joint obligees, the latter alone could have sued for the purchase money at law, after the death of the former. In other words, the right of action for the debt survived to Sherwood, and, on his death, went to his personal representative. 1 Chitty Pl. 19. If it be conceded that payment might have been made by Manley Carder or his assignees to Robert Johnson or his personal representative, and it manifestly could have been made to Johnson himself, it is clear that it might have been made to Sherwood or the personal representative of his estate, after the death of Johnson, assuming it not to have been previously paid. Hence, for the purposes of this case, it is unnecessary to enter upon any inquiry as to whether payment might rightfully have been made to any person other than Sherwood, or his administrator, after Johnson's death. As the bill proceeds upon the theory of payment of the purchase money and alleges payment thereof, the personal representative of Sherwood's estate is a necessary party. The allegation of payment is made against him, as well as against the administrator of Johnson.

[2] The long lapse of time, raising a presumption of payment, does not excuse the omission to make the personal representative a party, for the presumption is a rebuttable one. Mong v. Roush, 29 W. Va. 119, 129, 11 S. E. 906; Criss v. Criss, 28 W. Va. 388; Hale v. Pack's Ex'rs, 10 W. Va. 145. In Thompson v. Hern, 62 W. Va. 497, 59 S. E. 504, the debt was much more than 20 years old, and in Hill v. Proctor, 10 W. Va. 59, it seems to have been more than 30 years old.

[3] There is no formal assignment of error to the overruling of the demurrer, but the defect of parties is apparent and it is the practice of this court to decline to decide in any case any matter affecting a person who is not a party to the cause; and it will reverse a decree or judgment, entered in the absence of a necessary party, on its own motion. Hitchcox v. Hitchcox, 39 W. Va. 607, 20 S. E. 595; Morgan v. Blatchley, 33 W. Va. 155, 10 S. E. 282; Snaveley v. Pickle, 29 Grat. (Va.) 27.

[4] As to the Philadelphia Company and the Pittsburgh & West Virginia Gas Company, the demurrer was sustained, and the bill dismissed, without prejudice to the rights of the plaintiffs. Inasmuch as the plaintiffs, according to the allegations of their bill, were the beneficial owners of the land, and Johnson a mere trustee of the legal title, the former are clearly entitled to have an adjudication of their beneficial or equitable title, if any, against said companies, even though they may have obtained such right, under the power of eminent domain, as precludes their ouster from the right of way. Given v. United Fuel Gas Co., 99 S. E. 476. To what extent the relief against them might go it is not necessary to inquire, for the plaintiffs may not be able to show themselves entitled to any on final hearing.

On the ground of defect of parties, the demurrer was properly sustained as to said companies; but, if and when this defect shall have been cured by an amendment, they will be proper parties to the bill. As to all of the other defendants, the demurrer should have been sustained, and the plaintiffs permitted to amend by making the personal representative of Daniel Sherwood a party.

For the errors aforesaid, the decree complained of will be reversed, the demurrer sustained in so far as the court below did not sustain it, and the cause remanded, with leave to the plaintiffs to amend.

[5] As to costs in this court, this cause is governed by the decision in Rowan v. Tracy, Ex'r, 74 W. Va. 649, 82 S. E. 478, and they will be decreed to the appellants.

(84 W. Va. 714)

KNIGHT v. SMITH et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 7, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

LOGS AND LOGGING §3(11) — PURCHASER SEVERING STANDING TIMBER HAS REASONABLE TIME FOR REMOVAL.

Where by deed or contract one purchases standing timber for a sum paid or stipulated to be paid therefor, and within the time stipulated for removing it actually severs the trees from the ground, he may of right, unless restrained by the terms of the deed or contract, enter or continue on the land a reasonable length of time, to remove from the premises the timber so severed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Doddridge County.

Suit for injunction by Z. W. Knight against W. Frank Smith and others. From a final decree in favor of named defendant, dissolving the preliminary injunction and dismissing the bill, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. V. Blair, of West Union, for appellant.
J. Ramsey, of West Union, and Hoffheimer & Templeman, of Clarksburg, for appellee.

MILLER, P. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a final decree of the circuit court of Doddridge County, pronounced on the 28th day of August, 1917, dissolving the preliminary injunction theretofore awarded, and dismissing the bill.

By the preliminary injunction defendants W. Frank Smith, Charles E. Jones and others were enjoined and restrained from entering or trespassing upon a tract of one hundred and thirty-three acres of land belonging to plaintiff and from cutting any trees and timber thereon standing or severed from the land, and from hauling and removing any logs or the boards and lumber manufactured therefrom, and from operating the saw mill on the premises, and from claiming title to said logs, lumber and timber.

The rights of the parties depend upon the proper construction of the following contract and what was done under it by the parties or their privies:

"Canton, W. Va., Jan. 12, 1915.

"Article of Agreement.

"This the 12th day of Jan., 1915, I agree to pay to Z. W. Knight the amount of Seven Hundred Dollars, $700.00, for all timber on his farm with the exception of the walnut in cleared ground and the chestnut under ten inches in diameter, $350 to be paid down and the residue to be paid in 8 mo. Limited time for taking timber off of ground is two years with the privilege of setting mill and logging timber the most convenient way with as little damage to cleared land as possible.

"Z. W. Knight.
"L. L. Shinn."

The defendant W. Frank Smith acquired his rights from said Shinn by assignment as follows:

"For value received, I hereby sell to W. F. Smith the timber mentioned and described in the within contract and sale. And I do hereby assign to the said W. F. Smith all my right and interest in said timber and my rights under this contract.

"This the 5th day of May, 1916.

"L. L. Shinn."

The position of plaintiff, as disclosed by his bill and his evidence, is that his contract with Shinn was not a deed conveying the timber, but a mere license to go upon the land and to cut, manufacture and remove the timber within the two years prescribed for taking it off the ground, and that all lumber and timber, whether severed or not, remaining on the land after January 12, 1917, became or remained his property, and though fully paid for by the purchaser, the latter acquired no right of removal after that time.

The contract of the plaintiff is not a deed, but it is signed by him and is at least a contract calling for a deed if one was necessary to carry the contract into effect. This contract by its plain terms is for "all timber on his [the seller's] farm with the exception of the walnut in cleared ground and the chestnut under ten inches in diameter" without condition or limitation as to time and without terms of reservation or defeasance. True, there is a limit "for taking timber off of ground." But is this not in the nature of a covenant rather than a condition or limitation on the title of the purchaser? It seems to us it should be so construed, for in cases like this where the sale is absolute for a full consideration paid or to be paid, unless there is something in the very terms of the contract or deed to defeat the title of the purchaser, forfeiture of those rights, not favored in law, ought not to be read into the contract. In Adkins v. Huff, 58 W. Va. 645, 648, 52 S. E. 773, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 649, 6 Ann. Cas. 246, it is said there ought to be no distinction between rights conferred by deeds and those acquired by contracts which have not the form nor all the requisites of a deed. Numerous cases are cited, only a few of which involved deeds, the others involved mere contracts, some wholly executory, others passing an equitable title, and where as here the purchase money had all been paid.

Our decisions, following the decisions of many other courts, make a distinction between these cases where the contract, wholly executory, gives right to enter on land and cut and remove timber, within a certain limit, and to be paid for as removed at a certain rate per thousand feet or other rate, and cases where the contract amounts to a sale or conveyance of the timber in place for a stipulated price paid down. In the first class the right and title passes only as the timber is removed and paid for, and after the time has expired within which the right to remove is given, the right is gone, and the contract is at an end. Such contracts amount to mere licenses. In recent Virginia cases, cited and relied on by counsel for appellant, it seems that all deeds and contracts containing term limits for cutting and removing the timber are put upon the same basis. McCorkle v. Kincaid, 121 Va. 546, 555, 93 S. E. 642, and cases cited. But our rule is different. Our cases hold that although proper consideration must be given to the limitation as to time, so as to effectuate the intention of the parties, nevertheless, when the deed or contract grants or gives right to the timber for a consideration fully paid, and where the purchaser within the time limit has actually cut and severed the timber and thereby converted it from real estate into personalty, he has the continuing right thereafter within a reasonable time to enter or remain upon the land to remove the timber so severed. Our cases in which this rule has been recognized, approved or applied are Null v. Elliott, 52 W. Va. 229, 232, 43 S. E. 173; Adkins v. Huff, 58 W. Va. 645, 650, 52 S. E. 773, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 649, 6 Ann. Cas. 246; Keystone Lumber Co. v. Brooks, 65 W. Va. 512, 516, 64 S. E. 614; Buskirk Bros. v. Peck, 57 W. Va. 360, 367, 50 S. E. 432; Buskirk v. Sanders, 70 W. Va. 363, 369, 73 S. E. 937; Hardman v. Brown, 77 W. Va. 478, 484, 88 S. E. 1016. Among the cases from other states in which the same rule has been laid down and applied are Mahan v. Clark, 219 Pa. 229, 68 Atl. 667, 12 Ann. Cas. 729; Alexander v. Bauer, 94 Minn. 174, 102 N. W. 387; Golden v. Glock, 57 Wis. 118, 15 N. W. 12, 46 Am. Rep. 32. It is quite unnecessary to discuss further the principles underlying these decisions. That has been sufficiently done in the cases cited. This rule is recognized in the more recent case of Williams v. McCarty, 82 W. Va. 158, 160, 95 S. E. 638.

The bill alleges and the answer denies that defendants were undertaking to cut and remove timber not severed prior to January 12, 1917. There is no appreciable evidence showing or tending to show that defendants had cut or were attempting to sever any timber after that date. All that was proposed or attempted prior to the injunction was to cut into logs and manufacture into lumber the trees felled prior to January 12, 1917, at the mill on the land, which the contract provided for. Defendants claim no other rights. According to our decisions they have this right.

The conclusion reached on the main question renders it unnecessary to discuss the other question presented, namely, whether prior to January 12, 1917, plaintiff had agreed with defendant Smith to extend the time for cutting and removing the timber. There is a good deal of testimony tending to support Smith that there was such an agreement and that it was to have been reduced to writing, but that at the last plaintiff refused to do so. Whereupon Smith put a large force to work and succeeded in severing practically all the standing timber contracted for, and which by the injunction plaintiff sought to prevent him from removing from the premises.

We, therefore, affirm the decree.

(84 W. Va. 654)

FURROW v. BAIR et al. (No. 3752.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 7, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SALES §199—TIME OF PASSING OF TITLE QUESTION OF INTENT.

The time at which title passes under the terms of a contract of sale is a question of intent, to be gathered from the terms of the contract, the nature of the property, its condition and situation, and the purposes sought to be accomplished thereby.

2. LOGS AND LOGGING §3(7)—UNDER EXECUTORY CONTRACT FOR SALE OF TIMBER TITLE DOES NOT PASS UNTIL SEVERANCE FROM LAND.

A writing purporting to convey the standing timber on a tract of land for a consideration of $4.50 per 1,000 feet, to be ascertained by measuring the logs after severance, and to be paid for as the same is shipped, and reserving a lien upon the manufactured product for any unpaid purchase money, but reserving no lien upon the standing timber for the purchase price, and giving the purchaser 12 months within which to cut such timber, after which all timber remaining standing shall revert to and become the property of the landowner, properly construed, is an executory contract for the sale of such timber, and the title thereto does not pass until the same is severed from the real estate.

3. LOGS AND LOGGING §3(14)—ON BREACH OF CONTRACT TO CUT STANDING TIMBER SELLER CAN RECOVER DAMAGES.

The provision that the purchaser shall have 12 months within which to cut such timber is a covenant to perform the contract within that time, and in the event of his failure in that regard the seller, if he is injured thereby, will have his action to recover damages therefor.

4. LOGS AND LOGGING §3(15)—MEASURE OF DAMAGES ON BREACH OF COVENANT TO REMOVE STANDING TIMBER DETERMINED.

The measure of damages for the breach of such a covenant is the excess of the purchase price over and above the value of the timber not removed at the time of the breach.

5. SALES §358(5)—METHOD FOR DETERMINATION OF PRICE OF STANDING TIMBER NOT REMOVED AS AGREED.

Where, in a contract for the sale of personal property, the price to be paid is to be determined by applying an agreed unit price to the number of such units, to be ascertained by measurements to be made at a certain time, and the purchaser, by removing or disposing of the property before such measurements are made, puts it beyond the power of the parties to fix such purchase price in the manner agreed upon, the seller will be allowed to resort to other evidence to determine the quantity delivered.

Error from Circuit Court, Raleigh County.

Action by J. L. Furrow against John T. Bair and others. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Reversed, verdict set aside, and cause remanded for a new trial.

John M. Anderson, of Beckley, for plaintiffs in error.

A. P. Farley, C. M. Ward, and Kyle D. Harper, all of Beckley, for defendant in error.

RITZ, J. The plaintiff, J. L. Furrow, and his brother, C. S. Furrow being joint owners of a tract of land containing 147½ acres upon which there was some standing timber, the said J. L. Furrow, acting for himself and as agent for his brother, on the 5th day of May, 1914, entered into a contract with the defendants for the sale of this timber. Shortly after the making of the contract the defendants moved their mill upon the land and began cutting and removing the timber. It appears that only a small part of the 147½ acres was timbered, and that the timber which was standing thereon was divided by cleared land into two tracts. Because of the fact that the determination of the questions arising in this case involve the construction of the contract, we set the same out in hæc verba. It is as follows:

"This contract of sale, made and entered into this the 5th day of May, 1914, by and between J. L. Furrow in his own behalf and right, and the said J. L. Furrow for and in behalf of C. S. Furrow, for whom the said J. L. Furrow is the duly authorized agent for the purposes of this contract, party of the first part, and J. T. Bair and L. B. Phillips, parties of the second part, all of Raleigh county, West Virginia, witnesseth: That for and in consideration of the sum of $1.00 and of the further stipulations and agreements hereinafter contained, the said party of the first part for himself and for the said C. S. Furrow, whose duly authorized agent he is for the purposes of making this sale, does hereby grant, sell and convey unto the parties of the second part, with general warranty of title, all the merchantable timber of every kind, on the tract of land known as the 'Albert Furrow tract, of 147½ acres of land,' lying in Shady Springs district, in the said county of Raleigh, and adjoining the C. H. Prince tract of land, and land owned by the Beaver Coal Company, with the right to remove said timber and to manufacture the same on said tract of land. The said parties of the second part, as part consideration for the said timber and rights of way above mentioned, hereby assign to the party of the first part a certain note now belonging to them, dated March 30, 1914, given for the sum of five hundred and twenty ($520.00) dollars, signed by C. P. Phillips, made to the order of George Gadd, payable in six months, with interest from April 7, 1914, until paid, and indorsed by G. W. Gadd.

"The parties of the second part further agree to pay for said timber the sum of $4.50 per thousand feet, the number of thousand feet to be ascertained by log measure, to be determined by Doyle's rule. It is further agreed that after the value of the said amount of five hundred and twenty ($520.00) dollars is obtained by the said second parties of the said timber, at the said price of $4.50 per thousand feet, that the payments shall be made to the said first party at the said rate of $4.50 per thousand feet as the said second parties shall ship the said timber. It is further agreed between the parties hereto that the said second parties shall be given twelve months in which to cut the said timber, after the expiration of which twelve months all timber remaining standing on the said land shall revert to and become the property of the said J. L. Furrow and C. S. Furrow. The said first party further grants to the said second parties the right to use the said tract of land for the cutting and removal of the said timber and lumber manufactured therefrom. The parties of the second part further agree that they will use due care in the cutting of said timber, so as to secure as much lumber as possible, consistent with good management. It is further agreed that all manufactured lumber of every kind shall stand good for any money due under this contract, and the party of the first part reserves the first lien on said manufactured lumber, for the recovery of any money due thereon."

It will be noticed that the contract provides that the timber is to be cut and removed within 12 months from its date, and that any timber standing after that time shall revert to the owners of the land. It appears that the defendants cut all of the timber off of one of the segregated boundaries, but that the other small area covered with timber, known as the "Parker Hollow lot," was not cut at the time the contract expired. Subsequent to the making of this contract C. S. Furrow assigned all of his interest therein to the plaintiff, J. L. Furrow. The defendants were not allowed to cut the timber which was standing at the expiration of the contract. This suit was then brought by J. L. Furrow to recover the price of the timber. His theory is that the contract above referred to is a deed, which vested the title in the timber in the defendants at the time of its delivery, and that he was entitled to recover the purchase money, regardless of whether the timber was cut or not, and if his construction of the contract is correct this would be the case. His contention was that not only had the defendants not cut all of the timber on the land, but that they had not paid for all that they had cut. Upon the trial it seems from one of the bills of exception that the jury found that payment had been made for all timber cut and removed, but under the instructions of the court the jury found for the plaintiff for the price of the Parker Hollow timber, basing their verdict upon the estimated amount thereof at the price fixed in the contract. The only substantial question for solution is the proper construction of the contract above set out. If it was a deed which vested in the defendants the title to the timber upon its delivery, then the theory upon which the trial proceeded was correct. If, on the other hand, it was an executory contract for the sale of this timber, under which the title did not vest in the defendants until the same was cut, the judgment complained of is wrong.

[1-3] This paper, it is true, contains words which are ordinarily used in a deed. It attempts to grant and convey the timber with general warranty of title; but is this sufficient of itself to carry the title to the timber with the delivery of the paper? The purpose, of course, of all construction, is to arrive at the intention of the parties, and this must be done from the paper itself, where there is no ambiguity upon the face of it, and it can hardly be said that there is ambiguity upon the face of this paper. Ordinarily it is necessary to a completed contract of sale that the property intended to be sold be ascertained and designated, so that there may be no uncertainty as to its identity, its quantity, quality, and its price. As long as anything remains to be done by the vendor, or the joint action of both parties, for the purpose of ascertaining any of these facts, the title does not pass. Of course this does not mean that all of these elements must be absolutely certain, but they must be so determined as that all that remains is some calculation or measurement in order to determine the agreed price, or the quantity of the article sold. It has been repeatedly held that where personal property is the subject of the sale, and it has been delivered, the fact that the amount thereof must be ascertained by measurement or weight does not prevent the title from passing at delivery; but those exceptions, which are referred to in the case of Buskirk Bros. v. Peck, 57 W. Va. 360-368, 50 S. E. 432, have no application to the case here. Taking this paper altogether, the question is: What was the intention of the parties as to the passing of the title to the subject-matter of the contract? In the first place, while it is in some respects in the form of a deed, it is made by one joint owner on behalf of himself and his co-owner, without exhibiting any authority under seal clothing him with the power to convey the title of his co-owner. The purchase price is not ascertained, nor can it be ascertained from any calculation or measurement which could be made at the time. Under the terms of the contract it could only be ascertained after the timber is severed and measured in the log. If the determination of the purchase price depended simply on counting the trees, or some similar operation, then it might be said that it was not indefinite; but such is not the case here. The ascertainment thereof depends upon something to be done with the subject-matter of the contract. It must be changed in its form before it is known how much is to be paid. Further than this the time of payment is not at all certain, depending entirely upon when the timber is cut and ready to ship; it being provided under the contract that the same shall be paid for when it is shipped. This it might be assumed would be within the 12 months, provided the parties carried out their contract, and cut all the timber within that time; but even assuming that they severed all of the timber from the tract of land within the 12 months, and the title to it had vested in the defendants, still the purchase money would not be payable until the timber had been shipped, which might be long after the 12-month period, for under our decisions it is held that, where a limited time is given within which to remove timber, the purchaser, if he has severed the same from the land within the time provided in the contract, may take the same off after the expiration of that period.

Again, it will be seen from an examination of the contract that a lien is reserved upon the manufactured lumber of every kind for any unpaid purchase money therefor. It would be strange, if the owner of the land intended to grant the timber as it stood upon the tract of land, that he reserved no lien thereon for the purchase money, but did reserve in the contract a lien upon the manufactured product for purchase money. This, it seems to us, makes it clear that there was no intention to pass title until after the timber was cut. In all of the cases cited by the defendant in error in support of the judgment below, the amount of the purchase money was a definite, fixed sum at the time the contract was entered into. There was nothing left to be done, except for the purchaser to pay it, and it was accordingly held in those cases that the title to the timber passed with the delivery of the deed. This case is more like the case of Buskirk Bros. v. Peck, 57 W. Va. 360, 50 S. E. 432, where, because of the uncertainty as to the amount of the purchase money, it was held that the title did not pass until the timber was severed, for until that time the contract was simply an executory one. In the case of Wilson v. Buffalo Collieries Co., 79 W. Va. 279, 91 S. E. 449, we had under consideration a contract for the sale of standing timber. In that case all of the elements were certain, definite, and fixed at the time of the execution of the paper, and it was held that it passed the title on its delivery; but it was likewise held in that case, referring to a second contract involved, that:

"A sealed contract, reciting a sale and conveyance of timber, for a nominal consideration, but not formally granting or conveying the same, and containing covenants on the part of the party of the second part to sever, manufacture, and remove the timber, and pay for it at certain prices, as they manufacture it into lumber, is not a deed, and does not pass the legal title to the timber."

That is the case here. While this paper in some of its aspects is in the form of a deed, when all of its parts are read together, we are forced to the conclusion that it was not the intention of the parties to pass title to any of the timber until it was severed from the land. The time fixed for the determining the purchase price was after the severance of the timber, and the fact that the sellers reserved a lien upon the manufactured product, and no lien upon the standing timber, for the purchase money, is practically conclusive that the intention was to pass the title after the timber was cut from the land. This being the case, the provision in the contract for removing the timber within 12 months is a covenant to perform the executory contract within that time. It is an agreement upon the part of the defendants that they will cut all of the timber within 12 months. If they fail to perform their covenant in this regard, they are, of course, liable in an action for such damages as result to the owners of the land.

[4] The measure of damages for the breach of this covenant would be the difference in the value of the timber standing upon the land at the expiration of the 12 months and the price agreed to be paid for the said timber as it was severed, provided, always, that the timber so standing was worth less than the price agreed to be paid. McCorkle & Son v. Kincaid, 121 Va. 546, 93 S. E. 642.

There is some criticism by the plaintiff in error of the declaration in this case. It consists of the common counts, stated in several different forms, and of a special count. Upon the theory of the plaintiff, no special count was necessary. If the paper was a deed passing the title to the standing timber by its delivery, the recovery of the purchase price could be had upon the common counts. Upon the theory, however, that this paper constitutes an executory contract for the sale of the timber, plaintiff may recover for such timber as has been cut, or so much thereof as remains unpaid, upon the common counts; but to recover damages for the failure to perform the covenant to remove the timber within the time provided in the contract it would be necessary to declare specially, and if the plaintiff is advised to do so he can, upon the cause being remanded, file an amended count presenting his claim for damages for this breach.

[5] Criticism is also made of some rulings of the court upon the admission of evidence of estimates of the amount of timber which had been cut and removed by the defendants. The plaintiff's contention was that the defendants had not measured all of the timber which they cut and removed from the land, and had not accounted therefor. The logs were gone, and it was impossible to measure them. To establish his contention he introduced the testimony of some witnesses to the effect that some logs were sawed which had not been measured, and also the testimony of witnesses who estimated the timber cut from the tract of land by measuring the stumps and the supposed length of the logs. He also introduced an estimate of a party who went over the timber and inspected it prior to the time it was cut, and made an estimate of the amount thereof. Of course, this was not the method provided in the contract for determining the amount to be paid; but, if the plaintiff's contention is true that the defendants cut and removed timber that they did not measure and account for, it is evident that the method provided in the contract for ascertaining the amount of such timber is no longer available, and the only thing which the plaintiff can do is to resort to the best evidence obtainable for the purpose. The probative force of such evidence is, of course, for the jury. It is largely speculative in its nature, and could not be resorted to upon any other theory than that the alleged fraudulent acts of the defendants have put it beyond the power of any one to secure the measurements in the manner provided for in the contract.

It follows from what we have said that the judgment of the circuit court will be reversed, the verdict set aside, and the case remanded for a new trial.

(84 W. Va. 679)

MINNER v. MINNER et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 7, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DOWER §107 — RIGHTS BEFORE ASSIGNMENT IN OIL ROYALTIES.

Where a husband and wife unite in a lease for oil and gas, though no production is had thereunder till after his death, the widow is entitled, until assignment of her dower, to one-third of the royalty oil and gas well rentals payable under the lease, and not to the interest only on such one-third.

2. DOWER §107—ROYALTIES AND RENTALS OF OPEN OIL WELL PROFITS OF LAND AND NOT CORPUS OF ESTATE.

In such case the well is deemed an "open well" as of the date of the husband's death, and the royalty and rental therefrom part of the issues and profits of the land, and not a portion of the corpus of the estate, to be preserved intact for those entitled in remainder or reversion.

3. DOWER §107—WHAT ARE PROFITS OR CORPUS OF ESTATE DETERMINED AT TIME OF DEATH.

In a contest between the widow and heirs, for the purpose of determining what portion of the yield from the real estate of the deceased husband shall be termed issues and profits, in which she may share, and what shall be deemed part of the corpus of the estate, it is customary to employ as a basis for such determination the date of the death of the deceased.

4. DOWER §107—PRODUCTION OF MINES IS "ISSUES AND PROFITS" OF ESTATE.

The term "issues and profits," in law, as applied to real estate, comprehends every available return therefrom, whether it arise above or below the surface, and includes the produce of mines as well as the yield from the surface, provided the mines were opened or authorized to be opened by the owner of the preceding estate of inheritance.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

5. DOWER §29—INCHOATE UNTIL DEATH OF HUSBAND.

Until the death of her husband, the widow's dower is inchoate; but immediately upon his death it becomes consummate.

6. DOWER §55—UNTIL ASSIGNMENT WIDOW HAS VESTED RIGHT, BUT NO ESTATE.

Until assignment of her dower, a widow has merely a vested right, not an estate, to sue for and compel the setting aside to her as her dower interest of one-third of the real estate of which her husband died seized, and it is only upon such assignment that she desires a vested estate for life in the assigned portion of his lands.

7. DOWER §114(1) — AFTER ASSIGNMENT WIDOW ENTITLED TO PROFITS OF REALTY ASSIGNED.

After assignment of her dower, the widow, as life tenant, may take to her own use the issues and profits of real estate assigned to her, but must not destroy or remove the corpus thereof, which belongs, not to her, but to next vested estate in remainder or reversion.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Clay County.

Suit by Ellen Minner against G. W. Minner and others. Decree for plaintiff in part, and she appeals. Reversed in part, and otherwise affirmed, and cause remanded.

J. E. Springston, of Charleston, for appellant.

O. L. Hall and B. C. Eakle, both of Clay, for appellees.

LYNCH, J. The questions presented for decision upon this appeal arose in the prosecution of a suit instituted in the circuit court of Clay county by the widow of J. L. Minner against the administrator of his estate, his heirs at law, and several other defendants, for the purpose of causing to be laid out and set apart as and for her dower interest a one-third part of a tract of land containing about 72 acres, of which her husband died seized, and for the further purpose of ascertaining the extent of her dower interest in the delay rentals, oil royalties, and gas well rentals which had theretofore been paid and are to be paid pursuant to the provisions of an oil and gas lease executed by her husband and herself during his lifetime. The lease, dated January 11, 1907, granted to J. M. Geary for a term of 10 years, and as long thereafter as oil or gas is produced from the land leased and royalties and rentals paid therefor, the exclusive right to drill and operate for oil and gas upon said tract of 72 acres, upon the stipulated consideration of one-eighth oil royalty and an annual rental of $150 for each gas well, with the usual provision for delay rentals. This lease Geary assigned to the United Fuel Gas Company, and the latter assigned the oil rights thereunder to the Ohio Fuel Oil Company. Neither Geary nor his assignees commenced operation under the lease within the lifetime of plaintiff's husband.

[1] The only question presented involves the extent of the dower rights of the plaintiff in the delay rentals, oil royalties, and gas well rentals paid and to be paid pursuant to the lease prior to the assignment of her dower in the land subject to the lease. We are not concerned at this time with any question respecting the assignment of dower in the land itself, or with the proper disposition of the royalties and rentals after such assignment. The court below in its decree found that plaintiff was entitled as dowress to—

"one-third part of all moneys paid as delay rentals under the oil and gas lease on said land up to the time of the completion of an oil or gas well on said land, and that thereafter she is entitled to the interest on the one-third of the one-eighth oil royalty reserved * * * in said lease, and that she is likewise entitled to the interest on the one-third of all moneys paid * * * as gas well rentals on producing gas wells drilled under said lease."

As to the first proposition contained in the decree there is no cause of complaint, but plaintiff, however, insists that, because the lease was executed during the lifetime of her husband, she is entitled to the full one-third of the royalty oil and gas well rentals, instead of the interest only on such third, though no production was had within the lifetime of her husband.

[5, 6] Until the death of her husband a widow's dower is inchoate, but immediately upon his death becomes consummate. That, however, does not signify that she is vested with an estate in his lands. Until assignment of her dower the widow has merely a vested right, not an estate, to sue for and compel the setting aside to her, as her dower interest, of one-third of the real estate of which her husband died seized, and it is only upon such assignment that she acquires a vested estate in the assigned portion of his lands for the remainder of her life. Haskell v. Sutton, 53 W. Va. 206, 44 S. E. 533; Darnell v. Flynn, 69 W. Va. 146, 150, 71 S. E. 16; Huddleston v. Miller, 81 W. Va. 357, 94 S. E. 538.

[7] After assignment of her dower, the widow as life tenant enjoys the privileges and is subject to the duties incident to such estate. She may take and appropriate to her use the issues and profits of the real estate assigned to her, but must not destroy or remove the corpus thereof. That belongs, not to her, but to the next vested estate in remainder or reversion. In order that she might not be left destitute or be inconvenienced pending the assignment of her dower, the Legislature in section 8, c. 65 (sec. 3656), Code, provided that until such assignment is made—

"the widow shall be entitled to demand of the heirs or devisees, one-third part of the issues and profits of the other real estate which was devised or descended to them, of which she is dowable, and in the meantime may hold, occupy and enjoy the mansion house and curtilage, without charge."

Thus, until dower is assigned, the widow is entitled to demand one-third of the issues and profits of all the real estate subject to her dower, and may "hold, occupy and enjoy" the mansion house and surrounding inclosure. This right accorded by statute corresponds to and supplements her right as life tenant after assignment to all the issues and profits of the one-third of her husband's real estate set aside and allotted to her. Under that statute the question becomes one of defining what are the issues and profits which the widow may enjoy pending the assignment of her dower. When that question is determined, the statute is clear as to the proportion thereof to which she is entitled.

[2-4] For the purpose of determining what portion of the yield from real estate of the deceased shall be termed issues and profits, and what shall be deemed part of the corpus of the estate, it is usually the custom to employ as a starting point the date of the death of deceased. Take, for example, a contest between a tenant for life and a reversioner or remainderman. The former is entitled to the issues and profits during his life, but must preserve intact the corpus of the estate. That is his only to enjoy, not to destroy. It is settled that gas and oil, like other minerals, until brought to the surface, constitute part of the real estate in which they are found. Williamson v. Jones, 43 W. Va. 562, 27 S. E. 411, 38 L. R. A. 694, 64 Am. St. Rep. 891; Wilson v. Youst, 43 W. Va. 826, 28 S. E. 781, 39 L. R. A. 292; Preston v. White, 57 W. Va. 278, 50 S. E. 236. The life tenant, therefore, must not open new mines or wells for the purpose of withdrawing the minerals beneath the surface, for to do so constitutes waste of the corpus of the estate, of which the reversioner or remainderman properly may complain. Williamson v. Jones, supra. But, though he is restricted as to new wells, he may work old wells or mines upon the tract to the complete exhaustion of the minerals therein found, if the wells were open at the date of the termination of the preceding estate of inheritance. The holder of the latter estate by opening them has authorized them to be worked, and has constituted the yield therefrom a part of the issues and profits of the land. Likewise, if the opening of a mine or well was authorized by the holder of the preceding estate of inheritance through a valid lease executed before his death, though the well was not in fact opened till after his death, nevertheless it will be deemed an "open well" as of the date of his death (Koen v. Bartlett, 41 W. Va. 559, 23 S. E. 664, 31 L. R. A. 128, 56 Am. St. Rep. 884; Williamson v. Jones, supra; Alderson's Adm'r v. Alderson, 46 W. Va. 242, 33 S. E. 228; Bramer v. Bramer, 99 S. E. 329), and the life tenant will be entitled to the yield therefrom as part of the issues and profits of the land (Koen v. Bartlett, supra; Alderson's Adm'r v. Alderson, supra). As said in Koen v. Bartlett, supra, at page 567 of 41 W. Va., at page 866 of 23 S. E. (31 L. R. A. 128, 56 Am. St. Rep. 884):

"The term 'profit' in law comprehends the produce of the soil, whether it arise above or below the surface, including product of mines as well as the herbage growing on the surface."

This is true, however, as we shall see later, only where, as in this case, the mine was opened, or the opening authorized by a valid lease, before the death of the holder of the preceding estate of inheritance.

Applying these well-settled rules to the facts involved in this appeal, we find that the opening of the well was authorized by a valid lease executed by plaintiff and her husband before his death. Though the well was not drilled till after his demise, the yield therefrom, according to the authorities just cited, is considered part of the issues and profits of the land, and not a portion of the corpus of the estate, which must be preserved for the remainderman or reversioner. Hence there seems no room for doubt that plaintiff was entitled to one-third of the royalty oil and gas rentals paid pursuant to the terms of the lease. Engle v. Engle, 3 W. Va. 246; Koen v. Bartlett, 41 W. Va. 559, 23 S. E. 664, 31 L. R. A. 128, 56 Am. St. Rep. 884; Alderson's Adm'r v. Alderson, 46 W. Va. 242, 33 S. E. 228; Thornton, Law of Oil and Gas (3d Ed.) § 298.

Defendants, however, insist that plaintiff should receive only the interest on such one-third, and in support of their contention cite and rely on certain cases decided by this court which do restrict the widow or life tenant to interest on the one-third of the royalty oil and gas rentals. Wilson v. Youst, 43 W. Va. 826, 28 S. E. 781, 39 L. R. A. 292; Ammons v. Ammons, 50 W. Va. 390, 40 S. E. 490; Eakin v. Hawkins, 52 W. Va. 124, 43 S. E. 211; Stewart v. Tennant, 52 W. Va. 559, 44 S. E. 223; Headley v. Colonial Oil Co., 67 W. Va. 628, 69 S. E. 296. Before proceeding to a discussion of these cases, and as preliminary thereto, certain further principles should be noted. As was above stated, the life tenant, while enjoying the privilege of working old wells on the land, has no right to drill or open new wells which were not authorized to be opened at the beginning of his estate. His authority to remove that which is considered part of the real estate is limited to those wells which were opened or authorized by the preceding owner of the fee; the yield from such wells being deemed part of the issues and profits of the land, because made so in effect by the action of the preceding owner. All else belongs to the corpus of the estate, and must be preserved intact. Hence it is waste for such tenant to open or authorize the opening of new wells. Williamson v. Jones, 43 W. Va. 562, 27 S. E. 411, 38 L. R. A. 694, 64 Am. St. Rep. 891. In case he does so, the yield therefrom is not part of the issues and profits, but a part of the corpus of the estate, and the proceeds or return derived from the sale of such product must be preserved and invested for delivery to the remainderman or reversioner upon the commencement of his estate. These proceeds now stand in the place of and represent that part of the corpus which has been removed.

This question is usually presented in the form of a joint lease by the life tenant and remainderman, reserving royalty or rent, and in such case the royalty or rental, being part of the corpus, is invested and preserved for the remainderman; but the interest thereon, being the yield therefrom, is paid to the life tenant, since the nature of his estate entitles him to the yield from the corpus of the realty. Wilson v. Youst, supra; Ammons v. Ammons, supra; Eakin v. Hawkins, supra; Thornton, Law of Oil & Gas (3d Ed.) § 311. This explains why, in the case of a mine or well open or authorized to be opened at the commencement of the life estate, the royalty or yield from such well goes to the life tenant, and why in the cases last cited he receives only the interest thereon. Parenthetically it may be remarked that, if the life tenant had acted alone in attempting to open a new mine not authorized to be opened, without joining with the remainderman, he would have been deprived even of interest on the royalty. Williamson v. Jones, 43 W. Va. 562, pt. 15, Syl., 27 S. E. 411, 38 L. R. A. 694, 64 Am. St. Rep. 891.

The case of Stewart v. Tennant, 52 W. Va. 559, 44 S. E. 223, is quite analogous to Wilson v. Youst, Ammons v. Ammons, and Eakin v. Hawkins, supra, but with this distinction: That whereas, in the last three cases the lease was executed by the life tenant and remaindermen, in the case first named the right to drill was conferred by the widow before assignment of her dower, and hence before she had received any definite or vested estate for life, and by 10 of the 12 reversioners. There, as in the case at bar, the widow's dower was consummate, but not assigned, and the court held that the vendee, as the owner of her dower, was entitled, under section 8, c. 65, Code, and pursuant to the authority of the three cases last cited, to the interest on one-third of the royalty from the wells. An attempt was there made to differentiate between a situation where dower had not been assigned, as in that case, and where the life estate was vested; but the court (52 W. Va. 576, 44 S. E. 223), definitely declined to recognize any such distinction as valid. The only difference between that case and this is that the well there involved was not drilled or authorized to be drilled before the death of the husband, while here it was so authorized. For that reason, in the former the issues and profits to which the widow or those holding her dower right were entitled consisted of the interest on one-third of the royalty, while in this case they should include the one-third of the royalty itself, for here it is not part of the corpus, but authorized to be removed by the preceding owner of the fee, and hence by him made an issue and profit of the land.

Headley v. Colonial Oil Co., 67 W. Va. 628,

69 S. E. 296, also relied on by defendants, is quite similar to Stewart v. Tennant, supra, and again enunciates the principle that, where a widow and the heirs, after the death of the husband, but before assignment of the widow's dower, join in a lease for oil and gas purposes, reserving a royalty, the widow will receive as dower the interest on one-third of the royalty share; but because she had joined with her husband during his lifetime in a sale of one-half of the oil and gas in place, therefore her dower in that one-half was lost, and she could claim only one-half the interest on one-third of the royalty share then before the court.

These cases relied on by defendant all deal with leases made after the death of the holder of the preceding estate of inheritance by a life tenant, or by a widow before assignment of dower, who at the time had no authority or right to drill new wells, and could not by a lease convey a greater right than they had. Hence the royalty oil and gas rentals represented the corpus of the estate and belonged ultimately to the heirs; the life tenant or widow being entitled only to the interest therefrom. But in this case the well drilled after the husband's death pursuant to the terms of a lease made during his life is deemed an "open well" as of the date of his death, the royalty from which is part of the issues and profits of the land. Koen v. Bartlett, 41 W. Va. 559, 23 S. E. 664, 31 L. R. A. 128, 56 Am. St. Rep. 884; Alderson's Adm'r v. Alderson, 46 W. Va. 242, 33 S. E. 228; section 8, c. 65, Code. See, also, Campbell v. Lynch, 81 W. Va. 374, 384-386, 94 S. E. 739, L. R. A. 1918B, 1070.

For these reasons, our order will reverse the decree complained of, in so far as it fails to award to plaintiff the full one-third of the oil royalties and gas rentals, and otherwise affirm it, and remand the cause for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

(178 N. C. 657)

COOPER v. HAIR. (No. 296.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 22, 1919.)

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM  $\S$  22(1)—DEFENDANT ENTITLED TO VALUE OF COLLATERAL NOTES TAKEN IN REPLEVIN.

In an action on notes secured by collateral notes, the defendant is entitled to be credited with the value of the collateral notes seized under claim and delivery by plaintiff while they were in the hands of the defendant maker for collection.

Appeal from Superior Court, Bladen County; Calvert, Judge.

Action by W. B. Cooper against W. A. Hair. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

The notes deposited as collateral were sent to defendant for collection by plaintiff, and later plaintiff took them under claim and delivery.

This is an action on two notes, one for $1,254 secured by an agricultural lien, and the other for $287.78 secured by notes deposited as collateral, and an account for fertilizers also secured in said lien.

The plaintiff sued out claim and delivery papers in the action under which 25 bushels of corn and the collateral notes were seized and delivered to the plaintiff in January, 1916.

The issues joined between the parties were referred by consent, and the referee has made a full report, except that he does not find the value of the notes delivered to the plaintiff, and the defendant has received no credit therefor, although in his answer he demanded that the plaintiff be charged with the value of the notes, and he made the same demands in his exceptions to the report of the referee and at the time the judgment was signed.

Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed.

E. F. McCulloch, Jr., of Elizabethtown, for appellant.

Bayard Clark, of Elizabethtown, McLean, Varser, McLean & Stacy, of Lumberton, and Sinclair & Dye, of Fayetteville, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The defendant is entitled to be credited with the value of the notes seized in this action and delivered to the plaintiff under the authority of Smith v. French, 141 N. C. 1, 53 S. E. 435, and the execution upon the judgment is suspended until this amount can be ascertained by reference or otherwise and due credit be given.

We have examined the other exceptions relied on by the defendant and find no error.

Modified and affirmed.

(178 N. C. 337)

COMMISSIONERS OF HOKE COUNTY v. TOWN OF RAEFORD. (No. 293.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 22, 1919.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS  $\S$  269(1) — RIGHT TO OPEN PUBLIC STREETS.

Municipal corporations have the right to open public streets to locate and construct necessary bridges over them, and such corporations are the sole judges of the necessity or expediency of exercising that right.

2. BRIDGES  $\S$  10(1)—RECOVERY FROM CITY BY COUNTY FOR REBUILDING OF BRIDGES.

Where a county without any request or authority from the city rebuilt bridges on two roads running through the town which were public roads of the county, but over which the municipal authorities had never assumed control or jurisdiction, held that under the circumstances the county could not recover from the municipality the cost of rebuilding such bridges.

Walker and Hoke, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Hoke County; Bond, Judge.

Action by the Commissioners of the County of Hoke against the Town of Raeford. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. W. Currie, of Raeford, for appellants.
Smith & McQueen, of Raeford, for appellee.

BROWN, J. This action is brought by the commissioners of Hoke county to recover from the town of Raeford the cost of rebuilding certain bridges on two public highways within the town. A jury trial was waived, and the court found the following facts:

That the places at which the bridges in question were constructed are inside the corporate limits of the town of Raeford; that they are on roads, laid out after the town of Raeford was incorporated, said roads running through the town and being public roads of the county. The court finds that the places at which the bridges were constructed are not on any one of the public streets of the town of Raeford, and that the authorities of said town have never assumed control in any way of the two roads at the place where the bridges were constructed.

The court further finds that the roads upon which said bridges were constructed are used by large numbers of people in going into and going away from the town of Raeford, and that it is important to the town and also to the county that the roads shall be in proper condition, as one of them is a part of the Atlanta and Washington Highway.

Upon consideration of the facts admitted in the pleadings, coupled with the findings of fact which appear in this judgment, the court is of opinion that the town of Raeford is not liable to plaintiff.

The question presented here is not whether plaintiff could have been made to have constructed the bridges referred to. The fact is they did it, and, so far as the findings of the court show, without any request or authority from the defendant.

[1] It is well settled that municipal corporations have the right to open public streets and to locate and construct necessary bridges over them, and such corporations are the sole judges of the necessity or expediency of exercising this right. Stratford v. Greensboro, 124 N. C. 127, 32 S. E. 394; Waynesville v. Satterthwait, 136 N. C. 227, 48 S. E. 681.

[2] The court finds that the places at which the bridges were constructed are not any part of the public streets of the town of Raeford, and that the authorities of such town have never assumed any control or jurisdiction in any way over the two roads at the place where the bridges were constructed. These crossings appear to be on private property of individuals. Inasmuch as it has been found as a fact that these bridges do not constitute any part of the public streets of the town over which its corporate authorities have assumed jurisdiction, we fail to see why the town should be charged with the expense of rebuilding them. The question presented here is not whether it was the duty of the county commissioners to rebuild these bridges, but whether, having done so, without any request or authority from the defendant, they can recover the cost from it. It appears that these bridges were across public roads of the county before the incorporation of the defendant, and constitute a part of the public roads of the county. In the face of the finding that the commissioners of the town had never assumed jurisdiction over these roads, and had never undertaken to keep in repair these bridges, we are of opinion that the plaintiff cannot recover. It is true it is alleged in the complaint that this work was done at the request of the defendant's commissioners by the road force of the county, but this allegation of the complaint is specifically denied, and in the absence of a finding of fact supporting it, it is valueless and constitutes no ground for a recovery.

Affirmed.

WALKER and HOKE, JJ., dissenting.

(178 N. C. 328)

RALEIGH IMPROVEMENT CO. v. ANDREWS et al. (No. 252.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 22, 1919.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Stacy, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Petition dismissed.

For former opinion, see 176 N. C. 281, 96 S. E. 1032.

J. C. Biggs, of Raleigh, and Willis Smith, of Carrollton, for appellant.

J. S. Manning and A. B. Andrews, Jr., both of Raleigh, for appellees.

BROWN, J. This is a petition to rehear this cause decided at fall term, 1918, and reported in 176 N. C. 281, 96 S. E. 1032. Upon careful consideration of the case, we adhere to all that is said in our former opinion, except to the extent that on the next trial the defendants may offer all evidence of abandonment which they may have, irrespective of what is said in paragraph No. 2 of our former opinion. We will not undertake to say that there is no evidence of an abandonment of the purpose to erect an apartment house. At the time the subscription to the stock was made on February 17, 1914, it is not contended that the purpose to erect the apartment house had been abandoned. It is claimed that it was abandoned later on in the year 1915. We leave this as an open question, to be determined at the coming trial. In our former opinion we said:

"It is true that, on being satisfied that stockholders have paid in an amount equal to their engagements, so as to make the burden equal amongst them all, a court of equity will sometimes interfere, in case of an abandonment of the undertaking, to prevent further calls upon such stockholders; but no such conditions appear to be presented upon this record, and no such equitable relief is asked."

This question of abandonment becomes important in case the defendants desire to ask equitable relief upon the grounds set out in the opinion, and, if so, they will be allowed to file additional pleadings setting it up, in which case proper issues may be submitted to the jury.

Petition to rehear dismissed.

(178 N. C. 259)

HAYDEN et al. v. HAYDEN et al. (No. 290.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 15, 1919.)

1. BOUNDARIES  $\S$  8—CORRECTION OF PATENT CLERICAL ERROR IN DESCRIPTION IN DEED.

On petition by a commissioner to sell land to compel the purchaser to accept deed and pay the price, the court properly held that the word "eastern" in the description in a deed in the chain of title should read "western"; the error being patent.

2. BOUNDARIES  $\S$  3(8)—ON CONFLICT IN DESCRIPTION BY METES AND BOUNDS AND BY LOT AND BLOCK, THE PLAT GOVERNS.

Where deed contains two descriptions, one by metes and bounds, and the other by lot and block according to a certain plot or map, the controlling description is the lot according to the plan rather than the one by metes and bounds.

3. TRUSTS  $\S$  169(1)—POWERS OF SUBSTITUTED TRUSTEE UNDER DECREE AS BROAD AS THOSE OF ORIGINAL TRUSTEE.

Under decree unappealed from, in an action by beneficiaries under a will against the executor and heirs, wherein there was a substitution of trustees, held, that the trust in the hands of the substituted trustee was coextensive with and as effective as if he had been named in the will originally as trustee.

4. ADVERSE POSSESSION  $\S$  71(2) — DEED OF SUBSTITUTED TRUSTEE AS COLOR OF TITLE.

Deed of substituted trustee held color of title, and, under the statutes of 7, 20, and 30 years' possession (Revisal 1905, §§ 382, 384, 380), a good and marketable title by operation of law; the "color of title" not being impaired by fact that the word "eastern" in the deed should have read "western."

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS  $\S$  174(2)—BENEFICIARIES EQUALLY BARRED WITH TRUSTEE BY ADVERSE POSSESSION.

A trustee being barred by 7, 20, and 30 years' adverse possession, the cestui que trustant are equally barred.

6. TRUSTS  $\S$  131—CONVERSION OF FEE TAIL SPECIAL INTO FEE SIMPLE.

If a will gave a fee tail special to one person on the death of another, the statute executed the use by converting the estate into a fee simple.

7. REMAINDERS  $\S$  16—BARRING POSSIBLE OR CONTINGENT INTERESTS UNDER TORRENS SYSTEM.

Where, in suit under Revisal 1905, § 1590, to sell land freed and discharged of all contingent remainders, the suit complying in every particular with the requirements of the Torrens system, an attorney was appointed by the court to represent possible or contingent interests, the title deed by the commissioner cuts off the rights of any other person in being or hereafter to come into being.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Hanover County; Calvert, Judge.

Action by Mathilda A. Hayden and others against John Henry Hayden and others, wherein E. K. Bryan was appointed commissioner to sell land, who, after sale, petitions for judgment directing the purchaser, Joseph W. Little, to accept deed and pay the purchase money. From judgment that the title was good and ordering the purchaser to pay, he appeals. Affirmed.

P. H. Hayden died in 1903, testate, leaving besides other property the real estate which is the subject of this action.

An action was brought in the superior court of New Hanover for the purpose of selling said land by judicial sale, freed and discharged of all contingent remainders, or other interests, in said property. In that action, an order was made at October term, 1918, appointing E. K. Bryan commissioner, with the direction to sell said land. At this sale, the respondent Joseph W. Little was the last and highest bidder, and at April term, 1919, the said bid was confirmed and the commissioner ordered to execute a conveyance for the property.

After this was done, the petitioner Joseph W. Little, not being actually aware of the motion for confirmation, had the title to the property examined by counsel, who found certain irregularities, which, in his opinion, rendered the title to the property doubtful.

A petition was filed at May term, 1919, by E. K. Bryan, commissioner, in which it was sought to have the title adjudicated to be good and a judgment directing the purchaser, Joseph W. Little, to accept the deed and pay the purchase money. To this petition, the respondent filed answer, in which the objections to the title were set up.

A jury trial was waived, and the case was heard orally by Calvert, J., who rendered judgment that the title to the said property was good, and the respondent Joseph W. Little was ordered to pay the purchase price and accept the deed, to which he excepted and appealed.

Rountree & Davis and Geo. H. Howell, all of Wilmington, for appellant Little.

E. K. Bryan, of Wilmington, for appellees.

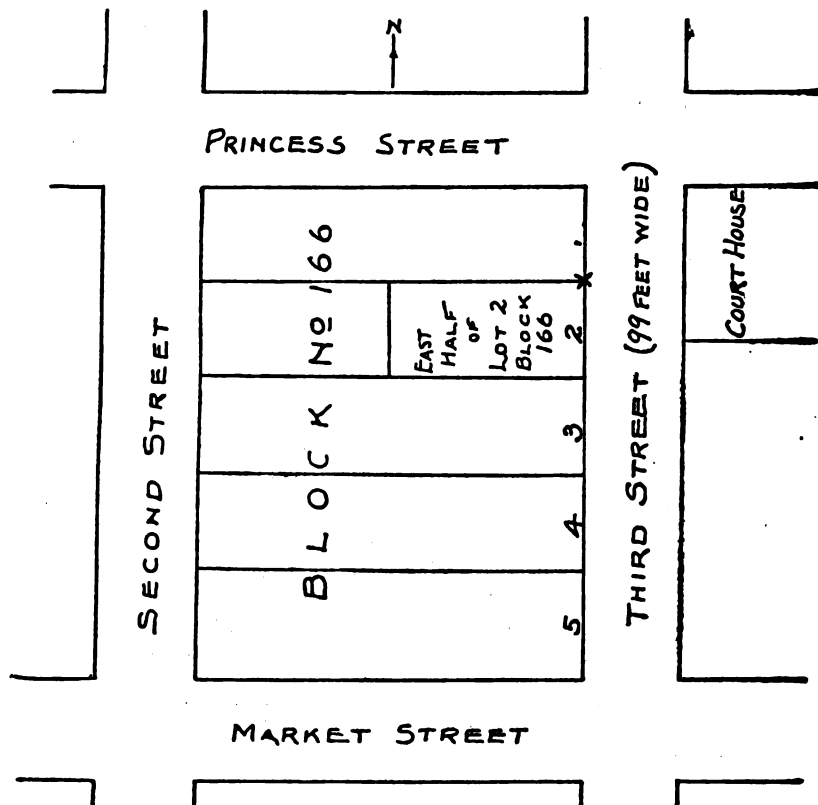

CLARK, C. J. This appeal is intended to raise the single question whether the title to the property is good and marketable. The respondent is desirous to complete the purchase; but, intending to expend large sums, he is unwilling to do so without an adjudication.

cation that the title is good. It seems that all persons who can, in any contingency, have an interest in the property, have been made parties. It is admitted that the procedure authorized in Shields v. Allen, 77 N. C. 375, has been followed in raising the question of the title for adjudication.

[1] The first exception is that the court held that the word "eastern" in the description in the deed from McRee, trustee, to Hayden, should be read "western." The locus in quo lies on the west side of Third street in Wilmington, opposite the courthouse; but the deed makes the beginning point "in the eastern line of Third street 66 feet southwardly from its intersection of Princess street," instead of "in the western line of properly held that the word "eastern," when speaking of the beginning on Third street, should read "western line of Third street." Such correction, when there is a patent error as here, has often been upheld by this court. Fowler v. Coble, 162 N. C. 500, 77 S. E. 993; Ipock v. Gaskins, 161 N. C. 673, 77 S. E. 843; Brown v. Myers, 150 N. C. 441, 64 S. E. 374; Wiseman v. Green, 127 N. C. 288, 37 S. E. 272; Mizell v. Simmons, 79 N. C. 190.

[2] Where the deed contains two descriptions, one by metes and bounds, and the other by lot and block according to a certain plot or map, the controlling description is the lot according to the plan, rather than the one by metes and bounds. Nash v. R. R.,

Third street," etc.; thence "westwardly and parallel with Princess street 165 feet." Third street being 99 feet wide, the language used would put 99 feet of the lot in the street which is no part of "lot No. 2, in block 166, according to the plan of Wilmington." The deed in describing the property says:

"The same being the eastern half of lot No. 2 in block 166, according to the plan of said city."

Changing "eastern" to "western," the description fits the locus in quo in every respect. It is apparent that the draftsman, in writing the beginning as being "in the eastern line of Third street," meant the eastern line of the lot on Third street. The court 67 N. C. 413. It appears from the records entirely certain upon the face of the deed that the parties intended to convey the eastern half of lot No. 2 in block 166.

[3] The second assignment of error is because the court held that Joseph H. McRee, the trustee appointed in the place of Robert H. Cowan, could convey a good title to Hayden, and that therefore the purchaser would get a good title. It appears from the will of Dr. J. F. McRee that—

He devised this property to "Robert H. Cowan and his heirs in trust for the separate use of my daughter-in-law, Sarah J. McRee, wife of my son James, during her life and at her death in trust for her children, by my said son James and I do hereby empower the said Robert Cowan whenever he may deem it necessary, or advantageous, to sell the said lot and reinvest the money in other property, real or personal, to be held on the same trusts as are herein expressed in relation to said land."

Col. Robert H. Cowan, the said trustee, died without having sold this property, and at April term, 1873, of New Hanover, in an action brought by the beneficiaries under said item of the will against the executor and heirs at law of Cowan, J. H. McRee was substituted as trustee, and it was decreed that—

He should "hold and possess all the property, real and personal, which was devised and bequeathed by the said James F. McRee in trust, upon the like trusts in every respect that the same were held and possessed by Robert H. Cowan, late trustee."

Under the authority of such decree, said McRee, trustee, sold the property to J. H. Hayden. The contention of the respondent is that the power of sale given to Robert H. Cowan, trustee, being in the nature of a personal discretion, did not pass to the substituted trustee, citing Young v. Young, 97 N. C. 132, 2 S. E. 78.

Without impeaching in any respect the entire correctness of that decision, the decree made in this case conferred upon Joseph H. McRee the property "upon the like trusts in every respect that the same were held and possessed by Robert H. Cowan, late trustee." The terms of this decree are very broad and vested in the substituted trustee, in every respect, every power possessed by Robert H. Cowan. This decree was not appealed from, and is therefore valid and binding in every respect.

Besides, the beneficiaries of the trust who would be entitled to object to the sale are cut off by the decree, as they were made parties under the following language:

"And all persons unknown to the plaintiffs who may have an interest in the lands and premises described in the complaint, or may possibly come into being, or may possibly have an interest in the same." Rev. § 1590; Ryder v. Oates, 173 N. C. 572, 92 S. E. 508.

By virtue of the decree unappealed from, the trust in the hands of Joseph H. McRee, trustee, was coextensive with and as effective as if he had been named in the will of James F. McRee originally as trustee instead of Cowan. Baugert v. Blades, 117 N. C. 228, 23 S. E. 179; Ferebee v. Sawyer, 167 N. C. 199, 83 S. E. 17, L. R. A. 1915B, 640; Clothing Co. v. Hay, 163 N. C. 495, 79 S. E. 955; Bank v. Dew, 175 N. C. 79, 94 S. E. 708.

The whole subject is fully discussed and clearly stated, with great wealth of authorities, by Hoke, J., in Ferebee v. Sawyer, 167 N. C. at page 203, 83 S. E. at page 19, L. R.

A. 1915B, 640, quoting and approving the following from Coltrane v. Laughlin, 157 N. C. 282, 72 S. E. 961:

"It is well recognized here and elsewhere that, when a court having jurisdiction of a cause and the parties renders judgment therein, it estops the parties and their privies as to all issuable matter contained in the pleadings, and, though not issuable in the technical sense, it concludes, among other things, as to all matters within the scope of the pleadings which are material and relevant and were in fact investigated and determined on the hearing."

[4, 5] Besides, the deed of the substituted trustee to Hayden was color of title, and under our statutes of 7 (Rev. § 382), 20 (Rev. § 384), and 30 (Rev. § 380) years' possession, is a good and marketable title by operation of law under the facts shown in this case. The lot was in front of the courthouse in the city of Wilmington, and possession of the same was fully established. The "color of title" is not impaired by the fact that the word "eastern" in the deed should have read "western." It is in evidence that Hayden went into possession of the property in 1878, which was 40 years before the bringing of this action, and there cannot possibly be any infant, and the suspension of the statute as to married women was repealed by the act of 1890 (Pub. Laws 1890, c. 78). The trustee being barred, the cestuis que trustent are equally barred. Barden v. Stickney, 132 N. C. 417, 43 S. E. 912; Kirkman v. Holland, 139 N. C. 189, 51 S. E. 856; Webb v. Borden, 145 N. C. 197, 58 S. E. 1083.

[6] If it were open to serious debate whether the will of J. F. McRee gave a fee tail to Sarah J. McRee, special, upon the death of Cowan, the statute executed the use by converting the estate into a fee simple. Cameron v. Hicks, 141 N. C. 21, 53 S. E. 728, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 407. She and all her children were parties to the proceeding in which Joseph H. McRee was appointed substituted trustee with the same rights as those possessed by Robert H. Cowan, and the purchaser under him received by his deed the legal and equitable title.

[7] Finally, the suit brought to sell this property complies in every particular with the requirements of the Torrens system, and the title deed by the commissioner would cut off the rights of any other person in being or hereafter to come into being, as an attorney was appointed by the court to represent such possible or contingent interests. Ryder v. Oates, 173 N. C. 572, 92 S. E. 508; Rev. § 1590.

Upon the entire record, the title was a good and indefeasible title.

Affirmed.

WALKER, J., did not sit in this case.

(178 N. C. 334)

BLUE et al. v. BROWN et al. (No. 292.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 22, 1919.)

1. ADVERSE POSSESSION §114(2) — BOUNDARIES §37(3)—EVIDENCE SHOWING MARKED LINES AND POSSESSION.

In a proceeding to establish boundary lines, evidence showing a fence maintained by plaintiffs for many years, a hedgerow, and marked lines to which plaintiffs claimed and possessed for 30 or 40 years, held to justify verdict for plaintiffs, either on the ground the lines were the true boundaries, or that title by adverse possession was shown.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR §692(1)—EXCEPTION TO EXCLUSION MUST SHOW EVIDENCE EXPECTED.

Where it is not made to appear what answer would have been made to a question by a witness, the exception that objection to the question was sustained cannot be considered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Columbus County; Calvert, Judge.

Proceeding by Mrs. M. E. Blue and others against Joe E. Brown and wife and others. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. No error.

This is a proceeding to establish the boundary line between plaintiffs and defendants, begun before the clerk and transferred to the superior court upon issue joined, and tried upon an issue of title.

The plaintiffs claim title by possession and under a deed from Anne K. Blue to D. M. Blue, dated January 24, 1870, which conveys the northern half of two tracts of land.

The defendants claim the southern half of these tracts, and both parties derive their title from the same source.

A survey was made, and the black lines on the map show the contentions of the plaintiffs, and the red lines those of the defendants.

The land in controversy between the black and red lines is about a half acre wide, and a railroad runs across the northern half of the land, with a right of way 130 feet wide. One-half the land, nothing else being considered, would place the boundary on the red lines; but, if the land covered by the railroad right of way is eliminated, the boundary of the northern half would be substantially on the black line.

Both parties introduced evidence in support of their contention. At the conclusion of all of the evidence the defendants moved for judgment of nonsuit, which was overruled. There was a verdict in favor of the plaintiff finding that they were the owners of the land in controversy, and judgment was rendered thereon against the defendants, who appealed.

MacRackan & Greer, of Whiteville, and S. Brown Shepherd, of Raleigh, for appellants.

Irvin B. Tucker and H. L. Lyon, both of Whiteville, for appellees.

ALLEN, J. There is ample evidence to establish the contention of the plaintiffs that the black lines are the true boundaries between the plaintiffs and defendants, and also to show title by adverse possession, and we must assume that this evidence was fairly submitted to the jury, as there is no exception to the charge.

The surveyor testified:

"The description in the deed from Ann K. Blue to Dougald M. Blue covers the land in controversy, and the description in the complaint (which was read to the witness) covers the land in controversy."

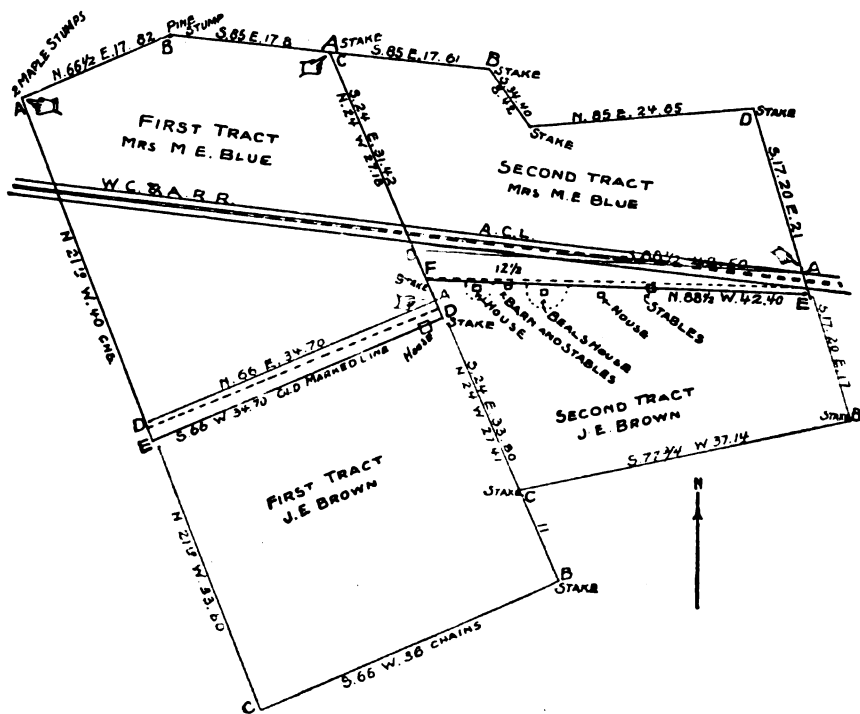

Mrs. A. D. Boal, who said she had known the land for 40 years:

"I have lived on the land described in my mother's deed all my life. I know the corner in dispute. My mother claims black E to be the true beginning corner of one tract of the land, and Mr. Brown claims red A to be the beginning corner. I don't understand the map. Mr. Smith's fence was directly on the line when Mr. Brown bought the land. That is where the surveys run. The fence was built from the time I was a child until after I was grown. I do not know when the Browns begin to claim that black E was not the right corner."

W. A. Smith:

"I know the land in dispute in this action. I owned the land at one time claimed by the Browns. I am the grantor in the deed to Crandel Brown. I know the land of Jacob Webb beginning at a stake Mrs. M. E. Blue's corner containing 53 acres. I know where the corner is on the map at black D. I know the line from black D running to black E. I was there when it was run. It was a marked line. That was the line between Mrs. Blue and myself. I know where the corner of the 41 acres in the second tract. A. F. J. Council ran that line. I know where the corner is at black F. That is the southeast corner of the 41-acre tract. Red B. It is side of the railroad. There was a line running from black E at the time I owned the land. It was a marked line from E to F. I was acquainted with the corners black E and F. On part of the line there was no trees. There was an old field. My fence is on that line in front of the house I sold Mr. Brown. I showed him the land I sold him. I told him the line was where the fence was. It is the black line on the map. I never set up any claim to the land between the black line and the railroad.

"The black line was on the south side of the railroad, the only line, and was run there first in '76 by Lovett Malpass and in 1890 by J. W. Council. I was present when Malpass ran the line. It was run for me. My father and uncle had it run. It was the dividing line between me and my uncle. I don't remember whether the line was visibly fixed in 1876 or not.

First tract, beginning at two maples, and the black lines and black A,B,C,D,E, represents the contention of the plaintiff Mrs. M. E. Blue.

First tract, beginning at red A, the red lines and red A,B,C,D, represents the contention of the defendant J. E. Brown and others.

Second tract, beginning at a stake, and the black lines and black A,B,C,D,E,F, represents the contention of the plaintiff Mrs. M. E. Blue.

The second tract, beginning at red A, and the red lines and red A,B,C,D, represents the contention of the defendant J. E. Brown and others.

But in 1890 Mr. Council ran the line and he made a plain line.

"Q. Who was in possession of the land in dispute in 1890? A. My uncle, as long as he lived, and after his death my aunt, Mrs. M. E. Blue. At the time I sold Mr. Crandel Brown the land, I told him the fence was on the line. That is the same land Mrs. Blue now claims."

I. C. Duncan:

"I am county surveyor. At black F there was a corner then along the line is a kind of hedgerow, an old hedgerow. The corner at black F looks as if it had been there several years. From black D to black E, in the first tract, there was a marked line all the way through. I saw a tree in Joe Brown's field marked on both sides, three chops and a blaze. The chops looked as if they were 25 or 30 years old. The tree corresponded, or is in line, with an old line coming out of the green swamp from black E. There is no marked line from red A to red D of either tract."

[1] This evidence, which was accepted by the jury shows a fence, maintained for many years, a hedgerow, and marked lines along the black lines, and possession for 30 or 40 years, which fully justifies the verdict of the jury.

The controversy has doubtless arisen because the land covered by the railroad right of way was considered in locating the boundary of the northern half of the two tracts.

[2] This exception to the refusal to nonsuit is the only one relied on in the brief, although one other, sustaining an objection to a question asked a witness, is referred to; but it is not made to appear what answer would have been made and it cannot therefore be considered.

We find no error in the trial.

No error.

(178 N. C. 264)

BARNES v. SEABOARD AIR LINE R. CO.
et al. (No. 295.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 15, 1919.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨272—EVIDENCE SHOWING EXPRESS AGENT VICE PRINCIPAL AUTHORIZED TO HIRE EMPLOYEES.

Where a bystander employed by the agent of an express company to load a shafting was killed when the shafting fell, evidence that the clerk was employed by the agent to load and unload express was admissible to show that the clerk was a vice principal for whose negligence the company was liable.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨272—EVIDENCE THAT VICE PRINCIPAL WAS SUPERINTENDING WHEN SERVANT INJURED ADMISSIBLE.

Where a bystander engaged by the agent of an express company to assist its clerk in loading shafting was killed when shafting fell, evidence that the agent was present superintending the loading was admissible on the issue of the company's negligence.

3. EVIDENCE ⇨471(24)—OF CAUSE OF FALL OF SHAFTING BEING LOADED ADMISSIBLE.

Where one engaged by the agent of an express company to assist in loading a heavy shafting on a train was killed as a result of a fall of the same, an experienced lumberman familiar with similar loading problems should have been allowed to answer a question as to his observation of the cause of the fall of the shafting, notwithstanding objections that the question called for the conclusion of the witnesses.

4. EVIDENCE ⇨471(24)—AS TO CAUSE OF ACCIDENT NOT INADMISSIBLE AS A CONCLUSION.

Where one employed to assist in loading a heavy shafting into an express car was killed when one end of the shafting rolled off of the truck on which it was resting, held, that an experienced lumberman who witnessed the accident should have been allowed to answer a question as to the effect the moving of the train had on the loading operation; it appearing that the shafting in the first instance was placed at right angles to the door of the car in which it was to be loaded, and that after the train was moved forward there was an attempt to load, though shafting was at an acute angle to the door.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨285(1)—QUESTION OF CONCURRENT NEGLIGENCE FOR THE JURY.

In an action for the death of one casually employed by the agent of an express company to assist in loading a heavy shafting which rolled from the truck when the train moved, held, that the question whether the death was caused by the concurrent negligence of the express company and the railroad company was under the evidence for the jury.

Walker and Allen, JJ., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Superior Court, Robeson County; Stacy, Judge.

Action by Rowland Barnes, administrator against the Seaboard Air Line Railroad Company and the American Railroad Express Company. From a nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Johnson & Johnson, of Lumberton, for appellant.

McIntyre, Lawrence & Proctor, of Lumberton, for appellee Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co.

McLean, Varner, McLean & Stacy, of Lumberton, for appellee American R. Express Co.

CLARK, C. J. This was an action for the wrongful death of plaintiff's intestate, a farmer about 21 years of age, who had come to Lumberton on some business. While at the station of the defendant railroad company, the agent of the express company engaged him to help load a heavy iron shafting on the express car in the defendant railroad east-bound train. The shafting was 20 to 30 feet long, about 8 inches in diameter, in a box about 12 inches square, and estimated to weigh about 2,000 pounds. The loading was done under the supervision of the agent of the express company who hired three bystanders to assist the clerk of the express office. The agent was a lady and rendered no assistance beyond her supervision. The shafting was placed on two trucks at right angles to the door of the express car. The deceased was one of those who had hold of the end of the shafting nearest the express car, and the others were on either side of the box behind him. While the men were in the act of placing the front end of the shafting in the car door, the defendant railroad company suddenly, without warning, started the train, moving it up about 30 feet, which made it necessary to change the direction of the shafting. Express packages had been piled on the ground, and on that account the truck farthest from the train could not be moved up so as to be at right angles to the door again. The truck nearest the train was moved forward to the express car door in its new position, and it was then removed, leaving the front end of the shafting on the shoulders of the four or five men while the other end rested on the extreme corner of the rear truck, where the men bearing the front end and looking towards the car door could not see it. In the attempt to shove the boxed shafting into the car, in this diagonal manner, there was nothing to prevent it rolling off the truck, as there would have been if the shafting had been shoved in at right angles. All of the men were near the car door, as it naturally required their united strength to lift the front end of the 2,000-pound package. The rear end of the shafting twisted off the rear truck as the change to a diagonal had moved it to the corner of that truck from which it tumbled, falling to the ground with great violence. The end nearest to the train bounded upward with such violence that it was forcibly wrested from the shoulders of the men who were carrying it, and the deceased, who was in the acute angle nearest the train, was caught between the shafting and the train and his skull smashed, caused his death.

The witness Holloway who was a lumberman with 30 years' experience in doing similar work to loading this shafting, testified that the method pursued in attempting to put on the shafting after the moving forward of the car looked so dangerous to him that he was tempted to protest, but refrained from doing so for fear he might seem officious. He further testified that when the shafting was first placed for loading at right angles to the train it was squarely on the truck and would not have fallen off, but that, in moving the end next to the train after the train had pulled up, the further end of the shafting was turned diagonally on the extreme edge of the truck, and no one was there, nor any effort made, to keep the shafting from falling off. This witness also testified that, if the shafting could have again been placed at right angles to the car, it could have been loaded with safety because it would not have rolled off the truck. The evidence showed, however, that the express had been piled on the ground in such manner that it was impossible to move the truck around in a suitable position; that is, at right angles to the train. The train was not moved back, 30 feet to the original position, thus avoiding the danger of attempting to put the shafting on in this diagonal manner. The agent of the express company was standing there, and also a clerk in the express office who had hold of the truck handles and could see the position of the rear end of the shafting, but no effort was made to adjust the shafting or place some one there to hold it, which it is doubtful if one man could have done when the movement of the four or five men at the front end would necessarily constantly change the position of the shafting on the rear truck.

[1, 2] The plaintiff also offered to show that the witness Davis, who was clerk of the express company at the time deceased was killed, was employed for the company by Mrs. Thomas, its agent at that station to assist her. It was error to exclude this, as it tended to show that he was a vice principal, and as such had charge of loading the shafting, and his conduct in failing to place some one at the rear truck to prevent the falling of the shafting, if found to be negligent, was the negligence of the company, and not that of a fellow servant of the intestate, who was a bystander picked up for the occasion. It was also error to exclude the testimony that Mrs. Thomas, the agent of the express company, was present, superintending the loading of the shafting, for her negligence, if any, in supervising the loading, was that of the company.

[3] It is not denied that the falling of the shafting from the truck was the immediate cause of the death of the deceased. The witness Holloway, who was present and described very intelligently the whole occurrence, was asked:

"From what you observed of it, what caused the shafting to drop from the truck, and fall to the ground in the manner you have described?"

This was excluded as opinion evidence, which was error, for he was asked to state what he saw. It may be that he would have said that the moving of the train forward causing the diagonal position of the shafting in order to put it on the car caused the falling of the rear end from the truck, or he may have given some other reason. We do not know exactly what he would have said; but the plaintiff was entitled to have the facts laid before the jury, that they might have drawn their own inferences as to the cause of the injury. This, therefore, was error as to both the defendants.

[4] He was also asked, "State what effect the pulling of this train up some 30 feet, as you describe, had upon the ability of these men to load it upon the car." He answered, "It put the shafting in a very much more unsafe position than it was at first." On motion of the defendant railroad company, this answer was stricken out, which was a very material error. This witness without objection had stated that he had had experience for 30 years as a sawmill man in loading timber, and that in his opinion a sufficient number of men were provided to properly load the shaft into the train when the shaft was in the original position; but, in the new position where the thing actually happened, it looked pretty dangerous to him. This was evidence sufficient to go to the jury tending to show negligence of the defendant railroad in suddenly moving the train 30 feet forward and in not moving it back to the original position where the shafting had been properly placed for loading at right angles to the train. The authorities in charge of the train saw the position of the shafting and stopped the car at that point, where this witness stated that it could have been safely loaded. The defendant railroad has given no evidence or explanation why the car was suddenly moved forward, nor why it did not move the train back to the original position, though the witness stated that the change of position made the loading very much more unsafe.

There was evidence that the express car was something like 8 feet wide on the inside and the doors were about 5 feet wide. It is a matter of common observation, hardly needing evidence, that four or five men could not lift a piece of shafting 2,000 pounds in weight; but, if it was placed at right angles to the car, and shoved forward 8 feet into the car so as to relieve that much weight, the four or five men could then take hold of the rear end and by "slewing" it around shove it forward into the car. The witness Holloway testified that the loading could have been done in that manner; that is, by the shafting being put in at right angles, by four or five men. It would be a reasonable inference from the evidence, and from the knowledge of the jurors themselves, that, if the weight of the front end was not thus reduced by being put in the car, it would have taken double the number of men or more to lift up the shafting and put it in.

The witness testified that to attempt this work in the way which became necessary after the car was moved forward was very much more dangerous.

The court has held in many cases that the testimony of the witness from his own observation as to the cause of the accident was competent. Britt v. R. R., 148 N. C. 37, 61 S.

E. 601; Arrowood v. R. R., 126 N. C. 632, 36 S. E. 151; Raper v. R. R., 128 N. C. 565, 36 S. E. 115; Burney v. Allen, 127 N. C. 476, 37 S. E. 501.

In Britt v. R. R., supra, it was held competent to ask the witness:

"State whether or not, in your opinion, you could have straightened the log on the skid before it fell and hurt you, by the use of your cant hook, if the team had not started."

It was therefore competent for the witness in this case to state that the shafting could have been safely loaded on the car when it first stopped where the shafting was at right angles to the door, but that the moving of the car forward by causing the attempt to load the shafting diagonally caused the injury. This was evidence to go to the jury of the negligence of the railroad in moving the car suddenly forward and in not moving it back.

In Britt v. R. R., supra, the court stated the principle as follows:

"The exception to the general rule that witnesses cannot give opinions is not confined to the evidence of experts testifying on subjects requiring special knowledge, skill, or learning, but it includes the evidence of common observers testifying the results of their observations made at the time in regard to common appearances, facts, and conditions which cannot be reproduced and made palpable to a jury."

Among many other cases than those just cited to this purport are: State v. Edwards, 112 N. C. 901, 17 S. E. 521; Taylor v. Security Co., 145 N. C. 389, 59 S. E. 139, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 583, 13 Ann. Cas. 248; Ives v. Lumber Co., 147 N. C. 308, 61 S. E. 70; Bennett v. Mfg. Co., 147 N. C. 621, 61 S. E. 463; Murdock v. R. R., 159 N. C. 132, 74 S. E. 887.

[8] There was evidence in this case tending to show that plaintiff's intestate was killed, without any fault of his, while engaged in the proper performance of the duty for which he was employed under the personal supervision of the agent, and also of the clerk or assistant agent of the express company; and tending to show that there was negligence in the loading of the shafting due in part to the railroad company moving the car and in not moving it back when it saw the situation in which this had placed those who were loading the shafting. Whether the conduct of the loading, if negligent, was the negligence of both defendants, or of one only, was a matter for ascertainment by the jury. The manner of loading called forth exclamations from bystanders. There was evidence which tended to show that the deceased came to his death, not as a result of an unavoidable accident, but as the direct and proximate result of the negligent acts of the defendants.

The shafting was of enormous weight, some 20 or 30 feet long, and three inexperienced men picked up from the bystanders at the station with the assistance of the driver and clerk were used to put it on the car.

Without repeating the evidence, it is sufficient to say there was evidence sufficient to go to the jury tending to show:

(1) That the express company failed to furnish plaintiff's intestate with a sufficient number of competent, experienced fellow servants.

(2) That both defendants failed to use reasonable care and precaution for the safety of plaintiff's intestate.

(3) That the defendant railroad company, in suddenly pulling up its train while plaintiff's intestate and his fellow servants were in the act of loading the shafting in a safe manner, contributed to the death of the deceased, and this, concurrently with the negligence of the express company, was the proximate cause of the death of plaintiff's intestate.

To recapitulate the testimony more fully and cite apposite precedents might prejudice the cause of the defendants on another trial. It is sufficient to say, and we intend to say no more than that, that there was evidence sufficient to go to the jury tending to show that the death of the intestate was caused by the concurrent negligence of both defendants. It may be that on fuller development of the case it may appear that neither, or only one, of the defendants was guilty of negligence that contributed to the death of the plaintiff's intestate.

It is proper to say that in preparing this opinion we have been very much aided by the very intelligent and fair statement of the facts and of the law set out in the brief of the learned counsel for the plaintiff.

The nonsuit must be set aside as to both defendants.

Reversed.

WALKER, J. (dissenting). I cannot agree with the conclusion of the court in respect to the liability of the defendant Seaboard Air Line Railroad Company, because I am convinced, after a careful perusal of the evidence and a deliberate consideration of it, that there is none which implicates the railroad company as a negligent or delinquent defendant, and if there was negligence on the part of its codefendant, the express company, the railroad company did not participate therein, by co-operation or otherwise, nor was it in any way to blame, in law or in fact, for the accident whereby the plaintiff's intestate was killed. My opinion, therefore, is that the nonsuit, as to the railroad company, was properly entered by the superior court, and that its ruling in that regard should be sustained.

ALLEN, J., concurs in this dissenting opinion.

(178 N. C. 329)

R. M. GRANT & CO. v. COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION OF WAKE COUNTY.
(No. 254.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 22, 1919.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS —97(5) —CONSTRUCTION OF BID FOR BONDS OF SCHOOL DISTRICT.

Where a bid for bond issue, which a county board of education was authorized to issue, was conditioned on the ground that the bond issue should be approved by specified attorney, the bidder may recover a conditional deposit, where the attorney in good faith, and not capriciously, disapproved the bond issue.

2. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS —97(5) —RECOVERY OF CONDITIONAL DEPOSITS ON BID FOR SCHOOL BONDS.

Where conditional bid for bond issue, which a county board of education was authorized by Priv. Laws 1913, c. 457, to issue, was conditioned on the approval of the bond issue by the bidder's attorney, held, that objections to the issue made by the attorney were in good faith, and not capricious, and hence the bidder might recover conditional deposit.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Civil action by R. M. Grant & Co. against the County Board of Education of Wake County. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The action is to recover $500 deposited on condition in a negotiation for purchase of bonds to be issued for defendant, same to be used as part payment on bonds, if they were approved and accepted by plaintiff, and otherwise to be returned. On denial of liability and issue submitted, his honor, being of opinion that on all the evidence, if believed, plaintiffs were entitled to recover, so instructed the jury. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff, and defendant having duly excepted, appealed.

N. Y. Gulley, of Wake Forest, Percy J. Olive, of Apex, and J. C. Little, of Raleigh, for appellant.

R. W. Winston and J. Crawford Biggs, both of Raleigh, for appellee.

HOKE, J. Chapter 457, Private Laws 1913, authorized defendant board to issue coupon bonds in the sum of $25,000, payable not exceeding 130 years from date of issue, on approval of the voters of the said school district, and also a tax levy not to exceed 20 cents on the $100 of property and 60 cents on the poll to meet the interest on the same as it accrued and to create a sinking fund to pay off the principal of said bonds at maturity. An election having been held and the measure approved by the voters, bonds to the amount specified and payable 30 years from date, January 1, 1917, were prepared, and plaintiffs, dealing in purchase and sale of municipal bonds, made a bid therefor, accompanied by the following stipulations:

"This bid is made for prompt acceptance, and is subject to the legality and regularity of the issue being approved by our attorneys, you agreeing to furnish certified copies of all papers which may be necessary, in their opinion, to establish such legality and regularity in all respects. You further agree to pass any additional, reasonable resolutions which may be necessary, in the opinion of our attorneys, to complete the record of proceedings.

"As an evidence of good faith, we attach hereto certified check for five hundred no/100 dollars ($500.00) drawn on the American Exchange Bank of New York and made payable to the order of Board of Education, Wake County, N. C., which is to be held by you, pending compliance with the conditions of this bid, and is only to be used as part payment for said bonds when approved and delivered to us; otherwise, said check is to be returned to us or our representative at once."

On January 3, 1917, this bid was accepted by defendants in terms as offered and receipt of the $500 was acknowledged. The bid, stipulation, and acceptance, also the resolutions of the board touching the proposed bond issue, and the action of the voters on the proposition, together with the notices concerning the election, were properly submitted by plaintiff to the attorney, Charles B. Wood, of the firm of Wood & Oakley, Chicago, Ill., with the following letter accompanying same:

"Gentlemen: We hand you herewith certified copy of the proceedings had in connection with an issue of $25,000 Wake Forest graded school district, Wake county, North Carolina, 5 per cent. bonds. Kindly let us have your opinion as to the legality of this issue, based on the inclosed record, at your convenience."

On January 30th said attorney in reply wrote plaintiffs as follows:

"Gentlemen: I will approve $25,000 school bonds of Wake Forest graded school district, North Carolina, dated January 1, 1917, provided the county board passes a new order making the bonds payable serially in such a way that the same can be taken care of, both principal and interest, by the twenty-cent tax which the Legislature has authorized. This tax will not carry the bonds running straight thirty years. In passing the resolution, care must be taken to fix the place of payment of the principal and interest, and to provide one single date as the date of the bonds, and that date, of course, should be January 1, 1917, and no other date should appear. It must also be shown that the election notice was posted thirty days prior to the election."

After some further correspondence between plaintiff and defendants, in which defendants insisted that plaintiffs admitted the validity of the bonds and that the tax levy allowed by the law was amply sufficient to pay the current interest and create the sinking fund required by the statute, defendants declined to issue the bonds serially or otherwise than as tendered, a straight 30-year bond. On these facts being communicated to the attorney on April 5, 1917, he wrote, declining to approve the bonds, as follows:

"Messrs. R. M. Grant & Co., Chicago, Ill.—Gentlemen: I decline to approve $25,000 school bonds of Wake Forest graded school district, North Carolina, dated January 1, 1917, because the twenty-cent tax levy provided in the act of the Legislature is not sufficient to pay these bonds, and for the further reason that it is not shown that the election notice was posted thirty days prior to the election.

"Yours truly, Charles B. Wood."

[1, 2] There was evidence offered to the high character and reputation of plaintiff firm, and of the attorney to whom the question of the bond issue was submitted, and by the defendant that the preliminary notices for the election required by section 2967, and affecting the election, had been properly given; that is, that the same had been published 30 days preceding in a newspaper, and by advertisement posted at the courthouse door and four other public places in the county. etc.; also that the assessed property in the school district and the polls therein were sufficient to supply the amount of taxes required by the law for the proposed bond issue, both current interest and a proper sinking fund, etc.

On these, the pertinent facts of the controversy, the question chiefly presented was fully considered by us in Webb v. Trustees, 143 N. C. 299, 55 S. E. 719, and it was there held in effect that when the designated attorney, acting in good faith, has given an adverse opinion as to the validity of the bonds, the bidder was justified in refusing to proceed further, and in such case the conditional deposit is recoverable by the express terms of the agreement; and the position is not affected by the fact that the opinion of the attorney may have been erroneous, unless so arbitrary and capricious as to permit the inference of bad faith. Speaking to the subject in his well-sustained opinion, Associate Justice Connor said:

"It is uniformly held by the courts that, in the absence of any allegation or proof of bad faith or arbitrary conduct on the part of the person selected to pass upon the validity of the bonds or performance of the contract on the part of the person seeking its enforcement, his approval is a condition precedent, and is essential to the right to demand performance. It is usually held that, when it appears from the pleadings that such provision is a part of the contract, the failure to aver compliance is demurrable."

A like ruling has been made in other jurisdictions and is the principle very generally approved in the decisions on the subject. Kinnicutt v. Joint School Committee, 163 Wis. 654, 163 N. W. 167; United States

Trust Co. v. Inc. Town of Guthrie, 181 Iowa, 992, 165 N. W. 188; City of San Antonio v. Rollins & Sons (Tex. Civ. App.) 127 S. W. 1166. In the Iowa case, supra, the court held:

"The actual rendition by an attorney of an honest, but erroneous, opinion that a bond issue is illegal, furnished complete protection to a prospective purchaser in his refusal to buy, under his contract of purchase, provided the bonds be legal 'to the satisfaction of our counsel.'"

And in the Texas case (127 S. W. 1166) it was likewise held as follows:

"Where a bid for municipal bonds provided that prior to delivery the city should furnish procedure satisfactorily evidencing the legality of the bonds to the bidder's attorneys, and that the deposit should be promptly surrendered in case the bidder's attorneys were unable to approve the legality of the bonds, such approval constituted a condition precedent to the city's right to forfeit the deposit, in the absence of a showing that the attorneys' disapproval was fraudulent, capricious, and in bad faith."

In the present case there is no claim or suggestion that there has been any bad faith in fact, either on the part of the bidders or their attorneys. Both are shown to be of high reputation and character, and while we do not pass ultimately upon the correctness of the attorneys' opinion or the grounds upon which it is made to rest, we may say that his objections are sufficiently serious to challenge inquiry, and assuredly they are not so devoid of merit as to show that he acted capriciously or so as to permit an inference of bad faith as a matter of law. We do not understand that the defendant seeks to question the correctness of this general principle as approved and illustrated in the authorities cited, but it is very earnestly insisted that on perusal of the correspondence and other evidence pertinent to the inquiry it will appear that the attorney has not given an opinion on either the legality or regularity of the bonds as contemplated in the agreement between the parties, but, departing from its purpose and meaning, he has disapproved the bonds only because he considers them an undesirable investment.

On the facts in evidence we do not think such a position can be at all sustained. The bonds were submitted to the attorney, with a request for his opinion as to their "legality." His reply formally disapproved the bonds, and in addition his deposition is put in evidence, in which he repels the insinuation of bad faith, reaffirms his opinion against the validity of the bonds, stating more fully the grounds upon which such opinion is based, and raising what he assuredly regarded as sound objections to their "legality," and on the record we concur in his honor's view that, if the testimony is believed, it shows that the attorney gave his opinion in good faith, and that he acted throughout within the scope of his mission and in the proper performance of the duties intrusted to him.

There is no error, and the judgment of the superior court is affirmed.

No error.

CLARK, C. J. (concurring in result). When the General Assembly authorizes the issue of bonds by the state or a county, township, municipality, or board, the duties of the commissioners or boards authorized to issue such bonds are restricted to issuing the bonds to the amount and in the manner prescribed by the statute. When the bonds are offered for sale, this must be done in compliance with the terms prescribed by the statute. If the highest bidder afterwards declines to take the bonds, the only question which can be presented is whether or not the bonds are a valid indebtedness, and regularly issued in accordance with the terms of the statute.

There is no authority conferred upon the commissioners of a county, or any board, to make private contracts with bidders containing stipulations as to matters not set forth in the statute. If such stipulations, as that they shall meet the approval of the lawyers for the bidders, were valid, that would raise simply the question whether such lawyer is of that opinion, and if he rejects the bonds that ends the controversy. There is nothing for the courts to pass upon. To permit the commissioners, or boards, to make outside agreements that bonds shall meet the views of the bidders in matters not prescribed by the statute, would be to recognize in them ultra vires powers, and it would give to the counsel of the bidders power to raise any moot question which their fancy or whim may suggest.

This court has been very slow to answer inquiries of the Legislature on hypothetical questions, and it will only do so in grave matters requiring such action. We certainly should not recognize the unrestricted power of counsel for bidders to raise any question they see fit, and, by taking an adverse view to the officers authorized to sell the bonds, present to the courts for decision any whimsical or fanciful moot question which they may desire. We have always refused requests for instruction by sheriffs, executors, and administrators, or for the construction of wills, when no direct judgment was required.

It would seem that the proper course to pursue in such cases is to treat the attempted contract as null and void, because not authorized by the statute, and to dismiss the proceeding. The sole question which can legally be presented to the courts, in my judgment, is whether the bonds are a valid indebtedness and issued in conformity with the provisions of the statute in every respect. Beyond that we have no authority to go, and should not gratify the curiosity, or discuss the theories, of those who wish to raise other questions.

The bidder in this case knew the amount of the levy authorized. Whether it will, or will not, raise sufficient revenue in the future to meet the indebtedness, and whether or not serial bonds would be a better investment, were matters for the consideration of the bidder before bidding, but in no wise affect the validity or regularity of the bonds, which are the only questions the courts are authorized to decide.

(178 N. C. 344)

PENDERGRAPH et al. v. AMERICAN RY. EXPRESS CO. (No. 823.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 22, 1919.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ⇐174(6)—SUPERIOR COURT ON APPEAL MAY ALLOW AMENDMENT.

Under Revisal 1905, § 1476, on appeal from a justice of the peace, the superior court had plenary power to allow any necessary amendment in an action against a carrier for failure to transport and deliver, where, before trial, the goods were found and delivered.

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ⇐188(3)—RECOVERY ON APPEAL NOT GOVERNED BY JUDGMENT OF JUSTICE.

Where plaintiffs sued defendant express company before a justice for failure to transport and deliver certain tools, and recovered judgment, and before the case was tried on appeal in the superior court the tools were found and delivered, the amount of the recovery in the superior court was not governed by the judgment rendered by the justice, which may have been based on the value of the tools, plus loss of time, while in the superior court the jury might deduct the value of the tools found.

3. CARRIERS ⇐105(1)—DAMAGES FROM FAILURE TO TRANSPORT.

Plaintiffs, who shipped tools by express, were entitled to recover as damages from failure to transport and deliver the loss which proximately accrued from violation of the company's contract of prompt and safe carriage, and which could have been reasonably presumed to have been in contemplation of the parties when the contract was made, and to have resulted from failure to perform.

4. CARRIERS ⇐105(2)—DAMAGES FROM DELAY ON NOTICE OF PURPOSE OF SHIPMENT.

Where an express company, receiving tools for shipment from carpenters, was told through its agent that the carpenters wanted them shipped to a point where there were other government construction camps, the express company, by the exercise of ordinary care, would have known for what purpose the tools were to be shipped, and is responsible for any loss proximately caused by its negligence in failing to transport.

5. CARRIERS ⇐105(1) — MATTERS FOR JURY IN ESTIMATING LOSS FROM FAILURE TO TRANSPORT.

In an action by carpenters against an express company for delay in transporting tools, the expense and loss of time in returning home to get new sets of tools, and for the loss in having a double set each, were not items of loss, but for consideration by the jury in estimating plaintiff's loss.

6. DAMAGES ⇐62(1)—DUTY TO LESSEN LOSS FROM FAILURE OF CARRIER TO TRANSPORT.

It was incumbent upon plaintiff shippers to lessen the loss accruing from negligence of express company which engaged to transport plaintiffs' carpenters' tools.

7. COURTS ⇐472(7)—ELECTION TO SUE FOR DIFFERENT AMOUNTS IN TORT OR ON CONTRACT.

Carpenters injured by an express company's failure to transport their tools as agreed could elect to bring an action in tort in the superior court for over $200, or on contract for $200 in justice's court.

8. PARTIES ⇐86 — UNNECESSARY PARTY PLAINTIFF MATTER OF SURPLUSAGE.

Where bill of lading for a shipment of tools was issued by an express company in name of one of the shippers alone, the agent knowing the tools belonged to both, so that the bill of lading was to one for himself and as agent for the other, and both brought action for failure to transport the tools, if one of them was an unnecessary party plaintiff, his being so was a mere matter of surplusage.

9. CARRIERS ⇐150—INVALIDITY OF STIPULATION AGAINST LOSS THROUGH NEGLIGENCE.

A common carrier cannot stipulate against loss by its own negligence, and a note on an express company's bill of lading that if the goods were hidden from view the recovery for loss should not exceed $50 was not valid.

Appeal from Superior Court, Durham County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by J. W. Pendergraph and another against the American Railway Express Company. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. No error.

On August 31, 1918, the plaintiffs delivered to the defendant company two boxes of carpenters' tools at Lee Hall, Va., for shipment to Norfolk, Va. The defendant failed to transport and deliver said tools according to contract, and plaintiffs brought this action in December, 1918, before a justice of the peace, who rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiffs for $200, and defendant appealed. In February, 1919, before the case was tried in the superior court the two boxes of tools were found and delivered to plaintiffs. Though the record states that the judge said that he would allow the plaintiffs to amend, it does not appear that any amendment was made. The jury rendered a verdict for $150, damages for breach of contract and defendant appealed.

Bryant, Brogden & Bryant, of Durham, for appellant.

J. W. Barbee and Brawley & Gantt, all of Durham, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. [1, 2] The superior court had plenary power (Revisal, § 1476) if amendment had been necessary. The amount of the recovery in the superior court was not governed by the judgment rendered by the magistrate. Before the magistrate the judgment for $200 may have been based upon the value of the tools, plus the loss of time directly caused by their nondelivery. On the trial in the superior court it may well be that the jury deducted the amount of the value of the tools which had then been found. At any rate their verdict was based upon the value of the time lost by the plaintiff until they could find opportunity to purchase new tools after reasonable delay in waiting for them.

[3] The object in sending the tools by express was to secure their prompt and safe delivery. The plaintiffs were entitled to recover as damages for breach of the contract such loss which proximately accrued from the violation of the contract of prompt and safe carriage of the tools, and which could have been reasonably presumed to have been in contemplation of the parties when the contract was made, and as a result of the failure to perform the defendant's part thereof.

[4] The jury trying the case after the tools had been found estimated plaintiffs' damages in the loss of time and expenses at $150, and there was evidence to authorize such finding. When the plaintiffs delivered the two boxes of tools to the defendant at Lee Hall for transportation (where there was a government camp), they told the agent of the company they wanted them shipped to Norfolk, Va., where there were other camps, and it issued to them a receipt for the two boxes of tools, and told the plaintiffs that they would arrive in Norfolk by Monday. The company had all the notice that they could have had had they examined the tools in the boxes. By the exercise of ordinary care the defendant would have known for what purpose these tools were to be used, and are therefore responsible for any loss proximately caused by their negligence and delay. Neal v. Hardware Co., 122 N. C. 105, 29 S. E. 96, 65 Am. St. Rep. 397. Lewark v. Railroad, 137 N. C. 383, 49 S. E. 882; Lumber Co. v. Railroad, 151 N. C. 25, 65 S. E. 460, and cases there cited; Rawls v. Railroad, 173 N. C. 8, 91 S. E. 367.

[5] There was evidence that the plaintiffs stayed in Norfolk ten days waiting for their tools to come, and that the government required carpenters to furnish their own tools.

There was evidence that they were paid by the government when they obtained their tools $8.25 per day, which they lost, and besides they had to pay their board during their enforced idleness. It was in evidence that they were at the expense of a trip home to buy a new set of tools and return. It would seem from this that the jury must have allowed them compensation for about six days' loss of time, each, as a reasonable wait for the tools to arrive, and their board, and something possibly for the expense and loss of time returning home to get a new set of tools, and for the loss in having a double set each. These were not items of loss, but for consideration by the jury in estimating the loss.

[6] It is true that it was incumbent upon the plaintiffs to lessen the loss accruing from the negligence of the defendant, and this the jury seems to have considered, and the court so charged.

[7] The plaintiffs could have elected to have brought an action in tort in the superior court for a larger amount, or on contract for $200 in the justice's court. Bowers v. Railroad, 107 N. C. 722, 12 S. E. 452. They elected to bring an action before a justice of the peace for breach of contract. Froelich v. Express Co., 67 N. C. 1.

The amount claimed before the justice was solely for the value of the tools and for loss of compensation for labor which they would have received had the tools been delivered, and for expenses incurred while waiting a reasonable time for the tools before obtaining others.

The tools having been delivered when the trial came on in the superior court, the value of the lost tools was omitted in the verdict by the jury, who found $150 a reasonable compensation for the damages sustained by the breach of contract.

[8] It is true that the bill of lading was issued in the name of one of the plaintiffs. But there is evidence that the agent knew that the tools belonged to both the plaintiffs, and the bill of lading was therefore to one for himself and as agent for the other. Both are made plaintiffs, and if one of the plaintiffs had been unnecessary this is merely surplusage.

[9] The note on the bill of lading that if the goods were hidden from view the recovery for loss thereof should not exceed $50 is not valid, for a common carrier cannot stipulate against loss by its own negligence. Moreover, such limitation applied only to the value of the tools, and for them no recovery is embraced in this verdict. The verdict covers only the loss of time and expenses, not exceeding the loss sustained while waiting a reasonable time for the arrival of the tools.

No error.

(178 N. O. 364)

SPRUILL v. DAVENPORT et al. (No. 67.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 22, 1919.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS  $\S$  62—COMMITTEEMAN NOT PERSONALLY LIABLE FOR ACT IN LINE OF DUTY.

A public officer, as a school committeeman, is not personally liable in damages for an act done in the line of his duty, though if the act is wrongful and malicious an action will lie against the officer personally to recover damages for his wrong; the law not inquiring into the wisdom or expediency of an official act.

2. TRIAL  $\S$  352(1)—SCHOOL COMMITTEE LIABLE FOR REMOVAL OF TEACHER FOR MALICE OR CORRUPTION.

In a teacher's action against school committeemen to recover salary for the full term during which she was dismissed, special issue, whether defendants wrongfully removed plaintiff and prevented her from teaching, was insufficient in form to sustain judgment for plaintiff, on account of its omission of the element of malice or corruption in the action of defendants.

3. TRIAL  $\S$  352(1)—ISSUES MUST BE FRAMED AND ANSWERED TO WARRANT JUDGMENT.

While issues are sufficient if they present the material matters in dispute and afford each of the parties a fair and reasonable opportunity to develop his case, they must always be so framed and answered as to warrant the judgment.

4. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS  $\S$  62—RIGHT OF ACTION BY TEACHER NOT LEGALLY APPOINTED FOR DISMISSAL.

A school teacher not legally appointed or elected has no right of action against the school committeemen for damages accruing to her from her dismissal by them, whether or not authorized.

5. STATUTES  $\S$  227—CONSTRUCTION AS MANDATORY.

When fair interpretation of statute directing acts to be done in a certain way shows the Legislature intended compliance to be essential to validity, or when some antecedent conditions must exist prior to the exercise of power, or must be performed before other powers can be exercised, the statute must be regarded as mandatory, or when the provision relates to acts or proceedings immaterial in themselves, but contains negative or exclusive terms, the statute becomes imperative, and requires strict performance.

6. STATUTES  $\S$  227—CONSTRUCTION AS MANDATORY OR DIRECTORY.

There is no absolute formal test for determining whether a statutory provision is to be considered mandatory or directory, but the meaning and intention of the Legislature must govern, being ascertained not only from the phraseology, but from consideration of the nature of the provision, its design, and the consequences of different constructions.

7. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS  $\S$  62—STATUTE REGULATING APPOINTMENT OF TEACHERS MANDATORY.

A teacher not appointed or elected in compliance with Revisal Supp.  $\S$  4161, cannot recover damages from the school committeemen as for a wrongful dismissal; the statute being mandatory and requiring a strict compliance for a valid appointment.

8. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS  $\S$  62—FILING CONTRACT AND EVIDENCE OF ELECTION NECESSARY TO COMPENSATION OF TEACHER.

Where Revisal Supp.  $\S$  4161, forbidding payment of any part of a school teacher's salary unless a copy of her contract has been filed with the superintendent accompanied by evidence that the person so applying for a voucher has been duly and regularly elected, was not strictly complied with, the teacher was not entitled to compensation, and suffered no damages through dismissal by school committeemen.

9. EVIDENCE  $\S$  65—PRESUMPTION OF KNOWLEDGE OF LAW.

A school teacher suing committeemen for damages through loss of salary after her dismissal is presumed to have known the law relative to matters necessary to the legality of her election or appointment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Washington County; Devin, Judge.

Action by Sallie Spruill against J. F. Davenport and others, members of School Committee. Judgment for plaintiff against defendants individually, and the latter appeal. Reversed.

Civil action, tried before Devin, J., and a jury, at July term, 1919, of Washington superior court.

The plaintiff sued for damages, alleging that she had been employed as a teacher in Cherry school district, and that, after she had served for less than a month, she was dismissed by the defendants, members of the school committee. She asks judgment for $360, her salary for the full term of nine months at $40 per month. It being discovered that the complaint stated no cause of action, there being no allegation of fraud or malice, the plaintiff, by leave of the court, amended her pleadings, and further alleged that she was willfully and maliciously dismissed by the defendants, as school committeemen. The court submitted the following issues:

"(1) Did the defendants wrongfully remove the plaintiff and prevent her from teaching the school at Cherry?

"(2) If so, what damage, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover therefor?"

The jury answered the first issue, "Yes," and the second issue, "$280.00 with interest." Upon this verdict, the court rendered a personal judgment against the defendants, and not a judgment against them as school committeemen in their corporate capacity.

Defendants appealed.

Ward & Grimes, of Washington, N. C., for appellants.

Zeb Vance Norman, of Plymouth, for appellee.

WALKER, J. [1-3] The first issue was not in proper form. A public officer is not personally liable in damages for an act done in the line of his duty. Robinson v. Howard, 84 N. C. 152. There it was held that a school committeeman was not liable personally on a contract by which he employed a teacher, and that the remedy was by mandamus to compel the payment of the money by the proper officer in the way provided by law. Though the act is wrongful and malicious, an action will lie against the officer in his personal capacity to recover damages for the wrong committed by him.

"It is a principle well established that when a person, corporation, or individual is doing a lawful thing in a lawful way, his conduct is not actionable, though it may result in damage to another; for, though the damage done is undoubted, no legal right of another is invaded, and hence it is said to be damnum absque injuria. Dewey v. R. R., 142 N. C. 392 [55 S. E. 292]; Thomason v. R. R. (Plaintiff's appeal), 142 N. C. 318 [55 S. E. 205]; Oglesby v. Attrill, 105 U. S. 605 [26 L. Ed. 1186]. In such cases the motive prompting the act, however reprehensible or malicious, is not, as a rule, relevant to the inquiry." White v. Kincaid, 149 N. C. 416, 419, 63 S. E. 109, 111 (23 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1177, 128 Am. St. Rep. 663).

It was said in Hipp v. Ferrall, 173 N. C. 167, 169, 91 S. E. 831, 832, to be the law of this state:

"That public officers, in the performance of their official and governmental duties involving the exercise of judgment and discretion, may not be held liable as individuals for breach of such duty unless they act corruptly or with malice"—citing Templeton v. Beard, 159 N. C. 63, 74 S. E. 735, and Baker v. State, 27 Ind. 485.

See, also, Scott v. Fishplate, 117 N. C. 265, 23 S. E. 436, 30 L. R. A. 696; Burton v. Fulton, 49 Pa. 151; Stewart v. Southard, 17 Ohio, 402, 49 Am. Dec. 463; Reed v. Conway, 20 Mo. 22; Donahoe v. Richards, 38 Me. 379, 61 Am. Dec. 256; Jenkins v. Waldron, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 114, 6 Am. Dec. 359; Harmon v. Tappenden, 1 East, 563; Cullen v. Morris, 2 Stark. 577.

The law does not inquire into the wisdom or expediency of the official act. Oglesby v. Attrill, supra. That is committed to the sound judgment and discretion of the officer, and it is only when he goes outside of his line of duty and acts, as is said in Hipp v. Ferrall, supra, "corruptly or with malice," that he becomes liable for the consequent damages.

The defendants contend, on this ground, that the issue is not sufficient in form to sustain the judgment, as it does not appear therefrom that the dismissal was caused by either corruption or malice. It might have been "wrongful," if there was a mere breach of contract; but this would confine liability to the school district or to the board in its corporate character, and it would not extend to the individual members. More must appear to make them liable. Morrison v. McFarland, 51 Ind. 206; Adams v. Thomas, 12 S. W. 940, 11 Ky. Law Rep. 701. The case of Robinson v. Howard, supra, is of a like kind. The issue, as framed, was not, therefore, sufficient as a basis for the judgment, as it should have included the element of malice or corruption. Ruffin v. Garrett, 174 N. C. 134, 93 S. E. 449. The passage quoted by plaintiff's counsel from 35 Cyc. 1095, does not sustain the position that the members of the board are liable individually. It says:

"Where a school teacher is wrongfully removed or dismissed before the expiration of his term of employment, he is entitled to recover from the school district, or the school board, the damage he has sustained by reason of the breach of his contract, as where he is dismissed without a sufficient cause, or without the cause of his dismissal being ascertained and shown in the manner prescribed, by statute, as without a hearing."

It is apparent what is meant, and that the author is referring to corporate liability. This is made perfectly clear by this statement of the law, almost immediately following the other one in the same paragraph:

"Where the violation of a contract is by the school officers in their official capacity they are not personally and individually liable therefor, unless they act maliciously," citing Morrison v. McFarland, supra; Gregory v. Small, 39 Ohio St. 346; Burton v. Fulton, 49 Pa. 151; Adams v. Thomas, supra—and these cases fully support the text.

It is well settled that while issues are sufficient, if they present the material matters in dispute and afford each of the parties a fair and reasonable opportunity to develop his case to the jury, they must always be so framed and answered as to warrant the judgment. Hatcher v. Dabbs, 133 N. C. 239, 45 S. E. 562; Strauss v. Wilmington, 129 N. C. 90, 39 S. E. 772. The defect in the issue would involve a new trial, as no malice or corruption is found. The charge of the court is not in the record.

[4-7] But there is another obstacle in the plaintiff's way and fatal to her recovery. If she was not properly and legally appointed to the position of teacher in the Cherry school, it was not only the right, and within the power, of the committee to dismiss, but it was their official duty to do so, and, if they were exercising a rightful power, their motive, even if a bad one, cannot be considered, as we have shown heretofore. It is then a correct position that, if she was not legally appointed, or "elected," it is a full answer to her action for damages against the individuals of the board, as the dismissal was not, in any sense, a wrongful one, but instead was a proper thing done "in the line of their duty." This very question was before the court in Gregory v. Small, 39 Ohio St. 346, 348, which we have already cited for another purpose. The court there held:

"If there was not a legal contract of employment, the teacher had no right to teach the public school, and the directors in their official capacity might dismiss him, and put a teacher duly employed in possession of the school-house. The common-law right of action for dismissal is founded on a valid contract of employment. When an officer acts within the scope of his authority, he is not responsible personally, unless he acts from a corrupt motive"—citing Stewart v. Southard, 17 Ohio 402, 49 Am. Dec. 463; Ramsey v. Riley, 13 Ohio, 157; Morrison v. McFarland, 51 Ind. 208.

We must now turn to the record in this case and to the statute of our state regulating such matters, and see whether the plaintiff was regularly and legally appointed as a teacher in the Cherry school. We will first consider the statute, as it will be convenient to do so. It will be found in Gregory's Suppl. to Pell's Revisal, vol. 3, pp. 665 and 666, § 4161. It confers authority to employ and dismiss teachers, and then provides as follows:

"The county board of education of each county shall fix annually a day and place in each township for the meeting of the township or district committeemen of said township, who shall, in conference with the county superintendent, with whom application must have previously been filed by all applicants, select the teachers for their respective schools, except for rural public high schools: Provided, that no election of any teacher or of any assistant teacher shall be deemed valid until such election has been approved by the county superintendent; and no voucher for the salary of a teacher of any school shall be signed by any county superintendent unless a copy of such teacher's contract has been filed with him as herein provided, and unless he shall have received satisfactory evidence that such teacher has been elected in strict accordance with this section."

We have quoted only the material portion of the law. It will be observed that it requires notice of the meeting, appointment of day and place by the county board of education for the meeting of the township or district committee, who shall in conference with the county superintendent select teachers for their respective schools from the list of applications required to be previously filed with the county superintendent by "all" applicants. When we turn to the record, we find that, so far as appears, not one of these requirements has been complied with. The statute also declares that no election shall be deemed valid unless approved by the county superintendent. This approval was not given. It goes further, and directs that no voucher for salary shall be given to any teacher unless the superintendent is satisfied, by evidence, that such teacher has been elected in "strict" accordance with this section. It appears therefore very clearly that these provisions, so carefully and guardedly drawn, were not intended to be merely directory or optional, but mandatory, for the statute not only prescribes the procedure in no uncertain terms, but expressly declares that a departure from it shall render the election void and of no effect. A very good statement of the rule, as to what statutory provisions are mandatory and require strict obedience, and what are only directory and do not affect the validity of what is done, will be found in 36 Cyc. at pages 1158 and 1159. It is there said:

"When a fair interpretation of a statute, which directs acts or proceedings to be done in a certain way, shows that the Legislature intended a compliance with such provision to be essential to the validity of the act or proceeding, or when some antecedent and prerequisite conditions must exist prior to the exercise of power, or must be performed before certain other powers can be exercised, then the statute must be regarded as mandatory. When the statutory provision relates to acts or proceedings immaterial in themselves, but contains negative or exclusive terms, either expressed or implied, then such negative or exclusive terms clearly indicate a legislative intent to impose a limitation, and therefore the statute becomes imperative, and requires strict performance in the manner prescribed."

It is dangerous to attempt to be wiser than the law, and, when its requirements are plain and positive, the courts are not called upon to give reasons why it was enacted. Approving this view, a standard author has said:

"A judge should rarely take upon himself to say that what the Legislature have required is unnecessary. He may not see the necessity for it; still it is not safe to assume that the Legislature did not have a reason for it; perhaps it only aimed at certainty and uniformity. In that case, the judge cannot interfere to defeat that object, however puerile it may appear. It is admitted that there are cases where the requirements may be deemed directory. But it may safely be affirmed that it can never be where the act, or the omission of it, can by any possibility work advantage or injury, however slight, to any one affected by it. In such case, the requirement of the statute can never be dispensed with." Black's Interpretation of Laws (1896) at pages 337, 338.

There is no absolute formal test for determining whether a statutory provision is to be considered mandatory or directory. The meaning and intention of the Legislature must govern; and these are to be ascertained, not only from the phraseology of the provision, but also by considering its nature, its design, and the consequences which would follow from construing it in the one way or the other. Black's Interpretation of Laws, p. 338 (124). But in our case, the meaning and intention of the Legislature are expressed with perfect clearness. No provision, it would seem, could be more mandatory, in form or substance, than one which declares that noncompliance with it shall make void the act of the body required to observe its requirements.

[8] And too, it may be said, on the question of damage, that the plaintiff's claim is based upon the loss of her salary for the school term of seven months, and she actually recovered $280 predicated upon that theory. But the statute expressly and positively forbids the payment of any part of the salary unless a copy of the contract with her has been filed with the superintendent, accompanied by evidence that the person so applying for a voucher has been duly and regularly elected—in strict accordance with the provisions of the statute. This was not done, and it is a condition precedent to the right of compensation. She has therefore shown no damage, as there was no loss of anything to which she was lawfully entitled.

[9] There is no allegation of fraud in this case, or any proof of the same. Plaintiff is presumed to know the law, and should have ascertained if her election was legal, and her evidence shows that she did know that the concurrence and approval of the superintendent was essential to a valid appointment of her as a teacher. Parties must keep within the law, when making their contracts. This view is sustained by Wright v. Kinney, 123 N. C. 619, 31 S. E. 874, though our case is stronger for defendant here. We mention this matter, though not strictly necessary to do so in order to decide the case.

We are therefore of the opinion that, as the plaintiff was not legally elected as a teacher of the Cherry school, it was proper for the committee to dismiss her or to refuse permission that she should longer teach in the school, and that consequently the defendants have committed no act or actionable wrong for which the plaintiff can sue. It is therefore ordered that the judgment be reversed and the action dismissed as upon nonsuit.

Reversed.

(178 N. C. 376)

HOLMES et al. v. BULLOCK et al. (No. 291.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 22, 1919.)

1. PRIVATE ROADS ⇐2(2)—SUPERIOR COURT ON APPEAL CANNOT ALLOW AMENDMENT TO PETITION TO LAY OUT CARTWAY.

As the board of supervisors of a township, in view of Revisal 1905, § 2683, Consol. St. vol. 1, pp. 995, 1004, c. 69, §§ 131, 166, Const. art. 7, § 2, alone has original jurisdiction of a proceeding to lay out a cartway, neither the board of commissioners of the county nor the superior court have authority on appeal to amend a petition for a cartway to one for laying out of a public road; the jurisdiction being derivative.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1178(1) — WHERE AMENDMENT WAS IMPROPERLY ALLOWED CASE WILL BE REMANDED, WITH DIRECTIONS.

In a proceeding before a township board of supervisors to lay out a cartway, where an appeal was taken to the county board of commissioners and from there to the superior court, and the superior court exceeded its jurisdiction and amended the petition to one for the laying out of a public road, the Supreme Court on appeal will not dismiss the case, but will direct the superior court to strike out the void order and proceedings thereunder and to proceed according to law.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cumberland County; Stacy, Judge.

Petition by O. L. Holmes and others to lay out a cartway. Judgment for petitioners, and Gray Bullock and other landowners appeal. Error.

This is a proceeding commenced by petitioners before the board of supervisors of Flea Hill township (Cumberland county), for a cartway starting at a point on the national highway and extending along the lines of lands of defendants to a place near the lands of O. L. Holmes, one of the petitioners. The petition was filed, alleging that it was a public necessity that such a cartway should exist, as the petitioners and others were in great need of a road on which to go to church, to mills, schools, etc. From an order by the board of supervisors to lay out a cartway, the defendants appealed to the board of commissioners of Cumberland county, and said commissioners sustained the action of the supervisors, and ordered the cartway to be laid out. From this order the respondents, on June 3, 1918, appealed to the superior court.

At September term, 1918, the superior court, Lyon, J., presiding, signed an order, granting petitioners leave to amend the petition so as to ask for a public road instead of a cartway, to which order respondents did not ask to enter an exception at the time. Petitioners filed an amended petition on October 5, 1918, and defendants filed an answer to same.

The case was tried at the March term, 1919, and at this term defendants, for the first time, asked to be allowed to enter an exception to the order signed by the judge at September term, 1918, and were allowed the exception as of March term, 1919. This being after they had answered the amended petition.

There was a verdict and a judgment for petitioners. Defendants appealed.

Broadfoot & Broadfoot and Bullard & Stringfield, all of Fayetteville, for appellants.

Neill A. Sinclair and H. L. Cook, both of Fayetteville, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] We need not consider the case upon its merits, as we are of the opinion that an error was committed in allowing an amendment, so as to convert the petition for a cartway into one for a public road or highway. The case came to the superior court, first, by appeal from the board of supervisors, which granted the cartway, to the board of commissioners of the county, and from a like decision of that board to the superior court. The board of commissioners acquired only the jurisdiction of the supervisors, before whom the proceeding was begun, and the superior court acquired the same jurisdiction. Neither of them had the power to amend the petition so as to change it to one of which the board of supervisors had no jurisdiction.

"The board of supervisors shall have the right to lay out and discontinue cartways, and the board of commissioners of the county only shall have the right to lay out and establish and discontinue public roads: Provided, that in laying out and establishing roads and cartways, and for the purpose of assessing damage to property by reason of the same, no greater number of jurors than five shall be summoned or be required: Provided further, that either party may appeal from the decision of the board of supervisors to the board of commissioners of the county." Revisal, § 2683; Consol. Statutes, vol. 1, pp. 995, 1004, c. 69, §§ 131, 166; Const. art. 7, § 2.

The jurisdiction of the superior court was entirely derivative. It acquired only the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors to determine whether a cartway should be established. McLaurin v. McIntyre, 167 N. C. 350, 83 S. E. 627; Boyett v. Vaughan, 85 N. C. 365; James v. McClamroch, 92 N. C. 365; Robeson v. Hodges, 105 N. C. 49, 11 S. E. 263; State v. Wiseman, 131 N. C. 797, 42 S. E. 826. The supervisors had no jurisdiction of proceedings for the laying out of a public road. The board of commissioners had no jurisdiction of proceedings for establishing cartways, and did not exercise any such jurisdiction but confined itself to deciding whether the prayer for a cartway should be granted. The superior court had no original jurisdiction over cartways or public roads, and could only acquire such jurisdiction over such a matter by appeal from a body that did have such a jurisdiction. In this case, under all the pertinent authorities, it only acquired, by the appeal, jurisdiction to try and determine the proceeding for a cartway. By the appeal, the sole jurisdiction of the superior court was derived through the board of commissioners, from the board of supervisors, whose only jurisdiction was of the proceedings for the cartway. In order to ascertain the precise jurisdiction of the superior court, we must, in turn, find out what was the limit of the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors.

[2] The superior court was in error when it undertook to enlarge its own jurisdiction, and to enter upon the consideration of a proceeding which was not before it and which was coram non jure. Being without the power to extend its own jurisdiction by amendment, the order allowing it was void. But this does not dismiss the case, but merely strikes out the amendment, and leaves the proceeding in the condition it was when the order of amendment was made. It is not necessary to consider the other questions as to the time the exception was entered.

It will be therefore, certified to the superior court that there is error, with direction to strike out the order of amendment and reverse all proceedings thereunder, and then to proceed further in the cause, according to the law, to try the issue as to the cartway.

Error.

CLARK, C. J., concurs that the action should not be dismissed, but as the case goes back to the superior court to be tried by a judge and jury, sees no reason why the judgment and verdict already entered should not be affirmed.

This action was begun by petition before the township supervisors for the establishment "of a cartway" which allowed the petition, and on appeal to the county commissioners the action of the township supervisors was approved. On appeal from the county commissioners to the superior court the judge granted an amendment to ask for a public road instead of cartway, to which the defendants entered no exception, but filed an answer on the merits. The judge had full power to allow any amendment. Revisal, 1467. This did not change the nature of the action, but merely amended the scope of the petition, not by changing the cause of action but broadening the relief asked as to this administrative measure, whether it should be a public road or a cartway. At the next term of the superior court the defendants raised objection for the first time to the jurisdiction. They had filed an answer on the merits at the previous term.

The object of a trial is to ascertain the facts and the law on the matter in controversy, and when that controversy has reached a court, such as the superior court, which has full jurisdiction of the matter, and the relief granted is of the same general nature as the action begun in the lower court, there can be no sufficient reason why that court should not proceed to determine the controversy.

When the justice of the peace wrongly takes jurisdiction of a criminal action on appeal to the superior court the case is not dismissed for want of jurisdiction in the magistrate, but a bill is sent and the case is tried de novo. State v. Neal, 120 N. C. 618, 27 S. E. 81, 58 Am. St. Rep. 810. When the clerk wrongly takes jurisdiction and the case by appeal or otherwise reaches the superior court that court has jurisdiction and Revisal, § 614, provides that the judge shall "hear and determine all matters in controversy, in such action, and shall make any amendments whatever," and this was held to be so, though the proceeding before the clerk was a nullity. In re Anderson, 132 N. C. 243, 43 S. E. 649, Railroad v. Stroud, 132 N. C. 416, 43 S. E. 913, and Ewbank v. Turner, 134 N. C. 81, 46 S. E. 508.

In McMillan v. Reeves, 102 N. C. 559, 9 S. E. 452, Smith, C. J., applied to appeals in civil actions the same rule as in criminal proceedings and says:

"It is not material to inquire into the question of jurisdiction invoked in initiating the suit, since any objection on this account is obviated by the removal of the cause into the superior court, presided over by the judge"

—saying further:

"The court, assuming to exercise jurisdiction, did possess it fully over the subject-matter of the action and the parties to it, in which they were represented by counsel, and the cause was, in a strict sense, coram iudice, under the rulings in West v. Kittrell, 8 N. C. 493, and Boing v. Railroad, 87 N. C. 360, even without the aid of Laws 1887, c. 276 [now Revisal, § 614], which sustains the jurisdiction thus acquired."

The Chief Justice further said that the objection to the jurisdiction "has no force unless the proceeding, in its entirety, is a nullity, and it certainly cannot require argument to combat such contention. Norwood v. Peoples, 94 N. C. 167." In this last case the court held that where the parties were before the court it was sufficient though no summons was served.

In Boing v. Railroad, 87 N. C. 363, it was held that, where the subject-matter of the action is one of which the court of the justice of the peace and the superior court had concurrent jurisdiction, on appeal the latter court will retain jurisdiction, though the proceeding in the court of the justice of the peace was void for irregularity. The ground given is that, the case having gotten into the superior court which has jurisdiction, the notice of appeal had the same efficacy as the service of a summons.

As far back as West v. Kittrell, 8 N. C. 493, it was held that where a cause was carried to the superior court from a lower court the former would retain jurisdiction, if it were a subject-matter of which the superior court would have had jurisdiction, if the action had been originally instituted in that court. In State v. Neal, 120 N. C. 618, 27 S. E. 84, 58 Am. St. Rep. 810, it is said:

"The case was tried before a justice of the peace, and the defendant appealed. In the superior court a bill of indictment was found by the grand jury, and the defendant was tried thereon. Therefore, in any aspect, there was jurisdiction. Whether the court acquired it by the appeal or had original jurisdiction by the indictment, it is immaterial to decide."

The above cases were cited in the concurring opinion in State v. McAden, 162 N. C. 578, 77 S. E. 300, and it was added:

"The sole object in serving a summons is to give the defendant notice to come into court. When he has had a trial, on a bona fide mistake of jurisdiction by the plaintiff, before a justice of the peace, and the case is tried on appeal in the superior court, the defendant has really had a more sufficient notice, and is better prepared to try, than if he had been originally served with summons to appear in the superior court. There can be no good end served by dismissing an action thus brought into the superior court by appeal and requiring the defendant to be again brought into the same court by the service of a summons, to try the same case."

There are decisions to the contrary of the above holding that as to appeals in civil cases from a justice that a different rule applies than on appeal from a justice in criminal cases, or from the clerk, in cases where those courts were without jurisdiction, in which cases the superior court proceeds to try. There can be no reason why the same rule should not apply in such case as in the other two. The only reason assigned is that the jurisdiction of the superior court on appeal from a justice in a civil action is "derivative," but it can be no more so than an appeal from a justice in a criminal action or on appeal from the clerk, in both of which no such objection obtains.

An examination of the Constitution will show no basis for the doctrine of "derivative jurisdiction" on appeals in civil cases to the superior court, but it is simply a survival of the former ideas obtaining by which so many objections were held jurisdictional. For instance, if an action was brought in the wrong county it was dismissed, and the plaintiff was put to the expense of bringing a new action in the other county because he had guessed wrong as to the venue. In the search for efficiency and economy in the administration of justice, this was remedied by providing that if no objection was made before answering the trial would proceed but that if it was made in apt time the action was not dismissed, but simply removed to the proper county.

Formerly there were numerous forms of actions, indeed Blackstone says that no one knew their number," but if a party brought an action for debt when it should have been in covenant, or in detinue when it should have been replevin, or if the plaintiff guessed erroneously by using any other form of action than that which the court might deem the correct one, he was dismissed with costs, and had to bring the same action, in another form, in the same court, and if he guessed wrong again he went through the same process until he guessed right. Also there was another pons asinorum that if a man brought an action at law, when it should be a suit in equity, or a suit in equity when it should be an action at law, he was dismissed and had again to come into court to proceed before the same judge, after much loss of time and expense. All these matters have been remedied by simply holding that when the party is in a court which has jurisdiction of the cause the court will permit such amendments as it deems proper, and will proceed to try the cause of which it has jurisdiction.

As to appeals in criminal actions from the justice or in any case from the clerk the same common sense proceeding is followed of proceeding with the trial irrespective whether the court from which the appeal was taken had jurisdiction or not. There can be no reason for an exception from this general rule in appeals from the justice of the peace in civil actions, or from an administrative board as in this matter of "laying out a road," whether it was a cartway, or a public road, when the case got into the superior court it had full jurisdiction. The judge, as he had full power to do, made the amendment (Revisal, § 1467), and the defendant not only did not except, but waived the objection by filing an answer. The facts were found by the jury, and the law applied by the court without any error assigned as to either. Why go over again the same evidence, and apply the same law, in the same court, when it had full jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter of laying out public roads, and no error was committed in the trial?

It would seem that the spirit and the letter of the Constitution and the practice obtaining in all other cases would require that, the matter having been fully examined into and determined by a court having full jurisdiction and without any error assigned, the judgment should be affirmed.

(112 S. C. 555)

OLIVER et al. v. McWHIRTER et al.
(No. 10280.)

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug.-6, 1919.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨229(2) — KNOWLEDGE OF POSSESSION SUFFICIENT TO PUT VENDEE ON INQUIRY.

Although Civ. Code 1912, § 3543, provides that possession under an unrecorded deed shall not operate as notice of such instrument, and requires actual notice of the instrument itself, or of its nature and purport, yet a purchaser of land, possession of which is held under an unrecorded deed, is not entitled to the protection of innocent purchaser, if he had notice of such circumstances as were sufficient to put him on inquiry, which, if pursued with due diligence, would have led to knowledge of the rights of those holding possession under the unrecorded deed.

2. MORTGAGES ⇨536—PURCHASER AT FORECLOSURE WITH KNOWLEDGE OF RIGHTS OF THIRD PARTY.

Evidence held to show that purchaser at mortgage foreclosure sale had actual knowledge of plaintiffs' rights in the property sold.

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⇨177(6)—KNOWLEDGE OF BOOKKEEPER OF FIRM OF UNRECORDED DEED KNOWLEDGE OF FIRM.

Knowledge of a bookkeeper of a partnership, taking a mortgage on property, of the existence of unrecorded deeds, is binding on the partnership.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨237—PAST INDEBTEDNESS INSUFFICIENT CONSIDERATION ON PLEA OF INNOCENT PURCHASER.

Consideration based upon past indebtedness is not sufficient to sustain a plea of innocent purchaser, under Civ. Code 1912, § 3542, requiring that conveyances of land be recorded, etc.

5. EVIDENCE ⇨60 — PRESUMPTION IN CIVIL ACTION OF INNOCENCE OF DECEASED.

There is a presumption in a civil action that a deceased person did not subject himself to a criminal prosecution and that he did not violate the law.

6. MORTGAGES ⇨186(5) — EVIDENCE CHARGING MORTGAGEE WITH NOTICE OF PRIOR UNRECORDED DEED.

In an action to recover real estate, evidence held to show that defendant mortgagee had actual notice of unrecorded deeds.

Hydrick and Fraser, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Union County; Jas. E. Peurifoy, Judge.

Action by Mrs. N. C. Oliver and others against C. M. McWhirter and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded.

See, also, 109 S. C. 358, 96 S. E. 140.

The master's report, referred to in the opinion, was as follows:

The above-stated case having been referred to me, I beg leave to submit this as my report therein:

It is apparently agreed that there are only two issues for me to pass upon, namely:

(1) Did J. L. McWhirter have sufficient notice of unrecorded deeds from B. F. Pennington to the executors of Price, and from the executors of Price back to Pennington, to supply the place of the record of such deeds?

(2) Does the purchase by J. L. McWhirter, at the foreclosure sale under the mortgage given by Pennington to Pitchford Company, place McWhirter in a position where he can, even if he had notice of the alleged equities of the children of Pennington, make the claim of one who purchased from another who had no notice.

As to the first: I think it clear, from the testimony, that J. L. McWhirter had some notice that the children of Pennington should have had, or did have, some interest in this land. He evidently had heard something to this general effect. But there is nothing in the testimony that McWhirter had any actual knowledge that the money of those children had really been invested in this property. Nor is there anywhere in the record any evidence to show that McWhirter had any knowledge whatever of the fact that a deed had been made, nor that he knew of the contents of such deed. The statute law of this state expressly provides that "actual notice shall be deemed and held sufficient to supply the place of registration only when such notice is of the instrument itself, or of the nature and purport." Section 3543, vol. 1, Code of Laws 1912.

It has been argued before me that the rules of equity must, when there is a conflict, prevail over the rules of law. I apprehend that this argument is unsound, in so far as it applies to the statute law of the state. When the rules of the common law and of equity conflict, the former gives way to the latter, but not, I think, when the statute law is concerned. I find, therefore, as a matter of fact, that J. L. McWhirter had no notice of any unrecorded deed conveying this land out of Pennington, and find, further, that said McWhirter had no notice of the nature and purport of such deed or deeds.

As to the second issue: The evidence fails to satisfy me that Pitchford Company ever had any notice of any defect in B. F. Pennington's title to this property. Pitchford testifies, positively, that he did not, and there is no testimony in contradiction. The receipt, which is relied on by plaintiffs, uses the plural, to be sure; but that does not necessarily mean, by any means, that more than one deed was deposited with him. As one of the attorneys said in the argument, it is a common saying among people (laymen) that "here are my titles," or "my titles are good," meaning only one conveyance. In face of Pitchford's unequivocal statement that he knew nothing of any unrecorded deed, I do not think it possible to conclude that, from the wording of this receipt, more than one muniment of title was deposited with him. I find, therefore, that Pitchford Company had no knowledge or notice of either of the unrecorded deeds set up by the plaintiffs herein.

I therefore conclude as matter of law: First. That J. L. McWhirter had no knowledge or notice of any rights or equities of the plaintiffs in the said property in question sufficient to defeat the claim of purchase for value without notice; and, second, that the purchase by J. L. McWhirter of said property at the foreclosure sale under the said Pitchford mortgage placed McWhirter in the position of a purchaser from one without notice—his rights being measured by those of Pitchford Company, who was a creditor without notice of any rights or equities of the plaintiffs in said premises.

The foregoing findings and conclusions render unnecessary consideration of the question of betterments, which was also argued before me. In reaching these conclusions of law and fact, I have not considered the testimony of L. G. Southard, to which plaintiffs objected, and which I myself, on reflection, think incompetent.

I therefore recommend that the complaint herein be dismissed, with the costs of the action.

L. L. Rice, of Anderson, A. C. Mann, of Greenville, and John K. Hamblin, of Union, for appellants.

Wallace & Barron and J. A. Sawyer, all of Union, for respondents.

GARY, C. J. This is an action to recover possession of a house and lot, and for partition. William Price died in 1886, leaving of force his last will and testament, which was probated in Richland county, containing this provision:

"I will and bequeath to Wm. C. Pennington, Benjamin F. Pennington, Mary E. Anderson and Isabella C. Hair, to each $1,000.00 worth of real estate in value, during their natural lives, and after their decease to revert to their children."

In 1887 Joseph R. Price, as executor, and Isabella M. Burns, as executrix, of William Price's estate, commenced an action in the court of common pleas for Lexington county, to which B. F. Pennington and his children were made parties defendant, alleging that Wm. Price owned a large tract of land in Lexington county, and that the purpose of said action was to determine whether it was his intention for the legatees to take this specific land under the will, or whether the land should be sold, and the sum of $1,000 invested in land, under the same condition. The special referee in that case made his report, with the following recommendation:

"For the defendant B. F. Pennington and his children, a lot of land with the dwelling thereon, in the town of Jonesville, Union county, in which he has been living for a term of years, has been purchased at a price of $1,000, and the plaintiffs now hold title for the same, and are ready to convey the property for the use of the said B. F. Pennington, in accordance with the terms of the will."

The referee's report was confirmed, and it was ordered:

"That plaintiffs J. R. Price and Isabella M. Burns do convey to the several defendants above named the several parcels of real estate purchased for them; said conveyances to be settled in accordance with the terms of the trust created by the will of the testator, William Price, deceased."

On the 21st of February, 1887, Charles R. Long executed a deed in the usual form, purporting to convey the house and lot to B. F. Pennington in fee, which was duly recorded. On the 10th of February, 1888, B. F. Pennington executed a deed regular in form in all respects, except there was only one subscribing witness, purporting to convey the fee to Joseph R. Price and Isabella M. Burns, which was not recorded. On the 7th of March, 1888, Joseph R. Price and Isabella M. Burns executed a deed, wherein they recited the fact that they made the deed—

"in pursuance of the judgment of the court of common pleas in and for the county of Lexington, entitled 'Joseph R. Price, Executor, and Isabella M. Burns, Executrix, of the Will of Wm. Price, Deceased, against Wm. C. Pennington and Others,' purporting to convey the land to B. F. Pennington, to have and to hold all and singular the premises before mentioned unto the said B. F. Pennington, his heirs and assigns, for and during his natural life, and after his decease to revert and go to his lawful children."

This conveyance was not recorded. It will thus be seen that the legal title was in B. F. Pennington, that he had a beneficial interest "for and during his natural life," and that he was trustee for his children, who were equitable remaindermen. B. F. Pennington died in 1915.

The defendants denied the material allegations of the complaint and set up the following defense:

"That J. L. McWhirter, their father, acquired title to the land described in the complaint by conveyance made by the master of this court, under a decree for the sale thereof, under foreclosure of a mortgage given by B. F. Pennington, which carries the fee-simple title. The defendants' said ancestor took all the rights, privileges, immunities, interest, and estate of the mortgagor in said mortgage, and acquired the absolute fee-simple title to said land against the plaintiffs and all the world, as purchasers, from one who purchased without notice of plaintiffs' alleged rights under the deed set out; and defendants plead the same in bar of this action."

The defendants also set up a claim for betterments in case it should be decided that they were not entitled to the land.

At the close of the testimony, the defendants' attorneys made a motion for the direction of a verdict, which was granted, and the plaintiffs appealed. Whereupon the judgment of the circuit court was reversed. 109 S. C. 358, 96 S. E. 140. The following reasons for reversal were assigned by this court:

"In the first place, the testimony as to notice of the plaintiffs' equitable rights by J. L. McWhirter was conflicting, and subject to more than one reasonable inference; and, in the second place, there was error on the part of his honor, the presiding judge, in undertaking to decide the plea of purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, which is equitable in its nature, in connection with the action to recover the possession of the land, which must be tried by a jury, unless a decision of the equitable issues renders unnecessary the trial of the legal issues."

The master, to whom the case was referred, after it was remanded, sustained the said defense, and his report (which will be set out) was confirmed by his honor, the presiding judge, for the reasons therein stated by the master, and the plaintiffs again appealed.

1. The first question that will be considered is whether there was error on the part of his honor, the circuit judge, in sustaining the ruling of the master that the provisions of section 3543 of the Code of Laws of 1912 were conclusive of the rights of the plaintiffs, for the reason that J. L. McWhirter did not have actual notice of the unrecorded deeds themselves, nor of their nature and purport. On the 24th of December, 1888, an act was approved with the following provisions:

"That from and after the passage of this act no possession of real property described in any instrument of writing required by law to be recorded shall operate as notice of such instrument; and actual notice shall be deemed and held sufficient to supply the place of registration only when such notice is of the instrument itself or of its nature and purport."

This act was incorporated in the Code of Laws of 1912 as section 3543. The deed from Long to Pennington was executed on the 21st of February, 1887, and the act was not approved until the 24th of December, 1888. The children, together with their father, B. F. Pennington, immediately entered into possession of the house and lot, and there remained for several years. Therefore section 3543 is not applicable to this case. Foster v. Bailey, 82 S. C. 378, 64 S. E. 423. In that case the court used this language:

"This statute changed the rule declared in Sheorn v. Robinson, 22 S. C. 32, Daniel v. Hester, 29 S. C. 147, 7 S. E. 65, and like cases, that possession is notice of an unrecorded deed. The cases of Harman v. Southern Ry., 72 S. C. 235, 51 S. E. 689, and Southern Ry. v. Howell, 79 S. C. 286, 60 S. E. 677, are not conclusive for appellant, as the possession under an unrecorded deed in each of those cases arose at a time when the rule in Daniel v. Hester was in force, and was a continuing possession at the time the subsequent deed was made."

[1] 2. But even if section 3543 was applicable to this case, and it appeared from the testimony that J. L. McWhirter had notice of such circumstances as were sufficient to put him on inquiry, which, if pursued with due diligence, would have led to knowledge of the plaintiffs' rights, he is not entitled to the protection of a purchaser for value without notice. Beck v. Railroad, 99 S. C. 310, 83 S. E. 335.

3. Furthermore, that section is not applicable when the party in possession claims under an equitable title, as in the present case.

"One in possession under an equitable title has nothing that he can record; and possession, open and unconcealed, is the only mode by which he can give notice to the world of his rights; and when this notice is given, in the only way in which it could be given, he should be protected." Sheorn v. Robinson, 22 S. C. 32; Sweatman v. Edmunds, 28 S. C. 58, 5 S. E. 165; Folk v. Brooks, 91 S. C. 7, 74 S. E. 46; Manigault v. Lofton, 78 S. C. 499, 59 S. E. 534.

As the children could not assert their rights until the termination of their father's life estate, he could do no act destructive of their estate.

"If, as we have held, Regina Gadsden took only a life estate, with remainder to the plaintiffs as her issue living at the time of her death, nothing that she did in her lifetime could affect the legal rights of the remaindermen, and no order made by the court in the proceedings for partition, to which these plaintiffs were not parties, although they were then susceptible of being made parties, can be allowed to impair their rights." Gadsden v. Desportes, 39 S. C. 131, 17 S. E. 706; Sullivan v. Latimer, 35 S. C. 422, 14 S. E. 933; Folk v. Hughes, 100 S. C. 220, 84 S. E. 713.

[2] 4. We proceed to show that J. L. McWhirter, not only had a sufficient notice to put him on inquiry, but that he had actual knowledge of the plaintiffs' rights. It appears from the testimony that the executors of William Price's estate, through their attorney, wrote to a party in Jonesville, requesting him to send a certificate from three disinterested persons that the Long house and lot would be a good investment for the $1,000 bequeathed to B. F. Pennington and his children by Price, and J. L. McWhirter signed the certificate. J. L. McWhirter made an affidavit that he served a copy of the summons, in the case of the executors of Price against Pennington and his children, on Lillian M. Pennington, Ida M. Pennington, and Carrie S. Pennington, by delivering to them personally a copy thereof, and to B. F. Pennington, their father with whom they reside, and that he knows the persons named to be those spoken of in the summons. J. L. McWhirter purchased a lot adjoining the one in question, and this appears in the description of it: "Bounded by lands of the children of B. F. Pennington."

W. H. Anderson testified:

"That he knew J. L. McWhirter; lived on opposite side of railroad from him; knew B. F. Pennington; the relationship between Pennington and McWhirter was very close; had a conversation with McWhirter in regard to this property; he remarked to me that he thought so much of Pennington that he was very much surprised that the estate was left like it was, knowing that Pennington had only a lifetime interest in the estate; said he knew, or thought, that Pennington was fully capable of taking care of the property, and it wasn't necessary to secure it that way, by giving him only a life interest in it, and at his death to his children. These conversations were in 1887, at the time I was living in Jonesville."

John Whitlock testified:

"Was deputy sheriff eight or nine years; raised near Jonesville; knew J. L. McWhirter very well; we went to school together; was on very intimate terms with him. After Mr. McWhirter had bought this land, I offered him $100 for his bid, provided he could give me a good title; he just said he couldn't take it. He said he hadn't got a title in himself. * * * He said he didn't know whether he could get a good title for himself. He said he hoped to keep the property long enough to get his money back out of it."

John Long testified:

"Lives about 2½ miles from Jonesville; knew J. L. McWhirter. Q. What conversation did you have with J. L. McWhirter, in regard to this being entailed property? A. He said he thought that it was entailed property. Q. When was that? A. I can't exactly tell you when. Q. How long ago was it? A. I don't know exactly. It was since Pennington left there."

J. B. Foster testified:

"Have lived at Jonesville 35 years. * * * The relations between Pennington and McWhirter were very pleasant, I think. They were closely associated together, especially on Sundays. The town was small, and we all went to Sunday school together on Sundays, and preaching together."

In reply to questions as to the Penningtons investing in property there, and McWhirter's knowledge of same, the witness said:

"Just general talk. Mr. McWhirter didn't say anything about his real knowledge of it, how the money came. As well as I remember about it, we were just together as men ordinarily get together, and the Penningtons going to invest in property somewhere, and Mr. McWhirter says: 'We will be glad to have you invest here in town.' I said: 'Of course we would. We would be glad to have you.' And just in that way we tried to use our influence to get them to invest in Jonesville."

To the question, "Where was the money coming from?" witness said:

"They said an uncle, I believe it was, had given it to them. Q. Were there any conditions or limitations attached to the way the money was to be invested? A. Mr. Pennington said repeatedly that he had given it to the children. Q. Was there anything said in the conversation where Mr. McWhirter spoke of them holding it for life? A. They said something about holding it in trust for the children. Q. How often have you heard Mr. McWhirter discuss or talk about that? A. I couldn't say."

J. W. Nance testified:

"I am a farmer and deal in stock. I knew J. L. McWhirter in his lifetime, and was on intimate terms with him. He called me 'Old Pard.' I talked with him once about buying the Pennington property, and he advised me not to buy, as I could get no titles to it. This was a year or two before he bought the land. I afterwards saw him at Jonesville, and laughed at him for buying it, after advising me not to do so, because the titles were not good. He never explained to me why I could not get a good title."

Only one reasonable inference can be drawn from the foregoing testimony.

5. We next proceed to show, that the C. W. Pitchford Company not only had actual notice of the unrecorded deeds, but of such facts as were sufficient to put them on inquiry. C. W. Pitchford testified in behalf of the defendants:

"Live at Walhalla, a merchant there; am president of the C. W. Pitchford Company. I don't know whether I took the mortgage from Mr. B. F. Pennington to C. W. Pitchford Company or my bookkeeper; that was in 1898; I had it sold. At the time that we took this mortgage Mr. B. F. Pennington was dealing with my company. I traveled; was selling him goods. (Record of mortgage of B. F. Pennington to C. W. Pitchford Company, bearing date the 14th day of April, 1898, and recorded, put in evidence.) Mr. Pennington was residing at Walhalla at the time, where I was doing business. At the time of taking this mortgage, I had parted with something of value, and did thereafter, for this mortgage. I had no notice of any kind of any defect in the title; I thought he had a good title. I had no notice at any time of any unrecorded deed. I turned the paper over to my lawyer to be foreclosed, and I didn't know anything about the transaction, until I received my money back. I had no notice of any defect in the title or of any unrecorded deed."

On cross-examination:

"Recognizes his handwriting, and acknowledges he wrote certificate introduced in evidence:

"Walhalla, S. C., Oct. 14, 1896.

"This is to certify that B. F. Pennington has deposited with me his titles on his storehouse and lot in Jonesville, S. C., and also his contract with D. B. Free, as collateral for twenty-five dollars, payable on the 31st of Dec., '96. "C. W. Pitchford."

[3, 4] It will be observed that the witness did not even know whether he or his bookkeeper took the mortgage. Conceding that he himself did not have notice of the unrecorded deed, it by no means follows that his bookkeeper did not have such notice, which, of course, would be binding on the company. The testimony shows that at least a part of the consideration was based upon past indebtedness, which is not sufficient to sustain the plea of innocent purchaser; nor did he explain what the present consideration was. How, then, can it be successfully contended that the consideration was sufficient to sustain the plea?

[5, 6] The certificate throws far more light upon the question of notice than the testimony of Pitchford. The certificate shows that Pennington deposited with Pitchford his titles, which, as has been shown, consisted of three deeds; and it was necessary to refer to the three, in order to give notice of Pennington's and his children's interest thereunder. The presumption is that more than one deed was deposited; and square dealing and honesty demanded that Pennington should state his and their interests correctly, especially when his children were the equitable remaindermen. If Pennington had induced Pitchford to make the loan, under the belief that he was the owner of the land in fee (as appeared upon the face of the deed executed by Long), he would have subjected himself to a criminal prosecution, for obtaining money or goods under false pretenses, and at the expense of his own children. The presumption is that he did not intend to violate the law. There is not a particle of testimony that there was a mistake in using the word "titles" instead of "title." The contents of the deeds were therefore notice to Pitchford of the children's rights as equitable remaindermen.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed, and the case remanded for the purpose of determining the question of betterments.

WATTS, J., concurs.

GAGE, J. (concurring). In my judgment B. F. Pennington owns the life estate and his children were remaindermen; both held legal estates; B. F. was not trustee for children. I think, therefore, the third postulate of the opinion is not relevant.

The occupancy of B. F. was not notice to McWhirter that the children had a right, and therefore the first postulate is not relevant. I agree, though, that B. F. had actual notice of the children's right, and that Pitchford had notice of circumstances which, had he followed up, would have led him to know the interest of the children.

I therefore agree to postulates 4 and 5, and vote for reversal.

HYDRICK, J. (dissenting). I realize that it would be a hard case to deny the plaintiffs relief, and, for that reason, I regret that I feel constrained to dissent. But I am reminded that hard cases make bad precedents.

The mind of the court evidently has been too much impressed by the fact that McWhirter had notice of plaintiffs' rights when he bought. Otherwise, there is no apparent reason for the elaboration of the evidence to show that he had notice—a fact found by the master and concurred in by the circuit judge. But that fact is really irrelevant in the consideration of the question which became the real issue in the case, as soon as it was established that McWhirter had notice, to wit: Did Pitchford have notice? For it must be conceded that, if he purchased without notice, McWhirter got a good title.

With due respect to my Brethren, it seems to me that the inference of notice to Pitchford, which has been drawn from the evidence, is strained and unwarranted, and that the reasoning upon which that inference is based is too technical. I think undue importance has been given to the use of the word "titles" in the certificate which Pitchford signed in 1896, two years before the mortgage was given. It is a matter of common knowledge—and the master and circuit judge so find—that laymen frequently use the word "titles" inaccurately to refer to a single deed.

It is said that we must presume that Pennington did the square and correct thing, and delivered to Pitchford all three of the deeds, and especially because, if he did not do that, he laid himself liable to a criminal prosecution for obtaining goods under false pretenses, and we must presume that he was innocent of that crime. Can we fairly indulge that presumption in the face of the undisputed fact in the record evidence that he gave a mortgage of the fee, when he knew that he had only a life estate? And the further fact that he never put on record the deeds by which his estate in fee had been cut down to a life estate? As an honest man, clearly it was his duty to have put those deeds on record.

But must we not also indulge the presumption that Pitchford did not commit perjury when he swore that he did not have notice of the deeds? His character is unimpeached, and this is what he swore:

"I had no notice of any kind of any defect in the title. I thought he had a good title. I had no notice at any time of any unrecorded deed."

If the inference drawn by the court from the use of the word "titles" in the certificate is correct, it follows that he swore falsely, for, if the three deeds were delivered to him, he must have seen and known that two of them had not been recorded, and he must have known from the unrecorded deeds that Pennington had only a life estate.

An inference of constructive notice is also drawn from the fact that Pitchford testified that he did not remember whether he or his bookkeeper took the mortgage. Is it reasonable to infer from that statement that the transaction was between Pennington and the bookkeeper, and that the latter may have had notice, which the law would impute to Pitchford? I think not, for the testimony shows too clearly to admit of doubt that the negotiation and agreement was had between Pennington and Pitchford, and what Pitchford meant was merely that he did not remember whether he himself or his bookkeeper performed the clerical work of preparing the mortgage.

I think the clear preponderance of the evidence is in favor of the finding of the master, concurred in by the circuit judge, that Pitchford had not had notice. It is often hard to prove a negative; but, if it has not been shown in this case that Pitchford took his mortgage without notice of plaintiffs' rights, I do not see how that defense can be established in any case.

FRASER, J., concurs.

(125 Va. 595.)

BLANKENSHIP v. BLANKENSHIP.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. DIVORCE $\S$ 1—PROCEEDING PURELY STATUTORY.

Neither courts of law nor equity have inherent power to dissolve marriage; the power to decree a divorce being purely statutory.

2. DIVORCE $\S$ 91—JURISDICTIONAL FACTS AS TO RESIDENCE MUST BE PLEADED.

A bill should allege the jurisdictional fact with reference to the residence of the parties, in view of Code 1904, § 2259.

3. DIVORCE $\S$ 103—BILL NOT ALLEGING RESIDENCE OF PLAINTIFF DEMURRABLE.

A bill for divorce, which does not allege that one of the parties has been a resident of the state for a year, is demurrable for that reason; Code 1904, § 3260, relating to pleas in abatement, not applying.

4. PLEADING $\S$ 400—FAILURE TO PLEAD RESIDENCE IN DIVORCE CANNOT BE WAIVED.

A suit for divorce is not such a cause that a court of the state would have general jurisdiction under Code 1904, § 9058, and is not a case which involves merely the venue of the suit within the state, in which the right to particular place of trial is a privilege merely, which may be waived by defendant, and hence defect of bill in not alleging the jurisdictional fact of residence cannot be waived.

5. COURTS $\S$ 36—TERRITORIAL JURISDICTION NOT PRESUMED AS TO COURT EXERCISING STATUTORY AUTHORITY.

Where the court is acting in the exercise of a special statutory authority, the rule as to courts of general jurisdiction, that territorial jurisdiction will be presumed if court has jurisdiction otherwise, is not applicable.

6. DIVORCE ~~62~~(1)—EVIDENCE OF RESIDENCE IN STATE STATUTORY PERIOD NECESSARY.

In view of Code 1904, § 2259, a court has not jurisdiction to enter a decree of divorce, unless there is evidence in the record showing that one of the parties was domiciled in the state for as long as one year next preceding the commencement of the suit.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Giles County.

Action by Mr. Blankenship against Mrs. Blankenship. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

This is a suit for divorce, in which there is an original and an amended bill, neither of which contains any allegation that one of the parties had been domiciled in the state for at least one year preceding the commencement of the suit.

The defendant—the wife—was brought personally before the court by process duly served upon her to answer the original bill. She did not plead in abatement to the jurisdiction of the court, but at term demurred to the original bill, and also filed her answer thereto. Subsequently, also at term, on the filing of the amended bill by leave of court, the defendant did not plead in abatement, but entered an appearance and demurred to and answered the amended bill.

The decrees under review are silent as to the demurrer to the original bill, but the demurrer to the amended bill is expressly overruled by one of such decrees.

There was evidence introduced in the cause both for plaintiff and defendant, but there is no proof in the record that either the plaintiff or the defendant had "been domiciled in the state for at least one year preceding the commencement of the suit."

The final decree in the case which is under review granted an absolute divorce to the plaintiff, with leave to either party to marry again and awarded costs against the defendant.

Further facts in reference to the allegations of the original and amended bills will appear in the opinion of the court.

W. B. Snidow, of Pearisburg, for appellant.
Williams & Farrier, of Pearisburg, for appellee.

SIMS, J. (after stating the facts as above). The assignments of error raise a number of questions, but since, in our view of the case, the court below had no jurisdiction to enter any decree in the cause, it will be unnecessary for us to pass upon any other questions than those concerning the jurisdiction of the court, save one, which will be adverted to below.

1. Section 2259 of the Code, so far as material in the cause before us, provides as follows:

"No suit for annulling a marriage or for divorce shall be maintainable, unless one of the parties has been domiciled in this state for at least one year preceding the commencement of the suit. * * *

In view of this statutory provision, neither the court below nor any other court in the state had any jurisdiction of the cause before us, unless one of the parties had been domiciled in this state for at least one year preceding the commencement of the suit.

As said in the opinion of the court in the case of Rumping v. Rumping, 36 Mont. 39, 91 Pac. 1057, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1197, at page 1260, 12 Ann. Cas. 1090, quoting with approval from the case of Dutcher v. Dutcher, 39 Wis. 651:

"It concerns the public welfare that the state should not be made a free mart of divorce for strangers, and that, amongst her own people, divorce should not become a matter of free will * * * —a personal right independent of public right and inconsistent with public welfare. Divorces without the letter and spirit of the statute in fact, but made to look within it by design or mistake or accident, are frauds upon the statute and offenses against public policy. And it is the duty of the courts * * * to look closely into actions for divorce. * * *

[1] As further said in the opinion of the court in the case of Rumping v. Rumping, supra:

"It is elementary, of course, that neither courts of law or equity have any inherent power to dissolve marriage. The power to decree a divorce is purely statutory. Irwin v. Irwin, 3 Okl. 186, 41 Pac. 369. When, therefore, the Legislature, in conferring upon courts the jurisdiction to grant divorces, says, in the same statute, that a divorce must not be granted unless the plaintiff has been a resident of the state for one year next preceding the commencement of the action, we believe it meant just what it said. * * * In Gredler v. Gredler, 36 Fla. 372, 18 South. 762, the court said: 'The complainant has wholly failed to allege in his bill, or to prove, that he had resided in this state for two years prior to the exhibition of his bill. * * * The fact of the appellant's prior residence for two years in this state was necessary both to be alleged in the bill and established by proof, before the courts were authorized to grant a divorce under our statute.' * * * Under a statute very similar in its phraseology to our own, the Supreme Court of Minnesota held, in Thelen v. Thelen, 75 Minn. 433, 78 N. W. 108, that the fact of the plaintiff's residence was jurisdictional and must be alleged in the complaint."

The statute of Montana (Civ. Code, § 176) involved in the case of Rumping v. Rumping is similar to the Virginia statute above quoted, and is as follows:

"A divorce must not be granted unless the plaintiff has been a resident of the state for one year next preceding the commencement of the action."

Many of the other states have similar statutes under which the holding is well-nigh universal that it is essential to the jurisdiction of the court that the bill for a divorce should allege "the prerequisite jurisdictional facts as to residence required by the statute." See note to said case of Rumping v. Rumping, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1197 to 1200.

[2] As said in Hogg's Eq. Principles, § 498, p. 666:

"The bill in a suit for divorce should allege the jurisdictional fact with reference to the residence of the parties.

"With us it should aver that the plaintiff and the defendant (or one of them) has resided in the state one year next preceding the time of bringing the suit. * * * In short, enough must appear on the face of the bill to show a right to bring the suit. A decree will be withheld, even though no demurrer has been interposed, unless a right to exhibit the bill appears."

[3] No authority is cited for the defendant counter to the general proposition that a bill for divorce should contain the jurisdictional allegations aforesaid and that the proof in the record must show affirmatively that such jurisdictional fact exists. But it is contended in behalf of the defendant that in Virginia, under section 3260 of the Code, the objection before us can be made only by plea in abatement, and could not be made by demurrer or upon a hearing on the merits.

This raises a question which is unsettled in this state. It was mentioned in the case of Johnston v. Johnston, 116 Va. 678, 82 S. E. 694, but not involved or passed upon therein.

Section 3260 aforesaid, so far as material, is as follows:

"When the declaration or bill shows on its face proper matter for the jurisdiction of the court no exception for want of such jurisdiction shall be allowed unless taken by plea in abatement. * * *

Does either the original or amended bill in the cause before us show "on its face proper matter for the jurisdiction of the court"?

As is said by this court in the case of Moore v. N. & W. Ry. Co., 98 S. E. at page 637:

"The 'proper matter' for the jurisdiction of the court, mentioned in section 3260 aforesaid, has reference to subject-matter over which the court has territorial jurisdiction, and the 'jurisdiction' referred to is the territorial jurisdiction of the court over such subject-matter. * * *

Now, since, as above stated, no court in the state had any jurisdiction of the cause before us, unless one of the parties had been domiciled in this state for at least one year next preceding the commencement of the suit, it is manifest that the bills, which do not even allege that one of the parties had been so domiciled (see statement preceding this opinion), do not show on their face "proper matter" for the "jurisdiction" of the court; and even if the bills had so alleged, that would not have given the court jurisdiction unless the allegation was sustained by proof of the fact.

[4] This is not such a cause that the court below or some court of the state would have had general jurisdiction of it under section 3058 of the Code. It is not a case which involves merely the venue of the suit within the state, in which the right to a particular place of trial therein is a privilege merely which may be waived by the defendant. Doubtless for reasons of public policy, indicated in the quotations from the authorities above made, the state has not left any of its courts clothed with such jurisdiction of divorce suits that, if the bill should allege the existence of facts giving territorial jurisdiction, a failure of the defendant to object to the jurisdiction of the court by plea in abatement would have the effect of shutting off any inquiry in the cause on the subject of the court's jurisdiction. For if such was our procedure in divorce suits it is obvious that our statutory requirement as to antecedent domicile might, and in many cases would, be set at naught by the mere failure of the defendant to plead in abatement. And while we have no idea that there was in fact any attempted fraud upon the jurisdiction of the court in the cause before us, a holding that the failure of the defendant to plead in abatement in such cause would bar the latter from objecting to the jurisdiction of this court, and would bar the court from any inquiry and decision upon the question of jurisdiction, would set a precedent which would open wide the door to fraud upon the jurisdiction of the courts of the state, and would make it another resort for those who are impatient of delay in throwing off and eager to be rid of their marriage ties, which would bring about the very mischiefs which our statutory requirement as to domicile in cases of suits for divorce was meant to obviate. Thus would the statute itself be rendered nugatory in this important particular.

[5] The defense of the absence of the jurisdictional fact aforesaid is not a matter of abatement of the suit, but is in its nature a bar to the suit. Hence section 3260 aforesaid is inapplicable, so that such defense need not be pleaded in abatement, and may be pleaded in bar; and even if not pleaded in bar, the court may and should, for the reason of public policy above indicated, dismiss the suit at the hearing of the cause on the merits, unless the existence of such fact affirmatively appears from the proof in the record. Such is the power and duty of the court in such cases, because it does not therein exercise a general jurisdiction, but only a limited statutory jurisdiction. For while it is true that, where a court of general jurisdiction has before it the proper parties and the subject-matter is of such nature that it would have general jurisdiction of the cause, if it had territorial jurisdiction thereof, such territorial jurisdiction (along with the other matters essential to the general jurisdiction of a court) will, in the absence of proper pleading and proof disclosing the contrary, be presumed to exist, although they do not affirmatively appear from the record; that is not true where the court is acting in the exercise of a special statutory authority. In such case the territorial jurisdiction will not be presumed, but must be made to affirmatively appear from the record; otherwise, as is well settled, any decree the court may enter will be void for lack of jurisdiction to enter it. Pulaski County v. Stuart, Buchanan & Co., 69 Va. (28 Grat.) 872; Galpin v. Page, 18 Wall. 350, 21 L. Ed. 959; Coleman v. Va. Stave Co., 112 Va. 61, 75, 70 S. E. 545.

It follows, from what we have said above, that we are of opinion that the demurrer to the original and amended bills should have been sustained by the court below.

[6] 2. With respect to the action of the court below on the merits of the case: As set forth in the statement preceding this opinion, there is no evidence in the record showing that either the plaintiff or defendant were domiciled in this state for as long as one year next preceding the commencement of this suit. The court, therefore, had no jurisdiction of the cause, even if the bills had not been defective in allegation in this particular, and the court should have dismissed the case on the hearing upon the merits.

For the foregoing reasons the case must be reversed, and we will enter a decree dismissing this suit, with costs against the appellee, without prejudice, however, to his right, should he be so advised, to institute a new suit for divorce upon the same cause of action as that alleged in his amended bill aforesaid.

Reversed.

(125 Va. 681)

DAVIS v. ALDERSON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⇨16—UNPROFITABLE BARGAIN NO DEFENSE.

The mere fact that a party has made a bad trade or unprofitable bargain will not relieve him of specific performance.

2. EVIDENCE ⇨505 — TESTIMONY OF PHYSICIAN OPINION EVIDENCE.

Testimony by physicians that, if defendant who sued for specific performance purchased the land with expectation of paying for it, he must have been irresponsible for his acts in some way, which did not go to the length of saying that defendant was insane, is not expert testimony, but mere opinion, and should have been excluded, though the defense was that defendant was temporarily insane when he made the contract.

3. EVIDENCE ⇨474(4), 568(2)—WEIGHT OF TESTIMONY OF LAY WITNESS AS TO SANITY.

Testimony of lay witness as to sanity or insanity of a person is admissible in evidence, where it appears the witness had sufficient opportunity by observation to form an opinion worth considering, and usually such testimony, where general sanity is not involved, is not esteemed of much value except so far as the opinion of witness is justified by data observed.

4. EVIDENCE ⇨14 — JUDICIAL NOTICE THAT MEN OLDER THAN 62 OCCUPY IMPORTANT POSITIONS.

The courts will take judicial notice that men of greater age than 62 occupy important governmental and judicial positions, so as to rebut the claim of defendant, who on being sued for specific performance claimed that he was temporarily insane when he made the contract and urged his advanced age of 62 in support of his contention.

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨44—EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO SHOW TEMPORARY INSANITY OF VENDEE.

In a suit for specific performance of land sale contract where defendant claimed he was temporarily insane when he made the contract, evidence held insufficient to show any such insanity.

6. EVIDENCE ⇨63—PRESUMPTION OF SANITY.

Every person is presumed to be sane until the contrary is made to appear.

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨85—EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO SHOW RELEASE OF VENDEE.

In a suit to compel specific performance of defendant's contract to purchase land, evidence held insufficient to show any release by complainant.

8. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⇨116½—REFUSAL TO ALLOW FILING OF SUPPLEMENTAL ANSWER.

In suit for specific performance of a contract to purchase land where the land was sold on default of the defendant purchaser and bought in by the vendor for $1 more than the agreed price, held that, where the vendor was awarded a balance for accruing interest, defendant was not on report of the sale entitled to file a supplemental answer setting up the vendor's possession of land from the time of contract to suit, for notwithstanding Act March 27, 1914 (Laws 1914, c. 331), giving the right of amendment at every stage of proceeding, parties cannot be allowed to try their case piecemeal.

9. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⇨130 — ALLOWANCE TO VENDEE OF VALUE OF USE OF LAND BY VENDOR.

Under the maxim he who seeks equity must do equity, a vendor, seeking specific performance of a contract of the sale of land, who remained in possession from the time of making of contract, etc., until it was judicially sold on default of the purchaser, etc., must account to the purchaser for any profit from occupation as against vendor's claims for interest on the purchase money.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Dickenson County.

Suit by Mrs. Alderson against one Davis. From a decree for complainant, defendant appeals. Amended and remanded.

Chase & McCoy, of Clintwood, and W. A. Daugherty, of Grundy, for appellant.

A. A. Skeen, of Clintwood, and C. C. Burns, of Lebanon, for appellee.

BURKS, J. The appellee sued the appellant for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of a tract of land in Russell county, and the circuit court, on the pleadings and proof, granted the relief prayed. The defendant interposed none of the defenses usually relied on in suits of this nature, but relied solely on the ground that, when the contract was entered into, the appellant (the purchaser) was temporarily insane, and that subsequently the appellee released him from the performance of the contract. The defense is not rested upon fraud, misrepresentation, mistake, accident, unfairness, excessive consideration, or any misconduct on the part of the vendor, but rather on the improvidence of the purchaser, his mental condition, and the supposed hardship that would result to him if he were compelled to perform his contract, and upon a release by the vendor of the obligation of the contract. It will be unnecessary, therefore, to enter into any discussion of the general subject of specific performance of the contracts for the sale of land, and this opinion will be confined to the specific defenses made. If the appellant was capable of making the contract, and has not been released from its performance, there is nothing in the doctrine of specific performance that would afford him relief.

[1] The mere fact that a party has made a bad trade or unprofitable bargain will not relieve him from specific performance. Whitted v. Fuquay, 127 N. C. 68, 37 S. E. 141.

"It would be a travesty upon justice, and the reputed sanctity of contracts would be of little avail, if parties could refuse the performance of contracts having some years to run, which were fairly entered into, and believed to be just and equal when made, merely because from contingencies, whose possibility might have been foreseen, they had turned out, in the course of execution, to be a losing instead of a profitable bargain." Southern R. Co. v. Franklin, etc., R. Co., 96 Va. 693, 709, 32 S. E. 485, 490 (44 L. R. A. 297).

The contract sought to be enforced was for the sale of a tract of 400 acres of land in Russell county, and was entered into by the parties in person on January 1, 1916. Respondent says, in his answer, that he was at that time physically ill and being harassed by security debts amounting to several thousand dollars which were then being reduced to judgment, and that when these obligations had been discharged he would have left only "some fifteen or twenty thousand dollars worth of real estate and no personal property." Further answering, respondent says:

"If it should be decreed that your respondent would have to undertake to carry out said attempted agreement aforesaid, it would mean nothing more than a complete sacrifice of every dollar's worth of property your respondent now owns, and a balance of indebtedness against him for said land amounting to some fifteen or twenty thousand dollars. And your respondent now being sixty-two years old, and in ill health, and with no other means with which to pay the balance of the purchase price of said farm, he charges and avers that it could result in nothing more than the sale of said farm from him for the payment of the balance of the purchase price for said farm, and thereby the whole of your respondent's property would be exhausted and your respondent would be financially ruined."

The appellant was a prosperous farmer, living in Dickenson county, and owned valuable real and personal property. Amongst other property, he owned a farm of over 400 acres from which he sold the timber just about the time the contract in suit was executed, for $9,000, and another tract of what is called coal land, of about 200 acres, for which he said he had been offered $10,000. About a year before the contract in suit was entered into, he went to Russell county and inspected the appellee's farm and was pleased with it, and inquired the price and was informed that appellee asked $45,000 for it. This he regarded as "a little too big a proposition for him." During the ensuing year, the appellee placed her farm for sale in the hands of D. W. Lyttle, a real estate broker, and informed him that appellant had been there to look at the farm, and told him of others who were interested in the place. Some time about December, 1915, Lyttle wrote to the appellant about the farm, and, after some correspondence between them on the subject Lyttle went to Dickenson county to see the appellant about buying. While there Lyttle priced him the farm at $36,000, and he agreed to go to Russell in about a week and look the farm over. He accordingly went to Russell and spent the night with Lyttle, and the next day they went over the farm together, and inspected it. The day after, or two days thereafter, appellant agreed to take the farm at $35,750. This agreement was made directly between the appellant and the appellee, in the presence of Lyttle, who prepared a title bond which was executed by the appellee and a note for the first deferred payment which was executed by the appellant. According to the terms of sale, one dollar was paid in cash, one-third of the purchase money was to be paid October 1, 1916, when possession was to be given, and one-third of the balance was to be paid October 1, 1917, another third October 15, 1918, and the remaining one-third October 1, 1919; all of the three last-mentioned payments to bear interest from October 1, 1916. Two days after the purchase, to wit, on January 3, 1916, appellant contracted to purchase of J. B. Bransford his farm, also in Russell county, at the price of $25,000. The latter contract was subsequently annulled by agreement between the parties, upon the payment of $500 by the appellant. At the time of the two purchases aforesaid, the appellant had very little money with him, not sufficient to pay for the revenue stamps on the note given by him to the appellee.

Only three persons were present when the contract in suit was entered into, the appellant, the appellee, and Lyttle. The appellee and Lyttle testify that he seemed to be in possession of all his faculties, and that they observed nothing to the contrary. He went from the appellee's house to the house of E. K. Meade and spent the night. Meade testifies that he had known the appellant for four or five years, and that he did not observe anything to indicate that he was not in possession of all his faculties; that he found him "to be the same all the time as far as I know since I have had any acquaintance with him"; that he talked about the trade, seemed to be well pleased with it, and offered to let Meade read the contract which he had with him. He also spoke to Meade about looking out for a pair of heavy horses to put on the Alderson farm. Meade further testifies, "He was complaining some of being sick at my house that night and the next morning," but he did not observe that there was anything wrong with his mind.

Opposed to this is the testimony of the appellant, his wife and children, the sheriff of the county, and three physicians. The appellant testifies that he was not in any mental condition to enter into the contract on January 1, 1916; that he had been sick and was sick at that time, and was very much worried over security debts for his sons which were pressing him; that he would be half asleep and you might speak to him, and in a minute he would not know anything about it; and that he never discovered that his mind was wrong until about April 10th, when he began to sleep better. It is a little difficult to understand how the witness, when he became sane, could describe his mental operations while insane; but, in addition to this, although he did not recover his sanity till about April 10th, he states that about a month after the contract was entered into, which would be not later than February 1st, he went to see the appellee about his purchase, and, when asked by his counsel to give the substance of his conversation with her, he replies:

"Well, I told her that I had got wrong and went into something that I could not pay out and they had noticed me up on them security debts, and after I paid that, that I could not pay her, and I told her that I had come all the way there to tell her before she made any move that would damage her, and not to make any trade nor nothing on my account that I could not come up to it, and I come to tell her."

We cannot attach any very great importance to testimony of this kind.

The testimony of the wife and children is of the vaguest and most unsatisfactory nature, giving no facts sufficient to support even their unsatisfactory conclusions as to appellant's mental capacity to contract. In addition to this, the sons were obtaining the father's indorsement of their paper during the very time they say his mental condition was not good, and one of them when asked if he regarded his father of sane mind on January 1, 1916, replied, "I don't know." The wife and one of the sons were also interested in the proceeds of the sale of the timber on appellant's land, which was made by him within less than a week from the date of the contract in suit. None of the physicians who testified had seen the appellant at any time near January 1, 1916, and were not called upon to testify from personal knowledge. All of them were examined as experts. The following is the question propounded to them, and their respective answers thereto:

"Q. Knowing, as you do, the real estate and personal property and other effects of the defendant, J. Wiley Davis, which he owned on January 1, 1916, and considering his age, and that he is over 60 and menas of support and income and taking into consideration that on January 1, 1916, that he was financially involved as security for the Davis Mercantile Co., and otherwise, to the extent of some seven thousand dollars, all of which was past due, and part of which was being reduced to judgments at that time, would you regard it as the acts of a sane man, for Mr. Davis on January 1, 1916, to purchase a farm in Russell county, Virginia, at the price of $35,750.00 on which he only paid the sum of one dollar and obligated himself to pay the balance on the following installments, viz.: $11,915.33½ to be paid October 1, 1916, $7,844.66, to be paid October 1, 1917, $7,944.66, to be paid October 1, 1918, all of the deferred payments to bear interest from the 1st day of October, 1916, and on the 3d day of January, 1916, to purchase another farm in Russell county, Virginia, at the price of $25,000.00, on which he paid nothing but obligated himself to pay for same on the following installments, viz.: $10,000.00 to be paid October 1, 1916, $5,000.00 to be paid October 1, 1917, $5,000.00 to be paid October 1, 1918, $5,000.00 to be paid October 1, 1919, all of the said deferred payments to bear interest from October 1, 1916. Would you regard a man in the financial condition of Mr. Davis, making the two trades and purchases above, as a man whose mind was in a proper condition and a man sane at the time or not? Please explain how you would regard a man entering into the two transactions above mentioned from a point of sanity?"

Dr. Reed:

"A. I would regard the transaction referred to in your question the product of a man's brain who did not realize at the time the responsibility of the obligation he was entering into and must have been the act of a man who was mentally defective or irresponsible for his acts in some way."

Dr. Sutherland:

"A. I don't know as regards his sanity, but I do know if he bought the farms with the expectation of paying for same that he had an exaggerated idea as to his own worth."

Dr. Phipps:

"A. Well, I would say in answer to this question that J. Wiley Davis could have been sane of sound mind, and still make these contracts, but knowing him as I do, it seems that there is something in some way influencing him outside of the ordinary things brought to bear in trading, to make a man make such indebtedness as this would seem to me, so far as his sanity, I would not make any statement as to his sanity at the time of this trade."

[2] While no one of them is willing to go so far as to say that the appellant was insane, their testimony is not expert testimony at all, but the mere inexpert opinions of these gentlemen, and should have been excluded, and doubtless would have been had it been brought to the attention of the trial court and a ruling thereon asked. It is too late now to ask for the exclusion. Martin v. South Salem Land Co., 94 Va. 42, 26 S. E. 591, and cases cited. Their opinions, however, are of no aid to the court in arriving at a correct conclusion of the question involved.

[3] The sheriff of the county had known the appellant for many years. He testifies to certain peculiarities of conduct he had observed in the appellant during the previous two years and since he had become involved in debt, and says he had "told some of them he had gone crazy as a bedbug."

Testimony of lay witnesses as to the sanity or insanity of a person is admissible in evidence where it appears that the witness has had sufficient opportunity, by observation, to form an opinion worth considering; but the opinion of the witness should be preceded by a statement of his opportunity for observation, and of the facts observed. The value of such testimony is dependent very largely upon the character of the witness, his opportunities for observation, the facts observed, the interest, bias, or prejudice of the witness, his capacity and intelligence in making and relating his observations, and other circumstances which affect the weight to be given to oral testimony generally. Usually such testimony, where general and continuous insanity is not involved, is not esteemed of much value, except so far as the opinion of the witness is justified by the data observed. 1 Greenleaf Ev. (16th Ed.) § 430, p. 441f; Young v. Barner, 27 Gr. (68 Va.) 96, 103; Cropp v. Cropp, 88 Va. 753, 14 S. E. 529; Howard v. Howard, 112 Va. 566, 72 S. E. 123; Wampler v. Harrell, 112 Va.

635, 72 S. E. 135; Conn. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Lathrop, 111 U. S. 612, 4 Sup. Ct. 533, 28 L. Ed. 536, and cases cited.

[4, 5] It is conceded that the appellant was sane and entirely competent to contract shortly before January 1, 1916, and members of his family who testified in his behalf did not hesitate to contract with him, within five days of that time, for the timber on one tract of his land at the price of $9,000. He speaks, both in his pleading and in his testimony, of being "enthralled" with surety debts for his sons to the amount of several thousand dollars, upon some of which judgments had been obtained and executions had issued and his property was about to be sold. No doubt the situation did worry him and make him nervous. It may have disturbed his rest at night and brought on the slight sickness to which some of the witnesses refer in their testimony, but this was far from rendering him incapable of entering into contracts. His own witnesses testify that he was better before he started on the trip to Russell. He took this trip, of 20 miles, alone on horseback, and after spending the night with Lyttle had to go on horseback an additional 15 or 20 miles to inspect the farm, and on the day of the purchase neither the appellee, nor Lyttle nor Meade could discover anything to indicate that he was not in full possession of all his faculties. He had just sold his timber for $9,000, he had coal land for which he had been offered $10,000, and other valuable real and personal estate, and there was offered to him, on long time, at $35,750, a farm which a year previously had been priced to him at $45,000. He closed the bargain and soon thereafter placed the farm in the hands of the same real estate agent at $50,000. In his answer he states that "said land is well worth the price for which the complainant offered the same to your respondent," and, in his testimony, in answer to the question, "Do you think the farm is worth $35,000.00?" he replied:

"Yes, sir; if a man could pay for it, it is worth every cent of it, I told Mrs. Alderson, if I had it $50,000.00 would not buy it."

It is true that within the next three days he also bought the Bransford farm at $25,000, and this may seem to have been a very unwise thing for him to have done, so unwise as to have led the physicians to have expressed the opinions hereinbefore quoted; but neither alone, nor in conjunction with the other evidence in the cause, does it show that the appellant did not have the mental capacity to enter into a contract. He states in his testimony that he expected to use the money from the timber and from his coal land, as far as it would go, in paying for the Alderson land, and to sell the Alderson land at a profit, and that was the reason he bought the Bransford land. If he had realized his expectations, his purchases could not have been said to have been foolish. Certainly his reasoning on the subject cannot be said to indicate insanity. But whether his purchases were wise or foolish, if he had contractual capacity, is immaterial. If courts were permitted to pass on the wisdom or folly of contracts, or if that were a test of sanity or insanity, the business of the country would soon be involved in inextricable confusion. Allusion has also been made more than once to the fact that the appellant was of the great age of 62 years as affecting, in conjunction with other things, the validity of the contract, but the court will take judicial notice of the fact that men of greater age than that so far retain the confidence of the government in their mental capacity as to be placed in judicial positions where they have to pass on the validity of contracts made under identical circumstances with the case in judgment.

[8] Every one is presumed to be sane until the contrary is made to appear by him who alleges it, and, in the case in judgment, the trial court was of opinion that this presumption had not been overcome by the appellant, and in this opinion we concur.

[7] The appellant further made defense on the ground that he had been released from the obligation of his contract; but we do not think there is any merit in this defense. About a month after the contract was entered into, the appellant and his son visited the appellee for the avowed purpose of explaining to the appellee the circumstances under which appellant had entered into the contract, his inability to comply therewith, and of obtaining a release therefrom. Appellant and his son each testify to conversations with the appellee, but it is a significant fact that neither of them testify that she agreed to make any release. On the contrary, the son testifies that "she said she didn't care to take it back." Great reliance, however, is placed upon a subsequent correspondence between the parties, which was not produced, but the substance of which the appellant undertook to prove. Giving full weight to the testimony on this subject, it did not amount to a release. Some time after the above-mentioned interview, according to the testimony, the appellee wrote to the appellant "that there is some land here to sow in grass and I have got the seed already bought to sow and if you are not going to take the land, I want to know it, so I can sow it, I have got the seed ready," and the appellant replied telling her "to go ahead and sow the grass, and manage the farm to her own satisfaction just like she had been, for I could not take it and she need not depend on me." This was a plain refusal on the part of the appellant to comply with his contract, but is very far from a release by the appellee of its obligation on the appellant. She doubtless foresaw that the land would have to be resold in order to get her money, and she desired to have it in as good condition as possible so as to attract bidders, and, as she had the grass seed on hand, already paid for, deemed it proper to make the inquiry. Whether or not the grass seed was sown we do not know, nor do we deem the inquiry material. The record does not disclose any intention on the part of the appellee to execute a release, and her declarations and conduct hereinbefore recited do not amount to such.

[8, 9] When the land was resold at the judicial sale, for the default of the appellant, it was purchased by the appellee at one dollar above the price the appellant had agreed to pay her for it. The balance of upwards of $4,000 now due the appellee is in consequence of accrued interest on the original purchase price and costs. The appellant had answered fully at the March term, 1917; but when the report of sale was offered for confirmation at the September term, 1917, he asked to be allowed to file an amended and supplemental answer, which he prayed might be treated as a cross-bill. This answer set up nothing but the fact that the appellee had been in possession of the land from October 1, 1916, when possession was to have been delivered, till the date of sale—a period of eleven months and twelve days—and had used, occupied, and enjoyed the land as her own, and that for such use and occupation she was indebted to him in the sum of $5,000, which he offered to set off and allow against the balance due by him to the appellee. The circuit court refused to allow the amended answer to be filed, and this action of the court is assigned as error. While courts are liberal in allowing amendments of pleadings, there must be an end of litigation at some time, and the litigation cannot end as long as the pleading continues. Litigants cannot be permitted to unnecessarily protract litigation by presenting their cases by piecemeal. After they have had fair and ample opportunity of presenting their cases in the pleadings, whether or not amendments shall be allowed must rest in the discretion of the court in view of the circumstances of the particular case, and regulated by the established and recognized rules of practice in such cases. Bowe v. Scott, 113 Va. 499, 75 S. E. 123, and cases cited. The appellant lays much stress on the Act of March 27, 1914 (Acts 1914, p. 641), as giving the right of amendment "at every stage of the proceeding." The object of the act, as its title imports, was to eliminate useless technicalities and to prevent vexatious delays. It was passed "in furtherance of justice," and was never intended to apply to a case where the effect of the amendment would be to encourage pleading by piecemeal and unnecessary delay in the termination of the litigation. Indeed, it may be well doubted if the statute is anything more than declaratory of the pre-existing law. We are of opinion that no error was committed in refusing to allow the amended and supplemental answer to be filed. We are further of opinion, however, that an amended and supplemental answer was unnecessary to attain the end desired, and that the court had ample power, under the pleadings as they were, to give the appellant any relief to which he was entitled under the maxim that he who comes into equity must do equity. This maxim applies with full force to the complainant in a bill for specific performance. When the vendor of land gets the full purchase price, principal, interest, and costs, he has gotten all that he contracted for, or is entitled to. If he has derived profits from the land to which the vendee is entitled, he must account for them. But this does not mean that he is to be charged rent simply because he remained in possession pending a suit for specific performance. In the case in judgment, the vendor had contracted to deliver possession October 1, 1916. She was able, ready, and willing to do so, but the vendee declined to accept. In order to maintain her bill for specific performance, it was necessary for her to continue in that position, and she had to allege and prove those facts. The land in equity was the land of the vendee, and it was sold as his land, and she had no right to lease it. She might, with propriety, have vacated it, and the vendee could not have complained. But she remained on it, it may be to preserve it for the vendee or to protect it as a security for the purchase money. The vendee was and is of doubtful solvency. She may have remained at great inconvenience and loss, or it may have been at pleasure and profit. The record is silent on this subject. If she in fact derived a profit from this occupation, which was indeterminate in its duration, equity demands that she should account to her vendee for it. All she is entitled to is the complete fulfillment of her contract of sale. When she gets this she is made whole. What she is to be charged with, however, is the value of the actual benefit which was or should have been received, and not estimated rents or profits. As the decree appealed from does not provide for this, it will have to be amended and the case be remanded to the circuit court with directions to inquire and ascertain the value of the actual benefit, if any, derived by the appellee, or which should have been derived by her, from the possession of the farm from October 1, 1916, to September 12, 1917, and, if any such value be found, to credit the same on the decree heretofore rendered in favor of the appellee against the appellant. Costs will be awarded to the appellee as the party substantially prevailing.

Amended and remanded.

KELLY, J., absent.

(126 Va. 617)
BUCHANAN COUNTY et al. v. W. M. RITTER LUMBER CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. TAXATION — 378(3)—PROPERTY OF CORPORATION CONSTITUTING CAPITAL TAXABLE AS SUCH.

Felled timber, railroad ties, and manufactured lumber, belonging to lumber manufacturing corporation, constitutes "capital" of the corporation, and is properly taxable as such.

2. TAXATION — 378(3) — BAND SAW MILLS TAXABLE AS CAPITAL OF CORPORATION.

Band saw mills not permanently attached to the land, but located thereon for the purpose and with the intention of being removed from place to place as the accessible timber should become exhausted was taxable as capital, and not as real estate, under Tax Bill, Schedule C, § 8, subd. 2, as amended by Acts 1916, c. 382, providing, in clause 6, for taxation as capital of "all machinery and tools not taxed as real estate."

3. TAXATION — 338—WHEN MACHINERY TAXABLE AS REAL ESTATE.

Machinery is taxable as real estate only when so attached to the freehold as to become part of it, and to become property of owner of the land in absence of stipulation to the contrary.

Error to Circuit Court, Buchanan County.

Action between Buchanan County and another and the W. M. Ritter Lumber Company. The circuit court entered two orders, relieving the latter from an alleged erroneous assessment of taxation, and the former bring error. Affirmed.

Jno. R. Saunders, Atty. Gen., J. D. Hank, Jr., Asst. Atty. Gen., E. Warren Wall, of Richmond, F. H. Coombs and Samuel A. Anderson, of Richmond, for plaintiffs in error.

Greever, Gillespie & Divine, of Tazewell, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, P. This writ of error was granted on the petition of plaintiffs in error, Buchanan county and Rock Lick district of that county, to two orders of the circuit court entered on November 22, 1917, relieving the defendant in error, the W. M. Ritter Lumber Company (hereinafter called "the company"), from an alleged erroneous assessment of taxes for the year 1917.

The company is a foreign corporation engaged in the manufacture of lumber in Buchanan county, and in connection with its business owns and operates three band saw mills in the county as follows: (1) One known as Hurley mill; (2) one known as Blakey mill, both of which mills are located on land owned by the company; and (3) one known as Pawpaw mill, located on land leased by the company. The first two mills were assessed and entered by the commissioner of the revenue on the land books as permanent improvements, while the Pawpaw mill was assessed as tangible personal property. The company also owned property consisting of felled timber, railroad ties and manufactured lumber of the estimated value of $112,460, which was assessed by the commissioner as tangible personal property. The examiner of records assessed all these properties as capital of the company.

The circuit court was of opinion that the foregoing properties were erroneously assessed as improvements on land and tangible personal property by the commissioner of the revenue, but were properly assessed as capital of the company by the examiner of records, and ordered accordingly. The trial court certified that the three band saw mills were not permanent fixtures, but would be removed as the timber in the territory tributary to them should become exhausted.

[1] There is no doubt, we think, that the item of $112,460, representing felled timber, railroad ties, and manufactured lumber, constitutes "capital" of the company, as defined in the tax bills as construed by this court, and is properly taxable as such. Com. v. United C. M. Co., 119 Va. 447, 89 S. E. 935; American Tobacco Co. v. City of Richmond, etc., 125 Va. —, 99 S. E. 777.

[2, 3] We are also of opinion that under subsection 2 of section 8, Schedule C of the Tax Bill, as amended by Acts of 1916 (Acts 1916, p. 657), the band saw mills come within the definition of "capital" or "net assets," and are taxable as such under clause (6), "All machinery and tools not taxed as real estate." The three saw mills are "machinery and tools" within the meaning of clause (6), and cannot be taxed as real estate because not permanently attached to the freehold for the purpose of carrying on the manufacture of lumber at that point indefinitely. They are not permanent fixtures, but were located on the land for the purpose and with the intention of being removed from place to place as the accessible timber should become exhausted. In other words, they are portable saw mills, carried from place to place as the exigencies of the company may require. On the other hand, machinery, etc., taxable as real estate is so attached to the freehold as to become part of it, such annexations that if made on the soil of another in the absence of stipulation to the contrary become the property of the owner of the soil, as factory buildings and the like. The Legislature, by clause (6), did not mean to leave it to the option of the tax officials to tax some machinery and tools as real estate, and to tax other machinery and tools which were properly taxed as capital. What was meant is that machinery and tools which were properly taxed as real estate should not again be taxed as capital.

We are of opinion that the case was rightly decided by the circuit court, and its orders are affirmed.

Affirmed.

(125 Va. 613)

BOATRIGHT v. LITZ et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

APPEAL AND ERROR §337(1), 1106(4)—IMPROVIDENT APPEAL FROM SUBJECTION OF LAND TO JUDGMENT.

Appeal from decree dismissing suit to subject lands to satisfaction of judgment as to one of the defendants, but expressly reserving right to subject any other real estate that might be liable to the judgment, was prematurely allowed, where it did not appear that such defendant's land was primarily subject to the judgment under Code 1904, § 3575, since extent of liability of such land could not be ascertained until the land primarily liable had been sold to satisfy the judgment, and cause will be remanded, under section 3466, to determine what estate is liable and order of liability.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wise County.

Suit by Boatright against J. L. Litz and others. From decree rendered, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Bond & Bruce and A. M. Vicars, all of Wise, for appellant.

E. M. Fulton, of Wise, for appellees.

WHITTLE, P. At the September term, 1884, of the circuit court of Wise county, Hurst Miller & Co. recovered a judgment against J. H. Powers for $736.90, with interest and costs, subject to a credit of $346.66. In 1902 this suit in equity was brought for the benefit of appellant (who had acquired the judgment) against J. H. Powers and his alienees to subject certain lands to its satisfaction. Among these tracts of land was one containing 72 acres known as the "J. R. Kilgore tract," formerly a part of the homestead exemption claimed by Powers, by deed dated January 2, 1880, admitted to record December 15, 1881. Title to this tract by successive alienations devolved upon appellee J. L. Litz. The bill as it appears in the record is not an accurate copy of the original bill in the case, which, it is admitted, sought to subject, among others, a tract containing 77 acres of land to the lien of the judgment. Powers acquired an equitable interest in that tract on April 2, 1883, by assignment of a title bond executed by Dale Carter to J. W. Powers, on April 23, 1877, and recorded April 28, 1881. This title bond was afterwards assigned by Powers to Robert R. Dickenson, but was not recorded until after the recovery and docketing of appellant's judgment.

The contentions on behalf of appellant are that the homestead deed of Powers is void for insufficient description of the land claimed, and therefore that the 72 acres is liable to the judgment; and that the equitable interest of Powers in the 77 acres is also liable, since the title bond and assignment to him and from him to Dickenson were never recorded. While those on behalf of appellee J. L. Litz are that any ambiguity that may have existed in the description of the land included in the Powers homestead deed was removed by the evidence of witnesses, to whose testimony no timely objection was made. Moreover, it is insisted that the appeal was prematurely granted because, as shown by the amended and supplemental bill, Powers owns a life estate in 52 acres of land on Cove creek in Scott county; and, with respect to the 77 acres, the Dale Carter tract, that Powers did not part with his interest therein until after he had disposed of the 72 acres in controversy. It is also maintained that, even if the 72-acre tract were in any event liable, the Powers life estate in the 52 acres and his equitable interest in the 77 acres are primarily liable and must be first subjected in pursuance of section 3575 of the Code.

By the decree appealed from the circuit court dismissed the suit as to the appellee J. L. Litz, but expressly reserved to the plaintiffs the right to proceed to subject any other real estate that might be liable to the judgment.

The decree does not show upon what grounds the circuit court held the 72-acre tract exempt from liability. The record is incomplete, involved, and unsatisfactory; but, to say the least, it would seem that the land in controversy is not shown to be primarily subject to the judgment. If that be true, it must follow that the appeal was prematurely awarded. If the property first liable was sufficient to discharge the balance due on the judgment, then in no view of the case could the 72 acres be subjected, and its liability or nonliability would be wholly a moot question; and this court does not sit to decide such questions. It is evident from the reservation in the decree that the course indicated was in the mind of the court, yet the plaintiff elected to wait until a year, less one day, had expired and then presented her petition for appeal. The principle here involved, we think, is settled by the case of Ritter Lumber Co. v. Coal Mountain Mining Co., 115 Va. 370, 79 S. E. 322. In that case the decree fixed upon the defendant a personal liability for whatever balance of a debt might remain after crediting thereon the proceeds of sale of a tract of land decreed to be sold to pay the debt. It was held that the amount of the defendant's liability could not be ascertained until the land had been sold, and this court dismissed the appeal on that ground. So in this case, even if the ultimate liability of the 72 acres of land (as to which we express no opinion) be assumed, the extent of the liability cannot be determined until after subjecting such other lands, if any, as may be primarily responsible, to sale to satisfy the judgment.

Upon these considerations, we are of opinion that the case should be remanded, in accordance with Va. Code 1904, § 3466, to be proceeded in further in the court below, with direction that a reference be made to a commissioner in chancery to ascertain what real estate is subject to the lien of appellant's judgment, and the order of liability.

And this appeal having been premature, the costs thereof will be decreed against appellant.

Remanded.

(84 W. Va. 691)

STATE ex rel. SINGLETON v. KANAWHA COUNTY COURT et al. (No. 3956.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Oct. 7, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. REWARDS  $\S$ 4—PROSECUTING ATTORNEY MAY BE GIVEN GENERAL AUTHORITY TO OFFER REWARD NOT OVER FIXED SUM.

Pursuant to the authority conferred by section 21, c. 32a, Code 1916 (Code 1913, c. 32a, § 21 [sec. 1300]), upon the prosecuting attorney of a county, with the approval of one of the officers designated by the section, to offer rewards for the apprehension of persons charged with crime, and to expend money for the detection of crime, it is unnecessary for such approval to be given to each individual claim, but it may take the form of an authorization of a maximum sum for a stated period, beyond which the prosecuting attorney may not go, and subject to the limitation that all expenditures therefrom must be for services rendered in aid of the suppression of violations of that chapter.

2. DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS  $\S$ 7(2)—MAY EMPLOY ASSISTANCE FOR STATED PERIODS OR FOR PARTICULAR SERVICE.

Pursuant to the authority so conferred, the prosecuting attorney, within his sound discretion, may employ for stated periods or for a particular service.

3. COUNTIES  $\S$ 201—ON EMPLOYMENT OF ASSISTANCE ACCOUNT MUST SHOW SERVICES RENDERED AND NAMES OF ASSISTANTS.

When the employment is for a stated period or periods, an account for services rendered sufficiently complies with the provisions of section 1, c. 14, Acts 1919, if it shows, in addition to the approval of the prosecuting attorney, the kind of service rendered, the dates within which the same was performed, and the name of the person performing the service.

Mandamus by the State, on the relation of F. O. Singleton, against the County Court of Kanawha County and others. Writ awarded.

B. Kemp Littlepage, of Charleston, for relator.

Geo. W. McClintic, of Charleston, for respondents.

LYNCH, J. The preliminary writ awarded upon the petition of the relator commanded the county court of Kanawha county and the three commissioners constituting its membership, either to draw and deliver to him an order for the payment of $208 out of the funds of the county in the hands of the sheriff for administration, or appear at the time and place therein designated and show cause for the failure so to do. This amount relator claims is due for services rendered by him for and on behalf of the county of Kanawha, the benefit of which it has received, and for which the county court should therefore pay.

The petition does not furnish an exact description of the account, or the form in which it was presented for payment; but the answer of respondents does, and states the form thereof to be as follows:

County of Kanawha, August 20, 1919.
State of West Virginia, to

F. O. Singleton.

To services in the detection of Yost law violations in Kanawha county, from July 1, 1919, to August 20, 1919, inclusive .....$208.00

O. K. and approved. To be paid by Kanawha county, West Virginia, out of county funds in the same manner as other county expenses, and paid pursuant to the approval thereof on August 18, 1919, of the Governor of West Virginia for such expenditures under and by virtue of section 21 of chapter 32a, Code 1916.

Kemp Littlepage, Prosecuting Attorney.

The services for which the relator seeks compensation, as thus appears, were rendered by him in aid of an attempt to suppress violations of the prohibition laws of this state, sometimes spoken of as the Yost Law (Laws 1913, c. 13). The petition charges and the answer admits that since 1913 county courts of this state have possessed, and the county court of Kanawha county has exercised, the authority to issue orders payable out of the funds of the county for services rendered under the provision of section 21 of that law, being section 21, c. 32a, Code 1916 (Code 1913, c. 32a, § 21 [sec. 1300]) when authorized and approved in the manner therein required. That section is as follows:

"The prosecuting attorney of any county, with the approval of the Governor, or of the court of the county vested with authority to try criminal offenses, or of the judge thereof in vacation, may, within his discretion, offer rewards for the apprehension of persons charged with crime, or may expend money for the detection of crime. Any money expended under this section shall, when approved by the prosecuting attorney, be paid out of the county fund in the same manner as other county expenses are paid."

The account, it will be observed, bears date August 20, 1919. On August 19th Hon. John J. Cornwell, Governor of West Virginia, at the request of Kemp Littlepage, prosecuting attorney of Kanawha county, approved in writing an application made under the authority granted by that section for permission to offer rewards for the apprehension of persons charged with crime, and to expend money for the detection of crime committed against the state's prohibition laws, and for these purposes authorized the expenditure of an amount not to exceed $3,000 during the fiscal year of 1919-20.

Respondents refused to allow the claim presented to them by the relator for payment as a proper charge against the funds of the county, and declined to draw an order in his favor thereon in satisfaction of the demand, and in their answer attempt to justify their action in that behalf upon several grounds, the first and perhaps the most vital of which is that the statute, as they understand and interpret it, requires separate action by some one of the persons named therein upon each application by the prosecuting attorney for permission to expend the public funds of a county for any of the purposes mentioned in section 21 as an essential prerequisite in the process of creating a liability against the county, and, as a necessary corollary to that proposition, that the authorization of an aggregate sum to be expended at the discretion of the prosecuting attorney finds no sanction in the provisions of that or any other statute upon the subject. In other words, they challenge his right to apply for, and of the persons whose approval is required to approve, an application for the expenditure of public moneys in bulk, or, as they say, "in the form of a lump sum," subject to disbursement as he may elect within the terms of the statute.

[1] Of course it confers no authority to appropriate or expend public funds for any purpose other than those specified in it, and these only upon compliance with its express provisions. In other words, the prosecuting attorney cannot offer a reward for the apprehension of criminals and cannot expend money for the detection of crime without the approval required by section 21 of the prohibition law. But the breadth and scope of the act does not, we think, warrant the restricted interpretation sought to be placed upon it by respondents. Obviously the intention was to confer authority to offer rewards for the apprehension of persons charged with offenses against that act, and to permit the expenditure of public funds of the county for the detection of those who violate its provisions. The discovery of the crime and the criminal was the chief inducement for the enactment. The provision for the approval required by the act evidently was intended to prevent abuse of the authority so conferred, and to safeguard such fund against the danger of misappropriation for purposes not within the express terms of the statute. But we are unable to discover an intention on the part of the Legislature to burden, circumscribe, or restrict, as respondents would have us do, the mode or manner of obtaining access to funds to be devoted to the attainment of the object contemplated by the statute.

As already remarked, respondents do not question the right, but concede it to be their duty under the statute, to pay out of the funds of the county any money expended for the purposes mentioned therein, when such expenditure is properly authorized. Nor do they deny the allegations of the petition that the course pursued in incurring liability for the same or similar services has uniformly been the same since 1913, when the prohibition statute became effective. "The construction given to a statute by those charged with the duty of executing it ought not to be overruled without cogent reasons." Daniel v. Simms, 49 W. Va. 554, 39 S. E. 690. The procedure followed has been, first, to obtain from one of the officers designated in the section his approval of the proposed expenditure of funds for the purposes stated in the section; and, second, the certificate of the prosecuting attorney as to the correctness of the claim presented. The rights and interests of the public are safeguarded in requiring the submission of the proposed expenditure, even though in the form of a lump sum, to one of the designated officers for his approval or rejection, and in further requiring a certificate of correctness by the prosecuting attorney as to each individual claim. At the same time and within these limits it gives to the latter discretionary power to use and expend the fund so authorized as occasion may require, unhampered by unnecessary detail, but subject, of course, to the requirement that all expenditures from the fund must be for the suppression of violations of chapter 32a, Code. State ex rel. Plant v. Board of Commissioners, 80 W. Va. 506, 92 S. E. 747. The enforcement of this last requirement rests chiefly with the prosecuting attorney, for it is he who is intrusted with the expenditure of the fund so authorized. To be technically correct, the bill certified by him should show on its face that the services for which compensation is sought were rendered under the prohibition laws of the state. The account presented in this case conforms to that requirement.

[2, 3] It is also the contention of respondents that section 21 does not authorize the prosecuting attorney to employ a person or persons at a fixed monthly salary for the purpose of aiding him in the enforcement of the provisions of that chapter. We can find no such limitation imposed by the express terms of the section, nor is it reasonably to be implied. In conferring authority to "expend money for the detection of crime," the language used is comprehensive, and apparently leaves to the discretion of the prosecuting attorney, within the limitations above mentioned, the manner of the expenditure. He may find it cheaper and more conducive to efficient service to employ by stated periods, and, if so, the language of the section is sufficiently broad to permit an exercise of discretion in that regard.

The final argument in support of respondents' position is that the account filed in this proceeding, payment of which is sought, is not itemized as required by section 1, c. 14, Acts 1919. The material portion of that section is:

"It shall be unlawful for any county court * * * to pay any claim for services rendered or materials furnished unless an itemized account therefor is filed by the claimant, covering the claim. Said account shall be itemized in detail, and shall show, among other things, the following: If the claim is for services, it shall show the kind of service and dates when same were performed, and the name of the person performing the service. * * *"

The account filed here shows the kind of service rendered, to wit, the detection of Yost law violations in Kanawha county, the dates within which it was performed, and the name of the person rendering it. Where the employment is for a stated period, or stated periods, as in this case, it is not necessary to show each particular item of service rendered during the period, for under such circumstances the service is continuous, occupying all the working time of the employed. Knowing the general kind of service rendered and the dates within which it was performed, the county court can readily calculate the relative value of each day's service and the price paid therefor. It is only when the employment is for a particular piece of work, instead of for a definite term, and where the employed is paid for the particular work performed, and not for the right to direct his services for a stated period, that it becomes necessary for the information of the county court to itemize the elements of the work done. The account filed here sufficiently complies with the statute.

Writ awarded.

(84 W. Va. 638)

CLARKSBURG LIGHT & HEAT CO. v.
PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 7, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS §7—CLAS-SIFICATION OF PUBLIC UTILITY RATES PROPER.

For the purpose of fixing the rates to be charged by a public utility, it is proper to place its patrons in different classes, and make different rates applicable to such classes, based upon the varying cost of the service rendered.

2. GAS §1—LIGHT AND HEAT CORPORATIONS
SUBJECT TO REGULATORY POWER OF PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

A corporation engaged in the business of supplying gas for light, heat, and power to the inhabitants of a city is subject to the regulatory power of the Public Service Commission.

3. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS §7—WHAT CONSTITUTES "PUBLIC SERVICE UTILITY" DE-FINED.

The use which the consumer makes of the commodity furnished does not constitute the test as to whether or not the regulatory powers of the commission in dealing with public utilities may be invoked. It is the duty which the purveyor or producer has undertaken to perform on behalf of, and so owes to, the public generally, or to any defined portion of it, as the purveyor of the commodity, or as an agency in the performance of the service, which stamps the purveyor or the agency as being a "public service utility."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Public Service Corporation.]

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §48—THAT LEGIS-LATURE HAS DESIGNATED CERTAIN BUSINESS
SUBJECT TO PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION
NOT TO BE DISREGARDED.

Where the Legislature has declared a certain business subject to regulation by the Public Service Commission, such declaration will not be disregarded by this court, unless it appears that there is no substantial basis for holding that the business is of that character which is subject to regulation by the Public Service Commission.

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §81—PUBLIC UTIL-ITIES SUBJECT TO REGULATORY POWER OF STATE.

Whenever any business or enterprise becomes so closely and intimately related to the public, or to any substantial part of a community, as to make the welfare of the public, or a substantial part thereof, dependent upon the proper conduct of such business, it becomes the subject for the exercise of the regulatory power of the state.

6. GAS §1—CHARGES FOR GAS SUBJECT TO REGULATION BY PUBLIC SERVICE COM-MISSION.

A corporation engaged in the business of supplying gas to the inhabitants of a city for the purpose of light, heat, and power is subject to have the rates it charges therefor to all of its patrons regulated by the Public Service Commission, notwithstanding some of such patrons may be engaged in manufacturing enterprises.

7. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS §7—PART OF RECEIPTS ALLOWED YEARLY FOR AMORTI-ZATION OF PLANT.

Where the life of a public utility is determined by the exhaustion of the supply of the material which it furnishes to the public, such part of its receipts each year should be allowed for the amortization of the plant as will return to the stockholders their investment within the probable life thereof.

8. GAS §14(1) — DIVIDENDS OF NATURAL GAS COMPANY TREATED IN PART AS RETURN OF CAPITAL.

The dividends paid to the stockholders by a natural gas company, whose life is determined by the life of the gas fields from which it obtains its supply, cannot in their entirety be treated as earnings; but such part thereof as will repay to the stockholders their investment within the probable life of the plant must be treated as a return to them of their capital.

9. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS §32—RATE DETERMINED BY MISAPPLICATION OF LAW TO FACTS REVIEWED.

The business of rate making being legislative in its character, a rate based upon a fact determined to exist by the rate-making power will not be reviewed because of an improper finding based upon disputed facts; but, where such fact has been determined by a misapplication of legal principles to the state of facts shown, such finding will be corrected by applying correct legal principles to such state of facts.

10. GAS §14(1)—NEW PIPE LINES OF NAT-URAL GAS COMPANY INVESTMENT, AND NOT EXPENSES OF OPERATION.

Expenditures of a natural gas company for pipe lines from new wells, which will be used during the life of such wells, are properly included as an item of investment, and are not properly chargeable as an item of expense of operation.

Original petition by the Clarksburg Light & Heat Company for suspension of an order of the Public Service Commission fixing a schedule of rates. Order of suspension refused.

R. S. Douglass and Melvin G. Sperry, both of Clarksburg, for petitioner.

Geo. W. Johnson, of Parkersburg, Law & McCue, of Clarksburg, Glasscock & Glasscock, of Morgantown, J. A. Meredith, of Fairmont, and Hoffheimer & Templeman, of Clarksburg, for respondent.

RITZ, J. The Clarksburg Light & Heat Company has for a number of years been engaged in producing, transporting, distributing and supplying natural gas for public use in the city of Clarksburg. In July, 1917, it filed with the Public Service Commission a schedule of rates which it proposed to charge for gas thereafter supplied, which was an advance over the rates then charged. Several of the company's patrons filed objections to the said rates, and the schedule was suspended pending a hearing as to the reasonableness of the rates. Before this hearing was completed, to wit, on the 9th day of November, 1917, the gas company filed an amended petition containing another classification and schedule of rates. These rates were an increase over those proposed in the first schedule. Objections were also filed to this amended schedule by a number of patrons of the company. A temporary schedule was made by the commission on the 4th day of December, 1917. This order of the commission classified the company's service as follows:

Class 1.—Domestic Consumers. In this class are placed all consumers using gas for household purposes, and all other consumers whose use of gas varies according to the season of the year, but who cannot at any season or time be shut off, either temporarily or permanently, for the purpose of giving household consumers a sufficient supply of gas—in which is included restaurants, storerooms, and the cooking, heating and lighting parts of hotels. The rate allowed for the service to this class was 18 cents per 1,000 cubic feet.

Class 2 includes city buildings and city utilities, county buildings and schoolhouses where gas is used under boilers and as in manufacturing plants, upon the condition that the company has a right to shut off the gas to keep domestic consumers supplied. The rate for this class is fixed at 10 cents per 1,000 cubic feet net for the first 1,000,000 cubic feet consumed in a calendar month, and 6 cents per 1,000 cubic feet net for the quantity over 1,000,000 cubic feet consumed in a calendar month.

Class 3 includes manufacturers and other large consumers, who may be shut off immediately in order to provide an ample supply to the consumers in class 1. The rate for this class was fixed at 15 cents per 1,000 feet for the first 200,000 cubic feet, or part thereof, 13 cents for the next 300,000 cubic feet, or part thereof, and 12 cents for all gas in excess of 500,000 cubic feet.

This order of the commission was temporary in its nature, and the application was retained before the commission for final hearing and determination at a later time. Before any final order was had, the gas company, on the 10th day of October, 1918, filed a second amended petition, in which it submitted an amended classification and a schedule of increased rates, which new classification and new rates it proposed to make effective in November of that year. By this amended classification class 1 was made to include certain service which was then included in class 2, such as city buildings, county buildings, school buildings, and other quasi public service; and class 2 was limited to such consumers as were at that time included in that class, excluding those attempted to be placed in class 1. Class 3 was the same as formerly, but provision was made for the discontinuance of service to this class entirely, except upon contracts made with such consumers by the gas company. The rates proposed in the new schedule were 30 cents per 1,000 cubic feet for class 1, 20 cents per 1,000 cubic feet for class 2, and for class 3 such rates as might be fixed by contract. Hearings were had upon this application, and on the 15th day of April, 1919, the commission entered an order declining to allow the gas company to adopt the changed classification, but allowing an increase in rates above those then in effect, fixing the rates for consumers in class 1 at 22 cents per 1,000 cubic feet, less 2 cents for payment on or before the 10th of the month following that in which the gas is consumed; 14 cents per 1,000 cubic feet for consumers in class 2; 20 cents per 1,000 cubic feet for the first 200,000 cubic feet, or part thereof, 18 cents per 1,000 cubic feet for the next 300,000 cubic feet, or part thereof, and 16 cents per 1,000 cubic feet for all over 500,000 cubic feet for consumers in class 3, with a discount of 1 cent per 1,000 cubic feet to such consumers if payment was made on or before the 20th of the month next following that in which the gas was used; further providing that the service might be discontinued at any time to consumers in classes 2 and 3 when it became necessary to do so in order to furnish an adequate supply of gas to the consumers of class 1. From this order of the commission the gas company prosecuted this appeal, contending: First, that the commission was not authorized to include in this schedule of rates gas furnished by it to manufacturing plants under class 3, for the reason that the same is not a public service, and that its dealings with such concerns are not subject to control by the commission; second, that the rates allowed by the commission upon any theory of the case are confiscatory of the petitioner's property, not yielding to it a reasonable return upon the value of the property devoted to the public service; and further that the commission unauthorizably refused to allow it to adopt its new classification to the extent that it attempted to transfer certain consumers from class 2 to class 1.

[1] The effect of the proposed new classification, as above shown, would have been to transfer from class 2 to class 1 such consumers as schoolhouses, public buildings, and other like institutions, and impose upon such consumers the rates prescribed for consumers of the first class. The petitioner contends that its regulations in this regard were reasonable, and that the commission should have allowed it to place such consumers in class 1. It is contended that such a regulation made by a public utility for the conduct of its business cannot be interfered with by the commission, unless the same is unreasonable, and the case of Baltimore & Ohio Ry. Co. v. Public Service Commission, 81 W. Va. 457, 94 S. E. 545, L. R. A. 1918D, 268, is relied upon as authority to support this contention. In that case we had under consideration the reasonableness of a regulation adopted by the railway company classifying its shippers of coal for the purpose of car distribution, and we held the regulation proposed reasonable and denied the power of the Public Service Commission to annul it. That regulation had no effect upon rates.

But can it be said, in view of the past conduct of the petitioner's business, that the proposed change in classification is a reasonable one? There is a difference in the rate charged to consumers in the various classes, and this difference in rates is based upon a difference in the cost of the service to the consumers of the several classes. While it costs the same amount to produce each unit of gas, no matter to whom it is delivered, it does not cost as much to deliver it, to collect for it, and to do the other things necessary to render the service in all cases. Where a large quantity is delivered to a consumer, the expense of reading meters, bookkeeping, and collection, as well as other like expenses, is very much less per unit than it is where an equal amount is delivered to a large number of consumers, and it is largely upon this theory that the difference in rates is justified. It appears that at least for some years these public buildings and other like institutions consuming large quantities of gas have been given a rate less than domestic consumers, and we are of opinion that the Public Service Commission was entirely justified in saying that the attempt of the company to raise the rate to these consumers by putting them in another classification was unreasonable, inasmuch as it is entirely apparent that the cost of the service to this class of consumers for each unit of gas furnished is not as much as to those consuming gas in much smaller quantities.

[2] The petitioner earnestly contends that the Public Service Commission has no authority to regulate the rates to be charged by it to its manufacturing consumers. It contends that this is not a public service, and is not subject to the regulatory power of the state, and that the order of the commission fixing the rate to be charged by it to such consumers is without authority of law. It cannot be doubted that the language of the act (Code 1913, c. 150, §§ 1-21 [secs. 636-656]) conferring jurisdiction upon the Public Service Commission to regulate the business of public service corporations is broad enough to include the petitioner, for section 3 of the act provides:

"The jurisdiction of the Commission shall extend to * * * gas companies, electric lighting companies and municipalities furnishing gas or electricity for lighting, heating or power purposes." Section 638.

And section 7 provides:

"That it shall be unlawful for any public service corporation subject to the provisions of this act to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation or locality, or any particular character of traffic or service, in any respect whatsoever, or to subject any particular person, firm, corporation, company or locality, or any particular character of traffic or service, to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever." Section 642.

[3-5] This language, it appears, is broad enough to embrace the activities of the petitioner, and all of them. But petitioner's contention is that the Legislature did not have power to make of it a public service corporation, or to make any part of its business subject to the regulatory power of the commission, unless the nature of the business was such as to make it subject to the police power of the state. It is quite true that the Legislature cannot arbitrarily convert a private business into a public one for the purpose of regulation, unless there is a substantial basis for the exercise of the police power. The question of whether any particular business comes within the regulatory power of the Legislature, or the Public Service Commission in this case as the agent of the Legislature, in the last analysis, is one for the courts to determine. In reaching a conclusion, however, the public policy of the state as announced by the Legislature will be given due weight, and the determination of the Legislature that a particular business is subject to the regulatory power of the state, because the public welfare is dependent upon its proper conduct and regulation, will not be lightly disregarded by the courts. People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 1, 22 N. E. 670, 682, 5 L. R. A. 559, 15 Am. St. Rep. 460; German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Kansas, 233 U. S. 389, 34 Sup. Ct. 612, 58 L. Ed. 1011, L. R. A. 1915C, 1189. The increasing population of the country, closer relations existing between its inhabitants, brought about not only by the increase in population, but the more efficient means of communication, has rendered in recent years many lines of enterprise subject to public regulation which in the past had been considered matters of purely private concern. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77; People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 1, 22 N. E. 670, 682, 5 L. R. A. 559, 15 Am. St. Rep. 460; German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Kansas, 233 U. S. 389, 34 Sup. Ct. 612, 58 L. Ed. 1011, L. R. A. 1915C, 1189; Pinney & Boyle Co. v. Gas & Electric Co., 168 Cal. 12, 141 Pac. 620, L. R. A. 1915C, 282, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 471. And it cannot be doubted that in the future, as the relations of our ever-increasing population grow more intimate and interdependent, many businesses and enterprises which are at this day considered as entirely of private concern and beyond the power of the public to regulate will become subject to control under the police power. The fact that the conduct of any particular enterprise may have in the remote or even recent past been considered as entirely the subject of private contract, while persuasive of the private character of the business, is not at all conclusive. Of course it is very well recognized that in order to make any particular business subject to the police power it must be affected with a public interest.

Not only must the service offered be available to any one who applies for it, but any one who desires it must have the right to demand it upon complying with proper regulations, and the payment of proper charges therefor. It must be such a business as the public authorities have a right to subject to the regulatory power of the state for the benefit of its inhabitants, and the question in this case is: Is the petitioner's business such a one? When does any particular enterprise or line of business fall within the regulatory power of public authority? From what we have said it is apparent that no rule can be laid down which can be followed blindly or arbitrarily over any period of time. The ever-changing conditions of modern business, and the constantly varying relations of the public to such business, make necessary the extension of this power in the interest of the public to such businesses as may by their conduct decidedly influence for weal or for woe the general welfare of the community. And it may be said that whenever the relation of any business or enterprise to the public, or to any substantial part of a community, becomes so close as to make the welfare of the public, or any substantial part of it, depend upon the proper conduct of such business, then it becomes a subject upon which the regulatory power of the state may be exercised for the benefit of the whole, and the determination by the Legislature that a particular business belongs to such class will not be set aside, where there is a substantial foundation for it. This question is very elaborately discussed by Mr. Chief Justice Andrews in delivering the opinion of the court in the case of People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 1, 22 N. E. 670, 682, 5 L. R. A. 559, 15 Am. St. Rep. 460, and by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Kansas, above cited. In the latter case Mr. Justice McKenna reviews the authorities at length and discusses the question here involved with great perspicacity, and we cannot do better than to suggest to the interested inquirer a careful perusal of the court's opinion in that case.

[6] Having established this general principle, the remaining question is: Does the business of the petitioner so affect the interest of the community as to make it subject to public regulation, so far as it furnishes gas to manufacturing enterprises? It must be borne in mind that petitioner is furnishing large quantities of gas, not only to these private enterprises, but to all of the people of Clarksburg desiring it. If it is subject to public regulation in supplying its product to one class of consumers, such as domestic consumers, or to schoolhouses or public buildings, it cannot very well be conceived how the supplying of its product to other consumers in the same community can be placed upon a different footing. It is argued that the business in which these manufacturing consumers are engaged is entirely private; that the public has no interest therein, no power to regulate it or control it; and this is entirely true, but that argument applies with equal force to every private residence in the city. The public has no right or power to control the conduct of family life. It is as much, if not more, a private use of gas, when it is consumed by a domestic consumer, as when it is consumed by a manufacturing plant. The use made of the substance by the consumer is not the test. If such were the case, then the public service would only extend to such of the petitioner's product as is furnished to purely public institutions, in which class might be placed courthouses, schoolhouses, and public buildings of that character, and all other of its business would be free from regulation by the public authorities.

Bearing in mind that the legislative intent has been expressed in regard to the business of this petitioner with reasonable clearness to the effect that the same is subject to the regulatory powers of the commission, in order to overturn that expression of legislative intent we must find that the public welfare is not so intimately connected with petitioner's business as to require the public regulation of it. Here we find a gas company supplying the inhabitants of one of the principal cities of the state with an article of prime necessity for their welfare. We find a great number of manufactories, great and small, upon which the life of that city largely depends, being supplied by petitioner with gas for fuel purposes. Necessity demands that these enterprises be allowed to conduct their business without being subjected to any undue or unreasonable disadvantage one over the other. When rival business enterprises locate in a community, can a public service corporation, engaged in supplying fuel to the inhabitants of that community, be permitted to say: We will supply fuel to one of these plants, and will subject the others to the necessity of procuring fuel of another kind at a largely increased cost? Such a holding in the end is bound to result in the petitioner not only having a monopoly in the business of selling gas in which it is engaged, but in creating a monopoly for the benefit of such private manufacturer, or manufacturers, as it might choose to favor with its supply of gas, to the prejudice of those who are forced to supply themselves with other fuel or discontinue their business.

It is argued that the supply of gas to these manufacturing plants is nothing but the sale of the petitioner's product to them. It is true that it is the sale of the gas produced by the petitioner, but it is more. It is the delivery of the same at the point of consumption. For the purpose of this delivery the petitioner under our law is a public servant. It exercises the power of eminent domain for the purpose of securing rights of way for its pipe lines. It extends the same over the public highways and streets, and appropriates them to its uses, as it contends partly for the public good, but partly purely for private ends. The duty of the petitioner to supply the public with gas is its paramount duty. It makes no difference who that public is, or to what use the gas is to be appropriated. If the petitioner was allowed to conduct one half of its business under public regulation, and to sell the other half of its product upon private contract, the result would be disastrous to the public, for the rates charged to private consumers would control those charged to the public consumers, or vice versa. The intricate accounts which would have to be kept in order to indicate the proper part of the company's expenses chargeable to the one or the other part of its business would be so easily manipulated that in the end the so-called private consumers would either be paying largely for the public service, or the public consumers would in a large measure be paying for the gas furnished for manufacturing purposes. No one can serve two masters is as true to-day as it was 2,000 years ago, and it cannot be doubted that, if this petitioner is allowed to divide its allegiance in the manner desired, the service rendered by it to the class of its patrons, which it would soon despise, would be inefficient and ineffective to meet their reasonable demands, to the end that the needs of that other class of patrons which had secured its favor might be the more efficiently met. We are clearly of the opinion that, so long as the petitioner is engaged in supplying gas to the public in the manner in which it is at this time, it cannot supply a part of that public under private contract, and a part of it under public regulation.

[7, 8] The petitioner contends that the rates prescribed by the Public Service Commission amount practically to the confiscation of its property, and this conclusion is reached upon the theory that the petitioner's plant is not of the character of the ordinary public service utility, for the reason that its life is not perpetual, but is limited by the life of the gas field from which it procures its gas. It shows that its production of gas in 1916 was 10.41 per cent. less than in 1915, that its 1917 production was 11.43 per cent. less than the 1916 production, and the production for 1918 17.83 per cent. less than the 1917 production, and argues that the fair deduction from these figures is that certainly in 5 or 6 years its gas supply will be exhausted, and its plant worthless, wherefore the commission should have provided rates which would produce a revenue sufficient to amortize the plant within that time, as well as pay a return upon petitioner's investment. The commission, in arriving at a basis for the rates prescribed by it, valued petitioner's properties at $1,500,000, and then, after providing for all of its proper expenses, allowed $120,000 as a return upon this investment, and $150,000 for amortization of the plant. The contention of the petitioner is that, instead of allowing $150,000 for this purpose, there should have been allowed practically twice that sum, and assuming that the valuation of the plant is correct, and that it will become obsolescent in 5 or 6 years, its contention is perhaps correct. It cannot be doubted that, in fixing the rate to be charged by a public utility such as the petitioner, there is an element to be considered which does not ordinarily enter into the matter of rate making. Public utilities, such as water companies or light companies, are considered upon the theory of perpetual life, and when the proper return is allowed upon the investment, and a proper amount for maintaining the physical properties in effective condition, the public utility has no ground for complaint; but where, as in this case, the life of the utility is determined by the exhaustion of its gas fields, there must be, in addition to the allowance for interest on the investment and for the expense of keeping the plant in effective condition, another item sufficient to amortize the plant within the probable life of the field from which the gas is obtained.

In order to determine whether or not the Public Service Commission has adequately allowed for this purpose, it is necessary to review the fiscal history of the petitioner. It was organized in the year 1904 by the consolidation of two gas companies, then doing business in the city of Clarksburg. While its capital stock was fixed at $200,000 at that time, it is shown that the properties actually owned by the newly organized company were worth approximately $650,000. These properties consisted largely of leases upon gas and oil territory and gas-producing wells. From the year 1904 to the year 1914, inclusive, it appears that this company had a net corporate income of $1,451,954.28; that it declared in dividends during that time the sum of $738,500; that in addition to this it issued during that period $300,000 of bonds, which it delivered to its shareholders, retiring $100,000 of its stock, giving to the holders of its stock $300 of these bonds for each share of stock surrendered; that it subsequently retired these bonds out of its income, together with their interest, which amounted in the aggregate to $338,140. This amount was, of course, in effect a dividend to the stockholders, and indicates that during that 11-year period it paid out to its stockholders in dividends more than $1,000,000. Its statement shows that for the years 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, and 1908 it made no deductions from its capital account for depreciation of its plant, or for the purpose of amortizing its investment. For the year 1909 it deducted practically $81,000 for all purposes; for the year 1910, $29,500; for the year 1911, nothing; for the year 1912, $21,000; for the year 1913, $45,000; and for the year 1914, $124,800—or a total of a little over $300,000 in 11 of the most prosperous years of its history, not only on account of depreciation in the physical properties, but for the purpose of amortizing its plant because of the exhaustion of the gas fields owned by it. Thus it will be seen that during these 11 years the petitioner itself allowed less than $30,000 a year to accomplish a purpose for which it now claims $150,000 a year is entirely inadequate, and the record shows that during these years, or at any rate during the later ones, the production and sale of gas was more than it has been in the last few years, and more than can reasonably be expected in the succeeding years. While it is true that, in fixing the rate for a public utility such as the petitioner, regard must be had to the fact that its plant will only have a salvage value when its gas supply is exhausted, it is likewise true that the petitioner must be considered to have taken this into consideration during all the life of the plant.

Assuming that the petitioner's contention is correct, that its plant will become obsolescent in 5 years, it would be manifestly unjust to charge those who consume the gas during that last 5 years with practically the entire cost of the plant, in addition to a reasonable return upon the entire investment therein. The dividends heretofore declared amount to much more than a reasonable return on the investment. They amount to from 40 to 50 per cent. on the amount of money actually invested, as contended for by the petitioner, and to more than 100 per cent. on the nominal capital stock. These dividends it cannot be considered were declared out of earnings. It is true they were declared out of the company's receipts from the sale of its gas and the service it performed in delivering it. Such part of these receipts as may properly be construed to be for the purchase price of the gas should have been treated as in effect purchase money for its property, and its capital have been depreciated to that extent. In other words, in order to arrive at a just conclusion as to what is a proper allowance to be made for amortizing the investment we must consider that this process has been going on during the whole life of the plant. It will not do to say that this company could by continued active operations for the first half of its life exhaust more than one-half of its gas supply, and declare the whole of it in dividends as profits on its investment, and then begin the amortization of the investment after its property had been thus depleted. If we assume that the petitioner's investment amounted to $1,500,000 or even $2,000,000, as contended for by it, in order to make which amount, however, the original investment has to be more than doubled because of appreciation in the value of its properties, we must then assume that during all the time it has been operating, and withdrawing gas from its field, and selling the same to its customers, it has been not only earning money, but it has been selling a part of its property, and we must depreciate its investment each year of its existence to the extent of such sales.

Of course, as is stated by the commission in the case of In re United Fuel Gas Co., Public Utilities Rep. 1918C, p. 193, it is a practical impossibility to determine how much should be taken from the capital investment each year because of depletion of the gas supply for that particular year, and the proper way, and perhaps the only possible way, is to distribute over the entire life of the utility the total amount of its investment. In other words, divide the total investment into the number of years of the utility's probable life and depreciate the investment each year by the amount thus found. If in this case we fix the total investment at $2,000,000 and to do this we are required to more than double the investment actually made because of appreciated value of the property, and divide this amount by 20 years, the probable life of this utility, we find that the investment should have been depreciated each year to the extent of $100,000 because of exhaustion of the supply of gas by the sales made therefrom. Instead of doing this, as we have before stated, the company during the first 11 years of its life only depreciated it to the extent of $300,000, when in fairness the investment should have been depreciated down to the year 1914, when the Public Service Commission began to regulate it, to the extent of at least $1,000,000. It will thus be seen that, instead of the Public Service Commission fixing too small an amount for the proper amortization of the investment, they have fixed it larger than might be justified; but this was partly upon the theory that for the last 2 or 3 years the petitioner had not been allowed to earn enough to set aside any amount for this purpose.

[9] It may be urged that we cannot go behind the commission's finding that this plant is worth $1,500,000 as a public utility at this time; that the findings of fact of the commission in this regard are conclusive upon us. It is quite true that rate making is the exercise of legislative power, and where it depends upon the ascertainment of results from disputed facts, the determination of the Legislature—or, in this case, the Public Service Commission in lieu thereof—will not be reviewed; but where such determination is reached by a misapplication of legal principles to the state of facts disclosed, this court will make a correct application of such principles in determining whether or not the rate fixed by the legislative authority is confiscatory. We are, therefore, of the opinion that had the commission applied a proper proportion of the petitioner's receipts for the years 1904 to 1914, inclusive, to the reduction of its investment, instead of treating practically the whole thereof as earnings, the value of this plant at this time would have been found to be less than it was by the commission. In other words, by the application of the legal principle we have above laid down, and the state of facts which it is conceded exists here, the investment of the stockholders in the petitioner had been more than 50 per cent. returned to them by the year 1914, and the investment in the plant should have been reduced to that extent. We think the commission has dealt as liberally with the petitioner in the matter of allowing for the amortization of its plant as could reasonably be expected.

[10] Complaint is made that the commission did not allow the petitioner as expenses an item of $160,000 to cover the cost of new field lines. It appears that the petitioner, in order to keep up its supply of gas, and to exhaust its field, is constantly drilling new wells and laying new lines thereto, and it contends that the cost of these new lines should be allowed to it as an item of expense to be returned in the year in which made, instead of being added to its investment. The commission treated this item in the same manner that it had been treated by the petitioner during all of its existence. A large part of its investment, as now appears upon its books, is made up of such items as this, all of which were expended out of its receipts, and we think it would be manifestly unjust to charge consumers of gas in any one particular year the total cost of laying pipe lines which will be used to convey the gas from these wells during their entire life.

Our conclusion is to refuse to suspend the order of the Public Service Commission.

LYNCH, J., absent.

(84 W. Va. 662)
MILL CREEK COAL & COKE CO. et al. v.
PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.
(No. 3857.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 7, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ELECTRICITY ⇐1—ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER COMPANY A "PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATION."

A hydro-electric company, organized in Virginia to engage in the business of a general electric lighting and power company and for the sale and disposal of its electric power to the public, and selling its product to customers in this state, is, as to its business transacted within this state, a "public service corporation," within the terms of chapter 150, Code of West Virginia.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Public Service Corporation.]

2. ELECTRICITY ⇐11—ELECTRIC CURRENT FURNISHED BY HYDRO-ELECTRIC COMPANY TO INDUSTRIES IS A "PUBLIC SERVICE."

Where a hydro-electric company, a public service corporation within the terms of chapter 150, Code, by its charter expressly engages to serve the public, and subjects itself unreservedly to the laws and regulations of the governmental power having jurisdiction in the place where it proposes to conduct its business, and its prolonged subsequent conduct is entirely consistent therewith, the electric service rendered by the company to industrial concerns to be used by them for private profit is a "public service," within the provisions of the Public Service Commission Act, and subject to regulation by the commission.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Public Service.]

3. COMMERCE ⇐15—TRANSMISSION OF ELECTRIC CURRENT FROM STATE TO STATE IS INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The transportation or transmission of electric current from state to state through appropriate instrumentalities is "commerce" between the states.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Commerce.]

4. COMMERCE ⇐16—INTERSTATE AND INTRA-STATE COMMERCE DISTINGUISHED.

In determining when commerce ceases to be interstate and becomes intrastate, the essential character or unity of the movement is decisive.

5. COMMERCE ⇐40(1)—TRANSMISSION OF ELECTRIC CURRENT FROM SELLER IN ONE STATE TO BUYER IN ANOTHER IS "INTERSTATE COMMERCE."

The transportation or transmission of electric current direct from the seller in one state to the consumer in another, for immediate or practically immediate use, subject only to a temporary stop en route for the purpose of reducing the current to a commercial voltage, remains "interstate commerce" until the commodity has reached its goal, unless theretofore sold to independent distributing companies in the latter state for resale to local consumers.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Interstate Commerce.]

6. COMMERCE §10—FEDERAL POWER EXCLUSIVE OVER INTERSTATE COMMERCE OF NATIONAL IMPORTANCE.

As to those forms of interstate commerce which are of national importance, and require a general system and uniformity of regulation, the federal power is exclusive, and the state may not act, even if Congress has not exerted its paramount legislative authority as to them.

7. COMMERCE §10—STATE REGULATION OF LOCAL INTERSTATE COMMERCE VALID ON NON-EXERCISE OF POWER BY CONGRESS.

But where the subject is of local rather than national importance, admitting of diversity of treatment according to the special requirements of local conditions, the state may exercise its regulatory authority within reasonable limits till Congress acts.

8. COMMERCE §60(1)—REGULATION BY STATE OF RATES FOR FURNISHING ELECTRIC CURRENT IN ANOTHER STATE IS VALID.

The regulation of the rates at which electric current transported or transmitted from one state to another shall be sold in the latter state is, so long as the rate fixed is not confiscatory or discriminatory against citizens of another state, a matter essentially local in its nature, and not of such national importance as to require a general system and uniformity of regulation.

9. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §154(1)—PRIVATE CONTRACT RIGHTS MUST YIELD TO CONSIDERATION OF PUBLIC WELFARE.

Private contract rights must yield to the public welfare, where the latter is appropriately declared and defined and the two conflict.

10. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §154(2), 298(7)—RATES ESTABLISHED BY STATE FOR ELECTRIC CURRENT NOT IMPAIRMENT OF PRIVATE RATE CONTRACT.

Reasonable rates for electric energy, prescribed by a state in the exercise of its police power, through the instrumentality of its Public Service Commission, are not repugnant to the contract or due process of law clauses of the federal Constitution (article 1, § 10, cl. 1, and Amendment 14) merely because, if given effect, they will supersede the rates designated in a private contract between the company and a customer, entered into prior to the enactment of the law creating the commission.

11. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS §32—FINDINGS OF FACT BY COMMISSION—GENERALLY NOT REVIEWED.

Findings of fact by the Public Service Commission, based upon evidence to support them, generally will not be reviewed by this court.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

12. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §81 — "POLICE POWER" DEFINED.

The "police power" of the state embraces regulations designed to promote the public convenience or the general welfare or prosperity, as well as those in the interest of public health, morals, and safety.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Police Power.]

13. COMMERCE §48—NO UNDUE BURDEN CAN BE PUT ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE UNDER POLICE POWER.

Not every exercise of the police power of a state affecting interstate commerce is valid, as no direct or undue burden may be imposed.

Petition by the Mill Creek Coal & Coke Company and others for suspension of an order of the Public Service Commission directing the continuance of a former increase of 20 per cent. in the existing rates of the Appalachian Power Company, and allowing a further increase of the same amount. Order affirmed.

A. G. Fox and Sanders & Crockett, all of Bluefield, and W. B. Kegley, of Wytheville, Va., for petitioners.

Geo. W. Johnson, of Parkersburg, R. Dennis Steed, of Charleston, R. E. Scott, of Richmond, Va., and Price, Smith, Spilman & Clay, of Charleston, for respondent.

LYNOH, J. The questions presented upon this appeal originated in an application made by the Appalachian Power Company, a Virginia corporation doing business in this state as well as in Virginia, to the Public Service Commission of West Virginia for an increase of 30 per cent. in the rates in force December 31, 1918. Thirteen months prior to that date the commission had ordered an increase of 20 per cent. in the rates theretofore existing, pursuant to an agreement between the power company and its customers, and as an emergency measure made necessary by the war, though many of such customers, including appellants, held unexpired contracts with the company fixing lower rates to be paid for its service. The increase of 20 per cent. presumably not proving sufficient to enable the company to meet the additional costs incident to war conditions, application was made for the additional 30 per cent. increase. After full investigation and hearing, the commission by an order of April 28, 1919, directed the continuance of the former increase of 20 per cent., and allowed a further increase of the same amount effective April 1, 1919. It is from that order that the present appeal was taken by numerous coal companies served by the power company in this state.

The Appalachian Power Company was organized in 1911 for the purpose of engaging in the business of a general electric lighting and power company "for the production of electric power intended to be used for public service." Hydro-electric stations of great capacity were constructed on New river, in Virginia, and the current there generated carried into West Virginia by two high-tension transmission lines to three substations in this state, where it is transformed or reduced from 88,000 volts to commercial voltages ranging from 13,200 to 110, and from these points distributed, measured, and sold to the company's West Virginia consumers. These three transforming or reducing substations alone, one at Switchback, one at Bluefield, and one at Coalwood, represent an investment, exclusive of generating machinery, of $400,000, $80,000, and $60,000, respectively. The commission found that the fair value of the power company's investment as a rate base upon which it was entitled to earn a reasonable return, as of September 30, 1918, was approximately $9,860,000. It further found that the company had not during any year of its history earned a return sufficient to pay its fixed charges and to enable it to set aside a fund to cover accrued depreciation, and that the operations of the company since it commenced business had resulted, as of September 30, 1918, in a deficit of "something in excess of $1,000,000."

At the time of the applications for increased rates and of the orders of the commission allowing them, many of the customers of the power company were using its current under unexpired contracts having several years yet to run. These contracts definitely fixed the rates chargeable for the service rendered. The commission, however, in effect annulled the provisions of these agreements in so far as they related to rates by authorizing a total and aggregate increase of 40 per cent., finding that the new rates were necessary in order to enable the company to earn a fair return on its investment.

[1, 2] In support of their contention that the commission exceeded its jurisdiction and powers in authorizing the increase in the face of specific rates fixed by contracts having several years yet to run, protestants rely upon four propositions: (1) That the Appalachian Power Company, disposing in West Virginia of electric power generated outside of this state, is not within the purview of the West Virginia Public Service Commission Act, chapter 150 of the Code; (2) that as the electric power furnished in West Virginia originates at the power company's developments in Virginia, its business in this state is interstate commerce, and the Public Service Commission, therefore, has no jurisdiction in the premises; (3) that protestants' rates are fixed by contracts entered into prior to the passage of the act creating the commission, and any interference now with such contracts would impair the obligations thereof, and deprive protestants of their property without due process of law; (4) that the rates fixed are unreasonable.

With respect to the first ground relied on by petitioners there can be no reasonable doubt. The charter of the Appalachian Power Company states that the purposes of its organization, among others, are:

"To do the business of a general electric lighting and power company, with works to be purchased, leased or constructed, maintained and operated for the production of electric power intended to be used for public service, and for the sale and disposal thereof to the public."

The charter authorizes the company to transmit, use, or dispose of its electrical power or energy in the states of Virginia, West Virginia, Tennessee, and North Carolina. While it is given full power to contract with the public "for such price or prices and on such terms and conditions as to this corporation may seem proper," yet in the same connection it is provided expressly that—

"Said company shall be bound to furnish at reasonable rates any person, company or corporation along its lines with electric energy, and to charge uniformly therefor to all persons, companies or corporations using the same under like conditions as to cost of supply; all subject to the laws and regulations of the governmental power having jurisdiction in the place or places in which such business or businesses are conducted." (Italics ours.)

A certified copy of its certificate of incorporation was duly filed with the secretary of state of this state, and properly recorded, as required by section 30, c. 54 (sec. 2929), Code of West Virginia. It was under such provisions as these that the power company commenced, and has continued, to transact its business in this state.

Not only is the public character of the service to be rendered by the Appalachian Power Company expressly asserted in the articles of incorporation, but its subsequent acts pursuant thereto have partaken distinctly of the same characteristics. The findings of fact of the Public Service Commission sufficiently disclose that fact:

"The applicant is now serving as a public utility with light, heat, and power" 12 towns in Virginia, 6 in West Virginia; 25 coal-mining plants in Virginia, 76 in West Virginia; and the street railway systems of the Bluestone Traction Company and the Princeton Traction Company. "It furnishes 60 per cent. of the power used in coal mining in the Norfolk & Western and Pocahontas territory, and all the power used in mining in the Mullens district on the Virginian Railroad, and 90 per cent. of the power used in coal mining in the Clinchfield district."

Its charter requires it to serve the public along its lines at reasonable and uniform rates, and subjects all phases of its business to the laws and regulations "of the governmental power having jurisdiction in the place or places in which such business or businesses are conducted." The scope of its activities in West Virginia shows the generality of the service performed here, and state officials having occasion to deal with it, including the Public Service Commission, have recognized and treated it as a public service corporation. Moreover, a like service furnished by electric power, heat, and light companies is of such a public nature as warrants the bestowal upon them of the power of eminent domain. Pittsburg Hydro-Electric Co. v. Liston, 70 W. Va. 83, 73 S. E. 86, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 602.

Furthermore, the power company involved here falls within the express language of the West Virginia Public Service Commission Act, chapter 150, Code. Section 3 (sec. 638) provides:

"The jurisdiction of the commission shall extend to and include: * * * (c) Gas companies, electric lighting companies and municipalities furnishing gas or electricity for lighting, heating or power purposes; and (d) hydro-electric companies for the generation and transmission of light, heat or power. * * * The words 'public service corporation' used in this act shall include all persons, * * * firms, corporations, municipalities and agencies engaged or employed in any business herein enumerated, or in any other public service business whether above enumerated or not, whether incorporated or not."

There can be no doubt that the power company is a public service corporation within the scope of that act. Wingrove v. Public Service Commission, 74 W. Va. 190, 81 S. E. 734, L. R. A. 1918B, 210.

But protestants raise the further jurisdictional question that, granting certain phases of applicant's business to be public in nature, such as the service rendered to domestic consumers and traction companies, the furnishing of electric current to industrial concerns to be used by them for private profit is not of such a public character as to subject such service to regulation by the commission. They contend that such service is purely a matter of private concern, to be regulated by individual contract between the power company and the management of the industrial enterprise, and that, if the Legislature did include that phase of applicant's business within the scope of the Public Service Commission Act, it had no constitutional authority to exercise its regulatory power with respect thereto. This question is not argued at length by protestants, nor do they cite authority on the point. But the particular facts of the case do not necessitate an extensive consideration of the constitutional question involved, for here the company by its charter has dedicated all of its activities to the service of the public and to regulation by it. When, through the years of its existence, it has subjected and still is subjecting itself voluntarily in all phases of its business "to the laws and regulations of the governmental power having jurisdiction in the place or places in which such business or businesses are conducted," does it lie with this court or with those who have dealt with the company subsequent to its organization to say that the extent of its public service is more limited than the company through its recorded charter admits it to be? It has never questioned the authority of the Public Service Commission to regulate all phases of its business, and when it thus dedicates itself unreservedly to the service of the public, it is hardly fitting that this court or any minority of the public which it serves should say that the company has overstepped its powers in subjecting itself to public regulation. It is generally the privilege of the dedicator of property or service to public use or regulation to determine, subject to the sanction of the unit of government under which it acts, the extent of that dedication. When such dedication has been made and has received official sanction, it is conclusive against an attack of this nature. The converse of this situation is presented in the decision rendered to-day in Clarksburg Light & Heat Co. v. Public Service Commission, 100 S. E. 551, in which the question was squarely presented whether the service of natural gas, the supply of which is limited by nature, to industrial concerns to be used by them for private profit is or is not of such a public character as to subject such service to regulation by the commission.

[3] With respect to the second point raised by protestants, we concur in their conclusion that the business of the power company is interstate commerce, but cannot agree that the Public Service Commission, therefore, has no jurisdiction in the premises. No longer can there be any doubt that the transportation or transmission of electric current from state to state through appropriate instrumentalities is commerce between the states. West v. Kansas Natural Gas Co., 221 U. S. 229, 31 Sup. Ct. 564, 55 L. Ed. 716, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1193; The Pipe Line Cases, 234 U. S. 548, 34 Sup. Ct. 956, 58 L. Ed. 1459; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Foster, 247 U. S. 105, 38 Sup. Ct. 438, 62 L. Ed. 1006, 1 A. L. R. 1278; In re Pennsylvania Gas Co., 225 N. Y. 397, 122 N. E. 260. But the more difficult question arises when it becomes necessary to determine at what point the shipment loses its interstate character and becomes merged with the general property of the state and fully subject to exclusive regulation by that state. In the present case the power used by West Virginia consumers is generated in Virginia, transmitted across the state line by high-tension wires to substations in this state, where the voltage is reduced to commercial form, and thence distributed to the various consumers using such power. There is no break in the essential unity of the transaction—the interposition of no intermediary which would change the essential character thereof. There is no cessation or break in the force of the current; merely a change in its form, that it may be available for use according to the needs of the consumers.

[4] It is settled beyond all doubt by repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that it is the essential character of the commerce which determines whether it is interstate or intrastate. Western Oil Ref'g Co. v. Lipscomb, 244 U. S. 346, 37 Sup. Ct. 623, 61 L. Ed. 1181. There an Indiana corporation, for the purpose of filling orders taken by its salesmen in Tennessee, shipped into that state a tank car of oil billed to the shipper to a point in Tennessee where part of the orders were filled, and thence rebilled to the shipper to another point in that state where the remaining orders were filled. It was held that the movement of the goods to the first point and its continuance thence to the second, the second shipment being between points within the state, were connected parts of a continuing interstate commerce movement, when considered in its entirety. The place of the rebilling was termed a “temporary stop en route.”

So it has been held that a telegram forwarded by the Stock Exchange in New York City to a telegraph company in Boston, with the intention that the latter should transmit it to selected brokers in that city, approved in advance by the Exchange, does not lose its character as a subject of interstate commerce until it reaches the brokers' offices. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Foster, 247 U. S. 105, 38 Sup. Ct. 438, 62 L. Ed. 1006, 1 A. L. R. 1278. The continuity of the transaction was not broken by the translation of the code message into English, and its transmission, thus translated, to tickers in the offices of the approved brokers. As said by Justice Holmes in that case:

“If the normal, contemplated, and followed course is a transmission as continuous and rapid as science can make it from exchange to broker's office it does not matter what are the stages. * * *”

[5-7] In this case the transmission from hydro-electric generators in Virginia to consumers in West Virginia was as expeditious and continuous as science could make it. So far as these appellant coal companies are concerned, this is not a case where the current transported into West Virginia is sold to independent distributing companies for resale to local consumers, as was the situation in Public Utilities Commission v. Landon, 249 U. S. 236, 39 Sup. Ct. 268, 63 L. Ed. 577, but a direct transmission from seller to buyer, with an incidental and temporary stop en route for the purpose of transformation into a commercial voltage. As held in the case last cited, the interposition of such independent local distributing companies breaks the chain of interstate commerce. Nor is there present any evidence indicating a storage of the current in this state for later distribution to consumers, which might, though we do not decide the question, require us to hold that the interstate commerce feature of the transmission terminated at the place of storage.

We are not unmindful that the Court of Appeals of Maryland in a recent decision (West Virginia & Maryland Gas Co. v. Towers, 106 Atl. 265), has held that where gas is transported from West Virginia to Maryland in high-pressure mains, and at various points in the latter state reduced to a lower pressure for local consumption, such reduction terminates the interstate commerce portion of the transportation. At the time that opinion was written the Supreme Court of the United States had not yet decided the case of Public Utilities Commission v. Landon, supra. We are therefore not disposed to adopt the conclusion reached in the Towers Case, but rather to follow what we understand to be the rule laid down in Public Utilities Commission v. Landon, supra, and In re Pennsylvania Gas Co., 225 N. Y. 397, 122 N. E. 260, affirming 184 App. Div. 556, 171 N. Y. Supp. 1028, namely, that the transportation or transmission of such commodities as gas or electricity across state lines, direct from seller to consumer, for immediate or practically immediate use, remains interstate commerce until the commodity has reached its goal, unless theretofore sold to independent distributing companies for resale to local consumers, or, possibly, unless stored in the state of distribution for a period of such length that it can fairly be said to have lost its original character and to have become merged with the general property of the state.

[12] But, though interstate commerce is involved, the state is not necessarily deprived of the right to regulate and supervise under its police power. That which is attempted here is the regulation of the rates at which electric power produced in Virginia shall be sold in West Virginia. It is settled law that the police power of the state embraces regulations designed to promote the public convenience or the general welfare or prosperity, as well as those in the interest of the public health, morals, and safety. Lake Shore & Mich. Southern Ry. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 292, 19 Sup. Ct. 465, 43 L. Ed. 702; C., B. & Q. Ry. v. Drainage Commissioners, 200 U. S. 561, 592, 26 Sup. Ct. 841, 50 L. Ed. 596, 4 Ann. Cas. 1175; Bacon v. Walker, 204 U. S. 311, 317, 27 Sup. Ct. 289, 51 L. Ed. 499; Chicago & Alton R. R. v. Tranbarger, 238 U. S. 67, 77, 35 Sup. Ct. 678, 59 L. Ed. 1204. And it is clear that the regulation of the rates of public utilities is for the public convenience and general welfare, and hence a proper exercise of the police power of the state. City of Benwood v. Public Service Commission, 75 W. Va. 127, 83 S. E. 295, L. R. A. 1915C, 261; Virginia-Western Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Va.) 99 S. E. 723. See, also, German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Kansas, 233 U. S. 389, 34 Sup. Ct. 612, 58 L. Ed. 1011, L. R. A. 1915C, 1189.

[13] But not every exercise of the police power affecting interstate commerce is valid. No direct or undue burden may be imposed. Since the clarifying opinion of the United States Supreme Court in the Minnesota Rate Cases, 230 U. S. 352, 33 Sup. Ct. 729, 57 L. Ed. 1511, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1151, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 18, much of the vagueness and ambiguity as to the respective powers of state and federal governments over interstate commerce have been removed. At page 399 of the opinion in 230 U. S. (33 Sup. Ct. 140, 57 L. Ed. 1511, 48 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1151, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 18) the court says:

"It has repeatedly been declared by this court that as to those subjects which require a general system or uniformity of regulation the power of Congress is exclusive. In other matters, admitting of diversity of treatment according to the special requirements of local conditions, the states may act within their respective jurisdictions until Congress sees fit to act; and, when Congress does act, the exercise of its authority overrides all conflicting state legislation."

Again at page 402 of 230 U. S., at page 741 of 33 Sup. Ct. (57 L. Ed. 1511, 48 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1151, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 18), it is said:

"But within these limitations there necessarily remains to the states, until Congress acts, a wide range for the permissible exercise of power appropriate to their territorial jurisdiction although interstate commerce may be affected. It extends to those matters of a local nature as to which it is impossible to derive from the constitutional grant an intention that they should go uncontrolled pending federal intervention. * * * Further, it is competent for a state to govern its internal commerce, to provide local improvements, to create and regulate local facilities, to adopt protective measures of a reasonable character in the interest of the health, safety, morals, and welfare of its people, although interstate commerce may incidentally or indirectly be involved. * * * Where the subject is peculiarly one of local concern, and from its nature belongs to the class with which the state appropriately deals in making reasonable provision for local needs, it cannot be regarded as left to the unrestrained will of individuals because Congress has not acted, although it may have such a relation to interstate commerce as to be within the reach of the federal power."

Congress has never asserted its paramount power over interstate transmission of electric power; hence it only remains to consider whether the regulation of rates at which electric current shall be sold is essentially local, or of such national importance as to require a general system or uniformity of regulation. The vital distinction should be noted between regulation of rates of transportation and of the rates at which a commodity shall be sold. Transportation across state lines, involving as it frequently does many or all states, is generally a matter of national importance requiring uniformity of regulation respecting the rates thereof, and hence is usually beyond the regulatory power of the state. Because of the very nature of the subject-matter conflicting state regulations respecting rates ordinarily would result in discord and chaos. There are instances, however, where even in such cases the regulatory power of the state has been sustained. Port Richmond Ferry Co. v. Board of Chosen Freeholders, 234 U. S. 317, 34 Sup. Ct. 821, 58 L. Ed. 1330. See, also, Shrader v. Steubenville, etc., Traction Co., 99 S. E. 207.

[8] In fixing the rates of sale, however, as distinguished from rates of transportation, the duty regulated is of an entirely different nature. The duty of the power company to sell at reasonable rates was one owed both to citizens of Virginia and to the public in this state. But the two duties do not overlap, as they do where rates of transportation are concerned. The price at which a commodity is sold is essentially local, affecting chiefly those in the community where it is made, and only incidentally, if at all, touching those outside of the community. So long as the rate fixed is not discriminatory or confiscatory, but yields a fair return upon the valuation of the property, it throws no burden upon citizens of other communities or states. As said in Re Pennsylvania Gas Co., 225 N. Y. 397, 122 N. E. 260, respecting the regulation of the sale of gas imported from another state:

"It is idle to speak of the need of uniformity of action by states of equal competence when there is only one state whose action is involved. But even within the state diversity rather than uniformity is exacted by the conditions of the business. Rates adequate in one city are inadequate in another. The local needs are best known to local agencies of government. No central authority, acting for the nation as a whole, will readily discern them."

A similar conclusion was reached in Manufacturers' Light & Heat Co. v. Ott (D. C.) 215 Fed. 940. The local regulation stands until Congress occupies the field.

[9, 10] But protestants further claim that their rates are fixed by contracts entered into prior to the passage of the Public Service Commission Act, and any interference with such contracts would impair the obligations thereof and deprive petitioners of their property without due process of law. Even as to this point we are unable to concur in their contention. Pursuant to its police power the state, through its Legislature, bestowed upon the Public Service Commission in section 5, c. 150, Code (sec. 640), power to—

“change any intrastate rate, charge or toll which is unjust or unreasonable and may prescribe such rate, charge or toll as would be just and reasonable, and change or prohibit any practice, device or method of service in order to prevent undue discrimination or favoritism as between persons, localities or classes of freight.”

In addition, section 22 (Code Supp. 1918, § 656a) empowers the commission to—

“enforce, originate, establish, modify, change, adjust and promulgate tariffs, rates, joint rates, tolls and schedules for all public service corporations; * * * and whenever the commission shall, after hearing, find any existing rates, tolls, * * * unjust, unreasonable, insufficient or unjustly discriminatory or otherwise in violation of any of the provisions of this act, the commission shall by an order fix reasonable rates * * * to be followed in the future in lieu of those found to be unjust, unreasonable, insufficient. * * *” (Italics ours.)

Clearly these sections bestow upon the commission authority to change rates that are unjust, unreasonable, or insufficient, as it has found these rates to be, unless bound by the contracts previously entered into between applicant and protestants.

If the point were not so seriously pressed, it would be thought unnecessary to enter into any extended discussion of the question. In Manigault v. Springs, 199 U. S. 473, 480, 26 Sup. Ct. 127, 130 (50 L. Ed. 274), the court said:

“It is the settled law of this court that the interdiction of statutes impairing the obligation of contracts does not prevent the state from exercising such powers as are vested in it for the promotion of the common weal, or are necessary for the general good of the public, though contracts previously entered into between individuals may thereby be affected. This power, which in its various ramifications is known as the police power, is an exercise of the sovereign right of the government to protect the lives, health, morals, comfort and general welfare of the people, and is paramount to any rights under contracts between individuals.”

In Chicago & Alton R. R. v. Tranbarger, 238 U. S. 67, 76-77, 35 Sup. Ct. 678, 682 (59 L. Ed. 1204), it is said:

“It is established by repeated decisions of this court that neither of these provisions [the contract and due process clauses] of the federal Constitution has the effect of overriding the power of the state to establish all regulations reasonably necessary to secure the health, safety, or general welfare of the community; that this power can neither be abdicated nor bargained away, and is inalienable even by express grant; and that all contract and property rights are held subject to its fair exercise. * * * And it is also settled that the police power embraces regulations designed to promote the public convenience or the general welfare and prosperity, as well as those in the interest of the public health, morals, or safety.”

We have held in the case of City of Benwood v. Public Service Commission, 75 W. Va. 127, 83 S. E. 295, L. R. A. 1915C, 261, that the rate-making power is an incident of the police power of the state, and may be exercised without impairing the obligation of contracts or depriving of property without due process of law within the meaning of the federal and state Constitutions. Is it not proper that it be so? Surely it is in the interest of public convenience and of the general welfare that rates of public utilities be subject to regulation, both as a protection against extortionate charges and at the same time for the purpose of safeguarding to a utility so restricted a reasonable return upon its investment. It must of course be recognized that a peculiar sanctity inheres in contracts entered into between parties competent to contract, and that the obligations thereby imposed will not lightly be disturbed. But the same policy that forbids to a utility total freedom of action likewise limits the extent to which contracts with a utility will be recognized when the public need necessitates a partial or total annulment. The duty of the utility to subordinate its right of control over rates in the interest of the public welfare is balanced by a corresponding duty on the part of individuals contracting with such utility to subordinate their rights of contract to the same public welfare. The police power of the state is impartial between utility and contractors, requiring both to surrender rights for the general weal. The public need to preserve the utility in strong financial condition in order that it may better serve is frequently as important as the need to guard the public against extortion. The right of the utility to protection must not be permitted to grow dim in the presence of that other and more popular right of exercising a control over its functions. Both subserve the same public purpose. From the findings of the commission showing the unfavorable financial condition of the power company it is apparent that the public interest will be better served by permitting a fair return on the property valuation over and above ordinary expenses, than by requiring the company to serve without return, to the possible ruin of those who have invested therein, and to the discouragement of others from embarking upon similar enterprises.

A case quite analogous to this was recently decided in Union Dry Goods Co. v. Georgia Public Service Corporation, 248 U. S. 372, 39 Sup. Ct. 117, 63 L. Ed. 309, affirming 145

Ga. 658, 89 S. E. 779. There the state of Georgia, through its Railroad Commission, fixed reasonable rates to be charged by a utility for supplying electricity to the inhabitants of a city, which superseded lower rates agreed upon in an existing time contract made previously between the company and a consumer. That result, however, was held to be a legitimate effect of a valid exercise of the police power, not impairing the obligation of contract or depriving the consumer of property without due process of law. See, also, Portland Ry. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 229 U. S. 397, 412, 33 Sup. Ct. 820, 57 L. Ed. 1248; United Fuel Gas Co. v. Public Service Commission, 73 W. Va. 571, 591, 80 S. E. 931; B. & O. R. R. v. Public Service Commission, 81 W. Va. 457, 94 S. E. 545, L. R. A. 1918D, 268; Raymond Lumber Co. v. Raymond Light & Water Co., 92 Wash. 330, 159 Pac. 133, L. R. A. 1917C, 574; note to Pinney & Boyle Co. v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corp., L. R. A. 1915C, 282.

But it is said the contracts in this case were entered into before the Public Service Commission Act was enacted, and, therefore, are on a different and higher plane than those of subsequent date. To adopt such a holding would be to permit private contracts to dispossess the state of a portion of its police power, where the statute enacted pursuant to that power was subsequent to such contracts. That would result in discrimination of the worst type, when the service rendered by a utility is required by law to be without discrimination. The commission might authorize a rate which, according to its estimate, would yield a reasonable return, but those who were so fortunate as to possess contracts with the utility would be entirely without the scope of such order, and would pay for the service at a rate lower than is paid by those subject to the commission's order. The resulting difference between the estimated and actual yield would necessarily be made up by a still higher rate to be paid by those not holding such contracts. In other words, the effect would be to recognize the contract action of individuals as of superior dignity to the police power of the state, a result tantamount to a denial of sovereignty in the state in the exercise of one of its most sacred and sovereign powers. Such an argument is untenable. City of Benwood v. Public Service Commission, supra, where the franchise agreement involved was entered in prior to the enactment of the Public Service Commission Act; Shrader v. Steubenville, etc., Traction Co., 99 S. E. 207; Yeatman v. Public Service Commission, 126 Md. 513, 95 Atl. 158.

There is presented here no question involving the capacity of the state to contract away its right to the proper exercise of its police power, such as was presented in Interurban Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, 98 Ohio St. 287, 120 N. E. 831, and Virginia-Western Power Co. v. Commonwealth (Va.) 99 S. E. 723. Nor is any such question raised as was before the Supreme Court of the United States in Columbus Ry. Power & Light Co. v. City of Columbus, 249 U. S. 399, 39 Sup. Ct. 349, 63 L. Ed. 669, recently decided.

[11] The last ground upon which protestants attack the order of the commission is that the rates allowed are unreasonable. The commission found as a fact that the fair value of the power company's investment as a rate base, upon which it was entitled to earn a reasonable return, as of September 30, 1918, was approximately $9,860,000. It further found that the company had not earned during any year of its history a return sufficient to pay its fixed charges and to enable it to set aside a fund to cover accrued depreciation, and that the operations of the company since it commenced business had resulted, as of September 30, 1918, in a deficit something in excess of $1,000,000. Under the rates allowed by the commission it is estimated that the company will be enabled "to pay its operating expenses and in addition thereto earn a net return of approximately 8 per cent. upon the value of its investment." There being evidence to support this finding, it will not be reviewed by this court. Norfolk & Western Ry. Co. v. Public Service Commission, 82 W. Va. 408, 90 S. E. 62. The general subject of the conclusiveness of orders of the Public Service Commission in this court is more fully discussed in United Fuel Gas Co. v. Public Service Commission, 73 W. Va. 571, 582-583, 80 S. E. 931.

For the reasons stated, we affirm the order of the commission.

(22 W. Va. 158)

WILLIAMS v. McCARTY et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
March 26, 1918.)Concurring opinion. For majority opinion, see 95 S. E. 638.

WILLIAMS, J. I concur in affirming the decree dismissing plaintiff's bill, but not for the reason given in the opinion. I do not think the bill presents a case for equity jurisdiction. It shows that the right to the fund in bank depends on the title to the timber from which it was derived and that the title was claimed adversely by J. H. McCarty and by Williams, trustee. Both were bona fide claimants, and McCarty sold the timber in good faith. How, then, can he be a trustee in invitum or ex maleficio? It is not unconscientious for him to retain the proceeds; in fact, he has a right to do so, unless the other claimant establishes a superior title. The mala fides is the governing principle in all such cases, says Story in his work on Equity Jurisprudence, § 1255. There is a wide and fundamental difference between this case and those cited in the opinion to support the decision, which the opinion fails to notice, and that is McCarty's conscientious or bona fide claim of title. The cases cited from other jurisdictions are all cases where the defendant wrongfully misapplied property or funds which he recognized as the property of another, and to which, at the time of misappropriation, he made no claim of title. There was no necessity in any of those cases, as there is here, for the court to determine a disputed question of title before deciding whether defendant was a trustee ex maleficio. In other words, the chancellor is called upon here to settle a disputed title, which should be decided by a court of law, in order to determine whether equity has jurisdiction to impress the fund with a trust.

The title to the timber was purely legal, the ownership depending on the proper construction of the trust deed from S. E. McCarty to Bruffey, trustee, and of his deed to A. D. Williams, a question which a court of law was as competent to determine as a court of equity. Poage v. Bell, 3 Rand. (Va.) 586. No equities are involved. The insolvency of neither J. H. McCarty nor the Spice Run Lumber Company is alleged, and by an action at law against either or both of them plaintiff had a full, complete, and adequate remedy. Hence there is no ground for equity jurisdiction. 1 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. § 130. No privity of contract existed between plaintiff and any of defendants, and no relation of trust, express or constructive. The bill does not disclose whether plaintiff was a party to the arrangement with the bank or not. Presumably it was made between J. H. McCarty and the Spice Run Lumber Company only for the latter's protection. But, even if plaintiff had been a party to it, that would not change the situation, so as to give equity jurisdiction of a suit by plaintiff to determine the title to the timber or the fund derived from it, even though equity might have entertained a bill of interpleader by the bank. The timber was severed and converted into personalty before the suit was brought, and full compensation therefor was obtainable by means of a judgment at law. Plaintiff claims the fund on the sole ground that legally he was the owner of the timber, and McCarty, who sold it, was not, thus presenting a state of facts which furnishes a basis for one of the most familiar actions cognizable in a court of law. He cannot, by electing to treat the sale as having been made for his benefit, confer jurisdiction on a court of equity. The property from which the fund was derived must necessarily have been impressed with some equity to entitle him to equitable relief.

"Where personal property is conveyed by deed of trust, and a claim is set up by a third person, a court of equity ought not to enjoin a sale under the deed, but should leave the party to his legal remedy." 3 Rand. 586.

In Sheppard v. Turpin, 3 Grat. (Va.) 373, property held under a deed of trust was sold under execution at the instance of a party not claiming under the trust deed, and the court held that equity would not entertain a suit by either the trustee or cestui que trust against the purchaser for the recovery of the property, on the ground that there was no obstacle to their proceeding at law. If he could not pursue the property itself in equity, I do not see how he could have any better right to follow the fund. See, also, Kuhn, Netter & Co. v. Mack & Bros., 4 W. Va. 186, and Bowyer v. Creigh, 3 Rand. (Va.) 25, both cases in point.

In Franks v. Cravens et al., 6 W. Va. 185, a deed of trust to secure a debt had been given upon a tract of land on which was located a boiler, engine and other machinery, used in connection with a sawmill. These articles were removed to another tract of land, another deed of trust given on them to secure a debt of another party, and they were subsequently sold under the second trust deed, whereupon the cestui que trust under the first deed of trust filed his bill in equity against the purchaser to compel restoration of the property to himself or his trustee, on the ground that it was trust property and was bought with notice of the facts. The court held that, although the property may have been real estate at the time the first trust deed was given, it was converted into personalty, as between the creditor and third parties by its removal, and, because plaintiff had a complete remedy at law for its recovery, equity could give no relief.

Other authorities supporting the proposition that equity is without jurisdiction in the present case are the following: 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 176; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 424; Fussell v. Gregg, 113 U. S. 550, 5 Sup. Ct. 631, 28 L. Ed. 993; Young v. Porter, 3 Woods, 342, Fed. Cas. No. 18171; Cole v. Mette, 65 Ark. 503, 47 S. W. 407, 67 Am. St. Rep. 945; Galt v. Galloway, 4 Pet. 332, 7 L. Ed. 876; Bassett v. Brown, 100 Mass. 355; Claussen v. Lafrenz, 4 G. Greene (Iowa) 224; Morgan v. Palmer, 48 N. H. 336; Kimball v. Grafton Bank, 20 N. H. 347; Curtis et al. v. Blair, 26 Miss. 309, 59 Am. Dec. 257; Vick v. Percy, 15 Miss. (7 Smedes & M.) 256, 45 Am. Dec. 303; Hipp v. Babin, 19 How. 271, 15 L. Ed. 633.

Ballard v. Ballard, 25 W. Va. 470, Barrett v. McAllister, 33 W. Va. 738, 11 S. E. 220, and Hogg v. McGuffin, 67 W. Va. 456, 68 S. E. 41, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 491, are cited to support equity jurisdiction in the present case. But each of them was a suit to compel specific performance, a remedy peculiarly equitable. Two of them involved contracts for the sale of land, and the third, and last named, an option to purchase stock in a corporation, of peculiar value to plaintiff. Plaintiff had complied with the conditions, but defendant had sold the stock to an innocent purchaser for value, thereby putting it out of his power to comply with his contract. Compliance being impossible, the court there properly gave plaintiff a decree for the proceeds of the sale of the stock as an alternative, on his prayer for general relief, on the ground that Hogg's option to acquire the stock imposed on McGuffin the duty to retain it, so as to be able to comply with his contract in case Hogg should elect to take it within the life of his option. It was impressed with a trust by virtue of the contract. Moreover, McGuffin's insolvency was alleged and proven; therefore his legal remedy was not adequate. In all three of those cases the subject-matter of suit was an equitable claim or title, pure and simple, and the relief sought could be obtained only in a court of equity.

Wolf v. McGugin, 37 W. Va. 552, 16 S. E. 797, was a suit to avoid a preference which an insolvent debtor sought, by a sale of his property, to give to one of his creditors, who, together with another, had become the purchaser thereof, in violation of section 2, c. 74 (sec. 3830), Code. Jurisdiction in equity was sustained in Raleigh County Court v. Cottle, 81 W. Va. 469, 94 S. E. 948, on the ground of discovery, and accounting for public funds, involving settlements between Cottle and said court, in which different sets of sureties on his official bonds were liable for funds coming into his hands at different periods of time during his administration as sheriff.

I find no authority in the books anywhere, in those jurisdictions where the distinction has been preserved between courts of law and courts of chancery, as it was originally established by a long course of practice in England, for the proposition that, where one of two adverse claimants of the legal title to property, whether it be real or personal, sells it, the other claimant can invoke the aid of a court of equity to recover the proceeds. It is a principle too firmly established to require any citation of authorities that jurisdiction of a cause cannot be conferred by consent.

There is no better argument to show the lack of equity jurisdiction than the conclusion reached by the opinion itself. After holding that equity has jurisdiction, at the suit of the owner of property, to pursue the fund derived from a sale thereof, wrongfully made, it reaches the conclusion that plaintiff had no title to the property when it was sold. I do not deny the correctness of the conclusion as a legal proposition, but I do deny our jurisdiction to decide it in this case, and would simply affirm the decree, for the same reason the lower court sustained the demurrer to plaintiff's bill and dismissed his suit; that is, for want of jurisdiction in equity.

Affirmed.

(149 Ga. 471)

SAUSSY v. POWERS et al. (No. 1304.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BANKRUPTCY §302(1)—PETITION BY TRUSTEE TO SUBJECT CONTINGENT INTEREST IN LAND.

Mary A. Ronan devised all her realty to the executor nominated in her will, to be held upon the following terms: "To hold all my real estate intact for ten years, during which time the net income therefrom shall first be applied to the discharge of the mortgage thereon. After the said mortgage is discharged the income shall be equally divided between my three brothers, T. G. Ronan, W. P. Ronan, and J. T. Ronan. At the end of ten years, if the incumbrances on my property have been paid off, my said executor shall distribute the said real estate between my three brothers, share and share alike; the child of a deceased brother to stand in the place of its parents." Before the expiration of ten years the executor paid off the incumbrance, and thenceforward distributed the income among the brothers of the testatrix. During the period of such distribution the brothers pledged the income and all interest they had in the land for a loan made to them jointly. While circumstances were as indicated, a trustee in bankruptcy for W. P. Ronan brought an equitable petition against the executor, Ronan, and others, and alleged all that is stated above, and prayed that title to an undivided one-third interest in the land be decreed to be in him as trustee for the estate of W. P. Ronan, the bankrupt. To this petition the executor interposed a general demurrer, which was sustained, and the plaintiff excepted. Held:

The petition seeks to recover an undivided one-third interest in the land, on the ground that under the terms of the will such interest had vested in W. P. Ronan, and, subject to certain incumbrances placed thereon by him, was so vested at the time Ronan was adjudicated a bankrupt, and by operation of law the title so held by Ronan devolved upon plaintiff. It does not seek to recover the income that the executor might be required to pay W. P. Ronan under the provisions of the will.

2. WILLS §630(2)—CONTINGENT INTEREST IN LAND FAILS WHERE CONTINGENCY NEVER HAPPENS.

Under a proper construction of the will, his right to the land was contingent upon the incumbrances being removed and W. P. Ronan being in life at the expiration of ten years from the death of the testatrix. As the latter contingency had not happened, the estate was not vested in W. P. Ronan; and the judge did not err in sustaining the demurrer. See Civil Code, § 4117.

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; P. W. Meldrim, Judge.

Suit by F. T. Saussey, trustee in bankruptcy of W. P. Ronan, against J. J. Powers, executor of Mary A. Ronan, deceased, and others. General demurrer to petition sustained, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

W. K. Miller, of Augusta, and F. T. Saussey, of Savannah, for plaintiff in error.

Osborne, Lawrence & Abrahams, of Savannah, for defendants in error.

ATKINSON, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 432)

BRANCH et al. v. SCHLITTLER. (No. 1470.)
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

APPEAL AND ERROR §628(2)—WRIT OF ERROR DISMISSED FOR FAILURE TO FILE BILL OF EXCEPTIONS IN DUE TIME.

A bill of exceptions assigning error upon a final judgment was filed in the office of the clerk of the superior court by delivering it to a deputy clerk, who made thereon an entry of filing on February 22, 1918. It was not filed in the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court until June 4, 1919. It was then docketed with the cases of the March term, 1919. The clerk of the superior court, in transmitting the record, certified that it had not been sent up in time, because the bill of exceptions, when filed in his office by his deputy, was mislaid by the latter, the clerk himself at the time being engaged "with the local exemption board." The writ of error was certified by the presiding judge on February 8, 1918, and was made returnable "to the next term of the Supreme Court." If the writ had been transmitted within the time prescribed by law it would have been returned to the March term, 1918, of the Supreme Court. It was not filed in the Supreme Court in time for the March term, 1918, or the succeeding October term, 1918. Held, that the motion to dismiss the writ of error must be sustained. Civil Code 1910, §§ 6167, 6185; Earnhart v. Atlanta, etc., R. Co., 133 Ga. 59, 65 S. E. 138.

Error from Superior Court, Appling County; J. P. Highsmith, Judge.

Action between W. J. Branch and others and Kizzie Schlittler, administratrix. Judgment for the latter, and the former bring error. Writ of error dismissed.

W. W. Bennett, of Baxley, for plaintiffs in error.

Padgett & Watson, of Baxley, for defendant in error.

GEORGE, J. Writ of error dismissed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 472)

SHARPE v. STATE. (No. 1320.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §824(4)—FAILURE TO CHARGE ON ALIBI WITHOUT REQUEST ERROR.

There was evidence submitted by the accused on the trial, which, if credible, was sufficient to sustain his defense of alibi, and the court erred in failing, without request, to instruct the jury on the law of that subject.

2. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The other grounds of the motion for a new trial do not require a reversal.

Beck, P. J., and George, J., dissenting.

Error from Superior Court, Thomas County; W. E. Thomas, Judge.

Proceeding by the State against Jack Sharpe. From the judgment, and the denial of his motion for a new trial Sharpe brings error. Reversed.

B. B. Earle and Leb Dekle, both of Thomasville, for plaintiff in error.

C. E. Hay, Sol. Gen., of Thomasville, Clifford Walker, Atty. Gen., and M. C. Bennet, of Atlanta, for the State.

HILL, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except

BECK, P. J., and GEORGE, J. (dissenting). Alibi as a defense involves the impossibility of the defendant having been at the scene of the crime at the time of its commission, and the range of the evidence in this case is not such as to involve that defense, or to require a charge thereon.

(149 Ga. 480)

ELMORE v. ELMORE. (No. 1405.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

TEMPORARY ALIMONY AND COUNSEL FEES—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Under the evidence in the record it does not appear that the court abused his discretion in awarding the temporary alimony and counsel fees allowed in the present case.

Error from Superior Court, Evans County; W. W. Sheppard, Judge.

Action between W. F. Elmore and Florence Elmore. From an award of temporary alimony and counsel fees, W. F. Elmore brings error. Affirmed.

Chas. G. Edwards, of Savannah, and P. M. Anderson and E. C. Elmore, both of Claxton, for plaintiff in error.

Geo. S. Cargill and Edwin A. Cohen, both of Savannah, for defendant in error.

GEORGE, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 473)

WHEELER v. STATE. (No. 1472.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §942(2)—WITNESS' CONFESSION OF FALSE TESTIMONY GROUND FOR NEW TRIAL.

"Evidence that one of the state's witnesses since the trial has made declarations, even though under oath, that his testimony given upon the trial was false, is not cause for a new trial." Johnson v. State, 149 Ga. 214, 99 S. E. 609, and authorities cited. More especially is this true where the motion for new trial is made on extraordinary grounds, as in the present case.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §913(1)—EXTRAORDINARY MOTIONS FOR NEW TRIAL OR CASES.

"The extraordinary motions or cases contemplated by the statute are such as do not ordinarily occur in the transaction of human affairs, as when a man has been convicted of murder, and it afterwards appears that the supposed deceased is still alive, or where one is convicted on the testimony of a witness who is subsequently found guilty of perjury in giving that testimony, or where there has been some providential cause, and cases of like character." Cox v. Hillier, 65 Ga. 57; Harris v. Roan, 119 Ga. 379, 46 S. E. 433.

Error from Superior Court, Wilkes County; B. F. Walker, Judge.

Proceeding between the State and Watson Wheeler. From the judgment, and the denial of his motion for new trial, Wheeler brings error. Affirmed.

See, also, 148 Ga. 508, 97 S. E. 408.

Hugh E. Combs and Colley & Colley, all of Washington, Ga., for plaintiff in error.

R. C. Norman, Sol. Gen., of Washington, Ga., Clifford Walker, Atty. Gen., and M. C. Bennet, of Atlanta, for the State.

GILBERT, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 434)

EPPS v. STATE. (No. 1476.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. HOMICIDE §228(5) — EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO ESTABLISH CORPUS DELICTI.

The accused was tried on an indictment charging her with the murder of her four year old child. The evidence showed that the accused was unmarried and was the mother of the child; that the child was, with the consent of the accused, kept and cared for from its birth by another woman, who returned the child to the mother with the explanation that on account of failing health she was unable to care for and rear the child; that the accused did not want to receive the child, and complained that it was sick. It was deformed and helpless. It further appeared that the accused was expecting to be married. The child disappeared. Some time thereafter bones, apparently those of a child, were discovered 50 or 75 yards from the home of accused, by a neighbor, who reported the fact and who together with others proceeded upon an investigation. Upon inquiry the accused made contradictory statements. She first stated that her father had taken the child away on the same day that it was returned to her. Several witnesses swore that she finally admitted the bones which had been discovered were those of her child, and explained that she had left it for a few moments to go into another part of her house, and on returning found it dead; that she was frightened and had no money or friends; that it was at night, and she buried the child with her own hands in a branch near by. It appeared that the body had been exhumed by dogs or vultures. The accused made a statement to the jury, in which she admitted substantially all of the above-stated facts. Neither to the witnesses nor in her statement did the defendant admit killing the child. Upon the contrary, she explained that the child had died while she was in another room in the house. Upon being found guilty, with recommendation for a sentence of life imprisonment.

ment, she made a motion for a new trial based upon the general grounds and certain amended grounds, including newly discovered evidence. Held:

The evidence was insufficient to authorize the verdict. It failed to establish the corpus delicti by that degree of proof required. Lee v. State, 76 Ga. 498.

2. ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

The other assignments of error are not of such character as require a ruling, where the judgment refusing a new trial is reversed on the ground that the evidence did not authorize the verdict, and when the issues will not likely arise on another trial.

Error from Superior Court, Decatur County; W. M. Harrell, Judge.

Eula Epps, alias Nun, alias Williams, was convicted of homicide. Her motion for new trial was denied, and she brings error. Reversed.

J. C. Hale, of Bainbridge, for plaintiff in error.

R. C. Bell, Sol. Gen., of Cairo, F. A. Hooper & Son, of Atlanta, Clifford Walker, Atty. Gen., and M. C. Bennet, of Atlanta, for the State.

GILBERT, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 482)

LANDERS v. STATE. (No. 1471.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §785(12) — INSTRUCTION ON IMPEACHMENT NOT ERRONEOUS.

The only error alleged to have been committed upon the trial is in the following instruction to the jury: "When a witness has been successfully impeached by any of the legal methods, that is, where his unworthiness of credit is absolutely established in the minds of the jury, he ought not to be believed, and it is the duty of the jury to disregard his entire testimony, unless it is corroborated, in which case you may believe the witness; it being, as a matter of course, always for the jury to determine whether a witness has been in fact so impeached." This instruction was not erroneous. Powell v. State, 101 Ga. 9, 29 S. E. 309 (5), 65 Am. St. Rep. 277; Hamilton v. State, 143 Ga. 265, 84 S. E. 583 (4).

2. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence was sufficient to authorize the verdict, and there was no error in overruling the motion for new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Jackson County; A. J. Cobb, Judge.

Proceeding between the State and Hollis Landers. From the judgment, Landers brings error. Affirmed.

Wolver M. Smith and Thomas & Thomas, all of Athens, for plaintiff in error.

W. O. Dean, Sol. Gen., of Monroe, Clifford Walker, Atty. Gen., M. C. Bennet, of Atlanta, P. Cooley, of Jefferson, and R. L. J. Smith, of Commerce, for the State.

FISH, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 479)

HASTEY v. ROBERTS. (No. 1396.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MORTGAGES §58 — INCOMPETENCY OF STOCKHOLDER OR OFFICER OF CORPORATION TO TAKE ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

A stockholder or officer, though incompetent to take an acknowledgment of a mortgage on realty as a notary, because he is a stockholder or officer of the mortgagee corporation, is not incompetent as a nonofficial witness to the signature of the mortgage. Peagler v. Davis, 143 Ga. 11, 84 S. E. 59, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 282.

2. BILLS AND NOTES §191—EVIDENCE §370(5)—PROOF OF AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY TO SIGN MORTGAGE PREREQUISITE TO ITS ADMISSION.

Where a mortgage on realty was signed: "Trustees North Ga. Col. School [Seal]. H. A. Burge, Cor. Sect. [Seal]"—it was erroneous to admit the same in evidence on the trial of a claim to the property, over timely objection that "there was no evidence shown where H. A. Burge had any authority to sign any mortgage;" the evidence failing to disclose any such authority. Civ. Code 1910, § 3570; Glisson v. Weil, 117 Ga. 842, 45 S. E. 221. It was not shown that "Trustees North Ga. Col. School" was incorporated, nor does its name imply such.

(a) Indorsed on the note and mortgage were several names, the last of which was, "H. A. Burge, with power of attorney." The power of attorney is not included in the record. At most this could only indicate an ordinary individual indorsement.

Error from Superior Court, Cherokee County; N. A. Morris, Judge.

Proceedings on levy of mortgage fi. fa. by A. P. Roberts, transferee after foreclosure with claim by J. H. Haste, executor of Mary E. Watkins, deceased. Judgment for the transferee, and the claimant brings error. Reversed.

E. W. Coleman, of Canton, for plaintiff in error.

John S. Wood, of Canton, and Geo. D. Anderson, of Marietta, for defendant in error.

GILBERT, J. A. P. Roberts, transferee, foreclosed a mortgage on realty. The mortgage fi. fa. was levied on land described in the mortgage, whereupon J. H. Hastey, executor of the estate of Mary E. Watkins, interposed a claim based on a sheriff's deed purporting to convey the land in dispute to Mary E. Watkins. The sheriff's sale was based on a common-law judgment obtained by Mary E. Watkins against certain named individuals. The claimant also introduced a deed from P. H. Lyons to "Board of North Georgia High School as follows" (naming the same persons against whom Mary E. Watkins had obtained judgment). At the sheriff's sale the administrator of Mrs. Watkins bought in the property. It was admitted that Roberts was present at this sale and publicly announced that he had a mortgage on the land. The common-law judgment was obtained subsequently to the date of the mortgage. On the trial of the case the judge, by agreement, passed upon the case without the intervention of a jury, and rendered a judgment finding the property subject to the mortgage fi. fa. The claimant made a motion for new trial, based on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence and contrary to law, and because the court erred in admitting the original note and mortgage in evidence. The only objection to the admission of same was on the ground that "there was no evidence shown where H. A. Burge had any authority to sign any mortgage."

Judgment reversed.

All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 496)

WOMACK v. WOMACK. (No. 1460.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 16, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

APPEAL AND ERROR  $\S$ 714(6)—NEW TRIAL  $\S$ 154—DISMISSAL OF MOTION FOR FAILURE TO FILE BRIEF OF EVIDENCE ERROR.

Where a motion for new trial was duly filed on June 12, 1917, and at the time of filing the motion a brief of evidence was filed, under an order by the judge providing "that this brief of evidence be filed subject to approval on trial of motion for new trial," it was erroneous to dismiss the motion for new trial when the same came on to be heard on March 15, 1919, "for failure to furnish a brief of the evidence." Civil Code 1910,  $\S$  6089.

(a) The brief of evidence having been filed as indicated above, the case does not fall within the principle of those cases where no brief was filed, but an order was taken to file a brief of evidence within a given time.

(b) The judgment rendered by the court was not affected by the following explanatory note of the judge, attached to the bill of exceptions: "What was presented as a brief of the evidence has never been approved by the court. Messrs. James & Bedgood did not try the case, and Mrs. Womack's attorney who did try it contended that the brief was in fact no proper presentation of what was the evidence. The matter was delayed and neglected by both sides; and while the order stated it was dismissed for failure to file a brief of the evidence, I really was worn out by the delay, and dismissed it for want of attention. The motion was filed June 12, 1917, and dismissed March 15, 1919."

Hill and Gilbert, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fulton County; W. D. Ellis, Judge.

Action between F. H. Womack and Lula Womack. Judgment for the latter, motion for a new trial dismissed, and the former brings error. Reversed.

James & Bedgood, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

Neufville & Neufville, of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

PER CURIAM. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except

HILL and GILBERT, JJ. (dissenting). Where a motion for new trial and a purported brief of evidence was filed as stated in the foregoing headnote, and the motion was not heard at the date named for the hearing, but went over from term to term for nearly two years, and the brief of evidence was never approved by the judge, it not appearing that any effort was made by the movant to secure an approval, and the judge dismissed the motion for new trial "for failure to furnish a brief of the evidence," the judgment dismissing the motion should not be reversed. The judgment passed by the court was tantamount to a dismissal on the ground that the brief presented was not considered correct by the court, and that the delay rendered it impossible for the judge to supply the facts from his own memory. Filing alone of a brief of evidence is not sufficient; the approval of the court is indispensable. Pease v. Pease, 66 Ga. 277; Usry v. Phillips, 68 Ga. 815; Milner v. Burrus, 85 Ga. 642, 11 S. E. 1029.

$\S$ —For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

(149 Ga. 483)

RUSHING et al. v. DE LOACH, Sheriff, et al.
(No. 1473.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1919.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. APPEAL AND ERROR §523(2)—AFFIDAVITS AT TRIAL MUST BE BROUGHT UP BY BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

Where exception is taken to a refusal to grant an interlocutory injunction, affidavits used on the hearing of the application, in order to be considered by this court, must be brought up in the bill of exceptions, or attached thereto as exhibits and duly identified by the presiding judge, or be included in a brief of evidence approved and made a part of the record. Roberts v. Cairo, 133 Ga. 642, 66 S. E. 938.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR §644(2)—EVIDENCE IN BILL OF EXCEPTIONS, NOT APPROVED OF, NOT CONSIDERED.

The act of 1911 (Acts 1911, p. 149) applies where a motion for new trial is heard in the court below and the respondent therein fails to object to the brief of evidence for want of approval and permits the hearing to proceed without such approval. The act does not apply to this case. Springer v. Owen, 145 Ga. 730, 89 S. E. 780 (2).

3. APPEAL AND ERROR §613(1), 635(3)—EVIDENCE NOT REVIEWABLE WHERE ALL WAS NOT BEFORE COURT.

A bill of exceptions stated that certain affidavits were introduced in evidence by the plaintiff and certain other affidavits were introduced in evidence by the defendant, naming the affiants, and that the affidavits were attached to the bill of exceptions as exhibits, marked with certain letters of the alphabet. After the certificate of the presiding judge appeared copies of the affidavits introduced by the plaintiff, duly identified by the signature of the judge, and also following his certificate appeared what purported to be copies of the affidavits introduced by the defendant; but they were not identified by the signature of the judge. A motion to dismiss the writ of error upon the ground indicated was filed by the defendant in error. Held, the bill of exceptions shows on its face that all the evidence material to a consideration of the errors complained of is not lawfully before this court, in such manner that it can be considered; and, there being no assignment of error which can be determined without it (treating the assignment of error in the bill of exceptions as sufficient in form), the judgment must be affirmed. Roberts v. Cairo, supra; Jones v. Wadley, 145 Ga. 569, 89 S. E. 681; Springer v. Owen, supra.

Error from Superior Court, Bulloch County; R. N. Hardeman, Judge.

Action between J. B. Rushing and others, and W. H. De Loach, Sheriff, and others. Judgment for the latter, and the former bring error. Affirmed.

Fred T. Lanier, of Statesboro, for plaintiffs in error.

Deal & Renfro, of Statesboro, for defendants in error.

GEORGE, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 467)

SPOONER v. SPOONER. (No. 1382.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1919.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. DIVORCE §227(2)—ALLOWANCE OF COUNSEL FEES NOT EXCESSIVE.

Under the evidence in the record, it does not appear that the court abused his discretion in awarding the counsel fees allowed in the present case.

*(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)2. DIVORCE §211—TEMPORARY ALIMONY INCLUDING COUNSEL FEES IN DISCRETION OF COURT.

An allowance, on wife's application, of temporary alimony, including counsel fees, pending a suit for permanent alimony, is not a matter of arbitrary right, in view of Civ. Code 1910, § 2976, but is to be determined by use of a sound discretion under the facts in the case, including cause of the separation and circumstances of parties.

3. DIVORCE §217 — JUDGMENT ALLOWING ALIMONY AND COUNSEL FEES WITHIN CONTROL OF COURT.

A judgment allowing temporary alimony, including expenses of litigation, is subject to the supervisory power of the trial court.

Error from Superior Court, Decatur County; W. M. Harrell, Judge.

Suit by Mrs. M. M. Spooner against B. S. Spooner, her husband, for permanent alimony. From the allowance of counsel fees, on a grant of temporary alimony, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

W. I. Geer, of Colquitt, and Hartsfield & Conger, of Bainbridge, for plaintiff in error.

M. E. O'Neal and J. R. Wilson, both of Bainbridge, for defendant in error.

GEORGE, J. Mrs. M. M. Spooner filed suit for permanent alimony against B. S. Spooner, her husband. Upon an application for the allowance of temporary alimony, including counsel fees, pending the suit for permanent alimony, the court awarded Mrs. Spooner a stated sum per month for temporary alimony, and the sum of $3,500 for counsel fees. To this judgment the defendant excepted; and the Supreme Court, at the October term, 1918, affirmed the judgment allowing the plaintiff temporary alimony, but on the question of attorney's fees ruled as follows:

"Under all the circumstances of the case the allowance of $3,500 as attorneys' fees was an abuse of discretion." Spooner v. Spooner, 148 Ga. 612, 97 S. E. 670.

[1] Subsequently the plaintiff renewed her application for the allowance of counsel fees; and the court, after hearing evidence, awarded the sum of $3,000 for counsel fees, "$1,500 of said amount to be paid instantler, and the remainder to be paid at the termination of the litigation, and to be subject to modification should the exigencies of the case so demand." The defendant again excepted; and the sole question for decision is whether the court abused its discretion in allowing counsel fees in the sum of $3,000.

It is necessary to review briefly the facts and issues involved. The plaintiff and the defendant intermarried in January, 1877. The plaintiff is more than 60 years old. They lived together as man and wife until December, 1917. At the time of the marriage the plaintiff owned 500 acres of land, and certain personal property. The defendant owned 200 acres of land, for which he owed a large part of the purchase money, and also some personal property. A considerable fortune was accumulated by the defendant. He admits his net worth to be more than $50,000, while the undisputed evidence on behalf of the plaintiff is to the effect that he is worth at least $100,000. The plaintiff alleged the value of his holdings to be not less than $200,000. The plaintiff aided and assisted the defendant in the accumulation of this estate, which now stands in the name of the defendant; the plaintiff having no separate estate of her own. She not only attended to the household duties, but performed actual manual labor during the greater part of her married life. The defendant admits that the plaintiff, on the whole, has been a dutiful and affectionate wife. He attributes the separation and the filing of the suit for alimony to alleged mental infirmity of plaintiff. On the contrary, the plaintiff charges the defendant with extreme and repeated acts of cruelty. It appears that the plaintiff, on account of her advanced age and physical infirmities, was unable to visit the office of counsel, and that counsel had to go in person to the present home of the plaintiff (in a neighboring town) to prepare the suit for trial. During the greater portion of a week counsel for the plaintiff were engaged in the preparation of the case for trial. The first hearing consumed more than three days. The greater portion of a week was also consumed by counsel in the prosecution of the case in the Supreme Court. The case has been contested at every stage; and the defendant is a man of wealth, and of commercial and social influence. On the present hearing, counsel for the plaintiff testified in detail to the services already rendered by them, and outlined the services which it would become necessary for them to perform in the further prosecution of the case. A considerable item of cost had already been incurred by counsel, for which they have not been reimbursed. The cost of attending the session of the Supreme Court alone amounted to approximately $200. In the opinion of both the attorneys of record for the plaintiff in error their services were reasonably worth $7,500. In addition, the testimony of six disinterested attorneys at law, acquainted with the parties to the litigation and the issues involved, was taken. Among the attorneys testifying was a former judge of the superior courts of this state. In the opinion of some of these witnesses the fair and reasonable value of the legal services rendered and to be rendered by counsel for the plaintiff is $5,000. One of the witnesses testified that $4,500 would be a reasonable fee, all the facts and circumstances of the case considered, but the majority of them testified that a fee of $7,500 would be reasonable and just. There is in the record no direct evidence to the contrary.

Section 2976 of the Civil Code authorizes the wife, pending a suit for permanent alimony, to "apply to the presiding judge, by petition, for an order granting to her temporary alimony pending the cause; and after hearing both parties, and evidence as to all the circumstances of the parties and as to the fact of marriage, the court shall grant an order allowing such temporary alimony, including expenses of litigation, as the condition of the husband and the facts of the case may justify."

[2] An allowance on the application of the wife of temporary alimony, including counsel fees, pending a suit for permanent alimony, is not a matter of arbitrary right, under the law of this state. Whether an allowance shall be made for temporary alimony, or counsel fees, is to be determined by the use of a sound discretion under the facts of the case, taking into consideration the cause or causes of the separation, and the circumstances of the parties. Parks v. Parks, 126 Ga. 437, 55 S. E. 176; Keefer v. Keefer, 140 Ga. 18, 22, 78 S. E. 462, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 527. On the hearing for temporary alimony and counsel fees the judge, upon an examination into the cause of the separation and the circumstances of the parties, may in his sound discretion allow or deny both alimony and counsel fees, or may allow one and disallow the other. The allowance of temporary alimony has been made in this case, and the judgment allowing the same is not involved in the present appeal. Counsel fees have also been allowed; and the power of the court, under the facts in the record, to allow a reasonable sum for counsel fees, is not seriously questioned. The amount actually fixed by the court is said to be excessive, and to show an abuse of discretion. Former cases reviewed by this court, on the question of the amount of counsel fees allowed, can be of little value in determining the question now presented. It cannot be said that the judge did not fully consider the cause of the separation and the circumstances of the parties. In view of the grave issues involved, the character of the suit, the character and standing of the litigants, it cannot be said as a matter of law that the allowance of $3,000 as attorney's fees was such a flagrant abuse of discretion as to justify this court in again interfering with the judgment.

[3] It is to be noted that only $1,500 of the amount awarded as attorney's fees was to be paid instant and in all events. The remaining $1,500 was to be paid, under the order of the court, "at the termination of the litigation," the court reserving the power to modify the order fixing the fee "should the exigencies of the case so demand." Under our decisions, the power of the court over the judgment allowing temporary alimony, including expenses of litigation, was perhaps needlessly reserved. Such a judgment is subject to the supervisory power of the court. Osborne v. Osborne, 146 Ga. 344, 91 S. E. 61.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

(24 Ga. App. 244)

BATEMAN v. SMALL & THARPE.
(No. 10307.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CONTRACTS ¶83(2)—LIABILITY NOT AVOIDED BY FAILURE TO READ CONTRACT BEFORE SIGNING IT.

"One able to read, who executed a written contract without reading it, cannot avoid liability thereon because he signed without knowing the contents of the contract, when his so doing was not induced by any action or representation amounting to fraud on the part of the person with whom he was dealing."

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

2. PLEADING ¶84(4)—ADMISSION AND NOT DENIAL CONTROLS WHERE PLEA CONTAINS BOTH.

Pleadings are construed most strongly against the pleader, and where a plea contains both an admission and a denial the admission and not the denial must prevail.

3. COSTS ¶260(4)—DAMAGES AWARDED ON APPEAL FOR DELAY ONLY.

Where the questions raised by bill of exceptions in the case have been so often decided both by Supreme Court and Court of Appeals adversely to position of plaintiff in error, the damages allowed by Civ. Code 1910, § 6213, for an appeal for delay only will be awarded to defendant in error.

Error from City Court of Houston County; A. C. Riley, Judge.

Suit by Small & Tharpe against C. L. Bateman. Demurrer generally and specially to amended plea sustained, and defendant brings error. Affirmed with damages.

Feagin & Hancock, of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

Hardeman, Jones, Park & Johnston, of Macon, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. 1. Small & Tharpe sued Bateman for the balance due on a promissory note given for the purchase price of two mules, and containing, among other provisions, the following:

"And the subscriber hereby agrees to pay the within obligation although the property should die or become damaged or destroyed, whether by accident or otherwise. * * * It is further understood and agreed that said Small & Tharpe do not guarantee the health, soundness, working qualities * * * of the within described property, and it is further understood and agreed that should said live stock herein described be not suited to the purposes for which bought, then the undersigned does hereby agree that — will within ten days from the above date return the same to said Small & Tharpe at their place of business in Macon, Ga., in the same physical condition as when purchased, who hereby agree to accept the same and cancel this indebtedness, and upon failure of the undersigned to return the property herein purchased and described within ten days from above date, then the said undersigned waives any claim for damages or failure of consideration as against this contract and likewise any defect in any of said property."

Defendant filed pleas which were stricken upon motion. The only portion of the pleas actually discussed in the brief of plaintiff in error is the following from the original plea:

"The plaintiffs presented to defendant for his signature the note prepared by them on a blank form which they carried in their pocket, telling defendant they had fixed the note as agreed, and for him to sign. Defendant relied on the plaintiffs, had full confidence in their statements, and did not read the note he signed, as it was in very fine print and long, and defendant's eyesight was impaired, rendering it very difficult for him to read the fine printing in which the note was."

The plea was amended as follows:

"That the note and contract signed by this defendant and upon which said suit is based was in very fine print; that by reason of his defectual [defective?] and impaired eyesight this defendant did not and could not read same, all of which was well known to the plaintiff; that the said written contract is different from the oral agreement and representation made to him by said plaintiffs, and this defendant did rely upon said plaintiff to make the said contract signed by him to contain the contract as made between said plaintiff at the time said contract was made and the writing upon which this suit is based was signed by defendant, and said written contract was signed by defendant believing that same did contain the oral contract as made between the parties as it was represented to him by said plaintiffs; that he did not read said writing before signing same for the reasons above set forth, but did rely upon the representations made to him by plaintiffs that said writing did set up and contain the contract as made between plaintiff and defendant."

Plaintiff demurred generally and specially. The demurrer was properly sustained.

[1, 2] It will be noted that in the original plea the defendant admitted his ability to read the note, though he said he could do it with difficulty. In the amendment he asserts that by reason of his defective eyesight he could not read the note. Pleadings are construed most strongly against the pleader, and where a plea contains both an admission and a denial, the admission and not the denial must prevail. McNatt v. Citizens' & Southern Bank, 20 Ga. App. 759, 93 S. E. 271; City of Moultrie v. Schofields Sons Co., 6 Ga. App. 464, 65 S. E. 315(1). See, also, Southern Ry. Co. v. Hobbs, 121 Ga. 428, 49 S. E. 294(1). In this connection attention is directed to the following quotation from the opinion in Hanes v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 20 Ga. App. 180, 92 S. E. 896:

"The additional statement that the defendant did not have his spectacles with him, and therefore could not read at the time the notes were signed, was not sufficient, under the authorities cited in the other case, to alter the rule."

There is nothing in the record to show that the defendant made any effort to read the note, and found that he could not do so, or that at the time that he signed it there existed an emergency which would excuse his failure to read, or that his failure to read was brought about by any "misleading artifice or device perpetrated by the opposite party amounting to actual fraud such as would reasonably prevent him from reading it." On the contrary, it clearly appears that he signed the note on presentation, without apprising himself of its contents otherwise than by accepting statements with reference thereto made by the representative of the opposite party, and between whom and the defendant there existed no confidential or fiduciary relation. See Twyman v. Avera Loan & Investment Co., 23 Ga. App. 136, 98 S. E. 239, and cases cited. "Where one who can read signs a contract without apprising himself of its contents, otherwise than by accepting representations made by the opposite party, with whom there exists no fiduciary or confidential relation, he cannot defend an action based on it, on the ground that it does not contain the contract actually made; unless it should appear that at the time he signed it some such emergency existed as would excuse his failure to read it, or that his failure to read it was brought about by some misleading artifice or device perpetrated by the opposite party, amounting to actual fraud such as would reasonably prevent him from reading it." Tinsley v. Gullet Gin Co., 21 Ga. App. 512, 94 S. E. 892(2). See, also, cases cited in the opinion, 21 Ga. App. 516, 94 S. E. 894. "One able to read, who executed a written contract without reading it, cannot avoid liability thereon because he signed without knowing the contents of the contract, when his so doing was not induced by any action or representation amounting to fraud on the part of the person with whom he was dealing." Barnes et al. v. Slaton Drug Co., 21 Ga. App. 580, 94 S. E. 896. See, also, cases cited in the opinion, 21 Ga. App. 582, 94 S. E. 897. "If one cannot read a contract which he is about to execute, it is as much his duty to procure some reliable person to read and explain it to him before he signs it as it would be to read it himself if he were able to do so, and his failure to obtain a reading and an explanation of it is such gross negligence as will estop him from repudiating it on the ground that he was ignorant of its contents." Chicago, etc., Ry. Co. v. Belliwith, 83 Fed. 437, 28 C. C. A. 358(1). Where suit was brought for a sum alleged to be due upon a plain and unambiguous contract in writing, and the only evidence submitted by the defendant was to the effect that he could "just read and write a little bit," and did not read the contract, that the nature of the written contract was misrepresented to him and he thought that he was signing an entirely different contract from the one he did sign, but nothing was done to prevent him from reading it or having it read to him, it is not error for the trial judge to direct a verdict against him for the amount appearing to be due under the contract. Sloan v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 20 Ga. App. 123, 92 S. E. 893, and cases cited; Miller v. Walker, 23 Ga. App. 273, 97 S. E. 869. The party signing this note may have been very indiscreet, but for this alone the law will not relieve him. "Folly is not always fraud." "A party who can read must read, or show legal excuse for not doing so. Fraud which would relieve a party who can read must be fraud which prevents him from reading." Stoddard Manufacturing Co. v. Adams, 122 Ga. 802, 50 S. E. 915. The principle announced in the above cases shows that the plea in this case was properly stricken.

[3] 2. The defendant in error requested that we award the statutory damages of 10 per cent. against the plaintiff in error for bringing this case to this court for the purpose of delay only. As was held in the case of Miller v. Walker, supra:

"The questions raised by the bill of exceptions in this case having been so often decided, both by the Supreme Court and this court, adversely to the position of the plaintiff in error, the statutory damages (Civil Code of 1910, § 6213) are awarded the defendant in error."

Judgment affirmed, with damages.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 261)

LOVELL et ux. v. FRANKUM. (No. 10542.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

NEW TRIAL ⇨161(1)—REFUSAL PROPER ON DISMISSAL OF ONE DEFENDANT UNDER MANDATE IN APPEAL.

Frankum sued Ellis Lovell and Mrs. Ellis Lovell. A trial of the case resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff, and the case was taken to the Supreme Court on exceptions to the refusal to grant a new trial. It is reported in 145 Ga. 106, 88 S. E. 569. The first head-note of the decision of that court is as follows: "The testimony did not authorize an instruction on the theory that the contract for breach of which the suit was brought was executed by both defendants;" and in the opinion on page 108 of 145 Ga., on page 570 of 88 S. E., the court said: "We have carefully examined the evidence, and nowhere does it appear that the wife joined with the husband in making the contract with the plaintiff, or that he or any one else was authorized as her agent to make such a contract." The judgment was reversed and a new trial ensued. Upon the second trial the judge charged the jury as follows: "This suit was brought by Mr. Frankum against the defendants, Mr. Lovell and his wife. You can't find a verdict against her. She is eliminated from the case. It is just a matter of whether Mrs. Lovell—I mean Mr. Lovell—is liable for the debt." But in charging the jury as to the form of the verdict, the judge told them that if the plaintiff was entitled to recover, the form of the verdict would be, "We, the jury, find for the plaintiff so many dollars principal and so many dollars interest, with cost of suit." The verdict of the jury was as follows: "We, the jury, find for the plaintiff, principal $100, interest for five years and two months $36.15, and cost of suit." The defendants moved for a new trial, and in the motion it was alleged that the judge erred in instructing the jury on the form of the verdict, and in not expressly limiting the finding to a verdict against Ellis Lovell. On the hearing of the motion the judge passed the following order: "The within motion, as amended, coming on to be heard this day by consent, it appearing that the court, in instructing the jury, expressly eliminated a recovery against Mrs. L. C. Lovell, counsel for plaintiff only signed up a judgment against Ellis Lovell, but, the verdict being general, and Mrs. Lovell appearing in the pleading as one of the defendants, so, to make the pleading comply with the direction of the court, it is ordered and adjudged that if the plaintiff will in five days from this hearing dismiss the name Mrs. L. C. Lovell as a party defendant, the motion is overruled, and a new trial be refused; unless this is done, a new trial is granted and the verdict of the jury set aside. Before signing this order plaintiff dismissed the case against Mrs. L. C. Lovell, so a new trial is refused."

Under the decision of the Supreme Court in this case, which is referred to above, and in the light of the charge of the court, and under this order, Mrs. Lovell is eliminated from the case, and as the evidence is ample to support a verdict against Ellis Lovell, the judgment refusing a new trial is affirmed.

Error from Superior Court, Habersham County; J. B. Jones, Judge.

Action by J. E. J. Frankum against Ellis Lovell and wife. Judgment for plaintiff on a general verdict, motion for new trial denied, and defendants bring error. Judgment refusing a new trial affirmed.

J. C. Edwards & Sons, of Clarkesville, for plaintiffs in error.

McMillan & Erwin, of Clarkesville, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 265)

TOWNS v. STATE. (No. 10618.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PARENT AND CHILD ⇨17(6)—EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE ON CHARGE OF ABANDONMENT OF MINOR CHILD.

On the trial of one for the abandonment of his minor child, it is not error to exclude testimony offered by the defendant to the effect that his wife, pregnant with her unborn child, abandoned him, despite his entreaties for her to stay and live with him. Moore v. State, 1 Ga. App. 502, 57 S. E. 1016; Parrish v. State, 10 Ga. App. 836, 74 S. E. 445.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⇨150—PROSECUTION FOR ABANDONMENT OF CHILD NOT BARRED AFTER TWO YEARS.

Where the absent father has for two years immediately preceding the finding of the accusation against him failed and refused to provide for his dependent child, the time when the original separation took place is entirely im-material. The continuing dependency of the child vitalizes the offense, and the fact that the absence, and even the dependency, began more than two years prior to the accusation, affords no ground for the interposition of the statute of limitations. Phelps v. State, 10 Ga. App. 41, 72 S. E. 524; Campbell v. State, 20 Ga. App. 190, 92 S. E. 851.

3. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence authorized the conviction of the accused, and the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from City Court of Floyd County; W. J. Nunnally, Judge.

Lee Towns was convicted of the abandonment of his minor child, his motion for new trial was overruled, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Harris & Harris, of Rome, for plaintiff in error.

J. F. Kelly, Sol., and W. B. Mebane, both of Rome, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 284)

TOMPKINS v. STATE. (No. 10615.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Oct. 10, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MOTIONS TO DISMISS BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

There is no merit in either of the two motions to dismiss the bill of exceptions.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §614(1)—FURTHER CONTINUANCE FOR ABSENCE OF COUNSEL PROPERLY DENIED.

In the motion for a new trial it is alleged that the court erred in refusing to continue the case on account of the absence of leading counsel for the defendant. To the motion for a new trial the trial judge attached the following note: "This case had been continued several times at the instance of defendant's side. At the November term, 1918, the defendant and one of his counsel, Judge Rawlings, were absent, and the bond of defendant was forfeited. On February 10, 1919, about 10 o'clock a. m., the time this case was set for trial, the same was called, and the motion for continuance made on account of the absence of Judge Rawlings. The same was then set for 1:30 o'clock, to give defendant an opportunity to communicate with and have Judge Rawlings present. At the time set no showing was made that any effort had been made by defendant to procure the presence of Judge Rawlings, and the case proceeded to trial." When considered in the light of the above qualifying note, and the counter-showing made by the state at the hearing of the motion for a new trial, this court cannot say, as a matter of law, that the judge abused his discretion in refusing to further continue the case.

3. CRIMINAL LAW §559—JURY CAN DRAW INFERENCE OF GUILT FROM EVIDENCE.

"Where there is some evidence from which the guilt of one accused of crime can be legitimately inferred, it is entirely within the province of the jury to draw that inference."

Error from City Court of Wrightsville; B. B. Blount, Judge.

I. D. Tompkins was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

B. T. Rawlings, of Sandersville, and B. H. Moye, of Wrightsville, for plaintiff in error.

C. S. Claxton, Sol., of Wrightsville, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 274)

WARD v. STATE. (No. 10606.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Oct. 14, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

HOMICIDE §286(2), 309(4)—CHARGE ON MANSLAUGHTER REQUIRED UNDER EVIDENCE.

The evidence in this case fully authorized, if indeed it did not demand, the verdict of manslaughter. The charge of the court on the law of manslaughter was required. See Trice v. State, 89 Ga. 742, 15 S. E. 648. The court did not err in charging the jury as follows: "In every case of an unlawful killing malice will be presumed, where no considerable provocation appears and all the circumstances of the killing show an abandoned and malignant heart. If one shoots another without any reason, and, although you may not be able to show that he made up his mind to do so with any degree of deliberation, if he shoots another without any known reason, and all the circumstances show that he did wantonly, without any reason, without any provocation, the law implies malice in a case of that sort." See Harrell v. State, 22 Ga. App. 104, 95 S. E. 537, and case cited. The defendant had a fair trial, was ably represented, and no error appears which authorizes a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; H. A. Mathews, Judge.

Joshua Ward was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

John R. Cooper, C. A. Cunningham, and W. O. Cooper, Jr., all of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

John P. Ross, Sol. Gen., of Macon, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(178 N. C. 713)

STATE v. PHILLIPS et al. (No. 845.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 5, 1919.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §752½ — CONSTRUCTION OF EVIDENCE ON MOTION FOR NONSUIT.

On motion to nonsuit, the evidence must be construed in a light most favorable to the state to determine its legal sufficiency to convict.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §741(1), 742(1)—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE AND CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES FOR JURY.

Where the evidence is legally sufficient to convict, its weight and the credibility of the witnesses are for the determination of the jury.

3. ADULTERY §14—FORNICATION §9—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Direct evidence of a witness that she saw defendants, charged with fornication and adultery, in bed together on three different occasions held sufficient to sustain conviction.

4. CRIMINAL LAW §377—EVIDENCE OF GOOD CHARACTER SUBSTANTIVE EVIDENCE.

Where defendant offers evidence of good character, even without being sworn as a witness, it is substantive evidence, to be considered by the jury for what it is worth as tending to prove innocence.

5. CRIMINAL LAW §1172(2)—HARMLESS INSTRUCTION ON CHARACTER EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for fornication and adultery, instruction that the jury should not consider character evidence as substantive evidence held harmless to defendant.

6. WITNESSES §79(4)—CONCLUSIVENESS OF DETERMINATION OF COMPETENCY OF INFANT WITNESS.

The finding by a trial judge that an infant is competent to testify is conclusive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Surry County; Bryson, Judge.

Zella Phillips and Mary Key were convicted of fornication and adultery and they appeal. No error.

W. L. Reece, of Dobson, J. H. Folger, of Mt. Airy, and J. Crawford Biggs, of Raleigh, for appellants.

James S. Manning, Atty. Gen., and Frank Nash, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROWN, J. [1-3] The motion to nonsuit was properly overruled. On this motion the evidence must be construed in a light most favorable to the state for the purpose of determining its legal sufficiency to convict, and, this being shown, its weight and the credibility of the witnesses are for the determination of the jury. State v. Carlson, 171 N. C. 818, 89 S. E. 30. Applying this rule to the state's evidence, it seems clear that there was evidence sufficient. The crime itself is of such a character that its commission, speaking generally, can only be determined by circumstances which accompany the relation of the party. In this case, however, there was direct evidence by the witness, Sarah Key, who testified she saw defendants in bed together on three different occasions. It is useless to discuss this evidence. If it is believed by the jury it is amply sufficient to justify conviction of both defendants. The defendants offered evidence as to their good character, and also there was evidence offered as to the good character of witnesses. The defendant excepted to the following part of the charge:

"Witnesses have been offered as to character. This evidence you will not consider as substantive evidence, but only as corroborative, and the law does not presume that a person proven to be of bad character has necessarily told a false story, but you may consider evidence of good character or bad character as bearing upon the weight you should give the testimony of the witness. You are the sole judges of the facts; you are the sole judges of what the evidence is and the weight you should give it."

[4, 5] It is undoubtedly true that where defendant offers evidence of good character even without being sworn as witness, it is substantive evidence, to be considered by the jury for what it is worth as tending to prove the innocence of the defendant. State v. Morse, 171 N. C. 777, 87 S. E. 946. But we think that the defendants were not prejudiced in this case. The judge, in stating that the evidence as to character was referring not to the character of the accused, but to the witnesses whose characters had been proven. This construction of his honor's language is borne out by that part of his charge, in which he says:

"The law does not presume that a person proven to be of bad character has necessarily told a false story, but you may consider evidence of good character as bearing upon the weight you will give to the witnesses."

[8] The other exceptions are entirely without merit. From State v. Perry, 44 N. C. 330, to State v. Merrick, 172 N. C. at page 872, 90 S. E. 257, it has been consistently held by this court that the finding by a trial judge that an infant is competent to testify is conclusive. As to the remaining objection, it is met by rule 27 of this court (81 S. E. xi) as follows:

"Nor will it be ground of exception that evidence competent for some purposes, but not for all, is admitted generally, unless the appellant asks, at the time of admission, that the purpose shall be restricted."

See Plemmons v. Murphey, 176 N. C. 671, 97 S. E. 648.

No error.

(178 N. C. 291)

BRYANT v. STONE. (No. 287.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 22, 1919.)

1. EVIDENCE ⇨501(6)—INADMISSIBILITY OF OPINION EVIDENCE.

Where the determinative fact was the condition of a lighter when it was left by defendant at the dock in the evening, and the witness knew nothing of the condition then, but was proposing to express opinions based on what he saw on the morning after, without explanation as to changes naturally brought about by the ebb and flow of the tide, the evidence was properly excluded.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1058(2)—EXCLUDING EVIDENCE WHICH IS GIVEN IN SUBSTANCE.

Where the witness without objection was permitted to give testimony which was the substance of the answers excluded, exception taken by plaintiff to refusal of court to permit the witness to answer the questions will be overruled on appeal.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1033(3)—ERROR FAVORABLE TO APPELLANT.

In action involving question whether loss of lumber on lighter, towed by defendant, was due to lighter being improperly tied to wharf, evidence of defendant's witness that there were a great many lighters at the dock and that lighters were frequently changed in their positions or their lines interfered with, while objectionable, because it proved nothing and furnished opportunity for mere surmise, made more for plaintiff appellant than for defendant, since it could be argued that it was an admission that the lighter was negligently fastened.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1068(5)—ERROR CURED BY VERDICT.

Refusal of instruction relating to burden of proof based on defendant being found to be a common carrier is immaterial, the jury having found that defendant was not a common carrier.

5. TOWAGE ⇨15(1)—WHETHER OWNER OF LIGHTER WAS CARRIER OR EMPLOYÉ PROPERLY SUBMITTED.

In action for loss of lumber on lighter towed by defendant for plaintiff, issue whether defendant was acting as a common carrier or employé held fairly submitted.

6. TOWAGE ⇨15(1)—INSTRUCTION ON CUSTOM TO GUARD LIGHTER AUTHORIZED BY EVIDENCE.

Plaintiff's witness having testified that it was the custom of the owner of the lumber on a lighter to place a watchman on the lighter when it was tied to the dock, plaintiff's exception on the ground that there was no evidence to support instruction on custom cannot be sustained.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Hanover County; Stacy, Judge.

Action by J. N. Bryant against R. R. Stone, trading as Stone Towing Line. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. No error.

This is an action for the recovery of $405.25, being the value of certain lumber belonging to the plaintiff, which was lost, as the plaintiff alleges, while in the possession of and through the negligence of the defendant.

The plaintiff was engaged in the lumber business and maintained a sawmill near the city of Wilmington. On the 9th of October, 1916, the plaintiff had 49,000 feet of lumber placed on the wharf of the Camp Manufacturing Company on the Cape Fear river, which had been sold and consigned to R. R. Sizer & Co. of New York, and which the plaintiff intended to ship by the Clyde Line Steamer Company to its destination. With this intention he notified the defendant, who was engaged in the business of towing lumber and other materials to and from various points on the river with boats owned and operated by the defendant for hire, that he had the lumber previously mentioned loaded on the lighters at the Camp Manufacturing Company, and that he desired the defendant to deliver the same to the Clyde Line Steamship Company, to be loaded upon one of their vessels, and this the defendant agreed to do for a stipulated sum.

There is a dispute between the parties as to the time of delivery to the Clyde line, plaintiff alleging that it was not to be delivered until 7 o'clock or some time thereafter during the day following the day upon which the agreement to haul the lumber was made, while the defendant contends that there was no agreement, whatever, as to when the lumber should be delivered to the Clyde line.

The defendant took charge of the lighter loaded with lumber on the wharf of the Camp Manufacturing Company about 5 o'clock in the afternoon of the day the agreement between the plaintiff and defendant was made, and the defendant towed the lighter to dock of the Clyde Line Steamship Company, and tied the same to the dock and left it there. The lighter was left unguarded during the night, and about 5 or 6 o'clock the following morning it was swung up under the dock and turning partially over, and dumped its load of lumber into the river. A part of the lumber was recovered, and this suit is brought to recover the value of the lumber which was lost; the value being based upon the price for which the plaintiff had contracted to sell the same.

There are two theories upon which the plaintiff is resting his right to recover. The first is that the defendant, in undertaking to deliver the plaintiff's lumber to the Clyde Line Steamship Company, did so in the capacity of a common carrier, and was therefore an insurer of the goods, so that it would only be necessary for the plaintiff to show the delivery of the lumber to the defendant and its subsequent loss before the defendant had made the delivery to the Clyde Line Steamship Company, under what the plaintiff alleges were the terms of the contract, in order to make out a prima facie case and shift the burden upon the defendant to disprove its negligence. The second theory was that, if the defendant was not acting as a common carrier, he was guilty of negligence in the manner in which the lighter was moored to the dock of the steamship company, and in failing to notify some of the agents of the steamship company that the lighter was moored to the dock, and in leaving the lighter unguarded during the night, and that one or the other or all of these acts of negligence was the proximate cause of the loss of the lumber.

The principal differences between the plaintiff and defendant on the first position of the plaintiff was as to the terms of the contract, the defendant contending his liability ceased when he delivered the lumber at the dock of the Clyde line.

The place of delivery was subject to the tides.

During the trial the plaintiff introduced Frank Sears, who had expert knowledge, and asked him the following questions:

"Q. Are you able to form an opinion satisfactory to yourself as to the reason that this lighter was washed up under the wharf by the tide and dumped its load into the river? A. Yes, sir. (The defendant objected. Objection sustained. Plaintiff excepted. The witness would have testified that the lighter dumped its load because it was improperly tied.)

"Q. What business were you engaged in at this time? A. Lumber business.

"Q. Were you employed at Chadbourn's mill? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How long have you been engaged in that business? A. About 17 years.

"Q. While you were engaged in the lumber business and employed by Mr. Chadbourn, was it a part of your duty to handle lighters and load them? A. Yes, sir; I supervised it.

"Q. Did you have occasion to take lighters after the same were loaded, or supervise the loading, down to the Clyde Line wharf and other wharves and tie them there? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. State whether or not, in your opinion, if this lighter had been properly tied to the wharf, it would have dumped its load as you have just described this lighter did. (Defendant objects. Objection sustained. Plaintiff excepted. Witness would have testified that it would not.)

"Q. Mr. Sears, in your opinion, could that lighter have been tied to the wharf on the evening before it was sunk in such a manner that it would not have been swept under the sill the following morning as you have testified it was and dumped its load into the river? (Objection by defendant. Sustained. Plaintiff excepted. Witness would have answered: 'Yes, sir; it could have been moored so that both ends of the lighter could come up to the guard piling, then it would have been impossible for it to have gotten under the sill. This lighter was not tied in that way.')

A witness for the defendant, one Register, was asked the following questions:

"Q. State if you know whether, at or about the time we are speaking of, a great many lighters of lumber were being carried to and handled at the Clyde dock? (Objection by plaintiff. Overruled. Exception.) A. Yes, sir; great many are handled around there, and some shifted by the Clyde people at different times at night. I have known them to turn lighters and barges adrift and have picked them up in the river.

"Q. Do you know as a fact that it frequently occurred, at or about this time we are speaking of, that lighters which were moored to the Clyde Line docks were changed in their position or their lines interfered with? (Objection by plaintiff. Overruled. Exception.) A. Yes, sir."

The plaintiff excepted to the refusal to give the following instructions:

"The court charges you that if you find from the evidence and by its greater weight that at the time set out in the complaint the defendant was engaged in the business of towing lighters, hauling freight, passengers, or material for hire, to and from various points on the Cape Fear river, and that in the scope of such business carried on by the defendant the defendant contracted to tow the lighter loaded with lumber belonging to the plaintiff from the wharf of the Camp Manufacturing Company and contracted to deliver the same to the Clyde Line Steamship Company, and should further find that in pursuance of such contract the defendant, through its agent and employes, took charge of said lighter with the lumber of the plaintiff loaded thereon for the purpose of delivering the said lumber of the plaintiff to the Clyde Line Steamship Company, and set out to tow the said lighter loaded with lumber to the Clyde Line Steamship Company, and the jury should further find that the said lumber, or part of the same, was lost from aboard the lighter, and that the said lumber was lost, and after the defendant had taken charge of the same and set out to deliver the same to the Clyde Line Steamship Company, then the court charges you that the defendant will be responsible for the safe delivery of the lumber to the Clyde Steamship Company, according to his contract with Bryant; and that it is not necessary for the plaintiff to show or prove any specific act of negligence by the defendant by which the said lumber was lost, but the burden of proof would be upon the defendant to show that he was not negligent in transporting the said lumber upon the lighter and delivering the same to the Clyde Line Steamship Company. And the burden of proof will be upon the defendant to show that the loss of the lumber, if the jury should find that any of the lumber was lost, was not due to any negligence on the part of the defendant, as shown by the plaintiff's twentieth exception."

His honor charged the jury on the first issue as follows:

"Upon that issue the burden rests with the plaintiff to satisfy you of that by the greater weight of the evidence. If you find as a fact from this evidence and you are satisfied by its greater weight that the defendant was engaged in the business of a common carrier at the time, and in the capacity of a common carrier as such undertook to transport and deliver these goods to the Clyde Line Steamship Company, why it would be your duty to answer the first issue, 'Yes.' On the other hand, if you should find that the relation between the parties at the time was that of employer and employé for the purpose of towing the barge to the dock and there mooring it, and the obligation of the defendant then ceased, why it would be your duty to answer the first issue, 'No.' (Because if Stone undertook simply to tow the barge down to the dock and there moor it and his liability then ceased, why he would not be considered as having undertaken to transport and deliver these goods in the capacity of a common carrier, even if he were a common carrier at the time.) To so much of the court's charge as appears in parentheses above the plaintiff excepted."

And continued:

"Of course, gentlemen, if it was the custom of the harbor that under a contract of this kind the liability and the duty of the man who did the towing ceased as soon as he had moored the barge, it was the custom of the owner of the lumber to then put a watchman upon it, and he neglected to do that, that custom would ripen into law, and therefore a duty devolving upon the plaintiff. But it is a question of fact for you whether you find from this evidence that such was a rule of the port under their agreement and under the contract."

The plaintiff excepted to the last charge upon the ground that there was no evidence to support it.

The jury returned the following verdict:

"(1) Was the defendant engaged in the business of a common carrier, and, as such, did the defendant undertake to transport and deliver the plaintiff's lumber to the Clyde Line Steamship Company as alleged in the complaint? Answer: 'No.'"

"(2) If so, did the defendant breach its contract of carriage and delivery? Answer: —."

"(3) Was the plaintiff's lumber, or any part thereof, lost by the negligence of the defendant as alleged in the complaint? Answer: 'No.'"

"(4) Did the plaintiff by his own negligence contribute to his loss and damage as alleged in the answer? Answer: —."

Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

McClammy & Burgwyn, of Wilmington, for appellant.

Robert Ruark, of Wilmington, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. [1, 2] There are two reasons for overruling the exceptions taken by the plaintiff to the refusal of the court to permit the witness Sears to answer the questions propounded to him.

The first is that the evidence offered had no bearing except on the issue of negligence; the determinative fact on that issue being as to the condition of the lighter when it was left at the dock of the Clyde line on the evening of October 9th, and the witness knew nothing of the condition then, but was proposing to express opinions based on what he saw on the morning of October 10th, without explanation as to the changes naturally brought about by the ebb and flow of the tide; and the second that the plaintiff had the benefit of the evidence in answers to questions not objected to.

The purpose of the evidence was to show that the lighter was tied to the dock negligently, and that it would not have dumped its load of lumber if it had been properly tied, and the witness testified without objection:

"It appeared to me that it had too much slack in the rope, and the tide rising gave a chance for the lighter to swing around, and one end caught under the dock. * * * If the lighter had been placed alongside of the piling, it would be impossible for the lighter to dump its load."

We have here the fact testified to by the witness that the lighter was improperly tied, in that the rope was too slack, and his opinion that if it had been properly tied along the piling, instead of with a slack rope, it would not have dumped its load, which is the substance of the evidence excluded.

[3] The evidence of the witness Register, which is the subject of exception, is objectionable because it proves nothing and furnishes the opportunity for mere surmise and conjecture; but this is a good reason for not making it a ground for a new trial unless we can see it was prejudicial, and as it appears to us it made more for the plaintiff than for the defendant.

It is true counsel for the defendant could argue the possibility of the lines being changed during the night because lines had been changed on the dock in the past, but the earnest and skillful counsel for the plaintiff could, and doubtless did, meet this argument by showing the jury that the question was within itself an admission that the condition in which the lines were seen by Sears on the morning of the 10th was negligent, as otherwise there was no necessity for proving the possibility of a change in them the night before, and that all the evidence was that they had not been changed, but were found the next morning as they were left the night before, as Sears testified the lines were too slack on the morning of the 10th, and Register, an employé of the defendant and his witness, testified that he assisted in tying the lighter on the evening of the 9th, and that the line had to be left slack on account of the rise and fall of the tide.

[4] The instruction which his honor refused to give was not directed to the first issue, but related to the burden of proof based upon the defendant being found to be a common carrier, and is immaterial, as the first issue was found in favor of the defendant.

[5] The controversy on the first issue as presented in this record was one of fact, dependent upon the contract, and as such was fairly submitted to the jury as shown in the part of the charge excepted to.

[6] The last exception cannot be sustained, as the witness Sears testified it was the custom for the owner to place a watchman on the lighter when it was tied to the dock.

We find no reversible error.

No error.

(178 N. C. 421)

VINCENT v. PACE. (No. 325.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 29, 1919.)

LIBEL AND SLANDER §=123(3, 6)—JURY QUESTION WHETHER AMBIGUOUS REMARK WAS SLANDEROUS.

In an action for slander by having insinuated that plaintiff had stolen defendant's chickens, in view of the language, the manner and circumstances under which it was first spoken to defendant, and the way it was charged to have been repeated, whether defendant charged and intended to charge a larceny by plaintiff held for the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alamance County; Stacy, Judge.

Action by Joseph H. Vincent against James Pace. From a judgment sustaining demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. H. Carroll, of Burlington, for appellant. Long & Long and Parker & Long, all of Graham, for appellee.

HOKE, J. The complaint, after alleging that Mrs. Sinclair Vincent having become suddenly ill, and continued so until she presently died, defendant had been called to the home as a near neighbor, and thereupon the pertinent facts were further alleged as follows:

"(4) That thereafter, to wit, on the 27th day of December, 1918, the defendant, James Pace, contriving to injure the plaintiff in his reputation, and to expose him to public hatred, ridicule, and contempt, did falsely and maliciously speak and utter to one Annie Turner Vincent, and to divers other persons, of and concerning plaintiff, certain false, defamatory, and scandalous words, as follows: 'That when he reached the home of plaintiff on the night of August 23, 1918, Mrs. Lucinda Vincent called him to her and told him that she was greatly troubled about the defendant's chickens, which she said she and her husband had shut up, and she whispered this in his ear, and told him to have them turned out, but that this plaintiff, instead of turning them out, had taken them off and sold them'—thereby intending to charge and did charge the plaintiff with the larceny of said chickens.

"(5) That said statement and every syllable of it was absolutely false and defamatory, and that by reason of speaking thereof as aforesaid the plaintiff has been injured in his reputation, fame, and good name, to his damage ten thousand dollars.

"Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment against the defendant for the sum of ten thousand dollars, for the cost of this action and for such other and further relief as he is entitled to receive."

In several decisions of the court in which this question was directly considered, it was held that when the words spoken are ambiguous and fairly admit of a slanderous interpretation, it is then a question for the jury to determine on the sense in which the words were used and whether they amounted to the slanderous charge to the reasonable apprehension of the hearers. State v. Howard, 169 N. C. 313, 84 S. E. 807; McCall v. Sustair, 157 N. C. 179, 72 S. E. 974; Reeves v. Bowden, 97 N. C. 30, 1 S. E. 549; Lucas v. Nichols, 52 N. C. 32.

In State v. Howard, indictment for slandering an innocent and virtuous woman, defendant had said, referring to the prosecutrix, "that he had quit his old girl, * * * that Luther Mills was going with her now; she was no lady; she was nothing but a crook, and he could prove it." Held a question for the jury as to the sense in which the words were uttered, and the court quotes with approval from 25 Cyc. as follows:

"It is the province of the court to determine what constitutes libel or slander abstractly. Hence, if the language is plain and unambiguous, it is a question of law whether or not it is libelous or slanderous. But if the language is ambiguous and susceptible of two meanings, one defamatory and the other not, it is for the jury to decide in what sense it was used; however, it is for the court to determine whether or not the language on its face is capable of a double meaning, and should be submitted to the jury for construction. It is the duty of the court to say whether a publication is capable of the meaning ascribed to it by the innuendo; but, when the court is satisfied of that, it must be left to the jury to say whether the publication has the meaning so ascribed to it."

In McCall v. Sustair (civil action for slander) 157 N. C. 179, 72 S. E. 974, Chief Justice Clark delivering the opinion, it was held that the words did not amount to an unequivocal charge of larceny, and being capable of different construction the question was properly left to the jury to determine. And so, in Reeves v. Bowden, the defendant, in speaking of the burning of certain houses, said of and concerning plaintiff, "That damned scoundrel * * * knows all about it * * * from beginning to end," it was held the words, being ambiguous, "but permitting of a slanderous interpretation, the jury should determine under all the circumstances what meaning was intended." And to the same effect is Lucas v. Nichols.

Applying the principle as approved and illustrated in these and other like cases, we are of the opinion that, considering the language, the manner and circumstances under which it was first spoken to the defendant, and the way it is charged to have been repeated, the words, as alleged in the complaint, are capable of the construction that defendant charged and intended to charge the larceny of the chickens, and the cause must be referred to the decision of the jury. There is error.

Reversed.

(178 N. C. 392)

JOHNSON v. BROTHERS. (No. 363.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 29, 1919.)

1. COSTS  $\S$ 214—MOTION TO RETAX COSTS COLLATERAL ATTACK ON JUDGMENT.

Plaintiff, who did not prosecute his appeal from the judgment at proper time, will not be allowed to attack collaterally the judgment, which is not void or irregular, by motion asserting that all costs were taxed against the wrong party, since such motion, while designated one to retax costs, is in reality a motion that court modify its judgment.

2. JUDGMENT  $\S$ 294—CORRECTION OF ERRONEOUS JUDGMENT BY APPEAL.

Where the court had jurisdiction, and judgment was taken according to the course and practice of the court, the judgment is not void or irregular, and the only way to correct it, if it is erroneous, is by appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Bryson, Judge.

Suit by M. L. Johnson against W. J. Brothers. Judgment for sale of the property in suit to satisfy defendant's lien. Motion to modify judgment and to retax costs denied, and plaintiff appeals. No error.

The plaintiff brought this suit to recover possession of a storehouse, situated on leased premises in the city of Winston-Salem, N. C., together with $1,200 damages for the alleged detention of same by defendant. The case was referred to J. E. Alexander, referee, at the May term, 1918, to find the facts and the law in the case, and report same back to the court. At the September term, 1918, the referee duly filed his report, and, after finding that defendant had a lien on said premises, he recommended that the property should be sold at public sale, and that the defendant should be paid his lien out of the proceeds thereof, and the excess paid to plaintiff. At the December term, 1918, of the superior court, Judge Lane signed a judgment appointing a commissioner to sell the property, and out of the proceeds to pay the lien of defendant, to pay the costs and expenses of said sale and the court costs, and pay residue, if any, to the plaintiff. The plaintiff thereupon gave notice of appeal to the Supreme Court, but failed to perfect his appeal, and the case was docketed and dismissed upon motion of the defendant at the Spring term, 1919, of the Supreme Court, under rule 17 of that court (81 S. E. ix).

At the March term, 1919, of the superior court, the commissioner filed his report of sale, and the same was confirmed by Judge Bryson at the May term, 1919, and the moneys ordered disbursed in accordance with the judgment of Judge Lane at December term, 1918. Judge Bryson also signed a judgment, at the May term, 1919, refusing to modify the judgment signed by Judge Lane at December term, 1918, and to retax the costs, denied the motion of the plaintiff, who requested him to do so, and confirmed the judgment of Judge Lane. Plaintiff appealed to this court.

Bennett & Brown, of Winston-Salem, for appellant.

W. T. Wilson, of Winston-Salem, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1, 2] The motion of the plaintiff, while called one to retax the costs, is really a motion that the court modify its former judgment as to the costs, by charging them against the defendant, instead of directing, as the court did in its former judgment, that they be paid out of the fund. It is too late now for such a motion to be entertained, as the plaintiff is concluded by the former judgment. He should have prosecuted his appeal from the judgment at the proper time, and, having failed to do so, he will not be allowed to attack the judgment by this collateral proceeding. The original judgment is not void, as the court had jurisdiction of the cause and the parties, nor is it irregular, as it was taken according to the course and practice of the court. It was, at most, erroneous, and the only way to correct it, if there was any error, was by appeal. It was said in Creed v. Marshall, 160 N. C. 394, 76 S. E. 270:

"It is well settled that in any case where a judgment has been actually rendered, or decree signed, but not entered on the record, in consequence of accident or mistake or the neglect of the clerk, the court has power to order that the judgment be entered up nunc pro tunc, provided the fact of its rendition is satisfactorily established and no intervening rights are prejudiced. If the written judgment fails to incorporate the true sentence or judgment of the court, through inadvertence and in consequence of clerical errors or omissions, it may be completed by an order nunc pro tunc, or may be set aside, and the true and correct judgment entered nunc pro tunc. But the power to amend the judgment as entered cannot be used for the purpose of correcting errors or omissions of the court. No amendment can be allowed simply for the purpose of entering judgment which the court failed to render at the proper time, or to change the judgment actually rendered to one which was not rendered. Such procedure cannot be allowed, so as to enable the court to review and reverse its action in respect to what it formerly either refused or failed to do. 23 Cyc. 843."

The law in this respect has very recently been fully reviewed in Mann v. Mann, 176 N. C. 353, 97 S. E. 175.

The objection here is not to the items of the bill of costs, but it is now asserted that all of the costs were taxed against the wrong party. This is not retaxing costs, so as to correct errors in the amount of the costs, but is an effort to amend the judgment because of its erroneous taxation of any of the costs against the fund or the plaintiff, which cannot be done. There was no excusable neglect. The motion was properly denied.

No error.

(178 N. C. 407)

FIELDS v. OGBURN. (No. 362.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 5, 1919.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT  $\S$ 164(2)—LANDLORD NOT LIABLE FOR INJURIES WITHOUT AGREEMENT TO REPAIR.

The lessor of a dwelling house was not liable for injuries to the wife of the tenant when a porch railing gave way, throwing her to the ground, in the absence of agreement on his part to repair.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Bryson, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Carrie Fields against S. A. Ogburn. From judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This action is by a tenant and occupant of a dwelling house against defendant, the landlord and owner, to recover damages for physical injuries caused by alleged negligence on the part of defendant in failing to keep the premises in proper repair. At the close of the plaintiff's testimony on motion there was judgment of nonsuit. Plaintiff excepted and appealed.

Le Roy B. Wall and J. Lindsay Patterson, both of Winston-Salem, for appellant.

R. G. Stockton and Manly, Hendren & Womble, all of Winston-Salem, for appellee.

HOKE, J. The facts in evidence tended to show that in October, 1916, the female plaintiff and her husband were tenants of a four-room dwelling house, owned by defendant and rented to them by defendant's agent and on said date, while plaintiff was sitting on the front porch of said dwelling leaning against the banister it gave way, throwing her from the porch to the ground, a fall of several feet, and causing serious and painful injuries from which she still suffers; that another woman had been leaning on the banister at the time, and both fell to the ground; that the banister gave way from being insecurely fastened to the house with fourpenny nails, which were insufficient for the purpose, and after the injury the husband of plaintiff nailed same back with several eightpenny nails, and it was thereby made secure, continuing so thereafter while plaintiff remained at the house, a period of two or three months; that before the occurrence they had lived there as tenants for 2½ years, and while plaintiff had continually complained to the agent of defendant for repairs which she desired, no complaint had been made of the condition of the porch or the banister in question, and in reply to her repeated complaints the agent had several times made answer that he would like to do more for her, but that he could only go according to instructions, etc.

On these, the facts chiefly relevant, we concur in his honor's view, and are of opinion that the judgment of nonsuit has been properly entered. In the absence of express stipulation on the subject, there is usually no obligation or assurance on the part of the landlord to his tenant that the premises will be kept in repair, or that the same are fit or suitable for the purposes for which they are rented. It is true that in case of latent defects of a kind that import menace of appreciable injury when these are known to the landlord, and of which tenant is ignorant and not likely to discover on reasonably careful inspection, liability has been recognized and recoveries sustained both on the ground of negligent breach of duty and at times for fraud and deceit, but ordinarily, as stated in the well-sustained brief of appellee's counsel:

"There is no implied covenant in a lease of such property, either that the place is let for habitation, or that the owner will keep the same safe and in repair, and ordinarily the doctrine of caveat emptor applies to leases of realty, and throws on the lessee the responsibility of examining as to existence of defects on the rented premises and of providing against their ill effects."

Propositions that are approved by direct decision with us and which prevail generally in jurisdictions where the rights of the parties are dependent on common-law principles. Smithfield Improvement Co. v. Coley & Bardin, 156 N. C. 255, 72 S. E. 312; Edwards v. Railroad, 98 N. Y. 245, 50 Am. Rep. 659; Mullen v. Rainear, 45 N. J. Law, 520; Doyle v. Railroad, 147 U. S. 413, 13 Sup. Ct. 333, 37 L. Ed. 223; Walsh v. Schmidt, 206 Mass. 405, 92 N. E. 496, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 798; Thomas v. Lane, 221 Mass. 447, 109 N. E.

363, L. R. A. 1916F, 1077; Phelan v. Fitzpatrick, 188 Mass. 237, 74 N. E. 328, 108 Am. St. Rep. 469; Galvin v. Beals, 187 Mass. 250, 72 N. E. 969; Howard v. Water Power Co., 75 Wash. 255, 134 Pac. 927, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 578; Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 709; 16 R. C. L. 772, Landlord and Tenant, § 268.

In Smithfield Improvement Co. v. Bardin, supra, Associate Justice Brown delivering the opinion, it was said:

"By the common law the lessor is under no implied covenant to repair, or even that the premises shall be fit for the purpose for which they are rented."

In Edwards v. Railroad, supra, it is held that—"There is no implied warranty upon the devise of real estate that it is fit for occupation or suitable for the purposes for which it is leased."

In Galvin v. Beals, 187 Mass. 250, 72 N. E. 969, injury from a defective railing on a piazza, recovery was denied, the court stating the general position applicable as follows:

"The general rule in this commonwealth must be considered as settled that a tenant cannot recover against his landlord for personal injuries occasioned by the defective condition of the premises let, unless the landlord agrees to repair, makes the repairs, and is negligent in making them."

We consider these authorities as decisive of the questions presented, nor do we see that the principles upon which they rest are in any wise affected by the cases cited for appellant.

Bailey v. Long, 175 N. C. 687, 94 S. E. 675, presented a case where a patient taken for treatment in defendant's hospital claimed to have been injured from exposure caused by a defective building. There the defendant retained the control of the building and of the particular room as well, and in referring the case to the jury the rights of the parties were made dependent upon the contract and the duties growing out of the relationship thereby created between them.

In Rucker v. Willey, 174 N. C. 44, 93 S. E. 379, there was an express agreement for repairs on the part of the landlord, and Knight v. Foster, 163 N. C. 329, 79 S. E. 614, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 286, was made to rest upon the facts peculiar to that case and involving the duties and obligations of a landlord and owner towards third persons. The respective obligations as existing between landlord and tenant were not directly presented.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment of nonsuit is affirmed.

Affirmed.

(178 N. C. 249;
RUARK et al. v. HARPER et al.
(No. 283.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 15, 1919.)

1. TENANCY IN COMMON ⇐20(1)—ACQUISITION OF OUTSTANDING TITLE BY HUSBAND OF COTENANT.

A husband is not a tenant in common by reason of the fact that his wife is a tenant in common, and there is no obligation growing out of the marriage contract which will invalidate the husband's purchase of the interest of the other tenants in common on sale of the common property for nonpayment of taxes.

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION ⇐79(4)—SHERIFF'S TAX DEED TO HUSBAND OF COTENANT COLOR OF TITLE.

A sheriff's tax deed to property held in common, transferring the same to the husband of one of the tenants in common, was color of title, certainly as to the interest of those tenants in common other than the wife; and where the purchaser held the land, seven years' possession will ripen title to the interest acquired under the tax deed, other than that belonging to the purchaser's wife.

3. ADVERSE POSSESSION ⇐79(4) — THREE YEARS' POSSESSION BY HOLDER OF TAX DEED BARS RECOVERY.

Under Revisal 1905, § 395, subd. 10, three years' possession under a tax deed bars the rightful former owners from recovery of the property.

4. ADVERSE POSSESSION ⇐71(1)—WHEN DEED COLOR OF TITLE.

Where the husband of one tenant in common bought in the property on sale of the same for taxes, and the purchaser and his wife joined in conveying the same, their deed constituted color of title, so that possession under the same would ripen into adverse title.

5. EVIDENCE ⇐383(4)—RECITAL IN CERTIFIED COPY OF SHERIFF'S DEED THAT IT WAS UNDER SEAL.

Though the certified copy of the sheriff's tax deed did not show a sale, yet, where it recited that the deed was under seal, it will be presumed a seal was on the original deed.

6. ADVERSE POSSESSION ⇐79(4)—TAX DEED, THOUGH NOT UNDER SEAL, COLOR OF TITLE.

Though a sheriff's deed to land sold for taxes bore no seal, and did not comply with the statute, it is, under Revisal 1905, § 395, subd. 10, good as color of title, and seven years' occupancy is sufficient to ripen title in the possessor.

7. ADVERSE POSSESSION ⇐23—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Where defendants claimed under color of title, and were in such possession as the nature of the premises permitted of, and exercised such dominion over the property, as the cutting of wood for seven years, their occupancy will ripen into title.

8. TAXATION §798(1)—RIGHT OF FORMER OWNER TO QUESTION TAX TITLE.

Tax title cannot be questioned by former owner until he shall have complied with Revisal 1905, § 2909, declaring that no person shall question title acquired by sheriff's deed, etc., without making a showing that all taxes upon the property had been paid, etc.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Hanover County; Calvert, Judge.

Action by H. K. Ruark and others against J. W. Harper and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Action dismissed.

This was an action to remove a cloud, upon title to lands. William Grissom died intestate in 1875, seised of three contiguous tracts of land in said county. His wife died in 1889. He owned no other land in said county at his death, after which the land was listed for taxes in the name of the "heirs of William Grissom." The court found as facts:

"The sheriff executed his tax deed to the said J. W. Mintz, husband of Emily A. Mintz, dated May 27, 1901, recorded January 5, 1904, for '164 acres in Federal Point Township, adjoining lands of W. J. Harris, listed as heirs of William Grissom.' Thereafter said J. W. Mintz and Emily A. Mintz by like description executed their deed to W. A. McQuillan, dated June 12, 1903, and recorded December 22, 1905. Thereafter said McQuillan and wife by like description executed their deed to J. W. Harper, the ancestor of the present defendants Harper, dated August 6, 1912, and recorded August 7, 1912, which deeds appear in the record.

"J. W. Harper, the original defendant herein, has died since the commencement of this action, leaving a last will and testament, under which he devised, after certain bequests, his estate to the defendants Ella C. Harper, his wife, and to his children, Catherine and James Harper, minors, and if said sheriff's deed is valid to convey the whole of said land, they are entitled thereto in fee, or if valid to convey only the interest therein of Emily A. Mintz, by virtue of the deed of herself and husband to W. A. McQuillan aforesaid, then to an undivided sixth of the whole and an undivided one-fifth of one-sixth part inherited by said Emily A. Mintz from her deceased brother, Edgar A. Grissom, subject to the dower right of his wife therein, the plaintiff Cassie P. Grissom: Provided, the defendant heirs of Emily A. Mints are not entitled to inherit these interests."

The court adjudged upon the pleadings and admissions that the plaintiffs and defendants were tenants in common, and that the deeds above mentioned constituted a cloud upon the title, and adjudged that they had no legal effect and the cloud should be removed. The defendants appealed.

E. K. Bryan, of Wilmington, for appellants.

Iredell Meares, of Wilmington, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. [1] The court held that the sheriff's deed, "if otherwise valid, did not operate to convey the whole of said premises to said J. W. Mintz, because of his relation as husband of said Emily A. Mintz, who was a tenant in common, and the title remained unchanged, and the cotenancy existing between them and her as cotenants continued thereafter." In this there was error. Mintz was not a tenant in common by reason of the fact that his wife was, and while it has been held in Jordan v. Simmons, 169 N. C. 140, 85 S. E. 214, that the husband could not buy the wife's land at a tax sale and claim title against the wife, there is no obligation growing out of the marriage contract which invalidated his purchase of the interest of the other tenants in common. The subsequent deed of J. W. Mintz and his wife, Emily A. Mintz, June 12, 1903, to W. A. McQuillan, purported to convey the whole of said land. It was effective to convey the wife's undivided one-sixth interest and the undivided five-sixths interest acquired by J. W. Mintz under the sheriff's deed.

[2] The deed from the sheriff to J. W. Mintz was color of title, certainly as to the interest of the tenants in common other than the wife and her one-sixth interest, was undisputed, and the seven years' possession would ripen title to the five-sixths interest acquired under the tax deed.

[3] The statute law in regard to sales of real estate for taxes permits the sheriff to sell property held by tenants in common, and provides that three years' possession under a tax deed bars the rightful former owners from the recovery of the property, without exception or reservation (Rev. § 395, subd. 10), and by statute one tenant in common is permitted to pay his or her part of the tax and let the other shares go. It is true that this court has held that a tenant in common in actual possession of the entire property could not permit the sale of the property for taxes and acquire the title as against his cotenants. Smith v. Smith, 150 N. C. 81, 63 S. E. 177. But this was put distinctly upon the ground of the tenant's occupancy of the entire property, and his breach of duty in allowing the sale to take place, and in taking advantage of his own wrong by purchasing the property; but here the purchaser was not a tenant in common. Mintz was not a tenant in common at all, and there was no reason why he could not purchase the interest of all the cotenants, except the interest of his wife, and that she conveyed by joining in the deed with her husband to convey the entire property to McQuillan, who afterwards conveyed to Harper.

[4] In this case the husband of the tenant in common was not charged with the same trust that his wife would have been, had she been in the occupancy of the entire property. The tax deed was color of title to Mintz, the purchaser at the tax sale, of all interest in the land, except the wife's, and seven years' occupancy would bar the recovery by the other tenants. Rev. § 395; Kivett v. Gardner, 169 N. C. 78, 85 S. E. 145; Dobbins v. Dobbins, 141 N. C. 210, 53 S. E. 870, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185, 115 Am. St. Rep. 632. It was said in Lumber Co. v. Cedar Works, 168 N. C. 344, 84 S. E. 523, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 992, that the doctrine of possession by tenants in common would not be extended further than the court has heretofore gone. In this case exclusive possession was taken by Mintz as purchaser, who was not a tenant in common, and was retained by him. He did not buy from one tenant in common, but from the sheriff. His wife alone might claim that by his purchase of the other five-sixths interest he was tenant in common with her, but by joining with him in the deed to McQuillan June 12, 1903, they conveyed the entire interest; at least their deed was color of title, and McQuillan had the right to claim title to the whole, and continue possession under said deed. He was not a tenant in common buying at the tax sale. In Everhart v. Adderton, 175 N. C. 403, 95 S. E. 614, the court said: "The purchaser was not a tenant in common, but merely the wife of one of them." There was evidence of seven years' adverse possession, which would ripen the title in said McQuillan and those claiming title under him. Gill v. Porter, 176 N. C. 451, 97 S. E. 381.

In this view it is unnecessary to consider the allegations of irregularities in the sale for taxes, and whether they were cured by the presumptions of regularity raised by the statute regulating sales of realty for taxation. The tax deed to Mintz and the subsequent conveyance by him to McQuillan being color of title, which would ripen by seven years' adverse possession by said McQuillan and those claiming under him, the defendants are entitled to have an issue submitted to the jury upon that question, and also as to the three years' possession under the tax deed.

An issue should also be submitted to the jury as to the identity of the land claimed by the plaintiffs and the defendants, which is denied by the pleadings. The court erred in holding as a matter of law that the deeds from the sheriff to Mintz and from Mintz and wife to McQuillan and Harper constituted the defendants cotenants with the plaintiffs.

[5] The certified copy of the sheriff's deed does not show a seal, but it recites that the deed was under seal, and in such case the law presumes a seal was on the original deed. Brown v. Hutchinson, 155 N. C. 205, 71 S. E.

302; Edwards v. Supply Co., 150 N. C. 173, 63 S. E. 740; Smith v. Lumber Co., 144 N. C. 47, 56 S. E. 555; Heath v. Cotton Mills, 115 N. C. 208, 20 S. E. 369.

[6] Even though there is no seal, and the tax title does not comply with the statute, it is good as color of title, and seven years' occupancy is sufficient to ripen the title in the possessor (Kivett v. Gardner, 169 N. C. 78, 85 S. E. 145; Rev. § 395, subd. 10), and this was expressly pleaded by the defendants. It would seem that the description in the tax deed was sufficient, Fulcher v. Fulcher, 122 N. C. 101, 29 S. E. 91.

[7] The relief demanded in the complaint is to remove a cloud upon title. This was doubtless because, as it seems, no one was in actual physical possession at the time the action was brought; but the relief demanded does not govern the remedy, which depends upon the facts admitted or proven. If the jury shall find from the evidence that the defendants, or those under whom they claim, were in such possession as the nature of the premises permitted of, as cutting wood, or otherwise, and exercised such dominion over the premises for seven years under the tax deed, then the defendant acquired title.

There was evidence of cutting wood and using other exclusive dominion over the property, and that McQuillan built a house upon the property in which he lived, and cultivated land upon it, and if the jury shall find that the defendants and those under whom they claim were in adverse possession of the land for 7 years under color of title, then they cannot be ousted therefrom upon the allegation that the relief sought is to remove a cloud, for his ripened title is title, and not a cloud upon title.

[8] Besides, the plaintiffs have not complied with the requirements of Rev. § 2906:

"No person shall be permitted to question the title acquired by a sheriff's deed made pursuant to this chapter without first showing that he or the person under whom he claims title had title to the property at the time of the sale, and that all taxes due upon the property have been paid by such person, or the person under whom he claims title."

Nor have the plaintiffs put in any evidence to rebut the presumptions in favor of the regularity of the deed which are recited in that section. Then there is the provision as to the matters in regard to which the deed is conclusive proof. The conditions precedent required in that section for bringing an action to set aside a tax deed cannot be avoided by the plaintiffs styling this action to be for the purpose of "removing a cloud from title."

Action dismissed.

(178 N. C. 656)

J. G. WRIGHT & SON v. SHEPARD.
(No. 284.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 22, 1919.)

BROKERS  $\S$  44—WITHDRAWAL OF LAND FROM AUTHORITY TO SELL.

A landowner, who had employed a realty broker to sell, on withdrawing the land, was required, not only to give notice to the broker that the land was withdrawn from his authority, but such action had to be in good faith, and not merely for the purpose of defrauding the broker of any earned commission.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Hanover County; Stacy, Judge.

Action by J. G. Wright & Son against L. L. Shepard. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. No error.

This is an action begun before a justice of the peace to recover the sum of $75, which the plaintiff alleged was due him as his commission upon the sale of a piece of property, which the defendant had given to the plaintiff, who was a real estate dealer, to sell for him. Upon appeal to the superior court there was one issue submitted to the jury: "Is the defendant indebted to the plaintiff? If so, in what amount?" The jury answered the issue, "No," and the plaintiff appealed from judgment for defendant.

McClammy & Burgwin, of Wilmington, for appellant.

W. F. Jones, of Wilmington, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The controversy was one of fact; the plaintiff contending that he was employed by the defendant to sell his lot and that he procured a purchaser to whom the defendant afterwards sold, and the defendant that the plaintiff could not procure a purchaser at the price he was authorized to sell, that he withdrew the lot from the plaintiff and then sold it; and it has been submitted to the jury under proper instructions, which not only required the defendant to show that he gave notice to the plaintiff that the lot was withdrawn, but also that this was done in good faith.

No error.

(178 N. C. 359)

LAWS et al. v. CHRISTMAS et al. (No. 331.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 29, 1919.)

1. WILLS  $\S$  448—CONSTRUCTION—PRESUMPTION AGAINST INTESTACY.

To construe a provision of a will, stating that the testatrix wanted certain property sold, the proceeds put in a bank to go to C. and used for the education of his children, as merely expressing a desire or wish, would violate the presumption against intestacy.

2. WILLS  $\S$  675—CONSTRUCTION—CREATION OF TRUST—PRECATORY WORDS.

Language of a will, though precatory in form, will create a trust if the intent clearly appears.

3. TRUSTS  $\S$  25(1)—CREATION—SUFFICIENCY OF LANGUAGE USED.

Technical language is not necessary to create a trust if the intention is apparent.

4. WILLS  $\S$  675—CONSTRUCTION—CREATION OF TRUST—PRECATORY WORDS.

Precatory words in a will create a binding trust if meant to govern the conduct of the person to whom addressed and not merely as an indication of what the testator thinks would be a reasonable exercise of a discretion thereby left to such person.

5. WILLS  $\S$  675—CONSTRUCTION—CREATION OF TRUST—PRECATORY WORDS.

That the person or object to which they apply is clearly pointed out and the quantum of the estate given clearly defined, has great weight in determining whether precatory words in a will create a trust.

6. WILLS  $\S$  675—CONSTRUCTION—POWER OF SALE.

A will providing that after the life tenant's death, testatrix wanted property sold and the proceeds put in a bank "to go to C. and used for the education of his children" authorized a sale and disposition of the proceeds notwithstanding the precatory word "want."

7. WILLS  $\S$  675—CONSTRUCTION—CREATION OF TRUST—PRECATORY WORDS.

Such provision created a trust in favor of the children, especially as the testatrix used the word "give" in other parts of the will where an absolute gift was intended.

8. TRUSTS  $\S$  287—INABILITY OF TRUSTEE TO EXECUTE—DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY.

Property bequeathed to a person in trust for the education of his children was properly ordered paid to the clerk as receiver for the children, where the father could not give bond, had not seen the children in years, did not know where they were, and admitted his inability to execute the trust.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Stacy, Judge.

Action by George Laws, executor, and R. L. Christmas against Beatrice Christmas and others. From an adverse judgment the plaintiff R. L. Christmas appeals. Affirmed.

This is an action by the executor of Louisa Frye and R. L. Christmas against the children of the said Christmas to obtain a construction of the will of the said Frye and to determine the rights in the proceeds of the sale of a certain lot of land. The will is in the following words:

"I, Louise Frye, being of sound mind and memory, do make this my last will and testament as follows.

"I desire my body to be decently buried in the new cemetery plot on the south side, designated by Mr. George Laws, who will attend to my burial and for his services and furnishing the coffin I give to him my gold watch, now in his possession. I give to my sister, Eliza Christmas, the following household articles to be sold: 1 bureau, 1 sideboard, 1 stove, 1 new feather bed and pillow of down.

"I also give to my sister, Eliza Christmas, my house and lot, at depot, during her lifetime; I also give my sister, Eliza, all the money I should have in bank at my death. I want her well provided for a good sum and board.

"After my sister Eliza's death, I want my house and lot to be sold, the money to be put in bank to go to Robert L. Christmas, and used for the education of his children. I appoint Mr. George Laws executor to this my last will and testament.

"Witness my hand and seal, this 26th day of June, 1906. Louisa Frye. [Seal.]"

In 1909, about three years after the death of the testatrix, the plaintiff R. L. Christmas separated from his wife and children, and he has not seen his children since then, and does not know where they are. The wife of R. L. Christmas is dead.

The lot referred to in the will has been sold, and the controversy is over the proceeds of the sale; R. L. Christmas contending that the proceeds of sale are given to him in the will, and the defendants that a trust is declared in their favor.

His honor rendered judgment holding that there was a trust in favor of the defendants, and as the plaintiff Christmas was unable to give a sufficient bond for the security of the funds, he ordered that it be paid to the clerk of the superior court of Orange county as the receiver for the defendants, and the plaintiff excepted and appealed.

T. C. Carter, of Mebane, for appellant.

A. H. Graham and John W. Graham, both of Hillsboro, for appellees.

ALLEN, J. The words which give rise to the present controversy are "want" and "used for the education of his children"; the plaintiff R. L. Christmas contending that there was an absolute gift of the money to him when the testatrix said "to go to R. L. Christmas," and that the word "want" is precatory and merely expressive of a desire or wish, while the defendants, his children, insist that a trust is declared in their favor.

[1] The first difficulty in the way of the position taken by the plaintiff is that it proves too much, since it is not reasonable to hold that the word "want" relates to the sale of the lot, and then, passing over two dispositions of the property, say it affects the provision for the education of the children, without also holding that it pervades the whole item, giving character to each provision, so that the will would read:

"I want my house and lot to be sold." "I want the money to be put in bank." "I want it to go to Robert L. Christmas." "I want it to be used for the education of his children."

And under this construction, if held to be precatory, and not imperative, no one would take anything under the item of the will, and the testatrix would be intestate as to the remainder in fee in the lot, which is contrary to the presumption that "every testator is presumed to intend to dispose of all his estate, so as not to die intestate as to any part" (Foust v. Ireland, 46 N. C. 187; Foil v. Newsome, 138 N. C. 119, 50 S. E. 597, 3 Ann. Cas. 417), and to the language of the will which manifests a purpose to make some disposition of the property.

Why mention it at all, if she did not intend to create some right or impose some duty in regard to it? The fact that she refers to it shows that she had the remainder interest in mind, and it is reasonable to conclude she would have remained silent if she did not intend to devise it.

We cannot adopt this view of the plaintiff, and, as it appears to us, but one of two constructions is permissible. The testatrix either intended to express the wish that the lot be sold, and to make explicit disposition of the fund, in which event the word "want" would only refer to the sale of the lot, or that the whole devise or bequest should be imperative, although precatory words were used.

[2] The effect of precatory words in a will has been considered in several recent decisions, and while the older English doctrine that, "Whenever property was given coupled with expressions of request, hope, desire, or recommendation that the person to whom it is given will use or dispose of the same for the benefit of another, the donee will be considered a trustee for the purpose indicated by the donor," has not been followed, the principle is recognized in all that, although in form precatory, the language will be held to be imperative, and to impose a trust if the intent clearly appears. Carter v. Strickland, 165 N. C. 70, 80 S. E. 961, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 416; Hardy v. Hardy, 174 N. C. 507, 93 S. E. 976.

[3-5] The Wisconsin court states the controlling principles in Knox v. Knox, 59 Wis. 172, 18 N. W. 155, 48 Am. Rep. 487, as follows:

"First. 'It is not necessary that technical language should be used to create a trust. It is enough that the intention is apparent.' 1 Jarm. Wills (5th Ed.) 385, and note.

"Second. 'That precatory words used in a will, that is, words of recommendation, entreaty, request, wish, or expectation, addressed to a devisee or legatee, may be sufficient to create a trust in favor of the person or persons in whose favor such expressions are used.' 1 Jarm. Wills (5th Ed.) 385; Lewin, Trusts, 118; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. pars. 1068, 1068a; Hill, Trustees, 71; 2 Redf. Wills, 410, 411.

"Third. In order to determine whether precatory words in a will create a binding trust, 'the real question always is whether the wish, desire, or recommendation expressed by the testator is meant to govern the conduct of the party to whom it is addressed, or whether it is merely an indication of that which he thinks would be a reasonable exercise of the discretion of the party, leaving it, however, to the party to exercise his own discretion.' 2 Redf. Wills, 416; Williams v. Williams, 1 Sim. (N. S.) 358; Hill, Trustees, 114; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. (12th Ed.) par. 1068b, and cases cited.

"Fourth. In determining that precatory words in a will create a trust, the courts give great weight to the fact that the person or object to which the precatory words apply is clearly pointed out, and the quantum of the estate to be given to such person or object is also clearly defined. 1 Jarm. Wills, 396; 2 Redf. Wills, 416; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. pars. 1070, 1071."

Here we have the persons clearly pointed out, if the precatory words apply to the provision for the children, the quantum of the estate given is clearly defined, and that the testatrix intended to control the fund appears from the entire absence of words of discretion in connection with the gift to the plaintiff and that he takes it for a specific purpose.

[6] The testatrix gave the lot to her sister for life, the remainder in fee is not referred to, except in the item before us, there is no reason for mentioning it, except to dispose of it, and in our opinion the language used is sufficient to authorize a sale and to dispose of the proceeds.

[7] Does it impress the fund with a trust in favor of the children?

"It must be conceded that it is not necessary for the valid declaration of a trust that any peculiar language be used." St. James v. Bagley, 138 N. C. 398, 50 S. E. 842, 70 L. R. A. 160.

"The intent is what the court looks to." Blackburn v. Blackburn, 109 N. C. 489, 13 S. E. 937.

"No technical language, however, is necessary to the creation of a trust, either by deed or by will. It is not necessary to use the words 'upon trust,' or 'trustee,' if the creation of a trust is otherwise sufficiently evident. If it appear to be the intention of the parties from the whole instrument creating it that the property is to be held or dealt with for the benefit of another, a court of equity will affix to it the character of a trust, and impose corresponding duties upon the party receiving the title, if it is capable of lawful enforcement." Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 310, 8 Sup. Ct. 1169, 32 L. Ed. 138.

"It is sufficient if the language used shows the intention to create a trust, clearly points out the property, the disposition to be made of it, and the beneficiary." Witherington v. Herring, 140 N. C. 497, 53 S. E. 304, 6 Ann. Cas. 188.

All of these requirements are present, if the intent of the testatrix is made manifest. It is significant that the testatrix required the money "to be put in bank," instead of giving it to the plaintiff, which would have been the natural course if she had intended him to have the beneficial interest. It is also worthy of note that in the preceding parts of the will she uses the terms "I give" four times, showing she knew what it meant, and particularly in connection with the gift of the money in bank at the time of her death; but when she makes disposition of the proceeds of the sale of the lot in bank, this is "to go to" the plaintiff, which is less certain and at least ambiguous. And it is to go to him coupled with the purpose in the mind of the testatrix, "and used for the education of his children."

Use and trust are in many respects synonymous, and when property is given to be used for a particular person it would require great refinement to distinguish this from a gift to his use, in trust for him, or for his benefit. In Jarrell v. Dyer, 170 N. C. 178, 86 S. E. 1032, the language in the will was:

"I, Emma J. Simmons, being of sound mind, do hereby will and bequeath to my mother, Pauline E. Jarrell, all the property recently deeded to me by her, also all my other property, that she may administer it to the use of my children."

And the court said of this provision:

"The testatrix evidently bequeathed to her mother all of her property, including that which had been conveyed to her by her mother, as well as that which she derived from other sources, in trust that the mother may use, control, and administer it for the benefit of the testatrix's children."

We cannot think the construction would have been changed if the testatrix had said "for the use of my children," or "to be used for them."

[8] We are therefore of opinion a trust is declared in favor of the children, and, if so, the court had the right, and it was its duty, to see that the fund was secured as it did by its order, as the plaintiff was unable to give bond, had not seen his children for 10 years and does not know where they are, and says in his complaint:

"That under any circumstances it will be impossible at this time for him to carry out the wish and even a trust, if the court should decide that he was a trustee."

"Under the old equity system the chancellor had power to order one, who held the legal title in trust for another, to execute a deed. So he had power to order a defendant who held a fund in trust, whether it consisted of bonds or of money, to pay 'the fund' into court, to the end that the fund should be put under the protection of the court. This power the court still has under the new system in all cases where there is the relation of trustee and cestui que trust, and the land or the fund is, in contemplation of a court of equity, the property of the plaintiff in an action brought to enforce the equity, and an order made for the execution of a deed, or the payment of the fund into court, is a lawful order." Daniel v. Owen, 72 N. C. 342.

Affirmed.

(178 N. C. 339)

SANDERSON v. SANDERSON. (No. 299.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 22, 1919.)

DIVORCE ⚡37(16)—ACTION BY HUSBAND FOR DESERTION.

Under Consol. St. c. 30, § 5, a husband is not entitled to a separation from wife, although they have lived separate and apart for ten successive years, where the separation was brought about by cruel and inhuman treatment of the wife by the husband.

Appeal from Superior Court, Robeson County; Calint, Judge.

Action by Robert Sanderson against Susan Sanderson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

This action was instituted by plaintiff to obtain a divorce from his wife, the defendant, on account of 10 years' separation. The defendant answered, and did not deny the separation, but set up that the same was caused by the cruel and inhuman treatment that she had received from the plaintiff, and that she was the injured party in such separation, and that the plaintiff ought not to be allowed to obtain a divorce from her and escape the marital obligation on account of his own wrong. These facts are established by the verdict, which finds that the defendant was the injured party in the separation. The verdict of the jury was as follows:

"1. Were the plaintiff and defendant duly married, as alleged in the complaint? Yes.

"2. Did the plaintiff and defendant live separate and apart continuously for ten successive years immediately preceding the institution of this action and the filing of the complaint? Yes.

"3. Has the plaintiff been a resident of the state of North Carolina for ten years next preceding the institution of this action? Yes.

"4. Was the plaintiff the injured party? No; the defendant was the injured party."

The defendant moved for judgment on the verdict, which was refused, and the defendant excepted. Judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed.

McLean, Varser, McLean & Stacy, of Lumberton, for appellant.

Johnson & Johnson, of Lumberton, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. The appeal of the defendant presents the question for decision of the right of the husband to a divorce on the ground of a separation for ten years, when the separation has been brought about by his abandonment of his wife or by forcing her to leave him by his own misconduct. The Consolidated Statutes, which went into effect August 1, 1919 (Pub. Laws 1919, c. 238, § 8), provides in chapter 30, § 5, that—

"Marriages may be dissolved and the parties thereto divorced from the bonds of matrimony, on application of the party injured, in the following cases:

"1. If the husband commits adultery.

"2. If the wife commits adultery.

"3. If either party at the time of the marriage was and still is naturally impotent.

"4. If the wife at the time of the marriage is pregnant, and the husband is ignorant of the fact of such pregnancy and is not the father of the child with which the wife was pregnant at the time of the marriage.

"5. If there has been a separation of husband and wife, and they have lived separate and apart for ten successive years, and the plaintiff in the suit for divorce has resided in this state for that period."

It is thus seen that all causes for divorce are collected in one section of one statute, and that the same condition is imposed as to each, that the divorce shall be granted "on application of the injured party," which, as the grounds for divorce are statutory, has been frequently held to mean that the party to the marriage contract, who is in the wrong, cannot obtain a divorce. Whittington v. Whittington, 19 N. C. 64; Moss v. Moss, 24 N. C. 56; Foy v. Foy, 35 N. C. 90; Tew v. Tew, 80 N. C. 316, 30 Am. Rep. 84; Setzer v. Setzer, 128 N. C. 170, 38 S. E. 731, 83 Am. St. Rep. 666; House v. House, 131 N. C. 140, 42 S. E. 546.

All of these cases except Moss v. Moss were cited and approved in Page v. Page, 161 N. C. 175, 78 S. E. 619, the court saying in conclusion:

"No one will be allowed to take advantage of his or her own wrong. This maxim was applied to a case of divorce by Judge Pearson in Foy v. Foy, supra. In the words of the statute (Code, § 1285; Revisal, § 1562), the application for the divorce must be made 'by the party injured,' and these words were construed in Steele v. Steele, 104 N. C. 631 [10 S. E. 707], to mean that neither of the spouses is entitled to divorce if his or her marital fault provoked or induced the alleged misconduct of the other."

"We have the highest authority for the precept 'that whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery,' which is not more obligatory as an injunction of revealed religion, than it is just and true as a proposition in the philosophy of the human mind and heart" (Whittington v. Whittington, supra)

—a principle embodied in the statute, which denies a divorce except to the injured party, and applied in the decisions of this court.

The plaintiff insists, however, that the question has been decided differently in Cooke v. Cooke, 164 N. C. 272, 80 S. E. 178, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1034, and, as this is the last utterance of the court, it destroys the effect of prior decisions; but an examination of the opinions in the Cooke Case demonstrates that it does not question the correctness of the principle that one who is in the wrong cannot procure a divorce under a statute which gives the right of action to the injured party alone, and that the decision rests upon the ground that the cause for divorce on account of separation for ten years, as it then stood, was provided for in a separate statute, which did not have in it the condition "on application of the injured party," and that, although in form an amendment to the Revisal, the language of the statute was so explicit the court was—"not at liberty to interpolate or superimpose conditions and limitations which the statute itself does not contain." Hoke, J., in the opinion of the court.

Brown, J., who cast the deciding vote, makes it clear that this was the reason moving him as he says in a concurring opinion:

"It is contended that the plaintiff must allege and prove that the plaintiff is the injured party. There are no such words in the act, although they are and have been in the Revisal long prior to the act of 1907. I think those words plainly apply to those causes of action which grow out of the personal misconduct of the parties. They would be out of place in the act of 1907, and are entirely inconsistent with its spirit and purpose."

The Cooke Case, then, conceding it was correctly decided, when considered in connection with the reasoning of the court and the ground of the decision, does not militate against the principle announced in the earlier cases, and is no authority for the position that one, who is in the wrong, may now have a divorce on account of a separation of ten years since the statute, making this a cause for divorce, has been taken from its original setting and has been made a part of a statute, which gives no right of action except to the injured party.

The question decided in Ellett v. Ellett, 157 N. C. 162, 72 S. E. 861, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1215, was that there was error in the charge of the court as to the degree of proof required on the seventh issue, and for this error a new trial was ordered on the whole case.

We are therefore of opinion the finding on the fourth issue prevents the plaintiff from obtaining the divorce sued for, and it would be a harsh and cruel rule to declare otherwise, as to do so would permit a husband to drive a loving faithful wife from his home and refuse to permit her to return for ten years, and then reward his conduct by granting him a divorce because he and his wife had lived separate for ten years.

Reversed.

(178 N. C. 710)

STATE v. MEDLEY et al. (No. 347.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 29, 1919.)

1. WITNESSES  $\S$  300 — COMPELLING CODEFENDANT IN A CRIMINAL PROSECUTION TO TESTIFY.

In a prosecution for highway robbery, refusal of the court to call one defendant at the request of another, under Revisal 1905, § 1630, relating to compelling interested persons to testify, and section 1634, relating to competency of persons charged with crimes as witnesses, was not an abuse of discretion, in view of section 1635, and Const. art. 1, § 11, providing that such persons shall not be compelled to give evidence incriminating themselves, where the testimony sought from such defendant would not only prejudice her trial for robbery and feloniously receiving property, but would have a direct tendency to establish her guilt of criminal prostitution, under Laws 1919, c. 215.

2. WITNESSES  $\S$  308 — COMPELLING WITNESS TO INCRIMINATE HIMSELF.

While ordinarily desirable that a defendant in a criminal prosecution, requested to testify by a codefendant, should be called to the stand to determine witness' constitutional privilege against giving testimony that might incriminate herself, where the facts showed that the evidence sought must prejudice such witness' defense, and as well incriminate the witness with reference to another crime, the court's refusal to have the witness called to the stand must be sustained.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Bryson, Judge.

Bunks Medley and Fannie Robertson were convicted of highway robbery. From a judgment imposing sentence on Bunks Medley, he excepts and appeals. No error.

Indictment for highway robbery, in feloniously taking by force a watch, etc., from the person of one G. M. Simpson, with count also for feloniously receiving said watch, etc. There was a verdict of guilty as to both defendants, with recommendation of mercy as to Fannie Robertson.

Moses Shapiro and Fred M. Parrish, both of Winston-Salem, for appellant.

Jas. S. Manning, Atty. Gen., and Frank Nash, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HOKE, J. There were facts in evidence tending to show that in March, 1919, about 12 o'clock at night, or shortly thereafter, on the streets of Winston-Salem, the defendant Bunks Medley held up the prosecutor with a pistol, while the female defendant went through his pockets, taking his watch, etc. There were other facts tending to confirm the direct evidence on the subject.

[1] During the progress of the trial, the male defendant proposed to examine his co-defendant, Fannie Robertson, as a witness, stating that his purpose was to show by her that he was not with her that night, and had not been for two months, and that the watch which she had in her possession (that of the prosecutor) had been found in the bed which had been occupied by her and the prosecutor, Simpson. Said Fannie Robertson having stated that she did not care to take the stand as a witness, the court declined to allow her to be examined as proposed, and defendant excepted. Speaking generally, and under section 1630 of Revisal, all parties and persons interested are made competent and compellable to testify as witnesses in judicial investigations, or before courts or tribunals having power to hear and examine evidence, except in actions or other proceedings instituted on account of adultery or in actions for criminal conversation.

Under section 1634, in all indictments, complaints, or other proceedings against persons charged with crimes, etc., the person so charged shall at his own request, and not otherwise, be a competent witness, etc.; and in section 1635 it is provided that nothing in the preceding section (1634) shall render any person charged with a criminal offense competent or compellable to give evidence against himself, nor shall it render any person compellable to answer any question tending to incriminate himself, etc. Construing these and other sections appertaining to the subject, it has been held that, on trial for crime, any defendant is competent and compellable to testify for or against a co-defendant, provided he is not compellable to give evidence that may tend to convict him, either of the crime charged or other offense against the criminal law. State v. Smith, 86 N. C. 705.

While this is at present the authoritative interpretation of the statute law on the subject, and the position may be at times essential to the efficient enforcement of the criminal laws of the state, in its practical application it is very difficult to safeguard the constitutional guaranty of such a witness against self-incrimination, when the question of his own guilt is involved in the issue and before the same jury. In such case the trial judge should be allowed a large discretion in the matter, and his rulings in the effort to preserve the constitutional rights of the witness should not be disturbed, unless substantial error is very clearly made to appear. A perusal of this proposed evidence will show that the greater and most significant part of it not only tended to establish an essential fact towards her conviction of the offense charged, and for which she was then on trial, but it also had a direct tendency to establish her guilt of the crime of criminal prostitution under Laws 1919, c. 215.

In Smith v. Smith, 116 N. C. 386, 21 S. E. 196, it was held on this question that the true intent and meaning of this article of the Constitution (section 11, art. 1), is that a witness shall not be compelled to answer any question, the answer to which would disclose a fact which forms an essential link in the chain of testimony which would be sufficient to convict him of a crime, and Chief Justice Faircloth, delivering the opinion, said:

"We think the provision of our Constitution ought to be liberally construed to preserve personal rights and protect the citizen against self-incriminating evidence."

[2] Even if the first portion of this suggested evidence could be considered as a separate proposition—that is, that she had not been with the male defendant for two months—there is no doubt on the facts of the record if the witness should be forced to respond to questions concerning it. True, if the witness had answered as the male defendant desired, such answer might have been insisted on; but suppose the answer had been to the contrary, or suppose that, unwilling to support the prisoner by false evidence, she had refused to answer the question, this would of itself have been a pregnant circumstance against her on the issue as to her own guilt. True, as appellant contends, it is ordinarily desirable that a witness be called to the stand, so that the court may more intelligently determine whether the questions and answers will trench upon his constitutional privilege; but on the facts of the present record, and considering the issue, the position of the parties concerning it, and the evidence as proposed, we are of opinion that the power of his honor in the premises has been providently exercised, and we approve his ruling in refusing to have the witness called to the stand and subjected to the proposed examination.

There is no error, and the judgment is affirmed.

No error.

(178 N. C. 315)

(100 S.E.)

SILLS v. BETHEA. (No. 222.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 22, 1919.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⇨184—INSUFFICIENCY AS CONVEYANCE OF WIFE'S DEED LACKING WRITTEN ASSENT OF HUSBAND.

Where the privy examination of a wife conveying land was duly taken, but her deed lacked the written assent of her husband, it was insufficient as a conveyance under Const. art. 10, § 6, requiring husband's written assent.

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⇨187—DEED WITH MORTGAGE BACK CONSTITUTES CONTRACT TO CONVEY ON PAYMENT.

Where, at the instant of making of deed by a wife, the grantee conveyed back the property by a mortgage to secure the purchase money, the wife's deed in legal effect was in no sense a "conveyance," but merely a contract to convey on payment of the purchase money, notwithstanding in form there was a deed from the wife to her grantee, and a mortgage deed back from him, and, as a contract to convey, was valid under the Martin Act, which repealed Revisal 1905, § 2094, and authorized every married woman to contract as to her real and personal property as if unmarried, excepting only contracts with her husband under Revisal 1905, § 2107, although as to conveyances of her realty still requiring the written assent of her husband and her privy examination.

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⇨199—WIFE'S CONTRACT TO CONVEY WITHOUT WRITTEN ASSENT OF HUSBAND.

Under the Martin Act, repealing Revisal 1905, § 2094, where a wife without the written assent of her husband deeded land to a grantee, who executed notes for the purchase money secured by mortgage back on the land, and, after the wife became discover by death of her husband, she advertised the land for sale under the mortgage, but subsequently, when the grantee mortgagor tendered her the full amount of the notes and interest, called the sale off and brought ejectment, the grantee mortgagor is entitled to decree for specific performance; the wife's deed having been good as a contract to convey, and she having recognized its obligation after her husband's death.

4. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⇨85—ACTION FOR DAMAGES ON WIFE'S CONTRACT TO CONVEY.

While her husband lived, the obligation of a wife's contract to convey could be enforced only by an action for damages, as the court could not require specific performance on account of its inability to compel the husband to give his written assent to a conveyance.

Walker and Hoke, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sampson County; Gulon, Judge.

Ejectment by Johnie P. L. E. Sils against Frank Bethea. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The judge finds from the pleadings and admission of the parties that the plaintiff, while married, executed the deed for the land to the defendant, who at the same time executed notes for the purchase money secured by mortgage on the same land. After the plaintiff became discover by the death of her husband, she advertised the land for sale under the mortgage; but subsequently, when the defendant tendered her the full amount of the notes and interest, she called the sale off and brought this action for ejectment. The court rendered judgment for specific performance.

Kerr & Herring, of Clinton, for appellant.

Butler & Herring and Fowler & Crumpler, all of Clinton, and E. O. West, of Dunn, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. The plaintiff has gone into court asking recovery of the land, and the defendant asks a decree of specific performance.

[1] The facts are found by the judge upon the pleadings and admissions of the parties. The privy examination of the plaintiff was duly taken, but his honor correctly held that the deed was not sufficient as a conveyance because it lacked the "written assent of the husband." Const. art. 10, § 6.

[2] Irrespective of that defect, it was not a conveyance of any title because at the instant of making the deed the defendant conveyed back the property by a mortgage to secure the purchase money. It was therefore, in legal effect, in no sense a "conveyance," but merely a contract to convey upon payment of the purchase money, notwithstanding that in form there was a deed from the plaintiff to the defendant and a mortgage deed back. This was held in Bunting v. Jones, 78 N. C. 242, and numerous citations thereto in Anno. Ed., holding that in such case "no title vested in the defendant whose wife acquired no dower or homestead rights therein."

It is therefore simply a "contract" that upon payment of the purchase money the plaintiff would convey the property. It has no other legal effect.

The Martin Act (chapter 109, Laws 1911) repealed Rev. 2094, and substituted therefor the following: "Every married woman shall be authorized to contract and deal so as to affect her real and personal property in the same manner and with the same effect as if she were unmarried," with the exception only of contracts with her husband under Rev. 2107; and as to "conveyances of her real estate" still requiring the written assent of the husband and privy examination. The sole exception as to contracts was as to contracts with her husband under Rev. 2107.

[3] Further, after the death of her husband, the plaintiff, recognizing fully the obligation of the contract, endeavored to enforce it against the defendant and advertised the property for sale under the mortgage. But when the defendant tendered her the full amount of the note and interest thereon, together with the costs of sale under the mortgage, and demanded execution of the deed for the property under the terms of the contract, she refused to comply and brought this action to recover the land, and the defendant asks a decree of specific performance.

Judge Gulon, after reciting in the judgment the facts above set out, as to which there was no controversy, recites:

"The court being further of the opinion, while the deed set forth in the answer was invalid and ineffectual to convey said land by reason of the want of the written assent of the husband thereto, yet being of the opinion that said deed so executed was a good and sufficient contract to convey said land under the provision of Laws 1911, c. 109," adjudges that there was a "good and sufficient contract to convey said land, and that upon payment to the plaintiff of the full sum evidenced by the notes described in the answer, with the interest thereon until paid, said plaintiff should execute to the defendant a deed for the land described in the complaint and that the defendant recover of the plaintiff the costs of the action."

This is in exact accordance with the terms of the contract which the plaintiff under the Martin Act had the right to make "in the same manner and with the same effect as if she were unmarried." There is exactly the same enforcement of the contract against the plaintiff which she sought to have against the defendant after she again became a single woman by advertising the property for sale under the contract.

The just and accomplished judge applied to both parties the thrice repeated scriptural injunction, "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again" (Matthew, vii, 2), which was repeated (Mark, iv, 24, and Luke, vi, 38). Equity and justice know no higher standard than this. The plaintiff, her husband being dead, attempted to enforce the contract and cannot now complain that the court has made her comply therewith.

[4] While the husband lived, the obligation of the contract could be enforced only by an action for damages (Warren v. Dail, 170 N. C. 406, 87 S. E. 126), for the reason that the court could not require specific performance because it could not compel the husband to give his written assent (Fortune v. Watkins, 94 N. C. 315, which was the case where the wife refused to join in the husband's deed); but, the husband being dead, there is no obstacle now in requiring the plaintiff to comply with her contract by specific performance. Affirmed.

BROWN, J. (concurring). After the death of her husband when she became discover, in my opinion, the plaintiff had the right to repudiate the transaction and sue for the land, or else to affirm the sale and collect the purchase money represented by the purchase-money notes and mortgage. It is manifest that she elected to collect the purchase money, and thereby affirmed the sale. When she advertised the land under the power of sale contained in the mortgage, she thereby demanded the purchase money of the defendant and indicated her election to take the purchase money and not the land. This was as clear an indication of her purpose as if she had brought her suit to foreclose the mortgage and bar the defendant of his equity of redemption. It was a clear, unmistakable, and unequivocal election on her part, and, when the defendant tendered her the full amount of the purchase money after the land had been advertised for sale, it was her duty to accept it. As the plaintiff could not have the land and the purchase money both, it was her duty, after the death of her husband, if she intended to claim the land, to cancel the purchase-money notes and mortgage and return them to the defendant and make demand upon him for the land, which she failed to do.

For these reasons, I concur in the judgment of the court.

WALKER, J. I dissent in this case upon the ground so strongly and clearly stated in the dissenting opinion of Justice Brown, in Warren v. Dail, 170 N. C. 406, at page 415, 87 S. E. 126, 130, in which I concurred. He there says:

"If any legal question has ever been settled by repeated decisions of this court, it is that the deed or contract of a married woman charging her real estate in this state is a nullity unless her husband joins and her privy examination is taken. Scott v. Battle, 85 N. C. 184 [39 Am. Rep. 694]; Farthing v. Shields, 106 N. C. 289 [10 S. E. 998]; Ball v. Pacquin, 140 N. C. 83 [52 S. E. 410, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 307]; [Clayton v. Rose, 87 N. C. 106]; Bank v. Benbow, 150 N. C. 781 [64 S. E. 891]; Council v. Pridgen, 153 N. C. 443 [69 S. E. 404]. The assent of the husband is a constitutional requirement. The necessity for the privy examination is not only required by Rev. 962, as to all her lands, and by the Constitution as to the homestead, but it is made a necessary requisite by the so-called Martin Act itself. So carefully has this court guarded this protection to married women that in Smith v. Bruton, 137 N. C. 79 [49 S. E. 64], it is held that a married woman cannot bind herself by agreeing to arbitrate the question of title to land owned by her. It might result in conveying away her land by an award of arbitrators without the necessary assent of her husband and privy examination. * * * In this case the attempt is being made to give force and vitality to a contract that has never had legal existence."

In this case, there was no assent of her husband to the deed she is alleged to have made, and no valid privy examination. It was therefore void—an absolute nullity—and incapable of ratification by anything she has since done, and relied on as such. She has done nothing to prejudice any one's rights. The mere advertisement under the power contained in the mortgage is not sufficient to estop her or to bind her by ratification, admitting that the void deed is susceptible of ratification by an act of hers sufficient for that purpose. How was anybody hurt by her advertisement? She withdrew it, and stood upon her rights under the law, before there was even any equitable estoppel by completing the sale, making a deed, and receiving the purchase money. There is no contention that any other kind of estoppel prevents her from claiming her land.

In Bank v. Bridgers, 98 N. C. 67, 3 S. E. 828, 2 Am. St. Rep. 317, Mrs. Bridgers, whose original note was held to be void, because given during her coverture, gave a new note after she became discover, which was founded upon a fresh consideration. She was held to be bound by the second note, because it was a new transaction, based upon a sufficient legal consideration. The Martin Act, when properly considered, in my judgment, is not applicable to the facts of this case. It is conceded that the deed of this lady, who was a married woman when it was executed, is void, not having the assent of her husband, and her valid privy examination not having been taken, and yet it is proposed to hold her bound by it as a contract and to compel her to do by our decree what the law plainly and positively forbids. This is not an action for damages, but we are now dealing directly with her land, with a view of taking it from her, whether by deed or decree, without the formalities and ceremonies which the law expressly and imperatively requires to be observed. What is forbidden to be done directly cannot be done indirectly. The anomaly thus presented was surely not contemplated by the act of 1911, and was not in the mind of its able and learned author when he formulated it. Her deed is absolutely void, and is a nullity. Ex nihilo nihil fit.

It is suggested that this instrument, in form and substance a deed, may operate as a contract to sell. But if this be so, and I must deny its correctness, it makes no difference in the result, because by the statute (Revisal, §§ 952 and 953) a contract to sell the wife's land, without the written assent of the husband, is just as void as if it were treated only as a deed. The husband and wife cannot execute the deed or contract by separate instruments. They must execute it jointly, and then the probate, as to both, can be taken by different officers at different times and places. But here there was no good execution, and, whether treated as a deed or a contract, the instrument was an absolute nullity, or, as the court says in Scott v. Battle, supra, it is so utterly void that it has no more force or effect than a "blank piece of paper." I am unable to see how a paper absolutely void can be vitalized by the husband's death, without anything being thereafter done by the wife, which, in law, imparts life to it. The mere fact of the husband's death does not by any principle of law known to our jurisprudence produce any such effect. The Martin Act is far from warranting the assumption that the deed of a married woman can thus be made to operate as her contract. And a majority of the court, as I understand it, take this view; the disagreement between them being only as to whether there was a ratification.

But it is now strenuously urged that she is bound by her void deed, even as a deed, and not merely as an executory contract, because she has ratified it after her discover. How and why? Judge Guion took no such position, when he entered judgment upon the agreed facts. He held her bound by it, not as a deed but as a contract to convey, which fell within the operation of the Laws of 1911, c. 109; but that view does not meet with the concurrence of a majority of this court, and the judgment cannot be affirmed unless the feme is equitably estopped, by her acts or conduct, to allege the invalidity of her deed, or, for the same reason, she has ratified the same. A naked ratification, or admission of her liability, by words will not do, if it is oral, because, as all the cases show, it would be void by the statute of frauds, and we would permit her land to pass to another in clear violation of all our statutes (Price v. Hart, 29 Mo. 171); and besides, it would contain no element of an equitable estoppel (Brown v. Bennett, 75 Pa. 420). I have examined the authorities upon this subject carefully and exhaustively, and find that, in every case where it was held that a married woman, who had become discover, was bound because of ratification, there was some element of fraud or, at least, of an estoppel, which made it inequitable that she should be allowed to disavow or repudiate, her deed, or there was formal ratification by a binding written instrument. It is said in Price v. Hart, supra:

"That deed, not having been acknowledged according to law, had no validity as a deed against Mrs. Collins, and, as a contract, could not bind her, as she was at the time of its execution feme covert. Although a nullity in the law, it had, however, a physical existence; and as it contained a distinct account of the sale of the land, a minute description of the land itself, and a specification of the terms of sale, it might very well have been adopted, or ratified, by a subsequent agreement, if that subsequent agreement was in the form required by the law. In such case it is obvious that the binding force of the contract is in the subsequent agreement and not in the deed, and the agreement must therefore be in writing. If the deed can be adopted or set up by a mere parol declaration, made by Mrs. Collins after the removal of her disability of coverture, it would seem to let in all the evils which the statute was designed to guard against."

In order to bind the feme by her deed, which was an absolute nullity when it was executed, as all our cases admit, there must either be a new consideration for her promise to ratify it (Bank v. Bridgers, supra), or she must be prevented from setting up its invalidity by an estoppel in pais; but she is not estopped where she has done nothing which has misled another into acting to his prejudice.

"Estoppel by misrepresentation, or equitable estoppel (which is estoppel in pais), grows out of such conduct of a party as absolutely precludes him, both at law and in equity, from asserting rights which might perhaps have otherwise existed, either of property, of contract, or of remedy, as against another person who in good faith relied upon such conduct, and has been led thereby to change his position for the worse, and who on his part acquires some corresponding right either by contract or of remedy. This estoppel arises when any one, by his acts, representations, or admissions, or by his silence when he ought to speak out, intentionally or through culpable negligence induces another to believe certain facts to exist, and such other rightfully relies and acts on such belief, so that he will be prejudiced if the former is permitted to deny the existence of such facts. It consists in holding for truth a representation acted upon, when the person who made it, or his privies, seeks to deny its truth and to deprive the party who has acted upon it of the benefit obtained." 16 Cyc. 722; Boddie v. Bond, 154 N. C. 359, 70 S. E. 824; Id., 158 N. C. 204, 73 S. E. 988; Patillo v. Lytle, 158 N. C. 95, 73 S. E. 200.

"The representation must have been acted upon to the damage of the party acting. It is not enough that the representation has been barely acted upon, for, if no substantial prejudice would result by admitting the party who made it to contradict it, he will not be estopped." Bigelow on Estoppel, 23.

"The law * * * does not favor estoppels, and as to estoppels by matter in pais it may be said that, unless a person has induced another by representations or declarations to alter his position injuriously to himself, he will not be estopped. * * * The fundamental principle on which the doctrine of estoppel rests is an equitable one—a principle which is intended to suppress fraud and to compel just and fair dealings between all. On no principle of fair dealing and equity can it be held that one should be estopped to protect his rights in a matter because of his * * * conduct in reference thereto and upon which another has acted, but without prejudice to his interests. It cannot, with consistency, be said that a man has taken advantage of his own wrong where his statements have not damaged or injured another." Rainey v. Hines, 120 N. C. 376, 27 S. E. 92; Lovelace v. Carpenter, 115 N. C. 424, 20 S. E. 511; Eaton's Equity, p. 169.

There has been no formal ratification in writing. What then has been done to validate her deed? The act of advertising did not, as it prejudiced no one, having been withdrawn before any sale. I have not been able to recall any legal principle that holds her bound by these acts, as a ratification, or an estoppel, and she has not ratified otherwise. The tender of the money surely could not have that effect, because that was not her act, but the gratuitous act of the defendant, and she declined to accept the tender and receive the money, which was a distinct repudiation of her void deed, instead of being a ratification of it.

The court may require her to surrender the note and mortgage, as was suggested in Scott v. Battle, supra, 85 N. C. at page 192, 39 Am. Rep. 694, if she has them in her possession or under her control; but there is no reason, either in law or in equity, why it should go beyond this requirement, which will place all parties in statu quo, and no prejudice will be done to any one.

It is manifest that the plaintiff withdrew the property from sale, because, at the time she advertised the same, she was not aware of her rights, but supposed that her deed was valid, and, as soon as she discovered her mistake, she promptly asserted her right by refusing to accept the money tendered and discontinued the prosecution of the sale. This was a repudiation of the deed, rather than a ratification of it, and she has misled or deceived no one, and certainly no prejudice has resulted, and none will follow if the papers are surrendered. The court, in its judgment, can make this a condition precedent to a recovery or a writ of possession.

It must be remembered that the opinion in Warren v. Dall, supra, was confined strictly to the question whether action for damages would lie on a broken contract to convey land made by a married woman, and it was recognized by the learned justice who spoke for the court that the doctrine there considered would not apply to her deed, or so as to compel her to execute a deed for the land, under her contract to do so.

HOKE, J., concurs in this dissenting opinion.

(178 N. C. 417)

(100 S.E.)

GUILFORD LUMBER MFG. CO. et al. v.
HOLLADAY et al. (No. 394.)(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 5, 1919.)1. MECHANICS' LIENS ¶315—RIGHTS OF OWNER AGAINST CONTRACTOR'S SURETY.

Owner of building held not entitled to compel surety on the bond of the contractor to erect the building to make good to it the sum it was required to pay materialmen on account of failure to retain money to satisfy such claims, as required by Pell's Revisal, § 2021, when settling with the contractor; the liability not coming within the bond.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS ¶315—RECOVERY
FROM CONTRACTOR'S SURETY OF AMOUNTS PAID MATERIALMEN.

The owner of a building, which, after notice, in violation of Pell's Revisal, § 2021, paid to the contractor to erect the building the full amount due him when he owed materialmen, held not entitled to recover from the surety on the contractor's bond the amounts it was required to pay the materialmen, since to permit recovery would be to predicate the owner's right of action on its own breach of statute.

3. CONTRACTS ¶167—INVOLVING PERFORMANCE OF DUTY.

When a statute provides a duty, and a contract is made involving performance of the duty, the statute becomes part of the contract.

4. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ¶115(1)—PERSONAL SURETY NOT LIABLE AFTER SURRENDER OF SECURITY.

A principal is not allowed to surrender the security which it holds for the performance of a bond, and then to hold the personal surety on the bond liable for it.

5. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ¶115(1)—CREDITOR PARTING WITH FUND APPLICABLE TO OBLIGATION EXONERATES SURETY.

Where a creditor without the consent of the surety parts with a fund he has the right to apply in satisfaction of the obligation, the surety is exonerated to the extent of the value of the fund.

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Lane, Judge.

Action by the Guilford Lumber Manufacturing Company and others against M. L. Holladay, the Greensboro College for Women, and J. L. Armfield, trading as the Gate City Trust Company. From judgment against defendant Armfield in favor of the college, Armfield appeals. Reversed.

Raper & Raper, of Lexington, for appellant Armfield.

T. C. Hoyle, of Greensboro, for Greensboro College for Women.

BROWN, J. This action was brought by plaintiffs, who are materialmen, against the contractor, Holladay, the Greensboro College for Women, which owned the building, and one Armfield, surety on the contractor's bond. The plaintiffs were awarded judgment against the college, the owner of the building, for the amounts of their claims, and the college was awarded judgment against the surety, Armfield, for the amount it is compelled to pay the plaintiffs. The controversy is between the college and the defendant Armfield, surety upon the bond of Holladay, the contractor.

These facts were found by the referee and adopted by the court. Briefly stated, they are:

Greensboro College for Women contracted with M. L. Holladay to erect for it a dormitory building. The contractor executed to the college a bond, with Armfield, surety, conditioned as follows:

"Now, therefore, the condition of the above obligation is such that if the above bounden, M. L. Holladay, shall construct said building in accordance with said contract, plans, and specifications heretofore designated, and shall supply such labor and material as is named in said contract, and shall fully indemnify and save harmless Greensboro College for Women for all costs and damages which it may suffer by reason of said Holladay's failure to do so, and shall fully reimburse and pay to said Greensboro College for Women all outlay and expenses which it may incur in making good said default (which outlay and expense shall include attorney's fees and increased compensation of architect, if on account of such default said College shall be compelled to employ counsel to defend itself, or pay additional compensation to the architect); then in such case this bond shall be null and void; otherwise to be in full force and effect."

The contractor completed the building according to contract, and college accepted the same.

Upon completion of the building, Holladay, the contractor, gave to the college a complete statement of amounts and persons to whom he was indebted for material, giving names of plaintiffs.

After this notice the college made up settlement with Holladay and found it was due him $4,800, which was more than the amount he owed for material, as per his statement.

The college then paid this amount to the contractor, Holladay, and he failed to apply the money to the materialmen.

The plaintiffs the materialmen make no claim against the surety upon the contractor's bond. Under the statute they obtained judgment against the college, the owner of the building, and their claims were properly declared a lien thereon. The question presented upon this appeal is this: Can the college compel Armfield, the surety on the contractor Holladay's bond, to make good to it the sum it is required to pay the plaintiffs on account of its failure to retain the money when settling with the contractor?

We are of opinion that the college cannot recover against the surety on the contractor's bond, upon two grounds:

[1] I. The liability sought to be enforced does not come within the terms and conditions of the bond. The bond provides that the contractor, Holladay, shall construct the building in accordance with the contract, plans, and specifications furnished, and shall supply such labor and material as is named in the contract, indemnify and save harmless the college from all costs and damages which it may suffer by reason of said Holladay's failure to do so. The bond further provides that the surety shall fully reimburse and pay to said college all outlay and expenses which it may incur in making good said default. According to the admitted facts, Holladay has fully complied with every one of the conditions named in the bond. He has constructed the building in accordance with contracted plans and specifications. He has supplied the labor and the kind of material specified in the contract. There is nothing required of Holladay in the language of that bond which, so far as the college is concerned, Holladay has not performed. He completed the building according to contract, and the college accepted the same. Holladay gave to the college the full statement of the amount and persons to whom he was indebted for material, giving the names of the plaintiffs who are materialmen. After receiving this notice, the college had a full settlement with Holladay and found that it owed him $4,800, which is more than the amount he owed for material. The college then voluntarily, without any sort of compulsion, paid this money to Holladay, trusting to him to apply the money to the satisfaction of the claims of the materialmen, which Holladay failed to do. It is thus evident to us, from the facts as found, that Holladay has fully performed the contract, and that under the terms of the bond the college cannot recover of the surety.

[2] II. The second ground, which we think bars a recovery, is equally as strong.

The contention of the surety is that under the express terms of the law the owner was required, upon settlement with contractor and upon notice from the contractor, to withhold payment from contractor, and pay directly to materialmen the amounts due them.

The college, having, after notice, in violation of the provisions of the law, paid to Holladay, cannot now recover for its wrongful payment of the surety.

The law requires the contractor, before receiving the contract price, to furnish a statement of persons and amounts he owes for material. Pell's Revisal, § 2021.

When a statement was made, as was done in this case, the law provides:

"It shall be the duty of the owner to retain from the money then due the contractor a sum not exceeding the price contracted for, which will be sufficient to pay * * * such person for material furnished, which said amount the owner shall pay directly to the * * * person furnishing materials."

This section was amended, Laws 1913, c. 150, § 4, by adding thereto:

"And after the notice herein provided for no payment to the contractor shall be a credit on or discharge of the lien herein provided."

[3-5] The contention that the statute was not enacted for the benefit of the surety cannot be maintained. It was enacted primarily for the protection of materialmen and laborers upon the building, but it also protects the owner of the building as well as the surety upon the contractor's bond. When a statute provides a duty and a contract is made involving a performance of that duty, the statute becomes part of the contract. 13 Corpus Juris, 560, § 523; N. P. R. R. Co. v. Wall, 241 U. S. 523, 36 Sup. Ct. 493, 60 L. Ed. 905. This statute existed at the time of making the contract between the college and the surety, Armfield. It entered into and formed a part of it for the benefit and protection of all the parties. O'Kelly v. Williams, 84 N. C. 281; Graves v. Howard, 159 N. C. 594, 75 S. E. 998, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 565. The provisions of the statute are plain and explicit, and all persons entering into building contracts, including the surety, are supposed to contract with reference to existing law. In this case it was the plain duty of the college to withhold the sum necessary to pay these materialmen, as the law directed that the college retain the money and pay it to the person to whom it was due. When it paid the money to Holladay, instead of retaining it, when it had full notice of the existence of claims of the materialmen, it was a direct violation of its duty, and it would be inequitable to allow the college to take advantage of its own wrong and compel the surety to make good the default. He had a right to assume that the college would obey the statute, retain the money, and apply it to the claims of the materialmen. When the college paid the money belonging to the materialmen over to Holladay, trusting him to settle with the materialmen, it made Holladay its agent for that purpose, and whatever loss is sustained, it must bear. It is elementary that a principal is not allowed to surrender the security which it holds for the performance of a bond, and then hold the personal surety on the bond liable for it. The principal would have to account for the value of the property wrongfully surrendered. Upon this principle a principal in a note cannot release one of the sureties without releasing all. A mortgagor may not cancel the mortgage and still hold the surety upon the note secured in the mortgage. It is well settled that where the creditor without consent of the surety parts with a fund which he has the right to apply in satisfaction of an obligation, the surety on the bond is exonerated to the extent of the value of such fund. The reason is that the fund is impressed with a trust for the payment of the debt and the creditor is bound to apply it for the benefit of the surety. Carriage Co. v. Dowd, 155 N. C. 307, 71 S. E. 721.

In Cooper v. Wilcox, 22 N. C. 90, 32 Am. Dec. 695, it is said:

"Between the creditor and a surety, the former is not bound to active diligence to protect the latter; but, if by his act he deprives him of a security, the latter is pro tanto discharged." Bell v. Howerton, 111 N. C. 69, 15 S. E. 891; Purvis v. Carstaphan, 73 N. C. 575.

According to law, as well as under the terms of the building contract, the college had the right, and it was its duty, to retain this money and apply it to the payment of the materialmen. It failed to do so, but paid it over to Holladay and trusted him to discharge these claims. The college cannot now take advantage of its own wrong. Having failed to perform its duty, it must bear the resulting loss.

Reversed

(178 N. C. 353)

BLAYLOCK v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.
(No. 322.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 29, 1919.)

1. CARRIERS §271—DUTY TO STOP TRAIN AT STATION CALLED FOR BY TICKET.

It is the duty of a common carrier receiving a passenger on its train with a ticket calling for a certain station, and without notice the train does not stop there, to stop the train at the station and permit the passenger to alight.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR §927(3)—CONSIDERATION OF EVIDENCE ON MOTION FOR NONSUIT.

The Supreme Court can consider only evidence favorable to plaintiff on motion for judgment of nonsuit, or on exception to the trial court's refusal to direct the jury to answer an issue in the negative, for defendant, if they believe the evidence.

3. CARRIERS §277(2)—WRONGFUL FAILURE TO TRANSPORT TO DESTINATION.

Where a railroad's passenger purchased a ticket to a certain point, and boarded a train without notice that it did not stop at such point, her cause of action was complete when she was required to leave the train before reaching her destination, and she had the right to recover at least nominal damages, irrespective of any subsequent contributory negligence on her part.

4. CARRIERS §276(2)—EVIDENCE IN ACTION FOR FAILURE TO TRANSPORT TO DESTINATION.

In a woman's action against a railroad for failure to transport her to the destination for which she bought tickets, and for having put her off at an intermediate point, plaintiff's evidence as to the condition of her health at the time of the injury complained of, and subsequently, was competent on the issue of damages.

5. CARRIERS §277(1)—REMOTE DAMAGES FROM FAILURE TO TRANSPORT TO DESTINATION.

A woman who purchased a railroad ticket and boarded a train which would not stop at her destination, so that she was compelled to get off at an intermediate station, where she might have changed trains and have been carried to destination, though having a cause of action for the railroad's failure to transport her, could not recover for injuries she received by reason of going to destination on a street car from the intermediate point.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alamance County; Lynn, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Daisy Blaylock against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. New trial.

This is an action to recover damages for wrongfully ejecting the plaintiff from the train of the defendant at Greensboro.

The plaintiff alleges that on December 22, 1917, she went to the station of defendant in Graham, accompanied by two children, one 2 and one 10 years of age, to go to Terra Cotta on a visit; that she bought one whole and one half ticket, and upon inquiry was informed by the agent that the train she was taking went by Terra Cotta and stopped there; that she got on the train, and when the conductor took up her ticket, he told her she would have to get off that train at Greensboro; that it did not stop at Terra Cotta.

The defendant answered, and admitted selling the tickets; denied that its agent told plaintiff that the train she was taking, which passed Graham about 11 a. m., stopped at Terra Cotta; alleged that said train was not scheduled to, and never had been scheduled to, stop at Terra Cotta.

It averred that train 21, which plaintiff took from Graham, according to its published, advertised schedule, did not stop at Terra Cotta, and that no train that passed Graham did stop at Terra Cotta; that the proper way to go to Terra Cotta was to leave Graham on the train which plaintiff left on, change at Greensboro to a train that left Greensboro about 2 o'clock p. m., and arrived at Terra Cotta about 2:11 p. m.; that plaintiff left on the proper train, and that defendant maintained a comfortable station in Greensboro for plaintiff to wait in, and a comfortable train for plaintiff to go to Terra Cotta on; and that these were all in existence and operating on the day plaintiff left Graham.

Defendant further pleaded that plaintiff by her own conduct brought about any injury which she sustained by reason of exposure because of said street car trip; that she voluntarily left the station in Greensboro and went to Pomona on a street car, and then walked to her home instead of going on the train upon which she held a ticket, and which was provided by defendant to carry her to Terra Cotta.

Both parties introduced evidence in support of the allegations in the pleadings and the plaintiff also testified that she had gone to Terra Cotta from Graham before this on the same train, and to her injuries, most of which were sustained by reason of going to Pomona on the street car. The defendant excepted to the evidence of damage after the plaintiff left the train, and also to evidence of the physical condition of the plaintiff at the time of the injury complained of.

The defendant requested the court to charge the jury as follows:

"(1) If you find the facts to be as testified to by the witnesses, you will answer the first issue, 'No.' (Refused, and defendant excepted.)

"(2) If you find the facts to be as testified to by witnesses, you will answer the second issue, 'Yes.' (Refused, and the defendant excepted.)

"(3) If you find from the evidence in this case that plaintiff failed to inquire in the station at Greensboro or from the conductor as to a train leaving Greensboro that would stop at Terra Cotta, and that because of such failure and want of knowledge on her part she took the street car, then any injury she sustained by reason of taking said street car you should not consider as damages sustained by plaintiff because of negligence of defendant." (Refused, and defendant excepted.)

The jury returned the following verdict:

"(1) Did the defendant company wrongfully eject plaintiff from the train as alleged in the complaint? Yes.

"(2) Did the plaintiff, by her own negligence, contribute to any and all injuries which she sustained? No.

"(3) What damage, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover of the defendant? $950."

Judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant appealed.

Parker & Long, of Graham, for appellant.
W. H. Carroll, of Burlington, and R. C. Strudwick, of Greensboro, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. [1] Under the authorities in this state it is the duty of a common carrier, receiving a passenger on its trains with a ticket calling for a certain station, and without notice that the train does not stop at that station, to stop the train at the station and permit the passenger to alight. It was so held in Hutchinson v. Railroad, 140 N. C. 128, 52 S. E. 263, 6 Ann. Cas. 22, which has been affirmed frequently, notably in Elliott v. Railroad, 166 N. C. 483, 82 S. E. 854, in which Brown, J., says:

"It is the settled law of this state that where a common carrier receives a passenger upon its train, with a ticket calling for a certain station, it is the duty of the railroad company to stop the train at such station, even though the passenger did not know that this particular train did not stop at such station."

It is also said in the latter case, quoting from Thompson on Carriers, § 66:

"Carrying a passenger beyond his destination in disregard of his request to be put off there will afford a good ground of action, and this though no bodily harm, mental suffering, insult, oppression, or pecuniary loss be shown." Hutchinson v. Railroad, 140 N. C. 124, 52 S. E. 263, 6 Ann. Cas. 22.

—and the same principle imposes liability on the carrier for wrongfully failing to carry the passenger to his destination.

It is also held in Mace v. Railroad, 151 N. C. 404, 66 S. E. 342, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1178, Norman v. Railroad, 161 N. C. 338, 77 S. E. 345, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 917, Hallman v. Railroad, 169 N. C. 130, 85 S. E. 298, and White v. Railroad, 172 N. C. 31, 89 S. E. 788, that the passenger has the right to rely on the representation made by the agent selling the ticket, and that the carrier is responsible for injuries brought about by his mistake.

The White Case is strikingly like the case before us. In that case the evidence tended to prove that on November 19, 1914, the plaintiff, accompanied by her daughter purchased from the defendant's agent at Mackeys Ferry a ticket to Chapanoke, upon the assurance of the agent that the ticket was good for continuous passage upon the through train of the defendant, which passed Mackeys Ferry about 1 o'clock.

The plaintiff's husband, by arrangement, met this through train at Chapanoke to carry his wife to their home, some distance in the country. As the plaintiff did not arrive on this train, the husband returned home. When this train of the defendant which runs from New Bern to Norfolk and passes Mackeys Ferry, arrived at Edenton, the conductor for the first time informed her that this train did not stop at Chapanoke, and told the plaintiff that if she did not get off at Edenton he would carry her on to some other point.

Plaintiff was compelled to get off at Edenton and take the next train, an hour or more later, which was a local train and stopped at Chapanoke. When she arrived at Chapanoke her husband had gone home. It was a rainy, blustery day, and plaintiff was subjected to much inconvenience by reason of having to change trains at Edenton.

The court overruled a motion to nonsuit and said:

"The plaintiff had the right to rely upon the assurance of the agent that the train which she took at Mackeys Ferry would stop at Chapanoke to put her off. It was the duty of the agent, when he sold a ticket to Chapanoke, to inform the plaintiff that she would have to take a local train at Edenton and would ar rive at Chapanoke some time after the other train had passed. Upon the assurance of the defendant's agent, the plaintiff had reason to believe that she would meet her husband there to take her and her little daughter to their home. Hutchinson v. Railroad, 140 N. C. 125 [52 S. E. 263, 6 Ann. Cas. 22], and cases cited."

[2] The plaintiff brings her case well within these principles, as her evidence is to the effect that she went to the station of the defendant at Graham on December 22, 1917, with two small children, that she purchased tickets for Terra Cotta, and was told by the agent the train she was about to take stopped at Terra Cotta; that she had gone on the same train before, and it stopped at this place; that the conductor told her the train did not stop at Terra Cotta, and required her to leave the train at Greensboro; that the train did not stop at Terra Cotta that day; that her mother was at the station to meet her; that she suffered serious injury; and, as we can consider only the evidence favorable to the plaintiff on a motion for judgment of nonsuit or on an exception to the refusal to direct the jury to answer the first issue "No" if they believe the evidence, there is no error in the failure to give the first instruction prayed for.

[3] And the same result follows as to the prayer on the issue of contributory negligence, because, the jury having found the facts according to the contentions of the plaintiff, her cause of action was complete when she was required to leave the train at Greensboro, and she then had the right to recover at least nominal damages, and up to that time there is neither allegation nor proof of contributory negligence.

If she had a good cause of action, entitling her to nominal damages, when she left the train, her subsequent conduct in going on the street car is material on the issue of damages and not on the issue of contributory negligence.

[4] The evidence of the plaintiff as to the condition of her health at the time of the injury complained of and subsequent thereto was competent on the issue of damages.

[5] The other exceptions to evidence and to the failure to give certain instructions are to the refusal to eliminate the injuries sustained by the plaintiff by reason of going to Pomona on the street car from the issue of damages, and in this respect we are of opinion there is error.

"In torts the damages must be the legal and natural consequences of the wrongful act, and such as according to common experience and the usual course of events might have been reasonably anticipated. If the cause is remote in efficiency and does not naturally result from the tort, it will not be considered as proximate. To be such it must be 'a cause that produced the result in continuous sequence and without which it would not have occurred, and one from which any man of ordinary prudence could have foreseen that such a result was probable under all the facts as they existed.' Ramsbottom v. Railroad, 138 N. C. 42 [50 S. E. 448]; Brewster v. Elizabeth City, 137 N. C. 392 [49 S. E. 885]." Garland v. Railroad, 172 N. C. 639, 90 S. E. 779, L. R. A. 1917B, 706.

Following this rule, it has been held that damages were too remote, and could not be recovered for exposure and injuries caused by walking from Toecane to Bakersville, when there had been negligence in transmitting a telegram requiring a car to meet the plaintiff at Toecane (Young v. Tel. Co., 168 N. C. 36, 84 S. E. 45); for exposure in a storm while walking from Toecane to her home, the defendant having negligently carried her beyond her station (Garland v. Railroad, 172 N. C. 638, 90 S. E. 779, L. R. A. 1917B, 706); for injuries sustained by falling in a cattle guard while walking from Minneapolis to Cranberry, there being evidence that the defendant negligently failed to stop its train for the plaintiff at Minneapolis when signaled to do so (Brown v. R. R., 174 N. C. 694, 94 S. E. 431).

These authorities are cited and approved in Johnson v. Tel. Co., 177 N. C. 31, 97 S. E. 757, in which the plaintiff sued to recover damages for negligence in the delivery of a telegram, and as a part of his damage alleged injuries sustained while riding on a freight train and when walking from Dillsboro to Franklin, and the court, in denying a recovery for these injuries, said:

"Without going into the details of the injuries and sufferings endured by the plaintiff on the freight train and in attempting to walk from Dillsboro to Franklin, it is sufficient to say that in no sense can the delay in the delivery of the telegram be deemed a proximate cause of such injuries. * * * The defendant could not have foreseen, or contemplated, that if the message was not delivered the plaintiff would seek transportation by freight, nor that he would be roughly handled on such trip. Still less could the defendant be responsible for the plaintiff undertaking to walk from Dillsboro to Franklin. * * * Both these grounds of alleged damage are too remote and speculative. It is a settled principle that the law looks to the immediate and not the remote cause of damage, the maxim being, 'Causa proxima, sed non remota, spectatur.' The cause of the damage on the freight train was the negligence of the carrier either in the handling of its train or in the defective condition of its roadbed or equipment. The cause of the overfatigue in attempting to walk out from Dillsboro was the mountainous road and the lack of physical strength in the plaintiff to endure the fatigue, and still more his own bad judgment in attempting to walk so long a distance."

The plaintiff reached Greensboro about 12 o'clock and left the train at the depot where there was a waiting room. A local train of the defendant left this depot at 2 o'clock, and if she had taken it, she would have reached Terra Cotta about 2:11 o'clock, but instead of waiting, and without making inquiry of any one, she took a street car for Pomona, one-fourth mile from Terra Cotta, which she reached about 2:30 o'clock, and it is for injuries on the street car and while walking from Pomona she asks a recovery. They are too remote, and could not have been foreseen or anticipated.

New trial.

(178 N. C. 348)

KIRKPATRICK v. CRUTCHFIELD.
(No. 327.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 22, 1919.)

1. ASSAULT AND BATTERY ⚡27—EVIDENCE OF TRESPASS AS DEFENSE.

In action for assault during dispute as to whether plaintiff had a right to tie cows on certain land, plaintiff, being charged with trespass, had the right to explain her claim of right and to show her good faith.

2. TRESPASS ⚡8—REMOVAL OF COWS FROM TREES WHERE TIED FORCIBLE TRESPASS.

Where the owners of cows had securely tied cows to trees, it was forcible trespass for lessee of land to take cows away, against will of owners of cows, who were present and forbidding him from doing so; the cows being in actual possession of and under immediate personal control of their owners, in law, and lessee having no right to impound cows, under Revisal 1905, § 1879, since they were not running at large.

3. TRESPASS ⚡8—FORCIBLE REMOVAL OF COWS.

Where owners of cows had tied them on certain land with permission of person in possession thereof, one who claimed to be entitled to the land had no right to attempt to forcibly remove cows; his right being a resort to legal proceedings.

4. ASSAULT AND BATTERY ⚡2—CIVIL LIABILITY FOR ASSAULT ON WOMAN.

Under Revisal 1905, § 3620, as amended by Laws 1911, c. 193, man, who took hold of cow chain, jerked down woman, who had hold of other end, and dragged her on ground, injuring her, committed an assault upon the woman, and is liable for injuries sustained.

5. ASSAULT AND BATTERY ⚡15—USE OF FORCE TO RESIST TAKING OF PROPERTY.

Owner of cow, who had tied cow to trees with permission of one who claimed to be in possession of the land, had the right to prevent another person, claiming right to possession of land, from forcibly taking cow from her against her will, and to use all necessary force for that purpose.

6. DAMAGES ⚡38—EFFECT ON EARNING CAPACITY FROM PERSONAL INJURIES.

Wife, suing for personal injuries, was entitled to recover for loss of earning capacity.

7. ASSAULT AND BATTERY ⚡43(4)—INSTRUCTION AS TO BURDEN OF PROOF OF PLAINTIFF.

In action for injuries growing out of an assault, court, in charging that burden was on plaintiff to satisfy jury by evidence that her injuries were caused by wrongful acts of defendant, did not commit reversible error by failure to add "by the greater weight of the evidence."

8. TRIAL ⚡295(11)—INSTRUCTION AS TO EFFECT OF PERSONAL INJURIES ON EARNING CAPACITY.

In wife's action for personal injuries, instruction that jury "had the right to consider her reduced capacity to make a living" held correct, in view of charge as a whole.

9. DAMAGES ⚡167—EXPECTANCY OF LIFE CONSIDERED ON QUESTION OF REDUCED EARNING CAPACITY.

In personal injury action, jury, in compensating plaintiff for her reduced earning capacity, had the right to consider her expectancy of life.

10. DAMAGES ⚡100—REDUCTION OF EARNINGS FROM PERSONAL INJURIES.

In personal injury action, plaintiff was entitled to recover the present net value of the difference between what she would have earned and what she has been able to earn in her present condition.

11. EVIDENCE ⚡106(1)—WITNESSES ⚡333—CORROBORATIVE TESTIMONY OF CHARACTER OF WITNESSES.

Evidence of good character of the plaintiff and defendant and other witnesses is not substantive evidence, but is corroborative evidence, for purpose of better enabling jury to pass upon the truthfulness of the witnesses whose character is proven to be good.

12. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⚡209(2)—WIFE'S RIGHT TO SUE FOR PERSONAL INJURIES.

In view of Revisal 1905, § 408, subd. 1, and Laws 1913, c. 13, a wife may bring an action to recover for personal injuries.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alamance County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Eulalia Kirkpatrick against J. M. Crutchfield. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. No error.

This was an action by the plaintiff, 33 years old, the mother of two children and living with her husband, who is not made a party plaintiff. The defendant was living near by and cultivating a crop on lands of the Southern Power Company, which he had leased for one year, and one William Boswell had also rented a portion of this land and was in possession of it. Said Boswell gave permission to the plaintiff to tie her cows there in a place where there was shrubbery and trees, but no crops planted. The defendant came to where the cows were tied, armed with a long whip, and in a rude, angry, and insulting manner, as plaintiff contends, and demanded to know why the cows were tied there. The evidence of the plaintiff was that the defendant knew her husband was not at home, that the defendant became enraged and swore that Boswell had no authority to give her permission, and proceeded to untie a cow when the plaintiff forbade him to do so, but he persisted, and while the plaintiff had hold of one end of the chain the defendant violently snatched it, jerking her down, and dragged her upon the ground, inflicting many wounds and bruises upon her; that he then proceeded to untie the other cow, and again in a violent, angry, and malicious manner jerked the chain from the plaintiff's hand, dragging her 75 feet or more, and in the course of this assault he jerked her through a barbed wire fence into the public road, tearing her clothes almost off her, and terribly wounding her limbs and body. This evidence was corroborated by one Frank Baldwin, and the testimony of the four physicians was that the plaintiff was at that time in a delicate condition, and on account of the injuries inflicted upon her she had a miscarriage and was permanently injured and made a nervous wreck for life. The defendant gave a different version.

The jury found, upon the issues submitted, that the defendant wrongfully assaulted and wounded the plaintiff as alleged in the complaint, and assessed her actual damages at $4,000, and defendant appealed. Judgment thereon for plaintiff.

Following is the whole charge of the court, referred to in opinion:

This is an action brought by Mrs. Eulalia Kirkpatrick against J. M. Crutchfield to recover damages for alleged assault made on her by the defendant.

The plaintiff contends the evidence shows, and that you should so find, that on the 27th day of June, of last year, she and her mother-in-law had a cow each tied out on a little strip of land just across the road from her house. She contends that the land was not hers, but that it was woodland, and that it was not being cultivated by any one, and that Mr. Boswell, who lived on this land, having rented the house from the power company, gave her permission to tie her cow for grazing purposes on that little strip of woodland; contends that Boswell himself had his cow tied out there, or had had, without the objection of any one, and contends that Boswell was the true owner, or rather entitled to the true possession, of that strip of land; contends that the defendant, Crutchfield, had only the farming land rented, as was evidenced by his contract that he was to have one-third of what he made.

She contends that on this morning, while her husband was away, she saw the defendant over there untying her mother-in-law's cow; that her mother-in-law was out there, and she heard some conversation, and she went to the scene; that when she got there, about the time the defendant had untied the first cow, that she grabbed the end of the chain and told him she would take the cows off, if there was any objection to their staying there, and to turn the cow loose; that he replied that he would not, that he was going to take them to his home, and have damages for what they had done.

She contends that the cow could not possibly have damaged him or any one else, that they were simply grazing on land that was uncultivated and was not used for any purpose, except that Boswell used it for the purpose of pasturing his cow.

She contends that he jerked her down while they had hold of the chain of the first cow and dragged her some considerable distance, and that she finally got that cow away from him, or he turned it loose, and then she turned it loose, and the cow was driven by her mother-in-law across the road to their home; that he then made for her cow, and that she grabbed the end of the chain and wrapped it around her wrist, that she might hold onto it, and that the defendant jerked the chain, jerked her down several times, bruised her body, limbs, arms, and legs, and that she had hold of the end of the chain, and the defendant had the chain between her and the cow, and as he would jerk the cow would back, or stand still when they were standing still, and that by jerking and dragging he finally got her to the wire fence, and that the wire fence was built just at the foot or on the decline of the hill going into the road, and that she backed herself up against that fence for the purpose of holding onto the cow, and that he fetched her a jerk, not a push, but a jerk, that jerked her down, and that she rolled under the fence, and that it was a barbed wire fence, and that her clothes were torn and she was bruised by falling under the fence; that when she fell, and was under there prostrate, she called for a stick, and the defendant said, "There is one," and she said there was a little rotten limb there, and she remarked that was not big enough, and some one told her there was a shovel, and she picked up the shovel and threw it at the defendant, and that then he turned the cow loose, and that she took the cow and carried it home.

She contends that at the time, although she did not know it at the time, she was pregnant, and that the jerking and bruising she received shocked her nervous system, and she became ill from the effect of the wounds that she received; that she sent for a doctor, and she continued to get no better for about six days; she said she was able to get up and help a little around the breakfast table when they were threshing wheat, and she went out where they were threshing wheat, for about 20 or 25 minutes, and sat in a chair and held the bag open, but she continued to grow worse and sent for a doctor, and was finally carried to the hospital about August or September, and on examination it was discovered she was pregnant, and had been, and that the fetus or child in her womb had become destroyed; and that she had had her menses from the time of this occurrence up to that time, and that an operation had to be performed; contends that she suffered great physical pain and mental anguish in consequence of the injuries that she had received; contends that she is permanently injured, that her health has been affected, and that she has become anemic; that she is not physically strong; that she is not able to do the work that she was able to do before this occurrence; contends that up to that time she milked the cows and did her household work, and had given birth to two children, but since that time that she has been unable to even milk the cows, or to do the cooking for herself and family; that her husband has that to do.

Now, that is what the plaintiff contends that this evidence shows, and that you should so find.

Defendant contends that he was not guilty of any wrongdoing, that he had the place rented, and that the plaintiff's chickens, and other chickens around there, had been disturbing his oat patch, not on this land, but on another patch of land, and he had notified them to keep their stock and chickens off his premises; contends that the mule of the husband of plaintiff had eaten his corn, and he had been paid 50 cents for that by the husband of this plaintiff. He contends, when he saw the cows hitched there in this strip of woods, he went there with the intention of taking them to his house and making the plaintiff and her mother-in-law pay damages, and he untied the first cow, and the plaintiff came up and took hold of the end of the chain, and that she did the pulling and jerking, and that he never did anything that would cause her any injury, and that she finally got that cow, and it went home. That he attempted to take the other cow, and did get the other cow unfastened; that the plaintiff got hold of that one and pulled and jerked the cow, going in the direction of her house when the cow was turned loose by him.

He contends he did nothing but hold onto the cow, thinking he had a right to take the cow to his own home and require damages from the plaintiff. He contends he was acting in good faith under what he supposed to be his legal rights.

He further contends that you should not be satisfied from the evidence that the plaintiff's present condition or condition since that time was caused by what took place on that occasion; contends that there are other causes that might produce the same results, and that you should not tax him with what might be the result of other causes.

Now, these are the contentions, gentlemen of the jury, of the plaintiff and the defendant, that arise upon the evidence in this case.

You are the triers of the facts, and you find the facts from the evidence as you recollect it. If your recollection of the evidence differs from that of counsel on either side, or from the court, you will rely upon your own recollection. You take the law from the court, and apply the law that the court lays down to you, to the facts as you may find the facts to be, and render your verdict accordingly.

There are three issues submitted to you.

First. Did the defendant wrongfully assault and wound the plaintiff as alleged in the complaint?

Now, the burden of that issue is on the plaintiff to satisfy you from evidence, and by its greater weight, that the defendant wrongfully assaulted her.

The court charges you that the cows being confined—being tied—that the defendant had no right to impound them, as cattle running at large, and the court charges you that if you should find that this strip of woods was legally in possession of defendant, that still he would have no right to go there and forcibly take the personal property that had been placed there by the plaintiff, that was confined, from the actual possession of the plaintiff, the plaintiff objecting and protesting against such taking.

If you should find that the property was in possession of Boswell, and that Boswell had given permission to the plaintiff to tie her cows there, then the court charges you that he had no right to go there and remove or attempt to remove the cow.

The court further charges you that if he had a right to go there and remove the cattle, that he had no right to do it in a forcible manner or to commit an assault upon plaintiff in doing it.

If you find that after the plaintiff had gotten hold of the chain of the cow, that he jerked her down and dragged her, and caused the injury and bruises she had suffered, he would be liable, and it would be your duty to answer the first issue, "Yes."

But if you find that he had a right to the possession of the piece of property, and that he went there peaceably and attempted peaceably to remove the cows off the piece of ground, he had no right to impound them; but if he attempted to remove them off the piece of ground peaceably, and did no more than that, and the plaintiff's injuries were caused by her own conduct, he would not be liable, and you would answer the first issue, "No."

If you answer the first issue "No," you need not answer the other issues; but if you answer the first issue "Yes," it is your duty to answer the second issue, which is: "What amount of actual damage is the plaintiff entitled to recover of the defendant?"

Actual damages are called compensatory damages—damages to compensate plaintiff for the injury she has received, and in passing upon what damages she would be entitled to, she would have a right to ask you to consider the physical pain that she has suffered, the mental anguish, that is the trouble of mind, the mental anguish she has suffered; and if you find that she has been permanently injured you have a right to consider that, and give her such damages as will compensate her for the injuries she has received which resulted from the defendant's wrongful act, and these may embrace loss of time, loss from inability to perform physical labor or of capacity to earn money, and for actual suffering of body and mind which are the immediate and necessary consequences of the injuries complained of, and which were caused by the wrongful act of the defendant; the burden being on the plaintiff to satisfy you by the evidence that her injuries were caused by the wrongful acts of defendant, and that such acts were the proximate cause of her injuries, a cause that produced the result without any independent cause supervening and bringing it about.

In deciding what is a just compensation, you have a right to consider her reduced capacity for earning a living, if you should find that her capacity has been reduced in consequence of her injury, and in considering her reduced capacity to earn a living, if there is such, you have a right to consider her expectancy of life, that is, if her injuries are permanent, and, having determined what that expectancy is, she is entitled to recover the present net value of the difference between what she would have earned and what she has been able to earn in her present condition.

As to the third issue, "What amount of punitive damages, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover of defendant?" that issue is known as punishment damages, and it is entirely discretionary with the jury whether they give anything—whether they consider it or not. If you should find from the evidence in this case that the conduct of the defendant on this occasion was wanton and malicious, or was done in aggravated manner, totally disregarding the rights of the plaintiff, the jury would have a right, by way of punishment, to give damages under that issue; but it is entirely discretionary with the jury, and if you should find that he acted in good faith, although he might have been mistaken in his legal rights, and that he had no malice, and did not do the acts wantonly or in total disregard of the rights of the plaintiff, then he would not be liable for punishment damages.

Now, I have told you about the contentions of the parties, I have given you the rule of damages under the second issue to compensate the plaintiff—defendant contending, as I have told you, that her troubles were not the result of what occurred on that occasion; she, contending that they were, that she was healthy before that time, that she was able to do all her necessary household work and to bear children, contends that since then she has not been able to do practically anything.

You can retire, gentlemen, and make up your verdict, and answer the issues as you may find the facts to be.

The law requires me to call your attention to the difference between substantive and corroborative evidence. The evidence of good character of the plaintiff and the other witnesses is not substantive evidence; it is corroborative evidence, offered for the purpose of better enabling the jury to pass upon the truthfulness of the witness whose character is proven to be good.

You may retire, gentlemen.

E. S. W. Dameron, of Burlington, and John A. Barringer, of Greensboro, for appellant.

W. H. Carroll, of Burlington, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. The first four exceptions in the defendant's brief are directed principally to the right of the plaintiff to recover. He contends that the cows were in his lawful possession, being tied on land which he had rented, and that the plaintiff had no right to undertake to prevent his carrying them off, but that she should have resorted to the law to reclaim them. The court charged the jury that the defendant had no right to go there and forcibly take personal property that had been placed there by the defendant, and which were tied and not damage feasant. The jury found the controverted facts with the plaintiff; and indeed the court might have instructed the jury that, if they believed the testimony of the plaintiff, the defendant in any event had used excessive force.

[1] The court properly permitted the plaintiff to testify, as was alleged in the complaint, that she had tied her cows there on permission from William Boswell, who claimed to be in lawful possession, in which she was corroborated by Boswell. Being charged with trespass, she had the right to explain her claim of right to show her good faith. Everett v. Smith, 44 N. C. 303; State v. Faggart, 170 N. C. 741, 87 S. E. 31.

[2] The court also properly charged the jury that the defendant had no right to impound the cows. Rev. § 1679, authorizes only the taking up of live stock running at large. State v. Hunter, 118 N. C. 1196, 24 S. E. 708. The cows, being securely tied to trees, were in the actual possession and under the immediate personal control of the plaintiff and her mother-in-law, and it was a forcible trespass to take them away against their will; they being present and forbidding.

[3] The court also properly charged the jury that if the land was in the possession of Boswell, and he had given permission to plaintiff to tie the cows there, the defendant had no right to go there and attempt to remove them forcibly. State v. Davenport, 156 N. C. 602, 72 S. E. 7, which holds that the rightful possession "cannot be vindicated by a bludgeon," but must be determined by a resort to legal proceedings.

The court further charged that, if the defendant had the right to go there and remove the cattle, he had no right to do so in a forcible manner, or commit an assault on plaintiff in doing so. May v. Telegraph Co., 157 N. C. 416, 72 S. E. 1059, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 912. If the defendant was in the rightful possession of the land, but the cows were tied securely to trees and doing no damage, and the owner was present and forbidding him to take the property, the defendant's remedy was by legal action.

[4, 5] The court properly charged the jury:

"If you find for a fact that the plaintiff had gotten hold of the chain of the cow, that the defendant jerked her down and dragged her, and caused the injury and bruises she has suffered, then he would be liable, and it would be the duty of the jury to answer the first issue 'Yea.'"

This was correct. Rev. § 3620, amended by Laws 1911, c. 193; State v. Smith, 157 N. C. 578, 72 S. E. 853. On the other hand, the plaintiff had the legal right to prevent the defendant from taking her property from her forcibly and against her will, if she could, and to use all necessary force for that purpose. The evidence tended to show that the force used by the defendant was excessive. State v. Taylor, 82 N. C. 554; State v. Leggett, 104 N. C. 784, 10 S. E. 464; State v. Hemphill, 162 N. C. 632, 78 S. E. 167, 45 L.

R. A. (N. S.) 455. The cattle were doing no damage. They were confined, and in the actual and peaceable possession of plaintiff and her mother-in-law, and the defendant's action was, as found by the jury, a forcible trespass.

[8] The defendant's assignments of error 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11 are to the charge of the court on the question of damages, but in them we find no error. Exception 7 was that the court allowed as an element of damage a consideration of the plaintiff's capacity to earn money. This court has repeatedly held that:

"Damages for * * * personal injury include actual expenses for nursing, medical services, also loss of time and of earning capacity and mental and physical suffering." Wallace v. Railroad, 104 N. C. 442, 10 S. E. 552; Rushing v. Railroad, 149 N. C. 158, 62 S. E. 890; Ridge v. Railroad, 167 N. C. 510, 83 S. E. 762, L. R. A. 1917E, 215.

[7] The eighth assignment of error is because the judge charged the jury that the burden was upon the plaintiff to satisfy the jury by the evidence that her injuries were caused by the wrongful acts of the defendant. It was not reversible error not to add "by the greater weight of evidence."

[8, 9] The ninth assignment was to the instruction that the jury "had the right to consider her reduced capacity to make a living." This, taken in connection with the whole charge, was correct. The tenth assignment of error was to the instruction that the jury had "the right to consider her expectancy of life." Where injuries are permanent, as testified to in this case, the charge is unexceptionable. Ruffin v. Railroad, 142 N. C. 120, 55 S. E. 86; Clark v. Traction Co., 138 N. C. 77, 50 S. E. 518, 107 Am. St. Rep. 528.

[10] The eleventh assignment of error is because the judge instructed the jury:

"She is entitled to recover the present net value of the difference between what she would have earned and what she has been able to earn in her present condition."

In Johnson v. Railroad, 163 N. C. 431, 79 S. E. 690, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 598, the court held that, in an action for personal injuries resulting in diminished earning capacity, the measure of damages is not the difference between the probable earnings of the plaintiff before and after the injury, but the reasonable present value of the diminution of his earning capacity—citing Fry v. Railroad, 159 N. C. 360, 74 S. E. 971.

[11] The twelfth assignment of error is because the court charged the jury that:

"The evidence of good character of the plaintiff and defendant and the other witnesses is not substantive evidence, but is corroborative evidence, for the purpose of better enabling the jury to pass upon the truthfulness of the witness whose character is proven to be good."

This is elementary law.

The error most strenuously urged in the defendant's brief is that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover for her injury, but that it was for her husband to bring such action, and defendant's counsel contends that:

"It is the law in North Carolina that the husband is entitled to the society and to the services of his wife, and consequently to the fruits of her industry. She cannot contract or render those services to another without his consent. Those rights were given to the husband, because of the obligation imposed by law upon him to provide for her support and that of her offspring, and the right continues unimpaired so long as the duty continues"—citing Syme v. Riddle, 88 N. C. 463; Baker v. Jordan, 73 N. C. 145; Hairston v. Glenn, 120 N. C. 341, 27 S. E. 32; Cunningham v. Cunningham, 121 N. C. 413, 28 S. E. 525; State v. Robinson, 143 N. C. 620, 56 S. E. 918.

The counsel for the defendant was inadvertent to chapter 13, Laws 1913, which provides as follows:

"The earnings of a married woman by virtue of any contract for her personal service, and any damages for personal injuries, or other tort sustained by her can be recovered by her suing alone, and such earnings or recovery shall be her sole and separate property as fully as if she had remained unmarried."

And Rev. § 408 (1), provides:

"When the action concerns her separate property, she [a married woman] may sue alone."

The contention made for the defendant in this case was earnestly presented to the court in Price v. Electric Co., 160 N. C. 450, 76 S. E. 502, better known as the "Washerwoman's Case." In that case a washerwoman at Charlotte, carrying her weekly washing home in a cart, was run over and badly injured by the negligence of the conductor in charge of a trolley car. "Her right foot was amputated, her right arm was broken and permanently rendered stiff, and her head severely gashed." She was confined for several weeks in a hospital, suffering great agony, and at considerable expense. "For these injuries and for her physical and mental suffering, and for her diminished power to earn wages by reason of injuries, the jury assessed the compensation at $5,000. The able counsel for the railroad company strenuously argued that, being a married woman, this compensation was the property of her husband, and could be recovered only by him, and not by her." Two of the court were of the opinion that the married woman was entitled to recover her own earnings under the Constitution, which provided (article 10, § 6) that she was entitled to any property "acquired before marriage, or to which after marriage she may become in any manner entitled," as fully as if single, and that this was certainly true since the Martin Act of 1911, c. 109, had given her "the right to com-tract as if single," and that for "her earnings in occupations elsewhere than in her household duties * * * she has the same right to recover * * * as the husband has to sue for his own earnings" and that, "for a stronger reason, damages for injury to her person and for her physical and mental suffering must belong to her." The counsel for the railroad company cited the cases now relied upon by defendant, and the majority of the court, in deference to those authorities, felt constrained to hold that the woman could not recover; but, as the husband had been made a coplaintiff (though merely as a formality), the court would not set aside the verdict.

[12] It was felt to be unjust and illogical that the husband should recover for labor which the wife had performed outside the household duties, and under a contract she had a legal right to make "as if single," and that when the wife had borne the physical and mental suffering of the amputation of her foot, and a broken arm and other injuries, compensation therefor should go to her, and not to her husband, who had suffered nothing. The discharge of household duties, unending and tiresome and without limitation of hours, the rearing of children, the loving companionship and attentions of a wife, are full compensation for her right to support by the husband. Accordingly, at the ensuing term of the Legislature, one of the first statutes passed was chapter 13, Laws 1913, above set out, which has settled the law in this state, in no uncertain terms.

Upon review of all the exceptions, and construing the charge of the court as a whole, we find no error.

ALLEN, J., concurs in result.

(178 N. C. 403)

LANDIS CHRISTMAS SAV. CLUB v. MERCHANTS' NAT. BANK. (No. 356.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 5, 1919.)

1. DEPOSITIONS ¶95 — INTRODUCTION OF WHOLE DEPOSITION.

The party offering the deposition of a witness must introduce the whole of it, including the cross-examination, and it was error for plaintiff to offer a deposition, but to decline to introduce the last question and answer.

2. COPYRIGHTS ¶48 — TESTIMONY OF OFFICER OF DEFAUDED BANK ON RECOVERY OF LICENSE FEE.

In an action against a bank to recover a license fee for two years for permission to operate Christmas and vacation savings clubs devised by plaintiff, testimony of the vice president of defendant bank as to the statements and representations made by plaintiff's agent to induce defendant bank to contract, and showing such statements were false and fraudulent, held material and admissible.

3. EVIDENCE ¶503, 522 — EXPERT OPINION AS TO VALUE AND VALIDITY OF COPYRIGHT.

On the issue of the validity of a copyright of a Christmas and vacation savings plan, the opinions of experts in patent and copyright law are admissible to show the worthlessness of the copyright as an exclusive right, as well as to sustain it, the action being against a bank to recover license fees for the use of the plan; the defense being the contract was procured by false representations.

4. COURTS ¶489(4)—JURISDICTION OF STATE COURT AS TO VALIDITY OF COPYRIGHT.

The state court had ample jurisdiction to pass on a claimed copyright when its invalidity was set up as a defense in an action on a contract to pay certain license fees for its use.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Bryson, Judge.

Action by the Landis Christmas Savings Club against the Merchants' National Bank. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. New trial.

Thomas Maslin's testimony, referred to in the opinion, follows:

I was vice president and cashier of the Merchants' National Bank during the period covered by these contracts referred to in this case. We used plaintiff's system 1914, 1915, and 1916. We paid them the license fee under the contract for those three years; the first year was $100, and the next year they reduced it to $80, and the next year it was $80. Our bank spent a great deal of money in advertising this system. In the three years we spent something over $600 in advertising, and we employed an office man to handle that business at about $50 a month. We also bought between $200 and $300 equipment, such as filing cabinets and trays, etc., for the handling of this system. In December, 1915, we found out, through newspaper advertisement, that another system was being operated in this city on identically the same plan, and in the same month I learned that Wachovia Bank & Trust Company, of Winston-Salem, N. C., was operating a system identical with Landis system, ascending and descending class, 1 cent and 2 cents a week, going up, and same amounts coming down. According to the Landis system we had Class 2, ascending, and Class 2a, descending, and Class 5, ascending, and Class 5a, descending. For instance in Class 2 a person would start in to pay 2 cents a week on the 20th of December, and the next week he would pay 4 cents, and the next week 6 cents, and so on, progressing 2 cents a week until the end of the term of 50 weeks. At the end of the term we would pay him $25.50, which included interest. Class 2a is the reverse of that. Class 5 and 5a is on the same principle, only paying 5 cents a week instead of 2 cents. The advertising matter, cards, etc., used in this case was what was sold to defendant by plaintiff. The bank holds one card and the subscriber holds the other card; the subscriber brings his card to the bank with his payments weekly, and has his card punched. The card merely specifies the amount to be paid in, and we paid the interest on it for the average time, which is a separate proposition. The card represents the whole system. I had a conversation with the representative of the defendant company, who came here to negotiate the contract with our bank.

Q. Please state where he was and when it was and what representations were made to you about it that induced you to enter into it, if any? (Plaintiff objects; objection sustained; defendant excepts.)

I am acquainted with other systems of like kind and character with that of the Landis system in use at the end of the third year of our contract. They are: The Wrightson Company, of Philadelphia, the United Savings System Company, of Lancaster, Pa.; the Goodman Company, Memphis, Tenn.; I. S. Call, Savannah, Ga.; the Ready Money Club, Greensboro; Geo. D. Barnard & Co., St. Louis, Mo.; Young & Selden, Baltimore, Md. Our bank did not have any trouble with the plaintiff up to the time Wachovia Bank & Trust Company undertook to and did open up a similar savings club.

Cross-examination: The Christmas Savings Club business is purely advertising; it is not profitable. At the outset it was profitable as an advertising medium. Our bank was the first bank in Winston-Salem to inaugurate this Christmas Savings Club plan, and for two years we were the only bank operating this plan, but the third year the Wachovia Bank & Trust Company began operating a system identical with ours. I knew the English language was not subject to copyright. Plaintiff agreed to furnish us supplies at a stated price. We still have the fixtures we bought for handling this system. The Wachovia Bank & Trust Company operated the Wrightson system, which is the system indicated in the deposition of Mr. Boll, but for about three years our bank had exclusive representation here in the Christmas Savings Club business. The plaintiff stated in its written contract that it would not sell its system to any one else in Winston-Salem. It did not sell to any of my competitors in Winston-Salem. That exclusive privilege that was provided for in that contract has not been violated by plaintiff. This contract was for a period of five years, and we paid them for three years on the contract. The Christmas Savings Club business is handled separate and apart from the other banking business. We did a thriving Christmas Savings Club business at first, so much so that it was necessary to employ an additional clerk to handle it, and he was kept busy most of his time on it. I could not say that through that medium we secured new customers. Very few members of Christmas Savings Club deposited their money with us; it was too near Christmas. We are still conducting a Christmas Savings Club through our bank, and have been doing it since 1912. The banks last year tried to agree to abolish this plan, but they had already bought their supplies they contracted for, but the probabilities are that they will abolish it this year. After our relations ceased with plaintiff we secured another system.

Redirect examination: We have no system of bookkeeping to tell what reasons a person has for depositing in our bank, or that the Savings Club business causes him to do other business with our bank. We still have the files and cases on hand, which we have no use for, and for which we paid several hundred dollars.

Mr. Maslin was recalled for the purpose of stating what representations were made that induced defendant to enter into the contract, the court stating he would rule upon the admissibility of the representations after hearing what they were.

J. E. Alexander, of Winston-Salem, for appellant.

W. Reade Johnson and Craige & Vogler, all of Winston-Salem, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The plaintiff, Landis Christmas Savings Club, entered into a contract with the Merchants' National Bank, by the terms of which the plaintiff agreed to give to the defendant an exclusive license to use, for a period of five years from December 15, 1912, its system of operating and maintaining a "Christmas Savings Club," of which system it was the owner in a United States copyright, for which the defendant agreed to pay the sum of $100 per year. Some time later the plaintiff secured another United States copyright for the operation and maintenance of a "Vacation Savings Club," and on November 24, 1913, the plaintiff and defendant entered into a supplemental contract by the terms of which it was agreed defendant would use both systems and purchase the necessary supplies therefor during the term stated in the original contract, and the consideration was reduced from $100 per year to $80 per year. This action is brought to recover $160, being for two years use.

The defendant denies the indebtedness, and alleges that the execution of the contracts was procured by the false and fraudulent representations of plaintiff; that plaintiff falsely represented that the plaintiffs had a new invention or patent and copyright for a plan of Christmas Savings Clubs; that its plan, being a new invention, was a monopoly, and that it had the right to sell exclusive privileges to defendant, whereby it would have the sole and exclusive right to operate a Christmas Savings Club, and the sole and exclusive right to the use of such name and advertising of such plan for the space of five years, and thereupon the contracts were entered into and carried out for three years, when another bank in Winston-Salem, to wit, Wachovia Bank & Trust Company, opened up on a large scale the identical, or nearly identical, plan and advertising, which plan of advertising and conducting the said clubs furnished by plaintiff to defendant under the contracts became a part thereof; that correspondence ensued between the parties to this action, the defendant asking of plaintiff explanations of this, none being given, the plaintiff avoiding a reply and contenting itself by merely sending its bill or offering to reduce the license fee to $25 and then $5 a year.

And defendant alleges that plaintiff has in effect admitted the falsity of its representations and abandoned its said contracts or waived them to the extent stated above, and that said contracts are invalid, discharged, and of no binding force.

That as defendant is now informed, advised and believes, and so alleges, the matters, plans, and things sold, or attempted to be sold, to defendant as capable of being patented and copyrighted were not in fact the subjects of patent or copyright, and defendant alleges that, as it is now informed, advised, and believes, the said purported patents and copyrights are invalid, the said matter not being capable of being lawfully patented or copyrighted, such matter not being new, being largely merely mathematical calculations, and not the subject of invention, patent or copyright, and not being lawfully salable as such. And defendant alleges that no recovery can be had by the plaintiff against the defendant on account of such attempted fraudulent sale of illegal patent and copyright privileges and licenses.

Defendant then sets up a counterclaim to recover money paid plaintiff under such contract.

[1] Plaintiff offered the deposition of one Boll, but declined to introduce the last question and answer. Defendant excepted. This was error. This question has been decided differently by different courts, but the weight of authority is that the party offering the deposition must introduce the whole of it, including the cross-examination. Dawson v. Woodhull, 67 Fed. 451, 14 C. C. A. 464; Grant v. Pendery, 15 Kan. 236; Lanaham v. Lawton, 50 N. J. Eq. 276, 23 Atl. 476; Ins. Co. v. Knight, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 327; Calhoun v. Hays, 8 Watts & S. (Pa.) 127, 42 Am. Dec. 275; Bank v. Rhutasel, 67 Iowa, 316, 25 N. W. 261; Edwards v. Crenshaw, 30 Mo. App. 510. This court has aligned itself with the above cases. In Boney v. Boney, 161 N. C. 621, 77 S. E. 787, Mr. Justice Allen says:

"We have not been able to find a direct adjudication in this state sustaining his honor in excluding parts of the deposition of Mrs. Turner because the whole was not offered, but the authorities elsewhere are in accordance with his ruling. Killbourne v. Jennings, 40 Iowa, 475; Schwartz v. Brunswick, 73 Mo. 257; Hamilton v. Milliken, 62 Neb. 117 [86 N. W. 913]; State v. Rayburn, 31 Mo. App. 386; Lanaham v. Lawton, 50 N. J. Eq. 276 (23 Atl. 476); Grant v. Pembry, 15 Kan. 242." Barton v. Morphis, 15 N. C. 243.

[2] The defendant excepts to the ruling of the court in excluding the testimony of Thomas Mastin as to the statements and representations made by plaintiffs' agent to induce defendant to enter into the contract, and that such statements were false and fraudulent. This testimony is set out in the record, and is very material. We are of opinion that the court erred in excluding it and directing a verdict for amount claimed. The court should have submitted proper issues to the jury, with appropriate instructions as to the validity of the copyright as an exclusive right and the representations of plaintiffs' agent as to its value and character.

[3] Upon such issue the opinions of experts in patent and copyright law may be offered in evidence for the purpose of showing the worthlessness of the copyright as an exclusive right, as well as for the purpose of sustaining it upon the same principle that the opinion of lawyers learned in the law of another state may be offered in this state as to the law of their own state.

[4] The state court had ample jurisdiction to pass on the copyright when its validity is set up as a defense. In Pratt v. Coke Co., 168 U. S. 259, 18 Sup. Ct. 64, 42 L. Ed. 458, the Supreme Court of the United States says:

"The state court had jurisdiction both of the parties and the subject-matter, as set forth in the declaration, and it could not be ousted of such jurisdiction by the fact that, incidentally to one of these defenses, the defendant claimed the invalidity of a certain patent. To hold that it has no right to introduce evidence upon this subject is to do it a wrong and deny it a remedy. Section 711 [Comp. St. § 1233] does not deprive the state courts of the power to determine questions arising under the patent laws, but only of assuming jurisdiction of 'cases' arising under those laws. There is a clear distinction between a case and a question arising under those patent laws. The former arises when the plaintiff in his opening pleading—be it a bill, complaint, or declaration—sets up a right under the patent laws as ground for a recovery. Of such the state courts have no jurisdiction. The latter may appear in the plea or answer or in the testimony. The determination of such question is not beyond the competency of the state tribunals."

In his opinion in that case, Mr. Justice Brown, referring to a contrary decision of a state court, further says:

"There is, however, an overwhelming weight of authority to the contrary. Beginning with the case of Bliss v. Negus, 8 Mass. 46, in which, in a similar action upon a note, it was held the defendant might show that the patent had been obtained by fraud and perjury, the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts has held steadily to the doctrine that where the question of the validity of a patent arises collaterally, it will take jurisdiction of it. In Dickinson v. Hall, 14 Pick. [Mass.] 217 [25 Am. Dec. 390], evidence that the patent was void was held to be pertinent to show a total want of consideration for the defendant's note. The principal case, however, is that of Nash v. Lull, 102 Mass. 60 [3 Am. Rep. 435], in which the opinion of the court was delivered by Mr. Justice Gray, to the effect that any degree of utility or practical value in a patent will support the consideration paid for it; but that if it be wholly void, a note given for it is without consideration, and such issue may be tried in the state court as well as in the Circuit Court of the United States. See, also, to the same effect, Bierce v. Stocking, 11 Gray [Mass.] 174; Lester v. Palmer, 4 Allen [Mass.] 145.

"Like opinions have been pronounced in the courts of New Hampshire, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Wisconsin, Illinois, and Missouri; and in all these states the principle seems well-established that any defense which goes to the validity of the patent is available in the state courts."

New trial.

(178 N. C. 342)

BLACKWOOD v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.
(No. 329.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 22, 1918.)

1. WORK AND LABOR ⇨4(2)—IMPLIED PROMISE TO PAY.

In the absence of a special contract, where one person has rendered services of value for the benefit of another for which the latter is under a binding obligation to perform, and such services and the benefits therefrom, not intended to be gratuitous, have been knowingly accepted and received, the law will imply a promise to pay what such services are reasonably worth.

2. WORK AND LABOR ⇨4(1)—IMPLIED PROMISE TO PAY.

Where postmaster, with office 200 to 300 feet from railroad station where mail was delivered, for four consecutive years, under impression it was his duty, and with knowledge of the railroad, carried the mail from the station to the office four times a day, the railroad, being under contract with the government to carry such mail to the post office, was liable to the postmaster for the value of the services rendered for its benefit.

Appeal from Superior Court, Durham County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by Robert Blackwood against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. No error.

The action is to recover the value of services rendered for defendant's benefit in carrying the mail from the post office in Carrboro, said county, to the railway station. On denial of liability there was verdict for plaintiff, judgment, and defendant excepted and appealed.

Fuller, Reade & Fuller, of Durham, for appellant.

R. O. Everett, of Durham, for appellee.

HOKE, J. On the hearing, recovery was resisted by defendant principally for the alleged reason that plaintiff did this work for his own advantage, in that by keeping the mail pouches open that much longer his cancellation of stamps was increased, thereby adding to his salary, and that the services for which pay is now sought were and were intended to be gratuitous. But on a perusal of the pleadings, the evidence, and the charge of the court, this view has been rejected in the verdict, and the facts as accepted and acted on by the jury are to the effect that from 1910 to 1917 plaintiff, engaged in business, was also postmaster at Carrboro in said county, the office being from 200 to 300 feet from the railroad station where defendant delivered the mail; that for four consecutive years of that period plaintiff, under the impression that it was a part of his official duty, and with full knowledge of the defendant company, its agent, etc., carried the mail from the station to the office four times per day, to his great inconvenience and the interruption of his personal business; that in 1915, having ascertained that defendant company was under a contract for hire with the government to do this work, plaintiff stopped, and since that time it has been undertaken by company and same let out by them for pay, etc.

In the case of Sanders v. Ragan, 172 N. C. 612, 90 S. E. 777, L. R. A. 1917B, 681, the court said that—"The action of indebitatus assumpsit * * * is dependent largely on equitable principles, * * * and, in the absence of a special contract controlling the matter, and unless in contravention of some public policy, it will usually lie wherever one man has been enriched or [the value of] his estate enhanced at another's expense under circumstances that, in equity and good conscience, call for an accounting by the wrongdoer"—citing Mitchell v. Walker, 30 N. C. 248; Keener on Quasi Contract, p. 318.

[1, 2] In application of the general principle, it is ordinarily true that in the absence of a special contract, where one person has rendered services of value for the benefit of another, or which the latter is under a binding obligation to perform, and such services and the benefits therefrom, not intended to be gratuitous, have been knowingly accepted and received, the law will imply a promise to pay what such services are reasonably worth.

It is said by an intelligent commentator (15 A. E. [2d Ed.] pp. 1082, 1083) that there are limitations on the principle, among them, that the party benefited must have the legal power to make a direct contract of a similar kind, and again the services and benefits must have been received under circumstances that afforded the person benefited the opportunity to reject them, etc., but no such modifications are presented in the present case where, as stated, it has been made to appear that the services were performed by plaintiff under the impression that they were a part of his official duties; that this was permitted by the defendant with full knowledge of attendant conditions, and, further, with the fair and reasonable inference that the company has been compensated for this work that they knowingly allowed plaintiff to do, and of which they have received the benefits.

The well-considered case of Blowers v. So. Ry., 70 S. C. 377, 50 S. E. 19, seems to be in direct support of the present recovery, and several decisions of our own court are in full approval of the principle upon which it rests. Sanders v. Ragan, supra; Blount v. Guthrie, 99 N. C. 93, 5 S. E. 890; Bailey v. Rutjes, 86 N. C. 517, 15 A. & E. (2d Ed.) p. 1083; 40 Cyc. pp. 2810, 2811.

We find no error in the record and the judgment for plaintiff is affirmed.

No error.

(178 N. C. 288)

ARMFIELD CO. et al. v. SALEEBY et al.
(No. 297.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 22, 1919.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES §47—WHAT CONSTITUTE BULK SALES.

Where jury could have found from the evidence that debtor's entire stock of goods was worth $4,500 or more, the court erred in not instructing in substance that a sale by debtor of two lots of apples, one for $300 and the other for $150, was not the sale of a large part or the whole of the stock of merchandise within the Bulk Sales Law.

2. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES §47—WHAT CONSTITUTE BULK SALES.

The sale of 10 per cent. of the value of a stock of goods is not a large part thereof within the Bulk Sales Law.

3. COURTS §170—JURISDICTION OF SUPERIOR COURT ON APPEAL FROM RECORDER'S COURT.

Where complaint as originally framed indicated clearly that it was the intention of the pleader to waive the tort and sue on the contract, the superior court on appeal from the recorder's court had the power, though the amount involved was less than $500 and more than $300, to proceed against defendant on the supposition that the tort had been waived and that plaintiff had elected to sue on contract; Pub. Loc. Laws 1913, c. 667, making the jurisdiction of the recorder's court, in cases of contract where the amount does not exceed $500 and in cases of tort where the amount does not exceed $300, concurrent with that of the superior court, and Revisal 1905, § 495, requiring a liberal construction of pleadings.

4. PLEADING §249(2) — AMENDMENT NOT CHANGING CAUSE OF ACTION.

Where complaint as originally framed indicated clearly that it was the intention of the pleader to waive the tort and sue on the contract as an indebitatus assumpsit, an amendment expressly waiving the tort did not substantially change the cause of action.

5. FRAUD §31—ACTION OF ASSUMPSIT IN CASE OF FRAUD MAINTAINABLE.

In cases of fraud where the person committing it has been thereby enriched to the damage or detriment of the other, an innocent party, indebitatus assumpsit will lie upon the ground that the law implies a promise to restore what has been gained by the transaction.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR §882(4)—WAIVER OF OBJECTION TO IMPROPER PARTY.

A defendant cannot ask that a party be brought in, and when it is so ordered object because he is an improper party.

7. BANKRUPTCY §156—TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY PROPERLY JOINED AS PARTY.

In action to recover judgment for open account due plaintiff and to set aside as fraudulent two sales of debtor, the trustee in bankruptcy of debtor was a proper party to prevent further litigation in view of Revisal 1905, § 507.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cumberland County; Stacy, Judge.

Suit by the Armfield Company against C. A. Saleeby and others. There was judgment for plaintiff in the recorder's court. On appeal to the superior court the trustee in bankruptcy of defendant named was made a party plaintiff, and from the judgment there rendered defendants appeal. New trial.

The plaintiff, Armfield Company, alleged that the defendant, C. A. Saleeby was indebted to them in the sum of $446.29, for goods sold and delivered, and that he, being a retail fruit dealer, had sold a large part of his stock in bulk to his codefendants. T. S. Saleeby & Co., with intent to defraud the creditors of C. A. Saleeby, and contrary to the provisions of Bulk Sales Law.

The suit was brought first in the recorder's court, and then carried by appeal from the judgment to the superior court. The jurisdiction of the recorder's court is restricted to actions on contracts not exceeding in amount $500, and actions of tort where the amount does not exceed $300.

The facts were, so far as admitted, that C. A. Saleeby had increased his stock of goods just before and during the Christmas holidays, and among other additions to his stock he had bought 179 barrels of apples in two lots, one of 100 barrels and the other of 79 barrels, and that he had afterwards sold them in the same way, that is, in two lots of 100 barrels and 79 barrels, about the same time from the cars. There was much evidence as to the value of the stock varying from $1,500 to $5,000, the estimates, though depending somewhat, it appears, upon the times they were made. It was admitted that both lots of apples were worth $450. The court submitted it to the jury to find whether there had been a violation of the Bulk Sales

Law, upon all the evidence as to the value of the stock, the nature of the business, and other pertinent matters. The defendants asked the court to give this instruction to the jury:

"If the jury shall find that the usual stock of goods in the store of C. A. Saleeby was from $3,000 to $5,000, then the court charges you that the sale of 100 barrels of apples of the value of about $300 is not the sale in bulk of a large part, or the whole, of the stock of merchandise of C. A. Saleeby, and you should answer the issue, 'No.' This is also true as to the 79 barrels of apples."

This instruction was refused, and the defendants excepted. It was admitted that defendants had not complied with the requirements of the Bulk Sales Law, as to giving notice, etc.

The jury returned the following verdict:

"Did the defendant C. A. Saleeby sell in bulk a large part of his stock of merchandise, otherwise than in the ordinary course of trade and in the regular and usual prosecution of his business, without complying with the requirements of section 964a, Pell's Revisal, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: 'Yes.'"

Judgment and appeal.

W. S. O. B. Robinson, of Goldsboro, and Q. K. Nimocks and Rose & Rose, all of Fayetteville, for appellants.

H. W. B. Whitley, of Raeford, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). It having appeared that the property sold by C. A. Saleeby to his codefendants was worth more than the amount of his indebtedness to the plaintiff, the court gave judgment against both defendants for $448.29, which was the amount of the debt.

[1] The court submitted to the jury, for their determination upon the evidence, the question whether the Bulk Sales Law (Gregory's Supp. Pell's Revisal, p. 962, § 964a) had been violated, and refused to instruct the jury as requested by the defendant. This was error. The statute forbids the sale of a large part or the whole of a stock of merchandise, otherwise than in the ordinary course of trade and in the regular and usual prosecution of the seller's business, without first complying with certain requirements therein specified, as to notice, etc., and if they are not observed, declares that the sale shall be void, and, even if they are, such a sale is made prima facie evidence of fraud. Fraud on creditors is the basis of this new remedy; in the one case the fact of noncompliance with the requirements of the statute is conclusive evidence of it, and the sale is void, and in the other it is prima facie fraudulent and the evidence is referred to the jury upon which they may find the fact of fraud. Gallup v. Rozler, 172 N. C. 283, 90 S. E. 209; Pennel v. Robinson, 164 N. C. 257, 80 S. E.

417, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 77. The precise questions now before us were not present in the Gallup v. Rozler Case, which involved only the correctness of the charge, upon a different ground than the one taken in this case. The point here is whether the court should have given the instruction requested by the defendant. A sale is not forbidden by the statute unless it is of the whole or a large part of the stock, and we do not think that 10 per cent. thereof constitutes a large part of this stock. There was evidence to support the prayer of defendants, for L. L. Greenwood, plaintiff's witness, testified that in ordinary times C. A. Saleeby carried a stock of goods worth $3,000 or $4,000, and consisting of groceries, fruits, dry goods, notions, and the like, and there was other like evidence, sufficient at least to justify the instruction.

[2] The stock during the approach of Christmas was increased in size and seems to have been at its maximum, when the 179 barrels of apples were sold, so that the jury might well have found that the stock was worth, at that time, $4,500, and perhaps even more than that amount. If they had so found, and it being admitted that the apples were worth $450, it follows that they were worth only 10 per cent. of the value of the stock, which in our judgment is not a large part thereof. It should be something more than that or nearer a half of the stock to come under the condemnation of the statute. No such question has been before this court since the statute was passed, but it has been considered in the case of Fiske Rubber Co. v. Hayes Motor Car Co., 131 Ark. 248, 199 S. W. 96, and the court held that a sale of 10 per cent. of the stock by an automobile agency and accessories shop was not forbidden by the statute, which was substantially like ours, as it was not a sale of a large part of the stock. The court conceded, as we decided in Gallup v. Rozler, supra, that such a stock as was sold there, came within the words of the statute, and a sale of it, or a large part of it, would be void if the requirements were not met by the seller. The syllabus of the Fiske Rubber Co. Case is as follows, and it correctly states accurately the point decided:

"A sale by an automobile agency and accessories shop of goods aggregating approximately $150 out of an accessories stock of $1,500 to its successors in the agency, when the seller was about to move the accessories stock, is not a sale in bulk requiring compliance with the Bulk Sales Law."

In the course of the opinion, Judge Humphreys says:

"The sale of items such as these in respect to value and quantity was not out of the ordinary in the conduct of the retail business in which they were engaged. * * * In the instant case only a small portion of the stock was sold. The number of items and value thereof were inconsequential when compared with the amount and value of the entire stock. The number of articles sold and the value thereof were within an ordinary retail transaction. Thompson & Dalhoff were engaged in the retail business. It is manifest that the sale was not intended to impair a continuation of the Thompson & Dalhoff automobile accessory business at some other location in the city. * * * In order to constitute a fraudulent sale under the act, it must appear that a material portion of the stock was sold in bulk out of the ordinary course of trade and contrary to the regular prosecution of the business of the seller. The chancellor found in the instant case that the sale was an ordinary retail transaction. We think the finding was supported by the weight of evidence. It certainly cannot be said that the finding was contrary to a clear preponderance of the evidence."

We take it, therefore, that the court should have recognized this construction of the law and have given the instruction, at least in substance.

[3] The defendant further contends that, as this action was originally brought in the recorder's court, the superior court only acquired the jurisdiction derivatively of the recorder's court, and could not amend the pleadings so as to change that jurisdiction or to enlarge it, and that it has attempted to do so by allowing the plaintiff to waive the tort, arising out of the fraud, and to sue on contract. The jurisdiction conferred upon the recorder's court is limited to those cases of contract where the amount in dispute does not exceed $500, and in cases of torts when it does not exceed $300; but within those limits the jurisdiction is quite broad and comprehensive. The Public Local Laws of 1913, c. 667, makes the jurisdiction of the recorder's court concurrent with that of the superior court (section 3, subsec. 2), in all civil actions, matters and proceedings founded on contract within the above limit, and the same provision is made in the case of torts, and by section 26 the procedure, with certain exceptions, is required to follow the rules and practice as set forth in chapter 12 of the Revisal of 1905, on Civil Procedure and Amendments Thereof, in so far as the same may be adapted to the needs and requirements of said court, and any changes in the rules of procedure of the court are required to be published. We think the court had the power, under this act, to proceed against both defendants upon the supposition that the tort, if one was committed, had been waived, and that plaintiff had elected to sue in contract. The complaint, as originally framed, indicated clearly that this was the intention of the pleader, and we must construe it liberally. Revisal, § 495; Blackmore v. Winders, 144 N. C. 215, 56 S. E. 874; Brewer v. Wynne, 154 N. C. 467, 70 S. E. 947; Bank v. Warehouse Co., 172 N. C. 602, 90 S. E. 698. No one can read the complaint, with prayer for judgment, and not conclude that the plaintiff was waiving the tort and suing on the contract, as in indebitatus assumpsit.

[4] When the court allowed the amendment so as expressly to waive the tort, it did not substantially change the cause of action, but simply amplified the statement so as to show more clearly and expressly what was implied, or to be inferred, from the complaint as already drawn. This was legitimate and proper. It was not the substitution of a new cause of action, but a better pleading of the original one. Simpson v. Lumber Co., 133 N. C. 95, 98, 45 S. E. 469; Pickett v. Railroad Co., 153 N. C. 148, 69 S. E. 8; Hockfield v. Railroad Co., 150 N. C. 419, 64 S. E. 181, 134 Am. St. Rep. 945; Gadsden v. Crafts, 175 N. C. 358, 95 S. E. 610, L. R. A. 1918E, 226. We said in the Simpson Case, supra:

"The general scope and purpose of this action, or what is sometimes called the gravamen or the grievance or injury specially complained of, were not changed by the amendment. * * * Amendments which only amplify or enlarge the statement in the original complaint are not deemed to introduce a new cause of action, and the original statement of the cause of action may be narrowed, enlarged, or fortified, in varying forms, to meet the different aspects in which the pleader may anticipate its disclosure by the evidence"—citing 1 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 557-562.

[5] We have held that in cases of fraud, where the person committing it has been thereby enriched to the damage or detriment of the other and innocent party, indebitatus assumpsit will lie against him, upon the ground that the law implies a promise on his part to restore what he has thus gained by the transaction. The subject is discussed in Keener on Quasi Contracts, pp. 318-325. We so decided in Sanders v. Ragan, 172 N. C. 612, 90 S. E. 777, L. R. A. 1917B, 681, where Justice Hoke treats the subject, and reviews the authorities, with much clearness and discrimination, and concludes as follows:

"The action of indebitatus assumpsit, as stated, is dependent largely on equitable principles (Mitchell v. Walker, 30 N. C. 243), and, in the absence of a special contract controlling the matter, and unless in contravention of some public policy, it will usually lie wherever one man has been enriched or his estate enhanced at another's expense under circumstances that, in equity and good conscience, call for an accounting by the wrongdoer."

The third syllabus is especially pertinent to this case:

"When one's property has been wrongfully converted by fraud or deceit, the owner is allowed to waive the tort and sue on an implied contract in the equity of indebitatus assumpsit."

It has also been held that, in equity, where one has acquired the property of another in fraud of the rights of a third party, and has disposed of the same, so that it cannot be reached by execution or ordinary process, the court may render a money judgment against the fraudulent vendee for the value of the property so fraudulently converted. Sprinkle v. Wellborn, 140 N. C. 163-178, 52 S. E. 666, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, 111 Am. St. Rep. 827, and cases cited. The law simply compels the vendee, who co-operated with his fraudulent vendor, to surrender what he has unfairly and unjustly received, and of which he has deprived the vendor's creditors; it being an asset of their debtor to which they are entitled to resort for the satisfaction of their claim.

It was decided in Whitmore v. Hyatt, 175 N. C. 117, 95 S. E. 38, where the property was alleged to have been sold in violation of the Bulk Sales Law, that the creditors could recover of the buyer the value of the goods so sold by their debtor, who was the seller, citing Daly v. Drug Co., 127 Tenn. 412, 155 S. W. 167, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1101, and Marlow v. Ringer, 79 W. Va. 568, 91 S. E. 386, L. R. A. 1917D, 619. The Daly Case involved this very question.

[8, 7] The remaining objection of defendants is not one which they are in a position to set up, as the record shows that they moved to dismiss the action because J. A. Nevin, trustee in bankruptcy, had not been made a party thereto, whereupon the court found that he had theretofore been made a party as interpleader, without objection, by order of Judge Lyon, and then ordered that he come in and be allowed to join with the plaintiff in the prosecution of the action. By not objecting at first defendants waived their right to object now. A defendant cannot ask that a party be brought in, and, when it is so ordered, object because he is an improper party; for, when the court has done what he has asked to be done, he is in no position to insist that it be undone. But the trustee was a proper party under the circumstances to prevent further litigation. He claimed the entire fund as trustee for all the creditors, including the plaintiff, while the latter claimed only his proportionate part of it. Symons v. Reid, 58 N. C. 327; Vanhorn v. Duckworth, 42 N. C. 261; Ayers v. Wright, 43 N. C. 229; Kornegay & Co. v. Farmers, etc., Steamboat Co., 107 N. C. 115, 12 S. E. 123. The plaintiff is not objecting to the trustee being made a party, or to his intervening. He is not claiming all of the fund, but only his ratable part. The court "must" make parties in some cases, and in others it "may" add new parties. Revisal, § 507. "It can very rarely happen," said the Chief Justice, "that making an additional party will be a serious prejudice, and hence such orders are usually discretionary, and not reviewable." Bernard v. Shemwell, 139 N. C. 446, 52 S. E. 64, citing Code, § 273; Till- ery v. Candler, 118 N. C. 889, 24 S. E. 709. Defendants cannot be prejudiced by making the trustee a party. It is rather beneficial to them, as they will be protected from another action by him, based upon his right to recover the money for the creditors generally, the fund to be administered in the bankruptcy proceedings. We have considered all the questions, as there must be a new trial, for they would be raised again.

There was error in the charge, because of which a new trial is ordered.

New trial.

(178 N. C. 715)

STATE v. MOON. (No. 378.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 5, 1919.)

1. STATUTES $\S$ 230—EFFECT OF AMENDMENT.

An amendment to a statute from its adoption has the same effect as if it had been part of the statute when first enacted.

2. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 108(1)—PROSECUTION FOR BIGAMY IN COUNTY OTHER THAN WHERE COHABITATION TOOK PLACE.

Under Revisal 1905, § 3361, as amended by Laws 1913, c. 26, prosecution for bigamous cohabitation may be instituted in a county other than where the cohabitation took place.

3. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 84(3)—STATUTE DENOUNCING BIGAMOUS COHABITATION NOT UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Revisal 1905, § 3361, as amended by Laws 1913, c. 26, denouncing cohabitation within North Carolina after bigamous marriage outside of the state, held not unconstitutional as punishing for a crime committed outside of the territorial limits of the state.

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Lane, Judge.

John W. Moon was convicted of bigamous cohabitation, and he appeals. No error.

T. J. Gold and L. B. Williams, both of High Point, for appellant.

Jas. S. Manning, Atty. Gen., and Frank Nash, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROWN, J. Defendant was convicted at the June term, 1919, of Guilford county superior court, of bigamous cohabitation under Revisal, § 3361, as amended by chapter 26, Public Laws 1913. That section, as amended, reads as follows, so far as material:

"Bigamy. If any person, being married, shall marry any other person, during the life of the former husband or wife, every such offender, and every person counseling aiding or abetting such offender, shall be guilty of felony, and imprisoned in the state's prison or county jail for any term not less than four months nor more than ten years; and any such offense may be dealt with, tried, determined and punished in the county where the offender shall be apprehended, or be in custody, as if the offense had been actually committed in that county. If any person, being married, shall contract a marriage with any other person outside of this state, which marriage would be punishable as bigamous if contracted within this state, and shall thereafter cohabit with such person in this state, he shall be guilty of a felony and punishable as in cases of bigamy."

The defendant filed a plea in abatement, upon the ground that the bigamous cohabitation took place in Buncombe county and not in Guilford. Defendant contends that the part of section 3361 which permits the defendant to be tried in the county in which he is apprehended applies only to the offense of the bigamy itself, and not to the offense of bigamous cohabitation.

The following is the wording of chapter 26, Public Laws 1913, which is the amending statute:

"That section three thousand three hundred and sixty-one of the Revisal of one thousand nine hundred and five be, and the same is, hereby amended by striking out the words 'whether the second marriage shall have taken place in the state of North Carolina or elsewhere,' in lines two, three, and four thereof, and by inserting in line ten, between the words 'county' and 'providing,' the following: 'If any person being married shall contract a marriage with any other person outside of this state, which marriage would be punishable as bigamous if contracted within this state, and shall thereafter cohabit with such person in this state, he shall be guilty of a felony and punishable as in cases of bigamy.'"

[1-3] The legal effect of the amendment is the re-enactment of the old statute with the amendment incorporated in it, and the amendment from its adoption has the same effect as if it had been a part of the statute when first enacted. Nichols v. Board, 125 N. C. 13, 34 S. E. 71. The plea in abatement was properly overruled. It is further contended that the amendment of 1913 is unconstitutional, inasmuch as its effect is to punish the defendant for a crime committed outside of the territorial limits of the state. This contention cannot be sustained. It is an offense committed in North Carolina called bigamous cohabitation. Similar statutes have been enacted in the states of Alabama, Iowa, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri, Tennessee, and Vermont, and in each of these states they have been sustained.

In Alabama, Cox v. State, 117 Ala. 103, 23 South. 806, 41 L. R. A. 760, 67 Am. St. Rep. 166.

In Iowa, State v. Steupper, 117 Iowa, 591, 91 N. W. 912; State v. Sloan, 55 Iowa, 217, 7 N. W. 516.

In Massachusetts, Commonwealth v. Bradley, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 553.

In Minnesota, State v. Johnson, 12 Minn. 476 (Gil. 378), 93 Am. Dec. 241.

In Missouri, State v. Stewart, 194 Mo. 345, 92 S. W. 878, 112 Am. St. Rep. 529, 5 Ann. Cas. 963.

In Tennessee, Keneval v. State, 107 Tenn. 581, 64 S. W. 897.

In Vermont, State v. Palmer, 18 Vt. 570.

In State v. Ray, 151 N. C. at page 714, 86 S. E. 205, 134 Am. St. Rep. 1005, 19 Ann. Cas. 566, Judge Hoke says:

"As now advised, and speaking for himself, the writer sees no reason why a state should not declare the coming into the state and cohabiting together here by the parties, after a bigamous marriage in another state, a felony, and punish it as such."

No error

(178 N. C. 388)

MERCHANTS' NAT. BANK OF WINSTON
v. PACK et ux. (No. 361.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 29, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1047(5)—ERROR IN ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE IS HARMLESS.

Permitting plaintiff to introduce in evidence only a part of a paragraph of defendants' answer, if erroneous, was harmless, where there was no real controversy as to existence of the fact admitted in the part of the paragraph not introduced.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨232(1)—OBJECTION AVAILABLE.

Defendants appellants must abide in the court on appeal by the ground of objection which they assign below.

3. WITNESSES ⇨393(1) — IMPEACHMENT OF DEFENDANT BY INTRODUCING EXAMINATION BEFORE CLERK.

It was competent to read in evidence the examination taken before the clerk and question defendant husband in regard to his answers, which appeared therein for the purpose of impeaching his testimony as to the ownership of the property alleged to have been conveyed by him to defendant wife in fraud of creditors.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨273(6)—REVIEW OF EXCEPTIONS TO LONG EXTRACTS FROM CHARGE.

Exceptions which are taken to long extracts from the charge will not be considered on appeal, where the extracts are correct in some particulars.

5. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⇨95(1), 159
(1)—PURCHASER'S KNOWLEDGE OF EVIL IN-TENT OF VENDOR.

If wife did not pay value, or purchased with full knowledge of the evil intent and fraudulent purpose of her husband in making the conveyance to her, her title fails as to his creditors.

6. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ¶165 —
KNOWLEDGE OF PURCHASER OF INTENT OF GRANTOR.

If the conveyance is upon a valuable consideration and made with the actual intent to defraud creditors upon the part of the grantor alone, and not participated in by the grantee, and of which intent he had no notice, it is valid.

7. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ¶159(1), 163 —
PURCHASER'S KNOWLEDGE OF INTENT TO DEFRAUD CREDITORS.

If the conveyance is upon a valuable consideration, but made with actual intent to defraud creditors on the part of grantor, participated in by the grantee, or of which he has notice, it is void.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Bryson, Judge.

Action by the Merchants' National Bank, on behalf of itself and all other creditors, against L. C. Pack and wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. No error.

The plaintiff alleged that the defendants are husband and wife, and were so at the times hereinafter mentioned; that it was a creditor of the male defendant, L. C. Pack, when he conveyed to his wife by deed a certain tract of land therein described; that at the time the husband was then indebted to plaintiff and others, and made the deed to his wife without any consideration therefor, and without retaining property fully sufficient and available to pay his then existing creditors; that the deed was executed with the intent to hinder, delay, and defraud the plaintiff; that the wife had notice of the fraudulent intent of her husband, and actually participated in the fraudulent transaction; and, further, that the husband acted as her agent in conducting and consummating the same.

The defendant denied all of these allegations, and alleged that the land was purchased with her own money and belonged to her, although title had been taken in her husband's name, and that he was a trustee for her, and that the transaction was wholly free from any fraud or dishonesty on the part of the defendants, or any intention of either of the defendants to defraud the husband's creditors.

The court submitted issues to the jury, and they found that the deed was executed by the husband with the intent to defraud his creditors, and that his wife had notice of the fraudulent intent of her husband when she accepted the deed. Judgment was entered for the plaintiff upon the verdict, and the defendants appealed, having reserved several exceptions.

Bennett & Brown, of Winston-Salem, for appellants.

J. E. Alexander, of Winston-Salem, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The court permitted the plaintiff to introduce as evidence, a part of the complaint and the corresponding part of the answer. The objection was not to the competency of the pleadings themselves as evidence, but the only ground taken was that plaintiff was allowed to offer only a part of the answer, which was that L. C. Pack executed the deed to his wife, whereas the whole of that part of the answer is, as follows:

"That the allegations set out in paragraph 6 are denied, except (it is admitted that Mrs. D. L. Pack is the wife of L. C. Pack, and that on or about the 19th day of February, 1917, the defendant L. C. Pack executed a deed to his wife, D. L. Pack) for a valuable consideration, all other allegations are expressly denied."

We need not pass upon the correctness of this ruling of the court, as we are of the opinion, if there was error it was harmless, as both L. C. Pack and his wife were examined as witnesses, and each of them stated on the direct examination that the deed had been executed at the time alleged in the complaint, February 19, 1917, and there was really no conflict of evidence and no real controversy as to the existence of the fact. If there was error therefore it was harmless. The charge of the court also, as we think, prevented any harm to the defendants as it clearly stated the issues and the evidence bearing upon them which the jury should consider. It would not do to reverse upon so slight a ground, even if there was technical error. We have examined the entire case with care and scrutiny and cannot see that defendants have been prejudiced by the rulings.

[2] The defendants restricted themselves to a single ground of objection and must abide here by the one they assigned below. Rollins v. Henry, 78 N. C. 342; Kidder v. McIlhenny, 81 N. C. 123; Ludwick v. Penny, 158 N. C. 104, 73 S. E. 228; Proffitt v. Insurance Co., 176 N. C. 680, 97 S. E. 635; State v. Evans, 177 N. C. 564, 98 S. E. 788. We cannot therefore consider the competency of the testimony, that is, the contents of the pleadings, though we may say upon a review of all the evidence and the charge of the court, that if there was any error in this particular, and proper objection has been made, this ruling would also have been harmless, or not of sufficient importance to justify another trial. 3 Graham & Waterman on Trials, 1235; Brewer v. Ring and Valk, 177 N. C. 476, 99 S. E. 358; Schas v. Eq. Assurance Society, 170 N. C. 420, 87 S. E. 222, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 679; State v. Smith, 164 N. C. 476, 79 S. E. 979.

[3] It was competent to read the examination taken before the clerk, and question L. C. Pack in regard to his answers, which appear therein, for the purpose of impeaching his testimony as to the ownership of the property. If he had contradicted himself concerning this material fact, we see no reason why it could not be shown in this way. It is merely one way of showing contradictory statements of the witness. Johnson v. Railroad Co., 140 N. C. 581, 53 S. E. 362; Keerans v. Brown, 68 N. C. 43; Edwards v. Sullivan, 30 N. C. 302; State v. McLeod, 8 N. C. 344. And such evidence may also be used for the purpose of corroboration. Allred v. Kirkman, 160 N. C. 392, 76 S. E. 244; Bowman v. Blankenship, 165 N. C. 519, 81 S. E. 746.

The issues were sufficient to cover the case and to present all matters in controversy. Hatcher v. Dabbs, 133 N. C. 239, 45 S. E. 562; Potato Co. v. Jeanette, 174 N. C. at p. 240, 93 S. E. 795, and cases there cited. The judge gave those of the requested instructions to which the defendants were entitled, and the charge was more favorable to them in some respects than they had a right to expect.

[4] The exceptions to the charge are without any merit, and, besides, they are taken to long extracts therefrom, which are surely correct in some particulars, even if not so in others. When this is the case, the exception will not be considered. Nance v. Telegraph Co., 177 N. C. 313, 98 S. E. 838; Ritter L. Co. v. Moffitt, 157 N. C. 568, 73 S. E. 212; Hendricks v. Ireland, 162 N. C. 523, 77 S. E. 1011. The charge was a fair, full, and correct statement of the evidence and the law arising thereon, and complete, in all respects, with the statute. If the contentions of the parties were not correctly stated, the attention of the judge should have been called to it at the proper time, so that he might make the necessary change in them, if any was required. McMillan v. Railroad Co., 172 N. C. 853, 90 S. E. 683; State v. Foster, 172 N. C. 960, 90 S. E. 785; Mfg. Co. v. Bldg. Co., 177 N. C. 103, 97 S. E. 718; Alexander v. Cedar Works, 177 N. C. 138, 98 S. E. 312.

[5] We may add that a purchaser from a fraudulent vendor must have acquired the land for value and without notice. If feme defendant did not pay value or purchased with full knowledge of the evil intent and fraudulent purpose of the vendor in making the conveyance to her, her title falls as to his creditors. Cox v. Wall, 132 N. C. 730, 44 S. E. 635; Morgan v. Bostic, 132 N. C. 743, 44 S. E. 639; Crockett v. Bray, 151 N. C. 619, 66 S. E. 666; Eddleman v. Lentz, 158 N. C. 65, 72 S. E. 1011; Pennell v. Robinson, 164 N. C. 257, 80 S. E. 417, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 77; Smathers v. Hotel Co., 168 N. C. 69, at pages 70 and 71, 84 S. E. 47, citing Vosburgh v. Diefendorf, 119 N. Y. 357, 23 N. E. 801, 16 Am. St. Rep. 836; Giberson v. Jolley, 120 Ind. 301, 22 N. E. 306; Bank v. Fountain, 148 N. C. 590, 62 S. E. 738. The jury have evidently found, when we construe the verdict in the light of the evidence and the charge of the court, as we should do, that the feme defendant paid no consideration for the land, and took the conveyance from her husband with full knowledge of his intent to defraud his creditors.

[6, 7] In Aman v. Walker, 165 N. C. 224, 227, 81 S. E. 162, 164, Justice Allen states the principles relating to fraudulent conveyances, and along with others are these two, which are pertinent to this case:

(1) "If the conveyance is upon a valuable consideration and made with the actual intent to defraud creditors upon the part of the grantor alone, not participated in by the grantee, and of which intent he had no notice, it is valid."

(2) "If the conveyance is upon a valuable consideration, but made with the actual intent to defraud creditors on the part of the grantor, participated in by the grantee, or of which he has notice, it is void"—citing Black v. Sanders, 46 N. C. 67; Warren v. Makely, 85 N. C. 14; Worthy v. Brady, 91 N. C. 268, and other cases, as supporting the classification.

See, also, Cox v. Wall, supra, Morgan v. Bostic, supra, Pennell v. Robinson, supra, and Smathers v. Hotel Co., supra.

There was no ground upon which the court could have ordered a nonsuit. There was plenary evidence of the fraud.

The exceptions not specially considered by us are untenable.

No error.

(178 N. C. 325)

OWENS v. HINES, Director General of Railroads, et al. (No. 20.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 22, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶722—RULES AS TO ASSIGNMENTS AND GROUPING OF EXCEPTIONS.

Rules of the Supreme Court 19 (2) and 27 (81 S. E. x and xi), requiring that errors relied on be assigned in the record, and that the exceptions relied on shall be grouped, numbered, and set out immediately after the statement of the case on appeal, must be strictly adhered to, except when the appeal is on the ground the judgment was not justified by the facts found or admitted, or that the court did not have jurisdiction; the appeal of itself being an exception.

2. RAILROADS ¶51½. New, vol. 6A Key-No. Series—EFFECT OF FEDERAL CONTROL ON POLICE REGULATION.

The police regulation of Revisal 1905, § 2632, imposing penalties on railroads for delays in the transportation of intrastate shipments less than a carload, held not impaired by the federal control of railroads statute (Act March 21, 1918 [U. S. Comp. St. 1918, §§ 3115½a to 3115½p)], in view of section 15, and General Order No. 50a of January 11, 1919, of the United States Railroad Administration.

3. RAILROADS ¶5½, New, vol. 6A Key-No. Series—FEDERAL DIRECTOR GENERAL AS PARTY TO ACTION.

In an action against a railroad to recover the penalty, under Revisal 1905, § 2632, for delay in transporting an intrastate shipment of corn less than a carload, and also to recover payment for a bag of corn not delivered, the federal Director General of Railroads, to the extent of the recovery for the bag, was a proper party to the action.

Walker, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tyrrell County; Devin, Judge.

Action by M. F. Owens against Walker D. Hines, Director General of Railroads, and the Norfolk Southern Railroad Company. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant railroad appeals. Affirmed.

This was an action brought, under Revisal, § 2632, before W. L. Godwin, justice of the peace, to recover the penalty of $40 for delay in delivery of two bags of corn, and the value of one bag of corn lost in transit, shipped from Asheboro, N. C., on March 27, 1918, and received at Columbia, N. C., on April 16, 1918. The evidence showed that three bags were shipped and only two received. On appeal from the justice, in the superior court, his honor allowed the plaintiff to make Walker D. Hines, Director General of Railroads, a party defendant, the action originally having been brought against the Norfolk Southern Railroad Company. The superior court rendered judgment for $21 as the penalty for 12 days' negligent delay, the value of the corn lost having been paid into court by the defendant.

Small, McLean, Bragaw & Rodman, of Washington, N. C., for appellant.

H. L. Swain, of Columbia, and Ayldett, Simpson & Sawyer, of Elizabeth City, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. [1] The plaintiff objects that there is no assignment of error. Rule 27 (81 S. E. x) requires that the errors relied on should be assigned in the record, and rule 19, subd. 2 (81 S. E. x) of this court prescribes that the exceptions which are relied upon shall be grouped, numbered, and set out immediately after the statement of the case on appeal under penalty of dismissal, if this is not done. This is a very necessary requirement, as this court has repeatedly stated, and it must be strictly adhered to. Jones v. Railroad, 153 N. C. 419, 69 S. E. 427, and citations thereto in the Anno. Ed. But there is an exception when the appeal is upon the ground that the judgment was not justified by the facts found, or admitted, or that the court did not have jurisdiction. In such case the appeal of itself is an exception.

[2] The court found the following facts by consent: The plaintiff delivered to the defendant carrier at Asheboro, N. C., March 27, 1918, three bags of seed corn for shipment to plaintiff at Columbia, N. C. Two of these said bags were delivered to plaintiff on April 16, 1918. The carriage of said goods by the defendant railroad was entirely over its line and in the state of North Carolina; and, there being between Asheboro and Columbia three intermediate points, allowance should be made therefor in accordance with the statute. That the distance between the initial point and the point of delivery is 285 miles. Thereupon the court adjudged that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the penalty of $21; i. e., $10 for the first day, $1 for 11 succeeding days, after allowing 2 days at the initial and 6 days for the three intermediate points, as provided by statute. The court further finds that one of the bags of seed was lost in transit, that its value was $3.50, which the defendant has paid and rendered judgment for $21, with interest from the first day of the term and the costs.

The transcript shows an exception to the order making Walker D. Hines, Director General of Railroads, an additional party defendant, and the appeal from the judgment presents the validity of the judgment for the recovery of the penalty prescribed by the statute.

The United States Supreme Court, in Railroad v. North Dakota, 250 U. S. 135, 39 Sup. Ct. 502, 63 L. Ed.—, in an opinion by Chief Justice White, filed June 2, 1919, held that under Act March 21, 1918, c. 25, 40 Stat. 451, § 10 (U. S. Comp. St. 1918, § 3115½j), authorizing the president to fix rates for railroads under federal control, but providing for review by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and section 15 (section 3115½o) declaring that nothing in the act shall be construed to impair lawful police regulations of the state, the President had power to prescribe intrastate rates for railroads under federal control, though such rates shall conflict with the rates previously fixed by state authority.

Our Revisal, § 2632, provides that in shipment of less than a carload there shall be a penalty of $10 for the first day's delay, and a dollar per day for each succeeding day shall be allowed. In this case there was a delay for 20 days. After deducting the exemption of 8 days, as properly allowed by the judge, there was a net delay of 12 days, the penalty for which is $21, as correctly stated by the judge. This was an intrastate shipment, and this court has held that Revisal, § 2632, is a valid law. Davis v. Railroad, 147 N. C. 68, 60 S. E. 722; Wall v. Railroad, 147 N. C. 407, 61 S. E. 277.

The statute prescribing such penalty for delay was a police regulation, and section 15 of the act of March 21, 1918, as recited by Chief Justice White in Railroad v. North Dakota, supra, declared that "nothing in that act should be construed to impair lawful police regulations of the state." This was the view taken by the United States Railroad Administration, for in General Order No. 50-A, January 11, 1919, it is provided:

"General Order No. 50, issued October 28, 1918, is hereby amended to read as follows: It is therefore ordered, that actions at law, suits in equity, and proceedings in admiralty hereafter brought in any court based on contract, binding upon the Director General of Railroads, claim for death or injury to person, or for loss and damage to property, arising since December 31, 1917, and growing out of the possession, use, control, or operation of any railroad or system of transportation by the Director General of Railroads, which action, suit, or proceeding but for federal control might have been brought against the carrier company, shall be brought against the Director General of Railroads, and not otherwise: Provided, however, that this order shall not apply to actions, suits, or proceedings for the recovery of fines, penalties, and forfeitures."

It seems clear from this order that the Director General of Railroads did not assume to repeal the state police regulation fixing a penalty for delay in the transportation of freight between two points in this state, but only directed that he should be made a party defendant in other actions brought against any railroad company, and he provided:

"This order shall not apply to actions, suits or proceedings, for the recovery of fines, penalties and forfeitures."

He thus recognized, as Chief Justice White has stated, that the police regulations were not impaired by the federal statute, but provided that he should be exempt from being made a party to the suits therefor.

[3] When this action was instituted a part of the recovery sought was payment for the bag of corn not delivered. He was therefore to that extent a proper party to the action, and the exception to the amendment making him a party was properly overruled, but the judgment stands good as to the defendant railroad company for the penalty imposed by the statute.

Affirmed.

WALKER, J., dissents.

(178 N. C. 388)

COMER v. CITY OF WINSTON-SALEM.
(No. 360.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 29, 1919.)

1. BRIDGES ⇐41(2)—FAILURE TO SUFFICIENTLY GUARD.

Defendant city was liable for not maintaining an efficient railing, which would have prevented plaintiff's intestate, a child 28 months old, from getting through and falling 20 feet below upon the concrete bottom of the extension of the bridge; the bridge being about 200 feet from plaintiff's house, in a residential and thickly settled portion of the city, adjoining a playground.

2. DEATH. ⇐75—EVIDENCE AS TO CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In action for death of a child, due to his falling off a bridge, evidence held to show that the parents were not guilty of contributory negligence.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1050(1)—ADMISSION OF INCOMPETENT EVIDENCE HARMLESS ERROR.

In action for death of a child, due to his falling off a bridge, admitting evidence that engineer, who supervised construction of bridge, thought it dangerous, if erroneous, was harmless; the negligence charged not being the construction of the bridge, but failure to maintain a sufficient railing.

4. DEATH ⇐95(4) — MEASURE OF DAMAGES FOR DEATH OF CHILD.

In action for death of a child, charge that the measure of damages is the present value of the net pecuniary worth of deceased, to be ascertained by deducting the cost of his living from the gross income based on his life expectancy, held correct.

Walker and Allen, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Bryson, Judge.

Action by Charles S. Comer, administrator, against the City of Winston-Salem. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. No error.

The plaintiff's intestate, Joseph Earl Comer, was a white child about 28 months old, whose parents were preparing to leave the city; their household effects being at the railroad station for shipment. His mother was staying with her parents in Winston-Salem preparatory to moving. The intestate, with a 3 year old child was playing horse in the yard of its grandmother, about 200 feet from the bridge over Tar branch in West street; its mother was helping in the housework, preparing dinner at this time; there were 13 members of the family; the child had not been out of the sight of the mother more than 20 minutes, and just 5 minutes before it was killed the mother had sent her younger sister, who found the child still playing in the yard.

West street is one of the oldest streets in Salem, and runs east and west. The first bridge or culvert across Tar branch was built with brick walls on either side, and around this culvert the children played, for it was a gathering place for the children of the whole neighborhood. Later this culvert was removed, and the Southbound Railroad Company under a contract with Salem, which was afterwards consolidated with Winston under an act by which all contracts of Winston and Salem became the contracts and liabilities of Winston-Salem. This branch carries a considerable volume of water, and where it crosses West street it is 8 or 10 feet wide, and the base of said culvert extends about 10 feet further south than the top of the culvert. From the water at the south end of the culvert to the top is about 20 feet.

The water in passing over this extension of the base rushes out with considerable force, making such noise that people passing along the top of the culvert can hear the rushing of the water. Owing to the dyes poured into the stream from the mills above the bridge, the water is at times of many colors. As the water runs out from under the culvert, it empties off of said basin into a small pool. The rippling of the water can be heard by children on the bridge, but can only be seen by them by leaning over the banisters or railing, or getting through it.

The jury found that the death of the plaintiff's intestate was caused by the negligence of the defendant as alleged in the complaint; that is that the culvert having been constructed in one of the principal streets in said city, at a point which was used as a playground by the children in the community, the city negligently and carelessly built the banisters over said culvert, so unsuitable and unsafe that a child at the age of the plaintiff's intestate could and did get through the banister or railing to see the rushing of the colored water, which it could hear, and childlike, wished to see, and that by reason of such defective railing it fell and was killed. The jury further found that the plaintiff did not contribute to the injury of the intestate, and assessed the damages at $2,500.

Manly, Hendren & Womble, of Winston-Salem, for appellant.

F. M. Parrish and Jones & Clement, all of Winston-Salem, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. This case in many respects is a stronger case for plaintiff than Starling v. Cotton Mills, 171 N. C. 222, 88 S. E. 242, in which there was a reservoir near a cotton mill, around which the children of the employees were in the habit of playing, and there was the protection only of a fence, which becoming dilapidated, a child got through and, falling into the water, was drowned. The court held in that case that it was the negligence of the owners of the mill that the fence was defective.

[1] In this case the city was responsible for not maintaining an efficient railing, which would have prevented this child from getting through and falling 20 feet below upon the concrete bottom of the extension of the culvert. A small-mesh, strong wire fence would have prevented such danger as this, and would have saved the life of the little one, whose death was caused by leaning over the railing, or getting through it, to look at the gurgling many-hued ripples of the stream below. As was well said by Mr. Justice Walker in Ferrell v. Cotton Mills, 157 N. C. 540, 73 S. E. 147, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 64:

"The doctrine which imputes negligence to a parent in such a case is repulsive to our natural instincts, and repugnant to the condition of that class of persons who have to maintain life by daily toil."

Again (157 N. C. on page 541, 73 S. E. on page 147) he said:

"If parents are negligent in permitting children to play out of doors, on public ground, in the daytime, unattended by the parents themselves or others, then, in the majority of cases, it will be necessary to go out of the business of raising or attempting to raise children, because parents cannot be with children at all hours of the day; neither is it practical to employ others to be with them to guard them against unseen dangers."

It is alleged in the complaint, and admitted in the answer, that the bridge over the culvert, with the approaches, being a part of the street, is about 40 to 45 feet long and 40 feet wide; that on each side of the culvert, for about 45 feet, till the street strikes level land at each end, there are posts several feet apart of concrete, and in these are inserted two parallel iron pipes about an inch and a half in diameter—the lower pipe being 11 inches from the top of the culvert, and the upper pipe being 17 to 18 inches above this. There was evidence that since the construction of the culvert the street at that place has been especially attractive to children, who lean over the banisters to see the water as it rushes out at the southern end of the culvert, and it was while looking at the water, and probably by getting over, or under, the bottom pipe, that the child fell 20 feet on the cement extension and its skull was crushed, causing almost instant death; the water at the time being about 3 inches deep. The culvert is about 200 feet from plaintiff's house, and is near a number of houses in the community; it being in a residential and thickly settled section, adjoining the playground, where the children of the neighborhood were accustomed to gather.

[2] A child cannot be kept in the house at all times; neither can it be chained; and if not allowed to play in the open, which necessarily means, in a city which is crowded, that it must play at times in the street, the children could not be raised, as light, air, and exercise are absolutely necessary for their development. There was ample evidence upon which the jury have found that the parents were not guilty of contributory negligence on this occasion. The little child went off with its little playmate to the playground of the neighborhood, where the children were known to be in the habit of gathering. It had only been gone a few moments, while the busy mother was engaged in cooking dinner, when the fatal accident occurred.

The plaintiff did not claim that the bridge was defective, but relied upon the fact that the authorities knew that the rippling of the water and its many-hued colors attracted the children, and that for 20 years the locality adjacent had been a playground for them, and with knowledge of the natural curiosity of children in such cases more sufficient protection should have been placed at that point. Certainly the evidence should have been submitted to the jury upon the fair and impartial charge of the judge.

This is not even the case of an "attractive nuisance" on the property of another, which would render that other liable, if not sufficiently protected. A silent turntable on the property of a railroad would not attract the attention of children as irresistibly as their irrepressible curiosity would tempt them to investigate the cause of the gurgling of the many-hued water, which rushed from under the bridge 20 feet below the point at which they would attempt to see it.

The bridge was not an attractive nuisance. It was not a nuisance at all. It was a necessary structure for the use of the city. But the noises made by the gurgling of the water would move children to wish to investigate the cause. There was no conflict of evidence that, as stated in the brief of the defendant—

"for 20 years or more the children had been in the habit of playing in the vacant ground near by, and also coasting down the sidewalk on West street, which sloped to the bridge, and also frequently played around and on the bridge."

The negligence was not in the grade of the street, nor in the bridge or culvert, but in the want of sufficient protection for the children of the neighborhood frequenting that spot. This little child was accompanied to the spot by his little playmate, who doubtless had told him of the wonders of this many-colored stream roaring out from under the bridge. Travelers in Europe go miles to see "The blue rushing of the arrowy Rhone."

(Byron.)

Men cross the oceans to behold the swirl waters at Niagara, and to see a mighty river dash itself into mist at the Falls of the Zambesi, and to the childish mind this many-hued gurgling water, viewed from a height of 20 feet, was as sufficient to compel this trip of 200 feet.

[3] The nonsuit was properly denied. There was evidence to go to the jury upon the issues submitted to them. The defendant objected that evidence was admitted that while the bridge was being constructed a witness had a conversation in 1917 with the engineer supervising the work, in which the witness told him that he was putting up a trap to catch children, and the engineer replied that he was instructed to build it in that manner, but thought it dangerous himself. This exception, however, and the other exceptions as to evidence in regard to the contract under which the bridge was built, might be material, if there was any defect alleged in the construction of the bridge; but the ground of the complaint is that the street at this point over the trestle, with the precipice of 20 feet at a point where children were accustomed to gather, and which was especially attractive to them, required that the city should have put up a stout wire fence or other guard after the culvert was built, that would keep young children from getting through the open work railing with liability of such fatal accidents as this. The negligence is not in the construction of the bridge, but in failing to have a protection of this kind against such danger as this, and the jury found that the city was negligent in this respect. The defendant well says in his brief:

"No matter who builds a bridge in the street, the municipality is responsible for its condition and method of construction from the standpoint of safety."

If, therefore, it was error to admit the evidence objected to, it was harmless error, for the condition of the street and the lack of precautions for safety of children was the negligence of the city.

[4] The defendant also objects to the charge of the court upon the measure of damages, which seems to have been in effect taken from that which was approved in Mendenhall v. Railroad, 123 N. C. at page 278, 31 S. E. 480, as follows:

"The measure of damages is the present value of the net pecuniary worth of the deceased to be ascertained by deducting the cost of his own living and expenditures from the gross income, based upon his life expectancy. As a basis on which to enable the jury to make this estimate, it is competent to show, and for them to consider, the age of the deceased, his prospects in life, his habits, his character, his industry and skill, the means he had for making money, the business in which he was employed—the end of it all being to enable the jury to fix upon the net income which might be reasonably expected, if death had not ensued, and thus arrive at the pecuniary worth of the deceased to his family. You do not undertake to give the equivalent of human life. You allow nothing for suffering."

This charge is in accordance with many other decisions. Benton v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 1007, 30 S. E. 333; Coley v. Statesville, 121 N. C. 301, 28 S. E. 482; Pickett v. Railroad, 117 N. C. 616, 23 S. E. 264, 30 L. R. A. 257, 53 Am. St. Rep. 611. In Watson v. Railroad, 133 N. C. at page 191, 45 S. E. 555, the court reviews these charges and approves them.

In Poe v. Railroad, 141 N. C. 525, 54 S. E. 406, on which the defendant relies, the court read to the jury the Annuity Table; but this was not done in the present instance by the judge, who simply gave them the mathematical rule prescribed in the above cases, and illustrated it to aid the jury in arriving at the present value of the loss sustained in the death of the plaintiff's intestate.

No error.

WALKER and ALLEN, JJ., dissenting.

(178 N. C. 717)

STATE v. RUMPLE et al. (No. 348.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 5, 1919.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION §203 — GOOD COUNTS NOT VITIATED BY BAD.

An indictment for violation of the lynching statute, two of whose four counts were bad, nevertheless could support conviction on the two good counts.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §1167(2)—PRESENCE OF DEFECTIVE COUNTS IN INDICTMENT HARMLESS.

Where nol. pros. was entered as to the third and fourth counts of the indictment before submission to the jury, defendants never having been tried on such counts, which are bad, have suffered no injury by having them incorporated in the indictment.

3. CRIMINAL LAW §108(1) — JURISDICTION OF COURTS OF ONE COUNTY OVER OFFENSE IN ANOTHER.

Under Revisal 1905, §§ 3233, 3269, the superior court of the county of Surry had jurisdiction to try prosecution for the offenses of conspiracy to break a prison, and breaking and entering the prison with intent to remove a prisoner for lynching, which offenses were committed in Forsyth county.

4. CRIMINAL LAW §422(1) — DECLARATIONS OF MOB COMPETENT AGAINST CONSPIRATORS TO LYNCH.

In a prosecution for violation of the lynching statute, where the evidence tended to prove concert of action and conspiracy to break a municipal prison and take a prisoner to lynch him, and that defendants were active participants in the common purpose, the declarations and acts of members of the crowd were competent against defendants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Surry County; Long, Judge.

Jack Rumble and others were convicted of violation of the statute to prevent lynching, and they appeal. No error.

The defendants were convicted under the statute enacted to prevent lynching, and have appealed from the judgment pronounced upon the verdict.

The indictment was found and the defendants tried in the county of Surry, and the crime was committed in Forsyth county.

The indictment originally contained four counts: (1) A conspiracy to break a prison; (2) breaking and entering the prison with intent, etc.; (3) a riot and disorderly conduct; (4) defacing and injuring a certain building.

A nol. pros. was entered as to the third and fourth counts before the case was submitted to the jury.

The defendants Chris Chappel, Ira Whitaker, and A. R. Castevens were convicted on the first and second counts in the indictment and the defendants Frank Hester, Wynn Carter, J. E. Savage, and George Douthit were convicted of an attempt to commit the crime charged in the second count.

The evidence tended to prove that on November 17, 1918, Russell High was arrested about 12 or 1 o'clock in the day on the charge of a criminal assault upon Mrs. Childress, and was imprisoned in the city guardhouse; that about 3 o'clock the prison was attacked by a mob, who broke it open and did serious damage to the building, the purpose of the mob being to lynch High; that the riot continued during the afternoon far into the night; that the home guard was called out, and succeeded in dispersing the crowd for awhile, but that it then became necessary to send troops from Raleigh and Charlotte; that stores were broken open after the home guard reached the prison, for the purpose of getting firearms to be used in capturing the prisoner High.

Evidence was admitted over the objection of the defendants as to the declarations and acts of those in the crowd.

The other exceptions relied on by the defendants are stated in the opinion of the court.

Benbow, Hall & Benbow and W. H. Beckerdite, all of Winston-Salem, for defendant Douthit and Carter.

J. Gilmer Korner, Jr., Fred S. Hutchins, and Lewis M. Swink, all of Winston-Salem, for defendant Hester.

Hastings & Whicker and J. B. Craver, all of Winston-Salem, for defendants Savage, Castevens, Whitaker, and Chappel.

James S. Manning, Atty. Gen., and Frank Nash, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

ALLEN, J. The defendants are indicted under a statute enacted in 1893, designed to prevent lynching, the material parts of which, as applicable to this appeal, are embodied in sections 3698 and 3233 of the Revisal, and are as follows:

3698. Lynching. "If any person shall conspire to break or enter any jail or other place of confinement of prisoners charged with crime or under sentence, for the purpose of killing or otherwise injuring any prisoner confined therein; or if any person shall engage in breaking or entering any such jail or other place of confinement of such prisoners with intent to kill or injure any prisoners, he shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction, or upon a plea of guilty, shall be fined not less than five hundred dollars, and imprisoned in the state's prison or the county jail, not less than two nor more than fifteen years."

3233. Lynching. "The superior court of any county which adjoins the county in which the crime of lynching shall be committed shall have full and complete jurisdiction over the crime and the offender to the same extent as if the crime had been committed in the bounds of such adjoining county."

The statute has been sustained as a valid exercise of legislative power, and an indictment has been approved which was found by the grand jury of Union county for the offense committed in the county of Anson, and containing three counts, the first two of which were practically identical with the first and second counts of the present indictment. State v. Lewis, 142 N. C. 626, 55 S. E. 600, 9 Ann. Cas. 361.

The defendants, admitting this much, say however, the indictment is bad because: (1) It charges the defendants in the third count "with an attempt to commit the alleged crime of lynching in the county of Forsyth," and "that the grand jury of Surry county has no jurisdiction or authority in law to present a bill of indictment for the matters and things therein alleged"; (2) it charges the defendants "in the third and fourth counts with the alleged crime of riot, disorderly conduct, and with defacing, damaging, and injuring a certain building in the city of Winston-Salem, county of Forsyth, known as the 'Municipal Building,' all of which crimes are alleged to have been committed within the county of Forsyth, state of North Carolina, and these defendants are advised and believe that the grand jury of Surry county has no authority nor jurisdiction in law to present to this court a bill of indictment against these defendants for the matters and things therein alleged, and this court is without jurisdiction to put these defendants on trial therefor, but that the grand jury of Forsyth county has the proper authority and jurisdiction to present such indictment for said crimes therein alleged."

The first ground of objection to the indictment is not true in fact as neither the third nor the fourth count charges an attempt to commit the crime of lynching, and this is recognized in the second plea of the defendants, which describes the third count correctly as charging the crimes of "riot, disorderly conduct," and the fourth as charging the defendants "with defacing, damaging and injuring a certain building."

[1] But neither of the objections, if otherwise valid, can avail the defendants, because the first and second counts are not assailed, and a defective count does not vitiate the indictment.

"If one count is bad for failure to state any offense, or to state it with sufficient precision this will not render a good count bad." Clark's Crim. Procedure, 299.

To the same effect, State v. Holder, 133 N. C. 709, 45 S. E. 862; State v. Avery, 159 N. C. 495, 74 S. E. 1016.

"In criminal cases the practice of uniting counts for cognate offenses has always been encouraged, not merely because in this way the labor of the courts and the expenses of prosecution are greatly diminished, but because it relieves defendants of the oppressiveness which would result from the splitting of prosecutions." State v. Toole, 106 N. C. 739, 11 S. E. 169.

[2] Again a nol. pros. was entered as to the third and fourth counts before the case was submitted to the jury, and the defendants have never been tried on those counts, and have suffered no injury by having them incorporated in the indictment.

[3] The defendants next contend that the statute conferring jurisdiction on the courts of an adjoining county deals only with the completed offense, and not with an attempt to commit the offense; and, if the third and fourth counts were properly eliminated, there was no charge of an attempt left in the indictment, and that it was error to submit to the jury the view that the defendants might be convicted of an attempt to commit the crime charged, but here the defendants are met by the language of the statute, which says that the superior court of the adjoining county "shall have full and complete jurisdiction over the crime and the offender to the same extent as if the crime had been committed in the bounds of such adjoining county" and by section 3269 of the Revisal, which provides that—

"Upon the trial of any indictment the prisoner may be convicted of the crime charged therein or of a less degree of the same crime, or of an attempt to commit the crime so charged, or of an attempt to commit a less degree of the same crime."

The charge of the crime includes an attempt, and under the latter statute it cannot be doubted that the defendants could have been convicted of an attempt under an indictment, charging the principal offense, found and tried in the county of Forsyth, and, if so, the same result must follow when the indictment is found and tried in an adjoining county, which under the statute, has as "full and complete jurisdiction over the crime" as the courts of Forsyth.

This is not a harsh rule, but is favorable to defendants, as to hold otherwise would divide the crime and subject them to the hardship and expense of defending successive indictments in different counties, a result which the General Assembly, could not have contemplated.

There was also a motion for judgment of nonsuit in behalf of each defendant.

We have examined the record, and find evidence that the defendants were present and participated actively in the unlawful conduct of the mob as alleged in the indictment, and there was no error in overruling these motions. It can serve no useful purpose to point out the evidence against each defendant, and we refrain from doing so.

[4] The evidence, much of it circumstantial, tended to prove concert of action—a conspiracy—to break the municipal prison and take a prisoner confined therein for the purpose of lynching him, and that the defendants were active participants in the common purpose, and under these conditions the declarations and acts of members of the crowd were competent against the defendants.

In Saunders v. Gilbert, 156 N. C. 463, 72 S. E. 610, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 404:

"It appeared that many persons had gathered in the street and followed the plaintiff to his home, where they stopped in front of his house, some or all of them using abusive and threatening language. The question arose in the trial below whether these outcries of this mob, or unlawful assembly, were competent against each and every one of the crowd. With regard to this, we said: 'The testimony as to what was said in the road and in front of the plaintiff's home was clearly competent. The res gestæ includes what was said as well as what was done. The acts and the outcries of this unlawful assembly—for that is, in plain speech and in law, what it was—is held to be competent as pars res gestæ, and also as tending to show their purpose or quo animo. Nothing is better settled than this rule of evidence. State v. Rawls, 65 N. C. 334; State v. Worthington, 64 N. C. 594. We find it stated in 4 Elliott on Evidence, § 8128, that "what is said and done by persons during the time they are engaged in a riot (or unlawful assembly) constitutes the res gestæ, and it is, of course, competent, as a rule, to prove all that is said and done," the acts and words of the mob or any members of it, as in Rex v. Gordon, 21 State Trials, 485 (563), wherein evidence of the cries of the mob "No Popery," as it was proceeding towards Parliament House, were held competent and admissible as a part of the res gestæ.' This would seem to be a full answer to these objections. The same rule of evidence had been before stated and applied by us in Henderson-Snyder Co. v. Polk, 149 N. C. 104, 107, 62 S. E. 904. We there held that, where two prisoners are engaged together in the execution of a common design to defraud others, the declarations of each relating to the enterprise, and in furtherance of it, are evidence against the other, though made in the latter's absence, if a common design has been shown, citing Lincoln v. Chaplin, 7 Wallace (U. S.) 132, 19 L. Ed. 106. It is, perhaps, the universal rule that any act done, or any declaration made, by any one of the conspirators in the furtherance or perpetration of the alleged conspiracy may be given in evidence against himself or his coconspirators." State v. Davis, 177 N. C. 576, 98 S. E. 785.

It is true that some of these declarations and acts were after the crowd had left the prison on the arrival of the home guard, but it appears that they had not abandoned their purpose, and, on the contrary, that when a store was entered forcibly, a fact to which the defendants strenuously object, it was for the purpose of securing firearms to be used in capturing the prisoner High.

These are the objections chiefly relied on, and we find no error in them or in the other exceptions appearing in the record.

No error.

(178 N. C. 382)
BENNETT et al. v. PLOTT. (No. 359.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 29, 1919.)

CONTRACTS §323(1)—INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE TO JUSTIFY SUBMISSION OF COUNTERCLAIM.

In action to recover for work in building concrete roads for defendant, evidence held too inadequate and uncertain to justify submission of defendant's counterclaim for breach of contract to the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rockingham County; Bryson, Judge.

Action by J. H. Bennett and others against J. T. Plott. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. No error.

The evidence in the case was as follows:
J. H. Bennett, plaintiff, testified as follows:

I live in Reidsville, N. C. The work was performed in the fall of 1917 and finished in the winter of 1918. The contract I had with Mr. Plott was a verbal one. I was doing some work for Rockingham county, N. C., and Mr. J. T. Plott came to me on several occasions and told me that he had some work in South Carolina he would like to get me to do. It was a long ways off, and I didn't want to go down there, and he asked me what I was getting for this work, and I told him $9 a yard. He said, "I have some work for $10, $11, and $20 per yard, different bridges to be built." He said, "You can hire all the labor you want for $1.25, plenty of laborers down there; you can buy lumber for the forms cheap, $1 a hundred; your sand is right in the creek, nothing to do but take the sand up and use it." It looked pretty good to me, and better than anything I had been doing; and, while it was a long ways off, I didn't like to go away from home down there, and I put him off, and he would come again, time after time, until finally he came and said, "Are you going down there?" and I said, "I will go down and look it over, provided I can get Mr. Sharp interested." Mr. Sharp was a carpenter, and I would have to hire a high-priced man to do the carpenter work, and he says: "Go down and look it over, and come back, and, if you don't find it like I tell you, I'll pay your expenses." So we went and looked it over. We didn't find out anything about the labor, except we asked two or three fellows, and they said we could hire all the labor we wanted. We found that the stone was in the crops, and people said we couldn't get it until they picked their cotton, and the engineer took us out to see the job, and he says, "Here's the sand, right here at you," and it looked pretty good. But we gave out entirely going; the stone was in the crop, and we would bother folks going over their land to get the stone, and we decided we would not go, and he came back again and asked me about it, and finally we agreed to go, and we went down there and got on the job, and went to work as soon as we could get there, but found we couldn't hire any labor at all. We couldn't get anybody to help us, and we picked up some little boys. We decided to get along the best we could until the crop got in and we could hire some fellows to help us. When we commenced to use the sand, the engineer came out and said: "You can't use this sand. It won't do." And I said, "What is the matter with it?" and he said: "There is too much dirt in it; it's red, or something is wrong with it, and you can't use it." There I was, down there, and we were at considerable expense; but for that we could have pulled up and come back. We were men of small means, and we had to go ahead and do the best we could. So we hauled the sand two or three miles, and very often that didn't suit. We couldn't hardly suit the men. In a little while Mr. Plott came down, and in the meantime when we saw the profile, it didn't look good at all. There was so much carpenter work, and run in small work instead of heavy work, and there was not yardage to run out for the carpenter work you had to do. It was not a paying proposition at all. We complained to Mr. Plott about it, and he said: "You boys are down here; go ahead and do the best you can, and I won't charge you the 10 per cent. I'll give you everything I get out of the job to do it."

Before I went down there, Mr. Sharp and I were together, and he introduced me to a cement drummer, and Mr. Plott told the drummer we were in the market for some cement, and we bought some cement from him. When we got ready for cement, I wired the cement people for a car, and they shipped it, but I didn't see any bill. They shipped the car, and we unloaded the car and went to work, getting along the best we could, because we didn't have any labor; we couldn't make any headway, and he said for us to go ahead and do all we could. In a short time I got a letter from Mr. Plott saying: "You fellows are getting along mighty slow. I have got my money in that cement." I wrote him that I had never seen a bill for that cement. He said, "I paid for it, and I want to get my money out of it." I wrote him back: "If you paid for the cement, you got 5 per cent. discount, you got your pay; you know you can get your money out of the job, but I thought I was paying for the cement, but it seems like you are doing it." He offered to lend me money time and time again, and I told him we had money enough to do with, but we couldn't hire the labor. We didn't have the profile of the work to be done until we started the work, and it was given to us then. The specification of the yardage it takes to do the work was 2,219 pounds of steel, 103 yards of stone, and 44 yards of sand, and 148 bags of cement. That is the second bridge we built. This was supposed to be 110.5 yards of concrete when completed. We built that bridge according to the profile. The specifications for the first bridge call for 843 pounds of steel, 473 yards of stone, and 24 cubic yards of sand. The material called for we put in that bridge. In building the first bridge we struck rock and didn't go down as far as the specifications called for for that reason; it would have amounted to two or three yards of cement.

Our agreement as to what we were to be paid for this work, as shown by the profile, was one $10, one $11, $12, and $20.50. The different classes are shown and are paid according to the mix. I think I was to be paid $10 for class A; $12 for class B; and the handrail, $20.50 or $20. The work and the material which we furnished down there came to $1,588.57. They have paid me $697.70 on that bill. They are due me $55.55. I was to get 2 cents a pound for putting the steel in—that is, reinforced work. I paid the freight on the steel, which was $19.05; I did 3.60 yards of haul-rail at $20, making $72. In class C I have 2,988 square yards of concrete at 12 cents, $358.56, and 65.47 of class B at 11 cents, making $720.17; 15.84 cubic-yards of class C at 10 cents, $158.40; 129 pounds of steel at 2 cents, $62.58. There is an item of 17.21 yards short, and the material was put in there and don't show it; it didn't measure it, and this shortage amounted to $197.81, and that makes a total of $1,588.57. There is an item I owe Mr. Plott for cement of $309, and $116.89, making $435.87, which leaves a balance of $1,152.70. Then I show an item of payments $697.70, leaving a balance of $455, which is the amount I claim is due me to date. The reason I left down there was I had built one bridge complete and was working on the second, and had the material all there, stone and sand and everything hauled for it. We were at work on it. It was one Sunday. I walked out on the job and saw Mr. Wright. He was doing some work, and he and I walked and talked. I told him I had finished hauling on the job and I was going to start the teams on the other job next morning, and he said: "If I were you, I would not." Mr. Plott has let that job to somebody else." Up to that time I had no intimation that Mr. Plott was going to let the job to anybody else. That was part of the work he had contracted for me to do. Mr. Wright was working under Mr. Plott. In a few days Mr. Plott came, and I told him what I had heard, and I said: "We are fixed here.

I have torn my tent down and moved here between the jobs, and I am ready to go to hauling on the other, and I want to know about it. I heard you had let it to somebody else." And he says: "I have got to go down the road. I'll be back in a few minutes." That is about what he said to me, and he got in his car and passed me down the road, and when he came back it looked like he got faster, and he didn't try to stop. I tried to stop him, but he didn't stop, and in a day or two I got a letter from him, from Greenwood, stating that he had let this work, and that the engineers were kicking on the slow time, and that he had let it to a man who had a concrete mixer, and they were going to finish the work by January 1st, or soon thereafter. He wrote me that if I wanted to I could go back five or six miles somewhere else and do some work over there. When I pulled up and left a job it entailed expense. I had a team of mules down there, and the mules were standing idle, and I sold my mules at a sacrifice. I had my lumber there to use in another job. This lumber cost us very high, and I had to give it away. It cost $100 and I sold it for $10. I am not asking any damages; all I want is what he actually owes me. In finishing up there, we tore the forms off and dressed up one side of it and then dressed the other side, but the hand-rail was too green to tear the forms off when we left, and we would have been there, at a dead expense, and I left and hired a good man to take the forms off and dress it up, and he did it. Pretty soon I went for a settlement, and he said the engineer won't receive it and that the fellow didn't dress the handrail up, and it went on month after month. Finally, Mr. Plott told me that the engineer wouldn't receive it and had spent some money on it. I afterwards learned that the engineer had received the work and that the public was driving over it every day, and I told Mr. Plott this and asked for a settlement. The cement was locked up, and I gave Mr. Wright the key before I left. Mr. Plott afterwards used the cement on the job.

Cross-examination:

The specifications were in writing. I really didn't pay any attention to the specifications; I went by the profile. I went down to South Carolina to look the work over and talked it over with Mr. Plott. He said to me, "Go and look it over, and, if it is not what I tell you, I'll pay your expenses." I never afterwards asked him to pay my expenses, and I went on to do the work. The engineer showed me the work when I went down there. Mr. Plott said I could hire all the labor I wanted for $1.25 a day; it was plentiful. I understood the situation. I knew that Mr. Plott was not personally doing any work, but was subletting it to other contractors. I took his word for the labor part of it. I went down to look at the work and didn't look for labor. After we looked at the work, we decided we didn't want it and we didn't look for any labor. We did decide we didn't want the work and consequently didn't make any inquiries about labor. Mr. Plott came and insisted on our going down there, and I told him that if Mr. Sharp will go with me I'll go. I didn't have any work on hand at that time, so we decided to go. Mr. Plott was to get 10 per cent. on the work we did. The engineer said I was getting along slow with the work and he would like for me to get along faster; but it was impossible. I couldn't get the labor. It was our interest to get through and come back. Mr. Plott told me: "You fellows won't have to pay me the 10 per cent. go ahead, and, if you find out you are not satisfied, you can build two or three bridges and then pull out and leave, if you are not satisfied." I never made a contract to finish the work as fast as somebody else might desire.

Q. When you were going down to find out why they didn't settle with you, why didn't you write to the civil engineer; why didn't you write to him? (Objection by plaintiff. Sustained. Defendant excepts.) I quit the work. I finished the one I was on (bridge) before I quit. The material was in the job when I quit. The reason we left was we had to wait 8 or 10 days to get the plank forms off that held the cement that was on the handrail. The forms were only left on the handrail. When we left, the job was all built complete according to the instructions of the inspector who was on the job at the time. There were other culverts on the road that we didn't complete when we left.

J. T. Plott, defendant, testifies as follows:

Mr. J. H. Bennett came to me on the streets of Reidsville, after I got the contract job of work in South Carolina, and asked me about doing some of the concrete work, and stated that he would like to get the work, and asked for the specifications. Afterwards I told him that I would give him my price, less 10 per cent. This was a week or ten days after he had the specifications to read over. I told him that I practically knew nothing about concrete work because I had not had any concrete work myself, and that always in taking a job I managed to sublet the concrete part of it. He wanted to know if that was the best I would do, and I told him that it was, and that I thought I could let it at that price. I said to him: "If you want to go down and look at the work, if you don't like it and don't want to take it, I'll bear your expenses; if you take it you bear your own expenses." He told me when he was going, and about a week later I saw him and he reported that he had been down there and looked at the work, and that he hardly knew what about it; that the farmers hadn't gotten their cotton picked; and that he didn't know whether they could get the rock until it was picked. This was probably the latter part of September. I told him that he could possibly get enough rock to start with, and that it wouldn't be but a short time until the cotton was picked. So far as the sand, cement, and labor was concerned, I knew nothing about it, and didn't tell him where either could be gotten. I simply offered to pay his expenses in order that he could see for himself and be satisfied before he entered upon the contract. He was at liberty to stay down there as long as he wished to, in order to find out these things, at my expense. When he first came back, and I talked with him, he gave me no answer. Probably a week later he stated that he had talked with Mr. Sharp about it, who went with him, and that they had decided to do the work. He didn't say whether he had Mr. Sharp employed as hand or as a partner.

During this time, a representative of the Atlas Cement Company was to see me in Reidsville at the Womack Garage. * * * (Objection by plaintiff. Sustained. Exception.) I didn't tell him what labor could be had for. I have paid him $1,301.98. I paid him cash, $697.26; he used 153½ barrels of cement, amounting to $422.15; 312 pounds steel amounting to $172.09; $10.50 paid to man for dressing up the job which includes the amount the engineer paid him. Mr. Bennett left on the ground cement and steel, and we gave him credit for the difference. We didn't know how much was left. Some of the cement was damaged. He is only charged with what was actually used by me. I paid for the remainder. Mr. Bennett left the job, and I had to get some one else to put on the job. He left the job about March, 1918. I sent Mr. Warlich down there to finish the job.

Cross-examination of J. T. Plott:

I used all the cement left by Mr. Bennett except three (3) bags. I paid Mr. Bennett $697.26. I had an item charged on bill furnished Mr. Bennett of $10.50, which was for dressing the concrete bridge built by Bennett. I rendered Mr. Bennett statement in December showing a balance due him of $232.83. At that time I had not used the cement. I used the cement in September. I used 87½ barrels of cement, worth $2.75 per barrel. I had charged Mr. Bennett with 232 barrels of cement, at $2.75. He is entitled to a credit, according to that bill for 87½ barrels, which is worth $216.87.

Redirect examination:

After Mr. Bennett was on the job, I received a letter from the engineer insisting that I put another man force on it, that Mr. Bennett was getting nothing done, and that the grading contractor was right up against him with his work, and there was a culvert nearer down where the grading contractor was at work that he wanted put in at once or it would necessitate extra expense to the grading contractor. I went down there on account of this, and he complained about he couldn't get this done and couldn't get that done. I don't think he put over four laborers on the work, and the job to be properly handled should have had at least 10 or 20.

Nat C. Nave, witness for defendant, testifies as follows:

I live in Elizabethtown, Tenn., and work in McCormick county, S. C., and in March, 1918, left there for the Army. I had been working there as assistant engineer since October, 1917, and was inspector on the work that Mr. Bennett did. I reported there on October 8th, as assistant engineer, to Mr. Warrell. Bennett and Sharp moved with a small outfit and began work. They had trouble about the sand and trouble building their forms, and finally got started and completed the work on one bridge and started another. They put in the material and practically completed the bridge, but on account of leaving the forms on longer than they should have, it cost more to dress the work up than it should have. One bridge was never completed until after Mr. Bennett and Mr. Sharp left there. My records show that we paid Mr. Plott $1,542.17 for this work. I was authorized by the commissioners and engineer to speak to Mr. Bennett to push the work and get it completed faster than he seemed to be doing. I do not recall whether I was there when Mr. Bennett left, but he told me he was going to leave; that he would not be there to dress up the work; he had dressed up one bridge and one had the forms on. He told me he had made arrangements with a man living over there to finish the work; that he was going to leave and this man would dress the work; that he had done all except tear off the forms and dressing the work; he had not fulfilled the contract and had not done all the work that was to be done on the job.

Q. Did he give any reason as to why he was going? (Objection by plaintiff. Sustained. Defendant excepts.) He finished one culvert and furnished material and put it in another one.

Cross-examination:

Mr. Plott was paid $1,542.17 for this work. I do not know what it cost to dress the handrail.

Mr. Warrick, witness for defendant, testifies as follows:

My business is road building. Mr. Plott sent me to South Carolina, the latter part of June, and I built the two bridges and culverts that they (Bennett and Sharp) left and had not built in June, 1918. I built two bridges and culverts. I do not know what it costs. I had nothing to do with the figures.

J. T. Plott, defendant, recalled, testified as follows:

I sent Mr. Warrick to finish part of the work and Mr. Whittemore to finish part of it that Bennett left. It cost me about $2,000 to build the bridge over and above what the work came to.

Cross-examination:

All told, there were about 450 yards of concrete to be done. I said awhile ago it would cost ten or twelve thousand dollars, but I have never figured what it cost. I would know if I sat down and figured it. I do not know what the cement cost that went in the job. I do not know what the steel cost that went in it, neither do I know what the labor cost.

Q. Do you know anything about it? A. Yes, sir, I know that after there has been about 450 yards put in, when the whole job is complete, there will be 300 yards more to be put in.

By the Court: You say you had to construct several yards of cement and reinforced steel in building the culvert and bridges; was that the result of these plaintiffs quitting their work, or would that have to be done anyhow? A. It was the result of their quitting; I had to go and complete it.

Q. Did you contract with somebody else or hire them? A. I hired them.

Q. I understood you to say that this was extra work that you had to do because these men quit; did you do any more work than was called for by the specifications, those things which Bennett and Sharp would have to do if they had completed it? A. Certainly not, the whole bridge had to be built.

Q. Just the unfinished work on the bridge that you said you paid $10.50? A. We did work on both bridges; I put my own men there and did work on the other that is not charged.

Q. Did you have to do any extra work—but you didn't have to do any extra work except what was called for by the profile? A. No, sir; he had not touched them.

J. O. Sharp, plaintiff, testifies as follows:

Mr. Plott told Mr. Bennett and me, after we were down there, that we were up against it, that he would give us the 10 per cent., and that he would not look for anything out of the concrete work at all. He told us we could get the sand right on the job; the engineer showed us the rock; the people said that there was plenty of rock, but you can't go in my cotton-patch for it. He said labor was plentiful and could be gotten for $1 per day, not over $1.50 per day. We could not get labor there, except a little. We hauled the sand two miles. We left the job because the engineer made it so hard and went and undermined us and gave the job to the other fellow, and the material on that job was closer than we had to work. We might have gotten through if we had gotten that work. He let the contract to some one else and notified us what to do, and I said, "If that is the case, we'll leave." Mr. Bennett kept records, and I do not know what is due us on the job.

Cross-examination:

We went down to look at the work. Hands could not be gotten at all, and we had to take a couple of boys with us. The engineer never showed me any papers.

The action was tried in superior court upon the following issues:

(1) Is the defendant indebted to the plaintiff, and, if so, in what amount?

Answer: "Yes, $445.50."

(2) Are the plaintiffs indebted to the defendant, and if so, in what amount?

Answer: "No."

From the judgment rendered the defendant appealed.

W. R. Dalton, of Reidsville, for appellant.
J. M. Sharp, of Reidsville, for appellees.

BROWN, J. This action was brought to recover for work done by the plaintiffs for the defendant in South Carolina, the plaintiffs claiming the defendant owed them a balance for work done in the sum of $455.50. The defendant, answering, denied allegations of the plaintiffs and set up a counterclaim for breach of contract in the sum of $2,000. There are three exceptions to the evidence which we have examined and find to be without merit. The fourth exception is as follows:

"(4) That the court charged the jury as follows: 'As to the second issue: Are the plaintiffs indebted to the defendant, and, if so, in what amount? The court charges you that there is no evidence by which you could answer this issue in favor of the defendant, and instructs you, as a question of law, to answer that issue, "No." You will therefore concern yourselves with the answer to the first issue, applying to the evidence the rules of law I have given you.'

The entire evidence discloses that the plaintiffs performed the work as alleged and were due the sum found over and above all payments for the work and labor actually performed. We have examined the evidence upon which the alleged counterclaim is based, and are of opinion that it is entirely too inadequate and uncertain to justify his honor in submitting the counterclaim to the jury, and we are of opinion that there is no necessity to discuss it.

No error.

(113 S. C. 5)

FARMERS' BANK & TRUST CO. v. FUDGE et al. (No. 10285.)

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 22, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐843(2)—REVIEW OF ACADEMIC QUESTIONS.

The question whether under Civ. Code 1912, § 1352, a mortgage was a duly recorded instrument in view of claimed disqualification of witnesses making and taking affidavit for probate was academic, where judgments, the basis of claims in opposition to the mortgage, were recovered upon debts contracted prior to the mortgage.

2. DEEDS ⇐47—MORTGAGES ⇐58—ATTESTATION.

Deeds and mortgages are required to be executed with the same formalities, and both must comply with Civ. Code 1912, § 3453, as to attestation.

3. MORTGAGES ⇐58—COMPETENCY OF ATTESTING WITNESSES.

Under Code Civ. Proc. 1912, §§ 437, 438, and in view of Act Sept. 19, 1866 (13 St. at Large, p. 377), stockholders and officers of a bank which took a mortgage are competent witnesses to its execution within the requirements of Civ. Code 1912, § 3453, providing for the execution of deeds.

4. MORTGAGES ⇐58—GOOD BETWEEN PARTIES THOUGH ATTESTATION INVALID.

A mortgage attested by witnesses who are incompetent stands on the same footing as if it were without witnesses, and is good between the parties.

5. MORTGAGES ⇐248—RIGHT TO ACCELERATE MATURITY PASSES TO ASSIGNEES.

Where a mortgage provided that in event of the mortgagor's failure to pay interest at the stipulated dates the mortgagee should have the option to declare the principal and interest due, such right passed to an assignee of the mortgage.

6. MORTGAGES ⇐401(4)—NOTICE OF ELECTION TO DECLARE SAME DUE ON DEFAULT IN INTEREST.

Where a mortgage gave an option to declare the principal and interest due on default in payment of interest, it is not necessary for the mortgagee to give notice, other than the commencement of an action for the interest and principal, of an election to exercise the option to demand payment of principal and interest.

7. MORTGAGES — 489 — EFFECT OF ELECTION TO DECLARE PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST DUE.

Where a mortgagee exercised an option to declare both the interest and principal due on nonpayment of interest, held that the aggregate of the principal and interest then due became an interest-bearing fund, bearing interest at the rate of 7 per cent. only, and not at the rate of 8 per cent., which was the rate fixed by the mortgage.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Chester County; R. W. Memminger, Judge.

Action by the Farmers' Bank & Trust Company against R. H. Fudge and others and the Lancaster Mercantile Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, the last-named defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

This action was commenced on the 20th of October, 1917, for the foreclosure of four mortgages on certain lands. The complaint contains two causes of action. In the first, it is alleged: That the defendant R. H. Fudge made his promissory note, of which the following is a copy:

"$10,300. Rock Hill, S. C. January 3, 1910.

"On the date hereinafter stipulated, I promise to pay to the order of Sep Massey the sum of ten thousand three hundred dollars, due and payable nine years after date, together with interest from date at the rate of eight per cent. per annum, payable on January 1st of each succeeding year, provided that failure to meet the interest at the interest period above named shall make the full amount of interest and principal become due and payable forthwith at the option of the mortgagee, negotiable and payable at the National Union Bank, of Rock Hill, S. C., and in case this note is put in the hands of an attorney for collection by suit or otherwise, upon default of payment thereof, then the undersigned shall pay to the owner of this note ten per cent. in addition to cover the fees and commissions of said attorney. Value received.

"[Signed] R. H. Fudge."

That in order to secure the payment thereof, he executed a mortgage on the lands therein described, which was recorded on the 7th of January, 1910. That on October 18, 1917, the note and mortgage were duly transferred to the plaintiff by Sep Massey for $11,380. That by the terms and conditions of said note and mortgage, the defendant R. H. Fudge having failed to meet the interest installments when the same became due, the full amount of principal and interest is due and payable, and plaintiff has elected to foreclose the said mortgage. That the condition of the mortgage has been broken, and there is due therein $11,380.40, with interest from October 18, 1917, at 8 per cent. per annum. That plaintiff's attorney is entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee.

It is alleged that two other mortgages were given as additional security for said indebtedness, but it is not necessary to describe them.

In the second cause of action it is alleged:

"That on January 28, 1915, the defendants R. H. Fudge, Gertrude Fudge, and M. E. Cox, executed their joint and several note to plaintiff for $11,123.11, payable on November 15, 1915, with interest after maturity at 8 per cent. per annum, payable annually, which note further stipulated for 10 per cent. of the principal as attorney's fee, in case the note be placed in the hands of an attorney for collection after maturity. That on same day, to secure payment of said note, interest, and attorney's fees the defendants R. H. Fudge, Gertrude Fudge, and M. E. Cox mortgaged to plaintiff the following lands. * * * That on the 1st day of February, 1915, the said mortgage was duly recorded. * * * That the condition of the mortgage has been broken, and that there is due upon the mortgage debt, $11,123.11, with interest from the 15th of November, 1915, at 8 per cent., payable annually, together with attorney's fees."

The defendant judgment creditors, other than Lancaster Mercantile Company and Catawba Fertilizer Company, made answer, setting up their judgments respectively, against R. H. Fudge, and praying that their rights may be protected according to their priorities.

The Lancaster Mercantile Company and the Catawba Fertilizer Company, appellants, both by demurrer and by answer, separately raised the question that the action in the first cause of action is premature, in that it appears upon the face of the complaint that the alleged note for $10,300, dated January 3, 1910, does not fall due until nine years thereafter, viz. January 3, 1919. That the mortgagee, Sep Massey, did not, during the time of his ownership of the note and mortgage, declare the mortgage debt to be due and payable, in default of payment of interest annually thereon, and did not give any notice of the exercise of his option to declare the mortgage due. That the plaintiff claimed to have purchased said mortgage on October 18, 1917, and immediately thereafter commenced this action without any demand for any arrears of interest or notice of the exercise of any option in respect thereto. That plaintiff is without power to exercise an option granted to the mortgagee, Sep Massey, not asserted by Sep Massey, but waived by him and for a default occurring previous to plaintiff's alleged ownership.

These defendants, separately answering, denied the allegations of the complaint and set up their respective judgments as prior liens upon the mortgaged premises. That the Lancaster Mercantile Company recovered judgment against R. H. Fudge on April 3, 1913, for $5,350.87 (this judgment, however, was not entered on the abstract of judgments until September 16, 1916), and that plaintiff had notice of the judgment at the time of the execution of mortgage to the plaintiff. That the Catawba Fertilizer Company recovered judgment against R. H. Fudge, Gertrude Fudge, and M. E. Cox on April 11, 1917, for $3,818.32, and that execution thereon was lodged with the sheriff and remained wholly unsatisfied.

The answer of each of these defendants further alleges that on and previous to January 28, 1915, the defendants R. H. Fudge, Gertrude Fudge, and M. E. Cox were indebted to the Catawba Fertilizer Company upon the indebtedness for which said judgment was recovered, and that plaintiff had notice of this fact. That R. H. Fudge, Gertrude Fudge, and M. E. Cox were then and now are each insolvent and that the property covered by the mortgage was practically all the property of the defendant mortgagors. That the claim sought to be secured by the mortgage was antecedent to said mortgage. That the mortgage was made with a view to give plaintiff an unlawful preference over the other creditors. That plaintiff at the time of execution of said mortgage had reasonable cause to believe that the mortgagors were insolvent, and that the mortgage was made to give plaintiff an unlawful preference. That said mortgage was an assignment with unlawful preference, and void under the assignment statute. The answer further alleged that said mortgage was given and accepted with intent of mortgagors and mortgagee to hinder, delay, and defeat the claims of these defendant creditors, and is void under the Statute of Elizabeth.

The prayer of the answer was: That the complaint as to the first cause of action be dismissed as prematurely brought. That the mortgage set up under second cause of action be declared void. That in the event of sale of the premises, provision be made for payment of defendant's judgment according to rank.

The decree of his honor, the circuit judge, is as follows:

"The cause was heard by me on November 14, 1918, during the November term of the court of common pleas of Chester county, upon the issues stated, and upon the testimony reported and after full argument by counsel, especially of counsel for contesting judgment creditors, who was heard uninterruptedly for practically a whole day, and upon careful consideration of same, and of all the testimony, the court concludes that the points raised by the contesting defendants, including the demurrer to the first cause of action, are not well taken, and the same are overruled, and that the mortgages held by plaintiff are entitled to be foreclosed.

"The court finds as a matter of fact from the testimony that the bank did not know that an order for judgment had been made against R. H. Fudge in favor of Lancaster Mercantile Company on April 3, 1913, which was held back from entry until September 16, 1916, or that Fudge owed other debts or was insolvent; and, while from the facts that the mortgage was witnessed by officers of the bank, thereby requiring a greater scrutiny as to its fairness, upon the whole case the court is satisfied that there was no fraud, and that the transaction was perfectly fair.

"This court is also satisfied that there was no intention on the part of Fudge to make a preference in favor of the bank as against other creditors, but he was acting under the belief that he would pull through after a bad year; and the bank, even if he had any intention to prefer it to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, was not a party to such intention, and did not co-operate in any such idea.

"The court finds from the testimony that there is now due on the mortgage debt stated in the first cause of action the sum of $12,359.11, together with the further sum of $515, found to be a reasonable fee for plaintiff's attorney in the first cause of action, making a total due on the said mortgage of $12,874.11.

"The court finds from the testimony that there is now due on the mortgage debt stated in the second cause of action the sum of $14,006.23, being principal and interest, together with the further sum of $556.15, found to be a reasonable fee for plaintiff's attorney in the second cause of action, making a total due on the said mortgage debt of $14,562.38.

"The attorney's fee is fixed at 5 per cent. of the principal of each mortgage debt, which is supported by the evidence, and which is considered entirely reasonable in view of the fierce contest that has been waged herein throughout."

Then follows the judgment of the court as to the manner in which the decree should be enforced.

Jones & Jones, of Lancaster, for appellants.

W. P. Robinson, of Lancaster, and Dunlap & Dunlap, of Rock Hill, for respondents.

GARY, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). Two of the appellants' exceptions assign error on the part of his honor, the circuit judge as follows:

"In sustaining the mortgage as a duly recorded instrument, when the undisputed evidence is that W. H. Millen, the witness who made the affidavit for probate was then a stockholder, director, and cashier of the plaintiff bank, and directly represented the bank in procuring and accepting the mortgage, and that W. P. Robinson, the other witness who took and certified said affidavit as notary public, was then stockholder, director, and attorney of the bank, and actively represented the plaintiff in the transaction, each of them and the plaintiff knowing the relation of interest of both to the plaintiff, but without disclosing the same upon the record.

"In sustaining the mortgage to the plaintiff bank as a legally executed instrument, the undisputed evidence being that the subscribing witnesses were disqualified by interest to be witnesses thereto, both being stockholders and directors of the bank, one of them being cashier and vice president of the bank, and the other secretary of the board of directors and attorney for the bank, and both directly representing the bank, in procuring and accepting the mortgage."

[1] Section 1352 of the Code of Laws (Civ. Code) provides:

"Before any deed or other instrument in writing can be recorded in this state, the execution thereof shall be first proved by the affidavit of a subscribing witness to said instrument, taken before some officer within this state competent to administer an oath; * * * the proof in every case to be recorded with the instrument."

The latest decisions of the court upon the construction of that section were in the cases of Dillon v. Oliver, 106 S. C. 410, 91 S. E. 304, and Arthur v. Hollowell, 98 S. E. 202.

The fact, however, that the debts, upon which the appellants recovered their judgments were contracted prior to the execution of the plaintiff's mortgage shows that the question presented by the first exception is not properly before the court for consideration; it being purely academic.

[2, 3] We proceed to determine the other exceptions:

Section 3453 of the Code of Laws (Civ. Code) is as follows:

"The following form or purport of a release shall, to all intents and purposes, be valid and effectual to carry from one person to another or others the fee simple of any land or real estate, if the same be executed in the presence of and be subscribed by two or more credible witnesses. * * *"

Deeds and mortgages are required to be executed with the same formalities. Harp-er v. Barsh, 10 Rich. Eq. 149.

"An act which requires that the signing by the grantor, shall be attested by witnesses, has been held to require witnesses competent to testify in an action at law, between the parties to the deed, involving the subject matter of the conveyance." (Italics added.) 9 Enc. of Law, 148.

Section 437 of the Code of Civil Procedure is as follows:

"No person offered as a witness shall be excluded by reason of his interest in the event of the action."

And section 438, contains this provision:

"A party to an action or special proceeding in any and all courts, and before any and all officers and persons acting judicially, may be examined as a witness on his own behalf, or in behalf of any other party, conditionally, on commission, and upon the trial or hearing in the case, in the same manner and subject to the same rules of examination as any other witness. * * *"

There is a proviso, but there is no saving clause specially providing that the section should not in any manner affect the law, relating to the attestation of conveyances, or other instruments in writing, required by law to be attested, as in the statute that was under consideration, in the case of Winstead Bank v. Spencer, 26 Conn. 195, where it was held that such a saving clause prevented the application of the statute, which removed the disqualification of subscribing witnesses, arising from interest.

In 1866 (13 St. at Large, p. 377) and prior to the adoption of the Code, in 1872, a statute was enacted, entitled "An act to make parties, plaintiffs and defendants, in all cases, competent to give testimony in such cases, in like manner as other witnesses." There are three sections, but it is only necessary to quote the first, which is as follows:

"That on the trial of any issue joined or of any matter or question, or any inquiry arising, in any suit, action or proceeding in any court of justice in the state, or before any person having, by law or by consent of parties, authority to receive, hear and examine evidence, the parties thereto, and the persons in whose behalf any such action or other proceeding may be brought or defended, and any and all persons interested in the same, except as hereinafter excepted, shall be competent and compellable to give evidence, either viva voce or by deposition, according to the practice of the court, on behalf of either or any of the parties to the said action or other proceeding: Provided, that nothing herein shall be understood to prevent either party from introducing evidence to contradict or impeach the testimony of parties having interest, and made competent by this act to testify."

This act was construed in the case of Noseley v. Eakin, 15 Rich. 324, wherein the court used the following language:

"By the first section it is declared that 'on the trial of any issue joined, etc., the parties thereto, etc., and all persons interested in the same, except as hereinafter excepted, shall be competent and compellable to give evidence, etc., on behalf of either or any of the parties to the said action or other proceeding.' By the existing law, not only persons interested, but parties in the cause who might have no pecuniary interest, such as executors and administrators and others, were excluded from testifying. The manifest object of the act was to remove these causes of disqualification."

It is true that the act of 1866 has been superseded by the foregoing sections of the Code, but, as the said act and the sections of the Code were intended in the main to accomplish a similar result, a case in which the act of 1866 was construed throws light upon the question under consideration.

It is manifest that it was the intention of the act of 1866, as well as the said sections of the Code, to remove the disqualification of all witnesses, arising from interest, not only in actions but in any proceeding where they are called upon to testify as a witness, except in those cases where the sections of the Code otherwise provide, which do not include subscribing witnesses to a mortgage.

[4] Another reason why this exception cannot be sustained is that the mortgage, even without witnesses, would have been good between the parties; and the fact that the witnesses may be disqualified by interest would not have the effect of destroying its validity. A mortgage attested by witnesses, who are incompetent by reason of interest, stands upon the same footing as if it were without witnesses.

Blackstone in Book 2 of his Commentaries, tells us "that the last requisite to the validity of a deed is the attestation or execution of it, in the presence of witnesses; though this is necessary rather for preserving the evidence than as constituting the essence of the deed." In the case of Craig v. Pinson, Cheves, 272, the Court had under consideration the question whether a deed with one subscribing witness was valid to convey land. After quoting the foregoing language from Blackstone, the court said:

"From which it would seem that according to the laws of England, subscribing witnesses are not * * * necessary to the validity of a deed. An instrument of this kind has been held good, as an agreement in writing, to authorize * * * a specific performance."

It was also held in Harper v. Barsh, supra, that a mortgage with a single subscribing witness is void as a legal mortgage, but could be enforced in equity. The effect of the defective execution of a will is quite different from that of a mortgage. Section 3564 of the Code of Laws provides that wills shall be attested, in the presence of three or more credible witnesses, "or else they shall be utterly void and of none effect," while section 3453 provides that in order for a deed to be valid and effectual to carry the fee simple, it shall be executed in the presence of two or more credible witnesses. There are, however, no such words in section 3453 as "or else they shall be utterly void and of none effect." The mere disqualification of a witness does not render a mortgage void, but there must be a provision of law to that effect.

[5, 6] The next exceptions that will be considered are as follows:

"(1) In overruling appellants' demurrer to the first cause of action on the ground that the mortgage debt was not mature, at the commencement of the action.

"(2) In not sustaining the defense made in the answers of appellants, to the first cause of action, that the suit was prematurely brought."

The note contains the proviso:

"That failure to meet the interest at the interest period above named, shall make the full amount of principal and interest become due, and payable forthwith, at the option of the mortgagee."

The mortgagor made default in the payment of interest, in January, 1917, and the plaintiff, as assignee, had the right to exercise the option. Welborn v. Cobb, 92 S. C. 384, 75 S. E. 691.

It was not necessary to give other notice than the commencement of the action, that the plaintiff elected to exercise the option, or to demand payment of the principal and interest. Sizer v. Dopson, 89 S. C. 535, 72 S. E. 464; Nixon v. Wright, 104 S. C. 376, 89 S. E. 320.

The mortgagor, R. H. Fudge, testified:

"I agree for the Farmers' Bank & Trust Company, to take up that note in October, 1917. This foreclosure is entirely agreeable to me."

The appellants' attorneys have failed to satisfy this court that either Sep Massey or the plaintiff, his assignee, waived the right to insist upon the option.

[7] The next question is presented by the following exception:

"In adjudging that there was due on the mortgage debt, in the first cause of action, $12,359.11 as principal and interest, up to the date of decree, whereas, if maturity had been accelerated amount then due would not exceed $12,251.82."

The exercise of the option had the effect of accelerating the maturity of the note, and both principal and interest immediately became payable. The aggregate of principal and interest then due became an interest-bearing fund. The exercise of the option had the effect of substituting one contract for another, and the words "with interest from date at the rate of eight per cent. per annum" do not form a part of the substituted contract, which does not specify the rate of interest. Therefore the aggregate of principal and interest bore interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the time the option was exercised, to wit, the commencement of the action, until the recovery of the judgment. Langston v. Railroad, 2 S. C. 248; Briggs v. Winsmith, 10 S. C. 133, 30 Am. Rep. 46; Sharpe v. Lee, 14 S. C. 371; Mobley v. Davega, 16 S. C. 73, 42 Am. Rep. 632; Mauer v. Wilson, 16 S. C. 469.

His honor, the circuit judge, erred, therefore, in allowing interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum.

As to the remaining questions, this court is satisfied with the conclusions of his honor the circuit judge, for the reasons assigned by him.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be modified in the particular hereinbefore mentioned, and that in all other respects it be affirmed.

HYDRICK, WATTS, FRASER, and GAGE, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 587)

BAILEY et al. v. STATE. (No. 10789.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Dec. 12, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)DENIAL OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The evidence in this case authorized the conviction of the defendants. The charge of the court, when considered in its entirety, fully and fairly submitted the issues and contentions of the defendants. For no reason assigned was it error to overrule the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Miller County;
W. C. Worrill, Judge.

J. S. Bailey and others were convicted of an offense, their motion for a new trial was overruled, and they bring error. Affirmed.

P. D. Rich, of Colquitt, for plaintiffs in error.

B. T. Castellow, Sol. Gen., of Cuthbert, and R. R. Arnold, of Atlanta, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(149 Ga. 435)

CRAWFORD v. STATE. (No. 1512.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1919.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. HOMICIDE — 309(5) — EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO REQUIRE CHARGE ON VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

Under the evidence submitted by the state, the homicide which formed the basis of the charge against the accused was unprovoked murder. Under the evidence of other witnesses to the killing, who were introduced by the defendants, the killing was justifiable homicide. There was no evidence which would have authorized the court to charge upon the subject of voluntary manslaughter.

2. HOMICIDE — 13, 286(2) — CHARGE ON "MALICE."

There was no error in charging the jury as follows: "Malice, as referred to in the law, gentlemen, does not necessarily mean that there shall be entertained by the slayer any hatred, or ill will, or ill feeling, or anything of that character, towards the person killed. It means in law the intention on the part of the slayer to take human life under such circumstances that the law will neither justify nor in any degree excuse or mitigate that intention, if the killing should take place as intended. A man may kill another against whom he entertained no ill will whatever; he may be a stranger to him, and yet be guilty of murder. No particular length of time is required for malice to be generated in the mind of the slayer; it may be formed in a moment, and instantly a mortal blow may be given or a fatal shot fired; yet if malice is in the mind of the slayer at the time of the doing of the act or killing, and moves him to do it, it is sufficient to constitute the homicide murder." The exception to this charge upon the ground that it is not a correct statement of the law, that it was misleading and confusing, is without merit.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Malice.]

3. SELF-DEFENSE—CHARGE.

Section 73 of the Penal Code of 1910 reads as follows: "If a person kill another in his defense, it must appear that the danger was so urgent and pressing at the time of the killing, that, in order to save his own life, the killing of the other was absolutely necessary; and it must appear, also, that the person killed was the assailant, or that the slayer had really and in good faith endeavored to decline any further struggle before the mortal blow was given." The failure of the court to charge this section of the Code could not possibly have been harmful to the defendant.

4. CRIMINAL LAW — 1178—GROUNDS OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL, NOT BRIEFED, ABANDONED.

Grounds of the motion for a new trial, which are not referred to in the brief of counsel for the plaintiff in error, are considered as abandoned.

Error from Superior Court, Webster County;
Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Sam Crawford was convicted of homicide, with recommendation, his motion for a new trial was overruled, and he brings error. Affirmed.

G. Y. Harrell, of Lumpkin, and R. R. Jones, of Dawson, for plaintiff in error.

Jule Felton, Sol. Gen., of Montezuma, Clifford Walker, Atty. Gen., and M. C. Bennet, of Atlanta, for the State.

BECK, P. J. Sam Crawford was indicted for the offense of murder, and upon the trial of the case the jury returned a verdict of guilty, with a recommendation. The defendant made a motion for a new trial, which, after a hearing, the court overruled, and the defendant excepted.

[1] 1. In one ground of the motion the movant contends that he is entitled to a new trial because the court failed to give, as a part of his instructions to the jury, a charge upon the subject of voluntary manslaughter; movant insisting that the evidence demanded a charge upon this grade of homicide. There was no error in refusing to charge the law of voluntary manslaughter in this case. The killing with which the defendant was charged was either justifiable homicide or it was murder. There is no middle ground. Witnesses for the state testified to a state of facts which showed an unprovoked shooting of the decedent, unattended by any mitigating circumstances whatever. One eyewitness, John Williams, testified:

"I saw the shooting, and know that it happened in Webster county on the date I have named. John Bryant [the decedent] didn't do nothing to Sam Crawford to make him shoot him. He told him it was his damn car and our damn money [other evidence showing that there were negotiations for a ride with the accused in his automobile], and then Sam pulled out his pistol from his right-hand hip pocket. It was a shiny pistol. He pulled it partly out first at the railroad crossing, and at the time of the killing he pulled it slam out. Myself, Will Burt, John Bryant, and John Dice were together. * * * Sam says, 'It will cost you a dime.' He says, 'I got money to burn.' That time his other brother come up in a car, and Sam says he was going to carry us boys to Kimbrough and was going to charge us a dime apiece."

There was further altercation between the parties. They separated immediately after this, and there was no shooting at that time. In a short time the decedent and the accused met. At this point the witness continues:

"John Bryant [the decedent] says, 'You boy in the middle with the cap on; ain't you the one we tried to go to Kimbrough with?' He says, 'I feel mistreated about the way you treated me; you pulled your pistol out on me. I didn't mean no harm when I told you it was your damn car and our damn money, and I don't like it a damn bit;' and that time Sam [the accused] shot him—made two shots, and he hit him once. At that time John Bryant had nothing in his hand; that is, when he got shot. Sam shot twice, but hit John Bryant one time. There was no other pistol shot. After Sam Crawford shot John Bryant, John runs his hand in his pocket and got his pistol, pulled it out, and dropped it on the ground. He felt himself hurt, and was about to fall down there. He never got his pistol up; he got it out of his pocket and dropped it on the ground, and Sam Crawford picked it up. * * * Sam Crawford shot him. John Bryant did not go for his pistol before he was shot. * * * I suppose John and Sam were about five feet apart. When Sam got his pistol out to shoot, he shot right then; shot right then, rapidly together, and one of the bullets hit John Bryant."

Other testimony to the same effect was given by eyewitnesses. Clearly in all this testimony there appears no other crime than that of unprovoked murder, and the doctrine of voluntary manslaughter could not be invoked as applicable to the circumstances here portrayed.

Several eyewitnesses were sworn in behalf of the defendant. One of them was Clifford Moreland. On direct examination he testified as follows:

"I remember the time that John Bryant got killed over here at the church. I was with that boy that killed him, Sam Crawford. We was on our way coming back from the spring. Roy Lee Moreland was with us; just us three. When we three come up from the spring, we met John Bryant and John Williams coming from the spring. This John Williams asked Sam wasn't he the one driving the car, and Sam told him, 'Yes,' and asked him, 'Why?' and, when Sam told him that, asked him, 'Wasn't you the one that cussed me?' When asked, 'Sam, did you cuss me?' Sam says, 'No; I ain't the one.' That time this fellow walking on the right-hand side of the road pulled his pistol out and shot, and Sam jumped behind me and pulled out his pistol and shot. John Bryant pulled out his pistol and shot first. There was no cussing, but that John [Tick] Bryant said, 'What did he want to cuss him out about his car?' He did not cuss any right then; that's all he said. Then he stepped out of the road and shot at him, but didn't hit him. It was not long after that when — shot twice after he shot. It was right afterwards."

On cross-examination the same witness testified:

"When he backed and stopped, he was about as far from Sam as from you to the jury. When he backed off that way, he asked Sam Crawford wasn't he one that cussed him out; and Sam told him, 'No, sir,' says, 'I ain't cussed you.' That time John Bryant pulled out his pistol and pointed it at him right straight, Sam kinder behind me, and he missed him. He shot at him on the other side. * * * When Sam Crawford shot John Bryant, he dropped the pistol and grabbed his hand this way. Sam Crawford never shot at John Bryant until John Bryant shot at him. Sam jumped behind me when John shot; I don't know how long before; I reckon I would have time to count ten. Now, after John had shot, and I had time to count ten about, Sam shot twice, very rapidly."

Three other eyewitnesses were introduced by the defendant. Their testimony is substantially the same as that which we have quoted above. All of this evidence clearly shows a case in which the accused was justifiably firing upon the decedent in defense of his own life. Summed up in a few words, it is that the decedent, without justification or provocation, drew his pistol and began firing at the defendant, and the defendant then drew his pistol and returned the fire. It requires no argument to demonstrate that the shooting under such circumstances would be justifiable.

These two theories of the state and of the defendant were properly submitted to the jury under the instructions of the court, and there was no place for a charge on the subject of voluntary manslaughter.

[2-4] 2-4. The rulings made in headnotes 2, 3, and 4 require no elaboration.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 475)

ARNAU v. FIRST NAT. BANK OF DUBLIN. (No. 1358.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1919.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)*APPEAL AND ERROR  $\S$ 1005(2)—OVERRULING MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL BASED ON GENERAL GROUNDS PROPER.

The evidence authorized the verdict. The judgment overruling the motion for a new trial, based on the general grounds only, will not be reversed.

Error from Superior Court, Laurens County; J. L. Kent, Judge.

Action between A. R. Arnau and the First National Bank of Dublin. Judgment for the latter, motion for new trial denied, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

M. H. Blackshear, of Dublin, for plaintiff in error.

Larsen & Crockett, of Dublin, for defendant in error.

GILBERT, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 474)

RUIS v. LOTHDRIDGE et al. (No. 1305.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. VENUE  $\S$ 5(4)—IN SUIT AGAINST TWO DEFENDANTS SEEKING RELIEF AGAINST ONE IMPROPERLY BROUGHT IN COUNTY OF OTHER'S RESIDENCE.

Where an equitable petition was brought against the sheriff of Bacon county, and against Mrs. Agnes J. Lothridge, of Stephens county, in the superior court of Bacon county, praying for cancellation of certain judgments and fi. fas. described in the petition, and for cancellation of a certain sheriff's deed therein described, and for injunction to restrain the sheriff from dispossessing the plaintiff from certain lands described in the petition, under the sheriff's deed made to Mrs. Lothridge, no substantial relief was prayed against the sheriff, and as equity cases shall be tried in the county where the defendant resides against whom substantial relief is prayed, the petition was properly dismissed on demurrer. Civ. Code 1910,  $\S$  6540; Coker v. Montgomery, 110 Ga. 20, 35 S. E. 273.

2. PLEADING  $\S$ 205(2)—GENERAL DEMURRER RAISING QUESTION OF JURISDICTION NEED NOT ALLEGE SPECIALLY WANT OF JURISDICTION.

The above facts all appearing upon the face of the petition, the question raised by the general demurrer was jurisdictional, and it was not necessary for the demurrer to specially set forth that the court was without jurisdiction to entertain the case. See, in this connection,

Civ. Code 1910,  $\S$  5665; Curtis v. College Park Lumber Co., 145 Ga. 601, 89 S. E. 680(4).

3. PROPER TERM OF COURT.

As the above ruling is controlling on the question of jurisdiction, it is unnecessary to decide whether the suit was brought to a proper term of the court.

Error from Superior Court, Bacon County; J. I. Summerall, Judge.

Suit by M. E. Ruis against A. J. Lothridge, and the Sheriff of Bacon County. Demurrer to petition sustained, and petition dismissed, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

W. W. Bennett, of Baxley, for plaintiff in error.

J. B. Moore, of Baxley, and Fermor Barrett, of Toccoa, for defendants in error.

HILL, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 475)

JENKINS et al. v. GEORGIA INV. CO. et al. (No. 1368.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. TRUSTS  $\S$ 72, 124—BENEFICIARIES IN RESULTING TRUST AS TENANTS IN COMMON.

Where A. and B. jointly buy land, each paying one-half of the purchase money, and the title is taken in the name of a third party or parties, a trust in favor of A. and B. will be implied; and where B. subsequently goes into possession of the land to the exclusion of A., a court of equity will decree A. to be a tenant in common with B. to the extent of a one-half undivided interest. Civ. Code 1910,  $\S$  3739; Bispham's Eq. (9th Ed.)  $\S\S$  80, 83, and notes; Perry on Trusts (6th Ed.)  $\S\S$  138, 139, and notes; Wilder v. Wilder, 138 Ga. 573, 75 S. E. 654; Pound v. Smith, 146 Ga. 431, 91 S. E. 405.

2. TRUSTS  $\S$ 17, 18(6)—NECESSITY OF WRITING TO CREATE "EXPRESS TRUST."

Under our statute an express trust must be created or declared in writing. Therefore where two persons agree that they will jointly purchase a tract of land for the purpose of making thereon certain improvements, and that the same are to be used for stipulated purposes, and for temporary purposes the legal title to the land is, by consent and acquiescence, made directly to designated persons as trustees for the joint purchasers, such agreement constitutes an express trust, and must be declared in writing.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Express Trust.]

3. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS ¶7—EXPRESS TRUST NOT ENGRAFTED ON DEED BY PAROL TO THIRD PARTY.

The facts set forth in the next preceding headnote will not authorize a reformation of the deed conveying the land to third parties, because an express trust cannot be engrafted on a deed by parol. Civil Code 1910, § 3733; Wilder v. Wilder, supra; De Loach v. Jefferson, 142 Ga. 436, 83 S. E. 122. Besides, it does not appear from the allegations of the petition that the deed in question did not express the intention of the parties, nor is it alleged that anything was omitted therefrom by fraud, accident, or mistake.

4. ADVERSE POSSESSION ¶60(3, 4)—WHERE RIGHTS OF BENEFICIARY NOT DISPUTED LAPSE OF TIME IMMATERIAL.

As long as a person who is in possession of the property of another, using the same for the owner's benefit, recognizes the latter's ownership, no lapse of time will bar the owner from asserting his title against the person in possession. Before any lapse of time will be a bar to the owner it must appear that the person in possession has given notice, or there must be circumstances shown which would be equivalent to notice to the owner that the person in possession claims adversely to him. In such a case the statute will begin to run from the date of such notice. Until the owner has such notice he has the right to treat the possession of the other person as his own. Civ. Code 1910, § 3782; Teasley v. Bradley, 110 Ga. 497, 501, 35 S. E. 782, 78 Am. St. Rep. 113. The same principles apply to the objection that the claim is a stale demand. Stanley v. Reeves, 149 Ga. 151, 99 S. E. 376.

(a) The defendant in the present case is alleged to be the grantee of the persons receiving legal title to the land under the implied trust, but it is also alleged that the defendant was the equitable owner of a one-half undivided interest with the plaintiff, and that the defendant took the title and went into possession of the whole of the land with notice of the plaintiff's equity, and had recognized plaintiff's interest until June 5, 1918, when the defendant for the first time denied the plaintiff's rights and gave notice of its intention to claim the entire interest in land.

5. TRUSTS ¶371(1)—ESTABLISHMENT—PETITION TO ESTABLISH IMPLIED TRUST SUFFICIENT.

Applying the principles announced in the foregoing notes, the court erred in sustaining the demurrers and dismissing the petition as a whole. In so far as the petition sought a decree establishing an implied trust entitling plaintiff to a one-half undivided interest in the land, it set out a cause of action, and was not subject to the general demurrer.

Error from Superior Court, Laurens County; J. L. Kent, Judge.

Suit by J. J. Jenkins, master, etc., and others against the Georgia Investment Company and others. From a judgment sustaining demurrers and dismissing the petition, plaintiffs bring error. Reversed.

The petition relates the following case: On November 14, 1901, the prospective corporation to be known as Georgia Investment Company was in process of formation and organization. Daniel Cummings was a prospective stockholder and officer of this proposed corporation and interested in its organization. D. W. Williams was then a member of Land Mark Lodge No. 64 A. F. & A. M., on behalf of which the petition is brought. On the date mentioned Williams, acting for the lodge, and Cummings, acting for the proposed corporation, agreed that they would jointly purchase a certain tract of land in the city of Dublin, described in the petition, upon which it was proposed there should be erected a two-story brick building, the first story of which was to be used by the proposed corporation and the second story to be used by the plaintiff for lodge purposes. It is alleged "that for temporary purposes the legal title to said lot of land was, by the consent and acquiescence of petitioners, made directly unto the said Daniel Cummings and D. W. Williams, as trustees for your petitioners and the said defendant corporation then in process of formation." It was understood that upon procurement of charter by the proposed corporation Cummings and Williams would convey to it, as trustee for itself and the lodge, title to the land; that the proposed corporation would, within a reasonable time, construct the first story of the building; that the lodge would then construct the second story of the building, and when this had been done the proposed corporation would execute to the lodge good and sufficient legal title. Pursuant to this agreement the lodge furnished one-half of the purchase price of the land; the title was taken in the name of Cummings and Williams, who on August 23, 1904, conveyed the land by deed to Georgia Investment Company for a recited consideration of $400; but no money was paid by the corporation for the conveyance, and it was executed in accordance with the agreement between Cummings and Williams, already stated. Since the making of said conveyance the lodge has, through committees appointed for that purpose, on divers occasions and at least annually, urged the Georgia Investment Company to proceed with the construction of the first story of the building on said lot in accordance with the agreement. The company has rendered first one and then another excuse, usually that it "was not quite ready from a financial standpoint to carry out the object of the original undertaking." On March 6, 1918, the lodge in writing proposed to the company that the latter should carry out the original agreement by erecting the first story of the building, or that it make to the lodge a conveyance of the interest of the company in the land upon the basis of $60 per front foot, the then value of the land, or that the lodge would convey to the company its own interest upon the same basis. On June 5, 1918, the company for the first time refused to carry out the agreement above stated, and acquainted the lodge with its apparent design to appropriate and confiscate the property to its corporate uses. During all the years since the execution of the conveyance to Williams and Cummings and by them to the Georgia Investment Company the lodge has relied upon Cummings' honor to carry out the original agreement, and he has time and again agreed to do so, but the Georgia Investment Company through Cummings is now undertaking to abuse petitioner's confidence by claiming the absolute title to the property. Petitioner is the equitable owner of an undivided half interest in said property; the present condition of the legal title operates as a gross injustice to it, and gives to the defendant corporation an unconscientious advantage. Williams is dead, his estate has been fully administered, and the administrator discharged; but the petition joins as parties defendant all his heirs at law. Cummings is not made a party. The prayers are: (1) That a trust be implied in favor of the lodge, that it be decreed to be the beneficial owner of an undivided half interest in the land, and that the Georgia Investment Company is a trustee accordingly in its behalf; (2) that the deed from Williams and Cummings to Georgia Investment Company, exhibited with the petition, be so reformed as to embody the true and correct understanding between the parties; (3) that the plaintiff have judgment against the Georgia Investment Company to cover damages accruing from the breach of the contract; (4) for general relief; (5) for injunction to prevent the disposition or encumbering of the property; and (6) for process.

The Georgia Investment Company demurred generally upon the grounds: (a) No cause for relief of any kind is set forth by the petition. (b) From its allegations it appears that the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief sought. (c) The claim set up is barred, is a stale demand, and petitioner has been guilty of such delay and laches as will prevent a recovery. (d) It appears that Williams, who committed fraud against petitioner, is dead, his estate has been administered, the administrator discharged, and during all these years petitioner has shown no vigilance nor taken any steps which would justify a court of equity or law in interfering. The court dismissed the petition, and the plaintiffs excepted.

R. Earl Camp, of Dublin, for plaintiffs in error.

R. D. Flynt, of Dublin, for defendants in error.

GILBERT, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(149 Ga. 480)

HUMPHRIES v. STATE. (No. 1435.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

BURGLARY  $\S$  41(4)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE TO SHOW BREAKING AND ENTERING.

Under the facts stated in the question propounded by the Court of Appeals, the jury were authorized to find that there had been a breaking and entering of the house in question.

Certified Questions from Court of Appeals.

Will Humphries, alias E. K. Davis, was convicted of burglary, and he brings error, and the Court of Appeals certifies questions. Questions answered.

Conformed to in Court of Appeals, 100 S. E. 791.

Park & Stone, of Blakely, and Hubert F. Rawls, of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

John P. Ross, Sol. Gen., of Macon, for the State.

BECK, P. J. The Court of Appeals desire instruction from the Supreme Court upon the following questions, a determination of which is necessary for the decision of this case: The undisputed evidence shows, that Roscoe Carter, his wife and baby, and a man named Banks lived in the same house, and occupied the entire house; that on Thursday, September 5, 1918, Carter and Banks left the house about half past 5 in the morning, and went to their work about a mile away, and Carter's wife left about an hour later, with her baby, and went to the field to pick cotton, leaving no one in the house. There were three rooms and two front doors and a back door to the house, and after fastening all the windows and locking the back door and one of the front doors from the inside, she locked the other front door from the outside, and left them in that condition. The door which was locked from the outside had an ordinary lock, but the key had to be inserted bottom upwards. On her return about sundown, before her husband and Banks arrived, she found the house locked and closed, apparently just as she had left it. After unlocking and entering the house she noticed that the lid of a trunk was raised, and the tray of the trunk was on a bed, and several articles of her husband's wearing apparel were gone from the trunk. She looked in another room of the house, and discovered that two suits of clothes, three other pairs of pants, a suitcase, a black hat, and a shirt were gone. Some of these clothes belonged to Carter and some to Banks. She noticed a little mud on the porch at the front door, but could not see the prints of a shoe on the porch. Two days afterward some of the stolen articles were found and reclaimed in a pawnshop.

(1) Is the foregoing evidence sufficient to authorize a finding that there had been a breaking and entering of the house?

(2) Is the decision in Lester v. State, 106 Ga. 371, 32 S. E. 335, that the evidence there was not sufficient to show a breaking and entering, a correct ruling?

The evidence set forth in the question propounded by the Court of Appeals is sufficient to authorize a finding that there had been a breaking and entering of the house; and this is not in conflict with the decision in the case of Lester v. State, 106 Ga. 371, 32 S. E. 335, where it was held that the evidence was not sufficient to show a breaking and entering. An examination of the record in the case just referred to discloses that certain material facts do not appear in the official report of that case; but, when those facts are considered, the ruling made by the court was undoubtedly correct.

All the Justices concur.

(24 Ga. App. 267)

NORTON v. ANDERSON. (No. 10659.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1005(2)—REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL SUSTAINED.

The only question raised by the exceptions in this case is whether the evidence authorized the verdict. Upon a careful examination of the evidence, we cannot say that the verdict was without evidence to support it. The trial judge having approved the verdict, it was not error to overrule the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Cobb County;
N. A. Morris, Judge.

Action between O. G. Norton and J. D. Anderson. Judgment for the latter, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

H. B. Moss, of Marietta, for plaintiff in error.

C. M. Dobbs and Herbert Clay, both of Marietta, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 201)

HINES, Director General, v. JOLLY
(two cases).

SAME v. KELLEY (two cases).

(Nos. 10922-10925.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨776—MOTION TO TREAT BILL OF EXCEPTIONS AS EXCEPTIONS PENDENTE LITE DENIED.

In each of the above cases the plaintiff in error filed a petition in which he asked this court to grant him permission to withdraw his bill of exceptions and to direct that the official copy of the same of file in the clerk's office of the trial court be treated as exceptions pendente lite. In each case the bill of exceptions assigned as error the overruling of the defendant's motion to transfer the case to the federal court, and the reason assigned in the petition for the request made was that "through inadvertence" the plaintiff in error had failed within the proper time to have counsel for the defendant in error acknowledge service of the bill of exceptions, and that in the subsequent acknowledgment of service by such counsel the right to move for the dismissal of the bill of exceptions for lack of service within the proper time was specifically reserved. The petition to this court was dated October 1, 1919, and showed that the judgment of the lower court which was excepted to was rendered on September 8, 1919, and consequently that the 30 days in which the plaintiff in error had the right to apply for the writ of certiorari had not expired. Held, as the only reason given in the petition as to why the acknowledgment of service of the bill of exceptions was not secured from counsel for the defendant in error was "through inadvertence," the petition is denied. Counsel for the plaintiff in error by proper diligence could have perfected service of the bill of exceptions within the time required by law, and thereby have rendered their petition to this court unnecessary. See, in this connection, United Glass Co. v. McConnell, 110 Ga. 617, 36 S. E. 58; Ross v. Mercer, 115 Ga. 353, 355, 41 S. E. 594; Harvey v. Bowles, 112 Ga. 421, 37 S. E. 364 (2); Berryman v. Haden, 112 Ga. 752, 38 S. E. 53(4); Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Burwell, 120 Ga. 540 (2), 542, 48 S. E. 145; Savannah Electric Co. v. Tuck, 132 Ga. 48 (2), 50, 63 S. E. 800.

In Harker v. State, 6 Ga. App. 774, 65 S. E. 963, cited by counsel for the plaintiff in error in support of their petition, no opinion was rendered, but the headnotes show that the bill of exceptions was certified, and service of the same acknowledged, on June 12th, but that the bill was not filed in the office of the clerk of the trial court until June 30th. This court dismissed the writ of error, but in the second headnote held as follows: "It appears, however, that the exceptions are to interlocutory matters, and that the bill of exceptions was certified and filed during the term. Upon the special facts shown, the court grants the application of the plaintiff in error for a direction that the official copy of the bill of exceptions, of file in the office of the trial court, shall operate as exceptions pendente lite." An examination of the original record in that case and the documents therein, of file in the office of the clerk of this court, shows that counsel for the plaintiff in error submitted to this court an affidavit, sworn to by him, in which he stated that the bill of exceptions "was actually filed with the clerk of the city court of Richmond county, Georgia, by Austin Branch, attorney for the plaintiff in error," but "that through some mistake or inadvertence, or by reason of the said bill of exceptions being mislaid or misplaced without any fault or neglect on the part of the plaintiff in error or his counsel, the said bill of exceptions was not marked filed until June 30th." (Italics ours.)

Error from Superior Court, De Kalb County; Charles W. Smith, Judge.

Separate actions by Clem Jolly by Mrs. Clem Jolly, by J. F. Kelley, and by Mrs. Sarah Kelley against W. D. Hines, Director, General. Defendant's motion in each case to transfer the case to the federal court overruled, and he brings error in each case, and in each files a petition for permission to withdraw his bill of exceptions and to have them treated as exceptions pendente lite. Petitions denied.

McDaniel & Black, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

Colquitt & Comyers, of Atlanta, for defendants in error.

BROYLES, P. J. Petitions denied.

BLOODWORTH and STEPHENS, JJ. CONCUR.

(24 Ga. App. 232)

SCOTT v. STATE MUT. LIFE INS. CO.
(No. 10464.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 9, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

ELECTRICITY — 19(2) — PETITION INSUFFICIENT TO SHOW RIGHT OF ACTION.

The plaintiff in this case first instituted suit against Rome Railway & Light Company for his alleged injuries. It was held in that case that the plaintiff was a trespasser coming in contact with a wire charged with electricity on private premises, not adjacent to any path in general use by the public. This court affirmed a judgment of nonsuit. See Scott v. Rome Railway & Light Co., 22 Ga. App. 474, 96 S. E. 569. The present suit is against the State Mutual Life Insurance Company, and recovery is sought upon the ground that the defendant owns the house which is supplied with electricity through the wires that injured the plaintiff. The petition alleges that the wires were strung along on poles by the defendant's predecessor in title, and that the defendant was at the time of the injury using the wires to convey electricity into the house. The petition alleges that the plaintiff was injured while walking along a pathway upon an adjacent woodland lot not owned by the defendant; that the plaintiff had been in the woods, picking blackberries, and was returning from the woods and was walking near the defendant's fence, which separated the defendant's property from the uninclosed woodland tract over which plaintiff was walking; that plaintiff was running along, and suddenly stumbled and fell, and, in falling, one of his hands came in contact with one of the electric wires, which had been allowed to sag to within two feet of the ground; that the insulation on it on a space of about six inches had been allowed to be rubbed off or had rotted off; that when he caught hold of it he was burned by the electricity passing through it; that the defendant knew, or in the exercise of ordinary care ought to have known, that said wire was so hanging and dangerous as alleged; that the electricity was being conveyed through the said wires by the Rome Railway & Light Company; and that the path over which he was traveling was used by the public. The court sustained a general demurrer to the petition. Held, inasmuch as the petition fails to show that the defendant held out an invitation to the plaintiff to use the path or the uninclosed woodland tract (which it did not own), or that the path was of such a character as to amount to an invitation or permission to use it as a passageway over the land, or to show that the injury resulted from the use of the path or passageway while the plaintiff was in the act of availing himself of this permission, it was not error to sustain the general demurrer. See Ethridge v. Central Railroad, 122 Ga. 855. In addition to what has already been said, the petition shows that the plaintiff entered on the premises over which the wires were strung and where he was injured, without any enticement, allurement, or inducement being held out to him by the defendant. The petition shows that the plaintiff was crossing over said tract of land for his own pleasure. See Jones v. Asa G. Candler, Inc., 22 Ga. App. 717, 97 S. E. 112. The present case is distinguishable from Mandeville Mills v. Dale, 2 Ga. App. 607, 58 S. E. 1060, Ashworth v. So. Ry. Co. et al., 116 Ga. 635, 43 S. E. 36, 59 L. R. A. 592, Southern Bell Tel. & Telegraph Co. v. Howell, 124 Ga. 1050, 53 S. E. 577, 4 Ann. Cas. 707, American Tel. & Telegraph Co. v. Murden, 141 Ga. 209, 80 S. E. 788, and Wallace v. Matthewson, 143 Ga. 236, 84 S. E. 450. From the facts pleaded in each of these cases it appears that the defendants therein were so placed as to owe a duty to the plaintiffs, the violation of which was the proximate cause of the injury sued for.

Error from City Court of Floyd County; W. J. Nunnally, Judge.

Action by J. W. Scott, by next friend, against the State Mutual Life Insurance Company. Demurrer to petition sustained, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Harris & Harris, of Rome, for plaintiff in error.

Maddox & Doyal, of Rome, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 224)

OVENS v. CLAXTON CARRIAGE & HARDWARE CO. et al. (No. 10375.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Oct. 9, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS  $\S$ 816(1)—PETITION FAILING TO SHOW DEFECT IN STREET PROXIMATE CAUSE.

The court did not err in sustaining the general demurrer of the city of Claxton and in dismissing the suit as to the city as an alleged joint tort-feasor; the petition not showing a defect in the condition of the streets to have been the proximate cause of the alleged injury.

2. NEW TRIAL  $\S$ 172—INSTRUCTIONS IN SECOND TRIAL.

Failure to charge the jury on the theory of accident was not error, in view of what is said in the note of the trial judge to the bill of exceptions, as follows: "In connection with the above certificate to the bill of exceptions, I desire to say that this is the second trial; that I granted a new trial on the first motion for new trial to a large extent upon the ground of the motion that the court erred in giving in charge the law of accident. That was made one of the particular grounds of the amended motion, and, on the idea that the question of accident was not involved in the case, I granted the first new trial, the plaintiff's attorney contending that there was no question of accident in the case. On the last trial counsel for the defendant argued to the jury the question of accident, without any objection on the part of counsel for the plaintiff, and counsel for the plaintiff having full opportunity to make his argument to the jury or to call the attention of the court to that feature of the case, but failed to do so, and on this second trial the court declined to make any charge on the question of accident because the court did not believe there was any evidence to authorize the question of accident, and did not think it was proper to consider the question at all. The court did not think it was proper to charge the theory of accident, even in the negative, when the court had already granted a new trial on the ground that accident was not involved."

3. CHARGE—EVIDENCE.

The charge of the court submitted to the jury fairly and fully the contentions of the parties, and, when read in its entirety, is not subject to the criticisms urged in the motion for a new trial. The evidence authorized the verdict, which has the approval of the trial judge, and for no reason assigned did the court err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Evans County; W. W. Sheppard, Judge.

Action by Fannie Owens against the Claxton Carriage & Hardware Company and the city of Claxton. General demurrer of defendant city of Claxton sustained, and suit against it dismissed. Judgment against plaintiff, her motion for a new trial denied, and she brings error. Affirmed.

W. B. Stubbs and G. N. Alford, both of Savannah, for plaintiff in error.

Oliver & Oliver, of Savannah, for defendants in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 226)

KNOWLES v. WESTERN & A. R. CO. et al. WESTERN & A. R. CO. v. KNOWLES.

(Nos. 10394, 10395.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Oct. 9, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT  $\S$ 233(2)—EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO SHOW NEGLIGENCE OF DEFENDANT RAILROAD.

In this case an interstate carrier was sued for personal injuries under the federal Employers' Liability Act (Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St.  $\S$  8657-8665]). The evidence discloses that on a rainy night the plaintiff was walking, with a lighted lantern, beside a railroad track, and fell into a ditch or underpass, with which he was familiar and was thus injured. The plaintiff testifies that he was engrossed with his duty and for the moment did not realize the danger or the proximity of the underpass. The rule announced in the case of King v. S. A. L. Ry., 1 Ga. App. 88, 58 S. E. 252, cannot be extended, so as to apply to this case. The evidence here does not show that any negligence of the defendant caused the injury, and, on the other hand, the evidence shows that the injury was the result of the plaintiff's own negligence and lack of ordinary care. See Civ. Code 1910,  $\S$  3130; Jacobs v. Southern Railway Co., 241 U. S. 220, 36 Sup. Ct. 588, 60 L. Ed. 970; Southern Ry. Co. v. Blackwell, 20 Ga. App. 630, 93 S. E. 321. It may be further stated that the evidence discloses that there was a safe way around the place where plaintiff was injured, and that this way was known to him.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT  $\S$ 258(2)—GENERAL DEMURRER TO PETITION SHOWING NO NEGLIGENCE SUSTAINED.

It was not error to sustain the general demurrer of the Seaboard Air Line Railway. The petition alleged no act of negligence which made that defendant a joint tort-feasor owing the plaintiff a duty.

3. NONSUIT.

It was not error for the court to grant a nonsuit.

Error from Superior Court, Bartow County; M. C. Tarver, Judge.

Action by C. F. Knowles against the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company, the Seaboard Air Line Railway, and others. General demurrer of defendant Seaboard Air Line Railway sustained, and a nonsuit granted, and plaintiff brings error, and defendant Western & Atlantic Railroad Company takes a cross-bill of exceptions. Affirmed on main bill of exceptions, and cross-bill dismissed.

Lawton Nalley, of Atlanta, and A. W. Fite, of Cartersville, for plaintiff in error.

Tye, Peeples & Tye, of Atlanta, and Neel, Finley & Neel, of Cartersville, for defendants in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment on main bill of exceptions affirmed; cross-bill dismissed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 278)

MILLER v. SWILLEY. (No. 10685.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE $\S$ 86(10)—SUFFICIENCY OF LEVY OF ATTACHMENT.

A levy of an attachment upon realty, which recited: "By virtue of the within attachment issued from the justice's court of the 753d district, G. M., I have this day levied upon the following property, 250 acres of land, being lot No. 47 in the 19th district of said state and county, as the property of the defendant," was sufficient as against the objection that it did not show in what manner the property was seized or levied upon. Hiles Carver Co. v. King, 109 Ga. 180, 34 S. E. 353.

2. EXECUTION $\S$ 168—ISSUE ON AFFIDAVIT OF ILLEGALITY.

In an illegality case, the only issue to be determined is that specifically raised by the affidavit of illegality. Miller v. Perkerson, 128 Ga. 465, 57 S. E. 787.

3. NOTICE OF LEVY OF ATTACHMENT TO NON-RESIDENT DEFENDANT—EVIDENCE.

Upon the question of notice of the levy of the attachment the evidence authorized the jury to find that the nonresident defendant had notice.

4. ATTACHMENT $\S$ 113—SUFFICIENCY OF AFFIDAVIT AS TO NON-RESIDENT DEFENDANT.

An affidavit to obtain an attachment against a nonresident is sufficient, when the affidavit shows that the defendant is a nonresident of Georgia.

5. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

For no reason assigned did the court err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from City Court of Cairo; L. W. Rigsby, Judge.

Attachment proceeding between D. W. Miller and J. E. Swilley, with affidavit of illegality. Judgment for the latter, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

R. R. Terrell, of Whigham, for plaintiff in error.

S. P. Cain of Cairo, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 239)

PATTERSON v. STATE. (No. 10560.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 9, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS $\S$ 134—EVIDENCE SUSTAINING CONVICTION FOR UNLAWFUL MANUFACTURE.

A substance made of corn meal and molasses, designed for the purpose of, and to be used for, distilling whisky, and commonly called "still beer," or simply "beer," which is alcoholic, and will produce intoxication if drunk to excess, and which is in such a physical state that it can be and actually is drunk as a beverage (and where similar substances have been drunk), is a "beverage" in the sense in which the latter term is used in the act approved March 28, 1917, making it an offense against the criminal laws of this state for any person to "distill, manufacture or make any alcoholic spirituous, vinous, malted or mixed liquors or beverages, any part of which is alcoholic." Pamph. Acts (Ex. Sess.) 1917, p. 18, § 23. Evidence, therefore, that the defendant made a substance or liquid as above described (though not an ordinary "beverage") is sufficient to authorize his conviction of the offense of making alcoholic liquors in violation of that act, under an indictment generally charging a violation of all the offenses prohibited by the act.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Beverage.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 778(11)—EVIDENCE AUTHORIZING CHARGE ON FLIGHT.

Evidence that the defendant had escaped from jail, where he had been confined awaiting trial on the charge for which he was being tried, is sufficient to authorize the judge to charge the jury the rule of law governing the weight to be given evidence of flight on the part of the defendant as tending to establish his guilt.

3. CHARGE OF COURT—EXPRESSION OR INTIMATION OF OPINION.

The charge of the court is not subject to the objection that it contained any expression or intimation of opinion as to what had been proved, or that it did not fairly submit to the jury the contentions of the defendant.

4. CHARGE ON REASONABLE DOUBT.

The court fully and properly instructed the jury upon the subject of reasonable doubt, and the instruction thereon set out in the motion for a new trial was not error for the reason assigned.

5. CRIMINAL LAW §1178—GROUNDS OF MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL, NOT BEING ARGUED, ABANDONED.

The grounds of the motion for a new trial, not argued in the brief of counsel for the plaintiff in error, are treated as abandoned.

6. CHARGE OF COURT.

None of the excerpts from the charge of the court complained of require a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Gwinnett County; Andrew J. Cobb, Judge.

Pat Patterson was convicted of making alcoholic liquors in violation of law, his motion for a new trial was denied, and he brings error. Affirmed.

M. D. Irwin, of Lawrenceville, and T. J. Shackelford, of Athens, for plaintiff in error. W. O. Dean, Sol. Gen., of Monroe, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 244)

VOGT v. BRIDGES. (No. 10629.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Oct. 9, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MOTION TO DISMISS BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

There is no merit in the motion to dismiss the bill of exceptions, and accordingly it is denied.

2. OVERRULING OF CERTIORARI.

Under the facts of the case, the judge of the superior court did not err in overruling the certiorari.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; Geo. L. Bell, Judge.

Action between W. J. E. Vogt and J. E. Bridges. Judgment for the latter, certiorari overruled, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

Chambers & Dickey, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

Lawton Nalley, of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 228)

COX v. CHARLES CONE REALTY CO. (No. 10439.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Oct. 9, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

JUDGMENT OF SUPERIOR COURT ON CERTIORARI.

The judge of the superior court did not err in this case in rendering the following judgment: "It is considered, ordered and adjudged that the within certiorari be and the same is hereby overruled, and the judgment allowed to proceed in favor of Chas. Cone Realty Co. v. W. S. Cox, for the principal sum of $190, interest and costs."

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; W. D. Ellis, Judge.

Action between W. S. Cox and the Charles Cone Realty Company. From a judgment of the superior court, overruling the certiorari, etc., the former brings error. Affirmed.

Anton L. Etheridge and F. A. Hooper & Son, all of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

R. H. Jones, Jr., of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 231)

WHATLEY et al. v. RILEY, Ordinary, for Use, etc. (No. 10454.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Oct. 9, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

APPEAL AND ERROR §1005(2) — APPROVED VERDICT SUSTAINED BY EVIDENCE CONCLUSIVE.

The only question raised by the exceptions in this case is whether the evidence authorizes the verdict. A careful examination of the evidence convinces us that there is some evidence upon which the verdict may be sustained. The trial judge having approved the verdict, this court cannot interfere.

Error from Superior Court, Taylor County; J. L. Rent, Judge.

Action by A. H. Riley, ordinary, for use, etc., against J. H. Whatley and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Homer Beeland, of Reynolds, and C. W. Foy, of Butler, for plaintiff in error.

Gilbert C. Robinson, of Montezuma, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 240)

BENTON TRADING CO. v. BAILEY.
(No. 10594.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 9, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF §32—AGREEMENT FOR SUBSTITUTION OF THIRD PARTY FOR ORIGINAL DEBTOR.

Benton Trading Company brought suit against Bailey, alleging that it owned an execution against Spooner. Bailey notified it and its attorney that he had purchased practically all the real estate and personal property of Spooner, and that under the terms of the purchase he was to assume certain liens on the property and pay to Spooner the remainder of the purchase price; that he did not wish the plaintiff to levy the execution on Spooner's property; that if they would wait for awhile he would pay the fi. fa. in full; that subsequently he did pay $400 on the execution, and that, relying on Bailey's promise to pay the execution, the plaintiff did not levy the fi. fa., and Spooner thereafter became insolvent; and by reason thereof the plaintiff was damaged in an amount equal to the balance due on the execution. The defendant demurred, upon the grounds: That the petition set forth no cause of action; that the promise to pay was not in writing; that the petition failed to show that the plaintiff was prevented from levying the fi. fa.; and that there was no agreement between the three persons and concurred in by them whereby Spooner was released and Bailey accepted as the debtor. Held, it was not error for the court to sustain the demurrer and dismiss the suit. In every such case, in order to take the transaction out of the operation of the statute of frauds, it must appear that the person substituted for the debtor was, by agreement between the creditor, the debtor, and himself, substituted for the original debtor, and the latter released from the obligation. See Palmetto Mfg. Co. v. Par- ker & Anderson, 123 Ga. 798, 51 S. E. 714; Fields v. Bullington, 20 Ga. App. 102, 92 S. E. 653.

Error from Superior Court, Miller County; W. C. Worrill, Judge.

Suit by the Benton Trading Company against J. W. Bailey. Demurrer to petition sustained, and suit dismissed, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

M. E. O'Neal, of Bainbridge, and N. L. Stapleton, of Colquitt, for plaintiff in error.

W. I. Geer, of Colquitt, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 242)

TOWNS v. WELLS. (No. 10619.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 9, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DEMURRER TO PETITION.

The petition as amended set forth a cause of action, and the demurrer thereto was properly overruled.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR §1005(2)—DENIAL OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL ON GENERAL GROUNDS
AFFIRMED.

The motion for a new trial contains the general grounds only, there is evidence to support the verdict, which has the approval of the trial judge, and a new trial was properly refused.

Error from City Court of Floyd County; W. J. Nunnally, Judge.

Action between Lee Towns and Dollie Wells. Judgment for the latter, motion for a new trial denied, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

Harris & Harris, of Rome, for plaintiff in error.

W. B. Mebane, of Rome, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

§—For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

(24 Ga. App. 237)

COX v. HARRISON. (No. 10532.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 9, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)DISMISSAL OF PETITION ON GENERAL DEMUR-RER.

The judge who tried this case did not err in disallowing the proffered amendment to the petition, and in sustaining the general demurrer and dismissing the petition.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; Geo. L. Bell, Judge.

Action by Cleveland Cox against F. E. Harrison. General demurrer to petition sustained, and petition dismissed, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

S. C. Crane, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

B. H. Hill, of West Point, and H. A. Allen, of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 222)

TURNER et al. v. TORPHY. (No. 10362.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 9, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)CERTIORARI  $\Leftrightarrow$  29—GRANT AFTER NONSUIT AND REMAND FOR NEW TRIAL PROPER.

In the trial court, as shown by the answer to the writ of certiorari, the evidence of the plaintiff was sufficient to have carried her case to a jury; and it was error to award a nonsuit. It was not error for the judge of the superior court to sustain the certiorari and remand the case for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; W. D. Ellis, Judge.

Action by J. B. Torphy against J. T. Turner and others. Judgment of nonsuit, and from a judgment sustaining a certiorari and remanding the case for a new trial, defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Paul L. Lindsay, of Atlanta, for plaintiffs in error.

Guy Parker and Bryan & Middlebrooks, all of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 207)

HUTCHINS v. WATKINS et al. (No. 10313.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 9, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)APPEAL AND ERROR  $\Leftrightarrow$  1005(2)—DENIAL OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL ON GENERAL GROUNDS AFFIRMED.

The motion for new trial in this case contained the usual general grounds only, and, "there being evidence to sustain the verdict, this court cannot disturb the finding of the jury by overruling the refusal of the trial judge to grant a new trial upon the ground that the verdict was contrary to evidence or without evidence to support it. Davis v. Kirkland, 1 Ga. App. 5, 58 S. E. 209; Stricklin v. Crawley, 1 Ga. App. 130, 58 S. E. 215; Charles v. Brooker, 1 Ga. App. 219, 58 S. E. 218; Daughtry v. Savannah & Ry. Co., 1 Ga. App. 393, 58 S. E. 230; Edge v. Thomas, 9 Ga. App. 559, 71 S. E. 875." McCarty v. Keys, 19 Ga. App. 494, 91 S. E. 875 (1); Bradham v. State, 21 Ga. App. 510, 94 S. E. 618, and cases cited.

Error from Superior Court, Crisp County; E. F. Strozler, pro hac, Judge.

Action between P. S. L. Hutchins and D. L. Watkins and others. Judgment for the latter, motion for new trial denied, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

J. T. Hill, of Macon, for plaintiff in error.
Crum & Jones, of Cordele, for defendants in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 217)

BLOUNT v. LYNCH. (No. 10359.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 9, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER  $\Leftrightarrow$  349—DEMUR-RER TO RETURN IN ACTION FOR BREACH OF OPTION CONTRACT OVERRULED.

The court did not err in overruling the general demurrer to the plaintiff's petition.

*(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER  $\Leftrightarrow$  18(1)—INADE-QUACY OF CONSIDERATION NOT DEFEATING OPTION CONTRACT.

The mere inadequacy of the consideration named in an option contract for the sale of land will not of itself avoid the contract.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER  $\Leftrightarrow$  18(1)—EFFECT OF DEFAULT IN PAYMENT ON OPTION CON-TRACT.

That the considerations named in an option contract for the sale of land had not been paid would not necessarily defeat the contract or render it less enforceable.

4. CONTRACTS  $\Leftrightarrow$  279(1)—WAIVER OF TENDER OF MONEY OR PERFORMANCE.

Where a contract requires a tender of money or a performance of some obligation, the party bound may be relieved, and the tender and obligation held to have been waived, where the other party repudiates the contract by action or word, and takes a position which would render tender or performance useless or impossible.

5. TENDER  $\Leftrightarrow$  5—WAIVER BY OBSTRUCTION OR PREVENTION.

If the party to whom a tender is to be made obstructs or prevents a tender, the tender will be deemed to have been waived.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. D. Humphries, Judge.

Suit by John H. Lynch against M. A. Blount. Demurrer to petition overruled, and defendant excepts and brings error. Affirmed.

Daley, Chambers & Daley and Westmoreland, Anderson & Smith, all of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

Anderson, Rountree & Crenshaw, of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. John H. Lynch sued Mrs. Blount, alleging, in substance, that on July 19, 1917, the defendant executed an option to him as follows:

"That for and in consideration of the sum of one ($1.00) dollar in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, the said Mrs. Mary A. Blount has granted, bargained, sold, and conveyed, and by these presents does hereby grant, bargain, sell, and convey, to the said John H. Lynch, his heirs or assigns, an option for a period of thirty (30) days from the date hereof [July 19, 1917] to purchase on the terms specified hereinafter the following described property," describing certain land. "The terms upon which this option is given are as follows: (1) The payment by the said John H. Lynch, within thirty days from the date hereof, of the sum of seven hundred ($700.00) dollars in cash; (2) the assumption by the said John H. Lynch, or his assigns, of the loan now on said property, amounting to the sum of $6,750.00 with accrued interest, and balance of purchase price, to wit, $4,250.00, at the rate of $100.00 per month, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum; (3) the payment by the said Lynch of the amount of the unearned insurance premium now on said property; (4) the said Lynch to have the rents on the said property from the date when this option is exercised by him." Signed by the parties.

The petition alleges:

"That on or about the 10th day of August, 1917, your petitioner called to see the said Mrs. Blount, the defendant named in this suit, for the purpose of making an appointment with her to meet at such time as might be convenient, in order that said option might be exercised by petitioner and the transaction closed in accordance with the terms thereof; that to petitioner's surprise the said Mrs. Blount at said time advised him that she would not sell said property and would not perform her contract as contained in said option; that, notwithstanding this, your petitioner, hoping that the said Mrs. Blount would carry out the provisions of her contract with him, prepared the papers which it would be necessary to have executed by the said Mrs. Blount and by himself in order to carry out said contract in accordance with the terms thereof, and carried the same, with a sufficient amount of cash to meet all the cash payments required to be paid under said option, to the home of the defendant, Mrs. Blount, on or about the 13th or 14th of August, 1917, for the purpose of tendering to her the considerations required from him under the terms of said contract; that he went to the door of the premises occupied by the said Mrs. Blount at said time, rang the door bell, and knocked upon the door loudly, but no one appeared to admit him, although he saw through the window of one of the rooms occupied by the defendant that there were persons in said room, including the defendant; that thereafter he made several efforts to be admitted to the house for the purpose of making such tender, he telephoned to the defendant a number of times, and had others telephone her for him a number of times, seeking to arrange a meeting with her, and that members of her family would answer the telephone and inform him and those who acted for him that Mrs. Blount was not at home, sometimes stating that she was in one place and sometimes stating that she was in another, such statements being wholly inconsistent with each other; that on the 17th day of August, 1917, after having made many efforts as aforesaid to communicate with the said defendant and to make due tender to her, he addressed a letter to her at her residence in the city of Atlanta, advising her of the fact that he had made previous efforts to find her, but without success, and appointing the following day, Saturday, August 18, at 12 o'clock noon, when he would call for the purpose of closing said transaction, or in any event of making tender to her of the considerations required of him under the contract; that in pursuance of such communication he did in fact call at her home at 12 o'clock noon on Saturday, August 18, 1917, then and there being prepared to make tender to her in accordance with the terms of said contract, and was there met by other members of the defendant's family, who informed him that the defendant was away from home and would not return that day; that later in the afternoon of the same day, being informed by a friend that Mrs. Blount had been seen upon the front porch of a residence in Decatur, Ga., he sought the aid of certain friends of his and went immediately to Decatur, and his friends at his request called at the house where the defendant, Mrs. Blount, was said to be, prepared to make tender for him as aforesaid, but they were not admitted into the house, and were informed by certain persons whom they found upon the front porch that Mrs. Blount was not at these premises; that your petitioner made diligent, frequent, and constant efforts, for more than a week prior to the expiration of said option, to make tender of the considerations required of him under the said contract to the defendant, Mrs. Mary A. Blount, and that said defendant purposely and deliberately evaded him and refused to see him, in order to prevent a tender of said considerations being made to her by petitioner; that because of the several facts hereinbefore set forth the defendant, Mrs. Mary A. Blount, has waived the making of tender to her under the said option contract; that your petitioner was ready, willing, and able to carry out the terms of his contract with the defendant, Mrs. Mary A. Blount, and for several days prior to the expiration of said option desired and sought the right to close said contract in accordance with said option, or to tender to the defendant the considerations required of him therein; that, notwithstanding the facts hereinbefore set out, said defendant declines to carry out her contract and has breached the same; that the total purchase price to be paid by your petitioner under the terms of said contract is $11,700 in the aggregate, plus the unearned premiums on the policies of insurance covering the premises agreed to be sold to him, which amount to about $90.25, making a total that would have been required of him under the terms of his contract of $11,790.25; that the true market value of the said property at the time he sought to close said contract was $17,000, or other large sum, and that your petitioner has therefore been injured and damaged by the defendant in the sum of $5,000, or other large sum, and he seeks to recover said sum from her on account of her breach of contract as aforesaid. Wherefore petitioner prays judgment," etc.

The defendant demurred, upon the grounds that the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, that the contract was unilateral, and not binding, and that the complainant did not state facts sufficient to show an equity in the plaintiff sufficient to authorize any judgment against the defendant. The court overruled the demurrer and the defendant excepted.

[2, 3] 1. The first question to be considered is whether the agreement entered into is valid. The mere inadequacy of the consideration named in the contract would not of itself void the contract, neither would the fact that the considerations named in it had not been paid necessarily vitiate the contract or render it less enforceable. As said by the Supreme Court:

"It is just as competent for a man to bind himself to make a contract of sale as it is for him to bind himself by a contract of sale. . . . The obligation by which one binds himself to sell, and leaves it discretionary with the other party to buy, is what is termed in law an option, which is simply a contract by which the owner of property agrees with another person that he shall have a right to buy the property at a fixed price within a certain time."

See Black v. Maddox, 104 Ga. 162, 30 S. E. 723; Civil Code (1910) § 4244.

Upon the question as to the amount of the consideration named in the contract, and the obligation raised to pay it, see Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Harris, 117 Ga. 1001, 44 S. E. 885. We think, in view of the precedents, by which we are controlled, that the contract is not invalid.

[1, 4] The next question to be considered is whether or not Lynch alleges facts sufficient to entitle him to maintain an action for the breach of the contract, and if there has been a breach upon the part of Mrs. Blount. Where a contract provides that there must be a tender of money or a performance of some obligation, the party bound to make the tender or perform the obligation may be relieved, and the tender and obligation held to have been waived, where the other party to the contract repudiates it, by act or word, or takes a position which would render tender or performance of the obligation imposed useless or impossible. Upon information being conveyed by the first party to the other that he was ready to perform and make good all the obligations resting upon him, so as to make the contract enforceable under its terms, and a statement or declaration by the other party that there would be no performance of the contract in any event, it would be useless to go through the ceremony of actually making a tender or further proffer. As was said by the Supreme Court in Ansley v. Hightower, 120 Ga. 719, 48 S. E. 197:

"A tender of money is excused where, before the expiration of the time therefor, the party to whom it is to be made makes declarations equivalent to a refusal to accept the tender if made."

[5] In addition to this, if the party to whom tender is to be made should obstruct or prevent a tender, we see no reason why in that event tender should not be held to have been waived. It would be unfair for the first party to a contract to purposely avoid and prevent the performance of a contract by the other party. We think the petition in this case sets out, if true (and for the purposes of demurrer we must take it to be true), a cause of action which entitles the plaintiff to have his cause determined by the courts.

Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 298)

PRATER v. BAUGHMAN. (No. 10443.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. BILLS AND NOTES §343, 370—FAILURE OF EXECUTORY CONSIDERATION NO DEFENSE AGAINST BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

The failure of an executory consideration in a promissory note is not a defense against a purchaser for value before maturity, who had knowledge of the character of the consideration, but who acquired the note before the consideration had actually failed, and who had no notice, constructive or otherwise, that the consideration would fail. Simmons v. Council, 5 Ga. App. 386, 63 S. E. 238; Whitten v. Railway Postal Clerks' Inv. Ass'n, 16 Ga. App. 685, 85 S. E. 973; Turner Lumber Co. v. Henderson Co., 20 Ga. App. 682, and authorities cited on page 689, 93 S. E. 301. In the instant case no facts were developed from which the jury could find that the plaintiff (the transferee of the notes sued upon) had or could be charged with notice that the consideration would fail, and the trial judge, therefore, did not err in directing a verdict for the plaintiff.

2. OTHER CASES.

There is nothing decided in Adams v. Hatfield, 17 Ga. App. 680, 87 S. E. 1099, or the other cases cited by counsel for plaintiff in error, as applied to their particular facts, in conflict with the rule laid down above.

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by G. T. Baughman against Mrs. C. H. Prater. Judgment for plaintiff on a directed verdict, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Walter A. Sims, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

Napier, Wright & Wood, of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

STEPHENS, J. Judgment affirmed.

JENKINS, P. J., and SMITH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 239)

PERDUE & PACE v. HURST. (No. 10538.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 9, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. APPEAL AND ERROR §302(1)—SUFFICIENCY OF GROUNDS OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The amendment to the motion for a new trial is too uncertain and indefinite to be considered by this court. It is not even stated at what time Hurst "had the deed in his possession." The ground is not understandable without reference to other parts of the record, and it is a well-established rule that "each ground of the motion for new trial must be complete and understandable, without resorting to an examination of the brief of the evidence or of any other part of the record." Morrow v. State, 22 Ga. App. 253, 95 S. E. 934 (1), and cases cited.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR §1005(2)—VERDICT APPROVED BY TRIAL COURT ON SUFFICIENT EVIDENCE SUSTAINED.

No error of law is pointed out, the verdict has the approval of the trial judge, there is some evidence authorizing the verdict, and, under repeated and uniform rulings of this court and of the Supreme Court, a reviewing court is powerless to interfere. Bradham v. State, 21 Ga. App. 510, 94 S. E. 618, and cases cited.

Error from Superior Court, Haralson County; F. A. Irwin, Judge.

Action between Perdue & Pace and A. A. Hurst. Judgment for the latter, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

I. N. Cheney, of Bremen, and Griffith & Matthews, of Buchanan, for plaintiffs in error.

Edwards & Edwards, of Buchanan, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 296)

MOORE v. SIMS. (No. 10416.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. HUSBAND AND WIFE §25(1)—LIABILITY OF WIFE FOR GOODS PURCHASED BY HUSBAND.

The mere fact that a wife may be the owner of one or more cows, which feed upon provender furnished solely upon the credit of her husband, will not render her liable for the value of such foodstuff, nor authorize a judgment against her for the same, on the theory that she was the concealed principal of her husband, when there is no evidence that he was in any way acting as her agent when the purchase was made. See Hightower v. Walker, 97 Ga. 748, 25 S. E. 386; Montgomery v. Walton, 111 Ga. 840, 36 S. E. 202; Blount & Morel v. Dugger, 115 Ga. 109, 41 S. E. 270; Cornelia Planing Mill Co. v. Wilcox, 129 Ga. 522, 59 S. E. 223.

2. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

There being no evidence to authorize the verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and the case being remanded solely for this reason, it is unnecessary to pass upon the errors alleged in the amendment to the motion for a new trial.

for, if such errors were committed, they will probably not occur on another trial.

Error from Superior Court, Barrow County; A. J. Cobb, Judge.

Suit by F. L. Sims against Adeline Moore. Judgment for plaintiff, motion for new trial overruled, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Joseph D. Quillian, of Winder, for plaintiff in error.

R. H. Kimball, of Winder, for defendant in error.

SMITH, J. This is a suit against a wife as the undisclosed principal of her husband. The issue of fact involved in this case is whether or not the husband purchased certain cow food on his own account or as agent for his wife. The verdict of the jury being adverse to the defendant, she made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and she excepted.

[1] The plaintiff testified that the defendant owed him $61.75 on a just, due, and unpaid account; that the account represented foodstuff which the defendant's cows ate; that the defendant and her husband lived on his place, and that when they came there the cows were so thin they could hardly walk; that the cows used his pasture, and Dick Moore, the defendant's husband, bought the foodstuff from him, which was fed to the cows; that the defendant told him that the cows did not belong to either her or her husband. On cross-examination the witness testified that he did not sell the food in question to the defendant, but that he sold it to her husband, and booked it to him; that the defendant "never agreed to pay for it; she never said anything about it to me; I could not swear that she knew on what basis the food was bought by Dick from me; I could not swear she knew that Dick was buying this foodstuff on the credit," but that the defendant's cows ate it; that he thought the cows belonged to Dick until he was informed to the contrary by the defendant.

G. W. Woodruff testified that the defendant and her husband lived on his place the year before they moved to the plaintiff's farm, and that defendant's husband told him he wanted to buy a cow for her, and that he had heard that the cow was paid for with defendant's money. The defendant testified that she had never bought anything from the plaintiff in her life, and had never authorized her husband or any one else to buy anything from him on credit; that she never promised to pay the plaintiff the account sued on, and never authorized any one else to promise him she would pay it; that she did not know anything about her husband's purchase from the plaintiff, and did not know on what terms the foodstuff was sold him—whether on credit or for cash.

[2] From these facts, and all reasonable deductions therefrom, we do not think that there was any evidence, either direct or circumstantial, to show the husband's agency in contracting the debt sued upon, and the court therefore erred in overruling the motion for a new trial on the general grounds alone.

Judgment reversed.

JENKINS, P. J., and STEPHENS, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 281)

GUY v. NATIONAL CITY BANK OF MEMPHIS. (No. 10700.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

LOTTERIES  $\S$ 3—ADVERTISING SCHEME NOT VIOLATION OF STATUTE OR BASED ON ILLEGAL CONSIDERATION.

Mrs. Guy was sued on notes executed by her, payable to the Partin Manufacturing Company. She pleaded as follows: "The notes sued on are based on an illegal and criminal transaction, for the same were taken by the Partin Manufacturing Company, the consideration being illegal, and such a contract being contrary to the laws of the state of Georgia. Defendant says that in December, 1918, she was the proprietor of a drug store in Buena Vista, Ga., known as the City Drug store, conducted by her agents, and that she was engaged in selling drugs and various sundries usually found in a country drug store, and doing an annual business of about $15,000; that she was approached by the Partin Manufacturing Company, who represented that they could increase the business of the said store from $15,000 per annum to at least $22,000 per annum, under an advertising scheme which was as follows: The Partin Manufacturing Company was to furnish defendant with such literature, stationery, etc., as was necessary to carry on its trade-boosting scheme. Defendant was to issue to each purchaser voting cards with each purchase made. Each purchaser was to receive 100 votes for each $1 purchase. One hundred votes were to be issued to each customer who paid $1 on an account contracted after the campaign started. The advertising system was to continue for one year. At the end of such period the Partin Manufacturing Company was to furnish the successful winners of the prizes offered for the candidate who received the highest number of votes six prizes, to be selected by the successful candidate, as follows: The candidate receiving the most votes would receive the winner's chance of an automobile, either a Palmer, Argo, Metz, Saxon, five-passenger Ford, or five-passenger Emerson, according to the choice of the parties winning, the automobile being furnished to the winner by the Partin Manufacturing Company.

The candidate who received the next highest number of trade votes was to be awarded by the Partin Manufacturing Company a grafanola; the third prize being a French ivory set; the fourth prize being a ladies' gold fancy lavalier and chain; the fifth prize a mahogany finished vacuum sweeper; sixth prize a three-piece carving set. Defendant says that the Partin Manufacturing Company was to send a representative, who was to assist in getting candidates and helping to start the trade-boosting campaign. The candidates were to enlist their friends in making purchases at defendant's store, so as to secure from defendant's customers the trade balance issued to them, so that the candidates could use them in procuring the highest number of votes which would enable them to win the prizes. Each candidate was to sell coupon books or trade cards, which would be redeemable in merchandise at defendant's store. For each $1 book or card a candidate sold, such candidate was to receive 1,000 votes, and for each $5 card or book sold and remitted for, the candidate was to receive 10,000 votes. The customer was permitted to give his trade votes to any candidate for the various prizes, and to vote them for any candidate, or she or he might be a candidate. At the close of the campaign, when the final count was made, the person having the highest number of votes to his or her credit would be pronounced the winner of the automobile, the next in standing was to be awarded the second prize, and so on. The representative of the Partin Manufacturing Company was to induce as many persons as possible to compete for the prizes to be given by the Partin Manufacturing Company. The advertising scheme of the Partin Manufacturing Company was to enlist the competition of as many candidates for the six prizes to be given by them as possible, so that each and every candidate would be induced to work among their friends to patronize defendant's store, and receive the trade balance awarded to each purchaser, in order that these balances might be used by them when the prizes were distributed. By the method above described the Partin Manufacturing Company obligated and guaranteed that it would increase defendant's sales from $15,000 to $22,000 per year. Defendant says that for the consideration above mentioned she gave the Partin Manufacturing Company the notes sued upon. Defendant says that after executing said notes she found that the advertising scheme of the Partin Manufacturing Company was illegal and contrary to the laws of Georgia, and that it was in violation of the criminal laws of said state as emodied in section 404 of the Criminal Code of said state. Defendant says that when she made this discovery she repudiated said contract. Defendant says that, the contract between her and the Partin Manufacturing Company, being illegal, the notes sued upon are null and void, even though the plaintiff be an innocent purchaser of the same. Wherefore defendant prays judgment of the court in her behalf." The court refused to allow such defense, and sustained a demurrer thereto, and rendered judgment for the plaintiff. No valid defense was set up by the plea, and it was not error to disallow it and render judgment for the plaintiff. See Tumlin v. Daniel Brothers Co., 141 Ga. 613, 81 S. E. 793. No such scheme was shown in the plea as would be violative of law and render the consideration illegal or immoral.

Error from Superior Court, Marion County; G. H. Howard, Judge.

Action by the National City Bank of Memphis against Evie S. Guy. Demurrer to plea sustained, and judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

W. B. Short and Geo. P. Munro, both of Buena Vista, for plaintiff in error.

John C. Butt, of Buena Vista, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 270)

KEITH v. SIMPSON et al. (No. 10868.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

BANKRUPTCY ~~§~~304—EVIDENCE SUFFICIENT TO SHOW SALE BONA FIDE.

Keith, as trustee in bankruptcy of J. W. Lindsey, sued him, T. N. Lindsey, and Simpson, seeking to set aside an alleged preference. The evidence showed that J. W. Lindsey bargained for the purchase of a tract of land for $700, giving therefor one note for $100 and one for $600. When the $100 note matured he was unable to pay it, and borrowed the money from T. N. Lindsey, his brother, and paid the note. Being unable to pay the $600 note, he negotiated a trade with T. N. Lindsey, whereby his bond for title was surrendered to Simpson, the vendor, who returned his notes and executed a new bond for title to T. N. Lindsey, and accepted T. N. Lindsey's note for the $600, and T. N. Lindsey paid for J. W. Lindsey an additional sum of $235. The value of the land was $1,000. Within four months of this transaction J. W. Lindsey was adjudged a bankrupt. The evidence failed to show that T. N. Lindsey knew that J. W. Lindsey was insolvent, or otherwise involved than hereinbefore pointed out. At the conclusion of the evidence the court directed a verdict for the defendant. Held, that there was no fraud shown, and that, inasmuch as the only conclusion that could be reached from the evidence was that the sale was bona fide and not for the purpose of defrauding creditors, it was not error to direct a verdict for defendant.

Error from Superior Court, Cobb County; N. A. Morris, Judge.

Action by J. V. Keith, trustee in bankruptcy of J. W. Lindsey, against W. T. Simpson, J. W. Lindsey, and another. Judgment for defendants on a directed verdict, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Geo. T. Gober, of Atlanta, and Howell Brooke, of Canton, for plaintiff in error.

E. W. Coleman, of Canton, for defendants in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

(24 Ga. App. 284)

SHALE v. ROURKE, Judge. (No. 10875.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF §53(1)—PROCEDURE ON REFUSAL TO CERTIFY.

It is the duty of counsel for the plaintiff in error to present to the presiding judge for his certificate a true bill of exceptions, and it is his further duty, where the judge refuses to certify the bill of exceptions tendered him, but fails to give in writing his objections thereto, to request the judge to indorse upon the bill of exceptions his reasons for his refusal, and, if the judge fails to do so, then the matter should be brought to the attention of this court. Coleman v. Johnson, 45 Ga. 317; Vason & Davis v. Gardner, 70 Ga. 517.

2. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF §53(5) — ORAL STATEMENT OF REASONS FOR REFUSAL OF JUDGE TO SIGN BILL.

Where the judge refuses to sign the bill of exceptions tendered him, and returns it to counsel for the plaintiff in error within 10 days, without giving in writing the reasons for his refusal, but where he orally states them to counsel, and he is not requested by counsel to put them in writing, and where, further, the judge, in conformity with the last provision of section 6158 of the Civil Code of 1910, orders that notice be given to the opposite party of the fact and time of tendering the exceptions, and where the notice is given and a hearing is held, at which the judge again orally states his reasons for his refusal to certify the bill of exceptions, to wit, that it contains inaccurate and erroneous statements of the evidence, which are specifically pointed out by the judge, and where counsel for the plaintiff in error makes no effort to correct the bill of exceptions, but insists upon it being certified as tendered, the judge will not be required to sign the bill of exceptions.

Application for mandamus by J. H. Shale, trustee, to compel John Rourke, Jr., Judge, to certify a bill of exceptions. Mandamus absolute denied.

F. A. Tuten and W. B. Stubbs, both of Savannah, for applicant.

BROYLES, C. J. Mandamus absolute denied.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 208)

STEVENS v. DEKLE INV. CO. (No. 10354.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 9, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

BILLS AND NOTES §476(1)—FACTS PLEADED SUFFICIENT TO TAKE QUESTION OF CONSIDERATION TO JURY.

Dekle Investment Company sued Stevens upon promissory notes. Stevens answered, denying indebtedness and pleading as follows: "That on or about the 1st day of October, 1914, plaintiff, acting through its duly authorized agent and manager, J. R. Dekle, and defendant entered into a parol contract whereby plaintiff on its part agreed to furnish to defendant necessary bare living expenses of defendant during the life of the contract, and in consideration of such undertaking on the part of the plaintiff defendant agreed to render his services as real estate agent in the buying and selling of real estate for plaintiff, and whereby it was mutually agreed between the parties that whatever profits be made be divided equally between plaintiff and defendant, such contract to be terminated at any time at the option of either party, and in the event no profits were made the plaintiff agreed to stand the loss of said expenses so advanced as aforesaid, and the defendant agreed to stand the loss of his said services; that in pursuance of said contract defendant rendered to plaintiff his services in the buying and selling of real estate for the plaintiff from the date of the contract to the 27th day of April, 1915, at which time said contract was terminated by mutual consent of plaintiff and defendant, and during such time plaintiff advanced to defendant the sum of $194.71 to cover the necessary bare living expenses of defendant during such time as contemplated by the parties in pursuance of said contract; that the said notes sued on were executed by the defendant to the plaintiff for the sole purpose of preserving a record of the amount advanced to the defendant by plaintiff to cover the necessary living expenses of defendant during the life of said contract, and that there was no consideration whatever moving from the plaintiff to the defendant for the execution of said notes by the defendant. During the life of said contract, defendant's bare living expenses did actually amount at least to the said sum of $194.71; that during the life of said contract defendant did actually render to plaintiff his services as real estate agent of plaintiff in the buying and selling of real estate as in purview of said contract. Although defendant performed his part of said contract and all the services contemplated by the same, no profits were realized. By reason of the foregoing facts, said notes were executed without any consideration whatever, and are not obligations binding this defendant." The plaintiff demurred to the plea, upon the ground that it did not set forth a good defense to the suit, and that it sought to vary the terms of a written instrument, and to abrogate an unconditional contract in writing by alleging a contemporaneous parol contract. The court sustained the demurrer and struck the plea, and rendered judgment against the defendant.

We think the facts pleaded were sufficient to have permitted the defendant to submit to the court the question as to the consideration of the notes.

Error from City Court of Valdosta; J. G. Cranford, Judge.

Suit by the Dekle Investment Company against J. G. Stevens. Demurrer to plea sustained, and plea stricken, and judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Franklin & Langdale, of Valdosta, for plaintiff in error.

Dan R. Bruce, of Valdosta, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment reversed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 235)

SMITH v. SPENCER-DOWLER CO.
(No. 10499.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 9, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS  $\S$  256—TITLE OF PURCHASER AT CONDEMNATION SALE OF STOLEN CAR CARRYING LIQUOR.

The facts of this case show that an automobile was stolen in the city of Chattanooga, and was subsequently seized in the county of Cobb, and that intoxicating liquors were contained in it and being transferred by it. Condemnation proceedings were had against the car, and under such proceedings it was duly sold. The true owner of the car subsequently located it and instituted trover proceedings for its recovery. The evidence in the case established the ownership of the car, and it was conclusive that the true owner had lost it by theft, and had no knowledge that any one was illegally transporting liquor in it. A verdict was returned in his favor, the defendant's motion for new trial was overruled, and the movant excepted. The defendant contended that, notwithstanding the fact that the car was stolen and the owner had no knowledge of the illegal use to which the thief put it, the fact that the car was condemned and sold under the condemnation proceeding forever barred the owner from claiming the car. We do not agree with this contention. The thief obtained no title to the car, and the purchaser at the sale got no better title than the possessor had at the time of its seizure. Lawless v. Orr, 122 Ga. 276, 50 S. E. 85; Campbell v. Hutcheson, 23 Ga. App. 111, 97 S. E. 555. The court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Newton County; C. W. Smith, Judge.

Trover by the Spencer-Dowler Company against G. T. Smith. Judgment for plaintiff, motion for new trial denied, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Rogers & Knox, of Covington, for plaintiff in error.

King & Johnson, of Covington, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 259)

GROW v. SOLOMON. (No. 10481.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct 10, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

LOGS AND LOGGING  $\S$  3(1)—DESCRIPTION IN DEED OR TIMBER LEASE TOO INDEFINITE TO IDENTIFY LAND.

The original deed or timber lease, and which was the basis of an action for breach of warranty of title to standing timber, contained the following description of the timber: "All of the timber of every description except (oak and hickory) now standing or growing in or on the swamp and flat creek lands of Spring creek, where the same runs through 169 acres off of the south side of lots of land 149 one forty-nine, and one seventy-one (171) in the thirteenth district (13th) of Miller county, Georgia, except such timber as may be on thirty-one (31) acres of lots of land in the southeastern corner of said lot number 149, belonging to Mrs. Eliza Stanton. * * * Also excepting that portion of lot 171 included under fence J. S. Bush." Held, the description is too indefinite and uncertain, even when aided by the extrinsic documentary evidence attached to the petition, to afford any means of identifying the exact body of timber which the maker of the deed intended to convey. The deed, therefore, did not pass title to any of the timber; and the suit should have been dismissed on the general demurrer interposed. See, in this connection, Huntress v. Portwood, 116 Ga. 351, 42 S. E. 513; Crawford v. Verner, 122 Ga. 814, 50 S. E. 958; McSwain v. Ricketson, 129 Ga. 176, 58 S. E. 655; Youmans v. Moore, 144 Ga. 375, 87 S. E. 273.

Error from Superior Court, Miller County; W. C. Worrill, Judge.

Action by S. H. Solomon against R. W. Grow. General demurrer to petition overruled, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

P. D. Rich and W. I. Geer, both of Colquitt, for plaintiff in error.

N. L. Stapleton, of Colquitt, for defendant in error.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment reversed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 252)

HARRIS v. COHUTTA BANKING CO.
(No. 10333.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

The case of Leonard v. Cohutta Banking Co., 21 Ga. App. 777, 95 S. E. 113, was based on a note given for stock in the Cosmopolitan Life Insurance Company. The same is true in this case. The issues raised by the pleas in the Leonard Case are largely the same as those in this case, though each has some plea not common to the other. As far as the issues in the two cases are the same, they are settled by the opinion in the Leonard Case, and there is nothing additional in the pleas in this case that would authorize us to render a different opinion, and we hold that the court did not err either in its rulings on the pleadings or in directing a verdict for the plaintiff.

Error from Superior Court, Murray County; Moses Wright, Judge.

Action by the Cohutta Banking Company against J. F. Harris. Judgment for plaintiff on a directed verdict, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

A. W. Fite, of Cartersville, and Maddox, McCamy & Shumate, of Dalton, for plaintiff in error.

Little, Powell, Smith & Goldstein, of Atlanta, W. E. Mann and W. C. Martin, both of Dalton, and C. N. King, H. H. Anderson, and R. N. Steed, all of Chatsworth, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 265)

D. R. WILDER MFG. CO. v. ELDER.
(No. 10630.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)FINDING OF JUDGE OF MUNICIPAL COURT OF ATLANTA—OVERRULING OF CERTIORARI.

A trial by jury was waived, and this case was submitted to one of the judges of the municipal court of Atlanta, and he passed upon the case without the intervention of a jury. There is a sharp conflict in the evidence. The judge who tried the case saw and heard the witnesses. The judge of the superior court overruled the petition for certiorari, thus approving the finding of the judge of the municipal court. We cannot say that the judge of the superior court erred in his rulings, and the judgment is affirmed.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; Geo. L. Bell, Judge.

Action between the D. R. Wilder Manufacturing Company and J. T. Elder. Judgment for the latter in the municipal court of Atlanta on a trial without a jury, petition for certiorari overruled, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

Little, Powell, Smith & Goldstein, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

George Westmoreland and Bell & Ellis, all of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 274)

BOWMAN v. STATE. (No. 10541.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—VERDICT APPROVED BY TRIAL JUDGE.

In the light of the qualifying notes of the trial judge, and when the entire evidence is considered, there is nothing in either of the two grounds of the amendment to the motion for a new trial which would authorize this court to set aside a verdict supported by the evidence and approved by the trial judge.

Error from Superior Court, Sumter County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Proceeding between the State and Everett (alias Evidge) Bowman. From a judgment on a verdict approved by the trial judge, Bowman brings error. Affirmed.

John A. Fort, of Americus, for plaintiff in error.

Jule Felton, Sol. Gen., of Montezuma, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 207)

WALKER v. RAWLS. (No. 10304.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 9, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)OVERRULING OF CERTIORARI.

The judge of the superior court did not err in overruling the certiorari and in affirming the judgment of the court below.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County;
J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Action between C. R. Walker and H. M. Rawls. Judgment for the latter, certiorari overruled, and judgment of court below affirmed, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

Moore & Pomeroy and J. C. Savage, all of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

Horace Russell, of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 259)

TATUM v. PADROSA. (No. 10457.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. LANDLORD AND TENANT  $\Leftrightarrow$ 300(2)—TERMINATION OF TENANCY AT WILL BY PURCHASER FROM LESSOR.

A contract creating the relation of landlord and tenant for a time longer than one year by parol agreement has the effect of creating only a tenancy at will. Civ. Code 1910, § 3693. In order to terminate a tenancy at will it is necessary that the landlord give to the tenant two months' notice. Civ. Code 1910, § 3709. A purchaser of realty from a landlord during the term of a tenant at will is entitled, upon notice as prescribed by law, to terminate the tenancy, and thereafter to dispossess the tenant. See Willis v. Harrell, 118 Ga. 906, 45 S. E. 794.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR  $\Leftrightarrow$ 1047(5)—EVIDENCE  $\Leftrightarrow$ 368(1)—PRODUCTION OF PAPER IN POSSESSION OF WITNESS.

Where it is shown that a paper which would afford evidence material to the issue is in court, in the possession of a witness, it is the duty of the judge to require its production instantaneously, unless it appear that the evidence sought is privileged. In this case the alleged error of the judge in directing that certain papers be produced was cured; for the record shows that, when the judge directed the production of the papers, counsel for the defendant, who had objected to their production, waived the objection by stating in open court: "I have no objection to showing them [referring to the papers]. We have no secrets." See Rylee v. Bank of Stathan, 7 Ga. App. 489, 67 S. E. 383.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT  $\Leftrightarrow$ 306—SUMMARY EVICTION—COUNTER AFFIDAVIT—ISSUE.

Upon the issue made by the filing of a counter affidavit to a summary proceeding to evict a tenant, the only question to be determined is tenancy or no tenancy, and the question as to the landlord's title is not involved. See Patrick v. Cobb, 122 Ga. 80, 49 S. E. 806.

4. TRIAL  $\Leftrightarrow$ 68(3)—REFUSAL TO REOPEN CASE AFTER ARGUMENT.

The court did not err in refusing to permit the plaintiff to reopen the case after both sides had closed and arguments had been made by both parties; especially was it not harmful to the defendant, the party excepting to the refusal.

5. OVERRULING OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The charge of the court fully and fairly submitted the issue; the evidence authorized the verdict; and for no reason assigned did the court err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Glynn County;
J. P. Highsmith, Judge.

Summary proceeding between K. V. Tatum and Benito Padrosa for eviction, with counter affidavit. Judgment for the latter, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

E. H. Williams, of Brunswick, for plaintiff in error.

Max Isaac, of Brunswick, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 287)

LEMMONS v. STATE. (No. 10654.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The verdict was amply authorized by the evidence, and none of the grounds of the amendment to the motion for a new trial shows cause why it should be set aside.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County;
John D. Humphries, Judge.

Proceeding between the State and Mabel Lemmons. From the judgment, and the overruling of her motion for a new trial, she brings error. Affirmed.

Harvey Hill and Jas. E. Garst, both of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

Jno. A. Boykin, Sol. Gen., and E. A. Stephens, both of Atlanta, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 297)

JAMES v. SULLIVAN. (No. 10417.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)COSTS $260(4)—DAMAGES AWARDED ON APPEAL FOR DELAY.

Upon the call of this case, there being no representation for the plaintiff in error, by brief or otherwise, and it being plainly apparent that the writ of error was prosecuted for delay only, the motion of the defendant in error that the record be opened, the judgment therein affirmed, and damages of 10 per cent. for delay be awarded him, is granted. Civ. Code 1910, § 6249.

Error from Superior Court, Douglas County; A. L. Bartlett, Judge.

Action between W. A. James and Henrietta Sullivan, guardian. Judgment for the latter, and the former brings error. Affirmed with damages.

J. R. Hutcheson and Astor Merritt, both of Douglasville, for defendant in error.

STEPHENS, J. Judgment affirmed with damages.

JENKINS, P. J., and SMITH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 251)

COLLIER v. HOLLAND. (No. 10328.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)NEW TRIAL $70, 105—NEWLY DISCOVERED CUMULATIVE AND IMPEACHING EVIDENCE NOT GROUND FOR NEW TRIAL.

In the order overruling the motion for new trial the judge said: "In my opinion no error of law was committed by the court in the trial of said case, and under the following decisions, to wit: Hardin v. Stansel, 13 Ga. App. 22, 78 S. E. 681; Graves v. Hunnicutt, 8 Ga. App. 99, 68 S. E. 558; Doonan v. Ives & Krouse, 73 Ga. 295(3); Mousseau et al. v. Dorsett, 80 Ga. 506, 5 S. E. 780; Hill v. Wheeler, 2 Ga. App. 349, 58 S. E. 502—the evidence authorized the verdict rendered. As to the newly discovered evidence of Pleas. M. Todd as set out in the amended motion for new trial, it is only cumulative in its nature, and movant contended in his testimony that the facts set out in the affidavit of Todd were correct. It could only be regarded as evidence corroborating movant and impeaching in its character, and under section 6086 of the Civil Code (of 1910) and authorities in connection therewith, does not authorize the granting of a new trial. Under the evidence in this case the jury was authorized to reach the conclusion that the plaintiff, J. H. Holland, was the procuring cause that brought about the sale, and under the principle that a laborer is worthy of his hire, especially where movant at the time the sale was being closed said to the plaintiff, 'I will treat you right about it'; therefore I overrule the motion for new trial."

So far as appears from the motion for new trial, we agree with the trial judge that "no error of law was committed by the court in the trial of said case." Not one of the several grounds of the motion shows any cause which requires the grant of a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Morgan County; J. B. Park, Judge.

Action by T. H. Holland, administrator, against W. A. Collier. Judgment for plaintiff, motion for new trial denied, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Albert G. Foster, of Madison, for plaintiff in error.

Williford & Lambert, of Madison, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 290)

KLEIN & SON v. VANDIVER. (No. 10347.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)SALES $479(6, 7)—LOSS OF PROPERTY CONDITIONALLY SOLD.

This is an action of bail trover filed in the municipal court of Atlanta for the recovery of a certain diamond stud. The case was tried before the chief judge of that court without the intervention of a jury. The evidence was brief, that of the plaintiff being as follows: "My name is Jno. D. Allen. I work in the office of Douglass & Douglass. I called upon Mr. Vandiver and demanded the return of the property described in the petition. I do not know whether Mr. Vandiver had the property or not." The plaintiff then introduced the contract and notes, and rested; whereupon the defendant testified: "My name is H. F. Vandiver. I am the defendant in this case. I purchased the property described in the petition. At the time this suit was brought I did not have the stud. I lost the same while in bathing. I have not converted the stone. Plaintiff was advised of these facts prior to the institution of this suit." This was the entire evidence as submitted before the trial judge, who thereupon rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff. A motion for a new trial was then made, and, upon the same being overruled, the case was taken to the superior court of Fulton county by writ of certiorari. The judge of the superior court decided in favor of the original defendant by sustaining the certiorari and ordering a new trial. Plaintiff excepts to this judgment of the superior court, and contends that the trial judge did not err in finding in his favor; that the evidence showed that the diamond stud in controversy was sold upon a contract reserving title, regularly executed; and that, even if it were true, as contended by the defendant, the vendee, that he had lost the diamond stud while in bathing, the trial judge was nevertheless authorized to find that this did not relieve him from liability in an action of trover. Section 4123 of the Civil Code 1910 reads: "Where property is sold and delivered, but title is not to pass until payment in full of the purchase money, and the property is lost, damaged, or destroyed without the vendee's fault, he is entitled to a rescission of the contract or to an abatement in the price, unless it is otherwise agreed in the contract of sale." Under the provisions of the Code just quoted, the contention of the defendant would be sound only in the event that he showed that the loss of the property was caused without fault on his part, and the burden of establishing this was upon him. Whether or not he did so was a question of fact under the undisputed evidence, to be determined by the trial judge sitting as both court and jury. His finding that the defendant had failed to carry this burden is, in our opinion, not only abundantly authorized, but demanded by the evidence. Consequently the trial judge did not err in refusing the motion for a new trial, and the judgment of the superior court sustaining the certiorari and ordering a new trial is therefore reversed.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Action of bail trover by Klein & Son against H. F. Vandiver. Judgment for plaintiff in the municipal court of Atlanta, motion for new trial denied, certiorari sustained and new trial ordered, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Douglas & Douglas, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

Moore & Pomeroy and J. C. Savage, all of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

JENKINS, P. J. Reversed.

STEPHENS and SMITH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 266)

DURHAM v. STATE. (No. 10642.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW §1160—REVIEW OF RULING ON MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The motion for a new trial in this case contains the usual general grounds only; there is some evidence to support the verdict, which has the approval of the judge who tried the case, and this court will not interfere.

Error from City Court of Floyd County; W. J. Nunnally, Judge.

Proceeding between the State and E. B. Durham, and, from the judgment and the overruling of his motion for a new trial, Durham brings error. Affirmed.

Harris & Harris and W. B. Mebane, all of Rome, for plaintiff in error.

J. F. Kelly, Sol., of Rome, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 274)

BROOKS v. STATE. (No. 10449.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

INSTRUCTIONS ON DECREE OF HOMICIDE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The court did not err in charging the jury on voluntary manslaughter, or in the failure to charge on involuntary manslaughter in the commission of a lawful act without due caution and circumspection; there is evidence to support the verdict, and the judgment is affirmed.

Error from Superior Court, Thomas County; W. E. Thomas, Judge.

George Brooks was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Eldon L. Joiner, of Thomasville, for plaintiff in error.

Clifford E. Hay, Sol. Gen., of Thomasville, for the State.

LUKE, J. Affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 271)

ODUM v. STATE. (No. 10331.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §938(1), 941(1), 942(1)—NEWLY DISCOVERED IMPEACHING EVIDENCE.

(a) "Newly discovered evidence, which is merely cumulative or impeaching in its character, will not constitute a good ground of a motion for a new trial."

(b) "Though the witness sought to be impeached by newly discovered evidence was the only witness against the prisoner upon a vital point in the case, if the sole effect of the evidence would be to impeach the witness, a new trial will not be granted."

(c) "Whether an extraordinary motion, based upon the ground of newly discovered testimony, should be granted or refused rests largely in the sound discretion of the court."

2. CRIMINAL LAW §938(1)—NEWLY DISCOVERED IMPEACHING EVIDENCE.

The only effect of the alleged newly discovered evidence in this case would be to impeach the chief witness for the state and show that she was not a virtuous woman. This was a matter in issue when the case was tried by the jury. The alleged newly discovered evidence is both impeaching and cumulative, and under the above rulings this court cannot say that the trial judge abused his discretion in overruling the extraordinary motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Bacon County; J. I. Summerall, Judge.

Will Odum was convicted of an offense, his extraordinary motion for a new trial was overruled, and he brings error. Affirmed. See, also, 94 S. E. 257.

J. Mark Wilcox, of Hazlehurst, for plaintiff in error.

M. D. Dickerson, Sol. Gen., of Douglas, and A. B. Spence, Sol. Gen., of Waycross, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 269)

DARBY v. STATE. (No. 10666.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Oct. 10, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §1156(3) — EXTRAORDINARY MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL FOR NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

The grant or refusal of an extraordinary motion for a new trial, based upon the ground of newly discovered testimony, rests largely in the sound discretion of the trial judge; and this court will not interfere with the exercise of that discretion, where the newly discovered evidence is largely impeaching and cumulative in character, and where it does not appear that such an extraordinary state of facts was shown by the affidavits submitted upon the hearing of the extraordinary motion as would probably produce a different result if a new trial should be granted. Rogers v. State, 129 Ga. 589, 59 S. E. 238; Thomas v. State, 19 Ga. App. 242, 91 S. E. 287.

2. OVERRULING OF EXTRAORDINARY MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—DISCRETION.

It does not appear from the record that the trial judge, in overruling the extraordinary motion for a new trial, abused, or failed to exercise, the discretion vested in him.

Error from Superior Court, Toombs County; R. N. Hardeman, Judge.

Proceeding between the State and W. L. Darby. From the judgment, and the denial of his extraordinary motion for a new trial, Darby brings error. Affirmed.

See, also, 96 S. E. 707.

Chas. W. Sparks, of Vidalia, G. W. Lankford and Giles & Sharp, all of Lyons, and Hines, Hardwick & Jordan, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

Walter F. Grey, Sol. Gen., of Sylvania, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 276)

STEELE v. STATE. (No. 10670.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Oct. 14, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DISTURBANCE OF PUBLIC ASSEMBLAGE §1 — CONGREGATION ASSEMBLED FOR WORSHIP.

Section 412 of the Penal Code penalizes any disturbance of a congregation of persons lawfully assembled for divine worship, either during the service or while they are dispersing after the conclusion of the service, and until all of the congregation have left the church building and the church grounds. Brown v. State, 14 Ga. App. 21, 80 S. E. 28; Minter v. State, 104 Ga. 743, 30 S. E. 989.

2. DISTURBANCE OF RELIGIOUS SERVICES.

In the instant case the evidence authorized the jury to find that the congregation of persons disturbed by the defendant was lawfully assembled for divine service, and that the disturbance occurred before all of the congregation had left the church grounds.

Error from City Court of Sparta; R. W. Moore, Judge.

Jerry Steele was convicted of disturbing a congregation lawfully assembled for divine service, and he brings error. Affirmed.

John C. Lewis and Wiley Lewis, all of Sparta, for plaintiff in error.

R. L. Merritt, Solicitor, of Sparta, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

§ For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

(24 Ga. App. 248)

ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO. v. STOVALL-PACE CO. (No. 10317.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. DISMISSAL OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

The motion to dismiss the bill of exceptions is overruled.

2. CARRIERS §184—LIABILITY OF TERMINAL CARRIER FOR LOSS OF GOODS.

Stovall-Pace Company brought suit against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company, the last of certain connecting carriers, for the loss of a certain box of goods shipped from East Dedham, Mass., to Augusta, Ga., alleging that "the defendant received the goods described in paragraph 3 of plaintiff's complaint, from its connecting carrier, the said goods being in good order, but that said defendant has never delivered said goods to petitioner." A demurrer to the petition alleged in part that the petition should be dismissed "because under the Interstate Commerce Act the original carrier is alone responsible." The plaintiff did not expressly declare upon the state or federal statute, but merely pleaded the facts relied on to show liability against the last connecting carrier. The allegations were sufficient to show that the loss was caused by negligence of the defendant. "The wrong here complained of was committed by the defendant, not by the initial company, and the plaintiff is not excluded from suing the wrongdoer." The demurrer was properly overruled. Southern Railway Co. v. Morris, 147 Ga. 729, 95 S. E. 284 (1); Western & Atlantic Railroad Co. v. White Provision Co., 142 Ga. 246, 82 S. E. 644 (2); Cincinnati, etc., Ry. Co. v. Quincey & Rogers, 19 Ga. App. 167, 91 S. E. 220; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Thomasville Live Stock Co., 13 Ga. App. 102, 78 S. E. 1019 (1).

3. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The fourth ground of the amendment to the motion for new trial is but an amplification of the general grounds.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR §302(1, 3)—AMENDMENT TO MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL INSUFFICIENT ON REVIEW OF OBJECTION TO EVIDENCE.

The amendment to the motion for new trial, filed on December 21, 1918, cannot be considered by this court for two reasons:

(a) "A ground of a motion for new trial based upon the admission of evidence should state what objection was made thereto when it was offered at the trial, and should affirmatively show that the objection was then urged; otherwise no question is raised for determination." Hixon v. Myers, 144 Ga. 408, 87 S. E. 475 (2); Whiddon v. Salter, 144 Ga. 77, 86 S. E. 243 (2).

(b) "Grounds of a motion for a new trial which are incomplete, and cannot be understood without resorting to an examination of the brief of evidence, fail to present any question for decision. Head v. State, 144 Ga. 383, 87 S. E. 273; Sims v. Sims, 131 Ga. 262, 62 S. E. 192." Smiley v. Smiley, 144 Ga. 546, 87 S.

E. 668; Daniel v. Schwarzweiss, 144 Ga. 81, 86 S. E. 239.

5. CARRIERS §185(1)—LOSS OF GOODS—EVIDENCE OF VALUE—VERDICT.

Defendant urges that a new trial should be granted on the general grounds because no value of the lost box of goods was shown. An examination of the evidence reveals the fact that this contention is true, and for this reason the verdict is without evidence to support it, and the judgment must be reversed.

Error from City Court of Richmond County; J. C. C. Black, Jr., Judge.

Suit by the Stovall-Pace Company against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

W. K. Miller, of Augusta, for plaintiff in error.

John J. Jones, of Augusta, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Reversed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 252)

THOMAS v. HINES, Director General.
(No. 10419.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)MASTER AND SERVANT §112(1) — PETITION FOR INJURIES TO SERVANT NOT STATING CAUSE OF ACTION.

Judge Meldrim, in his order sustaining the demurrer to the petition in this case, says:

"In the view which I take of this case I do not deem it necessary to decide the issues raised by the demurrer, except the ground that the petition fails to set out a cause of action. It appears that the defendant railway had repair yards in which there were tracks known as 2 and 3. On track No. 2 there was a bad-order car, from which it was necessary to remove a pair of wheels and 'carry them to the wheel press, get a new pair from the wheel press, and carry them back to the car to be placed under the car.' The gang of men of which plaintiff was a member having removed the old wheels and taken them to the wheel press, and the new wheels having been moved down to No. 3 track to a place nearly opposite the out of order car, it became necessary to move the wheels from No. 3 track onto No. 2 track, and then to be rolled under the car. As plaintiff stepped inside of track No. 2 he stepped on a broken bolt. This bolt was iron, round, three-fourths of an inch in diameter and from 8 to 12 inches long. It rolled, caused his foot to give way, he fell, and the wheel ran on his foot, crushing it. The place where the accident occurred was 'in the freight repair track department' in the 'yards' of the defendant.

"1. The place where the accident occurred was in a railway yard, where repair work was going on, and when [where?] the work in its progress necessarily changes the character for safety of the place. The rule of a reasonably safe place to work does not therefore apply.

"2. The plaintiff had just before the accident passed through that part of the yard and over or very near the draft bolt, when he removed the wheels from under the car on No. 2 track and took them to the wheel press. The bolt was inside of No. 2 track. The out of order car was on that track. The old wheels were taken out of that car on No. 2 track. The new wheels were put in that car on the same track. The bolt was there when plaintiff removed the old wheels, or it got there in some way in the brief interval of removing one pair of wheels and putting in the new pair. This is highly improbable. The clear conclusion is that this broken bolt was in the repair yard, between the rails of No. 2 track, when plaintiff removed the old wheels, and that he did not notice it. That he had equal opportunity with the master to have seen it goes without saying. He simply stepped back over the rail of No. 2 track, on the bolt, without looking, and the wheel rolled on his foot. It is a physical impossibility to keep a repair yard, where work is going on, free from bolts, nuts, and the like. If the plaintiff did not see the bolt when he went by it, it is not reasonable to suppose that the master would have seen it. To have inspected a repair yard, and to have removed from between repair tracks a broken bolt, would have required the most extraordinary care, and this is not required of the master. While it is the duty of the master to inspect, and while this is a continuing duty, yet nevertheless there must be a reasonable time for inspection and time to remedy an evil after its discovery. There is not the slightest suggestion as to how the bolt got there, or how long it had been there.

"Plaintiff relied on the case of Fenelon v. Railway, 143 Ga. 26 [84 S. E. 57]. The report of the case is meager, but it does appear that in that case the bolt had been allowed to remain partly on a rail, in violation of a rule of the company. In the instant case there is no averment as to the violation of a rule. In the Fenelon Case it appears that the accident was at night, and it does not appear that Fenelon had equal opportunity with the master to have known of the defect. In the instant case the plaintiff had equal opportunity with the master of seeing the bolt. Plaintiff also relies on Southern Ry. Co. v. Puckett, 16 Ga. App. 552 [85 S. E. 809]. By reference to page 554 of that case [(16 Ga. App.) to page 811 of 85 S. E.] it will be seen that certain rules were introduced, and it was because of the violation of these rules that the defendant was held liable. A reference to the Puckett Case shows that there is no real similarity in the facts of that case and the instant case. The other two cases cited by counsel for plaintiff are 244 U. S. 571 [37 Sup. Ct. 703, 61 L. Ed.

1321, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 69], which is the Puckett Case decided in 16 Ga. App. 552, supra, and affirmed, and the case of Railroad v. Thompson, 236 Fed. 1 [149 C. C. A. 211]. In the latter case it appears that the plaintiff was injured by stepping on a piece of slag the size of a coconut. The rule of the company 'required that the yard should be kept clear of such slag.' The case is essentially different from the one at bar. In my opinion, no cause of action is shown, and the general demurrer is sustained."

Without committing ourselves to all that the careful and capable judge has written in the above order, we are clearly convinced that his conclusion is correct.

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; P. W. Meldrim, Judge.

Action by William Thomas against W. D. Hines, Director General. Demurrer to petition sustained, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Oliver & Oliver, of Savannah, for plaintiff in error.

Lawton & Cunningham, of Savannah, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 277)

CARSON et al. v. AYERS. (No. 10425.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Oct. 9, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

APPEAL AND ERROR  $\S$ 977(4) — REVIEW OF GRANT OF FIRST NEW TRIAL.

This is the first grant of a new trial, and the verdict not being demanded by the evidence under the provisions of section 6204 of the Civil Code of 1910, and the unbroken precedent of the Supreme Court and of this court, the judgment granting a new trial cannot be disturbed.

Error from Superior Court, Franklin County; W. L. Hodges, Judge.

Action between J. L. Carson, Jr., and others, trustees, and Rau Ayers. Verdict and judgment for the former, new trial granted, and the former bring error. Affirmed.

W. A. Stevenson, of Commerce, for plaintiffs in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

$\S$ For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

(24 Ga. App. 285)

JACKSON v. CHAMBERS. (No. 10288.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)TORTS  $\Rightarrow$  26(1)—PETITION SHOWING TORT NOT DEMURRABLE.

The petition in this case plainly set out an action for damages sounding in tort, and the recital therein of a contract may be treated merely as showing the relationship of the parties. The court erred in sustaining the demurrer interposed and in dismissing the petition. Payne v. Watters, 9 Ga. App. 265, 70 S. E. 1114.

Error from City Court of Carrollton; James Beall, Judge.

Action by Wilburn Jackson against G. W. Chambers. Demurrer to petition sustained, and petition dismissed, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Emmett Smith and Buford Boykin, both of Carrollton, for plaintiff in error.

Leon Hood and H. C. Strickland, both of Carrollton, for defendant in error.

STEPHENS, J. Judgment reversed.

JENKINS, P. J., and SMITH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 205)

GUARANTY MUTUAL LIFE & HEALTH INS. CO. v. OLIVER. (No. 10324.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 9, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)AFFIRMANCE OF JUDGMENT.

We think the judgment of the judge of the superior court is correct, and the same is affirmed.

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; P. W. Meldrim, Judge.

Action between the Guaranty Mutual Life & Health Insurance Company and Sam Oliver. Judgment for the latter, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

F. B. Pettie and J. Gordon Dingle, both of Savannah, for plaintiff in error.

Frederick A. Tuten and W. B. Stubbs, both of Savannah, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 234)

ALLGOOD v. MONROE OIL & FERTILIZER CO. (No. 10476.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 9, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. MASTER AND SERVANT  $\Rightarrow$  238(3)—EVIDENCE SUSTAINING DEFENSE OF CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF SERVANT.

The evidence in this case discloses that the plaintiff undertook to put a belt on a fast revolving pulley, and in so doing was injured. The evidence also discloses that there was a safe way to put the belt on the pulley, and the safe way was known to the plaintiff. The evidence is without contradiction that the plaintiff had a choice of two ways of putting the belt on the pulley, one a dangerous way and the other a safe way. The plaintiff chose the dangerous way. The plaintiff having selected the dangerous way, he cannot recover of the employer for his injuries thus sustained, although his conduct in selecting that way may not have amounted to actual rashness. See Belk v. Lee Roy-Myers Co., 17 Ga. App. 684, 87 S. E. 1089, and cases cited.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT  $\Rightarrow$  289(1)—EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO MAKE OUT PRIMA FACIE CASE FOR INJURED SERVANT.

The evidence fails to make out a prima facie case. The plaintiff had months of experience around the machinery where he was injured, and his injury was due to his own negligence, not contributed to in any way by the defendant. Commercial Guano Co. v. Neather, 114 Ga. 416, 40 S. E. 299; Crown Cotton Mills v. McNally, 123 Ga. 35, 51 S. E. 13; Cawood v. Chattahoochee Lumber Co., 126 Ga. 159, 54 S. E. 944. For no reason assigned was it error for the court to direct a verdict for the defendant.

Error from Superior Court, Walton County; Andrew J. Cobb, Judge.

Action by J. G. Allgood against the Monroe Oil & Fertilizer Company. Judgment for defendant on a directed verdict, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

A. H. Davis, of Atlanta, and W. O. Dean, of Monroe, for plaintiff in error.

Robt. L. Cox and Walker & Roberts, all of Monroe, and Robt. P. Jones, of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(125 Va. 708)

ELY v. GRAY.(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Sept. 17, 1919.)1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1039(17)—FAILURE TO VERIFY PLEA NOT GROUND FOR REVERSAL.

That special pleas which were unverified were filed by defendant is no ground for reversal.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1039(5)—FILING OF IMMATERIAL PLEAS HARMLESS ERROR.

In an action on a note, where defendant pleaded nil debet, non est factum, and two additional special pleas, setting up that plaintiff had fraudulently induced the maker to sign and seal a blank sheet of paper, the filing of such pleas was not prejudicial, though no evidence was introduced, where the whole defense was that the note was a forgery.

3. PLEADING ⇨192(1)—DEFECTIVE BILL OF PARTICULARS NOT GROUND OF DEMURRER.

A bill of particulars or statement of grounds of defense being no part of the pleadings, defects therein cannot be reached by demurrer, or by objections equivalent to a demurrer.

4. PLEADING ⇨324—FILING OF STATEMENT OF GROUNDS OF DEFENSE.

In an action on a note, where defendant pleaded nil debet and non est factum, and plaintiff moved for a bill of particulars, the filing of a statement of grounds of defense, which set up that the note was a forgery and was executed by plaintiff to carry out a general scheme of fraud, is no ground for complaint.

5. EVIDENCE ⇨138—OF OTHER TRANSACTIONS PART OF GENERAL SCHEME ADMISSIBLE.

In an action on a note, where defendant claimed that it was a forgery, and had been forged by plaintiff in pursuance of a general scheme to defraud, in pursuance of which he forged other notes, testimony that plaintiff told the witness other persons were indebted to him, when they were not, etc., is admissible in support of defendant's general claim that plaintiff was forging notes, for there is an inference that, if persons were indebted to plaintiff, he would hold their notes.

6. EVIDENCE ⇨138—LATITUDE TO SHOW GENERAL SCHEME TO DEFRAUD.

In an action on note, where defendant asserted that it was a forgery, and claimed that it was forged by defendant in pursuance of general scheme of fraud, great latitude of proof is allowed, and evidence that defendant had forged other notes is admissible to establish his general scheme.

7. EVIDENCE ⇨117—ADMISSIBLE, THOUGH REMOTE, IN CONNECTION WITH OTHER EVIDENCE.

In action on a note, where defendant asserted that it was a forgery, and that plaintiff had forged it in pursuance of a general scheme of fraud, testimony that plaintiff claimed to have notes in various amounts against two, who denied any such were ever in existence, though relating to plaintiff's assertions some years prior to the date of note sued on, is not objectionable on the ground of remoteness, where there was other evidence tending to show at more recent dates plaintiff still claimed to have such notes.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1050(1)—ADMISSION OF IMMATERIAL EVIDENCE HARMLESS ERROR.

In an action on a note, where defendant claimed it was a forgery and asserted that plaintiff was guilty of a general scheme to defraud, the admission of testimony that plaintiff showed the witness another note signed as surety by defendant's intestate, the alleged maker, without any showing to impeach genuineness of such instrument, held harmless.

9. WITNESSES ⇨177—COMPETENCY AS TO TRANSACTIONS WITH PERSONS SINCE DECEASED.

In an action against administratrix on a note claimed to have been executed by her intestate, where she asserted that it was a forgery, and had been prepared by plaintiff in pursuance of a general scheme to defraud, and offered evidence to show that plaintiff claimed to hold notes against two persons, when in fact he did not, held that, under Code, § 3346, subd. 2, plaintiff was not a competent witness to deny such evidence.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1002—VERDICT ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE CONCLUSIVE.

A verdict on conflicting evidence is conclusive on appeal.

Error to Circuit Court, Lee County.

Action by T. P. Ely against one Gray, the administratrix of G. C. Duff, deceased. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

J. C. Noel, of Pennington Gap, for plaintiff in error.

Davidson & Robinett and Pennington & Cridlin, all of Jonesville, for defendant in error.

KELLY, J. This is an action of debt, brought by T. P. Ely against G. C. Duff's administratrix on a negotiable promissory note under seal for $1,055, bearing the signature of Duff and payable to the order of Ely. The defense relied upon was that the signature to the note, the body of which was wholly in the handwriting of Ely, was a forgery. There was a verdict and judgment below in favor of the defendant.

There are 10 assignments of error, some of which are practical duplications of others. In the petition for the writ of error, which constitutes the only brief furnished by the plaintiff in error, no authorities are cited by the learned counsel in support of any of the propositions advanced.

1. The record shows that the defendant pleaded nil debet, non est factum, and two additional special pleas in writing, and error is assigned to the action of the trial court in permitting these two special pleas to be filed.

Special plea No. 1 was to the effect:

"That the said plaintiff applied to the said G. C. Duff in his lifetime, and requested him to become surety for said plaintiff on a note to be executed by the said plaintiff as principal and the said G. C. Duff as surety; that the said plaintiff represented to the said G. C. Duff that he did not know from whom he could secure the money, and induced the said G. C. Duff to sign his name on a blank piece of paper on which was written two seals, one above the other; the said G. C. Duff signed on the line in front of the last seal, the said plaintiff representing to the said G. C. Duff that he would sign his name in front of the first of the said seals, and when he found a person who would loan him the money that he, the said Ely, would then write out the note for such amount as was secured and payable to the person from whom he obtained the same; and the said defendant says that the said plaintiff wickedly, and with intent to cheat and defraud the said G. C. Duff, and in a secret place away from the said G. C. Duff, wrote out the said supposed note sued over the signature of said G. C. Duff; and the said defendant further says that the said supposed instrument sued on was without consideration, and is void for lack of consideration, and on account of the fraud perpetrated by the said plaintiff aforesaid."

Special plea No. 2 averred:

"The plaintiff, with a view to avoid the payment of taxes, failed and refused to make out and deliver a list and statement as provided by the statutes and laws of Virginia to the commissioner of the revenue, whereby the supposed obligation sued on might be legally and properly taxed, in the manner provided by the law."

No evidence whatever was introduced to support the averments contained in either of the special pleas, and therefore, if the filing of the same constituted reversible error, it was only because of their presence in the record.

The bill of exceptions does not disclose the grounds of objections to these pleas, but the objections as presented to us are that the pleas were not sworn to, that they represented no issue that could not have been proved under the general issue, and that they tended to confuse and prejudice the jury.

[1, 2] The fact that there was no verification of the pleas is not in itself a ground of reversal (Grayson v. Buchanan, 88 Va. 251, 257, 13 S. E. 457), and we have no difficulty in holding that there is no other ground upon which their admission can be said to have been prejudicial to the plaintiff. No evidence thereunder having been offered, the only possible reason upon which to base a complaint against them is that they improperly injected into the case damaging and unsupported charges against the plaintiff. If it be true, as the objection concedes, that the matters set up were provable under the general issue, then, the objection carries its own refutation. Sutherland v. Wampler, 119 Va. 800, 802, 89 S. E. 875. Whether this concession is warranted or not, the fact is that the real defense and the evidence introduced to sustain it, while not in accord with either of the special pleas, imputed to the plaintiff a straight-out forgery of the instrument sued on, thus involving him in a charge implying certainly as much moral turpitude as the special averments complained of. When pleas are improperly admitted, but no evidence offered in support thereof, the error will not be ground of reversal, if it appears, as it does here, that the plaintiff could not have been injured thereby. Bank v. Kimberland, 16 W. Va. 555, 557; Amos v. Stockert, 47 W. Va. 109, 84 S. E. 821, 826; Tower v. Whip, 53 W. Va. 158, 44 S. E. 179, 181, 63 L. R. A. 937. The opinion of this court in Hopkins v. Richardson, 9 Grat. (50 Va.) 485, in so far as it conflicts with the conclusion here announced, does not commend itself to us as sound, is out of harmony with the doctrine of harmless error prevailing in this jurisdiction, and is disapproved.

[3, 4] 2. It is next insisted that the court erred in permitting the defendant to file the following statement of her grounds of defense:

"That the plaintiff had forged the note or instrument sued upon; that he, in an attempt to carry out a general scheme of fraud, had not only forged the note sued upon, but that he had forged other notes on other parties, to wit, notes on Vass Banner, a note or notes on J. F. Witt, another note on John B. Pennington, with G. C. Duff as surety thereon, for $500, and that he had forged the name of G. C. Duff as surety on a note which plaintiff held against Wade Ladd and Bertha Ladd."

This statement was tendered and allowed to be filed in response to the plaintiff's motion and the court's consequent order requiring the defendant to file a bill of particulars showing the grounds of her defense. The record does not disclose the reasons assigned by the plaintiff in the lower court for his objections to this statement, but, as urged here, they are:

"That there was no proper plea upon which to base such a bill of particulars, and because the same could only tend to confuse and prejudice the jury."

A bill of particulars, or a statement of the grounds of the defense, being no part of the pleadings, defects therein cannot be reached by demurrer, or, as is true here, by objections equivalent to a demurrer. Geo. Campbell Co. v. Geo. Angus Co., 91 Va. 438, 22 S. E. 167; Columbia Accident Association v. Rockey, 93 Va. 678, 25 S. E. 1009; King v. N. & W. R. Co., 99 Va. 625, 39 S. E. 701. It is, of course, conceivable that a bill of particulars containing improper allegations might be so exploited before a jury as to constitute reversible error, but nothing of that character occurred in this case.

Furthermore, not only was the scope of the defendant's pleadings broad enough to warrant the introduction of evidence in proof of the facts set up in the grounds of the defense, but some such evidence was in fact introduced and was properly admitted, as appears from what is said in the course of this opinion concerning the other assignments of error.

[5] 3. There were a number of exceptions to the rulings of the trial court in the admission of testimony, the disposition of which in this court will require a somewhat detailed recital of parts of the evidence.

The defendant introduced as a witness Mrs. Sallie Wygal, who testified that in the summer or early fall of the year 1915 the plaintiff stated to her that Vass Banner and J. F. Witt owed him some money; that she did not know that he said he had notes against these parties; that as best she could remember he said Witt owed him $1,000; that she told him she wanted to borrow some money, and he said, if he could collect it, he would lend it to her; that he claimed to be getting 10 per cent. interest from Witt, but would charge her 6 per cent.

J. F. Witt was introduced, and testified that he never owed Ely $1,000, or any other sum; that he had been owing Ely's brother $1,500 for three or four years, which he had repaid in three installments, the last one being paid shortly before the trial; that so far as he could remember he had never borrowed any money from, or executed any notes to, the plaintiff.

J. F. Flanary testified that in the summer of 1913 the plaintiff showed him three notes, one for $285, one for $300, and one for an amount which he did not remember, all payable to the plaintiff, and bearing the signature of Vass Banner.

There was further testimony on behalf of the defendant as follows: (1) By the witness A. P. Skidmore, that the plaintiff told him that he had a note on Vass Banner for $1,500, and was likely to become the owner of the Jeans farm, owned by Banner, adjoining that of the plaintiff; (2) by the witness John Collier, that the plaintiff, while trying to borrow some money from Collier, had told him that he had a note against Vass Banner for $1,500; (3) by the witness Wright Collier, that Ely, on an occasion when he was renewing a note which he owed to Wright Collier, told him that Banner owed him $1,100; (4) by the witness Harrison Phipps, that the plaintiff had told Phipps that Banner was indebted to him, and he was going to become the owner of the Jeans place, adjoining him; (5) by the witness Wm. Phipps, that Ely told him that Banner owed him $1,500, adding, "I have got to call on him at once; if he don't pay me, I am going to take possession of the Jeans farm"; (6) by the witness Vass Banner, that he had never owed the plaintiff any of the notes or sums of money mentioned in the above-recited testimony; that the only note he ever gave him was one for $69.75 in 1913, which had been paid; that, having heard some reports about Ely's claim in regard to the aforesaid notes and after the present suit was brought, he approached Ely in regard to the matter, and Ely said that he had not made the statements, and agreed to go before a justice and make an affidavit accordingly, and, not finding the justice, went before the deputy clerk, and made oath that Banner did not owe him any of the amounts in question; (7) by the witness J. M. Wollver, that a short time after the death of G. C. Duff the plaintiff claimed to have a debt against the Duff estate for $500, and afterwards stated that the amount was $1,000.

There was also evidence on behalf of the defendant tending to show that G. C. Duff, a man 84 years of age at the time of his death, was in comfortable circumstances, and not in the habit of borrowing money, and that at about the date of the note sued on Ely himself was embarrassed financially and made several efforts to borrow money. M. O. Combs, the county treasurer, testified that on January 6, 1916, the plaintiff, who was acting as his deputy, owed him about $1,300, and that at different times he was pressing the plaintiff for settlement.

(a) It is urged upon us that the court erred in admitting the testimony of Mrs. Wygal, and the reason assigned is that what she said did not prove or tend to prove that the plaintiff ever held or claimed to hold a note against J. F. Witt or Vass Banner.

It is true that Mrs. Wygal did not undertake to say that the plaintiff claimed to hold notes for the indebtedness he asserted against Witt and Banner, but it can hardly be said that his statement to her did not imply the existence of such notes. Men do not generally have outstanding debts due them, and on which they are collecting interest, without taking notes therefor. The usual course of business is to the contrary. Furthermore, so far as the objection relied upon affects what Mrs. Wygal said about Vass Banner, it cannot be very seriously regarded, because there is an abundance of uncontradicted evidence from other witnesses, showing that Ely did claim that he had notes on Banner, some of which he actually exhibited to the witnesses, and all of which are shown to have to have been fraudulent.

It is perhaps but fair to the plaintiff to say that he offered to testify in his own behalf, and that, if the court had held him to be a competent witness, he would have testified in flat denial of practically all the evidence in regard to his claim of notes and indebtedness against other persons. His evidence, of course, was not before the jury. Whether his standing before them would have been improved by such a statement from him, in the face of the array of witnesses against him, is a question which suggests itself, but is not very material to the decision of the case.

[8, 7] As to the plaintiff's alleged claim of indebtedness against Witt, Mrs. Wygal was the only witness, and if there were no other evidence to support the defendant's theory of a general fraudulent motive and scheme on the part of the plaintiff, her testimony as to the Witt debt would not be competent. Taken with the evidence as a whole, however, it presented to the jury a circumstance proper for their consideration.

The issue upon which the case was fought out before the jury was whether the note sued on was genuine. The defendant claimed that the signature had been forged, and averred that this forgery was a part of a general scheme of fraud, pursuant to which the plaintiff had forged not only the note in question, but notes on other parties. In cases of this character the trial courts are confronted with the delicate and difficult task of supervising the evidence in such manner as, on the one hand, to protect the party charged with fraud against the building up of an imaginary and fictitious theory, and, on the other hand, to permit a full and free investigation of the charge as made. A careful consideration of the record satisfies us that the circuit court in the instant case has met and discharged this duty with skill and fairness.

In actions involving charges of fraud, seldom capable of establishment by direct proof, large latitude should be and always is allowed in the admission of circumstantial evidence, and objections thereto for irrelevancy are not favored. Evidence of other similar frauds committed by the same party at or near the same time is admissible. 1 Jones on Ev. (Horwitz, 1913 Ed.) § 143; 1 Wig. on Ev. § 304; Piedmont Bank v. Hatcher, 94 Va. 229, 331, 26 S. E. 505; Lowance v. Johnson, 75 W. Va. 784, 84 S. E. 937, 940; Castle v. Bullard, 64 U. S. (23 How.) 172, 16 L. Ed. 426, 428; Butler v. Watkins, 80 U. S. (13 Wall.) 456, 20 L. Ed. 629; Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 591, 6 Sup. Ct. 877, 29 L. Ed. 997.

The rules of evidence recognized in the foregoing authorities and applicable to the instant case are well summarized in the following extract from Jones on Evidence, supra (section 142, p. 720):

"Actual fraud is always attended by an intent to defraud, and the intent may be shown by any evidence that has a tendency to persuade the mind of its existence. If a motive exist prompting to a peculiar line of conduct, and it be shown that in pursuing that line a defendant has deceived and defrauded one person, it may justly be inferred that similar conduct toward another, at or about the same time, and in relation to a like subject, was actuated by the same spirit."

(b) It is true, as pointed out by counsel for the plaintiff in error, that the witness Flanary fixed the time of his conversation with the plaintiff concerning certain notes on Vass Banner about 2½ years prior to the date of the note sued on, but other evidence in the case tends to show that subsequently and at more recent dates he was still claiming to have notes in various amounts against Banner, which Banner testified were never in existence, and which the plaintiff in his affidavit before the deputy clerk admitted he did not hold. The testimony given by Flanary, therefore, was not too remote to be considered by the jury along with the other facts and circumstances in the case.

We may well conclude the discussion of this branch of the case with the following extract from the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in Castle v. Bullard, supra:

"Whenever the necessity arises for a resort to circumstantial evidence, either from the nature of the inquiry or the failure of direct proof, objections to testimony on the ground of irrelevancy are not favored, for the reason that the force and effect of circumstantial facts usually and almost necessarily depend upon their connection with each other. Circumstances altogether inconclusive, if separately considered, may, by their number and joint operation, especially when corroborated by moral coincidences, be sufficient to constitute conclusive proof. Applying these principles to the several exceptions under consideration, it is clear that no one of them can be sustained."

[8] (c) It is insisted that the court erred in permitting the witness James Collinsworth, whose evidence has not heretofore been mentioned, to testify, as he did, that the plaintiff had showed him a note signed by John B. Pennington with G. C. Duff as surety for $500, payable to the plaintiff, and that at the time of this occurrence Pennington and Duff were both dead. The objection urged to this evidence is that there was nothing else before the jury to show that the plaintiff ever had such a note, and nothing to show that, if he did have it, the note was a forgery. The state of evidence before the jury in this regard is correctly recited in the objection; but it is difficult to see how the testimony in question could have prejudiced the plaintiff. The mere fact that he had shown the witness a note on Pennington and Duff, unaccompanied by anything to impeach its genuineness, was immaterial, and should have been excluded; but it was harmless so far as the plaintiff was concerned. If there was any inference to be fairly drawn from it, that inference would have been that the defendant had made a charge against the plaintiff which he was unable to support by proof, and, as said in Amos v. Stockert, supra, the natural tendency of a failure to produce such proof would have been to create sympathy for the plaintiff.

[9] 4. The plaintiff was offered as a witness in his own behalf for the purpose of rebutting and denying the testimony of Flanary, Collinsworth, Collier, and others, who had testified as hereinbefore set out to certain conversations with him. The court upon objection by the defendant, declined to permit the witness to testify on the ground that the death of G. C. Duff rendered him incompetent. It is contended that the plaintiff's testimony would have related only to collateral issues raised by defendant's evidence, in no way connected with the alleged note executed to Ely by Duff, and that the action of the court therefore was erroneous. The question is settled to the contrary of this contention by section 3346, subsection 2, of the Code, and by the decisions of this court construing the same. The execution of the note constituted the sole contract or transaction which was the subject of the investigation within the meaning of the statute. The general rule, clearly embracing the testimony here involved, is that the test of competency under the statute is to be found, not in the fact as to which the party is called to testify, but in the contract or other transaction which is the subject of the investigation; and if such contract or other transaction was with a person who has since died, the other party cannot be allowed to testify at all as to any fact in the case. Mason v. Wood, 27 Grat. (68 Va.) 783; Grigsby v. Simpson, 28 Grat. (69 Va.) 348; Morris' Ex'r v. Grubb, 30 Grat. (71 Va.) 286; Carter v. Hale, 32 Grat. (73 Va.) 115; Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Oliver, 95 Va. 445, 448, 28 S. E. 594. This result would seem to follow logically from the settled general rule that a witness cannot be competent for one purpose and incompetent for another. Stephens v. Read, 19 Grat. (60 Va.) 1; Carter v. Hale, supra; Brock v. Brock, 92 Va. 173, 23 S. E. 224; Hoge v. Turner, 96 Va. 631, 32 S. E. 291.

In Wright v. Collins, 111 Va. 806, 69 S. E. 942, a case in which Collins, one of the parties to the transaction which was the subject of investigation, was dead, and in which the administrator had testified to certain statements made by Wright (one of the adverse surviving parties) after the death of Collins, it was held that Wright was competent as a witness to deny the statements thus imputed to him. The decision in that case was based upon a construction of the statute as it existed prior to the enactment of section 3346 in its present form; the reasoning of the court being that Wright would have been competent under the former statute for the purpose for which he was introduced, and that the change in the statute could not be construed to impose any disqualification on a witness which had not theretofore existed. The decision was in express terms limited to the precise issue in the case.

That there is reason to doubt the expediency and justice of the rule as thus laid down cannot be doubted, and is conceded in some of the decisions cited above. The Code of 1919, becoming effective in January, wholly changes the law of evidence in this respect. 5 Va. L. Reg. 125. The application of the rule in the instant case, as already pointed out, has perhaps not worked any hardship. A local jury would have been slow in giving credence to the plaintiff's testimony, in contradiction of such a large number of unimpeached witnesses who have testified against him.

[10] There was a motion for a new trial, based upon the alleged errors already disposed of, and also upon the ground that the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence. With reference to the latter ground it need only be said that the evidence as to the genuineness of the signature on the note was conflicting, involving much expert and semi-expert testimony, and that upon this, as well as upon the collateral issues in the case, the controversy was peculiarly one for decision by the jury. Their finding either way upon these questions would have been binding upon us, and we cannot disturb the verdict. The judgment must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

(125 Va. 621)

CITY OF RADFORD v. BROOKS.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. PLEADING ~~6~~40—TIME FOR FILING OF DECLARATION.

The one-month period "after process is returned executed" within which declaration or bill is required to be filed under Code 1904, § 3241, is to be computed from the return day, and not from a previous day on which the process may have been served.

2. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT ~~6~~81(5)—REINSTATEMENT OF CASE DISMISSED DURING VACATION.

Where clerk dismissed suit during vacation without authority to so do, court during following term properly reinstated case, under Code 1904, § 3293.

3. PLEADING ~~6~~6—ALLEGATION OF MATTERS OF LAW JUDICIALLY NOTICED NOT PROPER.

It is the function of the declaration to set out facts, and not matters of law of which the court takes judicial notice.

4. PLEADING  $\S$ 192(3)—UNNECESSARY ALLEGATION OF LEGAL DUTY NOT GROUND OF DEMURRER.

Allegation of a legal duty, though not unusual, is not essential, and, if wrongly stated, is not a ground of demurrer.

5. TRIAL  $\S$ 156(1)—EFFECT OF DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE.

Demurrer to the evidence submits the case to the court on the law and the evidence, and court's attention can be drawn to erroneous statement of legal duty in declaration.

6. TRIAL  $\S$ 256(14)—INSTRUCTION TO CURE ERRONEOUS ALLEGATION OF LEGAL DUTY.

If erroneous allegation of legal duty in declaration affects the measure of damages, the correct practice is to have court instruct jury on the subject.

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS  $\S$ 768(1)—LIABILITY OF CITY FOR DEFECTIVE SIDEWALK.

Where sidewalk was out of repair and in unsafe condition, a part thereof having been entirely removed and a number of boards missing, city was negligent in not making repairs, and was liable to pedestrian who tripped and was injured because of sidewalk's defective condition.

Error to Corporation Court of Radford.

Action by Ellen M. Brooks against the City of Radford. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Harless & Colhoun, of Christianburg, and H. C. Tyler, of East Radford, for plaintiff in error.

H. C. Gilmer, of Pulaski, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, P. The defendant in error, Ellen M. Brooks, brought this action against the plaintiff in error, the city of Radford, to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by her in falling while walking along a defective board sidewalk, on one of its streets. The accident is ascribed to the negligence of the defendant in failing to exercise ordinary care to keep the sidewalk in a reasonably safe condition. The defendant demurred to the plaintiff's evidence, and brings error to the action of the trial court in overruling the demurrer and rendering judgment for the plaintiff.

1. The first assignment of error involves the ruling of the court at the June term, 1918, in reinstating the case on the docket after it had been dismissed by the clerk at rules for the alleged failure of the plaintiff to file her declaration within the time prescribed by section 3241 of the Code.

[1, 2] The facts in relation to that assignment are these: Process was issued March 28, 1918, returnable to second April rules,

April 15, 1918; it was executed March 28, 1918, and on that day, with the fact of its service indorsed thereon, was delivered by the officer to the clerk; the declaration not having been filed on the return day, April 15, 1918, the clerk on that day entered in the rule book, "Process returned executed and continued"; and at the first May rules, May 6, 1918 (after the lapse of only 21 days from the return day), the clerk entered an order dismissing the suit for want of declaration. This order of the clerk was plainly without authority. He was acting under section 3241 of the Code, which is as follows:

"When Clerk to Dismiss Suit.—If one month elapse after the process is returned executed as to any one or more of the defendants, without the declaration or bill being filed, the clerk shall enter the suit dismissed although none of the defendants have appeared."

This means after the "return day" to which process is returned executed—that is, the day to which the defendant is ordered to appear—and from that time he has one month within which to file his declaration. In other words, the time is to be computed from the return day and not from a previous day on which the process may have been served. The clerk's own record shows that he treated the second April rules as the return day, for on that day he entered on the rule book, "Process returned executed and continued." But notwithstanding the fact that the declaration was filed on May 10, 1918, the clerk made an order dismissing the suit the first May rules, May 6, 1918, less than one month after the return of the process to second April rules. Hence, when the motion was made at the June term, 1918, to reinstate the case, the court by authority of section 3293 of the Code rightly took cognizance of the proceedings in the clerk's office during the preceding May-June vacation, and, treating the order of the first May rules dismissing the suit as a nullity, reinstated the case. The clerk thereupon noted the filing of the declaration at the second May rules, as he should have done in the first instance, and the case was regularly matured for hearing.

2. The second assignment of error is to the action of the court in overruling the demurrer to the amended declaration, in that it alleges a higher degree of care on the part of the city in the matter of maintaining the board sidewalk than is imposed by law.

[3, 4] The objection is without merit. It is the function of the declaration to set out facts, and not matters of law of which the court takes judicial notice. The allegation of a legal duty, though not unusual, is not essential, and if wrongly stated is not a ground of demurrer.

This question has quite recently received the consideration of this court in the case of E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Snead's Adm'r, 124 Va. —, 97 S. E. 812, where it was said:

"It is wholly unnecessary for B. to say anything about the law of the case, or what were the respective rights and duties of the parties in the premises. This is a matter of law of which the court takes judicial notice. If the defendant wishes to contest the law upon the facts stated in the declaration, he must do so by demurrer. If he wishes to contest the fact or facts, he must do so by appropriate pleading. But the existence of the legal duty need not be stated in the declaration, and its omission does not render the declaration faulty. What must be stated are the facts out of which the legal duty arises. When these are stated, the court will apply the law arising thereon."

[5, 6] The demurrer to the evidence submits the case to the court on the law and the evidence, and the court's attention can be drawn to the alleged erroneous statement of the law; and, if the allegation affects the measure of damages, the correct practice is to instruct the jury on the subject. City of Richmond v. McCormack, 120 Va. 552, 91 S. E. 767.

3. The remaining assignment is to the court's action in overruling the defendant's demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence and rendering judgment for the damages assessed by the jury.

[7] The evidence we think presents a plain case for recovery. The defendant introduced no evidence, and the evidence for the plaintiff showed a failure on the part of the defendant to use ordinary care to keep the board walk in question in a reasonably safe condition for the use of pedestrians. Part of the sidewalk on account of its condition had been removed entirely, and at the place of the accident it was out of repair and unsafe. A number of the boards were missing, and the court was well warranted in finding that if the missing boards had been replaced the accident would not have occurred. It happened in this way: Plaintiff stepped on a board adjoining one of these vacant spaces, and the board, not being securely nailed, turned, and her foot slipped into the open space, causing her to trip and fall violently upon the walkway, suffering the injuries for which she sued. It is needless to go into further detail. The negligence of the city in failing to repair the walkway is not and cannot be denied; and the character and extent of plaintiff's injuries were clearly proved, and the damages awarded by the jury were reasonable.

We find no reversible error in the judgment, and it must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

(125 Va. 656)

COX et al. v. HAGAN.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES ¶371 — PAROL EVIDENCE TO SHOW RELATIONSHIP OF PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

While, as between themselves, parol evidence is admissible to show the actual relations to one another of apparent joint makers of a note, as that the relationship of surety in truth exists as to one or more of them, yet such evidence is admissible only against parties having knowledge of such relationship at the time they entered into the contract, and is not admissible against an innocent purchaser.

2. PLEADING ¶142, 290(3) — FAILURE TO VERIFY OR STATE AMOUNT OF SET-OFF.

A plea not verified by affidavit and not alleging "the amount to which" defendant "is entitled, by reason of the matters contained in the plea," as required by Code 1904, § 3299, relating to plea of set-off, is insufficient as against a general objection.

3. PLEADING ¶8(1)—ALLEGATIONS OF PLEA OF CONCLUSIONS OF LAW WITHOUT FACTS INSUFFICIENT.

A plea alleging mere conclusions of law, without alleging facts from which those conclusions are sought to be drawn, with sufficient detail and certainty to apprise plaintiff of the nature of the defense and to enable the court upon facts admitted or found to decide whether the matter relied on constituted a valid claim to the relief sought, was properly rejected.

4. PLEADING ¶136 — REFUSAL OF SPECIAL PLEA OF MATTER ALLOWABLE UNDER GENERAL ISSUE.

A special plea, that plaintiff claiming to be surety on a note was entitled to recover only such costs of collection as he in fact paid and was regularly bound to pay his own attorney, was properly disallowed, since such defense could have been made under the general issue thereon.

5. BILLS AND NOTES ¶126—INDORSER PAYING NOTE MAY RECOVER COSTS OR ATTORNEY'S FEES.

Where the makers and indorsers of a note agreed therein to pay costs of collection and 10 per cent. attorney's fees in case of nonpayment at maturity, although plaintiff, indorser, may not have paid the payees or indorsees any costs of the collection or attorney's fees because of default of makers or other prior parties, if the plaintiff after payment had to place the note with an attorney for collection, he was entitled to recover of the makers and prior parties the amount of such expense of costs of collection or attorney's fees.

6. EVIDENCE ¶423(6)—PAROL EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE TO SHOW RELATION OF PARTIES TO NOTE.

As between parties liable upon a note, having knowledge of their true relations one to another, parol evidence is admissible to show the true relationship, regardless of where the signatures appear on the note, whether as makers or indorsers, and under Negotiable Instruments Law, § 2841a, subsec. 68, indorsers are liable prima facie in the order of their indorsement, but evidence is admissible to show that as between or among themselves they have agreed otherwise.

7. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡473 — SUFFICIENCY OF PLEA IN ACTION BY INDORSER.

A plea by defendants, sued on a note by an indorser, that they were also only indorsers, was fatally defective because not containing the further allegation that plaintiff and defendants had agreed at the time of the execution and indorsement of the note that they should be jointly liable as sureties for the true makers, or allegations to such effect.

8. PLEADING ⚡8(5)—SUCCESSIVE LIABILITY OF INDORSERS.

A plea by defendants, sued as makers of a note, that the plaintiff, an indorser, was only entitled to recover the "pro rata amount due by these defendants as indorsers, because each indorser assumes the same liability as every other," is a mere conclusion of law and erroneous; in view of Code 1904, § 2841a, subsec. 68, under which the liability of indorsers, in the absence of special agreement, is successive and not joint.

9. JUDGMENT ⚡273(1) — ENTRY NUNC PRO TUNC NOT PERMITTED ON NEGLIGENCE OR MISAPPREHENSION OF PARTIES.

Where a final judgment ought to be, but owing to the court's delay has not been, entered, the court, if it has such power, uses the papers, proceedings, and evidence in the case as the same existed at the time to which the order or decree is proposed to relate back, as the basis of its action and enters the decree to which the party was then entitled, but may not do so where the delay was imputable to any negligence or even misapprehension of the parties.

10. JUDGMENT ⚡273(1) — MOTIONS ⚡56 (2)—JUDGMENT OR ORDER NUNC PRO TUNC.

The power to affect the operation of a judgment or order, or change its import by a judgment or order nunc pro tunc, should be exercised with caution and circumspection.

11. JUDGMENT ⚡273(4) — RIGHT TO ENTER JUDGMENT OR ORDER NUNC PRO TUNC.

In view of Code 1904, § 3567, providing that the lien of a judgment shall in no case relate back to a time prior to that on or at which the judgment was rendered, the courts do not possess the power to enter nunc pro tunc judgments in cases where suitors have done all in their power to have the cause decided, but owing to the delay of the court no final judgment has been entered, but only in cases where, from accident or mistake of the court officers, the judgment or order entered had never been entered upon the records.

12. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡1177(2) — ON ERRONEOUS ENTRY OF JUDGMENT NUNC PRO TUNC NEW TRIAL GRANTED IN SUPREME COURT.

Where the only error in the record of a case was the entry of a nunc pro tunc judgment, which might be cured by the entry of the same judgment by Supreme Court to take effect as of the date in fact entered by the court below, yet, where plaintiffs in error claim to have several substantial defenses attempted to be set up by rejected special pleas, the defects in which are formal, a new trial should be granted.

13. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡474—SPECIAL PLEA OF MATTER WHICH MIGHT BE SET UP BY GENERAL DENIAL.

In view of Code 1904, § 3299, relating to special pleas of set-off, the defense that the amount claimed by plaintiff, indorser of a note, as attorney's fees, is unreasonable in amount and unconscionable, can be made by special plea; although, the contract not being under seal, the matter could be set up by general denial.

14. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡474 — SUFFICIENCY OF PLEA OF UNCONSCIONABLE AMOUNT OF ATTORNEY'S FEES.

A special plea, under Code 1904, § 3299, that amount claimed by plaintiff, indorser of a note, for attorney's fees, is unreasonable in amount and unconscionable, should allege the amount to the extent of which the defendant claims the same is unreasonable or unconscionable, and also the facts on which such claim is based with sufficient detail and certainty to apprise plaintiff and the court of the nature of the defense.

15. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡537(1) — SPECIAL PLEA OF SET-OFF FOR COURT WHERE FACTS ARE ADMITTED.

In an indorser's action upon a note, where defendants pleaded under Code 1904, § 3299, that the amount claimed for attorney's fees was unreasonable and unconscionable, if the pleaded facts are admitted, the sufficiency of the defense, including the determination of the amount that should be recovered, is for the determination of the judge, while, if the issue upon the plea be one of fact, it must be tried by the jury under proper court instructions, unless all matters of fact and law are submitted for the judge's decision under the statute by consent of the parties.

16. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡534 — REASONABLE AMOUNT OF ATTORNEY'S FEES.

Upon the issue being made as to the amount recoverable under the attorney's fee provision of a note sued upon by indorser, the judge should allow only a reasonable amount considering the attorney's services actually performed in collecting the debt, in view of the customary charges of the profession in the locality for such services, not exceeding the maximum stipulated in the obligation, and, where the services of an attorney were not in fact employed by the holder, no attorney's fee should be allowed.

17. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡126 — "COSTS OF COLLECTION" RELATE TO ATTORNEY'S FEES, NOT COSTS OF ACTION.

In a note providing that "the makers or indorsers * * * agreed to pay costs of collection, or ten per cent. attorney's fees in case payment shall not be made at maturity," the words "costs of collection" do not refer to costs of suit, which are recoverable by law, but to the "attorney's fee" for services in making or attempting collection; such agreement being valid and enforceable to the extent of a reasonable attorney's fee, not exceeding the percentage named in the note.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Costs of Collection.]

Error to Circuit Court, Scott County.

Action by C. F. Hagan against R. W. Cox and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Reversed and remanded.

This action at law was instituted in the court below by the defendant in error, Hagan (hereinafter referred to as plaintiff, or as plaintiff in the court below), by the following notice of motion for judgment:

"To R. W. Cox, L. F. Cox, Mrs. R. W. Cox, Mary Cox, G. B. Bickley and R. E. Bickley:

"You and each of you are hereby notified that on the 1st day of the next term of the circuit court for Scott county (being the September term, 1917), I will move the circuit court for Scott county for a judgment against you and each of you for the sum of $2,750.00 with interest thereon from the 28th day of June, 1917, until paid, the same being due by you to me on account of a certain note executed by all of you as makers, payable to Head & Sloan, bearing date December 28th, 1916, and due six months after date for the sum of $2,500.00 which said note was indorsed by me and which note not having been paid at maturity by either of you as you had agreed demand was made upon me for payment thereof and payment thereof was accordingly made by me on the 29th day of June, 1917, by the terms of which note it is provided that all homestead exemptions are waived and in which you and each of you agreed to pay 10 per cent. attorney's fees for collection in case payment thereof should not be made at maturity, and by reasons of said note and the provisions thereof, and the nonpayment thereof by you and the payment thereof by me to the holder thereof, and by reason of said note having been placed in the hands of attorneys for collection and action hath accrued to me to have and demand of you the said sum of $2,750.00 above mentioned, which said note is in the following words and figures, to wit:

"Gate City, Va., Dec. 28, 1916.

"$2,500.00. Due June 28th, 1917.

"6 months after date we, or either of the makers or indorsers, value received, promise to pay to the order of Head & Sloan twenty-five hundred dollars.

"Negotiable and payable at the People's National Bank of Gate City, Virginia, with six per cent. interest after maturity.

"The makers and indorsers of this note hereby waive presentment, protest and notice of dishonor, and consent that the time of payment may be extended without notice thereof and hereby waive the benefit of their homestead exemptions as to this obligation; and further agree to pay costs of collection, or ten per cent.

attorney's fee in case payment shall not be made at maturity.

R. W. Cox.

"L. F. Cox.

"Mrs. R. W. Cox.

"Mary Cox.

"G. B. Bickley.

"R. E. Bickley."

"Which said note was indorsed as follows:

"C. F. Hagan,

"Head & Sloan,

"By D. C. Sloan,"

"Respectfully, Charles F. Hagan.

"By Robert L. Pennington, Attorney."

On the calling of said notice of motion for judgment the defendants, L. F. Cox and Mary Cox, offered two special pleas, designated as plea No. 1 and plea No. 2, which are as follows:

Plea No. 1.

"This day came the defendants L. F. Cox and Mary Cox, by counsel, and say that the plaintiff ought not further to have and to maintain his action against them at this time because the said note, and the sum demanded in the notice, is the note and the amount due and owing by the Sulphur Springs Lumber Company, a partnership composed of R. W. Cox and G. B. Bickley, and said money was put and placed into the business of the said Sulphur Springs Lumber Company and was used therein, and these defendants further say that the said firm of the Sulphur Springs Lumber Company and the members of said firm, viz.: R. W. Cox and G. B. Bickley, have been duly adjudged bankrupts, by the District Court for the Western District of Virginia, and the said proceeding is now pending in said court. These defendants further say that the said note was filed as a part of the indebtedness of said partnership and the members thereof. These defendants are only sureties on said notes, and the plaintiff recognized the truth of this plea by filing the said note, or proof thereof with the Referee in Bankruptcy, to whom the aforesaid bankruptcy proceeding was referred.

"The foregoing plea was sworn to before me, September 5th, 1917.

D. C."

Plea No. 2.

"This day came the defendants L. F. Cox and Mary Cox, by counsel, and say that the plaintiff ought not to have and to maintain his action for the ten per centum attorney demanded in said notice because the said sum demanded is unreasonable, unjust, inequitable, unfair and oppressive. And this defendants are ready to verify."

The plaintiff thereupon objected to the filing of such pleas, and the court sustained the objection, to which action of the court the two defendants, who are the plaintiffs in error, excepted. The record does not disclose whether any specific grounds of objection to the pleas were assigned before the court below, or whether such specification was asked for there by the plaintiffs in error.

Upon such objection to the pleas being sustained as aforesaid, the plaintiffs in error did not plead the general issue or interpose a de-murrer or any other plea in defense of the action or attempt to do so, at that time or during that term of the court.

The other defendants interposed no defense whatever to the action, and the following entry was made by the clerk on the court docket:

"C. F. Hagan v. L. F. Cox et al. Notice of Motion.

"Judgment against Mrs. R. W. Cox and R. E. Bickley (see papers).

"(Order entered at September term, 1917.)"

And on a subsequent day of the same term of court, to wit, on Thursday, September 13, 1917, judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff against the defendants, Mrs. R. W. Cox and R. E. Bickley, "for the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars ($2,500.00), with interest from the 28th day of June, 1917, until paid and the costs of this suit, together with ten (10) per cent. attorney's fee thereon."

No other order was entered and no other memorandum was made concerning the case by the clerk or judge at that term of the court.

At the January term, 1918, of the court, the plaintiff moved the court to enter a nunc pro tunc order, giving judgment in his favor against the defendants who are the plaintiffs in error.

The record does not disclose on what ground such motion was made.

When the plaintiff by counsel asked the court at its January term for such nunc pro tunc order, the plaintiffs in error offered and asked the court before such order was entered to be allowed to file two additional pleas, designated plea No. 3 and plea No. 4, which are as follows:

Plea No. 3.

"The defendants L. F. Cox and Mary Cox come, and say that the plaintiff ought not to have and to maintain his action for the ten per centum attorney's fee in the notice of motion for judgment demanded, because the said notice shows that said C. F. Hagan is an indorser of the note sued on, and does not show that he paid nor that he was legally bound to pay said attorney's fee. And of this they put themselves upon the country and this they are ready to verify."

Plea No. 4.

"The defendants come and say that the said C. F. Hagan ought not to have and to maintain his action for the sum in the notice demanded, because the said note was executed by R. W. Cox and G. B. Bickley and these defendants were only indorsers on the note as was the plaintiff. The note was executed for the benefit of the Sulphur Springs Lumber Co., composed of R. W. Cox and G. B. Bickley, and the money procured went into the business of said company. The plaintiff knew at the time that these defendants were only indorsers and jointly liable with him. The plaintiff is only entitled to recover the pro rata amount due by these defendants as indorsers, because each indorser assumes the same liability as every other. And this they are ready to verify."

The plaintiff thereupon objected to the filing of such pleas, and the court sustained the objection.

The record is the same in its lack of disclosure, with respect to whether any specific grounds of objection were assigned before the court below to these pleas or were called for there by the plaintiffs in error, as is noted above with regard to the pleas Nos. 1 and 2 aforesaid. The record is also the same upon the point that, upon the objection to pleas Nos. 3 and 4 being sustained, the plaintiffs in error interposed no further defense to the action. And, so far as the record discloses, there was not at any time a trial of the case as if upon any issue joined.

The court thereupon at the January term, 1918, on said motion of the plaintiff, entered the nunc pro tunc order under review as an order which "should have been entered at the September term, 1917," which order rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff against the plaintiffs in error for the sum of $2,750 "with interest from the 28th day of June, 1917, until paid, and the costs of this action, the amount claimed in the plaintiff's notice of motion."

W. S. Cox, of Gate City, for plaintiffs in error.

R. L. Pennington, of Bristol, for defendant in error.

SIMS, J. (after stating the facts as above). The material questions raised by the assignments of error will be disposed of in their order as stated below.

[1] 1. Was there error in the action of the court below in sustaining the general objection of the plaintiff to special plea No. 1 set forth in the statement preceding this opinion?

The question must be answered in the negative.

The plea is, in substance, that, although the signatures of the plaintiffs in error appear on the note in said suit as comakers, they were not in fact principal obligors but sureties only for certain comakers of the note; the latter being in truth the principal obligors. The plea, however, does not allege that the plaintiff had any notice of such suretyship relation of the parties before he indorsed the note. Now, while as between themselves parol evidence is admissible to show the actual relations to one another of apparent joint makers of a note, as that the relationship of surety in truth exists as to one or more of them (8 Cyc. [K] pp. 262, 263; 8 C. J., § 106, p. 70) yet such evidence is admissible only against parties having knowledge of such relationship at the time of the entering into the contract by them (Id., p. 264). "If a person sign a note as maker, but is, in fact, a surety, and there is nothing on the face of the note to show his true relation, he will be treated and considered as a principal, with respect to all who have no notice of the suretyship." 3 R. C. L., § 354, p. 1138. See, also, 8 C. J. § 105, pp. 69, 70.

The plaintiff was the last indorser on the note, other than the payees and indorsees thereof named therein and paid and took up the note upon default as set forth in the statement preceding this opinion. " * * * An indorser of a note who, upon the default of the maker, satisfies the demands of the indorsee, and takes up the note, becomes the lawful holder and may enforce the terms of the contract against all prior indorsers * * * as well as against the maker. * * *" 3 R. C. L. § 337, p. 1121. It is therefore immaterial, so far as the plaintiff's right of action was concerned, whether the plaintiffs in error were makers or indorsers of or sureties on the note. As to the plaintiff they were all principal obligors, unless indeed there had been an agreement between themselves and the plaintiff that their obligation should be otherwise, which the plea, as aforesaid, does not allege. Hence the plea under consideration interposed no valid defense to the action, and for that reason, there was no error in the action of the court below in refusing to allow it to be filed.

[2, 3] 2. Was there error in the action of the court below in sustaining the general objection of the plaintiff to special plea No. 2 set forth in the statement preceding this opinion?

This question must be answered in the negative for several reasons.

(a) The plea is not verified by affidavit as required by the statute under which it was filed. See section 3299 of the Code. Watkins v. Hopkins, 13 Grat. (54 Va.) 743.

(b) The plea does not allege "the amount to which he" (the defendant) "is entitled by reason of the matters contained in the plea," as is required by such statute. Tyson v. Williamson, 96 Va. 636, 32 S. E. 42; Richmond Ice Co. v. Crystal Ice Co., 99 Va. 239, 37 S. E. 851.

(c) The plea is bad because it violates the rule against the allegation of mere conclusions of law and does not allege the facts from which those conclusions are sought to be drawn with sufficient detail and certainty to apprise the opposite party of the nature of the defense and to enable the court upon the facts admitted or found to decide whether the matter relied on constituted a valid claim to the relief sought. Burners v. Keran, 24 Grat. (65 Va.) 42; Watkins v. Hopkins, supra, 13 Grat. (54 Va.) 743.

[4] 3. Was there error in the action of the court below in sustaining the general objection of the plaintiff to special plea No. 3 set forth in the statement preceding this opinion?

This question must be answered in the negative.

If the plea here under consideration means to allege that the plaintiff was entitled to recover only such costs of collection as he in fact paid and was legally bound to pay his own attorney, that defense could have been as well made under a plea of the general issue as by special plea. There was therefore in such case no error in the action of the court in refusing to allow such special plea to be filed.

[5] If the plea means to allege that the plaintiff was entitled to recover only such costs of collection or attorney's fee as he paid and was legally bound to pay to the payee or indorsees of the note who held it at the time the plaintiff paid the note, this position is not sustained by the provisions of the note aforesaid on the subject. Such provisions constitute the terms of the contract on that subject which the plaintiff as lawful holder of the note after its payment by him had the right to enforce against the makers and all prior indorsers of the note. The note expressly provides that—

"The makers and indorsers of this note * * * agree to pay costs of collection or ten per cent. attorney's fee in case payment shall not be made at maturity."

Therefore although the plaintiff may not have paid the payees or indorsees of the note any costs of collection or attorney's fee, yet if by reason of the default of the makers of or other prior parties to the obligation, the plaintiff after the payment of it by him aforesaid had to place the note in the hands of an attorney for collection, as he alleges in the notice for judgment was done, he was entitled to recover judgment against the makers of and prior parties to the obligation for such an amount of expense incurred by him of costs of collection or attorney's fee as the contract when properly construed provides for. For this reason also the court below was right in refusing to allow the plea under consideration to be filed.

[6-8] 4. Was there error in the action of the court below in sustaining the general objection of the plaintiff to special plea No. 4 set forth in the statement preceding this opinion?

This question must be answered in the negative.

This plea is, in substance, the same as special plea No. 1 above mentioned, except that it alleges that the plaintiff knew of the suretyship alleged at the time the note was executed, and that the plaintiffs in error were in truth merely indorsers of the note. While there is much conflict among the authorities on the subject, the prevailing rule seems to be that as between the parties liable upon a note having knowledge of their true relations one to another, parol evidence is admissible to show such true relationship regardless of where the signatures appear on the note, whether as maker or indorsers and regardless of the order of sequence of the indorsements. 8 Cyc. (K) pp. 262, 263; 3 R. C. L., § 338, p. 1123. And by statute with us (subsection 68 of section 2841a of the Negotiable Instrument Law), it is provided as follows:

"As respects one another, indorsers are liable prima facie in the order in which they indorse; but evidence is admissible to show that as between or among themselves they have agreed otherwise."

The plea under consideration would therefore have been a good plea if it had contained the further allegation that the plaintiff in the court below and the plaintiffs in error had agreed at the time of their execution or indorsement of the note that they should be jointly liable as sureties for the true makers and principal obligors, or allegations to that effect. The plea, however, contains no such allegation, and it is fatally defective because of the lack of such allegation. The plea does allege that the "plaintiff knew at the time that these defendants were only * * * jointly liable with him," and that "the plaintiff is only entitled to recover the pro rata amount due by these defendants as indorsers, because each indorser assumes the same liability as every other." But this is a mere conclusion of law and an erroneous one. The long and universally established rule at common law is that " * * * the liability of indorsers, in the absence of special agreement, is successive and not joint." 3 R. C. L., § 349, p. 1135. This rule has become a part of our statute law as aforesaid (subsection 68 of section 2841a of the Code). It appears from the note in suit, as aforesaid, that the plaintiff is the last indorser thereof, except the payees named in the note. There is no allegation in the plea under consideration that the plaintiff indorsed the note prior to the signing of it by the plaintiffs in error. Hence, taking the allegation of the plea to be true that the plaintiffs in error were mere indorsers of the note, still on the face of the record they were prior indorsers to the plaintiff. And in the absence of any allegation in the plea of an actual agreement between the parties that their liability should be otherwise, the prima facie order of liability aforesaid, now fixed by statute with us, negatives the conclusion of the plea and renders it bad.

[8, 19] 5. Was there error in the action of the court below in entering the judgment against the plaintiffs in error by a nunc pro tunc order?

This question must be answered in the affirmative.

As laid down by the authorities on the subject which are relied on by the plaintiff in the court below:

"There are two classes of cases in which it has been held proper to enter judgments and decrees nunc pro tunc. The first class embraces those cases in which the suitors have done all in their power to place the cause in a condition to be decided by the court, but in which, owing to the delay of the court, no final judgment has been entered. The second class embraces those cases in which judgment though pronounced by the court, have, from accident or mistake of the officers of the court, never been entered on the records of the court." Note in 4 Am. St. Rep. at pages 828-830.

See, to same effect, Freeman on Judgments (4th Ed.) § 57.

The order in the instant case must be sustained, if at all, as having been entered in the first class of cases above mentioned. In such class of cases the court uses the papers and proceedings and evidence in the case, as the same existed at the time to which the order or decree is proposed to relate back, as the basis of its action, and acts on such record at the subsequent time when the motion for the nunc pro tunc order or decree is made. The court enters "now for then" such order or decree as it finds from such record the party moving for the nunc pro tunc order was "then" entitled to.

It will be at once perceived that such practice, if generally pursued, would greatly tend to destroy that confidence which is, and of right ought to be, reposed in the verity of judgments. Accordingly the authorities hold that "the power to affect their operation or change their import by judgments or orders nunc pro tunc should be exercised with caution and circumspection" (15 R. C. L. § 63, p. 622); and we find it laid down by the very authorities relied on by the plaintiff that "no case could be ranked among the first class in which the delay to render or enter judgment was imputable to any negligence or even misapprehension of the parties" (Freeman on Judgments, § 57); and that the practice of entering such judgments in the first class of cases was confined "chiefly, if not exclusively, to those cases where, after trial and submission of a case, one of the parties died. * * * That "as the suitor, who brought his action on to trial and caused it to be heard and submitted, had manifestly been guilty of no laches, the court protected him from any prejudice he might suffer by the death of his adversary after such submission and instead of permitting the action to abate, directed the judgment to be given effect, of necessity, as far back as the day of submission." Id. § 57. In the note in 4 Am. St. Rep., supra, at page 830, it is also said, it is true, that while the cases in which nunc pro tunc judgments are ordered without any judgment actually rendered by the court nearly always arise from the death of one of the parties, yet "they are not always restricted to that cause." But the only other character of cases cited in which such a judgment has been entered is that of Springfield v. Worcester, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 52, where, "while judgment was suspended to permit a hearing of reserved questions of law, the statute upon which the action was brought was repealed without a saving clause. * * * Under these circumstances, the court ordered a judgment to be entered as of a day prior to the date of the repeal of the statute."

[11] But the better rule seems to be that in such case the court had no jurisdiction to enter such a nunc pro tunc order. 15 R. C. L. § 63, p. 622. And as to the need of nunc pro tunc judgments or decrees to protect suitors from prejudice they might otherwise suffer by the death of adversaries that was met at common law by the fiction of making judgments bear date as of the first day of the term, if the case was so matured on docket that judgment might have been entered on that day, upon the theory that the entire term of court is in contemplation of law but one day. 15 R. C. L. § 57, pp. 617, 618. This fiction of the law has been long regulated by statute with us. Section 3567 of the Code; 2 Barton's Chy. Pr. pp. 917, 918, 928; Burks' Pl. & Pr. p. 607. Prior to the amendment of section 3567 aforesaid, by Acts of 1897-98, p. 507 (subject to certain statutory provisions concerning the docketing thereof in order to affect purchasers for valuable consideration without notice), the lien of a judgment entered in court in a cause on docket and so matured that judgment might have been rendered on the first day of the term, although entered after the commencement of the term, related back to the first day of the term. But since such amendment such statute has provided that—

"The lien of a judgment shall in no case relate back to a day or other time prior to that on or at which the judgment was rendered."

See 2 Pollard's Code, 1904, § 3567, and note and authorities there cited.

In view of the history of the subject and of the last-mentioned statutory provision, we are of opinion that, whatever may be true of other jurisdictions, with us the courts no longer possess the power to enter nunc pro tunc judgments in cases falling within the first class, but only possess such power in cases falling within the second class above mentioned. That is to say, we are of opinion that with us "the office of a judgment nunc pro tunc is to record some act of the court done at a former time which was not then carried into the record, and the power of the court to make such entries is restricted to placing upon the record evidence of judicial action which has been actually taken. It may be used to make the record speak the truth, but not to make it speak what it did not speak but ought to have spoken. If the court has not rendered a judgment that it might or should have rendered, * * * it has no power to remedy these errors or omissions by ordering the entry nunc pro tunc of a proper judgment. * * * In all cases" (in this state, certainly since said statute of the Acts of 1897-98 was enacted) "the exercise of the power to enter judgment nunc pro tunc presupposes the actual rendition of a judgment and a mere right to a judgment will not furnish the basis for such an entry." 15 R. C. L. § 64, pp. 622, 623.

[12] The judgment under review was therefore erroneous and must be reversed.

This being the only error we find in the record, it might be cured by entry of the same judgment by us to take effect as of the date on which it was in fact entered by the court below. But in view of the fact that the plaintiffs in error claim to have several substantial defenses attempted to be set up by the special pleas aforesaid and of the fact that the defects in such pleas are formal, we feel that the plaintiffs in error should have an opportunity to amend such pleas and thus properly present such defenses to the plaintiff's demand, should they be so advised. We shall therefore grant a new trial of the case.

Having reached the above conclusion, it becomes necessary for us to refer to certain questions in connection with the attorney's fee provision in the note in suit, which are raised in the brief for the plaintiff (the defendant in error), and, also, to pass upon the proper construction which should be given to the provisions in the note in suit on the subject of the costs of collection and the attorney's fee therein mentioned about which question is also raised in the brief for plaintiff; since both subjects are likely to give rise to the same questions on a new trial.

[13] 6. The first questions next above referred to are whether the defense, that the amount claimed by a plaintiff as attorney's fee under the obligation sued on and provided for therein is unreasonable in amount or unconscionable, can be made by special plea under section 3299 of the Code? And, if so, how the issue made by the plea should be tried, whether by the court without or with a jury?

Section 3299 aforesaid, so far as material, provides as follows:

"In any action on a contract, the defendant may file a plea, alleging any such failure in the consideration of the contract, or fraud in its procurement, or any such breach of any warranty to him of the title or the soundness of personal property, for the price or value whereof he entered into the contract, or any other matter as would entitle him either to recover damages at law from the plaintiff, * * * or to relief in equity, in whole or in part, against the obligation of the contract; * * * and * * * alleging the amount to which he is entitled by reason of the matters contained in the plea. Every such plea shall be verified by affidavit."

We are of opinion that the defense in question can be made by such plea, although there is no necessity therefor. Where the contract in suit is not under seal and the defendant seeks no recovery of any excess over the plaintiff's demand, the defense can be set up under the general issue of non-assumpsit, if the action be one in assumpsit (Burks' Pl. & Pr. § 739, pp. 448-452), and the issue made by a general denial of the facts alleged in the notice in the case in judgment is not less comprehensive.

The connection of the language of the statute is such that the words "or any other matter" do not refer to matters of the same kind previously mentioned in the statute except in one particular, namely, in the particular that they must contain the feature of being "matters directly connected with and injuries growing out of the contract sued on." American Mang. Co. v. Va. Mang. Co., 91 Va. 272, at pages 281, 282, 21 S. E. 466, at page 467. As plainly set forth in the statute itself, they are "any other matter as would entitle him [the defendant] to recover damages at law from the plaintiff * * * or to relief in equity, in whole or in part, against the obligation of the contract." (Italics supplied.) That the matters allowed to be pleaded under such statute must be such as would entitle the defendant to the recovery or relief mentioned against the obligation of the contract sued on is, plainly, the only restrictive meaning which is imposed by the ejusdem generis rule, when that rule is properly applied to the words "any other matter." Such rule, as said by this court in Commonwealth v. Werth, 116 Va. at page 607, 82 S. E. at page 695, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1263, "is only a rule of construction, and intended to throw light on a statute of otherwise doubtful import, and has no application where the language of the statute plainly manifests a contrary purpose. In such case the obvious intention of the Legislature must be given effect rather than defeated by the misapplication of a rule." The language of the statute under consideration, beginning with the words "or any other matter," etc., was not in the statute when the preceding portion of it was first enacted. Such language was added by Act of March, 1873 (Acts 1872-73, p. 196), so that the purpose of the statute could be fully accomplished. That purpose plainly is to allow all matters in controversy between the plaintiff and defendant arising out of the same cause of action—i. e., all matters of recoupment—to be disposed of in one action at law, so as to avoid the necessity of a separate suit having to be brought by the defendant, whether at law or in equity, to determine any such matter. American Mang. Co. v. Va. Mang. Co., supra, 91 Va. 272, at page 282, 21 S. E. 466; 1 Barton's Law Pr. p. 514 et seq.; 4 Minor's Inst. 706 et seq.

[14] If defense by way of special plea under section 3299 of the Code be adopted, the plea should allege the amount to the extent of which the defendant claims the attorney's fee in question is unreasonable or unconscionable, and should also allege the facts on which such claim is based with sufficient detail and certainty to apprise the plaintiff of the nature of the defense and to enable the court on the facts being found or admitted, to decide whether the matter relied on constitutes a valid claim to the relief sought. And the plea should be verified by affidavit.

[15] As to the procedure upon the plea: The procedure should be the same as upon a plea under such statute of any other matter pleadable thereunder. If the issue upon the plea is such that the facts pleaded are admitted, the sufficiency of the defense, including the determination of what amount should be recovered as an attorney's fee, is for the determination of the judge. If the issue upon the plea is one of fact, that issue must be tried by jury, subject to such proper instruction as may be given by the judge including instruction as to what amount may be recovered as an attorney's fee under such a state of facts as may be found by the jury to exist, unless all matters of fact as well as of law are submitted for decision to the judge under the statute in such case made and provided or by consent of parties, in which latter case the determination of the amount recoverable as a reasonable attorney's fee, as well as of the facts in the case, is for the judge.

In other words, in every case, the facts being admitted or found, the determination of what may be recovered as an attorney's fee under a provision in the obligation in suit creating the obligation of payment of such a fee, is for the judge of the trial court in an action at law, and, of course, is also for such judge where the question arises in a suit in equity.

[16] Further, the judge, upon the issue being made as to what amount is recoverable under the attorney's fee provision aforesaid, should allow only such an amount as may be reasonable, considering the services of the attorney actually performed in and about the collection of the debt in view of the customary charges of the profession in the locality for such services, not exceeding the maximum amount stipulated in the obligation. And where the services of an attorney are not in fact employed by the holder of the obligation, and the latter party seeks such recovery, no recovery should be allowed of any attorney's fee. Bank v. Wood, 125 Tenn. 6, 140 S. W. 31; 2 Va. Law Reg. (N. S.) 321; Triplett v. Bank, 121 Va. 189, 92 S. E. 897; Colley v. Summers, etc., Co., 119 Va. 439, 89 S. E. 906, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 375.

The question remaining for our consideration, as likely to arise upon a new trial of the case, is as follows:

[17] 7. What is the proper construction of the obligation in the note in suit on the subject of the attorney's fee?

The obligation of the note is in the following form:

"The makers and indorsers of this note hereby * * * agree to pay costs of collection or ten per cent. attorney's fee in case payment shall not be made at maturity." (Italics supplied.)

"Costs of collection" refers, not to costs of suit, which are recoverable by law, but to the "attorney's fee" for services in making or attempting to make collection. 3 R. C. L. § 83, pp. 895, 896. The proper construction of the provision in the note under consideration therefore is that the makers and indorsers of the note agreed to pay the lawful holder thereof such reasonable attorney's fee as such holder may actually incur for services of attorney in making collection thereof, not exceeding the 10 per cent. maximum stipulated, payment of the note not having been made by the former in accordance with their obligation. Such an agreement is the same in substance as if it had been to pay such reasonable attorney's fee for collection actually incurred by the lawful holder of the note, up to but not exceeding 10 per cent. of the amount of the debt due to the holder of the note, principal and interest, in case of non-payment of the note as aforesaid at maturity. The rule in this state is, in effect, that such a contract is valid and enforceable to the extent of a reasonable attorney's fee, incurred as aforesaid, not exceeding the percentage named in the note. Colley v. Summers, etc., Co., supra, 119 Va. 439, 89 S. E. 906, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 375; Triplett v. Bank, supra, 121 Va. 189, 92 S. E. 897.

Because of the error of the court below in entering the judgment under review nunc pro tunc, the same will be set aside and annulled, with leave to the plaintiffs in error to amend their pleadings or to plead anew, and a new trial may be had by the plaintiffs in error, if they are so advised, not in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion.

Reversed and remanded.

(125 Va. 546)

BARNETT et al. v. CLOYD'S EX'RS.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨172—VENDEE IN POSSESSION ON DEFERRED PAYMENTS LIABLE FOR INTEREST.

Where an executory contract for the sale of land fixes a date for completion and is silent as to interest on unpaid purchase money, and also as to when possession shall be taken, the vendee, if he takes possession prior to completion of the contract without any new consideration, must pay interest on the unpaid purchase money from the date on which he takes possession, and the mere fact that the vendor may subsequent to the contract assent to such advanced taking of possession does not alter the rule.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨172—LIABILITY FOR INTEREST ON DEFERRED PAYMENTS.

Where a contract for sale of land mentions no precise dates for payment of deferred installments of purchase money, and makes such due dates dependent on the doing of some act by the vendor for the performance of which no time is limited, and the vendee is let into possession prior to the doing of such act, either by the contract itself or the subsequent assent of the vendor, the vendee must pay interest on the unpaid purchase money.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨172—LIABILITY FOR INTEREST ON UNPAID INSTALLMENTS.

Where a contract for sale of land fixes times for payment of deferred installments and provides that payment shall not be made until the vendor has performed some act for perfecting title, the vendee being let into possession must pay interest on the installments from the date of payment fixed, notwithstanding the vendor has failed to perfect the title, and the only way for the vendee to avoid payment of interest is by depositing the money in a bank or otherwise, and notifying the vendor of such deposit.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨172—LIABILITY FOR INTEREST ON DEFERRED PAYMENTS.

Courts of equity will no more than courts of law make contracts for the parties, and where a contract for the sale of land fixes a date for the taking of possession by the vendee, and a date for payment of the purchase money, and is silent as to interest on payments or deferred payments, the vendee is under no obligation to pay interest on deferred payments.

5. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⇨16—RELIEF REFUSED FOR INEQUITABLE RESULTS OF ENFORCEMENT.

One who seeks the aid of a court of equity to enforce specific performance of a contract submits himself to the rule that he who asks equity must do equity, and if the contract sought to be enforced was entered into by the defendant vendor, under a misapprehension which was induced by the purchaser, so that it would be inequitable to enforce the same, relief will be refused unless it can be granted on conditions that will obviate the inequality.

6. EVIDENCE ⇨434(11)—PAROL EVIDENCE TO SHOW FRAUD ADMISSIBLE IN ACTION FOR SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Where, in a suit to enforce specific performance of a contract to sell lands, defendants asserted that the contract was entered into by their testator, the vendor, under a misapprehension caused by the purchasers, parol evidence is admissible to show the existence of the misapprehension, and that it was induced by the purchasers.

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER —172—SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE DENIED WITHOUT PAYMENT OF INTEREST ON DEFERRED PAYMENTS.

In suit to compel specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, embodied in an option contained in a lease, which provided for payment on or about a fixed date of a portion of the purchase money and payment of the balance thereafter, held, that specific performance will not be enforced without payment by the purchasers of interest on deferred payments where they went into possession as lessees and continued the possession on exercising the option and making the down payment, and the vendor signed the contract under a misapprehension as to interest brought about by one of the purchasers.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Montgomery County.

Suit by one Barnett and another against Cloyd's Executors. From a decree for defendants, complainants appeal. Affirmed.

This is a suit in equity which was instituted in the court below by the appellants, the vendees, to compel the specific performance by appellees, the vendors, of a certain executory contract of sale of certain real estate.

The real estate consists of a valuable farm, with dwelling house and other improvements thereon giving it a considerable rental value.

The contract of sale, in so far as it is embodied in writing, is an option to purchase said farm, and is contained in one clause of a lease in writing of said farm by appellee as parties of the first part to appellants as parties of the second part, dated October 25, 1914, for a period of one year next ensuing, expiring with October 25, 1915.

The contract of sale, as set forth in such writing, is as follows:

"For and in consideration of this lease the said parties of the first part do agree with the said parties of the second part that they may have the exclusive right to purchase the said property at any time that they may elect to do so until the first of September, 1915, for the stipulated sum of thirty thousand ($30,000.00) dollars, on terms of not less than $5,000 cash, and a sum of not less than $12,000 dollars by April 1st, 1917, and the balance not later than three years additional time from April 1st, 1917."

The vendee paid the $5,000 cash payment on August 31, 1915, and the contract of sale which the bill seeks to enforce is said clause in writing and certain additional cotemporaneous parol agreements not embodied in the writing aforesaid, namely: An agreement by the vendors fixing October 26, 1915, for the completion of the contract of sale on their part by delivery of a deed conveying the farm to vendees, and an agreement by the vendees to execute and deliver as of the same date their bonds evidencing their obligation for the deferred payments of the purchase money and also to execute a deed of trust conveying said farm as security for the payment of such bonds.

The vendors (the appellees) admit that the terms just mentioned were parts of the cotemporaneous parol contract of sale which were not reduced to writing, and they claim that there was a further portion of such agreement which was not expressly embodied in said writing, namely, that the vendees were to pay and said bonds were to provide for the payment of legal interest on said deferred payments of purchase money from said date, October 26, 1915, fixed for the completion of the contract as aforesaid, and they claim also that such writing should in this suit be construed by a court of equity as if it did contain such an express stipulation. The vendees (the appellants) take issue upon these positions of the appellees, and they constitute the issues in the cause.

The further material facts in the case, as clearly established by a preponderance of the evidence, are as follows:

At the time said lease was delivered the vendors did not regard the clause therein on the subject of the option aforesaid as intended to set forth the complete contract between the parties on the latter subject; and the vendors unquestionably bona fide believed and understood at that time that an agreement had been reached by them with the vendees that the latter would pay interest on the deferred payments from October 26, 1915, as aforesaid, and that said option clause in the lease, although not thus expressly worded, would be construed and acted upon by the vendees as having that meaning; that Mr. Barnett, one of the vendees and appellants, at that time so expressly assured the vendors and stated to one of the vendors that that was also his understanding of the contract of sale; and that the vendors were induced to deliver the lease and option in the form it is by such assurance from Mr. Barnett.

Mr. Simpson, the other appellant, in his testimony claims that the subject of interest was never mentioned between the vendors and vendees in the negotiations which culminated in the lease and option aforesaid; that he did not know of the belief and understanding aforesaid with which the vendors delivered the written agreement, or of the assurance which his covendee, Mr. Barnett, gave on that occasion as aforesaid; and hence he claims that the bare terms of the lease must govern the aforesaid subject of interest. But the preponderance of the evidence establishes the fact that Mr. Simpson is mistaken in his recollection. That the subject of interest was never mentioned in the negotiations aforesaid; the preponderance of the evidence being that it was mentioned and expressly stipulated for by the vendors in the negotiations aforesaid with Mr. Simpson himself.

The decree under review granted the prayer of the appellants and vendees for the specific enforcement of said contract of sale and that the vendors (the appellees) be required to convey said farm to the vendees as of October 26, 1915, only upon condition that the vendees shall submit to the payment of interest on the deferred payments aforesaid, from October 26, 1915, on the first deferred payment which is now past due, and shall include obligation therefor in the bond evidencing and in the deed of trust securing the payment of the second deferred payment not yet due.

H. C. Tyler, of East Radford, and Harless & Colhoun, of Christianburg, for appellants.

H. C. Gilmer and John S. Draper, Jr., both of Pulaski, for appellees.

SIMS, J. (after stating the facts as above).

[1] 1. There is a well and long established rule in equity that where an executory contract of sale of real estate fixes a date for the completion of the contract and is silent as to interest on unpaid purchase money and is also silent as to when possession is to be taken by the vendee, if the latter, without any new consideration therefore moving from him, takes possession prior to the completion of the contract, he must pay interest on the unpaid purchase money from the date on which he takes possession. In such case equity, in the absence of any express agreement of the parties on the subject, implies a promise on the part of the vendee to pay such interest. This is done on the ground that the vendee enters into possession and takes the rents and profits, or other benefit of the purchase, before he is entitled thereto under the contract of sale, and ex æquo et bono he should pay interest as aforesaid from such time in compensation for the benefit of possession thus taken in advance of the right thereto under the contract. 39 Cyc. 1630; Seldon v. James, 27 Va. (6 Rand.) 465, 470; Brockenborough v. Blythe, 3 Leigh (30 Va.) 619, 638; Fludyer v. Cocker, 12 Ves. Jr., 25; Sugden on Vendors (14th Ed., 8th Am. Ed.) §§ 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, et seq., pp. 314-317 et seq., and English and American cases cited; 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) pp. 167, 168; 29 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, pp. 707-709, and cases cited; Oliver v. Hallam, 1 Grat. (42 Va.) 298; Bailey v. James, 11 Grat. (52 Va.) 468, 62 Am. Dec. 659. The mere circumstance that the vendor subsequent to the contract of sale may assent to such advance taking of possession does not alter the rule; for in such case, there being no new consideration moving from the vendee to the vendor to support such assent, equity will not imply that it was given for naught.

[2] The rule just mentioned has been extended by the authorities to cover cases in which the contract of sale mentions no precise date or dates for the payment of the deferred payments of the purchase money, and makes such due date or dates dependent upon the doing of some act by the vendor for the performance of which no time is limited by the contract of sale, and the vendee is let into the possession of the estate prior to the doing of such act, either by the contract of sale itself or by subsequent assent of the vendor, and fails to make the payments on the dates prescribed therefor by the contract. Sugden on Vendors, supra, § 4, p. 316; Oliver's Ex'r v. Hallam's Adm'r, 1 Grat. (42 Va.) 298; Cohen v. Jenkins, 100 S. E. 678, decided at this term of court.

[3] The same rule has been alike extended to apply to cases in which the contract of sale fixes the date for the taking of possession by the vendee and mentions certain dates for the payment of the deferred payments of purchase money, where the same contract, however, also contains the additional provision that the payments shall not be demanded by the vendor until he has done some act for the performance of which no time is limited by the contract of sale (Brockenborough v. Blythe's Ex'rs, 3 Leigh [30 Va.] 619); and also where the contingency arises after such contract of some difficulty with respect to the title, and the vendee, having taken, continues to hold possession of the estate notwithstanding the difficulties as to title pending their removal, and fails to make the payments on the dates prescribed therefor by the contract (Seldon v. James, 6 Rand. [27 Va.] 465, 470, 471; Hundley v. Lyons, 5 Munf. [19 Va.] 342, 7 Am. Dec. 685). In such cases where the act in question is finally performed by the vendor, or the objections to the title prove unsubstantial, it is held that the vendee must pay interest on the deferred payments of purchase money—not from the time of his taking possession of the estate, however, for that would be in contravention of the express contract giving him such right of possession—but from the dates mentioned in the contract of sale for such payments.

In all of the cases above alluded to there occurs a failure of the vendee to make the payments of purchase money at the times at which, when the contract of sale was entered into, they were expected to be made, as either impliedly understood by the parties or as expressly stipulated in the contract of sale. That is to say, in all of such cases the vendee is in default in making such payments, and he is held bound to pay interest on such payments from the time of such default. Further—

In the cases to which the rule above mentioned is applicable, it is well settled that the delay in making title being due to the negligent fault of the vendor will not excuse the vendee from paying interest as aforesaid, and that the only way of escape for the vendee from the payment of such interest is for him to set aside, by deposit in bank or otherwise, the money to meet the deferred payments, and notify the vendor that he has done so. Sugden on Vendors, supra, § 3, p. 317, and authorities cited. But if the delay be due to the willful default of the vendor, such rule does not apply. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 162 Ill. 632, 44 N. E. 823, 35 L. R. A. 167.

[4] 2. But the courts will not in equity, any more than at law, make contracts for parties, and the rule in equity above adverted to has no application where the contract of sale fixes a date for the taking of possession by the vendee and a date or dates for the payment of the purchase money and is silent as to interest on such payment or payments, and the vendee does not take possession prior to the date fixed therefor, and does not fail to make the payments on the dates prescribed therefor, by the contract. In such case the rule is equally well settled in equity as at law that no obligation of the vendee to pay interest on the deferred payments of purchase money will be implied, nor does such liability for interest arise as damages recoverable by the vendor, except from the date or dates on which the same becomes due and payable in accordance with the terms of the obligation. 22 Cyc. 1536, 1539, 1540; 39 Cyc. 1569, 1572, 1573; 16 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) 991, 992, 1002, 1041; Buchanan v. Leeright, 11 Va. (1 Hen. & M.) 211; Chapman's Adm'r v. Sherherd's Adm'r, 65 Va. (24 Grat.) 383; Kent's Adm'r v. Kent's Adm'r, 69 Va. (28 Grat.) 845; Roberts' Adm'r v. Cocke, 69 Va. (28 Grat.) 207; note to 68 Va. Rep. Ann. 586 et seq.; McVeigh's Ex'r v. Howard, 87 Va. 599, 13 S. E. 31; Morley v. Lake Shore Ry. Co., 146 U. S. 168, 13 Sup. Ct. 54, 36 L. Ed. 925; Minaud v. Beans, 64 Pa. 411; McKenna v. Sterrett, 6 Watts (Pa.) 162; Nettleton v. Caryl, 14 Pa. Super. Ct. 443.

[5-7] 3. It is unnecessary, however, for us to determine, in the case before us, whether the contract of sale falls within the rule first or the rule last above mentioned. It may be conceded that in accordance with the evidence in the record the mind of none of the parties ever assented to a contract of sale which was silent as to the date when the vendees were to take possession; that the silence of the written contract of sale on the subject of interest was not due to a mutual mistake of all of the parties, since Simpson certainly intended that it should be silent on that subject; and that the contract of sale as embodied in writing, when construed along with the lease of which it was a part, must be held to have fixed a date for the taking of possession by the vendees as purchasers, namely, October 26, 1915, being the day immediately following the end of the demise under the lease. But this would not be conclusive of the case in favor of the appellants.

It is too well settled to need any extended statement that a plaintiff who seeks the aid of a court of equity to enforce specific performance of a contract submits himself to the rule that he who asks equity must do equity; and that, if the contract sought to be enforced was entered into by the defendant under a misapprehension which was induced by the plaintiff so that it would be inequitable and unfair to the defendant to enforce it in accordance with its strict terms, the court will refuse the relief asked, unless the granting of it can be accomplished with conditions which will obviate that result—in which case the granting of the relief upon such conditions is the proper course for the court to pursue. And parol evidence is admissible to show the existence of such misapprehension and that it was induced by the plaintiff. 2 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. (3d Ed.) § 860; 4 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. (3d Ed.) §§ 1404, 1405; Willard v. Tayloe, 8 Wall. 557, 19 L. Ed. 501, 504; Halsey v. Montelro, 92 Va. 589, 24 S. E. 258; Waterman on Spec. Perf. of Contracts, § 158, pp. 208, 209, § 361, pp. 484, 485, § 367, p. 491; So. Ry. Co. v. Franklin, 96 Va. 708, 32 S. E. 485, 44 L. R. A. 297.

As said in 2 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. § 860, supra:

"Wherever the defendant's mistake was, either intentionally or not, induced or made probable or even possible, by the acts or omissions of the plaintiff, then, on the plainest principles of justice, such error prevents a specific performance of the agreement"—in accordance with its precise terms.

And again in the same section of the learned work just quoted, it is said:

"It is * * a well-settled rule, that in suits for the specific enforcement of agreements, even when written, the defendant may by some means of parol evidence show that through the mistake of * * either of the parties, the writing does not express the real agreement, or that the agreement was entered into through a mistake as to the subject matter or as to its terms."

These statements of the law are especially applicable in the case before us, as it appears from the statement of facts preceding this opinion that the appellants by the positions taken in their bill and in their testimony admit that the option clause in the lease was not intended to embody all the terms in detail of the entire contract of sale; that the appellees, at the time they delivered the lease and option in writing, were unquestionably under the bona fide belief that such written contract was not intended to embody all the terms of sale; that the detail as to the obligation of the appellants to pay interest was understood and agreed to by the appellants notwithstanding the language of such writing; and that appellees were induced to deliver the contract in that shape by the assurance of one of appellants to one of the appellees, given at the time, that that was also his understanding and construction of the contract. And such being the case, even if the contract as embodied in writing would have been in itself equitable and fair, had it been freely entered into and delivered by the appellees without misapprehension or mistake as to its nature or consequences, it is manifest that it would work a great hardship and injustice upon appellees to enforce it in accordance with its strict terms as written. Even if the appellant Simpson was not aware before the suit was brought of the assurance aforesaid given appellees by his associate vendee, by which the appellees were induced to deliver the contract in writing in its existing form, it would be most inequitable and unjust to allow him to reap the fruit of such assurance without being required to make it good by living up to it. That is amply sufficient ground to sustain the decree under review in so far as it affects the appellant Simpson; and, of course, the appellant Barnett, who gave such assurance, has no standing in a court of equity to ask for the enforcement of a contract at variance with that assurance.

The decree under review will therefore be Affirmed.

(125 Va. 635)

COHEN v. JENKINS.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS § 85(2)—BAR OF JUDGMENT ON FIRM DEBT.

Under Code 1904, § 2933, a judgment against two copartners recovered in 1896 is barred by 1918 as to the one remaining in the state, where the original execution was returned no property found, and a second execution issued in 1900 was never returned, notwithstanding the other copartner removed to and was residing in a foreign state when the second execution was issued; there being no attempt on the part of the remaining copartner to obstruct or delay collection of the judgment.

2. MORTGAGES § 424—ENFORCEMENT DENIED AFTER 20 YEARS' DELAY.

Twenty years' delay in enforcing a deed of trust after accrual of right of action will bar the same, Code 1904, § 2934, making such delay an absolute bar to any proceeding to enforce a deed of trust or mortgage.

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS § 85(2)—ABSENCE OF DEBTOR DOES NOT BAR RUNNING OF STATUTE AGAINST MORTGAGE.

The absence of a debtor from the state creates no obstruction of the right to enforce a deed of trust on property situated within the state, and hence will not, under Code 1904, § 2933, excuse the effect of 20 years' delay in enforcement which is made a bar by section 2935 to any action for enforcing such obligation.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER § 172—LIABILITY FOR INTEREST ON DEFERRED PAYMENTS.

Where a purchaser went into possession under an agreement that a deferred payment should be made when title to the property had been satisfactorily cleared, held, that the purchaser who retained the money was bound to pay interest on the amount from the time he went into possession, particularly where the title was marketable at the time he went into possession.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Tazewell County.

Suit by W. E. Jenkins against one Cohen. There was a decree for complainant, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. Powell Royall, of Tazewell, and L. J. Holland, of Bluefield, W. Va., for appellant.

Butts & Minter, of Logan, W. Va., and T. C. Bowen, of Tazewell, for appellee.

PRENTIS, J. W. E. Jenkins, claiming title to a storehouse and lot in Pocahontas, Va., contracted in writing to sell it to B. M. Cohen for $4,000, of which $3,000 was to be paid in cash on the day after the council of the town of Pocahontas granted Cohen a license to sell whisky in the building, and $1,000 to be paid "when the title to said property had been satisfactorily cleared." The liquor license was granted to Cohen, and Jenkins and his wife, on June 15, 1914, conveyed the property to him, the deed acknowledging the payment of $3,000, part of the purchase price in cash, and as to the balance of the purchase money using this language:

"The sum of one thousand dollars, which is yet to be paid by the party of the second part to the parties of the first part (when said parties of the first part shall have satisfactorily cleared and remedied the title to the lot of land herein described from all judgments, liens, claims, imperfections and defects). * * *

It provides for immediate possession by the vendee and also contains this language:

"It is understood and agreed by and between all the parties hereto that there are certain judgments and trust deeds which are at present liens upon the property described, and that there are certain defects in the title of the said W. E. Jenkins, all of which said parties of the first part covenant and agree to satisfactorily remedy and cure within the next — months from the date, and in the meantime said party of the second part is withholding the sum of one thousand dollars ($1,000.00) of the purchase money on said property until the parties of the first part shall have complied with this covenant and agreement and upon such compliance said party of the second part is to immediately pay the said male grantor the said $1,000.00 balance of said purchase money as aforesaid."

The vendee took possession of the property, conducted the liquor business there for two years, and since then has rented it to a tenant for $50 per month. He has always claimed, however, that there were defects and imperfections in the title and therefore has refused to pay the balance of the purchase money due, and the vendor instituted this suit therefor alleging the nonresidence of the vendee, and praying that an attachment in equity be levied on the property which he had conveyed.

The cause was referred to a commissioner, who reported that the title is marketable, that the property is free of liens, and that the vendee should pay the balance of the purchase money with interest from the date of the conveyance, June 15, 1914. From this decree this appeal was allowed the vendee.

[1] The liens which the vendee insists existed at the time of the conveyance, and still exist, are two old deeds of trust and certain judgments against W. E. Jenkins rendered from 1893 to 1896. The commissioner reports that none of these judgments are now liens, that in all cases where executions were issued they have been returned more than 20 years and are hence barred by the statute; that the last of them was barred during the year 1916. The only one of these judgments as to which any particulars are given is that of Spragins Buck & Co., against F. E. Catlett and W. E. Jenkins, merchants and partners trading as Catlett & Jenkins, recovered at the December term, 1896, docketed December 30, 1896, for $206.50, with interest from January 11, 1896, and $8.40 costs. Execution was issued on this judgment December 23, 1896, and returned "no property found," January 22, 1897. A second execution was issued May 5, 1900, which never has been returned. The commissioner reported this judgment barred, and in our opinion there can be no doubt that it was barred long before this suit was instituted in January, 1918. In addition to this, it further appears that on May 28, 1918, Jenkins paid Spragins Buck & Co. $50 in full settlement of all claims.

It is claimed that because F. E. Catlett, who was one of the judgment debtors, removed to West Virginia in the year 1901, where he died about June or July of that year, therefore the statute ceased to run against this judgment from the time of such removal, and McClanahan v. N. & W. Ry. Co., 118 Va. 388, 87 S. E. 731, is cited. That case and the doctrine there announced does not support this contention, because there it was the title and interest of the judgment debtor who had removed from the state, against which the lien was asserted, while here there is no claim that Catlett has any title to or interest in this land which can be subjected to the lien of this judgment. It is the title and interest of W. E. Jenkins, acquired long after the date of the judgment, which it is here claimed can be subjected, and there is no intimation that Jenkins in any way or at any time ever obstructed the collection of this judgment within the meaning of section 2933 of the Code, as construed in the case referred to.

That section (2933) contains this proviso:

"But this section shall not avail against any other person than him so obstructing, notwithstanding another might have been jointly sued with him if there had been no such obstruction."

As to this proviso this is said in the case of McClanahan v. N. & W. Ry. Co., supra:

"Had the sentence stopped with the words 'so obstructing,' the argument in their favor would certainly have been stronger; but it does not stop there, but proceeds, 'notwithstanding another might have been jointly sued with him if there had been no such obstruction,' which shows clearly, we think, that the Legislature had in mind a suit in which there was more than one defendant, one of whom left the commonwealth, we will say, and by so departing obstructed the plaintiff in the prosecution of his right, while the other remained in the commonwealth and did no act to obstruct the remedy as to himself."

If we correctly interpret this language, the opinion in that case accords with the view which we have just expressed.

[2, 3] As to the two deeds of trust, it appears that the right to enforce one of them accrued on the 10th day of May, 1894, and hence was barred on the 10th day of May, 1914, and the right to enforce the other accrued on the 14th day of May, 1895, and hence was barred on the 14th day of May, 1915. Code, § 2935. It is claimed as to these deeds of trust that one Isaac Katzen, who executed one of them, moved out of the state several years ago and then returned, and that Catlett, who joined in executing one of them, moved to West Virginia, as above stated, and McClanahan v. N. & W. Ry. Co., supra, is relied upon.

In our opinion this contention is unsound. The statute, Code, § 2935, provides that no deed of trust or mortgage hereafter given to secure the payment of money, and no lien hereafter reserved to secure the payment of unpaid purchase money, shall be enforced after 20 years from the time when the right to enforce the same shall have first accrued. This creates an absolute bar to any proceeding for the enforcement of a deed of trust or mortgage after 20 years from the time the right to enforce it accrued (except those executed by a corporation or otherwise expressly excluded by the statute), and the language creating that absolute bar is so clear as to need no elucidation. Section 2933 of the Code, which excludes the time during which a person obstructs a right by leaving the state, etc., has no application to liens created by such deeds of trust or mortgages. The absence of the debtor from the state in such cases creates no obstruction of the right to subject the property to such liens by every way and means which would be available if the debtor were in the state. There is also uncontradicted testimony showing that both of these debts have been paid.

[4] The other question is as to whether the $1,000 deferred purchase money should bear interest. There is some confusion in the authorities, but we do not regard the question as an open one in Virginia.

This is said in Selden v. James, 6 Rand. (27 Va.) [470] 521:

"The appellant was always ready and willing to pay the money, if he could have gotten indemnity. Without stopping to inquire whether he had a right to require such indemnity in an executed contract like this, it is obvious to remark that, according to the best-settled rules, the statement that he was ready and willing to pay is wholly insufficient to protect him from the payment of interest. He was then in possession of the land, receiving the issues and profits; he was also in possession of the money, the price of the land, and it must be a strong and clear case which could protect him, under these circumstances, from paying interest; a case showing that he had a right to retain the money, that he did in fact keep it useless and unproductive by him, and that he gave the other party notice that it was thus unproductive. This is settled in many cases"—referring to Powell v. Martyr, 8 Ves. 146; Sugden on Vendors, p. 319; Brockenbrough v. Blythe's Ex'r, 3 Leigh. (30 Va.) 638; Kershaw v. Kershaw, 22 Law Times Rep. (N. S.) 651.

In Oliver's Ex'r v. Hallam's Adm'r, 1 Grat. (42 Va.) 304 [298], this is held in a case in which no opinion was handed down:

"A vendee put into possession of the land purchased, [is] bound to pay interest on the balance of purchase money unpaid, though, by the contract, the vendor binds himself to make said vendee a good and lawful title to the land before he calls upon him for the unpaid purchase money, or though the vendee's contract is to pay the balance of the purchase money when a good title to the property is made to him."

That case is precisely like this case, and, unless we are prepared to overrule it, is decisive. This rule has existed so long in Virginia as to become a rule of property which we should not now disturb. Barnett v. Cloyd's Ex'rs (this day decided) 100 S. E. 674. It is followed in West Virginia. Steenrod v. Railroad Co., 27 W. Va. 1; Hoard v. Railroad Co., 59 W. Va. 96, 53 S. E. 278, 8 Ann. Cas. 929. The text-writers also generally recognize it. Maupin on Marketable Titles to Real Estate, § 324, p. 766; Warvelle on Vendors, vol. 1 (2d. Ed.) § 180, p. 227.

The inquiry is not as to which party is at fault and therefore to be penalized, but simply what is fair and just to both parties. A vendee put in possession without having paid all of the purchase money promised, as a general rule, in the absence of express contract relieving him from interest, is held not entitled to retain all of the rents, profits, and use of the property and at the same time to be relieved from interest upon the unpaid purchase money of which he also has the use. The rents and profits generally exceed the interest, and this is true in this instance. If he does not desire to pay such interest, his remedy is clearly pointed out. He may, if he wishes to do so, set the money aside by deposit in bank, or otherwise, for the purpose of paying the debt, and notify the creditor that he has done so, and thus, where he is not in default, relieve himself from the payment of interest. If he does not do so, the inference is that he is using the money for his own benefit, and it is therefore held that in good conscience he ought to pay interest thereon. The trial court followed the settled law in Virginia.

Affirmed.

(85 W. Va. 11)

BOARD OF COM'RS OF OHIO COUNTY v. CLEMENS et al. (No. 3777.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Oct. 21, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⇐91—PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ⇐104(1) — ATTORNEY HAVING POWER TO AGREE TO A CONTINUANCE, SURETY IS NOT DISCHARGED THEREFOR.

An attorney at law, employed to prosecute or defend a suit, has implied authority to agree to a continuance thereof, when such continuance is in the interest of his client, or in the attorney's judgment will expedite a hearing, and such continuance is not an extension of the time of payment, and does not discharge a surety.

2. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ⇐59—CONTRACT OF CORPORATION INSURER CONSTRUED IN FAVOR OF OBLIGEE.

Although a voluntary surety is a favorite of the law, and entitled to stand on the strict letter of his contract, the rule of strictissimi juris does not apply to a corporation organized to enter into bonds and undertakings for a profit. Such companies are essentially insurers, and their contracts, being usually expressed in terms prescribed by themselves, should be construed most strongly in favor of the obligee therein.

Error to Circuit Court, Ohio County.

Action by the Board of Commissioners of Ohio County against W. M. Clemens, ex-sheriff, etc., the Citizens' Trust & Guaranty Company of West Virginia, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Citizens' Trust & Guaranty Company of West Virginia brings error. Affirmed.

Hubbard & Hubbard, of Wheeling, for plaintiff in error.

David A. McKee, of Wheeling, for defendant in error.

WILLIAMS, J. The board of commissioners of Ohio county recovered a judgment against W. M. Clemens, ex-sheriff of said county, and the Citizens' Trust & Guaranty Company, his surety, in an action on his official bond, and the surety brings this writ of error, claiming that it should have been discharged from liability, because a continuance of the case for 30 days was taken by agreement between the attorneys for plaintiff and the principal debtor, respectively, without its knowledge or consent.

Defendant Clemens was sheriff of Ohio county from the 1st of January, 1909, to the 31st of December, 1912. After his term of office ended, an audit was made of his accounts by J. H. Otto, under the direction of the state tax commissioner's office, which showed a balance of public funds in his hands due to the board of commissioners of Ohio county, and this action was brought to recover that balance. The items sought to be recovered are 15 per cent. of the fees required to be paid to and collected by the sheriff as county treasurer, commissions improperly deducted on miscellaneous settlements, and interest. The action was begun by notice of motion for judgment.

The Citizens' Trust & Guaranty Company of West Virginia, the surety, filed a special plea on the 23d of September, 1916, admitting its suretyship on the bond sued on, and alleging that, in disregard of its persistent demands upon plaintiff to proceed with due diligence to prosecute such claims as it might have against the sheriff based on said bond, and in disregard of the court's order made on the 25th of May, 1916, referring the cause to a commissioner, and ordering the testimony to be taken and the commissioner's report completed and filed on the first day of the next term, which was the 5th day of September, 1916, plaintiff and the principal defendant agreed before that time, without the surety's knowledge or consent, to defer the taking of testimony until the next October, thus staying the proceedings for more than 30 days.

Neither party requiring a jury and both parties agreeing thereto, all matters of law and fact were submitted to and decided by the court. On the 3d of December, 1917, it heard the cause upon the aforesaid special plea, general replication thereto, the commissioner's report, and exceptions thereto by defendant Clemens, and sustained his exceptions in respect to certain items, and found against the surety on the issue raised by its special plea, and rendered judgment against both principal and surety for $8,196.65, with interest thereon from the 1st of December, 1917, until paid.

After the cause was referred to a commissioner the prosecuting attorney, who was counsel for plaintiff, agreed with counsel representing the sheriff that the taking of testimony might be deferred until October following, for the reason, as then suggested by the attorney for said Clemens, that a great deal of time could be saved by thus allowing time to Mr. Welch, who had been chief deputy for said sheriff, to go over the audit made by the state; that in all probability defendant would admit a great many items therein charged, and thus dispense with the necessity of taking evidence to prove them. The effect of this continuance was to carry the case over the term at which the commissioner had been directed to file his report. The surety insists that the continuance was in effect an extension of time to the principal debtor, and, being granted without its consent, operated to discharge it from liability. We do not think so, for two reasons:

First, because it does not appear that the plaintiff consented, nor that the prosecuting attorney had authority to bind it by an agreement to extend time of payment.

Second, because a different rule respecting liability applies to a surety company, who becomes surety for another for a valuable consideration, than is generally applied to a mere voluntary surety.

[1] The agreement between attorneys for the respective parties to continue the time for taking testimony was apparently for the purpose of expediting the hearing. As counsel for plaintiff, the prosecuting attorney had the right and implied authority to make such an agreement. Thornton on Attorneys at Law, p. 486. Stipulations between opposing counsel, necessary or incidental to the management of the suit, are within the implied authority of the attorney and are binding on his client. 2 R. C. L. 989; 6 C. J. 702. While, generally speaking, an attorney at law has control over the conduct of a suit, and may bind his client by an agreement made in his interest to continue the case, he has no implied power to grant an extension of time of payment, nor will an unauthorized extension by him discharge a surety. Hall v. Presnell, 157 N. C. 290, 72 S. E. 985, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 62, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 129; Jerauld v. Trippett, 62 Ind. 122; Haselton v. Florentine Marble Co. (C. C.) 94 Fed. 701. Moreover, it does not appear that the continuance occasioned any loss to appellant.

[2] A voluntary surety is a favorite of the law, and he is generally entitled to insist on the very letter of his contract. But the doctrine of strictissimi juris does not apply to corporations organized to enter into bonds or undertakings for a profit. Although such companies sometimes call themselves surety companies, their business is essentially that of insurer, and their contracts, being usually expressed in terms prescribed by themselves, should be construed most strongly in favor of the obligee therein. 32 Cyc. 307.

An extension of time will not relieve a surety company on a bond, unless the extension exceeds the time limited in the bond for bringing suit thereon, nor unless the surety company is thereby made to suffer material harm. Philadelphia v. Fidelity, etc., Deposit Co., 231 Pa. 208, 80 Atl. 62, 23 Ann. Cas. 1085, and cases cited in note at page 1087; Brown v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co., 232 Pa. 337, 81 Atl. 410, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 698; Guaranty Co. v. Pressed Brick Co., 191 U. S. 416, 24 Sup. Ct. 142, 48 L. Ed. 242; Hormel & Co. v. American Bonding Co., 112 Minn. 288, 128 N. W. 12, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 513, and numerous cases cited in note; Western Casualty & Co. v. Board of County Commissioners of Muskogee County, (Okla.) 159 Pac. 655, L. R. A. 1917B, 977.

We affirm the judgment.

(85 W. Va. 15)

ROLLYSON v. BOURN et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 21, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ¶8 — COMPLETE AND PERFECT CONTRACT OF SALE OF REALTY ENFORCED.

Specific performance of a complete and perfect contract of sale of real estate will be decreed as a matter of right and of course, upon a proper application thereof, in the absence of conduct or circumstances rendering specific performance inequitable or unjust.

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ¶8—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT IN REFUSING PERFORMANCE NOT ARBITRARY.

The discretion of a trial court to refuse specific performance of a contract for the sale of real estate, on account of defects or circumstances relied upon by way of defense, is a sound and reviewable discretion, not an arbitrary one.

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ¶92(1) — LIENS AND INCUMBRANCES KNOWN TO VENDEE AT TIME OF CONTRACT NO DEFENSE.

In the case of a contract in which time of performance is not made an essential element, and in which there is no stipulation against the existence of incumbrances upon the land, the existence of vendors' and trust deed liens not exceeding the amount of the unpaid purchase money and known to the vendee at the date of the execution of the contract, and reasonable delay in removal thereof by the vendor, acquiesced in by the vendee, do not release the latter from the contract, nor constitute tenable ground of defense to procedure for specific performance.

4. MORTGAGES ¶138 — VENDOR AND PURCHASER ¶134(2) — LIEN OF TRUST DEED PAYABLE UNDER UNPAID PRICE NO DEFENSE TO SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

The title of a trustee in a deed of trust securing payment of a debt is legal, but defeasible by payment of the debt by the owner of the equity of redemption or release of the lien by the holder thereof; wherefore the existence of a deed of trust on land sold, securing a debt that can be satisfied out of unpaid purchase money in the hands of the vendee, under a contract not making time of performance essential, nor stipulating against incumbrances, does not excuse the vendee from performance of the contract.

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ¶165 — INSIGNIFICANT DEFICIENCIES IN QUANTITY OF LAND NO BAR TO SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

An insignificant deficiency in the quantity of land sold by such a contract, due to an adverse holding of a part thereof, compensable by an abatement of the purchase money, the part so held having no peculiar value, does not release the vendee from the obligation of the contract.

6. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ¶92(1)—VENDOR AND PURCHASER ¶144(2) — REASONABLE DELAY IN REMOVAL OF LIENS NO BAR TO SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Reasonable delay on the part of a vendor in the removal of liens on land sold by executory contract in which time of performance was not made essential, the existence of the liens being known to the vendee at the date of the contract and he having taken possession of the land pending removal thereof by the vendor and consummation of the contract, does not release the vendee from the obligation of the contract, nor preclude specific performance thereof at the instance of the vendor.

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ¶55, 122—CONTRACT FOR EXCHANGE OF ONE TRACT AND SALE OF ANOTHER AN ENTIRE CONTRACT.

A contract for the conveyance of two pieces of property lying in the same community, literally purporting an exchange of one piece for property and sale of the other piece for money, is an entire contract, and the vendee cannot effect a partial rescission thereof, in the absence of a provision in the contract authorizing it. On the theory of rescission, he cannot retain one of the pieces and obtain absolution from his contract as to the other.

8. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ¶32(2), 35—CONTRACT FOR SALE OF PROPERTY ENFORCEABLE AGAINST VENDEE.

Although a contract by a husband and wife for the sale of land owned by both, not sealed nor acknowledged, is unenforceable by the vendee as to the wife, she and her husband may have specific performance thereof against him, on their tender of a deed properly executed by them, and their willingness at all times to perform the contract precludes his discharge from the obligation thereof on the ground of such defect.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Braxton County.

Suit by M. H. Rollyson against H. M. Bourn and others, with cross-bill by defendants for specific performance of a contract of sale. Decree for plaintiff, denying the prayer of the cross-bill, and defendants appeal. Reversed, and decree entered requiring specific performance of contract on conditions, and cause remanded.

Hines & Kelly, of Sutton, for appellants.
Haymond & Fox, of Sutton, for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, J. The decree complained of enforces the lien of a deed of trust on two certain tracts of land, securing the payment of a note for $2,200, less payments thereon amounting to $1,100, and denies the prayer of a cross-bill answer filed by the defendants and seeking specific performance of a contract of sale of other land and prevention of enforcement of the trust deed lien, on the theory of an agreement on the part of the holder of that lien, to apply the lien debt on purchase money due from him to the defendants under the alleged contract of sale.

Whether the bill stated a good cause of action seems to be doubted by counsel for both plaintiff and defendants, but they insist that the situation disclosed by the pleadings read as a whole makes out a cause of equitable cognizance. They treat the defect in the bill as having been cured or supplied by matter disclosed by the answer. Inasmuch as the question is one of procedure, not jurisdiction, and the parties desire a decree determining their rights, there is no occasion for an inquiry as to the technical correctness of the procedure or the sufficiency of the pleadings in point of form. The bill ought to have set up the agreement relied upon in the answer, and the controversy growing out of it, as constituting an impediment to a sale by the trustee, but this is admitted by the answer.

The deed of trust was executed by H. M. Bourn and R. H. Bourn, husband and wife, December 12, 1914, to secure payment of their $2,200 note executed in favor of C. R. Bourn and dated May 4, 1914. Rollyson, while indebted to H. M. Bourn and R. H. Bourn for purchase money of land, bought the C. R. Bourn note subject to credits amounting to $1,100, with the understanding that H. M. Bourn and R. H. Bourn would allow him to offset it against his indebtedness to them in the sum of $2,100. Having attempted to rescind his purchase, and claiming he had done so, or was excused from performance of the contract, he brought this suit to enforce the lien of the deed of trust.

The debt due from him to the Bourns was part of the purchase money of a 40-acre tract of land they agreed to convey to him, along with a residence lot in Frametown, containing 4 or 5 acres. The contract bears date March 23, 1915, and literally purports an exchange of the residence lot for a tract of land at Tague, W. Va., then owned by Rollyson, and a sale to Rollyson of a 40-acre tract at Frametown, for $2,500, of which $400 was paid, and the balance to be paid in four equal installments of $525, payable, with interest, in 6, 12, 18, and 24 months. Deeds were immediately executed conveying the residence lot to Rollyson, and the Rollyson tract of land at Tague to the Bourns; but conveyance of the 40-acre tract and execution of the purchase-money notes were deferred on account of a vendor's lien and a trust deed lien on it, the former of which was uncertain as to the amount thereof. The Bourns were to ascertain the amount of it and were to remove the incumbrances, in the settlement with Rollyson or otherwise. They were not mentioned in the contract, nor was there any agreement as to covenants, other than covenants of warranty. Rollyson, however, took possession of the tract of land, held it for some time, and then abandoned it, under the impression that the existence of the liens, delay in removing them, failure to tender a proper deed, a defect in the agreement, and the alleged existence of an adverse possession of about one-half of an acre of the land by one Mollohan, legally justified rescission of the contract, or his release from the obligation thereof.

[7] His retention of the residence lot constitutes an insuperable obstacle to rescission, if the contract was entire and inseparable, for, in the absence of an agreement otherwise providing, rescission must be total. Hutton v. Dewing, 42 W. Va. 691, 26 S. E. 197; Castle v. Gibson, 77 W. Va. 116, 87 S. E. 174. Realizing this, he claims the two deals were separate and distinct, although entered into at the same time and evidenced by the same paper. This position is untenable. It cannot be assumed that the Bourns would have sold or traded only one of the two pieces of property. As both were combined in a single contract, it must be assumed that both pieces constituted the subject-matter of their side of the contract, notwithstanding the fixing of separate prices or recitals of separate considerations. Hermann v. Goddard, 82 W. Va. 520, 96 S. E. 792.

[8] R. H. Bourn, the wife of H. M. Bourn, owned an undivided interest in the 40-acre tract of land. She joined her husband in the contract, but it was not under seal nor acknowledged, wherefore it could not have been enforced against her. Simpson v. Belcher, 61 W. Va. 157, 56 S. E. 211; Wiseman v. Crislip, 72 W. Va. 340, 78 S. E. 107. But, if the deed tendered by her and her husband is such as the contract contemplates, that defect in the contract will not alone defeat specific performance. There was a binding contract with the husband as to the entire tract of land, upon which he could have been held by the vendee and made liable. Hence there was mutuality of contract, whether there was mutuality of remedy or not. Inasmuch as the wife comes and tenders performance, no remedy against her is necessary. Her tender of performance cures the defect in the contract. Boyd v. Brown, 47 W. Va. 238, 34 S. E. 907; Central Land Co. v. Johnston, 95 Va. 223, 28 S. E. 175; Walker v. Owen, 79 Mo. 563; University v. Polk County, 87 Iowa, 36, 53 N. W. 1080. If the husband, having agreed to sell the land, has procured a properly executed deed conveying it and made a tender thereof, specific performance will be decreed, even though he did not have the title at the date of the contract, in the absence of any other valid ground of defense. Armstrong v. Maryland Coal Co., 67 W. Va. 589, 611, 69 S. E. 195; Bruce v. Tilson, 25 N. Y. 198; Oakey v. Cook, 41 N. J. Eq. 364, 7 Atl. 495; Watts v. Waddle, 6 Pet. 389, 8 L. Ed. 437.

[3, 6] Within a year from the date of the contract, the Bourns tendered their deed. At that time they had paid the vendor's lien debt on the land, which amounted to only $67, and obtained a release, but had not paid the Philip S. Perkins debt, amounting to $850 and secured on the land by a deed of trust. It seems not to be disputed that the amount due the Bourns from Rollyson was sufficient to discharge the C. R. Bourn note and the Perkins debt, at the date of the tender of the deed. Under these circumstances, the existence of the liens did not justify repudiation of the contract. Armstrong v. Maryland Coal Co., 67 W. Va. 589, 611, 69 S. E. 195; Hudson v. Max Meadows & Co., 97 Va. 343, 33 S. E. 586; Garnett v. Macon, 6 Call (Va.) 308, 369, Fed. Cas. No. 5245. Though the contract does not mention the liens on the property, it is evident that the purchaser was aware of them, for consummation of the deal was delayed on account thereof, and, in the meantime, he took possession of the land. Nor is it shown that any change had occurred in the situation of the parties or the value of the property, that can work any material prejudice to the purchaser in the enforcement of his contract. He claims to have lost an opportunity to sell some timber from the land, by reason of failure of the vendors to clear the title and make him a deed, he being unwilling to sell the timber without perfect and unincumbered title in himself; but the timber remains on the land, and the loss of an opportunity to make an advantageous sale of it cannot be regarded as depreciation in the value of the land. Being fully protected by the purchase money in his hands, having allowed time for removal of the liens, and having suffered no material prejudice by the delay, he could not justly or equitably repudiate the contract, on account of the existence of the liens. Nor do they now constitute any obstacle to specific performance. One of them was discharged before the answer was filed, and only six days after the suit was brought, and the other more than two years before the decree was entered.

[4] Although at the dates of the contract and the filing of the answer praying cross-relief, the legal title was outstanding in a trustee, the trust deed lien was only an incumbrance susceptible of removal by payment by either vendor or vendee. No reconveyance by the trustee was necessary. The title was held only as security for the debt, and payment and a release terminated or defeated it. The trustee's title was legal, but defeasible by payment of the debt secured by the deed of trust. Taylor v. King, 6 Munf. (Va.) 358, 8 Am. Dec. 746; Harris v. Harris, 6 Munf. (Va.) 367; Angel v. Marshall, 55 W. Va. 679, 47 S. E. 882.

[5] The alleged defect in the title did not justify repudiation of the contract. If there is any at all, it is insignificant. According to the vendee's own testimony, the adverse holding by Mollohan, if any, does not amount to more than one-half of an acre, and that is not shown to have any peculiar value. He can obtain substantially all he contracted for, with an abatement of purchase money for the deficiency, if there is any, and that suffices. Creigh's Adm'r v. Boggs, 19 W. Va. 240; McKee v. Barley, 11 Grat. 340; Jackson v. Ligon, 3 Leigh (Va.) 161; Evans v. Kingsbery, 2 Rand. (Va.) 131, 14 Am. Dec. 779.

[1, 2] Taken and considered together and regarded as a whole, the matters of defense specifically set up do not constitute ground for refusal of specific performance in the exercise of judicial discretion. The vendee insists upon retention of a valuable and substantial part of the contract, the conveyance of the residence lot. The vendors stand ready and able to give him practically and substantially all he contracted for. He knew the occasion of the delay, when he made the contract and acquiesced in it for a considerable period of time. Moreover, the delay has wrought no substantial prejudice or detriment to him. Time of performance was not made an essential element of the contract, nor was there any stipulation against the existence of incumbrances. When a contract is free from objection, a court of equity, upon a proper application, will decree specific performance thereof as a matter of course. Campbell v. Fetterman's Heirs, 20 W. Va. 398; Ballard v. Ballard, 25 W. Va. 470; Conaway v. Sweeney, 24 W. Va. 643; W. Va. Oil, etc., Co. v. Vinal, 14 W. Va. 637. When there are defects or circumstances relied upon by way of defense, it devolves upon the court to say whether or not they are of such substantial character as would render specific performance unjust or inequitable, and, if they are deemed to be so, it has discretionary power to refuse specific performance, but it cannot refuse such relief arbitrarily, nor upon clearly unsubstantial grounds. The discretion to be exercised by the trial court in such cases is a sound and reviewable discretion; and, in the appellate court, the element of soundness is not less essential. Ballard v. Ballard, 25 W. Va. 470; West Va. Oil, etc., Co. v. Vinal, cited; Lowry v. Buffington, 6 W. Va. 249.

The deed tendered by the vendors contains a provision not warranted by anything in the contract, namely, one requiring the vendee to pay the taxes on the oil and gas in the land, one-half of which was reserved.

Our conclusion is to reverse the decree complained of, and enter a decree here, requiring specific performance of the contract set up in the cross-bill answer, subject to an abatement of purchase money on account of deficiency in the land, if any, application of the C. R. Bourn debt and its interest to partial payment of the purchase money and interest thereon from the date of the contract, and release of the deed of trust securing payment of said C. R. Bourn debt, remanding the cause for execution of the decree, and awarding costs in this court to the appellants.

(84 W. Va. 729)

STATE, for Use of FARMER, v. CITIZENS' TRUST & GUARANTY CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Oct. 14, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PLEADING  $\S$  352—MOTION TO STRIKE OUT PLEA HAS EFFECT OF DEMURRER.

A motion to strike out a plea has the same effect upon the legal sufficiency thereof that a demurrer thereto would have had.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS  $\S$  528 (1)—EXTENT OF LIABILITY ON OFFICIAL BOND DEFINED.

A surety on the official bond of an administrator or executor, where there is no statute or stipulation in the bond to the contrary, obligates himself only to account for losses occasioned by the failure of the fiduciary to use due diligence in pursuing and collecting claims owing to the estate, and to make proper application of the assets that come into his hands.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS  $\S$  528 (5)—LIMIT OF LIABILITY OF OFFICIAL SURETY OF INSOLVENT ADMINISTRATOR.

A debt due from a personal representative to the estate which he represents is not for all purposes to be regarded as money on hand; but where at the time of his appointment and qualification such representative was insolvent and unable to pay his debt, and so continued throughout the period of his administration, there being no laches on his part, such debt is to be treated as any other debt owing to the estate, and the surety on his official bond is not liable thereon for more than could have been enforced against the principal at any time within such period.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS  $\S$  528 (5)—LIMIT OF LIABILITY OF SURETY OF INSOLVENT HUSBAND, ADMINISTRATOR OF WIFE'S ESTATE.

Where the principal in a bond given by a husband as administrator of his deceased wife, the chief assets of whose estate she acquired by will from her deceased father, upon whose estate the husband as executor of the will also administered, but without bond, the will so providing, did not in his lifetime account for or deliver to the wife, except in part, the estate so devised and bequeathed to her, and died leaving the residue unadministered, the surety on his official bond as such administrator, when sued thereon by the administrator of the unadministered assets of the wife's estate, may, to defeat recovery, plead, rely on, and show the inability of the principal therein to pay the same to the wife's estate after her death, because of the insolvency of the principal during the entire period covered by his administration of her estate.

Certified Questions from Circuit Court, Wood County.

Action of debt by the State, for the use of C. S. Farmer, administrator de bonis non of the estate of Beulah Westerman, deceased, against the Citizens' Trust & Guaranty Company. Plaintiff's motion to strike a plea from the file denied, and ruling certified. Ruling affirmed, with direction to certify decision.

A. C. Chapman, of New Martinsville, for plaintiff.

Kreps, Russell & Hiteshew, of Parkersburg, for defendant.

LYNCH, J. Plaintiff, as administrator de bonis non of the estate of Beulah Westerman, daughter of W. S. Wiley, deceased, and wife of C. G. Westerman, deceased, who qualified and became the administrator of the estate devised and bequeathed to her by the will of her father, brought against Citizens' Trust & Guaranty Company, surety on Westerman's bond as administrator, this action of debt on the bond to recover assets belonging to her estate in the hands of Westerman unadministered at the date of his death; and to defeat recovery thereon defendant, in addition to nil debet, conditions performed, and conditions not broken, pleaded specially the insolvency of Westerman from the time he qualified as such administrator to the date of his death. This plea the court refused to strike from the file on plaintiff's motion, but did certify its ruling thereon to this court to test the correctness thereof, thus presenting the single question whether, because of such insolvency, any liability on the bond attached to the defendant as surety therein.

The decisions of this state furnish no precedent or criterion to guide us in reaching a proper conclusion upon this proposition. What is not less embarrassing, we meet at the outset a contrariety of judicial opinion wherever the question has been discussed. The facts may be gathered from the opinion in Morris v. Westerman, 79 W. Va. 502, 92 S. E. 567, which, so far as they are now important, are these: C. G. Westerman qualified as executor of the will of W. S. Wiley about

January 22, 1903, in Wetzel county, but without bond; the will specifically dispensing with the indemnity. Beulah Wiley took under the will the greater part of the valuable estate of her father, only part of which came into her hands, either through her husband or from any other source, at any time while her husband had charge of her father's estate. Subsequently Mrs. Westerman died, and her husband became administrator of her estate, and gave the bond on which this action is brought to enable him to qualify as such, and who did so qualify and did administer upon her estate until the date of his death, whereupon plaintiff became the administrator of the unadministered assets, and brought this action to recover from the surety on Westerman's official bond that portion of her father's estate which her husband, first as his executor and then as her administrator, had failed to turn over to her, or, after her death, to her estate.

The condition of the administration bond involved here is that the principal,

"C. G. Westerman, administrator of the estate of Beulah [or Mrs. C. G.] Westerman, deceased, shall faithfully pay the rents and profits or proceeds of said estate which may lawfully come into his hands, or to the hands of any person for him, to such person or persons as are entitled thereto, and shall in all other things well and truly discharge his duties as such administrator."

The special plea filed by defendant sets up by way of defense the following:

"That C. G. Westerman was, at the time he was appointed and qualified as administrator of the estate of Beulah Westerman, deceased, insolvent, and * * * continued to be insolvent during the entire period that he was administrator, * * * to wit, up until the date of his death, * * * and that at no time during the said period * * * could the said debt decreed [in Morris v. Westerman] as owing from the estate of C. G. Westerman, deceased, to the said C. S. Farmer, administrator d. b. n. of the estate of Beulah Westerman, deceased, have been collected from the said C. G. Westerman, and that at no time during the aforesaid period * * * could a greater amount have been collected from C. G. Westerman upon the aforesaid debt than was actually recovered and received * * * from and out of the estate of C. G. Westerman, deceased."

[1] Whether Westerman in fact was or was not insolvent when his wife died, or when he died, or in the meantime, is immaterial, so far as this discussion is concerned. For that purpose the facts set up in the plea are taken as true, for a motion to strike has, we think, the same effect upon the question of the sufficiency of a pleading as a demurrer thereto would have had. Besides, like every other material fact alleged by a pleading, Westerman's insolvency as set up in the special plea is a fact to be proved by him who relies on it by way of defense—in this instance, the surety in the fidelity bond. We are dealing now only with the right of the defendant to plead and rely on insolvency to exonerate itself from the liability sought to be enforced against it, and, if it can, to sustain the plea by necessary proof, the burden of which rests upon it.

[2-4] The single question presented is whether the allegation of the insolvency of the administrator during the time covered by his administration, and his consequential inability at any time during the administration to collect the debt owed by him to the estate of his wife, constitutes a valid defense to the action instituted against the surety on his official bond. As already indicated, instead of there being a general concurrence, there is a marked lack of harmony among the judicial decisions upon the question. This confusion is largely due to the diversity of authority at the common law as to the manner of treating a debt owed by a personal representative to his decedent at the time of his appointment. Many courts by a legal fiction treat such debt as immediately liquidated and as constituting assets in the hands of the representative from the moment of his qualification, upon the theory that, as the personal representative cannot demand or receive payment of himself, or sue himself, and since he is bound to account for his own debt as for all other debts, the law presumes that he has done what he is legally bound to do, and therefore charges him with the amount as a debt paid.

What is generally known as the "Massachusetts rule" upon the subject seems to have been announced as early as 1814 in Stevens v. Gaylord, 11 Mass. 256, and since followed, not only in that state, but in many others, and in substance and effect, as stated at pages 268, 269, is:

"As soon as the debtor is appointed administrator, if he acknowledges the debt, he has actually received so much money, and is answerable for it. This is the result with respect to an executor, and the same reason applies to an administrator; as the same hand is to receive and pay, and there is no ceremony to be performed in paying the debt, and no mode of doing it, but by considering the money to be now in the hands of the party in his character of administrator. * * * The consequence is that he and his sureties in the administration bond are liable for the amount of such a debt, in like manner as if he had received it from any other debtor of the deceased."

The rule was further extended in Leland v. Felton, 1 Allen, 531, to apply to debts due to the estate of a testator from the executor named in his will, though the latter was insolvent at the time he accepted the trust, and although he had never charged the debts in his account, and an account had been allowed in which they were not included, but were mentioned as notes which it had been impossible to collect, and though he had resigned his trust, and an administrator de bonis non had been appointed in his place. The later case of Bassett v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 184 Mass. 210, 68 N. E. 205, 100 Am. St. Rep. 552, adheres to the same rule and holds that the surety on an executor's bond is liable for the full amount due the testator from an insolvent firm of which the executor was a member, although the firm and the executor were insolvent at the time the latter assumed the trust. The reasoning relating to this conclusion is that an executor or administrator is appointed for the sole purpose of enforcing in behalf of those interested in the estate the rights of the estate against others. "For that reason," says the court, "on broad principles of policy it was laid down by the common law of England that he must yield all controversy as to the debt due from himself and treat it as an asset of the estate," since "no one is bound to accept the office, and, if he elects to do so, he thereby tacitly assents to this condition." The Massachusetts court has recognized no distinction in the application of this doctrine to assignees in insolvency cases (Benchley v. Chapin, 10 Cush. [Mass.] 173), to guardians (Mattoon v. Cowing, 13 Gray [Mass.] 387), and to receivers in insolvency cases (Commonwealth v. Gould, 118 Mass. 300).

The Supreme Court of Oregon indorses the same doctrine in United Brethren v. Akin, 45 Or. 247, 77 Pac. 748, 66 L. R. A. 654, 2 Ann. Cas. 353, and holds the sureties on the bond of an executor liable for the amount of his personal debt to the estate, though they executed the bond without any knowledge of indebtedness by the executor to the decedent, or of the executor's insolvency and inability to pay the debt. This holding, however, seems to be warranted by a statute of that state, as it is perhaps by statutes of other states providing that an executor of an estate shall be liable for any claim of the testator against him, "as for so much money in his hands."

The attempt to compel the sureties of an executor or administrator, the rule being the same in each case, to pay a debt due from him to the estate administered, when, had another person not so indebted been appointed as such, he could not possibly have collected it because of the continued insolvency of the debtor, certainly may frequently be fraught with serious consequences, and for that reason ought not to be sanctioned without due consideration, especially when no warrant can be found therefor other than the legal fiction that such a debt is to be treated as so much cash belonging to the estate at the time of the appointment—a fiction adopted and approved, it is said, merely for the purpose of justice and convenience. But, if such were the purposes, its application ought not to be extended to cases where gross injustice will result. The rule necessarily must be based upon a presumption that all men are solvent and able to pay their obligations; but since that presumption is obviously not true in fact, to enforce the rule under all circumstances may work great hardship. When applied to a case where the personal representative was insolvent at the time of his appointment and so continued until his death or discharge, a peculiar injustice might be caused by placing him in such a position that he might be charged with contempt or embezzlement for failure to pay over moneys with which he is charged, but which he has never received, since he was not able to pay, or by charging his sureties with liability beyond the faithful discharge of the duties of such personal representative, and in effect making them guarantors of such debts due the estate instead of sureties. Despite these evident hardships, there are some states which enforce the strict rule of liability against the representative and his sureties, irrespective of his continued insolvency and inability to pay. Bassett v. Fidelity, etc., Co., supra; United Brethren v. Akin, supra; Wright v. Lang, 66 Ala. 389; Arnold v. Arnold, 124 Ala. 550, 27 South. 465, 82 Am. St. Rep. 199; Judge of Probate v. Sulloway, 68 N. H. 511, 44 Atl. 720, 49 L. R. A. 347, 73 Am. St. Rep. 619; McGaughey v. Jacoby, 54 Ohio St. 487, 44 N. E. 231; James v. West, 67 Ohio St. 28, 65 N. E. 156; 2 Woerner, Amer. Law of Administration (2d Ed.) § 311; 11 R. C. L. 118; note, 2 Ann. Cas. 355; note, 112 Am. St. Rep. 409.

But the better rule, as it seems to us, is that followed by the majority of courts, which, while treating the liability as money on hand for administration purposes, properly considered, do not so deem or treat it for all purposes, but place the duty of the fiduciary toward his own debt to the estate upon the same level as other debts due thereto. Such rule does not make of the surety a guarantor of the payment of the debt owed by the personal representative, the collection of which, had it been owed by any other, would have been excused upon proof of the continued insolvency of such debtor. Thus, as remarked by the Supreme Court of Vermont in Lyon v. Osgood, 58 Vt. 707, 715, 7 Atl. 5, 8:

"The extension of the legal fiction of payment, so as to make the surety liable for the executor's debt beyond his means to pay, when not guilty of laches, would often work great injustice to the surety. The surety ought not to be required to contribute from his own funds to make up an estate for the deceased, which he, in fact, was not possessed of at the time of his death. * * * In the absence of laches, we think the surety is liable upon his bond for the executor's debt only to the extent of the executor's ability to pay it."

Harker v. Irick, 10 N. J. Eq. 269, restates the same proposition. The Supreme Court of Kentucky in Buckel v. Smith's Adm'r, 26 Ky. Law Rep. 991, 82 S. W. 1001, puts the debt of an administrator or executor on the same footing as a debt owed to the estate by any other person. Besides the fiction already referred to, there is apparent no solid foundation on which to base a difference between the two liabilities. The sureties, where there is no statute to the contrary, such as necessarily would operate as notice to them, obligate themselves only to account for losses occasioned by the failure of the fiduciary to use due diligence in pursuing and collecting claims owing to the estate, and to make proper application of the assets that come into his hands. But where he was always insolvent, and for that reason wholly unable to pay a debt owed by him to the estate, upon what theory of justice, propriety, public policy, or lawful right, other than the mere fiction referred to, can the sureties be compelled to respond for such unavoidable failure?

The bond executed by deceased and his surety does not purport to impose absolute liability. Its condition is (1) that the principal shall faithfully pay the rent and profits or proceeds of the estate which may lawfully come into his hands, or to the hands of any person for him, to such person or persons as are entitled thereto; and (2) shall in all other things well and truly discharge his duties as such administrator. With respect to debts other than his own the personal representative is chargeable only with the faithful discharge of his duty to make a prompt and efficient attempt to collect them, and when such collection is rendered impossible by the insolvency of the debtor, his surety is not responsible therefor. Debts owed by the representative should be treated in the same manner, and when at the time of his appointment, and continuing until his discharge or death, he was insolvent and unable to collect such debt from himself, his surety should not be responsible for that which no diligence could have prevented. Such is the rule followed in the great majority of states. In re Walker's Estate, 125 Cal. 242, 57 Pac. 991, 73 Am. St. Rep. 40; Sanchez v. Forster, 133 Cal. 614, 65 Pac. 1077; State v. Gregory, 119 Ind. 503, 22 N. E. 1; Buckel v. Smith's Adm'r, 26 Ky. Law Rep. 991, 82 S. W. 1001; Sanders v. Dodge, 140 Mich. 236, 103 N. W. 597, 112 Am. St. Rep. 399; McCarty v. Frazer, 62 Mo. 263; Howell v. Anderson, 66 Neb. 575, 92 N. W. 760, 61 L. R. A. 313; Harker v. Irick, 10 N. J. Eq. 269; Baucus v. Barr, 45 Hun, 582, affirmed in 107 N. Y. 624, 13 N. E. 939; Matter of Piper, 15 Pa. 533; Rader v. Yeargin, 85 Tenn. 486, 3 S. W. 178; Lyon v. Osgood, 58 Vt. 707, 7 Atl. 5; 2 Woerner, Amer. Law of Administration (2d Ed.) § 311; 11 R. C. L. 118; note, 2 Ann. Cas. 355; note, 112 Am. St. Rep. 409. See, also, Wachsmuth v. Penn., etc., Ins. Co., 241 Ill. 409, 89 N. E. 787, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 411, 132 Am. St. Rep. 226.

Of course, if the personal representative was solvent when he assumed the duties of his office, and later became insolvent and unable to pay his debt, or if he was insolvent at first, but later became solvent, the surety might well be liable for a default under such circumstances, as many cases hold, though, according to the averments of the special plea, such question is not now presented. The averments of that plea, if proved upon the trial of the case, will constitute a bar to the action. No other questions are properly presented in the record for our consideration at this time.

Our order, therefore, will affirm the ruling upon the motion to strike out the special plea, and direct the certification of our decision to the circuit court of Wood county.

(178 N. C. 409)

STOREY v. STOKES et al. (No. 393.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 5, 1919.)

1. SALES  $\S$ 53(1), 88—WHEN CONTRACT PROVEN, ITS CONSTRUCTION FOR THE COURT.

What is the contract of sale between the parties is a question for the jury, but when the contract is admitted or proven its construction is a question of law for the court.

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT  $\S$ 174—RATIFICATION OF AGENT'S PURCHASE A QUESTION OF INTENT.

Whether the buyers of lumber approved the terms of the contract made by their agent subject to their ratification was not to be determined solely by the letters or other writings upon a legal construction of them, but on the evidence oral and written; it being a question of intention.

3. TRIAL  $\S$ 256(4)—REQUEST TO AMEND RECORD OF CONTENTIONS BY JUDGE NECESSARY.

If the different contentions as to the evidence in the case were not correctly stated by the trial judge, he should have been requested in due time to make proper amendments.

4. SALES  $\S$ 172—RAILROAD EMBARGO NO PROTECTION TO SELLERS FAILING TO DELIVER.

A railroad embargo on shipments of lumber is no protection to sellers thereof who failed to deliver, where they did not tender the lumber to the railroad for shipment, while the buyers proposed to get for them the necessary permits to avoid the embargo.

5. DAMAGES  $\S$ 40(2)—RECOVERY OF PROFITS IN ACTION FOR BREACH.

Where a contract is made with a view to future profits, they are to be deemed within the contemplation of the parties, and are recoverable in an action for breach if certain and capable of reasonable estimation.

6. DAMAGES  $\S$ 163(2)—BURDEN TO PROVE DIMINUTION OF DAMAGES FROM BREACH OF CONTRACT.

Where plaintiff proves a contract, its breach, and the loss of a certain sum resulting, the burden lies on defendant to prove anything in diminution of the damages.

7. SALES  $\S$ 418(12)—RECOVERY OF PROFITS ON FAILURE TO DELIVER.

Where the sellers of lumber in North Carolina to wholesale dealers in New York knew that the New York buyers intended to resell and were specially informed of it, the buyers for the sellers' breach were entitled to recover their ascertainable profits on resale in New York according to market prices there.

8. EVIDENCE  $\S$ 357—LETTER AS EVIDENCE IN ACTION FOR FAILURE TO DELIVER.

In an action by the buyers of lumber against the sellers for failure to deliver, a letter from the sellers, constituting part of the correspondence between the parties, and containing the sellers' own declarations about the transaction, held admissible.

9. EVIDENCE  $\S$ 354(2)—WITNESSES  $\S$ 255(7)—REFRESHMENT OF MEMORY AND CORROBORATION BY BOOK OF SALES.

In an action against the sellers of lumber for their failure to deliver, book of sales, entries in which were made under the supervision of the witness, held competent to refresh his memory and to corroborate him.

10. SALES  $\S$ 416(2)—BUYERS' INABILITY TO PERFORM CONTRACTS OF RESALE.

In an action against the sellers of lumber for failure to deliver, testimony as to plaintiff buyers' inability to perform their own contracts of resale, made in reliance on the sellers' shipment according to their contract, held competent as tending to show damages by loss of profits.

Appeal from Superior Court, Davidson County; Lane, Judge.

Action by W. M. Storey, trading as W. M. Storey Lumber Company, against C. W. Stokes and J. F. Stokes, trading as Valley Lumber Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. No error.

Plaintiffs alleged: That defendants are engaged in the business of operating sawmills and selling lumber, at Newsom, N. C., and the plaintiffs are engaged in the business of buying lumber and selling the same at wholesale to the trade, at the city of New York. Plaintiffs further allege that on the 17th day of April, 1917, the plaintiffs and defendants made a contract by the terms of which contract the defendants sold to the plaintiffs a lot of lumber, as follows, to wit: 500,000 feet 1x4 and up, S2S, @ $14.00. 2 cars 2x4-10 and up, S1S and 1E, @ $14.00. 250,000 feet 2x4, 6, 8, 10 and 12-10 and up, S1S and 1E. And the defendants agreed to deliver said lumber to the plaintiffs f. o. b. cars on a 12-cent rate of freight to Norfolk, Va. That defendants failed to keep and perform the contract and to deliver the lumber as promised, and when they were requested by plaintiffs to do so, and because of this breach and failure to deliver, the plaintiffs were compelled to buy lumber, in the open market, at higher prices than those named in the contract for the purpose of filling their contracts with their customers, and by reason thereof they were damaged to the amount of $5,527, for which amount they demand judgment.

Defendants denied that they were engaged in operating sawmills, but admitted that they were engaged in selling lumber, and that plaintiffs were engaged in buying it to be sold at wholesale to the trade, as alleged; they deny the contract and the other material allegations of the complaint.

The jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiffs, and assessed their damages at $2,125. Judgment was entered thereon, and defendants appealed.

Raper & Raper, of Lexington, for appellants.

J. Gilmer Korner, Jr., Louis M. Swink, and Fred S. Hutchins, all of Winston-Salem, and Walser & Walser, of Lexington, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). The defendants have reserved several exceptions as to evidence, and other matters affecting the merits of the case and the damages. The objections to evidence will be postponed for consideration until we have passed upon the other alleged errors, which we will discuss in the order of their assignment.

[1, 2] The court properly submitted to the jury the controverted question whether the contract, which was made by Stemple, for the plaintiffs, with Stokes, for the Valley Lumber Company, had been accepted and confirmed by the plaintiffs. What is the contract, is a question of fact for the jury (Devries v. Haywood, 64 N. C. 83); but when the contract is admitted, or proven, its construction is a question of law for the court. There was some evidence here that the contract made by Stemple had been confirmed, and, moreover, that defendants so understood it. It was for the jury to say, by their verdict, what was the truth of the matter. The instruction of the court in this respect was simple, direct, and clear, and left it to the jury to find whether there had been an approval by the plaintiffs of the terms of the Stemple contract, which was made subject to their ratification. We do not think that this was to be determined solely by the letters or other writings, upon a legal construction of them, but upon the evidence, oral and written, because it was a question of intention; that is, what the parties said, and did, and what they mutually meant by their acts and conduct. The defendants in several letters, particularly the one of May 14, 1917, complain, not that the parties had disagreed about the specific terms of the contract, but that they had been disappointed in getting the necessary stock, which they thought had been secured, and promised, if they could get the cars accepted for immediate shipment, that they would send forward at least one car, regretting their inability to serve the plaintiffs better. They still did not ship, and plaintiffs' letters then urge them to do so and notify them that they have made contracts of resale. Storey went to Newsom, N. C., talked with the defendants, and he says they promised "to get off two cars promptly." When defendants gave one excuse after another for not shipping—failure of parties, with whom they had contracted for stock, to deliver the same, embargo of the railroad companies on shipments, and lack of permits—plaintiffs promised to help them out in regard to these matters, and did secure a special permit. The correspondence tends to show that defendants were not attempting to perform their contract, and plaintiffs complained of it, and charged that their Mr. Stemple had informed them of defendants' selling to other parties the lumber which they had contracted to ship to them. The excuse for not shipping the lumber, as stated in letters of May 21 and July 4 of 1917, and in others, seemed to be that they could not get the stock. They do refer in one of the letters to some disagreement as to the way the lumber should be worked and the terms of settlement; but, when we examine the lengthy correspondence, we can easily discover some evidence for the jury to the effect that the contract was sufficiently understood, and especially so when it is read in the light of the oral testimony. The judge stated to the jury that, according to Storey's testimony, the plaintiffs confirmed the contract, as soon as they heard from Stemple what it was, and the conduct of the defendants subsequently, as disclosed by the correspondence and the other testimony, supports the statement.

[3] II. Several of the exceptions were taken to the judge's recital of the different contentions in the case, as to the evidence. If they were not correctly stated, the judge should have been requested, in due time, to make the proper amendments. This was not done. Matthews v. Myatt, 172 N. C. 230, 90 S. E. 150; State v. Merrick, 172 N. C. 870, 90 S. E. 257.

[4] III. As to the embargo on shipments, this is no protection to the defendants, for they did not tender the lumber for shipment, and, besides, the plaintiffs proposed to get for them the necessary permits.

The other parts of the charge were clearly right, and perfectly fair to both parties. There was ample evidence to support it, and defendants have no just ground for complaint.

Plaintiffs assert that defendants refused to ship the lumber, not for the reasons they gave, that they could not get the stock from which to make it, or that its shipment had been embargoed, but because the market price of lumber was rapidly rising, and they had found another customer with a better price, and that the defendants' excuses were not frank and well-founded. While this may or may not be so, and it was denied by the defendants, we are unable to declare that there was absolutely no evidence to sustain such a theory, and therefore we cannot say that the argument was so wholly unfounded that it should not have any weight with the jury, but should have been excluded from the consideration of the case.

[5-7] IV. As to damages: The sale of the lumber was made to the plaintiffs with full knowledge on the part of the defendants as to the nature of their business, in other words, that plaintiffs were buying the lumber for resale, and defendants were specially informed of it, and the correspondence, and other evidence, show that plaintiffs had outstanding contracts with other parties for the purchase of the lumber at a higher price which would bring a considerable profit to the plaintiffs. It was held in Johnson v. Railroad Co., 140 N. C. 574, 577, 53 S. E. 362, that, when the action is for a breach of contract, the damages recoverable are such as naturally flow from the breach, and such special or consequential damages as are reasonably presumed to have been within the contemplation of the parties at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of a breach of it. In ascertaining what damages come within the rule, it is proper to examine, not only the terms of the contract, the subject-matter, etc., but also to inquire whether such circumstances or conditions as produced special damages were communicated to the defendant. We apprehend that the same rule prevails when an action in the nature of tort is brought for the breach of a duty arising out of contract, citing Williams v. Telegraph Co., 136 N. C. 82, 48 S. E. 559, 1 Ann. Cas. 359; Dayvis v. Telegraph Co., 139 N. C. 79, 51 S. E. 898; and Lee v. Railroad Co., 136 N. C. 533, 48 S. E. 809, where it was said: It is immaterial whether we treat the cause of action as for a breach of contract or for a negligent omission to perform a public duty arising out of a contract. The damages in either case are confined to such as were reasonably within the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made by which the duty to the plaintiffs was assumed. That for failure to deliver freight, when the carrier is not informed of the special circumstances causing the loss of the plaintiff's contract with other persons, the measure of damages is the difference between the market value of the article at the time it ought to have been delivered and the time it was in fact delivered. Joyce on Damages, § 1956, thus states the rule:

"Where the delivery of freight is negligently delayed by a carrier, there may be in an action for the breach of the contract recovery of such damages as are the natural and proximate result of its act, and for such as reasonably might have been expected to be within the contemplation of the parties at the time of entering into the contract, as the probable result of a breach. When the carrier has notice of the fact that a delay in the delivery of the goods will result in an unusual loss or some special damage to the shipper, there may be a recovery for the actual damages sustained, when the notice is of such a character that it will be presumed that the carrier contracted with reference thereto." Lindley v. Railroad Co., 88 N. C. 547; Swift River Co. v. Railroad Co., 169 Mass. 326, 47 N. E. 1015, 61 Am. St. Rep. 288.

Justice Rodman said, in Lewis v. Rountree, 79 N. C. 122, 124 (28 Am. Rep. 309):

"The contract of the defendant may be regarded as a contract to deliver the rosin at any usual market to be named by the purchaser, the purchaser taking on himself the risk, trouble, and expense of the transportation. As damages recoverable on a breach of a contract are the natural and probable consequences which the parties may be supposed to have had in contemplation, it would seem reasonably to follow that a knowledge by a vendor of the purpose which the vendee had in view in making the purchase was an essential element in estimating the damages likely to be sustained by a breach. Many cases support this proposition."

And again:

"There can be no doubt that a vendee who takes a warranty and gives notice that he buys to sell again in another market may include in his damages both the losses he actually sustained by reason of the breach, and also the profits he would have made upon resale, had the article been what it was warranted to be."

In Mace v. Ramsey, 74 N. C. 11, the charterer of a boat was held entitled to recover the profit he would have made, under the circumstances, which were in the contemplation of both parties. The rule of damages was held, in Spiers v. Halsted, 74 N. C. 620, to be the profit which plaintiff would have made on a resale of the goods, which really in that case, as it is here, was the difference between the contract price and what he could get for the goods at the place of delivery. Clements v. State, 77 N. C. 142. We thus stated the general rule in Machine Co. v. Tobacco Co., 141 N. C. 284, 289, 53 S. E. 885:

"The amount that would have been received if the contract had been kept and which will completely indemnify the injured party is the true measure of damages for its breach. Benjamin v. Hilliard, 23 How. 149 [16 L. Ed. 518]; Mace v. Ramsey, 74 N. C. 14. Where one violates his contract, he is liable for such damages, including gains prevented as well as losses sustained, which may fairly be supposed to have entered into the contemplation of the parties when they made the contract, that is, such as might naturally be expected to follow its violation, and they must be certain, both in their nature and in respect to the cause from which they proceed. Ashe v. De Rosset, 50 N. C. 299 [72 Am. Dec. 552]; Griffin v. Colver, 16 N. Y. 489 [69 Am. Dec. 718]. It is the rule last stated which principally raises the doubt as to whether profits of the future should be included in any estimate of damages. They may be necessary to completely indemnify the injured party and they may also answer the other requirement, in that the loss of them may naturally be expected to proximately result from a breach of the contract; but there still remains another important element to be considered, and that is whether there is any reliable standard by which they can be ascertained, for we have seen that the damages must be certain, and this certainty which is required does not refer solely to their amount, but also to the question whether they will result at all from the breach. It is clear that, whatever profits are rejected as an item in the calculation of damages, it is because they are subject to too many contingencies and are too dependent upon the fluctuations of markets and the chances of business to constitute a safe criterion for an estimate of damages."

See, also, Critcher v. Porter Co., 135 N. C. 542, 551, 47 S. E. 604, 607, where we said:

"In Lewis v. Rountree, 79 N. C. 123, 28 Am. Rep. 309, the plaintiff was permitted to recover upon the basis of the price of the rosin in New York, to which point it was shipped, for the reason that it was purchased for resale there, and the defendant had notice of it. In Mace v. Ramsey, supra, the boat was hired for a particular occasion, and the plaintiff had engaged a certain number of passengers at an agreed price. The court held that such loss as ensued was within the contemplation of the parties."

There are many authorities to this effect, and it may be well that we should refer to a few of them. The rule was laid down (in Hadley v. Baxendale) that the damages recoverable for breach of contract are such as may fairly and reasonably be considered as arising naturally—that is, according to the usual course of things—from the breach itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it. 8 R. C. L. 455 (section 25). Where a contract is entered into with a view to future profits, such profits are to be deemed to be within the contemplation of the parties, and are recoverable, if they are certain and can reasonably be estimated, in an action for a breach of the contract. Wakeman v. Wheeler, 101 N. Y. 205, 4 N. E. 264, 54 Am. Rep. 676; Davidson v. Buggy Co., 167 N. C. 423, at page 425, 83 S. E. 557. Where the plaintiff proves a contract, its breach, and the loss of a certain sum resulting from the breach, upon all the authorities the burden lies on the defendant to prove anything in diminution of the damages. Rodman, J., in Oldham v. Kerchner, 79 N. C. at page 114, 28 Am. Rep. 302. The allowance of profits for the breach of a contract, when not excluded as unnatural or remote, is wholly a question of the certainty of proof, and whenever a certain gain prevented is provable, and was contemplated by the parties, it may be recovered. Joske Bros. v. Pleasants, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 433, 39 S. W. 586; 53 L. R. A. 40 (note e). Lost profits may be recovered for breach of a seller's contract, where evidence relevant to the inquiry affords data from which the amount may be ascertained with a reasonable degree of certainty. Davidson v. Buggy Co., 167 N. C. 423, 83 S. E. 557.

There are no such uncertainties in this case that the failure of any one of them would subvert the whole computation as to damages. And, in this connection, we may say that the defendants' contention that the deliveries were to be made at Newsom, N. C., is clearly unsound, as they were to be made in New York, according to shipping instructions, and it reasonably appears that the sales by the plaintiffs at that place were made according to market prices prevailing there. So that the case could be brought within the rule which the defendants rely on. Berbarry v. Tombacher, 162 N. C. 497, 77 S. E. 412; Lumber Co. v. Manufacturing Co., 162 N. C. 395, 78 S. E. 284; Lumber Co. v. Furniture Co., 167 N. C. 565, 83 S. E. 801.

We are of the opinion that there was ample evidence, from which it could be inferred that profit, which could be ascertained with sufficient certainty, would have been realized from a resale of the lumber, if the contract had been performed by the defendants, and that those cases cited by them, where the profits were uncertain or speculative, do not apply to the evidence in this record, or to the facts deducible therefrom.

[8-10] V. As to the questions of evidence: The letter Exhibit E was competent, as it was a part of the correspondence between the parties. It came from the defendants, and contained their own declarations about the transaction. The book of sales, the entries in which were made under his supervision, was competent to refresh the memory of the witness, and to corroborate him, and, besides, he testified (Bowman v. Blankenship, 165 N. C. 521-522, 81 S. E. 746) that he had an independent knowledge of the facts and items recorded in it. The testimony, as to plaintiffs' inability to perform their own contracts of resale, which were made in reliance upon the defendants' shipment of the lumber, according to the terms of their contract, was competent, as it tended to show what the damages were—how much they had lost by the defendants' delinquency. The latter knew that the lumber was purchased from them for resale in New York. They practically admit this to be so, by their answer to the first two sections of the complaint. They must have known that plaintiffs would have to supply the place of lumber they should have received from them, in order to save themselves from answering in damages to their own customers.

The other exceptions, not covered fully by what we have already said, are in themselves without any merit.

We find no error in the record, after a most careful examination of it, and a full consideration of the material exceptions.

No error.

(178 N. C. 399)

BETHLEHEM MOTORS CORPORATION
et al. v. FLYNT, Sheriff. (No. 355.)(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 5, 1919.)1. COMMERCE ⇨40(3) — WHEN INTERSTATE COMMERCE CEASES.

Where automobiles were consigned to corporations within the state and were sold direct by the consignees from their storage warehouses in the state, they were not in interstate commerce after reaching the storage warehouses.

2. LICENSES ⇨16(½) — "AUTOMOBILES" IN-CLUDE MOTORTRUCKS.

The word "automobiles," in laws 1917, c. 231, § 72, requiring a license tax for selling automobiles, includes motortrucks; an "automobile" being a motor vehicle usually propelled by steam, electricity, or gasoline, and carrying its motive power within itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Automobile.]

3. COMMERCE ⇨64 — LICENSE TAX FOR SELL-ING AUTOMOBILES NOT VIOLATION OF INTER-STATE COMMERCE CLAUSE.

Laws 1917, c. 231, § 72, requiring payment of license tax to sell automobiles in state, is not in conflict with the interstate commerce clause of the federal Constitution. Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⇨207(7) — LICENSES
⇨7(1) — LICENSE TAX FOR SELLING AU-TOMOBILES NOT INTERFERENCE WITH PRIVI-LEGES OF "CITIZENS."

Laws 1917, c. 231, § 72, requiring payment of license tax to sell automobiles in state, but providing that four-fifths of such licenses need not be paid if company has three-fourths of its assets invested in the state and returned for taxation therein, does not interfere with the privileges and immunities; the term "citizen" in Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, referring only to natural persons, members of the body politic, owing allegiance to the state, and not to artificial persons created by the Legislature, and possessing only such attributes as the Legislature has prescribed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Citizen.]

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⇨230(3) — LICENSE TAX ON SALE OF AUTOMOBILES.

Laws 1917, c. 231, § 72, requiring payment of a license tax to sell automobiles in the state, but reducing the amount of such tax where the owner has assets invested in the state, does not deny the equal protection of the laws to a foreign corporation in violation of Const. U. S. Amend. 14.

6. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⇨206(7) — CORPO-RATIONS NOT CITIZENS WITHIN PRIVILEGE AND IMMUNITIES CLAUSE.

While corporations are held to be "persons" within the equal protection and due process clause of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, they are not "citizens" within the privilege and immunities clause of that section.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Person.]

7. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⇨206(7) — FOR-EIGN CORPORATIONS AS PERSONS AND CITI-ZENS.

A corporation not created by the state, nor doing business in the state under conditions that subject it to process issuing from the courts of the state, is not within the provisions of Const. U. S. Amend. 14.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Bryson, Judge.

Suit by the Bethlehem Motors Corporation and others against George W. Flynt, Sheriff of Forsyth County. Decree for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

It appears from the facts found by consent and from the admissions, affidavits, and pleadings in the cause, that the plaintiff, the Bethlehem Motors Corporation, is engaged in the manufacture of Bethlehem trucks in Pennsylvania, and that of the other plaintiffs the National Motor & Vehicle Company is engaged in the manufacture of the National automobile in Indiana; the W. Irving Young & Co. is a corporation of Maryland; that the Liberty Motors Corporation is incorporated in this state with its office in Winston; and that the National Motor Company is also incorporated in this state with its principal office in Greensboro. The two companies last named represent W. Irving Young & Co. as their agents at Winston and Greensboro.

Under authority of Laws 1917, c. 231, § 72, the sheriff of Forsyth levied on a National motorcar, and the sheriff of Guilford upon a Bethlehem truck, for nonpayment of the license tax for selling under above section. The plaintiffs sued out a restraining order against the sheriff of Forsyth from selling the motorcar and against the sheriff of Guilford from selling the Bethlehem truck. From the dissolution of said restraining order the plaintiffs appealed.

J. E. Alexander, of Winston-Salem, for appellants.

Jones & Clement, of Winston-Salem, for appellee.

The Attorney General and Frank Nash, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

CLARK, C. J. The facts being practically admitted, the real question before the court is whether section 72, c. 231, Laws 1917, is constitutional.

As found by the court, the trucks and automobiles consigned to the Liberty Motor Corporation and the National Motor Company by the other plaintiffs are sold direct by such consignees from their storage warehouses in this state. They are consigned to them for that purpose and not to be used exclusively as samples or for demonstration purposes, and the court finds from the testimony that purchasers were obtained here by the said consignee companies, the cars and trucks on hand being used for demonstration, and the sales were made direct from their warehouses in this state.

[1] Under such circumstances, the goods after reaching the storage warehouse in this state were not in interstate commerce. Sewing Machine Co. v. Brickell, 233 U. S. 304, 34 Sup. Ct. 493, 58 L. Ed. 974. Again, where coal was mined in Pennsylvania and sent by water to New Orleans and sold on the open market on account of the mine owners in Pennsylvania, or even if the coal was not landed in New Orleans, but was sold and transferred there to another vessel bound to a foreign port, the coal was intermingled with property in Louisiana, and the sale was not an interstate transaction. Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 5 Sup. Ct. 1091, 29 L. Ed. 257. There was no error in the exception that the judge did not find that this was interstate commerce.

[2] It is assigned for error that the words in the statute "manufacturers of automobiles" do not include "motortrucks." The definition of automobile is given in 28 Cyc. 24, as follows (which we think is correct):

"An automobile in the sense in which the term has come to be commonly understood, is a motor vehicle, usually propelled by steam, electricity or gasoline, and carrying its motive power within itself. It falls within the appellation of 'carriage' and 'vehicle.'"

[3] Said section 72, c. 231, Laws 1917, imposed license taxes on every manufacturer or other person engaged in the business of selling automobiles in this state. The question intended to be raised by this appeal is the constitutionality of the second proviso in that section:

"Provided further, that if the officer, agent or representative of such manufacturer shall file with the state treasurer a sworn statement showing that at least three-fourths of the entire assets of the said manufacturer of automobiles are invested in any of the following securities or property, viz., bonds of the state of North Carolina or of any county, city or town of said state, or any property situated therein, and returned for taxation therein, the taxes named in this section shall be one-fifth of those named."

The plaintiffs allege that by reason of this proviso the act was in violation of the federal Constitution because:

I. It is in conflict with the interstate commerce clause (article 1, § 8[3]).

II. It is in conflict with article 4, § 2, in that it deprives them of the privileges and immunities of other citizens.

III. It is in conflict with section 1 of amendment 14, in that it denies the plaintiffs the equal protection of the laws.

First. Section 72 is not obnoxious to the interstate commerce clause. In New York v. Roberts, 171 U. S. 658, 19 Sup. Ct. 58, 43 L. Ed. 323, the court says:

"It must be regarded as finally settled by frequent decisions of this court that, subject to certain limitations as respects interstate and foreign commerce, a state may impose such conditions upon permitting a foreign corporation to do business within its limits as it may judge expedient; and that it may make the grant or privilege dependent upon the payment of a specific license tax, or a sum proportioned to the amount of its capital used within the state."

In regard to the contention that the statute discriminated against foreign corporations, the court said:

"If the object of the law in question was to impose a tax upon products of other states, while exempting similar domestic goods from taxation, there might be room to contend that such a distinction was constitutionally objectionable as tending to affect or regulate commerce between the states. But we think that obviously such is not the purpose of this legislation. 'Every corporation, joint-stock company or association whatever, now or hereafter incorporated, organized or formed under, by or pursuant to law in this state or in any other state or country and doing business in this state. * * * shall be liable to and shall pay a tax as a tax upon its franchise or business into the state treasury annually, to be computed as follows.' It will be perceived that the tax is prescribed as well for New York corporations as for those of other states. It is true that manufacturing or mining corporations wholly engaged in carrying on manufacture or mining ores, within the state of New York are exempted from this tax; but such exemption is not restricted to New York corporations, but includes corporations of other states as well, when wholly engaged in manufacturing within the state."

In Brewing Co. v. Brister, 179 U. S. 452, 21 Sup. Ct. 201, 45 L. Ed. 269, it was held that the exemption from tax on sales by the manufacturer in Ohio of intoxicating liquor of his own make was not an illegal discrimination against a foreign corporation which was taxed on sales of its liquor manufactured outside of the state and sold in Ohio.

Section 72 does not tax the plaintiffs or any of them by reason of the manufacture of automobiles, but taxes only selling them in this state, after they arrive here and have become a part of the personal property in this state.

[4] Second. Section 72 does not interfere with the privileges and immunities as citizens of the United States, for it has always been held that the term "citizen," in article 4, § 2, U. S. Constitution, which declares that "the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states," refers to natural persons only, members of the body politic, owing allegiance to the state, and not to artificial persons created by the Legislature and possessing only such attributes as the Legislature has prescribed.

[5, 6] Third. Section 72 does not deny the equal protection of the laws to the plaintiffs. While corporations are held to be persons within the equal protection and due process clauses of the 14th amendment, they are not citizens within the privilege and immunities clause of that section. Western Turf Association v. Greenberg, 204 U. S. 363, 27 Sup. Ct. 384, 51 L. Ed. 520. While probably no manufacturer of automobiles in another state could invest three-fourths of all its assets in bonds of this state, or of any county, city, or town of this state, section 72 does not deny the plaintiffs the equal protection of the law because it confers no benefit on any citizen of this state which is not equally conferred upon a citizen of another state.

[7] That part of the proviso which reduces the selling license tax from $500 to $100 upon the manufacturer who has invested at least three-fourths of his entire assets in any property situated in this state, or in the bonds of this state and its counties and towns, is not in violation of the United States Constitution. When the corporation is not created by this state nor doing business here under conditions that subject it to process issuing from our courts, it is not within the provision of the amendment 14. Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 260, 19 Sup. Ct. 165, 43 L. Ed. 432.

Indeed, the provision is not discriminatory. In Commonwealth v. Armour & Co., 118 Va. 242, 87 S. E. 610, the court of that state sustained a statute imposing a license tax upon all merchants for the privilege of doing business but exempting manufacturers who were already taxed on their capital by that state and offered for sale at the place of manufacture, goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured by them. This was affirmed on writ of error. Armour v. Virginia, 246 U. S. 1, 38 Sup. Ct. 267, 62 L. Ed. 547, already cited. To same purport, New York v. Roberts and Brewing Co. v. Bristol, both cited supra. To same purport, Sugar Refining Co. v. Louisiana, 179 U. S. 89, 21 Sup. Ct. 43, 45 L. Ed. 102.

The contention of the plaintiffs may be summed up in the proposition that the state, having laid a tax of $500 upon the business of selling automobiles in this state, could not reduce the amount to $100 as to those persons or companies who have listed and paid taxes on three-fourths of their property in this state. We think this provision does not violate any clause either of the state or federal Constitution. Indeed, in our state Constitution we have a very similar provision in article 5, § 3:

"The General Assembly may also tax trades, professions, franchises, and incomes, provided that no income shall be taxed when the property from which the income is derived is taxed."

The object is to reduce the license tax for selling automobiles in this state in cases where such seller is already paying a tax to the state of three-fourths of his assets.

Affirmed.

(178 N. C. 394)

BOARD OF COM'RS OF WILKES COUNTY v. PRUDEN et al. (No. 505.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 29, 1919.)

1. STATUTES  $\S$ 97(2)—PUBLIC LOCAL LAWS AS TO HIGHWAY BONDS NOT UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Pub. Loc. Laws 1919, c. 451, authorizing an additional bond issue to complete the improvement of roads in Wilkes county authorized by Pub. Loc. Laws 1915, c. 345, and apportioning the proceeds between the different townships, did not violate Const. art. 2, § 29 (see Pub. Laws 1915, c. 99), as amended in 1916-17 as to local acts authorizing the laying out of highways.

2. STATUTES  $\S$ 97(2)—PUBLIC LOCAL LAWS AS TO BONDS FOR HIGHWAYS CONSTITUTIONAL.

Pub. Loc. Laws 1919, c. 443, authorizing a bond issue to complete the Boone Trail Highway to a certain county line, does not violate Const. art. 2, § 29 (see Pub. Laws 1915, c. 99), as to local acts authorizing the laying out of highways.

3. COUNTIES  $\S$ 174 — BONDS FOR CONSTRUCTION AND IMPROVEMENT OF ROADS.

Pub. Loc. Laws 1915, c. 345, authorizing a bond issue for constructing and improving roads in Wilkes county, is still in force except as amended by Pub. Loc. Laws 1917, c. 63, reducing the bond issue, and Pub. Loc. Laws 1919, c. 451, increasing it and distributing the proceeds between the different townships.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wilkes County; Webb, Judge.

Action by the Board of Commissioners of Wilkes County against Pruden and another, doing business as Pruden & Co. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

The action was brought to test the validity of certain bonds to the amount of $275,000, which have been issued, and contracted to be sold to defendants, by the county of Wilkes, for the purpose of constructing public roads in the said county. Public Local Laws of 1915, c. 345, authorized that county to issue bonds to an amount not exceeding $500,000 for the purpose of "grading, building and constructing public roads there, * * * and otherwise improving and maintaining the same." The act declares in sections 19 and 20 its object to be, "to provide for a uniform, comprehensive, and practicable system of good roads in [the county], calculated in a general way to serve the needs of every section thereof," and then further provides for a wise, judicious, and equitable distribution of the funds derived from a sale of the bonds, so that each township and section of the county will be benefited, and in such a way as will be advantageous to the county as a whole. The bonds were issued and sold to the amount of $250,000, but this fund proved to be insufficient to carry out the scheme as to roads contemplated by the act, resulting from the sudden and large increase in the cost of labor and material necessary for the purpose, which undertaking was to be executed by the Good Roads Commission appointed by the act. That body has since had complete control of the county's road system.

By chapter 63 of the Public Local Laws of 1917, the act of 1915 was amended by reducing the amount of bonds authorized thereby from $500,000, to $250,000 and validating the previous issue of $250,000 in all respects. Section 3 of the act of 1917 provides:

"That except as herein amended the said chapter three hundred and forty-five of the public local laws of nineteen hundred and fifteen shall remain in full force and effect."

Public Local Laws of 1919, c. 451, increased the bond issue of 1915 as reduced in 1917, and authorized an issue of $250,000 in bonds to complete the public roads of Wilkes county, as the proceeds from the former issue of $250,000 had proved insufficient for that purpose. That act provides that the proceeds of the bonds last authorized shall be distributed among the townships of the county, so as to carry out the spirit and intent of the act of 1915; that each section shall receive its proportionate share; and, in order to accomplish this purpose, it is further provided that a certain amount (naming it) shall be applied to paying the expense of laying out and constructing a road in each township, the route or course of the road to be determined by the commission so as "to serve the best interests of the townships."

Public Local Laws of 1919, c. 443, provides for the issue of $25,000 in bonds for the completion of the Boone Trail Highway to the line of Watauga county. There were other provisions, in the acts just mentioned, which need not be set out, as they are not material to the case and the question presented by it.

The commissioners have contracted with the defendants to sell the bonds for $275,000 authorized by both acts of 1919, to them, at a sum agreed upon, and have brought this action to recover the stipulated price. Defendants refused to pay because they allege that the bonds are invalid.

Judge Webb was of the opinion, and so held, that the bonds are valid, and gave judgment for the plaintiff. Defendants appealed.

C. N. Malone, of Asheville, and J. W. Hinsdale, of Raleigh, for appellants.

Joseph M. Prevette, of Wilkesboro, and Hayes & Jones, of North Wilkesboro, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The particular contention of the defendant is that the acts of 1919 are in violation of the Constitution, art. 2, § 29, which prohibits the enactment of "any local, private or special act . . . authorizing the laying out, opening, altering . . . or discontinuing of highways"; but we are of the opinion that this is a misconception of the object and purpose of those laws. It was not intended to require the local authorities to lay out, open, alter, or discontinue any road or highway; but they were passed by the Legislature for the purpose of enabling the local authorities designated in them to issue bonds, and out of the proceeds to pay the expense of constructing roads in the various townships of the county, in order, by special directions, to complete the scheme of road building which was authorized by the Public Local Laws of 1915, c. 345, and this will be apparent to any one who will read the four acts together. The exact location of the roads was left to the good judgment and discretion of the local authorities named in the acts; but, in order to equalize the benefits to accrue to each and every part of the county, the Legislature considered it wise and expedient that the money raised by a sale of the bonds should be distributed upon some fixed basis, or according to a fixed rule, so that this equal apportionment might be the better enforced. It was not passing laws to lay out or construct roads, but to pay for these things by issuing and selling bonds, just as was done in Brown v. Commissioners, 173 N. C. 598, 92 S. E. 502. There is no prohibition in our Constitution, not even since the amendments of 1916-17 were ratified, which prevents the Legislature from passing an act to pay for the construction of roads in the manner prescribed in these statutes. The court, in People v. Banks, 67 N. Y. 568, interpreting a provision of the Constitution of that state, which is similar to article 2, § 29, of our Constitution, with reference to a statute containing language not substantially unlike that in the statutes under consideration, said:

"The act under review does not, in any of its provisions, provide for the altering, opening, or working of a highway in the sense in which those terms were used in the statutes of the state, regulating highways and public roads, or the constitutional provisions now invoked."

Grading, paving, sewerage, and ornamenting were even provided for in this act, since it could not be done by general law. It was held to be within the discretion of the Legislature. See, also, Mills v. Commissioners, 175 N. C. 215, 95 S. E. 481; State v. Lytton, 8 Colo. 563, 9 Pac. 855.

The general road system of Wilkes county was established by the act of 1915, passed before the constitutional amendments of 1916-17 were ratified and took effect, and the statutes in question only provided the means whereby the roads could be constructed and maintained in the most rational and equitable way for the general benefit of the county, and to this end the Legislature authorized the issue of bonds to raise a fund of $275,000 and required that it should be so apportioned to the different sections of the county as to give each one its fair share of the benefit to accrue. The framers of the Constitution certainly did not intend to withhold their sanction from so beneficial a scheme for road improvement. As said in Brown v. Commissioners, supra:

"Such provisions are construed, not to destroy or weaken the power of the General Assembly in its necessary control over the subordinate divisions of the state government, but to prevent cumbering the statute books with a mass of purely private and local legislation."

The Brown Case has been approved in Mills v. Commissioners, supra; Parvin v. Commissioners, 177 N. C. 508, 99 S. E. 432, and at the present term; in Martin County v. Wachovia Bank & Trust Co., 100 S. E. 134; and Surry County v. Same Defendant, 100 S. E. 421. What is held in the Mills Case is peculiarly applicable to the facts now before us, and upon which we are asked to decide as to the validity of these bonds. It was said there:

"It is well understood that our General Assembly, at session after session, was called on by direct legislation to authorize a particular highway or street or to establish a bridge or ferry at some specified place. * * * The Legislature in these cases was in fact called upon to usurp, or rather to exercise, functions which were more usually and properly performed by the local authorities, and it was in reference to local and special and private measures of this character that these amendments were adopted; and, as stated in Brown's Case, supra, it was never intended to prohibit legislation authorizing the raising of proper funds by the sale of bonds or by taxation for measures required for the public good, though such funds should be for improvements in some fixed place or in restricted territory determined upon by local authorities in pursuance of general laws on the subject."

And the language of the court in Brown's Case, supra, is equally and directly pertinent. Speaking of a statute somewhat similar to those upon which we are passing, and of the plain object of the law, the court said:

"An analysis of the act shows that its primary purpose is to authorize the sale of bonds for road purposes in North Cove township, and to require the levying of a tax to pay the interest and principal of the bonds. * * * It only provides the means for constructing and repairing them. * * * Speaking of such legislation as affected by a constitutional provision, * * * the Pennsylvania court, in Re Sugar Notch Borough, 192 Pa. 349, 43 Atl. 985, says: 'The restrictions of the Constitution upon legislation apply to direct legislation, not to the incidental operation of statutes, constitutional in themselves, upon other subjects than with those with which they directly deal.' So in this case, the bond issue being the direct legislation, the fact that it provides that the proceeds of the bonds are to be used for road purposes will not bring it within the prohibition of the constitutional amendment."

Numerous cases are cited in Martin County v. Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. to the same effect.

[2] If the Legislature may provide a fund necessary to lay out and construct roads, we are unable to perceive why it may not also prescribe the rule by which that fund shall be disbursed and distributed in order to effect the best results, when it confines itself, as it has done in this instance, to the control and management of the fund, and does not essay to have done any of the acts prohibited by article 2, § 29, of the Constitution, but leaves these things to be performed by the local authorities in the due exercise of their proper functions. What we have said applies as well to the bonds for $25,000 issued to construct or complete the Boone Trail Highway.

There was one other question presented originally in the case, as to whether the 10 per cent. clause of the "Revaluation Act of 1919" would apply to the bonds for $275,000 issued under the acts of 1919, and upon the validity of which we are passing. We understand from the appellant's brief that this question has been withdrawn from our consideration, and we therefore do not further refer to it.

[3] We have stated fully the provisions of the statute of 1915, not only because it was enacted before the adoption of the amendments of 1916-17, which took effect on January 10, 1917 (Reade v. City of Durham, 173 N. C. 668, 92 S. E. 712), but also because it has been recognized by the act of 1917, amending it, and by the act of 1919, as having always been in force since it was passed, save and except as it was amended by the act of 1917, reducing the amount of the bond issue. The acts of 1919 were intended merely to enforce the will of the Legislature as expressed in the prior statute of 1915, by supplying the means and facilities for doing so.

The result is that the bonds in question are valid obligations of Wilkes county, and there was no error in the judgment of the court to this effect upon the case agreed.

Affirmed.

(178 N. C. 305)

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF ALAMANCE COUNTY v. BOARD OF COM'RS OF ALAMANCE COUNTY. (No. 326.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 22, 1919.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS —19(1)—
APPORTIONMENT FROM STATE PUBLIC SCHOOL FUND.

Where special county school tax levy of 35 cents on $100 of valuation is insufficient for payment of salaries of the teachers of the public schools of the county for the six months' period of school required by Const. art. 9, § 3, county is entitled, under Pub. Laws 1919, c. 102, § 6, to receive from the state public school fund an apportionment sufficient to supply the deficiency.

2. MANDAMUS —117—COMPELLING INCREASE OF TAX LEVY.

Where special county school tax levy of 35 cents on $100 of valuation is insufficient to provide necessary incidental expense and building fund, county may by mandamus under Pub. Laws 1919, c. 102, § 8, require board of county commissioners to exceed 35-cent limit under section 7 without applying for and receiving apportionment from state public school fund under section 6; the making of additional levy not being discretionary with board of county commissioners, and the apportionment from the state fund being applicable only where tax is insufficient to pay the teachers' salaries.

3. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS —10—
DUTY TO ESTABLISH AND MAINTAIN.

Const. art. 9, §§ 2, 3, requiring county to establish and maintain public schools for six months' period, is mandatory.

4. MANDAMUS —72—DISCRETION OF PUBLIC OFFICERS.

A court will not by its compulsory process command an act to be done which involves the exercise of a public officer's discretion, and though it will compel him to perform his plain duty by acting, it will not require him to act in any particular way; for to so do would be taking away his discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alamance County; Devin, Judge.

Mandamus by the Board of Education of Alamance County against the Board of Commissioners of Alamance County. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Civil action heard by Devin, J., in Alamance superior court, the hearing, by consent, being adjourned to his chambers in the city of Durham, where he made the following findings of fact and rendered the following judgment:

"This was a mandamus proceeding instituted by the board of education of Alamance county against the board of commissioners of said county, and was heard before the undersigned judge at chambers at Oxford on the 24th day of July, 1919, and at chambers at Durham on the 15th day of August, 1919. No exception was taken by either side as to any matter of procedure; both plaintiff and defendant appearing with counsel. The cause was heard upon the pleadings and exhibits thereto, affidavits and oral testimony, and the court finds the following facts:

"The court finds that the plaintiff board of education, in accordance with the provisions of chapter 102, Public Laws of 1919, filed with the defendant board of county commissioners, in due form properly verified, the school budget of Alamance county for the school year beginning July, 1919, and ending June 30, 1920. The summary of the items of the budget showed the rate of tax on each $100 assessed value of property necessary for salary fund to be 40 cents, and for the building and incidental fund 10 cents, making a total levy asked of 50 cents. At the May meeting of the board of county commissioners an order was made to levy this rate as asked, but at the meeting on the first Monday in June, 1919, this order was rescinded, and there was included in the levy of the regular county taxes made on this date a levy of 35 cents on the $100 worth of property for special tax for school. In making said levy the Board of County Commissioners made no distinction between salary fund and that for repairs and incidental expenses.

"The court finds from the carefully prepared affidavit of M. C. Terrell, and the other evidence adduced that the teachers' salary fund necessary to be raised to pay teachers' salaries for the year will be substantially the sum stated in the budget, to wit, $54,812. The court finds that the total assessed value of property taxable in Alamance county for the year 1919 will be $14,598,420. Therefore the tax levy of 35 cents would produce, without allowing any deduction for insolvents and expenses of collection, $51,094. This amount will not be sufficient to pay the teachers' salaries.

"The court finds that the budget correctly sets forth the amount that will necessarily be required to provide repairs and additions to school buildings and incidental expenses, all of which the court finds are necessary to carry on and maintain the schools of said county for six months. The correctness of the items of the budget were not controverted by the defendant.

"The court finds that the building fund requirement of $10,600 does not include anything for new school buildings, but is for repairs and additions only to existing school buildings which are rendered necessary to properly house and protect the school children during the ensuing school year.

"The court finds, that the amount for 'administration expenses,' $2,182, and the amount for 'Expenses of operation and maintenance,' $3,049, are reasonable, proper, and necessary.

"The amounts asked for the purpose of refunding borrowed money and for salary of superintendent of public welfare and home demonstrator are not considered necessary to maintain six months' school term, and are omitted from the findings in this case, though they should in some way be provided for.

"The court finds that the amount for 'city schools, building and expense fund,' $4,283, is for repairs and additions to school property and maintenance expenses, which are reasonable and proper expenditures for the housing and protection of school children and necessary to the carrying on and maintaining of a six months' school term in said county for the ensuing year.

"There are other items of incidental expense necessary to correctly meet statutory requirements, but which are not included in the budget, and are therefore not considered in these findings. These necessary requirements total $20,114.

"The court finds that the only 'available funds' to meet these expenditures required for 'building and incidental expense fund' will amount to $11,194 for the year 1919 in Alamance county, this being the total amount that will be derived from poll tax, dog tax, fines, and all other sources.

"It therefore appears to the court that the available funds are insufficient to provide for the incidental expenses and for necessary repairs and additions to school buildings, and that there will be a deficiency of $8,520. Considering that a reduction of $1,250 of this amount may be effected by strict economy and a reduction of estimates, it follows that a certain deficiency of $7,270 will arise, and that there is no other source from which it can be met but by an additional tax levy of 5 cents on the $100 worth of taxable property, and the court finds that an additional levy of special tax of this amount is necessary in order to maintain a six months' school term in said county.

"The court finds that the rate of special tax for school levied in said county, to wit, 35 cents, will be insufficient to maintain schools for six months in every school district in said county as required by the Constitution, and that an additional levy of 5 cents, making the total rate 40 cents on the $100 assessed value of all taxable property in said county, will be necessary for the performance of the duty imposed by article 9, § 3, of the Constitution of North Carolina.

"Therefore, in accordance with provisions of chapter 102, Public Laws of 1919, § 8, upon motion of J. Elmer Long, attorney for plaintiff, it is adjudged that defendant board be required to levy an additional special tax for schools in said county of 5 cents on the $100 worth assessed value of all taxable property in said county."

As the decision of the case depends upon a construction of the following sections of the School Law of the year 1919 (Public Laws of 1919, c. 102), we set them out here for convenience, instead of in the opinion of the court:

"Sec. 6. On or before the first Monday in May of each year the county board of education shall submit an itemized county school budget to the county commissioners, setting forth the amount of money needed to maintain the public schools of the county six months for the succeeding school year. * * * It shall then be the duty of the board of county commissioners, after deducting the amount to be received from the state public school fund, to levy annually a special tax on all property, real and personal, and on all taxable polls, subject to the constitutional limitation of the poll tax, in said county, sufficient to supply the deficiency shown by said budget to be needed for the support and maintenance of the public schools of said county for six months in each school district. The said tax shall be annually levied and collected at the same time and in the same manner as other county taxes are levied and collected, and the funds derived therefrom, together with other school funds in their hands, shall be apportioned and expended by the county board of education for maintaining one or more public schools in each school district for a term of six months in each year: Provided, that no county shall be compelled to levy a special county tax of more than thirty-five cents on every one hundred dollars valuation of property, real and personal, and a corresponding tax on every taxable poll for said purpose, except as provided in section seven of the act; and after every county shall have levied and collected the special county tax to the limit stated above, if the funds derived therefrom may be insufficient therefor, said county shall receive from the state public school fund an apportionment sufficient to bring the school term in every school district to six months.

"Sec. 7. All poll tax, fines, forfeitures, penalties, and all public school revenues, other than that derived from the state public school fund and the special county tax, shall be placed to the credit of the incidental expense fund and the building fund, as provided in the budget, and if this amount is insufficient for these funds, the county board of education may provide in the county school budget for an additional amount not to exceed twenty-five per cent. of the teachers' salary fund, and the county tax may be increased sufficiently beyond the maximum levy of thirty-five cents to provide this amount if it shall appear necessary to the county board of education and the county commissioners.

"Sec. 8. In the event of a disagreement between the county board of education and the board of county commissioners as to the amount to be provided by the county for the maintenance of a six months' school term, and as to the rate of tax to be levied therefor, or in the event of the refusal of any board of county commissioners to levy said tax, the county board of education shall bring action in the nature of a mandamus against the board of county commissioners to compel the levying of such special tax in the manner and form as provided in sections eight hundred twenty-two and eight hundred twenty-four of the Revisal of one thousand nine hundred and five of North Carolina. And it shall be the duty of the judge hearing the same to find the facts as to the amount needed and the amount available from the sources herein specified, which findings shall be conclusive, and to give judgment requiring the county commissioners to levy the sum which he shall find necessary to maintain the schools for six months in every school district in said county. Any board of county commissioners failing to obey said order and to levy said tax shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be prosecuted therefor in the Superior Court by the solicitor of that district."

The defendant, after excepting thereto, appealed from the judgment.

Parker & Long, of Graham, for appellant.
Long & Long, of Graham, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] It must be admitted that there is some confusion in the terms of the statute as to the limit of 35 per cent. Our view is that the dominant idea, and the clear and explicitly expressed purpose, was to provide sufficient funds for the support and maintenance of the public schools in the state for the new constitutional term of six months, instead of for four months, which was formerly the length of the term, as fixed by the Constitution. We must so construe the law as to execute this intention. It seems to be conceded that the levy of 35 cents on the $100 will not be sufficient to take care of teachers' salaries for a six months' term in this county. If that fund is deficient for such purpose, or for "the support and maintenance of the schools," as it is denominated in the act, the county shall receive from the "state public school fund" an apportionment sufficient to supply the deficiency, and provide a fund adequate "to bring the school term to six months." This would appear to be a satisfactory and complete provision for keeping that fund to the required amount. Section 6 of the Acts of 1919, c. 102, provides that no county shall be compelled to exceed the limit of 35 cents on the $100 of property, "except as provided in section 7." We think that the exception therein refers plainly to the further provision in section 7 that the "thirty-five cents" levy may be exceeded to furnish the amount requisite to make up the deficiency in the incidental expense and the building fund mentioned in the latter section, if that fund is inadequate after exhausting all sources from which it comes. It was supposed that the support and maintenance fund had already been fully established.

[2] But the appellee's counsel contends that the limit of 35 cents cannot be exceeded, even to supply any insufficiency in the incidental expense and the building funds, until the county school authorities have applied for and received the apportionment from the state public school fund, which is allowed to the county by the concluding words of section 6. That provision does not take effect unless the fund raised by the tax of 35 cents is insufficient for the purpose designated by section 6. In other words, it is intended to supplement the amount so raised by the levy of 35 cents of the $100 if it falls short of what is necessary to maintain the schools for the six months' period.

This brings us to consider section 8 of the Public Laws of 1919, c. 102, which refers to any differences or disagreements which may arise between the two boards—that is, the county board of education and the board of county commissioners—with reference to the amount needed for the maintenance of a six months' school term, and also as to the rate of taxation therefor, and also what must be done in the event of the refusal of the commissioners to levy the necessary tax. In such cases the board of education is required to bring an action for a mandamus to compel them to comply with the law and perform their duty.

The defendant contends that section 6 and section 8 refer to the salaries of teachers, and the fund to be raised by the 35-cent levy, and it is only where the latter produces an insufficient fund, and there is disagreement between the two boards, that the mandamus will lie, and further that application should first be made for the county's apportionment from the state public school fund before any action can be brought. But this position is manifestly untenable, for one reason, if there are not others, that section 6 requires that the deficiency in the amount derived from the 35-cent tax shall be supplied from the state apportionment fund until a fund shall be realized which will "be sufficient to bring the school term, in every district, to six months." If the amount produced by the levy of 35 cents is to be so supplemented from the state apportionment fund as to make it adequate for a six months' term in each school district, where would there be any necessity for a mandamus? If the 35-cent fund is to be replenished from the apportionment fund, the object of the sixth section would be fully accomplished, and no compulsory process would be needed. If the boards disagree "as to the amount to be raised under section 6, or as to the rate of the tax, or the commissioners refuse to levy the proper tax," it may be that the board of education may proceed, by an action for a mandamus, to force obedience to the requirements of that section, but it is clear, at least to us, that any delinquency on the part of the commissioners, whether it be a failure to act in any material way, under section 6 or under section 7, or a disagreement with the other board, requires the board of education to apply for a mandamus under section 8. Why not? The very same question is raised by a disagreement concerning the proper tax, or rate, under section 7 as under section 6, and it would be strange if the Legislature provided for the one case and did not do so for the other, and the taxes required to be levied under both sections—one as well as the other—were necessary in order to provide for a six months' term. The expense fund and the building fund were essentials in the same sense, and in the same degree. Schools cannot be well conducted without schoolhouses and accessories such as are mentioned in section 7. Article 9, § 3, is just as mandatory in respect to "maintaining in each district one or more public schools for at least six months in every year" as any other provision of that article, and, too, it declares to be criminal a failure of the commissioners to comply with it, and subjects them to indictment. Could it possibly be made more preemptory? Collie v. Commissioners, 145 N. C. 177, 59 S. E. 44. Speaking of the imperative nature of the requirement of article 9, §§ 1, 2, and 3, as to maintaining schools, it was said, at page 184 and 185, of 145 N. C., at page 49 of 59 S. E.:

"It is true the people have agreed to support their government in all its branches by the method of taxation, consisting in reasonable impositions laid upon persons and property, by a standard which they deemed fair and just to all; but one of their leading desires was that their children should receive the advantages of education, so that not only should the government proceed in the exercise of its ordinary functions for their benefit and advantage, but that the people of the state should be elevated in the scale of intelligence and prepared to enjoy the true blessings of liberty and prosperity for which the compact of government was formed, and, moreover, to further advance their welfare and happiness. This was of the first consideration. * * * If there is a deliberately conceived and carefully stated principle in their Constitution, and one which it is perfectly evident [the people] desired to be clearly understood and rigidly enforced, it is that embraced in sections 1, 2, and 3 of article 9 in regard to the schooling of the children of the state. They intended that the state should no longer be debased or retarded in its progress by the ignorance of its people. It is plain that those who wrote these sections knew, as any intelligent citizen knows, that the surest way to obtain good government, and to enjoy it, is to know how to appreciate its blessings and to be able to perpetuate it by a proper and intelligent use of it. When it was, therefore, declared that the people must be educated, it was just as binding an injunction that the means to that end must be supplied by taxation as it was that the counties, or even the state government, should be supported. * * * Why is one essential mandate of the Constitution any more binding, or obedience to it any more obligatory, than another? What the framers of the Constitution meant was this: That the state and county governments should be maintained by taxation (with certain qualifications), which should be laid upon a principle of equation or due proportion between property and taxes, and within a certain limit, but that, in addition to this sovereign power and corresponding duty, so necessary to the vigorous life of the government, there should be another, which is equally vital to its continuance under just and wise laws, and that is the separate and independent right to educate the people, by taxation also, to the extent that it might be necessary to keep open to all the children between certain ages the public schools of the state for 'at least four months in every year.'"

Section 1 of article 9, declares that—

"Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall be forever encouraged."

[8] The language of sections 2 and 3 regarding the establishment and maintenance of schools is mandatory in form and substance. Board of Education v. Commissioners, 150 N. C. 116, 63 S. E. 724, where the question is fully considered.

But the appellant further contends that the levying of the tax and fixing the rate is discretionary, and the board of county commissioners cannot be forced to do either by mandamus, but should be left to the free and untrammelled exercise of that discretion. The position is thus stated in the appellant's brief:

"The only real question in this case is whether the levying of additional taxes to take care of the incidental expense fund and the building fund shown in the budget prepared by the county board of education is vested in the discretion of the county commissioners. The statute distinctly says that additional taxes may be levied for this fund 'if it shall appear necessary to the county board of education and the county commissioners.' These words must of necessity vest the county commissioners with the power to say whether they deem this additional levy necessary. The county board of education must have thought it necessary when they made up the budget, but this language of the statute vests this discretion in both boards, and each board equally."

[4] It cannot be denied that a court will not by its compulsory process command an act to be done which involves the exercise of a public officer's discretion, but what that means is that it will not control the exercise of his discretion, but merely compel him to perform his plain duty by acting, but not in any particular way; for to go beyond this limit would result in taking away his discretion. High on Extr. Legal Remedies (2d Ed.) § 24, puts it this way:

"Whenever such officers or bodies are vested with discretionary powers as to the performance of any duty required at their hands, or when in reaching a given result of official action they are necessarily obliged to use some degree of judgment and discretion, while mandamus will lie to set them in motion and to compel action upon the matters in controversy, it will in no manner interfere with the exercise of such discretion or control or dictate the judgment or decision which shall be reached. * * * An important distinction to be observed in the outset, and which will more fully appear hereafter, is that between duties which are peremptory and absolute, and hence merely ministerial in their nature, and those which involve the exercise of some degree of official discretion and judgment upon the part of the officers charged with their performance. As regards the latter class of duties, concerning which the officer is vested with discretionary powers, while the writ may properly command him to act or may set him in motion, it will not further control or interfere with his action, nor will it direct him to act in any specific manner."

Our decisions are in perfect harmony with the doctrine as just stated. Attorney General v. Justices of Guilford, 27 N. C. 315; Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244; Barnes v. Commissioners, 135 N. C. 27, 47 S. E. 737; Tate v. Commissioners, 122 N. C. 812, 30 S. E. 352; Ewbank v. Turner, 134 N. C. 77, 46 S. E. 508; Glenn v. Commissioners, 139 N. C. 412, 52 S. E. 58; Laughran v. Hickory, 129 N. C. 281, 40 S. E. 46; Burton v. Furman, 115 N. C. 166,

20 S. E. 443; Board of Education v. Commissioners, 150 N. C. 116, 63 S. E. 724; and Edgerton v. Kirby, 156 N. C. 347, at page 350, 72 S. E. 365, at page 366, where we said:

"If a public officer fails to perform his legal duty to the public, mandamus will lie to compel him to do so, if it is a mandatory one, but not to control the exercise of a discretion given to him, for it is the nature of a discretion in certain persons that they are to judge for themselves, and therefore no court can require them to decide in a particular way or review their judgment by way of appeal, or by any proceeding in the nature of an appeal, since the judgment of the persons to whom the discretion is confided by law would not then be their own, but that of the court under whose mandate or compulsion they gave it."

Justice Bynum stated the rule with clearness in Brown v. Turner, 70 N. C. 93:

"Mandamus will lie when the act required to be done is imposed by law, is merely ministerial, the relator has a clear right and is without any other adequate remedy. Moses on Mandamus, 68. But it does not lie where judgment and discretion are to be exercised, nor to control the officer in the manner of conducting the general duties of the office."

If the two boards, or the commissioners, have a discretion in the matter, the rule applies, and the writ of mandamus should not have issued. But we do not see that any discretion exists, or that a case for the application of the rule can possibly arise. The appellant's counsel based his contention on the requirement in the Statute (section 7), the words being those quoted below, that they may increase the levy sufficiently beyond the maximum of 35 cents "if it shall appear necessary" to the two boards that this should be done. If the Legislature had stopped there, the argument of appellant might have some force, but it does not, and expressly provides, as we think, that if they disagree as to the amount of tax that should be levied, which, of course, includes the necessity for it, or as to the rate, a writ of mandamus shall be applied for by the board of education (section 8). An important function of the two boards would be neglected, and the intention of the Legislature would be utterly defeated, under any other interpretation of the statute. We consider that the meaning of the statute is so palpable, as to be entirely free from doubt.

The scheme provided for supporting the public schools in each district for a six months' term, under the mandatory provisions of the Constitution and the requirements of the statute, would prove futile if we should decide otherwise. The language being clear and unmistakable, this canon of interpretation applies:

"Where a law is plain and unambiguous, whether it be expressed in general or limited terms, the Legislature should be intended to mean what they have plainly expressed, and consequently no room is left for construction." United States v. Fisher, 2 Cranch, 399, 2 L. Ed. 304; Abernathy v. Commissioners, 169 N. C. 631, 86 S. E. 577; Sedgwick Stat. Constr. p. 231.

If we so interpret the law, the proceedings below were undoubtedly correct. School Commissioners v. Board of Aldermen of the City of Charlotte, 158 N. C. 191, 73 S. E. 905, fully sustains our view, and somewhat resembles this case in respect to its facts.

The paramount intention was to support and maintain schools for the term of six months, as provided by the Constitution, which was recently amended, and that taxes should be levied to accomplish that purpose.

Affirmed.

(178 N. C. 370)

SMITH et al. v. MOORE et al. (No. 282.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 22, 1919.)

1. WILLS ⇐439—INTENT OF TESTATOR GOVERNS CONSTRUCTION.

In construing a will, the court must search for the intention of the testator, and execute it, if it is not contrary to law.

2. ESTOPPEL ⇐28—BY DEED OF THIRD PERSON.

Where property was left to one for life, with remainder to certain persons if he dies without child or children, or without having left a will, the fact of such person leaving a will is not material on the question as to whether or not he has power to dispose of the property by deed, since a person claiming under the will would be bound or estopped by the deed.

3. INFANTS ⇐23—CONVEYANCE OF LAND.

A minor cannot convey an indefeasible title, and cannot bind himself irrevocably by a contract to convey.

4. WILLS ⇐614(5)—CREATING LIFE ESTATE WITH REMAINDER TO LIFE TENANT'S CHILDREN.

A will providing: "I give and bequeath my estate to be equally divided between my daughters, C. and J., but if J. should die without making a will or without a child or children, then her portion of my estate shall go to C., or the surviving sister, or her children if C. is dead. * * * I wish at the death of C. her portion of my estate to go to her children"—held to give to C. only a life estate, with remainder to her children.

5. WILLS ⇐608(1)—RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE WHERE CONTRARY INTENT CLEAR.

Where the clear purpose of a will was that there should be two distinct and disunited estates, one for the life of one, and the other in remainder to her children, and not that the life estate should unite with the remainder, so that the children would take in the quality, or character, of heirs, or heirs of her body, as a class of persons to take collectively in succession, from generation to generation, as they would take by the canons of descent, the rule in Shelley's Case did not come into play.

6. WILLS §470—CONSTRUCTION AS ENTIRETY.

In construing a will, it must be read as an entirety.

7. WILLS §451—PRESUMPTION OF POSSIBILITY OF ISSUE.

In construing a will, the law presumes that the possibility of issue is not extinct.

8. GUARDIAN AND WARD §42—POWER OF GUARDIAN TO CONVEY LAND.

A guardian cannot sell or part with his ward's interest in land, except by regular judicial proceedings under the statute, so that the court may pass upon the necessity, propriety, or expediency of his doing so.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Hanover County; Calvert, Judge.

Action by Carrie W. Smith and others against Roger Moore and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and the named defendant appeals. Reversed.

It appears that the plaintiff Carrie W. Smith (wife of Herbert Smith) and Janie H. Strange, who are the children of the late Mrs. Bettie Andrews Atkinson, have contracted to sell and convey to the defendant Roger Moore a certain lot of land on Market street, in the city of Wilmington, and to convey to him a good and indefeasible title thereto in fee by deed sufficient for the purpose, and the said Moore promised to pay therefor the sum of $500. Plaintiffs tendered a deed for the lot to Mr. Moore, and he refused to accept it, upon the ground that the plaintiffs could not convey to him thereby a good title in fee, because they did not acquire such a title by the will of their mother, the material portion of which reads as follows:

"I give and bequeath my estate to be equally divided between my two daughters, Carrie W. Smith and Janie H. Strange, but if Janie should die without making a will or without a child or children, then her portion of my estate shall go to Carrie, or the surviving sister, or to her children if Carrie is dead. She, Janie, is privileged to make a will and leave the estate to whom she will. I wish at the death of Carrie W. Smith her portion of my estate to go to her children. If my dear husband should be living when I die I wish him to have my home (corner Fifth and Dock streets, Wilmington, N. C.) as long as he lives, and at his death to be divided between my two daughters, Carrie W. Smith and Janie H. Strange. My daughter, Janie H. Strange, I give my interest in the Front street house we bought together some time ago. That is to be taken out before the estate is divided. My stock and real estate I wish divided between my two daughters."

The will was duly admitted to probate after the death of Mrs. Atkinson (formerly Mrs. Strange). The Judge was of the opinion, and so held, that the plaintiffs could convey a good title by their deed, and rendered judgment accordingly, and the defendant Roger Moore appealed.

A. G. Ricaud, of Wilmington, for appellees.

WALKER, J. [1] We always regret to disagree with the lower court, and especially when our inclination is to concur with it and unfetter titles, so that land may be kept in the channels of commerce. But we must, of course, follow the law and be governed by its principles. In construing this will, we must search for the intention of the testator, and execute her wish as we may discover it to be, if it is not contrary to law, but is a valid one, which is the case here. So the only question is the true meaning and legal effect of the will.

[2, 3] The devise was made contingent by the first clause. It is true that the real property is given to the daughters, to be equally divided between them; but it is further provided that if Janie should die without leaving a will, and without a child or children, then her portion of the estate shall go to Mrs. Smith, her surviving sister, or to her children, if she is dead. Miss Janie took, under this clause, a defeasible fee, the contingency being that she dies without child or children, and without having left a will; but there is a further contingency, that in that event it shall go to Mrs. Smith, if living at Miss Janie's death, and, if not, then to her children. Of course, the fact of her leaving a will would not be material, because, if she did so, the party claiming under her would be bound or estopped by this deed in which she joins. The further contingency, just mentioned, arises: If she does not leave a will, then at her death the estate will go to her sister, or if she be dead at the time, then to her children. If Miss Janie does not marry, or dies without children if she does marry, and leaves no will, it cannot be determined at this time who will be the children of Carrie, if the latter has died before her sister. All of her present children may be dead at that time, and other children, not now living, may be in esse, and they have not, and of course could not, have signed the contract. Besides, one of her living children is a minor, and cannot convey an indefeasible title, and is not a party to the contract, if he could be so as to bind himself irrevocably. His guardian does not profess, in his answer, to surrender any of his rights, but submits the matter to the court, to determine what they are and to adjudge accordingly.

[4] But there is another question. The plaintiffs' counsel seems to concede that, if Mrs. Carrie Smith acquired only a life estate in her mother's land by the will, the plaintiffs cannot comply with their contract and pass a good title by their deed. It is argued with much ability and plausibility that, by a survey of the entire will, it appears that Mrs. Atkinson's purpose was to give to her two daughters a fee simple absolute in her real estate, to be held and enjoyed by them as tenants in common, share and share alike, and this deduction is drawn from the first words and the last words in the will, where it is said she devises it to them without qualification, and that the clause, "I wish, at the death of Carrie W. Smith, her portion of my estate to go to her children," should not be allowed the effect to change the manifest intention which is to be drawn from the other language just referred to. But the trouble with this argument is that she qualified the gift, as expressed in the first part of the will, by the contingent clause which follows it, and by which she limits Miss Janie's share over to her sister, or to her sister's children, if she be dead. The clause just quoted above intervenes the first and last clauses of limitation, and, as we are bound to hold, clearly and unequivocally gives Mrs. Smith a life estate, with remainder to her children at her death. But neither the last nor the first clause is necessarily inconsistent with the creation of this life estate. The property is still divided "between the daughters," though one may take a life estate, with remainder to her children, and the other a defeasible fee. At least, they are not in such irreconcilable conflict as to bring the case within the rule of construction relied on by plaintiffs' counsel, that the last clause takes precedence over those before it in the instrument.

[5, 6] Plaintiffs' counsel cites Taylor v. Brown, 165 N. C. 157, 81 S. E. 137, as an authority to support the rule just mentioned, and to show its application to our case. But a careful reading and consideration of that decision will show that it does not sustain the contention of plaintiffs, but rather tends the other way. The court there said:

"If Elizabeth Taylor did not take a fee simple, the limitation over vested the title at her death in the children of the testator under the fourth paragraph of her will. It is elementary that a will must be so construed as to effectuate the evident intent of the testator. Lynch v. Melton, 150 N. C. 595 [64 S. E. 497, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 684]; Fellowes v. Durfey, 163 N. C. 305 [79 S. E. 621]. The primary purpose is to ascertain the intention of the testator from the language used by him, taking the will as a whole, and not separate parts of it. It is manifest from the context of this will that the testator did not intend to give his wife an absolute estate in his lands under the first clause of his will; otherwise, the words used in the fourth clause would be meaningless and unnecessary. It is the duty of the courts in construing a will to give effect to every part of it, if possible. The testator's children were evidently in his mind when he made his will, and were as much the objects of his bounty as his wife. He evidently intended to provide for the care of his wife as long as she lived and then that his children should share his estate between them."

That case stands very close to ours in its facts and the principles relied on to sustain it, and it is sufficiently like it to control our decision. It would be difficult, if not impossible, to distinguish the two cases. The question there was, What did the testator mean? And the inquiry here is, What did the testatrix mean? If it was held there that Elizabeth Taylor did not get a fee simple, how can it be said here that Mrs. Smith does get one, and not a life estate? The only distinction is that there the remainder was limited to Isham U. Taylor's heirs, while here it is given to Mrs. Smith's heirs. If anything, it is more manifest in our case that Mrs. Atkinson intended the children to be among the principal objects of her bounty, and this is clearer and more evident than it was in Taylor v. Brown, supra, that Isham Taylor's heirs were as much the objects of his bounty as was his wife. In this will she twice mentions the children of Mrs. Smith as those who were favored by her and should share in her bounty, and she gives them the fee; whereas she gives Mrs. Smith, their mother, only the life estate. In the one case she wills the property to them directly, if their mother should not be living at the death of Miss Janie Strange, and the latter has not herself disposed of it, and dies without a child or children, and in the other she limits the estate to them in remainder after their mother's death. There is manifestly no room here for the operation of the rule in Shelley's Case, as it plainly appears that Mrs. Atkinson intended, beyond question, that the children mentioned by her should take under the will as purchasers, and not that the mother should take a fee simple absolute, so that the children should take by descent from her, at her death, if she had retained the property and owned it at that time, as was the case in Whitfield v. Garriss, 134 N. C. 24, 45 S. E. 904. The clear purpose was that there should be two distinct and disunited estates, one for the life of Mrs. Smith, and the other in remainder to her children, and not that the life estate should unite with the remainder, so that the children would take in the quality or character of heirs, or heirs of her body, as a class of persons to take collectively in succession, from generation to generation, as they would take by our canons of descent. This is essential to bring the rule in Shelley's Case into play, as they must take by limitation, and not by purchase; the rule itself declaring that, where the estate is limited over to the "heirs" in fee or in tail, that word shall be one of limitation and not of purchase. 1 Preston on Estates; Wool v. Fleetwood, 136 N. C. 460-470, 48 S. E. 785, 67 L. R. A. 444; Ward v. Jones, 40 N. C. 404; Mills v. Thorne, 95 N. C. 362; Whitesides v. Cooper, 115 N. C. 570, 20 S. E. 295; Nichols v.

Gladden, 117 N. C. 497, 23 S. E. 459; May v. Lewis, 132 N. C. 115, 43 S. E. 550; Smith v. Proctor, 139 N. C. 314, 51 S. E. 889, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 172; Cotten v. Moseley, 159 N. C. 1, 74 S. E. 454, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 768; Jones v. Whichard, 163 N. C. 241, 79 S. E. 503. In Cotten v. Moseley, supra, we said, citing Crockett v. Robinson, 46 N. H. 461, it is the form of the second limitation which determines the application of the rule, and it is so held in Crockett v. Robinson, supra. Under the rule in Shelley's Case, the court said that—"It is not material to inquire what the intention of the testator was as to the quantity of estate that should vest in the first taker. If the limitation were to A. for life, remainder to his heirs in fee simple, without other qualifying words, the actual intention would undoubtedly be that A. should take an estate for life only, and have no power to dispose of the remainder in fee, and negative words saying that A. should take for life only would add nothing to the clearness of the first words. The material inquiry is, What is taken under the second devise? If those who take under the second devise take the same estate that they would take as his heirs, or as heirs of his body, the rule applies. However clear the intention may be to create an estate in A. for life, remainder to his heirs, so that the estate shall go to these persons who are the heirs of A., and descend to his heritable blood in line of descent, the policy of the law, which established the rule in Shelley's Case, did not allow such a limitation. By that rule no person was permitted to raise in another an estate of inheritance, and at the same time make the heirs of that person purchasers." 6 Cruise, 325, 328, 328; Fearn on Con. Rem. 196; Hargrave's Tracts, 551; 4 Kent, 208, 214; Denn v. Puckey, 5 T. R. 299, 303; Richardson v. Wheatland, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 172.

That view of the rule was taken in Nichols v. Gladden, supra, by this court, and it was added that "the material inquiry is, What is taken under the second devise?" But what is said in Jones v. Whichard, supra, a leading authority on this subject, is very appropriate to the special facts of our case and to the form of the devise we are construing. After saying that, in order for the rule to apply where the words are "heirs" or "heirs of the body" (which are stronger words than those here to show descent), they must be used in their technical sense, and carry the estate to them, as an entire class, to take in succession from one generation to another, and must have the effect to pass the same estate to the same person, whether they take by descent or by purchase, the court proceeds to state that:

"Whenever it appears from the context, or from a perusal of the entire instrument, that the words were not intended in their ordinary acceptance of words of inheritance, but simply as a descriptio personarum, designating certain individuals of the class, or that the estate is thereby conveyed to any other person in any other manner or in any quality than the canons of descent provide," the rule in question does not apply, and the interest of the first taker will be, as it is expressly described, an estate for life"

—citing numerous cases, some of them already cited in this opinion, supra. And referring to Whitfield v. Garria, 134 N. C. 24, 45 S. E. 904, and Morrisett v. Stevens, 136 N. C. 160, 48 S. E. 661, after commenting upon Puckett v. Morgan, 158 N. C. 344, 74 S. E. 15, the court continued to say that they were cases where one stock of inheritance was substituted, in certain events, for another, so that the former or ulterior devisees, would take as purchasers, and directly, under the will, from the deviser. The provisions in this will are much plainer to show an intent that the "children" should take in remainder, as purchasers and as immediate objects of the testator's bounty, than were those considered in the cases cited to manifest a purpose that the devisees there should take in that character. No such intention could have been expressed more clearly than by the language of this testatrix in her will, especially if it is read as an entirety, as it should be (Jones v. Whichard, supra, 163 N. C. at page 246, 79 S. E. 503), and when so read we do not have to search long to find the true intent and meaning of the testatrix. We are not combating the position taken by counsel that the word "children" may not sometimes be synonymous with "heirs" or "descendants." Redfield on Wills (3d Ed.) p. 16.

[7, 8] The law presumes that the possibility of issue is not extinct, and that there may be other children of the marriage to share in this property, who, of course, have not signed the contract. Whether we construe the remainder to be vested, or as one, while vested, which will open and let in after-born children, who fulfill the description at the life tenant's death, or to be contingent, as being confined to those children living at the death of the first taker (Irvin v. Clark, 98 N. C. 437, 4 S. E. 30), it is apparent that there will be a defect in the purchaser's title, without considering the other question, previously stated, as to the present minority of one of the children. We held, at this term, in Morton v. Pine Lumber Co., 178 N. C. —, 100 S. E. 322, that a guardian cannot sell, or part with, his ward's interest in land, but must do so, if at all, by regular judicial proceedings, under the statute, so that the court may pass upon the necessity, propriety, or expediency of his doing so.

The court was in error when it construed this will otherwise than we have herein indicated its meaning to be, and for this reason the judgment must be reversed. Whether the property can be sold under the statute relating to contingent estates and interests we have not been asked to declare.

Reversed.

(113 S. C. 1)

GLENN v. WALKER. (No. 10283.)

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 20, 1919.)

1. ADVERSE POSSESSION §104—EVIDENCE IN EJECTMENT BY PURCHASER FROM PROBATE COURT.

In an action to recover possession of land, where plaintiff introduced probate court records relative to settlement of the estate of one who was common source of title of the parties, among which was an order for sale of the land in dispute and a report of sale to plaintiff's remote grantor, and it appeared that the deed from the probate judge to such grantor had been lost, the offer in evidence of a record of a mortgage given by such grantor to the probate judge more than 20 years prior to the action was relevant and competent; for after a lapse of 20 years a grant to such mortgagor would be presumed.

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION §104—EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §139—PRESUMPTION AFTER 20 YEARS AS TO DEED OF EXECUTORS BY ONE AS ATTORNEY IN FACT.

Where two executors were authorized by the will to sell and convey land, and no particular mode of execution was required, they had the right to constitute one of themselves attorney in fact to execute a deed, and the lapse of 20 years raises the presumption that both consented to the execution of such deed.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §145—PRINCIPAL AND AGENT §126(6)—RECITAL OF POWER OF ATTORNEY IN DEED EXECUTED THEREWITH UNNECESSARY.

A deed which appears upon its face to be the joint deed of two executors, executed in the name of both, is valid, though the name of one is signed by his coexecutor as attorney in fact, and though the deed makes no reference to the power under which it was executed, as it is not essential that the deed should recite the power of attorney under which it was executed.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §145—DEED EXECUTED IN REPRESENTATIVE CAPACITY.

The objection that a deed by two executors, to be valid, should be signed by both "as executors," instead of merely using the word "executor," cannot be sustained where it clearly appears upon the face of the deed that they executed it in their representative capacity as executors.

5. TRIAL §194(1)—INSTRUCTIONS ON WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE PROPERLY REFUSED.

A request to charge on weight of evidence in violation of Const. art. 5, § 26, is properly refused.

6. ADVERSE POSSESSION §44—NECESSITY OF CONTINUOUS POSSESSION.

Adverse possession must be continuous.

7. TRIAL §331—VERDICT SUFFICIENTLY CERTAIN AS TO LAND IN ISSUE.

Where complaint in action to recover possession of land was indefinite as to description of land, but plat was admitted in evidence conceded to represent the land in dispute, a verdict, "We find for the plaintiff the land in dispute," is sufficiently certain.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR §1050(1)—EVIDENCE OF PLAT SHOWING TITLE IN THE COMMON SOURCE HARMLESS.

In an action to recover possession of land, an exception assigning error to the introduction of a plat showing title in H. cannot be sustained as prejudicial error where plaintiff and defendant both claimed title from H. as the common source.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court, Spartanburg County; T. S. Sease, Judge.

Action by John P. Glenn against L. P. Walker. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Bomar & Osborne, of Spartanburg, for appellant.

Sanders & DePass, of Spartanburg, for respondent.

GARY, C. J. This action was commenced in 1916 to recover possession of the land described in the complaint.

The defendant denied the allegations of the complaint, except so much thereof as alleges that the plaintiff and the defendant claim from a common source of title, to wit, from W. W. Harris, who died prior to the year 1875, and sets up the defenses of adverse possession and the statute of limitations. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the land in dispute, and the defendant appealed.

[1] The plaintiff, as one of the links in his chain of title, introduced in evidence the records in the probate court relative to the settlement of the estate of W. W. Harris, among which was an order for the sale of his real estate, including the land in dispute, dated the 7th of August, 1875; also report of sale showing that J. R. Little was the purchaser at public outcry. It was admitted that Mrs. Sarah Little, widow of J. R. Little, had searched for a deed from the probate judge to J. R. Little, but that she could not find it, and that she knew nothing about it. Thereupon the plaintiff offered in evidence the record of the mortgage given by J. R. Little to the probate judge, dated the 6th of September, 1875, reciting an indebtedness to the probate judge in the sum of $152 for the purchase money of part of the real estate of W. W. Harris, deceased. The defendant objected to the introduction in evidence of said mortgage on the ground of irrelevancy, and on the ground that it was not competent evidence to prove a legal title.

The following principle was announced in Spears v. Oakes, 4 Rich. 347:

"A mortgage of the premises in dispute was executed by Spears, the plaintiffs' ancestor, to the South Carolina Society, to secure the purchase money; then that that was paid, and satisfaction entered on the record. * * * It was proved that Spears died in possession of the lot. These facts; it is not denied, made out prima facie title in the plaintiffs; but it is said such proof was not conclusive. Concede it, and how does that help the defendant? The jury is bound to respect a prima facie showing, until rebutted, just as much as they would be any other. Indeed, if not rebutted, such a showing establishes the case, and the jury have no right to say, We will not find accordingly. But the plaintiffs' case is not merely prima facie. I think it is conclusively shown that the title of the South Carolina Society was in George T. Spears; the mortgage was by him to the South Carolina Society to pay the purchase money. This was an admission in law that he had the title of the South Carolina Society to the premises, otherwise he had nothing to convey, and thereby mortgage."

Furthermore, after the lapse of 20 years the law presumes that there was a title. Riddlehoover v. Kinard, 1 Hill, Eq. 376; McLeod v. Rogers, 2 Rich. 19; Corbett v. Fogle, 72 S. C. 312, 51 S. E. 884; Young v. McNeill, 78 S. C. 143, 59 S. E. 986; Powers v. Smith, 80 S. C. 110, 61 S. E. 222; Lewis v. Pope, 86 S. C. 85, 68 S. E. 680.

The exception raising this question is overruled.

[2, 3] The will of Benjamin Wofford, from whom the plaintiff traces his title, was offered in evidence. The sixth item thereof, is as follows:

"I hereby fully authorize and empower my executors, hereinafter named, as soon after my death as convenient, to collect all debts due my estate, to sell and convey the real estate at public auction, or private sale, as they may deem best, and make good and sufficient title thereto, and on such terms as they think best, and to divide and distribute the fund, arising under this item of my will as directed in the fifth item of my will."

W. L. Wait and J. N. Holcombe were appointed executors of said will, and both duly qualified. On the 28th of September, 1894, J. N. Holcombe executed an instrument of writing, whereby he undertook to delegate to W. L. Wait, the other executor, all the powers conferred upon him by the will. The defendant's attorneys objected to the introduction in evidence of said instrument on the ground:

"That under the terms of that will and under the law it was incompetent and impossible for J. N. Holcombe to give to W. L. Wait the power to exercise the duties of both executors under the will; that is, for one executor to give to the other the power of sale that was by the terms of the will vested in such coexecutors."

The case of Black v. Erwin, Harp. 411, decides that a power coupled with a trust cannot be delegated to another. But, for reasons hereinafter stated, there was no prejudicial error in admitting the instrument.

The record contains this statement:

"Next was offered book * * * containing record of deed purporting to be from W. L. Wait and J. N. Holcombe, executors, to Mrs. Ella Wofford, of date July 26, 1895. Said recorded deed recites that the indenture 'is between W. L. Wait and J. N. Holcombe, executors of the last will and testament of Dr. Benjamin Wofford, deceased,' and refers to the authority of said executors given under and by the last will and testament of Dr. Benjamin Wofford, deceased, and purports to convey to Mrs. Ella B. Wofford in fee a certain tract of land. * * * The deed is signed: 'W. L. Wait, Executor. [Seal.] J. N. Holcombe, Executor [seal], by W. L. Wait, Attorney in Fact.'"

The defendant's attorneys objected to said deed—

"as being a valid link in plaintiff's chain of title, upon the ground that it was not competent for W. L. Wait to act as attorney, and he could not thereby bind the estate and make a valid deed, and it conveys nothing, because it is not signed in the proper way to convey a legal title, in that, to be valid, it should have been signed by both W. L. Wait and J. N. Holcombe 'as executors.'"

This deed is to be construed without reference to the instrument of writing signed by J. N. Holcombe. The fact that the deed was signed, "J. N. Holcombe, Executor, by W. L. Wait, Attorney in Fact," does not indicate, that its execution was without the approval of Holcombe; on the contrary, it appears upon its face to be the joint deed of Wait and Holcombe, executors. A deed made under a power of attorney must be executed in the name of the principal. Webster v. Brown, 2 S. C. 428; De Walt v. Kinard, 19 S. C. 292; Johnson v. Johnson, 27 S. C. 309, 3 S. E. 606, 13 Am. St. Rep. 636.

When the name of Holcombe was signed by Wait as attorney in fact, it appeared upon its face to be a valid deed, as it was not essential to its validity that the deed should recite the power under which he acted. The rule is thus stated in 22 Enc. of Law, 1012:

"In the execution of a power it is not essential that the donee expressly refer to the power and profess to execute it. If his intention to execute the power is apparent from the instrument or the circumstances surrounding its execution, the instrument will be upheld as an execution of the power, though no reference is expressly made thereto."

Numerous cases are cited in the note to sustain this principle, among which is Lee v. Simpson, 134 U. S. 572, 10 Sup. Ct. 631, 33 L. Ed. 1038, in which the court reviewed the South Carolina cases, as the appeal was from the federal court in South Carolina. Two of the cases therein cited to which we desire to call special attention are: Bilderback v. Boyce, 14 S. C. 528; Moody v. Tedder, 16 S. C. 557.

The last-mentioned case also shows that the deed did not indicate upon its face that its execution by Holcombe was in violation of his trust as executor. The court in that case quoted with approval, the following language from 1 Sugden on Powers, 215:

"It is frequently contended in practice that a devisee of a power cannot execute a deed of appointment by attorney. But the cases by no means authorize this position. They merely establish that the devisee cannot delegate the confidence and discretion imposed in him to another. There the devisee points out the precise appointment which he is desirous should be made; there no confidence, no discretion, is delegated. The appointment is in every respect the exercise of his own judgment, and there cannot be any reason, why he should not be permitted to execute the deed of appointment by attorney. The contrary doctrine would lead to great inconvenience. Where, however, a particular mode of execution is required, it would be difficult to support an execution by attorney."

No particular mode was required in this case. Another reason why the objection to the introduction of the deed in evidence was properly overruled is that more than 20 years had elapsed since the execution of the deed until the commencement of this action, from which the consent of Holcombe will be presumed.

In Riddlehoover v. Kinard, 1 Hill Eq. 376, the court says:

"The lapse of 20 years is sufficient to raise the presumption of a grant from the state of the satisfaction of a bond, * * * or the payment of a legacy, or almost anything else, * * * to quiet the title of property."

In Corbett v. Fogle, 72 S. C. 312, 51 S. E. 884, this court ruled that the lapse of 20 years afforded evidence of acquiescence on the part of those interested in the terms of a deed, and likewise of any fact necessary to give it full force and effect.

The distinction between presumptions of law and of fact is pointed out in the case of Lewis v. Pope, 86 S. C. 285, 68 S. E. 680. The lapse of 20 years raises a presumption of law, and that principle is applicable to this case.

[4] The objection that, in order to be valid, the deed should have been signed by both Walt and Holcombe "as executors," instead of merely using the word "executors," cannot be sustained, as it otherwise clearly appears upon the face of the deed that they executed it in their representative capacity as executors.

What we have said disposes of all the exceptions, except those numbered 10, 11, 18, and 20.

[5] The exception numbered 10 cannot be sustained for the reason that, if his honor the presiding judge had charged as requested, it would have been in violation of article 5, § 26, of the Constitution. Weaver v. Railway, 76 S. C. 49, 56 S. E. 657, 121 Am. St. Rep. 934.

[6] The eleventh exception assigns error on the part of his honor in charging the jury as follows:

"I will call your attention to what is meant by adverse possession. Adverse possession means continuous possession. A mere occasional entry would not be adverse possession. The possession must be continuous."

The rule is well settled that, in order to establish the defense of adverse possession, it is necessary to prove that it was continuous.

[7] The eighteenth exception assigns error in the refusal of the motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict is too indefinite and uncertain to form the basis of a legally enforceable judgment. The description of the land in the complaint is as follows:

"One hundred and fifty acres, more or less, near the city of Spartanburg, bounded on the north by F. H. Knox; on the west by the estate of F. M. Trimmier, Southern Railway, and John B. Cleveland; on the south by John B. Cleveland, Berry Ferguson, and L. P. Walker; and on the east by L. P. Walker and the Waterworks Company—and being a part of the land formerly belonging to the land of W. W. Harris, deceased."

And it is alleged that defendant trespassed on a part thereof next to his own land.

The verdict of the jury was:

"We find for the plaintiff the land in dispute."

There was in evidence the plat, which showed the land in dispute to be a small triangle, containing about twenty-seven one-hundredths of an acre. It appears from the record that both sides conceded at the trial that the plat correctly represented the land in dispute. Clearly the jury intended by their verdict to refer to the plat, and by reference thereto the verdict is made certain.

[8] The last exception assigns error in the introduction of a plat for the purpose of showing title in W. W. Harris. It cannot be successfully contended that there was prejudicial error, as the plaintiff and the defendant claim title from W. W. Harris as a common source.

Affirmed.

HYDRICK, WATTS, FRASER, and GAGE, JJ., concur.

(113 S. C. 19)

HINNANT v. SOUTHERN RY. CO. et al.
(No. 10282.)

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 14, 1919.)

1. CARRIERS ⇐282—RAILROADS ⇐276(4)—
RIDING FREE, WITH CONSENT, UNLAWFUL,
PRECLUDING RECOVERY FOR INJURY.

One riding on the engine of an interstate freight train by permission of the conductor and engineer, without payment of fare, violates the state and federal statutes, and cannot recover for personal injury on theory that he was a licensee.

2. CONTRACTS ⇐138(1)—ILLEGALITY OF CONTRACT.

No action can be based on an illegal contract.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Bamberg County; Thomas S. Sease, Judge.

Action by H. Y. Hinnant against the Southern Railway Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Harley & Blatt, of Barnwell, and B. W. Miley, of Bamberg, for appellants.

Mayfield & Free and Carter & Carter, all of Bamberg, for respondent.

FRASER, J. The essential facts in this case may be briefly stated. The plaintiff entered the cab of the engine of one of defendant's freight trains, to go from Ridgeway to Columbia. The train was an interstate train. The plaintiff's father had been in the employ of the defendant, and the plaintiff testified that he had many times traveled in the way he was traveling on the day in question, without paying fare. The plaintiff said he was on the engine with the consent of the conductor and engineer. On the way there was a collision between the freight train and a work train, in which the plaintiff was seriously injured.

At the close of the testimony for the plaintiff, the defendant moved for a nonsuit and this was refused. At the close of all the testimony, the defendant moved for a direction of a verdict in its behalf, which was also refused. The motions were made on the ground that the plaintiff was not only a trespasser, but was on the train in violation of the statutes, both state and federal.

The trial judge properly held that the plaintiff was on the train in violation of the state and federal Statutes, but refused to direct a verdict.

[1] There is properly but one question in this case, to wit, Can one who is on a train, not merely without warrant of law, but in contravention of law, recover damages for an injury received while so riding? The answer is that he cannot. Ruling Case Law, vol. 6, § 215, p. 817.

[2] We find:

"The general rule that no action can be based on an illegal contract is therefore not open to question."

The plaintiff claims to be a licensee, and therefore under contract.

The Supreme Court of the United States refused to allow a recovery in a similar case. Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. Messina, 240 U. S. 395, 36 Sup. Ct. 368, 60 L. Ed. 709.

Neither the conductor, the engineer, nor the defendant itself can make a contract in violation of law, or waive the requirements of the law. The courts are jealous to see that no discrimination is made directly or indirectly.

The judgment is reversed.

GARY, C. J., and HYDRICK, WATTS, and GAGE, JJ., concur.

(149 Ga. 489)

SOUTHERN EXPRESS CO. v. STATE.
(No. 1321.)

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 16, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⇐138 — TRANSPORTATION FOR MEDICINAL PURPOSES—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

The act of 1917 (Acts Ex. Sess. 1917, p. 7), amending and supplementing the prohibition laws of this state, authorizes a common carrier to transport and deliver to a practicing physician, who is the sole proprietor of a drug store, pure alcohol for medicinal purposes, under certain conditions specified in the act, from one point within the state to another point within the state of Georgia.

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⇐138, 139 — TRANSPORTATION FOR MEDICINAL PURPOSES AND POSSESSION BY COMMON CARRIER.

Under the facts of this case, it was error to hold that the common carrier was guilty of a misdemeanor for transporting pure alcohol shipped by a wholesale druggist living at a point within this state to a practicing physician living at another point within this state, where it appeared that such physician had an office and kept drugs therein for the purpose of compounding his own medicine, and where such alcohol was to be used for medicinal purposes only, and all the conditions of the act relative to receiving and delivering the alcohol had been complied with by the physician and the common carrier. Nor was it illegal under the act of 1917 for such common carrier, under such circumstances, to have pure alcohol in its possession.

Certiorari to Court of Appeals.

The Southern Express Company was convicted of unlawfully transporting and of having control and possession of intoxicating liquors, and from a judgment of affirmance by the Court of Appeals (98 S. E. 272), it brings certiorari. Reversed.

Opinion conformed to 100 S. E. 791.

The Southern Express Company was tried for a misdemeanor under an indictment which contained two counts, the first charging that—

The defendant "did then and there transport, ship, and carry from Valdosta, Ga., to Camilla, Ga., both being points within this state, spirituous, vinous, malt, fermented, alcoholic, and intoxicating liquors and beverages, the last-named point, to wit, Camilla, Ga., being in the county of Mitchell, and said defendant did so transport, ship, and carry said liquors and beverages in the said county of Mitchell."

The second count charged that the Southern Express Company did "unlawfully and with force of arms, in the county aforesaid, have, control, and possess, spirituous, alcoholic, and intoxicating liquors." The case was tried by the presiding judge, to whom it was submitted without a jury, on the following agreed statement of facts:

"The Southern Express Company was a corporation and common carrier at all times herein mentioned. In April, 1917, said express company received for transportation, from the Mashburn Drug Company, which was at all times herein mentioned a wholesale druggist of Valdosta, Ga., at said Valdosta, Ga., one gallon of pure alcohol, to be transported by said Southern Express Company to Dr. H. G. Fussell at Camilla, Ga., in Mitchell county. Said alcohol was not delivered by said express company to Dr. Fussell, but was seized in the office of said express company by the sheriff at Camilla, Ga. Dr. Fussell was at all times mentioned herein a practicing physician of Camilla, Ga., but was not a pharmacist or apothecary holding license as such from the state board of pharmacy, but kept a stock of drugs and medicines, costing at wholesale from $100 to $200, in his office at Camilla, Ga., for use in putting up his own prescriptions and dispensing medicines from his own office, and in his practice of his profession as a doctor of medicine; and said alcohol was wanted by him for medicinal purposes in connection with said stock of drugs and medicines. He had ordered the same from the Mashburn Drug Company of Valdosta, Ga., and the Southern Express Company did transport the same for said Dr. Fussell from said Mashburn Drug Company, which was undertaking to fill said order therefor. Camilla and Valdosta are both points within the state of Georgia, and said alcohol was conveyed from Valdosta, Ga., to Camilla, Ga., and into the county of Mitchell, and was in said Southern Express Company's custody at its office in Camilla, in Mitchell county, for the purpose aforesaid, when seized by the sheriff. Subsequently said Fussell applied in due form to the ordinary of Mitchell county, for a permit to receive said alcohol for medicinal purposes, stating in said application that the business or occupation of applicant was that of a physician, said application being supported in due form by the affidavits of said Fussell and a certificate of two citizens of Mitchell county, as required by law; and said application was approved and granted by said ordinary, and said sheriff then delivered said alcohol to said Fussell. All of the above-stated transactions occurred in the month of April, 1917, and prior to April 11, 1917, the date when said special presentment was returned and filed. Neither said defendant nor any agent or officer thereof intended to violate any law in said transaction, or knew that it was a violation of the law to do any of said things, if it was such in fact."

The trial judge rendered judgment against the defendant, which excepted, and the case was taken to the Court of Appeals. That court affirmed the judgment, one judge dissenting; and the case was brought to this court on a writ of certiorari.

Robt. C. & Phillip H. Alston and H. E. Riddell, all of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

R. C. Bell, Sol. Gen., of Cairo, and F. A. Hooper, of Atlanta, for the State.

HILL, J. (after stating the facts as above). The defendant was indicted and tried in the court below under an act of the General Assembly passed at the extraordinary session of March, 1917 (Acts 1917 [Extra Sess.] p. 7). The caption of this act is as follows:

"An act to amend and supplement the prohibition laws of this state; to make it unlawful to transport, ship, or deliver in this state * * * any spirituous, vinous, malt, or fermented liquors, or other intoxicating liquors or beverages, except alcohol and wine under certain restrictions and limitations; to make it unlawful to have, receive, possess or control any such liquors, except alcohol for medicinal, mechanical and scientific purposes, and wine for sacramental purposes under conditions prescribed; to make it unlawful to distill, manufacture, or make any alcoholic, spirituous, vinous, or malted liquors or intoxicating beverages in this state; to provide for the punishment of violators of the provisions of this act; to provide for the seizure, condemnation, and sale of property used in violation of this act, and for the disposition of the funds arising from such sale; to provide additional fees and costs in cases of conviction for violation of certain provisions of the prohibition laws of this state; to repeal the acts approved November 18, 1915, and of August 19, 1916, and certain portions of the act approved November 17, 1915; and for other purposes."

Section 1 of the act provides, so far as applicable to this case that—

"It shall be unlawful for any common carrier, corporation, firm or individual to transport, ship or carry, by any means whatsoever, with or without hire, or cause the same to be done, from any point without this state to any point within this state, or from place to place within this state, whether intended for personal use or otherwise, any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented or intoxicating liquors, or any of the prohibited liquors or beverages, as are defined in the act approved November 17, 1915, being 'an act to make clearer and more certain' the prohibition laws of this state, etc., or any alcoholic compound or malt or liquors, whether intended for beverage purposes or not, but which can be diluted, and when so diluted may be used as a beverage and will produce intoxication. It shall be unlawful for any corporation, firm, person or individual to receive from any common carrier, corporation, firm, person or individual, or to have, control or possess, in this state, any of said enumerated liquors, * * * save as is hereinafter excepted."

Under section 16 of the act, it is provided that any one violating its provisions shall be punished as for a misdemeanor as provided in section 1065 of the Penal Code of 1910. Section 2 of the act of 1917 provides:

"That nothing herein contained shall prohibit the use of pure alcohol for medicinal purposes, as is prescribed in sections 426, 427, 428, 429, and 430 of the Criminal Code of 1910, said alcohol, however, to be shipped, received and possessed only as is provided in section 3 of this act."

Section 3 of said act is as follows:

"That any common carrier may transport, ship or carry from any point without this state to any point within this state, pure alcohol to be received only by any practicing physician who is the sole proprietor of a drug store, licensed druggists, pharmacists, manufacturers, chartered colleges, chartered hospitals, or state institutions, and to be used only for medicinal, mechanical and scientific purposes not contravening in any way the prohibition laws of this state, under the following conditions: Any practicing physician who is the sole proprietor of a drug store, licensed druggist, pharmacist, manufacturer, chartered college, chartered hospital, or state institution, desiring to have shipped and to receive pure alcohol for said purpose within this state, shall make sworn application to the ordinary of the county of his residence for a permit to receive said alcohol, upon the certificate of two responsible citizens of said county as to his good moral character, in the following form:" (Form omitted.)

[1. 2] The question for decision is whether, under the indictment, the agreed state of facts, and the act above mentioned, construed in connection with sections 426 to 430, inclusive, of the Penal Code of 1910, the defendant, Southern Express Company, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and should, on conviction, be punished accordingly. Under the view that we take of this case, the defendant has been illegally convicted; and, accordingly, we think that the Court of Appeals erred in affirming that conviction. It will be seen from a consideration of the act in question that the Legislature had one main purpose in view with reference to common carriers, and that was to make it unlawful to transport or deliver, in this state, "any spirituous, vinous, malt, or fermented liquors or other intoxicating liquors or beverages, except alcohol and wine under certain restrictions and limitations." It will be perceived that pure alcohol was excepted from the operation of the act. It is true that section 3 provides that—

"Any common carrier may transport, ship, or carry from any point without this state to any point within this state pure alcohol to be received only by a practicing physician who is the sole proprietor of a drug store."

And it is insisted that under the facts of this case the physician to whom the alcohol was delivered, while a practicing physician, was not the sole proprietor of a drug store, as contemplated by section 3 of the act; that he merely kept a few drugs on hand in his office for the purpose of filling his own prescriptions, and therefore that he did not fall within the definition of those to whom alcohol could be shipped and delivered; and that the common carrier, the express company, violated the provisions of that section of the act when it delivered the alcohol to him. Whether the physician in this case is technically the "sole proprietor of a drug store" is immaterial under the facts of this case, inasmuch as the carrier was authorized to deliver the alcohol when it was presented with the application, which had been approved and granted by the ordinary as required by the statute. This had been done. If the common carrier delivers pure alcohol to an individual upon a false or forged application, "knowing the same to be such" or without such application for delivery having been made, etc., such carrier could be punished as prescribed in section 16 of the act of 1917. See section 11 of the act of 1917. On the other hand, if the carrier should deliver the alcohol without the application being presented to it, or without the application being allowed and approved by the ordinary, or delivered it upon a false or forged application, "knowing it to be such," the case would be different. See section 11 of the act, supra. Here the application was regularly issued and approved by the ordinary; and, this being so, the common carrier would be authorized prima facie to deliver the alcohol without committing any offense under the statute. Section 31 of the Penal Code provides that—

"A crime or misdemeanor shall consist in a violation of a public law, in the commission of which there shall be a union or joint operation of act and intention, or criminal negligence."

The agreed statement of facts discloses that the physician to whom the alcohol was shipped made a sworn application to the ordinary of the county of his residence, for permission to receive the alcohol, and that section 3 of the act in this regard was otherwise complied with. When therefore this permit of the ordinary was presented to the common carrier "in due form," approved and granted by the ordinary, nothing else appearing, we do not think that anything in the record would authorize the conclusion that there was an intention on the part of the carrier to violate the act of 1917, or that there was any criminal negligence on its part. The act provides that the application shall be presented to the ordinary in duplicate; and, when approved by the ordinary and presented to the common carrier, that will authorize the common carrier to deliver to the applicant the quantity of pure alcohol therein specified. The common carrier is required to indorse on the certificate the date of the delivery and the quantity of alcohol received on the certificate, and the certificate shall then cease to be authority for the delivery of any further alcohol. No contention is made that these provisions of the act were not complied with in good faith; and, that being true, we think defendant was authorized to deliver the alcohol to the applicant. Under the decision of the Court of Appeals, it was unlawful for the carrier to have the alcohol in its possession; but we cannot agree to this conclusion.

It is argued that the act authorizes pure alcohol to be shipped from a point in another state to a wholesale druggist in this state, but that no shipment of pure alcohol can be made from such wholesale druggist within this state to a retail druggist within the state. The evident purpose of the Legislature was to prohibit the use of alcoholic liquors, etc., for beverage purposes; but it is just as evident that the Legislature intended to allow the use of pure alcohol for medicinal purposes. It would be strange indeed, and inconsistent, to impute to the Legislature the purpose of permitting pure alcohol to be shipped to wholesale druggists within this state, and yet deny to retail druggists the right to have shipped to them pure alcohol from such wholesale druggist. It cannot be said that the Legislature permitted the transportation and shipment of alcohol from other states into this state because of the fact that that was an interstate shipment and therefore it had no power or authority to prevent such shipment. It will be called to mind that the act of 1917 was passed subsequently to what is known as the Webb-Kenyon Act of Congress (Act Cong. March 1, 1913, c. 90, 37 Stat. 699 [U. S. Comp. St. § 8739]), under which the Legislatures of the different states could prohibit the shipment from points without the state to points within the state, notwithstanding its interstate character. Therefore the Legislature, knowing this fact, certainly did not mean to authorize interstate shipments solely for the reason that they had no authority to prohibit it; but, on the contrary, a reading of the entire act of 1917 will clearly show the purpose and intention of the Legislature to except from the operation of the act pure alcohol, whether shipped from points without to points within, or from points within the state to other points within the state. If it be said that the common carrier could ship and deliver only to a physician who is the sole proprietor of a drug store, and that the delivery in this case was not to the sole proprietor of a drug store, and therefore, whether done intentionally or not, that the carrier was guilty of a misdemeanor under the act of 1917, the reply is that the delivery was made upon a permit from the ordinary of the county, which, as already stated, was regular upon its face and purported to be in accordance with the requirements of section 3 of the act of 1917. In addition to what has been said, we think the act of 1917 must be construed in connection with sections 426, 427, 428, 429, and 430 of the Penal Code of 1910. Section 2 of the act expressly provides that nothing therein contained "shall prohibit the use of pure alcohol for medicinal purposes as is prescribed" in the sections just referred to. Section 430 is as follows:

"Nothing in the preceding sections of this article shall be so construed as to prevent wholesale druggists from selling or furnishing alcohol in wholesale quantities to regular licensed retail druggists, or to public or charity hospitals, or to medical or pharmaceutical colleges. All wholesale druggists shall be required to keep a complete record of all their sales of alcohol, which record shall at all times be open for inspection to the regular authorities of such counties or cities in which such wholesale stores are located."

It will be seen from reading this section, which the Legislature in 1917 sought to preserve, that nothing should be so construed as to prevent druggists from selling or furnishing alcohol in wholesale quantities to regular licensed retail druggists, etc.; and that section also provided that wholesale druggists should be required to keep a complete record of all their sales of alcohol which should be open for inspection to the authorities of such counties or cities in which such wholesale stores were located. This was evidently done to protect the public, and in order that such sales under the authority of the law should not be a license to wholesale and retail druggists to sell pure alcohol for any other purposes than those stated. The whole scheme of the prohibition law is obviously to prevent the possession, transportation, and sale of all alcoholic spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors, etc., for beverage purposes; and not for the purpose of preventing pure alcohol from being transported and used for medicinal purposes. It would be an unreasonable construction to say that a wholesale druggist within the state of Georgia could have shipped to him pure alcohol from without the state, and yet he would be deprived of the right to supply such alcohol to a retail druggist within the state, who was to use it solely for medicinal purposes; and that he could not ship it, and no common carrier could transport it, from his place of business within this state to a retail druggist at some other point within this state. Carried to its logical result, this line of reasoning would prevent a wholesale druggist in this state from supplying, or a common carrier from transporting and delivering, pure alcohol to a retail druggist across the street in the same town or city. Under this view, the transporting or possession of such alcohol for the purpose specified in the act of 1917 would be illegal and subject the offender to the penalties provided. Surely the Legislature never intended such construction, and it is the intention of the Legislature that we are to ascertain.

Judgment reversed.

All the Justices concur.

(24 Ga. App. 238)

GEORGIA RY. & POWER CO. v. RYAN et al.
SOUTHERN WOOD PRESERVING CO.
v. SAME.

(Nos. 10842, 10844.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
 Oct. 20, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CARRIERS  $\Leftrightarrow$  820(30)—NEGLIGENCE  $\Leftrightarrow$  61
 (1), 138(2)—ON CONCURRENT NEGLIGENCE,
RECOVERY CAN BE HAD AGAINST EITHER
TORT-FEASOR.

This was an action by a passenger on a street railway against two alleged joint tortfeasors. Petitioner shows that one of the defendants, the street railway company, had, in order to permit her to alight, brought its car to a stop, not at the near side of the street intersection, as required by the city ordinance, but had negligently carried its car a considerable stated distance over and beyond such designated place for stopping, and in thus continuing the progress of the car beyond the point legally designated for stopping it had negligently approached within a dangerously close distance to the rear end of a wagon, to which was hitched a nervous and balking horse. It is alleged that the other defendant, the owner of the wagon, gave to the horse a violent jerk at the time the car was coming to a stop, thus causing the horse to back and the load of the wagon to be projected into the door on the front end of the street car, all of which joint acts of negligence it is alleged resulted in the serious bodily injury to the plaintiff, who at the time of the accident was preparing to alight from the car. The defendant street railway company excepts to the overruling of its demurrer, which sought to strike the petition on the ground that the alleged acts of negligence on its part were not the proximate cause of the injury. A verdict having been rendered against the defendants jointly, each made a motion for a new trial on the general grounds, and exceptions are taken to the overruling of the same. Held, no general, yet precise and inflexible, rule can be laid down with reference to the highly involved and much-discussed subject as to what constitutes the proximate cause of an injury. Consequently each case must depend for solution upon its own particular facts; but it is a well-settled principle of law that, where two concurrent causes operate directly in bringing about an injury, there can be a recovery against either one or both of the responsible parties. The mere fact that the injury would not have been sustained, had only one of the acts of negligence occurred, will not of itself operate to define and limit the other act as constituting the proximate cause, for if both acts of negligence contributed directly and concurrently in bringing about the injury, they together will constitute the proximate cause. Barrett v. Savannah, 9 Ga. App. 642, 72 S. E. 49; Bonner v. Standard Oil Co., 22 Ga. App. 532, 96 S. E. 573, and cases cited. The determination of questions as to negligence lies peculiarly within the province of the jury, and in the exercise of this function the question as to what constitutes the proximate cause of an injury complained of may be directly involved as one of the essential elements and disputed issues in the ascertainment of what negligence, as well as whose negligence, the injury is properly attributable to. White v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 14 Ga. App. 139, 80 S. E. 667. It was not error, therefore, for the judge to overrule the railway company's demurrer to the petition, since it was properly a question of fact, for the jury to determine from the evidence, whether the defendants were guilty of negligence in any of the particulars charged, and, if so, whether the concurrent acts of negligence of both wrongdoers, or the separate acts of either of them, constituted the proximate cause of the injury.

2. NEW TRIAL  $\Leftrightarrow$  70—MOTION ON GENERAL
GROUND PROPERLY DENIED.

There was evidence tending to substantiate the contentions of plaintiff as to each of the grounds of negligence referred to, and the trial court did not err in overruling either of the motions for a new trial, based solely upon the general grounds.

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by Blanche M. Ryan, by next friend, and others, against the Georgia Railway & Power Company and the Southern Wood Preserving Company, as joint tortfeasors. Verdict against defendants jointly, motion of each defendant for a new trial overruled, and they separately bring error. Judgment in each case affirmed.

Colquitt & Conyers, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error Georgia Ry. & Power Co.

E. V. Carter and E. V. Carter, Jr., both of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error Southern Wood Preserving Co.

Alex MacDougald and Hewlett & Dennis, all of Atlanta, for defendant in error Ryan.

JENKINS, P. J. Judgment in each case affirmed.

STEPHENS and SMITH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 290)

GEORGIA RY. & POWER CO. v. RYAN et al.
SOUTHERN WOOD PRESERVING CO.
v. SAME.

(Nos. 10343, 10345.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. INJURY TO CHILD.

The law of these cases is settled by the rulings made in the case of Georgia Ry. & Power Co. v. Ryan, by Next Friend et al. (No. 10342) 100 S. E. 713, this day decided.

2. NEW TRIAL — 70—DENIAL OF MOTION PROPER UNDER EVIDENCE.

There was sufficient evidence to authorize the court to submit to the jury the questions as to the plaintiff's right to recover for necessary expenses, consisting of reasonable physician's bills incurred by him in consequence of the injuries sustained by his minor daughter, and the evidence was sufficient to sustain the verdict rendered covering this element of damages, as well as the loss by the plaintiff of the services of his minor daughter during her minority. The court did not err, therefore, in overruling either of the motions for a new trial.

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Separate actions by J. F. Ryan and others against the Georgia Railway & Power Company and against the Southern Wood Preserving Company. Judgment in each case for plaintiffs, motions for new trial overruled, and defendants in each case bring error. Judgment affirmed in each case.

Colquitt & Conyers, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error Georgia Ry. & Power Co.

E. V. Carter and E. V. Carter, Jr., both of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error Southern Wood Preserving Co.

Alex MacDougald and Hewlett & Dennis, all of Atlanta, for defendant in error Ryan.

JENKINS, P. J. Judgment affirmed in each case.

STEPHENS and SMITH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 210)

SNEAD et al. v. WOOD. (No. 10355.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 9, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER — 18(3)—EXERCISE OF OPTION TO PURCHASE PROPERTY.

An option to purchase property can be "exercised," unless otherwise provided in the option contract, by the mere giving, within the life of the option, of an unconditional notice, by the holder of the option, to the other party or his agent, that the former has elected to purchase the property at the price and upon the terms stated in the option contract.

(a) An option to purchase can be exercised without the payment of the purchase price, or the tender thereof, unless the option contract provides for such payment as a condition precedent to the exercise of the option.

2. BROKERS — 54 — RIGHT TO COMMISSION — EXERCISE OF OPTION.

A broker is entitled to his commissions where, as agent of the owner, he procures a purchaser ready, able, and willing to purchase, and who actually offers to purchase on the terms stipulated by the owner. Civ. Code 1910, § 3587. This provision of the Code applies where the purchaser procured by the broker first buys an option to purchase, and subsequently, within the life of the option, exercises his option by electing to purchase and gives timely and unconditional notice thereof to the other party. In such a case the broker's right to his commissions does not ripen into a cause of action until the option has been actually exercised. As soon, however, as the option has been exercised, his cause of action is complete.

*(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER — 18(3) — UNCONDITIONAL NOTICE OF EXERCISE OF OPTION TO PURCHASE.

A notice to owner by transferee of an option to purchase was an unconditional notice, sufficient as an exercise of the option, where it formally demanded that owner place himself into a position to comply with his contract obligation to make a good title to land covered by contract upon payment of a certain amount, as no particular form of notice is required.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER — 18(3) — ELEMENTS OF ACT OF "EXERCISING THE OPTION."

The elements of the act commonly called "exercising the option" are: First, the decision of the optionee to purchase the property under the terms of the option; and, second, the communication of this decision to the optionor within the life of the option.

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Suit by J. P. Wood against C. C. Snead and others. Verdict for plaintiff, motion for new trial overruled, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Callaway & Howard, of Augusta, for plaintiffs in error.

Wright & Wright & Jackson, of Augusta, for defendant in error.

BROYLES, C. J. This was a suit against the owners of a tract of land to recover a broker's commissions for the lease and sale of the land. Before the sale was consummated, however, by agreement of all parties, the land, instead of being sold, was leased, in the fall of 1911, to the proposed purchaser for a term of five years, beginning January

1, 1912, and ending December 31, 1916. In the lease contract, which was attached to the petition and made a part thereof, it was recited that—

The lessors "hereby grant and sell unto the party of the second part, his heirs and assigns, an option to purchase the property described in paragraph one, at the expiration of this lease, for the price of $35,000. It is understood, however, that while the party of the second part shall during the life of the lease notify the parties of the first part of his intention to buy, that shall not terminate the lease, but that the said party of the second part, his heirs and assigns, shall continue in possession of said property as a tenant and paying the annual rental as above provided."

The original petition set out that the plaintiff negotiated the sale and succeeded in substituting the lease contract, and that Hankinson, the lessee, by Hagler, his assignee, had given timely and proper notice to the defendants that he had exercised the option to purchase the land for $35,000, the price named in the option.

The suit was filed on the 1st day of November, 1916. The defendants demurred to the petition, on the general ground that it set forth no cause of action, and on the special ground that it appeared on the face of the petition that the plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations, for the reason that the alleged services were rendered in the fall of 1911, and his suit was not filed until more than four years after the services were rendered. The court overruled the demurrer, and the defendants excepted pendente lite. By their plea also this question as to bar by the statute of limitations was raised. Subsequently the petitioner offered the following amendment to his petition, which was allowed without objection:

"(e) Petitioner says that it was agreed between himself and the defendants that no part of his commissions for the rental or sale of said property was to become due and payable unless and until the option to buy said land contained in said lease was exercised by the purchaser or his assignee; and that the said purchaser, by J. C. Hagler, the assignee of the rights of J. L. Hankinson under said lease, did on the _____ day of November, 1916, exercise the option to purchase said land, and made a formal demand of said defendants that they make to the said J. L. Hankinson, or his assignee, the said J. C. Hagler, a good and sufficient title thereto upon the payment by the purchaser of the sum of thirty-five thousand dollars ($35,000.00), which sum the said purchaser, J. L. Hankinson by J. C. Hagler, his assignee, was then ready, willing, and able to pay, and did then and there offer to pay, in cash, the said purchase money of $35,000.00 to the said defendant, upon the execution of the said purchaser of a good title to said land; whereupon petitioner's said commissions for the rental and sale of said property then and there first became due and payable by the said defendants to petitioner."

Upon the trial of the case the plaintiff amended the amendment to the petition by adding, after the word "assignee" in the fifth line thereof, the following words:

"That is to say, unless and until the said purchaser, or his assignee, shall, within the time prescribed in said lease, be ready, able and willing to buy, and actually offered to buy said land for the sum of $35,000, stipulated in said lease."

This amendment was objected to by the defendants, upon the grounds that it was inconsistent with the original amendment and was an effort to change the law of an option contract and the legal method of exercising the same by substituting the law of an actual contract of bargain and sale. The court overruled the objections and allowed the amendment, and the defendants excepted pendente lite. The case proceeded to trial and a verdict was returned for the plaintiff for $1,625. The defendants' motion for a new trial was overruled, and to this judgment exceptions were taken.

[1,4] 1. The controlling question in this case is whether the option could be exercised by the optionee or his assignee by the mere giving of a timely notice to the optionor or his agent that he had elected to purchase the property on the terms of the option. It is strongly insisted by learned counsel for the plaintiffs in error that an option cannot be exercised except by the payment of the purchase price, or the tender thereof. We cannot agree with this contention. An option contract to purchase is at first unilateral, and continues so until the optionee exercises his right of election to purchase and gives an unconditional notice thereof to the optionor, whereupon it ripens into a binding promise on the part of the optionor to sell. The "exercise" of an option to purchase is merely the election of the optionee to purchase. The elements of the act commonly called "exercising the option" are: First, the decision of the optionee to purchase the property under the terms of the option; and, second, the communication of this decision to the optionor within the life of the option. An election, other than by the performance of some act, involves merely the giving of notice thereof to the optionor. In the absence of express provisions in the option contract, the election must be made in accordance with the terms implied by law. However, the particular act or acts which constitute an election may be fixed by the terms of the option itself. The kind of notice and the mode of communicating it may also be fixed by the terms of the option contract. The option contract can, of course, provide that, in addition to the communication of the bare fact that the optionee has elected to purchase, a part or the whole of the purchase money must be paid as a condition precedent to the exercise of the option privilege. In such a case the mere notice of an election would be clearly insufficient. On the other hand, if the option contains no stipulation that the whole or any part of the purchase price must be so paid, and provides for notice merely, and contemplates that the price shall be paid after the act of election, when the deed is tendered, the option can be legally exercised without the payment or tender of any part of the purchase price. James on Option Contracts, §§ 102, 105, 719, 801, 809, 813, 839, 844, 901, 914, 915, and authorities cited; 39 Cyc. 1232.

A provision in a lease giving the lessee, "his heirs and assigns," an option to purchase the leased premises, is a covenant running with the land and passes to the assignee of the leasehold term. An assignee of an option contract is the proper person to exercise the option privilege and give the required notice. James on Option Contracts, §§ 607, 802, 804; 39 Cyc. 1247, 1248. Where an option contained in a lease contract gives the lessee the privilege of purchasing the property "at the expiration" of the lease, the lessee can exercise his right of option; that is, by giving unconditional notice that he has elected to purchase the property, at or before the expiration of the lease. James on Option Contracts, § 852. Especially is this true in the instant case, where the option contract contains the following provision:

"It is understood, however, that while the party of the second part shall, during the life of the lease, notify the parties of the first part of his intention to buy, that shall not terminate the lease, but that said party of the second part, his heirs and assigns, shall continue in possession of said property as a tenant and pay the annual rental as above provided."

We think it clear in this case the option could be exercised by the mere giving of a timely unconditional notice that the assignee of the optionee had elected to purchase the land at the price and on the terms stated in the option contract. This ruling is not in conflict with the decisions in Emery v. Atlanta Real Estate Exchange, 88 Ga. 321, 14 S. E. 556; Larned v. Wentworth, 114 Ga. 208, 39 S. E. 855; Phinizy v. Bush, 129 Ga. 479, 59 S. E. 259; or in any of the other cases cited by counsel for the plaintiff in error. While some of those cases contain rather broad statements apparently tending to a contrary holding, those statements should be construed in the light of the particular facts of the case then under consideration, and, when so construed, each of those decisions can be reconciled with the present holding.

[3] The next question, then, is whether the notice given was an unconditional one. That notice was as follows:

"As per our conversation in which you were notified that the contract between J. L. Hankinson and Mrs. Cora C. Snead, Mrs. Elizabeth S. Kersh (now Palmer) and Marion C. Snead, has been transferred to me, since our 'gentlemen's agreement' with you in August last, which, as explained, took the place of an injunction you would obtain for your clients if I did not cease cutting timber on the land leased from your clients, I have cut no timber, notwithstanding there had already been expended more than five thousand dollars above the value of the timber that has been cut in making improvements on the property. These expenditures were made in the confident belief, which I still entertain, that I had a perfect right under said contract to use any timber from said place, or its value, in making such improvements, and the fact that the improvements were made first in no way altered by rights. I consider that the action on the part of your clients constitutes a breach of such contract, and I propose to hold them responsible for all damages caused me thereby, and you will please accept this as formal notice to that effect.

"In preparation for the exercise of the option of purchase, provided for in such contract, I had the title to the land examined, and the report is made to me that your clients are not in a position to comply with their contract and convey a perfect title to such property for the following, among other reasons: If Mrs. Palmer or Mr. Snead should predecease their mother, leaving a child or children, the title of such child or children would not be affected by the deed from the parent, and further, that there is now pending in Columbia superior court a suit for some seven hundred acres of said land. I now make formal demand upon your clients that they place themselves in a position to comply with their obligation in said contract with me to make me a good title to the nineteen hundred acres of land covered by such contract, upon the payment of $35,000. I estimate that the land is worth materially more than that amount, exclusive of the aforesaid improvements I have made and not been reimbursed for, and I will of course hold your clients for all damages that may be suffered by me by the breach of their contract. Please let me have a prompt reply to this, advising first whether your clients still insist upon their demand, with a threat of injunction to enforce it, that I cut no more timber; and, second, whether or not they will be prepared to make me a perfect title upon my payment of $35,000." (Italics ours.)

While the election to purchase must be unconditional, the communication of the fact that the optionee has exercised his option right is not required to be in any particular form—unless so provided in the option contract. Where the communication advises the optionor that the optionee desires to exercise the option and is ready to pay the purchase price, the notice is sufficiently unconditional. James on Option Contracts, §§ 823, 824. A notice of an election to purchase is not made conditional by the optionee criticising the title to the property and demanding that the optionors "place themselves in a position to comply with their obligation in said contract with me to make me a good title to the nineteen hundred acres of land covered by such contract, upon the payment of $35,000." Where it is clearly apparent from the communication that the optionee has elected to purchase the property at the price and on the terms of the option, the notice is sufficient. James on Option Contracts, § 847.

While the notice in the instant case is not as clear and definite as it might be, and while it contains much irrelevant matter, we think the italicized words clearly put the optionors on notice that the assignee of the option had elected to purchase the property at the price and on the terms stated in the option, and that the trial court did not err in so holding.

[2] 2. The provisions of section 3587 of the Civil Code (1910), that a broker's commissions are earned when he procures a purchaser ready, able, and willing to purchase, and who actually offers to purchase on the terms stipulated by the owner, are applicable to a case where the procured purchaser first obtains an option to purchase, and subsequently, within the specified time, exercises the option by electing to purchase and gives an unconditional notice thereof to the optionor. In such a case the broker's right to commissions does not accrue until the option has been exercised. When, however, the option has been exercised, his right of action is complete. 9 Corpus Juris, 604, 605, note 75. See, also, in this connection, Mercer v. Planters' Rice Mill Co., 16 Ga. App. 38, 84 S. E. 492.

Under this ruling the plaintiff's action was neither barred by the statute of limitations nor prematurely brought.

From what has been said above it follows that the original petition was not subject to the demurrer interposed, and that the amendments to the petition were really unnecessary and immaterial. Only one of the amendments was objected to by the defendants, and none of the objections was upon the ground of immateriality. The grounds of the objections made were without merit, and the court did not err in allowing the amendment.

The controlling facts of the case show that the judge tried it under the proper theory of law, and that he committed no material error in his rulings upon the admissibility of evidence, or in his charge to the jury, or in his refusal to give the charges requested by the defendants.

The evidence was sufficient to show a legal assignment of the option to the alleged assignee, and authorized the verdict returned; and none of the special grounds of the motion for a new trial shows cause for a reversal of the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(34 Ga. App. 233)

HEED v. J. O. DORRIS & CO. et al.
(No. 10369.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 20, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CARRIERS  $\Rightarrow$  196—SALE BY CARRIER ON RE-CONSIGNMENT OF INTERSTATE SHIPMENT ON BILL OF LADING.

Even though it be conceded that where the consignee of an interstate shipment of freight proceeds, without notice to the shipper, to re-consign the goods upon the original bill of lading to a third person, and such third person refuses to accept them, that the carrier who transports the goods under the reconsignment can ordinarily recover from the original consignor the freight and demurrage charges which had accrued thereon, provided that it has notified the original consignor with reasonable promptness of such failure to accept (see Jelks v. Philadelphia & Reading Ry. Co., 14 Ga. App. 96, 80 S. E. 216; B. & O. Railroad Co. v. Montgomery, 19 Ga. App. 29, 90 S. E. 740), still, in this case, since it appears from the petition itself that the carrier failed to give notice of such refusal to the original consignor, but proceeded to dispose of the goods and to convert the proceeds to its own use, without showing any reason why the giving of such notice was, under the circumstances, impracticable, the trial court did not err in sustaining the demurrer to its petition in a suit against the original consignor (Bird v. Georgia Railroad, 72 Ga. 655; Merchants' & Miners' Transportation Co. v. Moore, 124 Ga. 482, 52 S. E. 802; Alabama Great Sou. R. Co. v. McKenzie, 139 Ga. 410, 77 S. E. 647, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 18; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Goodwin, 1 Ga. App. 351, 57 S. E. 1070; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Henderson Elevator Co., 18 Ga. App. 279, 88 S. E. 101 [1]; C., N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Malsby Co., 22 Ga. App. 595, 96 S. E. 710 [3].

Error from City Court of Valdosta; J. G. Cranford, Judge.

Action by T. D. Heed, receiver, against J. O. Dorris & Co. and others. Demurrer to petition sustained, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Patterson & Copeland, of Valdosta, for plaintiff in error.

Franklin & Langdale, of Valdosta, for defendants in error.

JENKINS, P. J. Judgment affirmed.

STEPHENS and SMITH, JJ., concur.

$\Rightarrow$  For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

(24 Ga. App. 286)

FLETCHER v. STATE et al. (No. 10634.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS  $\S$ 250 — IN PROCEEDINGS AGAINST STRIKING ANSWER AS FILED TOO LATE ERROR.

Where a proceeding to condemn an automobile is instituted under the provisions of section 20 of the Prohibition Act approved March 28, 1917 (Laws Ga. Ex. Sess. March, 1917, p. 16), and the defendant fails to file any defense within 30 days from the filing of the petition; but where no judgment by default is entered by the court until after the defendant has filed his answer, it is error to dismiss the defendant's answer, filed upon the calling of the case, upon the ground that it was filed too late. See, in this connection, Civ. Code 1910, § 5653; Gordon v. Hudson, 120 Ga. 698, 48 S. E. 131; Pennsylvania Casualty Co. v. Thompson, 123 Ga. 240 (2), 241, 51 S. E. 314; Albany Pine Products Co. v. Hercules Manufacturing Co., 123 Ga. 270, 51 S. E. 297.

2. OTHER PROCEEDINGS.

The error in striking the defendant's answer rendered the further proceedings in the case nugatory.

Error from City Court of Albany; Clayton Jones, Judge.

Proceeding by the State of Georgia against S. T. Fletcher to condemn an automobile under the Prohibition Act. From the striking of his answer, defendant brings error. Reversed.

Pottle & Hofmayer, of Albany, for plaintiff in error.

S. B. Lippitt, Sol., of Albany, for defendants in error.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment reversed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 278)

MANN v. STATE. (No. 10679.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. READING PROVISION OF PENAL CODE TO JURY—PROVOCATION.

When considered in the light of the facts of this case and the entire charge, the court did not err in reading to the jury section 95 of the Penal Code of 1910, including the words "provocation by words, threats, menaces, or contemptuous gestures shall in no case be sufficient to free the person killing from the guilt and crime of murder." Price v. State, 137 Ga. 71, 72 S. E. 908 (7).

2. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$ 1160—APPROVED VERDICT BY TRIAL COURT WILL NOT BE DISTURBED.

The presiding judge was satisfied with the finding of the jury, and this court is not authorized to interfere where there are any facts to support the verdict and no error of law appears.

Error from Superior Court, Appling County; J. P. Highsmith, Judge.

Edgar Mann was convicted of an offense, and from the judgment he brings error. Affirmed.

W. W. Bennett, of Baxley, for plaintiff in error.

Alvin V. Sellers, Sol. Gen., and C. H. Parker, both of Baxley, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 306)

SMITH v. RODDENBERY HARDWARE CO.
(No. 10686.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)PRINCIPAL AND AGENT  $\S$ 77½, New, vol. 3A Key-No. Series — SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION BY AGENT TO RECOVER DEPOSIT.

The plaintiff's petition shows that he entered into a written contract with the defendant, pursuant to the terms of which he deposited $150 for the "right of exclusive sale of Grant motor cars in Thomas county," said deposit to be refunded on his sale of four cars. The sale of the four cars was a condition precedent to the recovery of the deposit, and, there being no allegation that the plaintiff had executed this condition, or any good and valid reason why the same had not been performed, or that the defendant had in any way breached the contract, no cause of action was set forth, and the trial court properly dismissed the petition on demurrer. See Griswold v. Scott, 13 Ga. 210 (2); Kimbrough v. Worrill, 33 Ga. 119; Baker v. Tillman, 84 Ga. 401, 11 S. E. 355; Life Insurance Co. of Virginia v. Procter, 18 Ga. App. 517, 89 S. E. 1088 (2).

Error from City Court of Cairo; L. W. Rigsby, Judge.

Action by E. M. Smith, Jr., against the Roddenbery Hardware Company. Petition dismissed on demurrer, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Titus, Dekle & Hopkins, of Thomasville, for plaintiff in error.

Ledford & Christopher, of Cairo, for defendant in error.

SMITH, J. Judgment affirmed.

JENKINS, P. J., and STEPHENS, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 304)

MULHERIN v. SABEL & ROTHSCHILDS.
(No. 10573.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)SALES ¶53(2)—WHETHER ACCEPTANCE WAS WITHIN REASONABLE TIME FOR JURY.

The petition in this case set out substantially that, by telegrams and letters exchanged between the parties (copies of which were attached to the petition), the defendant entered into a contract to sell a certain described engine to the plaintiffs, for the price of $350, and the only question raised by the general demurrer of the defendant was whether the plaintiffs waited too long—an unreasonable time—in accepting his offer of sale; his letter being dated April 22, 1918, and mailed at Augusta, Ga., to the plaintiffs at Jacksonville, Fla., and the answer by wire being dated April 24, 1918, at Jacksonville, Fla. Held, under the allegations of the petition it was a question of fact, for the jury to determine, whether or not the answer by wire was made within a reasonable time. The court, therefore, did not err in overruling the general demurrer.

Error from City Court of Richmond County; J. O. O. Black, Jr., Judge.

Action by Sabel & Rothschilds against J. P. Mulherin. General demurrer to petition overruled, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Isaac S. Peebles, Jr., of Augusta, for plaintiff in error.

Sam'l H. Myers, of Augusta, for defendants in error.

SMITH, J. Judgment affirmed.

JENKINS, P. J., and STEPHENS, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 307)

HURST v. JORDAN. (No. 10691.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. NEW TRIAL ¶99 — REFUSAL FOR NEWLY DISCOVERED CUMULATIVE AND IMPEACHING EVIDENCE.

Applications for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence are not favored; and where, from the affidavits of the witnesses by whom the new facts are to be proved, it appears that the alleged newly discovered evidence is merely cumulative and impeaching in its nature, and would not likely produce a different result on another trial, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in refusing a new trial on this ground.

2. DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL.

There was ample evidence to authorize the verdict, and the trial judge did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from City Court of Dublin; R. D. Flynt, Judge.

Action between Henry Hurst and Henry Jordan. Judgment for the latter, motion for new trial overruled, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

W. A. Dampier, of Dublin, for plaintiff in error.

T. E. Hightower, of Dublin, for defendant in error.

SMITH, J. Judgment affirmed.

JENKINS, P. J., and STEPHENS, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 277)

SMITH v. CHEROKEE FERTILIZER CO.
(No. 10677.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919. Rehearing Denied
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. ACCORD AND SATISFACTION ¶12(1)—RE-CEIPT IN FULL WITHOUT CONSIDERATION
WORKS NO ESTOPPEL.

If one who has several different demands against another accepts payment of one or more and gives a receipt therefor, there being at the time no mention of the other demands, a mere recital in the receipt that it is in full payment of all claims to date is without consideration so far as relates to an unsettled note signed by the party making the payment and another which was not mentioned nor in the minds of the parties at the time of such settlement, and the signing of the receipt does not estop the holder of the unsettled demand from asserting that demand; nor does the signing of the receipt render it incumbent upon the holder of that demand to refund the money received upon the settlement as to the disputed claims. See Armour v. Ross & Barfield, 110 Ga. 403, 35 S. E. 787 (7).

2. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT ¶12—RE-CEIPT IN FULL NOT AFFECTING CLAIM NOT MENTIONED.

The undisputed evidence in this case is that Cherokee Fertilizer Company had a suit pending against Smith for several thousand dollars, and a settlement of that case was had between the parties and the case marked settled upon Smith's paying certain money and delivering certain stock to Cherokee Fertilizer Company. The payment was made and received in full settlement of that claim. Subsequently the present suit was instituted upon a note signed by Smith and another, which was not mentioned by either of the parties at the time of the settlement. In fact, the attorneys representing both parties testify that neither of them knew about this note. The defendant Smith pleaded that there was a full settlement because of the receipt heretofore referred to. Upon the facts the court did not err in directing a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount of the note sued upon.

Error from City Court of Houston County; A. C. Riley, Judge.

Action by the Cherokee Fertilizer Company against J. A. Smith. Directed verdict for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Feagin & Hancock, of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

Walter De Fore and Jas. C. Estes, both of Macon, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 286)

HIGGINBOTHAM v. CITY OF ROME.
(No. 10314.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 761(3) — CITY'S LIABILITY FOR INJURIES FROM UNINSULATED
WIRE SAGGING OVER PATHWAY.

The petition in this case (a suit for damages for the negligent homicide of the plaintiff's husband) sufficiently set forth a cause of action against the city of Rome. The court erred in sustaining the demurrer and in dismissing the suit. The case of Zettler v. City of Atlanta, 68 Ga. 195, relied on by counsel for the city, is clearly distinguishable from this case.

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; Moses Wright, Judge.

Action by Winnie Higginbotham against City of Rome. Demurrer to petition sustained, and suit dismissed, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

See, also, 99 S. E. 638.

The city of Rome was sued for damages on account of the death of the plaintiff's husband, alleged to have been caused by electricity when he came in contact with an uninsulated wire sagging over a pathway in the city. The plaintiff's petition was dismissed on general demurrer. The petition alleges that this wire was a part of the line of the Rome Railway & Light Company, and had been strung on a glass knob attached to the cross-arm of a pole "erected on the west side of the Summerville road, about 30 or 40 feet on the south side of the Rome & Decatur Railroad trestle." Immediately beneath the wire, and about halfway between the pole and the trestle, was the pathway mentioned above. The pathway had been used by the public for a great number of years, and showed signs of considerable use, "all of which was known to the city of Rome, or by the exercise of ordinary [care] could have been ascertained, for the usage of said pathway was open, notorious, peaceable, and without restriction, and one Poole, who was then in the employment of the city of Rome, guarding its convicts, knew of the existence and usage of said pathway." The insulation of the wire had worn off, and its unprotected condition had existed for several years. On September 2, 1916, the glass knob to which the wire was attached was struck and broken by a rock hurled against it by blasting conducted by the city, and this caused the wire to sag to within four or five feet of the ground just over the pathway mentioned. The breaking of the knob, and the sagging of the wire, and its uninsulated condition were at once brought to the attention of Poole, the city's guard or agent in charge of the blasting, and he requested a person not in the employment of the city to notify the Rome Railway & Light Company of the condition of the wire and to repair it. It remained in this condition until the plaintiff's husband was killed, and the defendant knew that it was in this condition. The plaintiff's husband started to his home some time after 11 o'clock at night on the same date from a store situated about 100 yards from where he was killed, and, as had been his custom for years, "he started to go along the pathway aforesaid, and came in contact with said heavily charged noninsulated wire and was instantly killed." It is alleged that the city of Rome was in charge, possession, and control of the tract of land where he was killed. "The defendant was engaged in widening and straightening the street, which was a public street of said city, at the place contiguous to where said Higginbotham was killed, and in order to widen said street it was necessary to remove the rock at the place where said Higginbotham was killed. When said Higginbotham was killed he was only a few feet from the public street as then in use. The defendant, in doing this work, was carrying out its avowed project of straightening said street."

The petition contains specific allegations of negligence of the city in allowing the wire to hang as close to the pathway as it did, and in the condition in which it was, and in not placing a guard at that point to prevent injury after having discovered that the breaking of the knob had caused the wire to sag. There are also allegations as to the age and earning capacity of the plaintiff's husband, and as to notice of the claim, etc. In the brief of counsel for the defendant in error,

It was contended that the city was under no duty as to the condition of the place at which the plaintiff's husband was killed, and that he was himself at fault in leaving the public street and going at night on a path on private property which proved to be dangerous.

Harris & Harris, of Rome, for plaintiff in error.

Max Meyerhardt, of Rome, for defendant in error.

STEPHENS, J. Judgment reversed.

JENKINS, P. J., and SMITH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 271)

BIRD et al. v. TALIAFERRO COUNTY et al.

TALIAFERRO COUNTY et al. v. BIRD.

(Nos. 10428, 10491.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ¶843(2) — COUNTIES
¶75(4)—CONSIDERATION OF RECOMMENDATION OF TRIAL JUDGE—EXECUTION AGAINST FORMER COUNTY TREASURER.

Without the intervention of a jury and on an agreed statement of facts, this case was submitted to Judge Walker, who rendered the following judgment:

"I find, as a matter of law, that the term of office of Mr. Bird as county treasurer expired with the last minute of the last hour of December 31, 1916, the act of 1915 (Laws 1915, p. 363), having abolished the treasurer's office of said county, to take effect at said time; and therefore that he was not treasurer on January 1, 1917. Not being treasurer on January 1, 1917, I find that Mr. Bird was not entitled to receive from the tax collector of said county the county taxes collected by said collector during December, 1916, which said tax collector was bound to deliver on the first Monday in January, 1917, which was January 1, 1917, to the proper officials or treasury of said county. I find that in view of the foregoing facts the county commissioners, in their settlement with Mr. Bird on January 2, 1917, were not authorized to allow him commissions on said taxes which were in the hands of the tax collector on January 1, 1917. Said commissioners being without authority in law to pay said Bird said commissions on said taxes in their said settlement with him, had on January 2, 1917, they may proceed to collect back from him the commissions on said taxes which were illegally allowed him in said settlement, and their said settlement does not estop them from so doing. I find, as a matter of law, that Mr. Bird is not entitled to commissions on the sum of money he advanced from his own funds to pay county warrants, but because I know same to be a practice followed in a large number of counties in Georgia—for the treasurer to finance the county from his own funds when county funds become exhausted—and because it works no hardship on the county to pay commissions on said funds to the officer making such advances, as they would have to pay commissions later to the officer handling such county warrants with county money, I recommend that the commissions on said sum of $2,194.88, in the amount of $54.87, be credited by the county on the fi fa. which I herein later authorize to proceed. I find that since Mr. Bird had a settlement with the county commissioners on January 2, 1917, and on that date paid them all they demanded of him at that time, he is not a defaulter within the meaning of the law placing a penalty of 20 per cent. interest on defaulting treasurers, and that the county is not entitled to 20 per cent. interest, but is entitled to 7 per cent. interest on said sum of $186.73. In view of these findings of law, it is the judgment of the court that the fi fa. proceed for the collection of the sum of $186.73, with 7 per cent. interest thereon from ——. It is the recommendation of the court, for the reason above set out, that said fi fa. for said amount of $186.73 be credited with the sum of $54.87, being the amount of commissions which might have been earned in handling said sum of $2,194.88, which Mr. Bird used out of his own funds to help finance the county."

We construe this judgment to mean that the execution proceed for $186.73, with 7 per cent. interest thereon, and that what is said in reference to the $54.87 is only a recommendation. This being true, we are not called upon to consider the "recommendation." We agree with the judge in his findings of law that the execution should proceed for $186.73, with interest thereon at 7 per cent.

Error from Superior Court, Taliaferro County; B. F. Walker, Judge.

Proceeding by Taliaferro County and others against W. W. Bird and others. Judgment for plaintiffs that execution proceed for a certain sum with interest, and plaintiffs bring error, and the defendants take a cross-bill of exceptions. Judgment on both bills of exception affirmed.

Alvin G. Golucke, of Crawfordville, and Davison & Lewis, of Greensboro, for plaintiffs in error.

S. H. Sibley, of Union Point, and J. A. Beazley, of Crawfordville, for defendants in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment on both bills of exceptions affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKED, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 281)

EICHHOLZ v. LA ROCHE. (No. 10697.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)CERTIORARI ⇨70(7) — SUSTAINED TO GRANT OF FIRST NEW TRIAL.

The judgment, although authorized, was not demanded by the evidence. Therefore the sustaining of the certiorari, upon the assignment of error that the judgment was without evidence to support it, will not be disturbed, for the reason that the judgment sustaining the certiorari for the first time was in the nature of a first grant of a new trial. See Parker v. Bridges, 22 Ga. App. 58, 95 S. E. 321, and cases there cited.

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; P. W. Meldrim, Judge.

Action between Selig Eichholz and E. M. La Roche. Judgment for the former, certiorari sustained, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Osborne, Lawrence & Abrahams, of Savannah, for plaintiff in error.

Geo. S. Cargill and W. R. Hewlett, both of Savannah, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 306)

THIBADEAU v. POWELL TRUST CO. (No. 10675.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)HOLDING OVER BY TENANT — FINDING OF TRIAL JUDGE.

"In all cases where a tenant shall hold possession of lands or tenements over and beyond the term for which the same were rented or leased to him, or shall fail to pay the rent when the same shall become due, and in all cases where lands or tenements shall be held and occupied by any tenant at will or sufferance, whether under contract of rent or not, and the owner of the lands or tenements shall desire possession of the same, such owner may, by himself, his agents, or attorney in fact, or attorney at law, demand the possession of the property so rented, leased, held, or occupied; and, if the tenant refuses or omits to deliver possession when so demanded, the owner, his agent, or attorney at law, or attorney in fact may go before the judge of the superior court, or any justice of the peace, and make oath of the facts." Civil Code 1910, § 5385.

The judge of the municipal court, who tried the case without a jury, had all the parties and witnesses before him, and from an examination of the testimony we cannot say as a matter of law that there was not some evidence to support each of the elements essential to the maintenance of such a proceeding.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; Geo. L. Bell, Judge.

Action between R. T. Thibadeau and the Powell Trust Company. Judgment for the latter, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

C. Don Miller, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

R. J. Jordan, of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

SMITH, J. Judgment affirmed.

JENKINS, P. J., and STEPHENS, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 276)

OGLESBEE v. STATE. (No. 10660.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919.)(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⇨938(1) — NEWLY DISCOVERED CUMULATIVE AND IMPEACHING EVIDENCE.

The alleged newly discovered evidence upon which the special ground of the motion for a new trial was based is both cumulative and impeaching in its character, and is not such evidence as would probably produce a different result if a new trial were granted.

2. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—RULING ON MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

There was ample evidence to authorize the verdict, and the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Tattnall County; W. W. Sheppard, Judge.

Proceeding between the State and Robert Oglesbee. From the judgment and a denial of his motion for a new trial, Oglesbee brings error. Affirmed.

H. H. Elders, of Reidsville, and Oliver & Oliver, of Savannah, for plaintiff in error.

J. Saxton Daniel, Sol. Gen., of Claxton, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

⇨For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

(24 Ga. App. 375)

BOOTH v. STATE. (No. 10626.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. EXCLUSION OF HEARSAY TESTIMONY.

The court did not err in excluding as hearsay the testimony set out in the first ground of the amendment to the motion for a new trial.

2. WITNESSES  $\S$  321, 400(1) — WHEN IMPEACHMENT OF OWN WITNESS PERMITTED.

The defendant in a criminal case cannot impeach a witness voluntarily called by him, except where he can show to the court that he has been entrapped by the witness by previous contradictory statements. Penal Code 1910, § 1050. This rule applies where the defendant voluntarily calls as a witness one who has been subpoenaed by the state as a witness, but who has not been put upon the stand; and in such a case it is not error for the judge, after the defendant has examined the witness, to refuse to allow the defendant to contradict the witness' testimony, where there is no contention that he (the defendant) was entrapped by the witness by previous contradictory statements. This is true, even though the judge may have inadvertently suggested this procedure to the defendant's counsel.

3. AMENDMENT—MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL.

There is no substantial merit in any of the other grounds of the amendment to the motion for a new trial.

4. OVERRULING OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The evidence amply authorized the conviction, and the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Sumter County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Aaron Booth was convicted of an offense, his motion for a new trial was overruled, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Hixon & Pace, of Americus, for plaintiff in error.

Jule Felton, Sol. Gen., of Montezuma, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 304)

DYER v. CANNON. (No. 10664.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. EVIDENCE  $\S$  317(1)—TESTIMONY INADMISSIBLE AS HEARSAY.

In the trial of a case based upon a distress warrant for rent and a counter affidavit thereto, it was error to admit, over objection, the evidence of the plaintiff in the distress warrant, who testified in his own behalf as follows: "I had a conversation with W. O. King on Sunday morning, the 28th of August, at my lot gate, and King then told me that Dyer [the defendant] had out two bales of cotton, and that he, Dyer, was going to move the two bales of cotton to Macon the next day." This testimony was inadmissible as being hearsay.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT  $\S$  270(12) — EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO SUPPORT VERDICT FOR PLAINTIFF IN DISTRESS.

Without this evidence, which was erroneously admitted, there was no evidence to support the verdict.

*(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)3. LANDLORD AND TENANT  $\S$  270(12) — REMOVAL OF CROPS BY TENANT.

In distress for rent due October 15, 1917, evidence that tenant had gathered some wheat off the farm in the latter part of May, and had it ground and used, or exchanged it for family use, would not support plaintiff's contention, in amendment to his affidavit to procure warrant, that tenant was seeking to remove his crops without plaintiff's consent, and was not substantial enough to authorize a distress warrant, in view of Civ. Code 1910, § 3700.

Error from Superior Court, Twiggs County; J. L. Kent, Judge.

Action by G. F. Cannon against W. G. Dyer, with counter affidavit by defendant. Judgment for plaintiff, motion for a new trial denied, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

L. D. Moore, of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

H. F. Griffin, Jr., and R. A. Harrison, both of Jeffersonville, and Walter DeFore and Jas. C. Estes, both of Macon, for defendant in error.

SMITH, J. G. F. Cannon sued W. G. Dyer for rent due for the year 1917; the amount sued for being $322.50. The affidavit was in the usual form, and the counter affidavit simply denied that the rent was due. An amendment was offered by the plaintiff, in which it was alleged that at the time of the bringing of the distress warrant in this case, the tenant, W. G. Dyer, was seeking to remove his crops from the premises without the consent of the plaintiff. The jury found in favor of the plaintiff, $390 principal and $36.40 interest. The defendant made a motion for a new trial, upon the general grounds, and also upon three special grounds.

[1, 2] In one of the grounds it was complained that the verdict and judgment were for $68 principal and $5.69 interest more than the amount claimed in the distress warrant. In view of the ruling stated in the headnotes,

It is unnecessary to say more with reference to this ground than that the error complained of, if error at all, will not likely recur on another trial, as the plaintiff will have an opportunity to amend his affidavit with reference to the amount claimed as rent. The second ground of the amendment to the motion for a new trial refers to the evidence of G. F. Cannon, relating to a conversation had with one W. C. King on the day preceding the issuance of the warrant, and not in the presence of Dyer, the defendant. This evidence was improperly admitted, it being purely hearsay.

[3] In the third ground of the amendment to the motion for a new trial it is insisted that the verdict is contrary to the evidence and without evidence to support it, in that there was no evidence to show that Dyer, the defendant, had removed or was seeking to remove any of his crop from the premises. The evidence of the conversation between G. F. Cannon and W. C. King having been erroneously admitted, there was no evidence left in the case to sustain the contention of the plaintiff that Dyer had removed or was removing or seeking to remove any of his crop from the premises, and it was admitted by the plaintiff that the rent was not due until October 15, 1917. It is true that there was some evidence to the effect that Dyer, the tenant, had gathered some wheat off of the farm in the latter part of May, and had it ground, using part of it for himself and his family, and exchanging 24 pounds of the flour for 24 pounds of commercial flour, which was used by himself and family; but this evidence was insufficient to support the contention of the plaintiff, which was set out in the amendment to his affidavit to procure the distress warrant. This transaction occurred in May, prior to the suing out of the distress warrant on August 27th, and was not substantial enough to place the defendant in the position where a distress warrant could legally issue against him under section 3700 of the Civil Code of 1910.

Judgment reversed.

JENKINS, P. J., and STEPHENS, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 288)

HARRELL v. TAYLOR. (No. 10330.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶248 — REVIEW OF DEFECT IN AFFIDAVIT FOR ATTACHMENT NOT EXCEPTED TO.

The alleged defect in the affidavit for attachment being one that may be cured by amendment, and no exception thereto having been taken in the court below, it cannot be considered here.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1005(2)—OVERRULING OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

There was some evidence to support the verdict, and no error of law, other than the general grounds, being complained of, the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from City Court of Bainbridge; H. B. Spooner, Judge.

Action between W. H. Harrell and O. L. Taylor. Judgment for the latter, motion for new trial denied, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

Hartsfield & Conger, of Bainbridge, for plaintiff in error.

W. V. Custer, of Bainbridge, and E. E. Cox, of Camilla, for defendant in error.

STEPHENS, J. Judgment affirmed.

JENKINS, P. J., and SMITH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 243)

PARKS v. STATE. (No. 10621.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 9, 1919. Rehearing Denied
Nov. 5, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ¶424(1), 770(2), 825(2)—COURT MUST STATE CONTENTIONS FOR THE STATE AND DEFENDANT.

"While it is the duty of a judge in the trial of a criminal case to state the contentions of both the state and the defendant, still, in the absence of a request for more definite instructions, a statement by the court that the grand jury has returned an indictment against the defendant, charging him with the offense of murder, and that to this the defendant has filed a plea of not guilty, which makes the issue for them to try, sufficiently presents the issue." Faison v. State, 13 Ga. App. 180, 79 S. E. 39. And see Wilensky v. State, 15 Ga. App. 360, 83 S. E. 276. There was no request in this case. Besides, the "contention" of the defendant, which he alleges that the judge failed to charge, was based upon declarations that another was the guilty party. The Supreme Court has held that, "on the trial of one of two persons jointly indicted, the declarations of the other that he alone committed the offense with which they are charged are not admissible in evidence in favor of the accused on trial." Robison v. State, 114 Ga. 445, 40 S. E. 253 (2). And see cases cited in opinion (114 Ga. p. 447, 40 S. E. 253). See, also, Daniel v. State, 65 Ga. 199.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ¶911 — DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL IN DISCRETION OF COURT.

There is some evidence to support the verdict. The trial judge, who has a broad discretion, has refused a new trial, and so do we.

Error from Superior Court, Forsyth County; N. A. Morris, Judge.

Lester Parks was convicted of an offense, his motion for a new trial was denied, and he brings error. Affirmed.

See, also, 98 S. E. 90.

V. & B. Moss, of Marietta, for plaintiff in error.

Jno. T. Dorsey, Sol. Gen., of Marietta, and Wm. Butt, of Blue Ridge, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 256)

BURKHALTER v. CONLEY et al.
(No. 10423.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919. Rehearing Denied
Nov. 5, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

OVERRULING OF CERTIORARI.

The judge of the superior court did not err in overruling the certiorari.

Error from Superior Court, Tattnall County; W. W. Sheppard, Judge.

Action between W. T. Burkhalter and L. P. Conley and others. Judgment for the latter, petition for certiorari overruled, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

H. H. Elders and W. T. Burkhalter, both of Reidsville, for plaintiff in error.

H. C. Beasley and S. B. McCall, both of Reidsville, for defendants in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 288)

BYRD v. FIRST NAT. BANK OF REYNOLDS. (No. 10318.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

EVIDENCE TO SUSTAIN JUDGMENT.

There was evidence to authorize the finding of the jury that the note sued on represented the debt of the defendant, and not that of her husband, and against the defendant's plea of suretyship for her husband's debt.

Error from Superior Court, Taylor County; G. H. Howard, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of Reynolds against Emma Byrd. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

C. W. Foy, of Butler, for plaintiff in error.

STEPHENS, J. Judgment affirmed.

JENKINS, P. J., and SMITH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 303)

YATES & GLADNEY v. FIREMAN'S FUND INS. CO. (No. 10611.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR  $\Leftrightarrow$  843(3)—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL ON REFUSAL TO ORDER NONSUIT NOT REVIEWABLE.

The only ground of the motion for a new trial, other than those which complain of the verdict, assigns error upon the refusal of the court to order a nonsuit. This exception will not be considered, since the motion for a new trial, which was overruled, assigns error on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence and without evidence to support it. See Collins v. Strickland Brothers, 21 Ga. App. 542, 94 S. E. 1035 (3), and cases there cited.

2. REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL.

The evidence authorized the verdict, and there was no error in refusing a new trial.

Error from City Court of Carrollton; Jas. Beall, Judge.

Action between Yates & Gladney and the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company. Judgment for the latter, motion for new trial overruled, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

Leon Hood, of Carrollton, for plaintiffs in error.

Boykin & Boykin, of Carrollton, for defendant in error.

SMITH, J. Judgment affirmed.

JENKINS, P. J., and STEPHENS, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 302)

GREEN v. PROCTOR. (No. 10486.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)REFUSAL OF CERTIORARI—EVIDENCE.

The judgment of the ordinary requiring the removal of obstructions from an alleged private way was sufficiently authorized under the evidence, and the judge of the superior court did not err in refusing to sanction the writ of certiorari.

Error from Superior Court, Upson County;
W. E. H. Searcy, Jr., Judge.

Action between Raleigh Green and Sarah Proctor. Judgment for the latter, certiorari refused, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

Jas. R. Davis, of Thomaston, for plaintiff in error.

JENKINS, P. J. Judgment affirmed.

STEPHENS and SMITH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 376)

COOPER v. STATE. (No. 10717.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 6, 1919.)(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW. §1064½—GROUNDS OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL NOT APPROVED BY COURT NOT REVIEWABLE.

Grounds of a motion for a new trial which are not approved by the trial court cannot be considered by this court.

(a) There is no substantial merit in any of the special grounds of motion for a new trial which have the approval of the trial judge.

2. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The evidence authorized the verdict, which has the approval of the trial judge, and it was not error to overrule the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County;
H. A. Mathews, Judge.

Proceeding between the State and Henry Cooper, and, from the judgment and the denial of his motion for a new trial, Cooper brings error. Affirmed.

Sidney W. Hatcher, of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

John P. Ross, Sol. Gen., of Macon, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 332)

HALL et al. v. McLENDON et al.
(No. 10365.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE §129(3)—BURDEN OF PROOF ON CLAIM BY WIFE OF PROPERTY LEVIED ON AS HER HUSBAND'S.

J. W. and C. I. Hall obtained an execution in the superior court of Emanuel county against S. J. McLendon, which was levied upon a stock of goods in the city of Nashville, Ga.; the entry of levy as made by the sheriff stating that "I have this day levied the within fi. fa. upon the following property [describing it], levied on as the property of S. J. McLendon, and in his possession." Nancy S. McLendon, wife of the defendant in fi. fa., interposed her claim to the goods levied upon, and on the trial of the issue thus formed the plaintiffs proceeded, by introducing their execution, with entry of levy thereon, and after the introduction of evidence by both the plaintiffs and the claimant the jury returned a verdict in favor of the claimant. Held, the court did not err in charging the jury that "however, if you find it was her [claimant's] property, even though the property had been handled by him [the defendant in fi. fa.], if he has been controlling the property, but as a matter of fact it was her property, acquired by her or inherited by her, then I charge you that if she at some particular time may have permitted him to control or handle the property, that would not destroy her right to the property." See Keller v. Mayer, Straus & Baum, 55 Ga. 406; Wells v. Smith & Co., 54 Ga. 262.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR §1046(3) — EXECUTION §194(1)—TRIAL §25(4, 16)—CLAIM—RIGHT TO OPEN AND CLOSE.

While it is true that in a claim case, if it appears that the defendant in fi. fa. was in possession of the property levied upon at the time of the levy, the burden of proof is upon the claimant, and he has the right to open and conclude the case (Bartlett v. Russell, 41 Ga. 196; Powell v. Westmoreland, 60 Ga. 572; Bank v. Harper, 114 Ga. 603, 40 S. E. 717), still, even though the entry of levy shows the defendant in fi. fa. to have been in possession, if the claimant upon the call of the case fails to assume the burden of proof and proceed, and the plaintiff assumes the affirmative, the latter is entitled to open and conclude (James v. Kiser & Co., 65 Ga. 515; Doyle v. Donovan, 76 Ga. 44); for, as was said in Taylor v. Brown, 139 Ga. 797, 77 S. E. 1062(3): "Where, in a claim case, the claimant, before the introduction of evidence commenced, did not admit possession in the defendant in execution, or in any manner claim the right to assume the burden of proof and to open and conclude the argument, but permitted the plaintiffs in execution to assume the burden of proof and to open and conclude the introduction of evidence (each side introducing evidence), it was too late, after the evidence had closed and before the argument began, to assert for the first time the right to the opening and conclusion, on the ground that the entry of levy (which the plaintiff in execution had introduced in evidence) recited that the property was levied on 'as the property of, and in possession of, the defendant.' See, also, Southern Ry. Co. v. Gresham, 114 Ga. 183, 39 S. E. 883(1); Northington v. Granade, 118 Ga. 584, 45 S. E. 447(2); Taylor v. Bank of Tifton, 140 Ga. 45, 78 S. E. 335; Baird v. Hill, 141 Ga. 15, 80 S. E. 281; Morris v. Reed, 14 Ga. App. 729, 82 S. E. 814(4); Wisenbaker v. West Yellow Pine Co., 16 Ga. App. 699, 86 S. E. 46(5).

(a) Under the facts of this case the court erred in permitting the claimant to open and conclude the argument, and while this right is generally an important and valuable one (Widincamp v. Widincamp, 135 Ga. 644, 70 S. E. 566), yet where, as in this case, the verdict as rendered was demanded by the evidence, an erroneous ruling with reference to the right to open and conclude the argument cannot in any event be reversible error. Moore v. Brown, 81 Ga. 10, 6 S. E. 833(3a); Madison Supply & Hardware Co. v. Richardson, 8 Ga. App. 344, 69 S. E. 45(5); Bank of Omega v. Youmans, 21 Ga. App. 284, 94 S. E. 279.

Error from City Court of Nashville; J. D. Lovett, Judge.

Proceedings in fi. fa. by J. W. and C. I. Hall against S. J. McLendon, with claim by Nancy S. McLendon, wife of defendant in fi. fa., to the goods levied upon. Verdict for claimant, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

R. A. Hendricks, of Nashville, for plaintiffs in error.

Jos. A. Alexander, of Nashville, for defendant in error.

JENKINS, P. J. Judgment affirmed.

STEPHENS and SMITH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 424)

EASTERLING v. STATE. (No. 10711.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Nov. 7, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §814(16) — CHARGE ON CONFESSION ERRONEOUS, WHEN NOT SUSTAINED BY EVIDENCE.

"There being no proof of a plenary confession by the accused, but, at most, evidence only of incriminatory admissions, it was such an error to charge the law relating to confessions as to require a grant of a new trial."

Broyles, C. J., dissenting.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

2. CRIMINAL LAW §516—"CONFESSION" DEFINED.

A "confession" is a voluntary admission of guilt of a criminal offense, broadly distinguished from mere admissions of inculpatory facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Confession.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW §406(1)—"ADMISSION" DEFINED.

An "admission," as applied to criminal cases, is the avowal or acknowledgment of facts or circumstances from which guilt may be inferred, and tending only to prove the offense charged, but not amounting to a confession of guilt, and hence broadly distinguished from a confession.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Admission.]

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; P. W. Meldrim, Judge.

Eva Easterling was convicted of an offense, her motion for new trial was denied, and she brings error. Reversed.

N. J. Norman, of Savannah, for plaintiff in error.

Walter C. Hartridge, Sol. Gen., of Savannah, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Caroline Coleman and Eva Easterling were on trial charged with robbery. The state sought to prove a conspiracy between the two women and two men to rob a man named Christopher; that the women had persuaded the victim to carry them in his automobile to a certain point some distance out on one of the suburban roads, and one of them gave a signal to the men, who came up and committed the robbery. On the trial a witness swore that, after the women were arrested, Mrs. Coleman, in the presence of Eva Easterling, freely and voluntarily said:

"They [Coleman and Easterling] were out there with this Greek Christopher, and the Greek wanted her to do something, but which she didn't want to do, and she screamed so that the boys could come up and assist her."

[1] The learned judge construed this statement to be a confession of guilt, and charged the jury on confessions. In doing this we think he erred. It is possible to place two constructions upon the statement of Mrs. Coleman. The one is that she screamed to bring the boys to protect her against the advances of Christopher; and the other, as the state insists, is that she screamed as a signal to the young men to rush up and rob the Greek. Accepting the latter theory, the statement does not amount to a confession, but is only at best an incriminatory admission.

[2, 3] In Riley v. State, 1 Ga. App. 651, 654, 57 S. E. 1031, 1032, this court says:

"A confession is a voluntary admission of guilt of a criminal offense. An admission, as applied to criminal cases, is the avowal or acknowledgment of a fact or of circumstances from which guilt may be inferred, and only tending to prove the offense charged, but not amounting to a confession of guilt. There is a broad distinction between mere admissions of inculpatory facts and confessions of guilt. 'When a person only admits certain facts from which the jury may or may not infer guilt, there is no confession.'

See, also, Lee v. State, 102 Ga. 221, 222, 225, 226, 29 S. E. 264.

"A confession, in criminal law, is a voluntary statement made by a person charged with the commission of a crime or misdemeanor, communicated to another person, wherein he acknowledges himself to be guilty of the offense charged, and discloses the circumstances of the act and the share and participation he had in it." Black's Law Dict. This definition of a confession was adopted and approved by the Court of Appeals of Kentucky in Spicer v. Commonwealth, 51 S. W. 802. 'A confession is a person's admission or declaration of his agency or participation in a crime, and is restricted to admissions of guilt.' 3 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, 439. These definitions of a confession imply an admission of every essential element necessary to establish the crime where-with the defendant is charged. Unless the statement of the defendant is broad enough to comprehend every essential element necessary to make out the case against him, it cannot be said to be an admission of guilt. There is a difference between an incriminating statement and a confession of guilt. In the former only one or more facts entering into the criminal act is admitted, while in the latter the entire criminal act is confessed. There are a number of cases in our own Reports which clearly draw this distinction. Thus it is said by Chief Justice Bleckley in Fletcher's Case: 'There is a very wide distinction between admitting the main fact and admitting some minor or subordinate fact, or series of facts, which could be true whether the main fact existed or not.' Fletcher v. State, 90 Ga. 468 [17 S. E. 100]. To the same effect is Dumas v. State, 63 Ga. 600, and Covington v. State, 79 Ga. 687 [7 S. E. 153]. 'A confession is rather a fact to be proved by evidence than evidence to prove a fact. It is not so much proof that a particular thing took place as it is a waiver by the party charged of his right to have certain facts alleged against him technically proven.' Wharton on Crim. Ev. (9th Ed.) § 623. This conclusion of Mr. Wharton is in line with the decisions of our own court. The distinction in all of our cases is clearly drawn between the effect of admissions of fact from which the guilt of the accused may be inferred and the admission of guilt itself. Incriminating statements, to be the equivalent of a confession of guilt, must be so comprehensive as to include every act necessary to be proved by the prosecution in order to establish the defendant's guilt." Owens v. State, 120 Ga. 298, 299, 48 S. E. 21, 22.

Applying the above rulings to the statement of Mrs. Coleman, it will clearly appear that she made no confession of her guilt, and under no conditions could this be accepted as a confession on the part of Eva Easterlin. The court therefore erred in charging the jury upon the subject of confessions. Owens v. State, supra; Porter v. State, 11 Ga. App. 246, 74 S. E. 1099.

As a new trial is to be had, it will avail nothing to pass upon the other grounds of the motion.

Judgment reversed.

LUKE, J., concur.

BROYLES, C. J. (dissenting). While the trial judge erred in charging upon the law of confessions, he also, in immediate connection therewith, clearly and explicitly instructed the jury as follows:

"See if there has been any confession in this case, and, if there has not been, you will not consider the charge I have given you in regard to confessions."

Furthermore, in my opinion, the evidence fairly demanded the defendant's conviction, and therefore the error in the charge of the court does not require a new trial.

(24 Ga. App. 294)

FLOYD COUNTY v. GRAHAM. (No. 10381.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2. Oct. 20, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CLERKS OF COURTS ⇐28—RENT OF TELEPHONE GRANTED CLERK OF SUPERIOR COURT.

Section 402 of the Civil Code of 1910 makes it the duty of the county authorities in this state to furnish the different county offices with "office supplies generally," and this would include a telephone in the office of a clerk of the superior court, whenever it appears that its installation is reasonably necessary to carry on the legitimate business of that office.

2. CLERKS OF COURTS ⇐28—CLERK OF SUPERIOR COURT ENTITLED TO RECOVER FOR RENT OF TELEPHONE.

The court, therefore, did not err in overruling the demurrer attacking the plaintiff's petition on the ground that he, as clerk of the superior court of Floyd county, had no authority to have installed in his office at the expense of the county a telephone, which he alleged to have been necessary to carry on properly the legitimate county business.

Error from City Court of Floyd County; W. J. Nunnally, Judge.

Suit by S. L. Graham against Floyd County. Demurrer to petition overruled, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Graham Wright, of Rome, for plaintiff in error.

Maddox & Doyal, of Rome, for defendant in error.

SMITH, J. This is a suit by S. L. Graham against Floyd county to recover $30.95; this sum having been paid by him as rent for a telephone installed in his office in the courthouse of the county. Plaintiff's petition shows that he is the clerk of the superior court of Floyd county, as well as ex officio clerk of the city court of said county, and that the telephone in question was installed in his office for the necessary and proper conduct of said office; that the defendant county has failed and refused to pay for the same, but that the aforementioned sum has been paid by him. The defendant interposed a demurrer, to the overruling of which it excepted.

[1] The sole question for adjudication in this case (and this is admitted by counsel for plaintiff in error in his brief) is whether or not a county is liable for a telephone installed in the office of a clerk of the superior court, which instrument is to be used in the necessary conduct of the legitimate business of said office. Section 402 of the Civil Code of 1910 is as follows:

"It shall be the duty of the ordinaries or board of county commissioners, or other county authorities where such boards exist, and who have the management of the revenues of the counties, to furnish coal, wood, lights, furniture, stationery, records, and office supplies in general, for the different county offices of the various counties in this state, at the expense of each county: Provided, that this section shall only apply to the offices of said officers in the various courthouses in said counties."

It will be observed that this section makes it the duty of the county commissioners, or other county authorities, to furnish county officers having offices in the courthouses of the various counties of this state, with "office supplies in general." Is this phrase broad enough to include a "telephone"? We think so. In other words, we construe this section to mean that a county officer having an office in the courthouse is entitled to have all office supplies and equipment reasonably necessary to maintain his office in a modern up-to-date manner, corresponding with offices of similar character responsible for a like amount of work. What bank of to-day would undertake to do business without an adding machine? Could it be reasonably and intelligently contended for a moment that the county commissioners of Fulton county, responsible for an enormous amount of business, should be denied the benefits of an adding machine? What well-organized law office of to-day is without a typewriter? Could any physician enjoying a general practice be without a telephone? To put these questions is but to answer them in the negative. Should not, therefore, a clerk of the superior court be given the universally recognized convenience incident to telephone service, which in this day of rapid progress is absolutely necessary to the proper conduct of any business of importance? We think so; and it is our opinion that the Legislature intended that the term "office supplies in general" should include all necessary office equipment—such as telephones, typewriters, etc.

Our view of the question under consideration is, we think, strengthened by the opinion of Judge Powell in the case of Wood v. Vienna Telephone Co., 8 Ga. App. 209, 68 S. E. 872, wherein he says:

"Telephone service is no longer a luxury; it is a modern business necessity [italics ours]. When it is needed in connection with the matters and things which the county authorities are authorized to maintain and to tax for, they may lawfully contract for it. It then becomes a part of the maintenance and equipment of the public buildings, a part of the expense of courts, of prisoners, of paupers, etc. It becomes a part of the machinery by which the county authorities carry on the legitimate county business, and the authorities may lawfully pay for it out of the county funds."

[2] From what is said above, it is clear that the petition set out a cause of action, and that the trial judge did not err in overruling the demurrer.

Judgment affirmed.

JENKINS, P. J., and STEPHENS, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 262)

MURPHY v. RUGELY. (No. 10544.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EVIDENCE  $\S$ 442(6)—PAROL EVIDENCE AS TO CONTRACT FOR SALE OF LAND INADMISSIBLE.

The court erred in overruling the demurrer to the defendant's answer, and the further proceedings in the case were nugatory.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER  $\S$ 33—DEFAULT IN PROMISE TO FILL IN LOT NOT FRAUD UPON PURCHASER.

A mere promise by a vendor's agent that lot would be filled in, and that purchaser need not pay for it unless it was filled in, and the failure to fill it in after the written contract was executed constituted no fraud upon the purchaser, and afforded him no ground for avoiding payment, where there was no contention that anything was omitted from the writing that was intended to be inserted therein.

Error from Superior Court, Colquitt County; W. E. Thomas, Judge.

Action by L. S. Murphy, for use, etc., against W. E. Rugely. Demurrer to answer overruled, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Jas. L. Dowling and Erle B. Askew, both of Moultrie, for plaintiff in error.

Shipp & Kline and D. P. Starr, all of Moultrie, for defendant in error.

BROYLES, C. J. Parol evidence is inadmissible to add to or vary an unambiguous written contract. Civil Code 1910, § 4268 (1). The written contract in the instant case was unambiguous, and apparently contained all of the agreement between the parties, and could not be varied, or new terms added to it, by proof of a promise made, when and before it was signed, by the agent of the vendors of the property sold to the defendant, that he would fill in with dirt the lot (which was low and swampy), and that the defendant would not have to pay for the lot unless it was so filled in. If at the time of purchasing the lot the defendant desired it filled in, he should have had a stipulation to that effect embodied in the writing. If he had done this, and the vendors had failed to comply with the stipulation, such failure would have constituted a good ground of defense to the present suit. But, having signed a contract which contained no such stipulation and which was unambiguous, he could not show by parol evidence the oral agreement to fill in the lot, without pleading that this agreement was omitted from the writing by fraud, accident, or mistake.

[2] A mere promise by the agent of the vendors that the lot would be filled in, and that the defendant would not be required to pay for it unless it was so filled in, and the failure to fill it in after the written contract was executed, would not constitute a fraud upon the purchaser or afford him any ground for avoiding payment, there being no contention that anything was omitted from the writing that was intended to be inserted therein. Chattanooga R. Co. v. Warthen, 98 Ga. 599 (3, 4), 617, 618, 25 S. E. 988. Furthermore, in the instant case there was no allegation in the defendant's plea that the oral promise about filling in the lot was wrongfully, fraudulently, or deceitfully made. In this respect the case is distinguished from Printup v. Rome Land Co., 90 Ga. 180, 15 S. E. 764, and Thrasher v. Cobb Real Estate Co., 12 Ga. App. 718, 78 S. E. 254, relied on by the defendant in error. Moreover, in each of those cases the only writings were a bond for titles and purchase-money notes, and it was not manifest that those writings were intended to speak the whole contract (Civil Code, § 4268 [1]), while in the instant case there was a detailed and unambiguous contract of sale, executed by both parties and apparently intended to speak the whole contract between them.

[1] It follows from what has been said that the defendant's answer failed to set up a good defense to the suit, and that the court erred in not sustaining the demurrer interposed. The error in the judgment on the demurrer rendered the further proceedings in the case nugatory.

Judgment reversed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 384)

BLACKMON v. STATE. (No. 10830.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 8, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. LARCENY $\S$ 30(1)—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY IN INDICTMENT FOR "COMPOUND LARCENY."

"In indictments for compound larceny, the allegations in reference to the aggravating fact serve to individualize the transaction, and a more general description of the property is permissible in such cases than would be permitted in indictments for simple larceny." Melvin v. State, 120 Ga. 491, 48 S. E. 198; Cannon v. State, 125 Ga. 785, 54 S. E. 692.

(a) Larceny from the house is a larceny of a compound nature. Cannon v. State, supra.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Compound Larceny.]

2. LARCENY $\S$ 30(1) — INDICTMENT SUFFICIENTLY DESCRIBING STOLEN PROPERTY.

In the instant case the indictment charged the defendant "with the offense of larceny from the house, for that said accused, in the county of Fulton and state of Georgia, on the 28th day of March, 1919, with force and arms, did from the office and place of business of Dr. R. C. Mosley, said office and place of business being a house in said state and county, wrongfully, fraudulently, and privately take, steal, and carry away, with intent to steal the same, one typewriter of the value of seventy dollars and the property of the said Dr. R. C. Mosley." The description of the property alleged to have been stolen, when taken in connection with the other allegations of the indictment just quoted, was sufficiently full to withstand a special demurrer. 2 Bishop's New Criminal Procedure, § 700; Sanders v. State, 86 Ga. 717, 12 S. E. 1053; Powell v. State, 88 Ga. 32, 13 S. E. 829(1); Cannon v. State, supra.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. D. Humphries, Judge.

W. H. Blackmon was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

T. C. Battle, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

John A. Boykin, Sol. Gen., and E. A. Stephens, both of Atlanta, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 332)

HENDERSON v. STATE. (No. 10859.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

EMBEZZLEMENT  $\Leftrightarrow$  29—INDICTMENT INSUFFICIENT FOR WANT OF ALLEGATION OF VALUE.

An indictment, drawn under section 193 of the Penal Code of 1910, which alleges that the defendant was intrusted with notes for the purpose of collecting the same, is insufficient as against a special demurrer, unless there be an allegation that the notes are of value. See Davis v. State, 40 Ga. 229. The court erred in overruling the demurrer which attacked the indictment for legal insufficiency in failing to allege that the notes were of value.

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; Moses Wright, Judge.

W. I. Henderson, Sr., was indicted for an offense, his demurrer to the indictment was overruled, and he brings error. Reversed.

M. B. Eubanks, of Rome, for plaintiff in error.

C. H. Porter, Sol. Gen., of Rome, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment reversed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 303)

STEVENS v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY. (No. 10536.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR  $\Leftrightarrow$  189(2)—OBJECTION TO SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION TOO LATE WHEN FIRST RAISED ON APPEAL.

The question of whether or not the petition as amended was properly dismissed, because it failed to allege that the costs in the previous suit had been paid (Civ. Code 1910, §§ 5625, 5626), was not raised in the trial court by plea in abatement, and the allegations of the petition not negating this fact, its sufficiency in this respect cannot be raised for the first time in the reviewing court. Poplarville Sawmill Co. v. Driver & Co., 17 Ga. App. 674, 675, 88 S. E. 36 (2).

2. RAILROADS  $\Leftrightarrow$  344(7)—PETITION IN ACTION FOR PERSONAL INJURY FAILING TO ALLEGE NEGLIGENCE.

The allegations of the petition, construed, as they must be, most strongly against the pleader, fail to show any specific act of negligence by the defendant railway company which is charged as the proximate cause of the injury sued for. It appears from the recitals of fact in the petition that the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury was the balking of his horse, and it is nowhere alleged that the defendant, by any specific act of negligence, caused the balking of the horse and the resulting injury. The court, therefore, did not err in sustaining the general demurrer to the petition and in dismissing the suit.

Error from Superior Court, Liberty County; W. W. Sheppard, Judge.

Action by Richard Stevens against the Seaboard Air Line Railway. General demurrer to petition sustained, and suit dismissed, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

W. C. Hodges, of Hinesville, for plaintiff in error.

Bolling Whitfield, of Brunswick, and N. J. Norman, of Savannah, for defendant in error.

STEPHENS, J. Judgment affirmed.

JENKINS, P. J., and SMITH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 302)

DONALSONVILLE LIVE STOCK CO. v. CORPORATION SERVICE CO. (No. 10483.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Oct. 20, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. TITLE OF HOLDER OF NOTE.

"The title of the holder of a note cannot be inquired into, unless it is necessary for the protection of the defendant, or to let in the defense which he seeks to make." Civ. Code 1910, § 4290.

2. CORPORATIONS  $\Leftrightarrow$  487(1) — REMEDY OF PARTY TO ULTRA VIRES CONTRACT OF CORPORATION.

In this case, the answer of the defendant corporation in the suit on a note executed by it does not set up a defense which would be good even as against the original payee. "After a contract entered into by a corporation has been performed by either of the contracting parties, the fact that the making of the contract involved an unauthorized exercise of corporate power on the part of the company will not constitute a defense to an action brought by the party having performed the contract to recover compensation for a breach of the contract by the other party." Towers Excelsior Co. v. Inman, 96 Ga. 506, 23 S. E. 418; Johnson v. Mercantile Trust Co., 94 Ga. 324, 21 S. E. 576.

3. JURY  $\Leftrightarrow$  150 — TIME FOR OBJECTION TO FAILURE TO SWEAR JUROR.

"After the rendition of a verdict in a civil case it was too late to object that one or more of the jurors who tried the case had not been sworn, even though this fact was not known by the losing party or his counsel before the verdict was rendered." Towns v. Rome Railway, etc., Co., 19 Ga. App. 457, 91 S. E. 790, citing Slaughter v. State, 100 Ga. 323, 28 S. E. 159, in which latter case it was said: "In so far as it may be gathered from any of the above authorities that a failure to swear one, or more, or all, of the jurors trying a civil case would be fatal to the verdict rendered, even where the losing party knew of such failure before the trial ended, and yet made no objection or complaint, we do not wish to be understood as now agreeing to such a conclusion. Our present decision is limited to the question before us as it relates to criminal cases."

Error from City Court of Bainbridge; John R. Wilson, Judge pro hac vice.

Action between the Donalsonville Live Stock Company and the Corporation Service Company. Judgment for the latter, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

W. V. Custer, of Bainbridge, for plaintiff in error.

J. C. Hale, of Bainbridge, for defendant in error.

JENKINS, P. J. Judgment affirmed.

STEPHENS and SMITH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 250)

CARMICHAEL v. FIRST FARMERS' BANK et al. (No. 10320.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Oct. 10, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DENIAL OF MOTION TO DISMISS BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

The provisions of Civil Code 1910, § 6160, par. 3, as to the waiver of service of a copy of the bill of exceptions, were complied with, and the motion to dismiss the bill of exceptions is denied.

2. PARTIES  $\S$  93(2)—MOTION TO STRIKE INTERVENER AS PARTY TOO LATE.

J. B. Carmichael brought an action of bail trover against the First Farmers' Bank to the August term, 1916, of the superior court. The Chippewa Bank filed an intervention, and prayed that it be made a party defendant. On August 21, 1916, the following order was passed: "It is ordered by the court that the Chippewa Bank be made a party defendant to above-stated suit, and that this its answer be filed as a part of the pleadings and record in said case." At the February term, 1917, the plaintiff filed objection to the intervention, and moved to strike the intervener as a party. This motion came too late and was properly overruled. Pettis v. Campbell, 47 Ga. 596 (1); Life Association of America v. Ferrill, 60 Ga. 414 (2); Ansley v. Jordon, 61 Ga. 484(7), 488(7).

3. DIRECTED VERDICT.

Under the pleadings and the evidence, no other verdict than one in favor of the defendant could have been legally returned, and the court did not err in so directing.

Error from Superior Court, Butts County; W. E. H. Searcy, Jr., Judge.

Action of bail trover by J. B. Carmichael against the First Farmers' Bank, with intervention by the Chippewa Bank, which was ordered to be made a party defendant, etc. Directed verdict for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

W. E. Watkins, of Jackson, for plaintiff in error.

Little, Powell, Smith & Goldstein, of Atlanta, and H. M. Fletcher, of Jackson, for defendants in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BRQYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 301)

HAVERTY FURNITURE CO. v. HUNTER. (No. 10470.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2. Oct. 20, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

NEW TRIAL  $\S$  70—DENIAL OF FIRST MOTION NOT REVIEWABLE, WHERE JUDGMENT NOT DEMANDED.

Even under the ruling made in the case of Knight v. Savannah Electric Co., 20 Ga. App. 314, 93 S. E. 17 (which principle of law is now pending for determination by the Supreme Court in another case certified to that court by this court), it cannot be said as a matter of law that in this case a judgment for the defendant was absolutely demanded. It therefore follows that the defendant cannot complain because the trial court, in the exercise of its discretion, has seen proper to grant the motion of the plaintiff for the first grant of a new trial, thereby setting aside the judgment in the amount of the plaintiff's recovery. If the plaintiff is entitled to recover at all, the evidence does not demand that the verdict be limited to the amount named in the judgment. See Parks v. Stevens, 21 Ga. App. 180, 94 S. E. 60, and cases cited.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; W. D. Ellis, Judge.

Action between the Haverty Furniture Company and G. C. Hunter. Verdict for the former, motion for first new trial granted, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

Little, Powell, Smith & Goldstein and King & Spalding, all of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

M. U. Mooty, of La Grange, and Brewster, Howell & Heyman, of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

JENKINS, P. J. Judgment affirmed.

STEPHENS and SMITH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 288)

McGEE v. STATE. (No. 10663.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW §815(4) — INSTRUCTIONS ON CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE AS SHOWING UNLAWFUL POSSESSION ERRONEOUS.

Where, upon the trial of one charged with possessing intoxicating liquors in violation of law, the testimony disclosed that in a barn, over which two persons have equal possession, control, and dominion, liquor was found, and there was nothing more shown than joint occupancy, control, and dominion over the barn, it was error harmful to the defendant, who was away from home at the time of the seizure of the liquor, and denied ownership or knowledge of the presence of the liquor in the barn, for the court, in charging upon circumstantial evidence, and possession, power, custody and control over the barn in which the liquor was found, not to allude to the joint occupancy, possession, power, and control of the barn, for one might have power over, custody, and control with another of a house, and yet not know of hidden liquors stored therein. See Hall v. State, 65 Ga. 36(3); Shropshire v. State, 69 Ga. 273; Moncrief v. State, 99 Ga. 295, 25 S. E. 735; Lunceford v. City of Washington, 17 Ga. App. 730, 88 S. E. 212. For the reasons given, the court erred in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Harris County; G. H. Howard, Judge.

Ira McGee was convicted of possessing intoxicating liquors in violation of law, his motion for a new trial was overruled, and he brings error. Reversed.

J. B. Burnside, of Thomson, and Thos. H. Shanks, of Columbus, for plaintiff in error.

C. F. McLaughlin, Sol. Gen., of Columbus, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment reversed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(84 W. Va. 721)

EDWARD F. GERBER CO. v. THOMPSON.
(No. 3896.)(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 14, 1919.)(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. JUDGMENT §45 — POWER OF ATTORNEY TO CONFESS JUDGMENT MUST STATE AMOUNT.

A power of attorney purporting to give authority to confess judgment must state the amount for which such judgment is to be confessed, or at least contain facts from which such amount can be definitely ascertained.

2. JUDGMENT §45—POWER OF ATTORNEY TO CONFESS JUDGMENT FOR AMOUNT DUE INVALID.

A paper purporting to confer authority to confess judgment for such amount as may be found due from one party to another, upon their dealings in the future, is invalid because of the uncertainty and indefiniteness of the amount for which such confession of judgment is attempted to be authorized.

3. JUDGMENT §17(1) — PERSONAL SERVICE NECESSARY TO PERSONAL JUDGMENT IN ATTACHMENT SUIT.

A judgment in an attachment suit, where no personal service is had upon the defendant therein, has no other effect than to reach the property which the nonresident defendant may have in the state, and after such property is exhausted such judgment is of no force or effect.

4. JUDGMENT §678(1)—CONCLUSIVENESS AS TO PARTIES AND PRIVIES.

A judgment rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction after service of process upon the parties to be affected thereby is conclusive, not only upon those who are actually parties thereto, but also upon all who are in privity with them.

5. JUDGMENT §681—NOT RES JUDICATA AS TO INTEREST OF THIRD PARTY BEFORE LITIGATION.

For the purpose of the application of the rule of res judicata to persons because of their privity with the parties to a suit, it must appear that the estate or interest of such a one was acquired from or through such actual party after the litigation. If his interest in the cause of action or the subject-matter of the litigation was acquired prior to the litigation, he will not be bound by the judgment.

6. JUDGMENT §585(1), 662(2)—FOR MONEY NOT CONCLUSIVE IN ACTION BY DEFENDANT FOR DEBT NOT LITIGATED.

A judgment rendered in a suit for the recovery of money is not conclusive of the defendant's right to maintain a subsequent suit to recover a debt claimed to be due to him by the plaintiff in the former suit, when such claim was not pleaded or relied upon therein. The adjudication in such former suit, where the recovery of money is sought, is only conclusive of the matters actually put in issue therein, and such other matters as are defensive to the claim set up, and does not bar a suit upon a different claim which either of the parties may have against the other.

7. TRIAL §2—ISSUES RAISED BY PLEAS IN BAR SHOULD BE TRIED TOGETHER.

Where there is more than one issue upon pleas in bar in an action at law, they should all be tried together.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR §1177(6) — WHERE FINDING FOR DEFENDANT ON ONE ISSUE ERRONEOUS REMAND FOR TRIAL OF REMAINING ISSUES.

Where, however, the court below with the assent of the parties proceeds to the trial, without a jury, of only one of such issues, and erroneously finds for the defendant upon such issue, and renders judgment accordingly, this court will reverse the same, set aside the findings of the court below, and remand the cause for a trial upon the remaining issue, or issues.

Error from Circuit Court, Harrison County.

Suit by the Edward F. Gerber Company against D. Scott Thompson. Judgment for defendant on plea of res judicata alone, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed and remanded for a trial upon a certain issue joined upon a plea of non assumpsit.

Robert R. Wilson, of Clarksburg, for plaintiff in error.

Clarence B. Sperry and John C. Southern, both of Clarksburg, for defendant in error.

RITZ, J. On the 3d of January, 1913, the defendant D. Scott Thompson entered into a contract with the Pennsylvania Sales Corporation, assignor of the plaintiff in this case, by which he became the agent of that concern for the sale of Michigan automobiles and their accessories in certain designated territory. The provisions of the contract, so far as they are material to the determination of the questions involved here, are that Thompson deposited $1,000 with the Sales Corporation to be held by it as security for the payment of any amount which he might owe, and to be refunded to him by crediting it on the automobiles sold by him, at the rate of $100 for each of such machines so sold. The contract further fixed the price at which such machines and their accessories were to be sold, and the compensation to be allowed to Thompson for making the sales. It further provided that in case of the failure of Thompson to remit the invoice price of the automobiles and parts shipped and sold under the agreement at the time provided in the contract he, the said Thompson, authorized any attorney of a court of record selected by the other party to confess judgment in any court of law of competent jurisdiction for the amount of any unpaid balance.

This suit was brought by Edward F. Gerber Company, a corporation, assignee of the Pennsylvania Sales Corporation, to recover a balance alleged to be due by the said Thompson upon the contract aforesaid. An affidavit was filed with the declaration in which was stated the amount which the plaintiff claimed the right to recover. When the case was called for trial, the plaintiff by its attorney appeared and moved to be permitted to confess judgment in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant, for the sum claimed in the affidavit. The defendant resisted this motion and asked to be allowed to file his counter affidavit and plea of non assumpsit. The court below declined to allow plaintiff's attorney to confess judgment, but permitted the counter affidavit to be filed, together with the plea of non assumpsit. Subsequently the defendant filed his special plea of res judicata. This special plea is based upon an attachment proceeding instituted by the defendant against the Pennsylvania Sales Corporation in December, 1913. It appears that the defendant instituted in the circuit court of Harrison county an action in assumpsit in December, 1913, to recover the $1,000 deposited by him under the contract. No service of process was had upon the defendant, but the jurisdiction was sustained by levying an attachment sued out in said cause on one of the machines shipped to Thompson for sale. Without any appearance on behalf of the Sales Corporation, a judgment was taken condemning the said machine to sale in satisfaction of plaintiff's demand. It was sold, the sale confirmed, and the proceeds thereof paid over to the plaintiff, and this proceeding Thompson now sets up as res judicata in this suit. A trial was had in the court below upon the issue raised by the plea of res judicata alone, and the court found thereon in favor of Thompson and rendered judgment accordingly, from which judgment this writ of error is prosecuted.

[1, 2] The plaintiff's first contention is that the court erred in not granting its motion to confess judgment by its attorney in its favor against the defendant because of the provision in the contract referred to. This contract created the defendant Thompson an agent for the sale of the Sales Corporation's goods at an agreed price. At the time it was entered into there was no amount due by Thompson, and the provision authorizing the confession of judgment simply provided that when any amount might become due and unpaid, in accordance with the terms of the contract, the plaintiff, through its attorney, might confess judgment in its favor. It will be observed that there is nothing in the contract from which such amount can be determined. It depended entirely upon the future dealings of the parties. Ordinarily an authority to confess judgment ought to be as certain in its terms as the judgment itself. The amount for which such judgment is to be confessed should be clearly stated, or else facts and figures given in the power itself from which the amount can be certainly determined. Such is not the case here, and for that reason alone the alleged power of attorney conferred no authority to confess judgment for any amount. 23 Cyc. 704; 15 R. C. L. 653; Bennett v. Haley, 142 Pa. 253, 21 Atl. 814; Little v. Dyer, 138 Ill. 272, 27 N. E. 905, 32 Am. St. Rep. 140; Fortune v. Bartolomei, 164 Ill. 51, 45 N. E. 274; Holden v. Bull, 1 Penn. & W. (Pa.) 460; Connay v. Halstead, 73 Pa. 354; 11 Ency. of Pleading & Practice, 981. The court did not err in denying plaintiff's motion to confess judgment and permitting the defendant to file his counter affidavit and plea.

[3] The plaintiff, however, contends that the court below erred in finding for the defendant on his special plea of res judicata.

As before stated, this special plea relied upon the judgment in an attachment suit brought by Thompson against plaintiff's assignor, in which no service of process was had, but which jurisdiction was sustained by reason of a levy made on one of the automobiles shipped to Thompson by the Sales Corporation. In this suit Thompson filed an account upon which he asked recovery, and it was for the $1,000 advanced by him to the Sales Corporation under the contract. The judgment was in his favor for this sum, with its interest, and adjudged that the property attached was liable to be sold in satisfaction thereof. What is the effect of such a judgment? The defendant contends that it is conclusive of all controversies existing between the parties, while the plaintiff contends that it is conclusive of nothing except the fact that Thompson was entitled to have the particular property upon which the levy was made sold to satisfy his alleged debt. A proceeding by way of attachment partakes somewhat in its nature both of a proceeding in rem and one in personam. It is not, strictly speaking, a proceeding in rem, although it partakes more of the nature of such a proceeding where no service of process has been had than it does of a proceeding in personam. There is this difference, however. In a pure proceeding in rem, the judgment is conclusive against the world as to the right in the property or thing seized, or the status sought to be determined, while in a proceeding by attachment, where there is no service of process the attachment is only conclusive upon the parties to it and their privies. If a stranger claims to own the property, he would not be bound by the adjudication in the attachment proceeding, while in a pure proceeding in rem every one is bound by the adjudication. It will thus be seen that the effect of such a judgment is not as broad as a judgment in a proceeding purely in rem. Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. 308, 19 L. Ed. 931; Bigelow on Estoppel, p. 330.

But what is the effect of such a judgment upon the parties to the proceeding? It is for no other purpose, and has no other effect, than to reach the property which a nonresident defendant may have in the state, where there is no personal service of process. It is confined exclusively to such property, and is of no further force when that is exhausted. It is evidence of nothing beyond this, and does not bind or conclude the defendant as to anything else. A suit could not be maintained on it in any other court in the same state or elsewhere, nor would the plaintiff in such a proceeding, in whose favor the judgment was rendered, be precluded from bringing another action on the original consideration for such balance as may be due after exhausting the property attached. To hold that a judgment thus rendered has any vitality after exhausting the only thing conferring the jurisdiction is violative of a principle inherent in our government which constitutes an inflexible rule of the common law, and that is that no one can be condemned unheard. It cannot be disputed that whatever interest the Pennsylvania Sales Corporation had in the property attached passed by the judgment and sale thereunder, but after exhausting that subject-matter the judgment is of no force or effect, and can afford no advantage to either party as an adjudication of any other matter. 7 Robinson's Practice, p. 51; Stone v. Myers, 9 Minn. 303 (Gil. 287), 86 Am. Dec. 104.

But the plaintiff argues that, even though the judgment relied upon be treated as one rendered upon default after service of process, it would not be a bar to this suit for two reasons: First, that this suit is brought by an assignee of the defendant in the former suit, and it does not appear whether the rights of the plaintiff here were acquired before or after the institution of the former suit, it being contended that, if such rights were acquired under the assignment before such suit was brought, the same could have no effect upon the plaintiff in this suit; and, second, that the subject-matter of this suit was neither involved nor litigated in the former suit.

[4-7] It is well settled that a judgment is conclusive, not only upon the parties to the litigation, but also upon all persons who are in privity with them. Privity is said to be a mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property, and if it is sought to bind one as privy by an adjudication against his predecessor in title, it must appear that at the time he acquired the right, or succeeded to the title, it was then affected by the adjudication, for if the right was acquired by him before the adjudication then the doctrine cannot apply. Black on Judgments, § 549; Freeman on Judgments, § 162; United States v. Louisville, 169 U. S. 249, 18 Sup. Ct. 358, 42 L. Ed. 735; Bensimer v. Fell, 35 W. Va. 15, 12 S. E. 1078, 29 Am. St. Rep. 774; Maxwell v. Leeson, 50 W. Va. 361, 40 S. E. 420, 88 Am. St. Rep. 475; Hudkins v. Crim, 72 W. Va. 418, 78 S. E. 1043; Steel v. Long, 104 Iowa, 39, 73 N. W. 470. It will therefore be seen that it was necessary, not only to show that the plaintiff in this suit was the assignee of the defendant in the other suit, but that it became such assignee after the institution of such former suit. This does not appear from the proof submitted, and for that reason the court erred in his findings upon the plea of res judicata.

Nor can it be said, we think, that the matters involved in this suit were in any wise involved in the former proceeding which is set up as a bar to this action. The former litigation had no other object than the recovery of the $1,000 advanced by Thompson to the Sales Corporation as security for property delivered to him for sale. It did not involve in any wise amounts which he might owe to the Sales Corporation. It is true the Sales Corporation might have filed these amounts as offsets in that suit, and had this been done the same would have become involved, and the adjudication in that suit would have concluded the Sales Corporation as to the claim set up. But one who is sued upon a claim is under no obligation to plead offsets thereto, or to set up some independent cause of action in defense thereof. Even after he is served with process and allows a judgment to go against him by default, he is only concluded as to such matters as are defensive to the cause of action set up. He could not thereafter say, of course, that he did not owe the money for which suit was brought; but if he has a claim against the plaintiff in such suit he is not barred from setting it up in another and independent suit to recover the same. 23 Cyc. 1131 et seq.; 15 R. C. L. p. 987; Lawson v. Conaway, 37 W. Va. 159, 16 S. E. 564, 18 L. R. A. 627, 38 Am. St. Rep. 17; Vanfleet's Former Adjudication, § 217. We are therefore of the opinion that the court below was wrong in holding that the cause of action here was barred by the former proceeding, for the reason that it was in no wise involved in that proceeding, and there was no adjudication there affecting the cause of action relied upon in this suit.

[8] As before stated, the defendant in this suit pleaded the general issue of non assumption, as well as the special defense of res judicata. The issues upon these pleas should have been tried together. It is apparent, however, that the trial in the circuit court was only of the issue made upon the special plea of res judicata. Neither party objected to the suit proceeding in this way. In fact, it is apparent that it so proceeded with the consent and the desire of both parties.

Finding that the conclusions of the court below are wrong upon this issue, we will set aside the judgment rendered thereon and reverse the court's findings; but inasmuch as the issue joined upon the plea of non assumption has never been tried, we will not render judgment here in favor of either of the parties, but will remand the cause to the circuit court for a trial upon that issue.

(84 W. Va. 753)

BUTLER v. CARLYLE et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 21, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CONTRACTS ⇨143, 170(1)—DEEDS ⇨90, 101—WHERE WORDS IN DEEDS ARE INDEFINITE, CONSTRUCTION BY PARTIES WILL BE CONSIDERED.

Where in a deed or contract the parties use words of general and indefinite signification, their meaning will be determined by a consideration, not only of the language used, but of the conditions surrounding them at the time, the circumstances under which the contract or deed was made, and the purpose sought to be accomplished thereby; and if the parties have acted under the provisions of the contract or deed, their acts, amounting to a practical construction of it, will be given peculiar weight in coming to a conclusion as to the meaning of the language used.

2. DEEDS ⇨144(2)—RESERVATION BY GRANTOR OF RIGHT TO OCCUPY HOUSE WITHOUT OBLIGATION TO SUPPORT.

Where the owner of a tract of real estate, which is divided into two parcels by a county road, upon the whole of which there is a lien, conveys to his daughter and her husband one of such parcels, upon which the dwelling house then being occupied by the owner and the son-in-law's family is situate, for the consideration that the grantees discharge the lien upon the entire tract, with a provision in said deed that such owner shall have the right to make his home with the grantees therein, and all of the parties continue to live upon said land for a considerable length of time as one family, each contributing to the common support, such provision will be held as reserving to the grantor in the deed the right to occupy such dwelling house as his home in common with the grantees, but will not include an obligation upon the part of such grantees to maintain and support him.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Mason County.

Action by Joseph Butler against J. C. Carlyle and others. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Somerville & Somerville, of Point Pleasant, for appellants.

J. E. Beller, of Point Pleasant, for appellee.

RITZ, J. Prior to the execution of the deed hereinafter referred to plaintiff was the owner of a tract of land situate in Mason county, consisting of about 38 acres, which was divided into two parts by a county road; 14½ acres, upon which was located the dwelling house, being on one side of the road, and the remainder upon which was located the stable and other farm buildings, on the opposite side of the highway. There was a lien upon this land by deed of trust for the sum of \$250 principal, which with interest at the time of the conveyance here involved amounted to a little more than \$350. In the year 1895 the defendant J. C. Carlyle married the only child of the plaintiff. At that time plaintiff was living upon this tract of land; his family consisting of himself, his wife, and his daughter, who intermarried with the defendant. In the year 1897 the plaintiff's wife died, and shortly thereafter the defendant J. C. Carlyle and his wife, at the solicitation of the plaintiff, moved into the house occupied by the plaintiff upon the tract of land above referred to, and they continued to reside there until the death of Mrs. Carlyle in the year 1907. Carlyle's four children were born in this house. After the death of his wife, Carlyle procured a housekeeper, and his family continued to reside upon the tract of land with the plaintiff until the fall of the year 1912, or the spring of 1913, at which time the plaintiff left the house, and shortly after his leaving Carlyle took his four children and placed them in school in the city of Wheeling, where they have since remained, with the exception of the eldest, who is now receiving technical training as a nurse. Carlyle, at the time of his marriage, was and ever since has been engaged as a foreman upon construction work; his duties calling him away from home practically all of the time. Frequently he was away during all the summer and fall months, and only returned in the winter, to be gone again early in the spring for the balance of the year. During the time that his family lived upon the land he contributed the things necessary for their support. In the year 1905 the party who held the lien against the plaintiff's tract of land insisted upon the payment thereof. Plaintiff was unable to meet these demands, and proposed to the defendant Carlyle that, if he would pay off this lien, which was on the whole tract of land, he would convey to him the  $14\frac{1}{2}$ -acre tract upon which the house stood. Carlyle did this, and a deed was made conveying to him and his wife this  $14\frac{1}{2}$ -acre tract. In this deed there is a clause providing:

"It is understood and agreed by and between the parties hereto that the said Joseph Butler is to make his home with J. C. Carlyle and wife, if he so desires."

It is this provision in the deed which is the basis of this litigation. After the plaintiff left the house in the fall of 1912, he did not return, except occasionally, until in the year 1917, shortly before the bringing of this suit, when he desired to move into the house and occupy the same. Carlyle denied his right to do this, but offered to permit him to occupy one room therein. Plaintiff contended that he was entitled to more than this; that he was entitled to have his support and maintenance out of the property under the provision above referred to; and with a view of having his rights in the property fixed and determined he brought this suit. It is shown that during the time the parties lived together, as above indicated, the tract of land owned by the plaintiff and that owned by the defendants were cultivated to some extent, and the proceeds of the whole contributed to the support of the family. The plaintiff raised some agricultural products on his tract of land, some of which were used by the family, and some of which were fed to stock used by the family generally, and the agricultural products raised upon the defendants' part of the land were likewise used. Aside from this, the defendant Carlyle contributed all of the money which was necessary to the support of his wife and children, as well as the plaintiff. In 1913, after the plaintiff left the house, he sold the tract of land owned by him, lying across the road from the tract here involved, and received the money therefor, so that he has not now any real estate, and only a small amount of personal property. Upon a hearing of the cause the court below decreed that the plaintiff was entitled to hold the tract of land for his sole use and benefit for his life, and that the defendants would come into possession of their estate therein only upon the death of the plaintiff. It is from this decree that the defendants prosecute this appeal.

[1] The sole question to be determined is: What interest, if any, did the plaintiff retain in the tract of land by reason of the provision in the deed above referred to? He contends that this provision that he was to have a home with the grantees in the deed was one for support and maintenance, while the defendants contend, if it has any effect at all, that it vested in him no other interest than a right to occupy one room in the house, without any obligation upon their part to maintain him. It will be observed that the language used by the parties in defining the interest of the plaintiff is very general, and where this is the case it is the end of all construction to arrive at the intention of the parties at the time the contract was entered into, and to this end consideration will be given to the subject-matter of the contract, the situation of the parties at the time it was entered into, the purpose sought to be accomplished, and the acts of the parties under the contract, which amount frequently to a practical construction of its terms and a declaration of their intentions. Snider v. Robinett, 78 W. Va. 88, 88 S. E. 599; Clark v. Sayers & Lambert, 55 W. Va. 512, 47 S. E. 312; Vintroux v. Chilton, 100 S. E. 496. Where the conduct of the parties affords no assistance in construing a paper of such general import as this, such a provision has been held not to include support and maintenance, but only a right to live in the house upon the land. Shuttleworth v. Shuttleworth, 34 W. Va. 17, 11 S. E. 714.

The plaintiff contends, however, that that case does not control here, for the reason that a practical construction has been placed upon this contract by the acts of the parties, and that, considering their situation at the time, the consideration paid for the land, the purpose sought to be accomplished, and their subsequent acts in performance of the contract, it must be held that the plaintiff reserved by this provision such interest in the land as would be sufficient for his support and maintenance, and the decree of the court below, giving him a full life estate therein, is no more than sufficient for that purpose. We are unable to agree with the plaintiff in this conclusion. The situation of the parties at the time of the deed was that they were all living together in the dwelling on this tract of land; the plaintiff contributing to the support of the family such agricultural products as were produced from this land, as well as the other tract of land owned by him, and the defendant Carlyle making a much larger contribution from his earnings. The plaintiff's debt was pressing him, and in order to prevent a sale of all of his land under the deed of trust he agreed to sell this 14½-acre tract to the defendant Carlyle, in consideration that he pay off the lien upon the whole tract. It is alleged in the bill that this consideration of $350 was grossly inadequate. This allegation is denied, and there is not a syllable of evidence to sustain it. The purpose intended to be accomplished by the parties, no doubt, was to remove the lien from the plaintiff's land, so that all of them might continue to occupy it as they had theretofore.

[2] However, the house was upon the tract conveyed to the defendant Carlyle and his wife, and without some reservation in the deed it is patent that the plaintiff would have no right to live therein. After the conveyance the relations of the parties continued the same as they had theretofore. All of them continued to reside in the dwelling upon the tract of land conveyed to the defendant Carlyle and his wife; each party contributing of his substance to the support of the family. This condition continued until the fall of 1912, when the plaintiff voluntarily left the dwelling and remained away for four or five years, living with other relatives. His reason for leaving, it appears, was his inability to get along with one of the housekeepers employed by Carlyle, and from his testimony it appears that he had very good cause for his grievances in this regard. After leaving the plaintiff sold his part of the land and received the consideration therefor, and he now returns and insists upon having appropriated to his use, so long as he lives, the whole of the tract which he conveyed to the defendant and his wife. Looking to the conditions which existed at the time of this conveyance, and the purpose sought to be accomplished by the parties, it is quite clear that this provision in the deed meant that the plaintiff should have the right to live in the dwelling upon this land. There was no dwelling house upon that part of it retained by him. The parties had been living in these intimate relations for about ten years. They were close relatives, and when we come to consider the acts done by the parties under the contract this conclusion is rendered absolutely certain. Each party, during the time they all lived in this dwelling, contributed to the common support, and it cannot be doubted from the plaintiff's evidence that the contributions made by him were quite sufficient for his own support and maintenance, and never did he contend during that time that there was any obligation upon Carlyle to support and maintain him.

We are of opinion that this provision in the deed constitutes a reservation in favor of the plaintiff of a right to live in the dwelling house, without any obligation upon the part of Carlyle to support or maintain him. This right is not fully enjoyed by the occupancy of a single sleeping room in the dwelling. It goes further than that, and includes the right to use the dwelling in the way in which dwelling houses are ordinarily used by their occupants. He is not entitled to the exclusive use of it, but he is entitled to the use of it in common with the defendant, and he is entitled to such use free from any abuse or ill treatment upon the part of the defendant, or any of his employes, servants, or agents.

The decree of the circuit court grants to him more than he is entitled to. It will be modified as above indicated, and, as modified, will be affirmed, with costs to the appellant.

(84 W. Va. 741)

CARTER et ux. v. RESERVE GAS CO. et al.
(No. 3483.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 14, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. STATUTES  $\S$  239—MODIFICATION OF RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE STRICTLY CONSTRUED.

Being in derogation of the common law, section 11 of chapter 71 of the Code (sec. 3749), modifying the rule in Shelley's Case, is limited in its operation to cases falling within its terms as well as its purpose, under the rule of strict construction.

2. DEEDS  $\S$  128—VESTING ESTATE FOR LIFE WITH REMAINDER TO HEIRS WITHIN MODIFICATION OF RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE.

A deed upon a valuable consideration, vesting an estate in any person for his life, and after his death in his heirs, or the heirs of his body, is within the terms, as well as the purpose, of said statute.

3. DEEDS  $\S$  124(1)—WORDS IN DEED WORDS OF LIMITATION VESTING FEE-SIMPLE ESTATE IN GRANTEEES.

Words in a deed from a father to two of his sons, purporting to create remainders in fee in their heirs, after life estates vested in them, with a provision that, on the death of either of the sons, the other shall have a life estate in the whole of the land, are words of limitation, vesting fee-simple estates in the sons.

4. DEEDS  $\S$  165, 168—BREACH OF CONDITION SUBSEQUENT GIVES RIGHT OF FORFEITURE WITHOUT RE-ENTRY.

On the failure of the grantee in a deed from a father to a son, conveying to the latter land for life, with a remainder in fee to his heirs, to perform a condition subsequent, requiring him comfortably to support, maintain, attend, and care for the grantor and his wife on the land, a right of forfeiture of the entire title accrues to the grantor, which he may enforce without re-entry, he being in possession, and his title may be quieted and cleared by a reconveyance to him by the grantee, by way of rescission, and in such case the remainder falls with the life estate.

5. DEEDS §168—ON BREACH OF CONDITION SUBSEQUENT NEITHER CLAUSE OF RE-ENTRY NOR FORFEITURE NECESSARY.

Neither a clause of re-entry nor one of forfeiture in such a deed is essential to the right of reacquisition of the title by forfeiture for nonperformance of the condition.

6. DEEDS §129(4)—CREATING LIFE ESTATE IN GRANTEE WITH REMAINDER IN FEE SIMPLE TO HIS HEIRS.

A conveyance of land to a person "to be held and enjoyed by said party during his life, and at his death to descend to his heirs," creates a life estate in such person and a remainder in fee simple in his heirs, by virtue of section 11 of chapter 71 of the Code (sec. 3749); the words "to descend" appearing by their context to have been used in their popular sense and to mean the same as the words "to go."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Descend.]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

7. WILLS §608(3)—"GIVEN," AS USED IN STATUTE MODIFYING RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE, MEANS CONVEYED.

The word "given," in Code, c. 71, § 11 (sec. 3749), modifying rule in Shelley's Case by providing that where an estate is given by deed or will to a person for life, and at his death to his heirs, or to the heirs of his body, the conveyance, vests an estate for life only in such persons, and a remainder in fee simple in his heirs or the heirs of his body, was used in the sense of "conferred," "passed," "conveyed," and the like.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Given.]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Harrison County.

Suit by Russell V. Carter and wife against the Reserve Gas Company to cancel an oil and gas lease, etc., with answer by defendant Gas Company averring title in itself, Harrison W. Carter and wife, and Cynthia Morrison. Decree dismissing the original and the three amended and supplemental bills, and retaining the cross-bills of Harrison W. Carter and the Reserve Gas Company for treatment as original bills, and further procedure thereon, and Russell V. Carter appeals. Decree, and order sustaining demurrers to first amended and supplemental bill, reversed, demurrers to first, second, and third amended bills overruled, and cause remanded.

Smith & Jackson, of Clarksburg, for appellant.

Wm. H. Taylor, and Hoffheimer & Templeman, all of Clarksburg, for appellees Morrison and others.

Law & McCue, of Clarksburg, for appellees Harrison W. Carter and others.

POFFENBARGER, J. The decree appealed from in this cause was made and entered in a suit brought by Russell V. Carter and wife for cancellation of an oil and gas lease on a tract of land described as containing 100 acres, more or less, executed to the defendant, the Reserve Gas Company, by H. W. Carter and others, March 30, 1909, and for an accounting for the gas taken from said tract of land by the lessee. That company filed an answer in which it denied the plaintiff's alleged claim of title to the tract of land, beyond an estate therein for the life of Harrison W. Carter, one of its lessors, and avers title in itself, Harrison W. Carter, Sarah J. Carter, wife of Harrison, and Cynthia Morrison, to an estate in the remainder in fee simple therein, as to the oil and gas. The answer also sets up a lease of the land for oil and gas purposes to the respondent, executed by the plaintiffs themselves. This answer and the original and three amended and supplemental bills, with their exhibits, developed a state of facts under which the court entered a decree dismissing all of the bills, but retaining the cross-bills of Harrison W. Carter and the Reserve Gas Company, for treatment as original bills and further procedure thereon.

Geo. F. Carter, grandfather of Russell V. Carter, father of Harrison W. Carter, and the grandfather of the other defendants, except the Reserve Gas Company and the wife of Harrison W. Carter, reposing more confidence in the business capacity of two of his sons than was due them, executed three deeds, in each of which he provided for a life estate and a remainder in fee. Deeming himself to have reacquired what he conveyed by the first, he executed the second; and, supposing himself to have reacquired what was conveyed by it, he executed a third, under which the plaintiffs claim. The theories of the defense are that he never reacquired the remainders created by the first deed, and that, if he did, the one created by the second never came back to him. By the first deed, dated April 5, 1856, he and his wife conveyed the land to George J. Carter and Harrison W. Carter, his sons, in this way:

"To have and to hold the lands as long as they, the said parties of the second part, shall live, with a remainder to their heirs forever, and, in case of the death of either of the said parties of the second part, said land shall be vested in the other of said parties during his life, with remainder as aforesaid."

A part of the consideration for this conveyance was the agreement of the grantees to pay to Tilton T. Carter, the youngest son of the grantor, $600 on his attaining the age of 21 years, if he should live to that age. In case of his death under that age, they were relieved from this obligation. The deed also reserved to the grantor and his wife a life estate in the land. Tilton T. Carter having attained the age of 21 years, and George J. Carter having left the state, without payment of any portion of the $600, the grantor instituted a suit in equity against George J. Carter, in which such proceedings were had that the latter's interest in the land was sold, and conveyed to George F. Carter by a special commissioner, March 18, 1871. Harrison W. Carter reconveyed to his father all the right, title, and interest he had in the land, by a deed dated March 24, 1871. About two years later, March 28, 1873, George F. Carter, believing himself to be the owner of the land, conveyed it to Harrison W. Carter, in consideration of $1 and the covenant of the grantee comfortably to maintain and support the grantor and his wife, on the land, during their lives, and upon condition that he should do so. The clause imposing this condition and defining the estate granted reads as follows:

"It being expressly understood that this conveyance is made by the party of the first part to the party of the second part on the conditions aforesaid, and that the said party of the second part is not to sell or dispose of the said property, but is to hold the same for the purpose aforesaid; and to be held and enjoyed by said party of the second part, during his life, and at his death to descend to his heirs. The said party of the first part, in consideration of the said party of the second part performing the conditions aforesaid, grants," etc.

By a deed dated July 17, 1873, Harrison W. Carter reconveyed the land to George F. Carter, reciting, as the occasion and consideration thereof, dissatisfaction of the parties with the arrangement provided for by the deed of March 28, 1873, and their mutual desire to revoke and annul that deed. About six months thereafter, January 7, 1874, George F. Carter conveyed the land to Tilton T. Carter for his life, with a remainder in fee to his son, if he should have one, and, if not, to his daughters, for and in consideration of $2,000, $1,500 of which had been paid, and the residue of which was represented by two promissory notes for $250 each. The grantor reserved to himself a life estate in the land, and provided for a gift over to John and Arthur Sullivan, in the event of the death of Tilton T. Carter without issue.

Treating the provision of the deed of April 5, 1856, for the heirs of George J. Carter and H. W. Carter, as remainders in fee to them, counsel for the appellees insist that the reconveyances to George F. Carter, one by the special commissioner in the chancery cause, and the other by Harrison W. Carter, carried back to him only the estates for life created by that deed; that his subsequent conveyance to Harrison W. Carter passed nothing more than a life estate; that Harrison W. Carter's conveyance to George F. carried only a life estate; that George F.'s deed to Tilton T. Carter conveyed only estates for the lives of George J. and Harrison, the latter of whom is still living. George J. Carter died, leaving one son, Arthur B. Carter, who by a deed dated September 15, 1909, granted all of his right, title, and interest in the land to Harrison W. Carter, Sarah J. Carter, and Cynthia Morrison, wife and daughter, respectively, of Harrison. The claim is that by this deed they acquired the remainder in fee in one moiety of the land, and that title to the remainder in fee in the other is vested in Cynthia Morrison and L. H. Carter, the only children of Harrison W. Carter, one-half of which, being one-fourth of the entire tract, was conveyed, as to the oil and gas, to the Reserve Gas Company by L. H. Carter, by a deed dated June 5, 1909.

[1-3] Neither questioning nor denying the use of the word "heirs" in its technical sense, in the deed of 1856, counsel for all parties virtually agree that the words making provision for heirs therein are, by the common law, words of limitation, and that the deed would vest in the grantees fee-simple estates in the land. As to this the authorities are clear, however. 2 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 343; 2 Wash. Real Prop. 649; Fearne's Rem. 30, 33. The controversy, as regards the effect of this deed, arises over the interpretation of the statute (section 11 of chapter 71 of the Code [sec. 3749]), modifying or abolishing the famous common-law proposition, known as the rule in Shelley's Case, the application of which would have produced this result. For the appellant it is insisted that the statute is not broad enough in its terms to take this provision out of the operation of that rule. The contention is that there are three classes of cases falling within its operation, to which the statute does not extend: (1) A conveyance on a valuable consideration to a life tenant, with a remainder in fee to his heirs; (2) a conveyance to a person for the life of another, with such a remainder; and (3) a conveyance to a person for life, with a remainder mediately, not immediately, to his heirs—and that this deed is within all of the omitted classes.

The statute reads as follows:

"Where any estate, real or personal is given by deed or will to any person for his life, and after his death to his heirs, or to the heirs of his body, the conveyance shall be construed to vest an estate for life only in such person, and a remainder in fee simple in his heirs or the heirs of his body."

It first appeared in the Code of 1849. Deeming it to be defective in these respects, in view of criticism made by Dr. Minor—2 Min. Inst. (4th Ed.) 411—and other high authorities, the Legislature of Virginia amended it. Virginia Code of 1887, § 2423. But in this state it remains in its original form. Dr. Minor intimates that it was adopted from a New York statute, but it more nearly resembles the Massachusetts statute.

Being in derogation of the common law and pertaining to property rights, it falls under the rule of strict construction. Bank of Weston v. Thomas, 75 W. Va. 321, 83 S. E. 985; Harrison v. Leach, 4 W. Va. 383; Davis v. Commonwealth, 17 Grat. (Va.) 617; Woodward v. Alston, 12 Helsk. (Tenn.) 581; Ex parte Buckley, 53 Ala. 42. Dr. Minor's criticisms of this statute are no doubt founded largely upon the application of this rule of interpretation. His construction agrees with that of some other text-writers.

"It may be questioned whether many of these statutes are comprehensive enough to accomplish their object. Thus the rule applies where the ancestor takes an estate of freehold, with remainder to his heirs, etc.; while many of the statutes abolishing it only embrace by their terms those cases where the ancestor's estate is for his life. The terms of these statutes, therefore, would not be applicable where the prior estate is to the ancestor for the life of another, nor, indeed, where he takes any freehold estate save only for his own life." 25 Am. & Ency. L. 663.

This rule of construction, however, does not require the words of a statute to be taken in their narrowest sense, nor in any particular sense, if they will bear such construction or interpretation as will effectuate the legislative intention. United States v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. 385, 18 L. Ed. 830. Effect must be given to the plain meaning of the language. Bolles v. Outing Co., 175 U. S. 262, 20 Sup. Ct. 94, 44 L. Ed. 156; United States v. Winn, 3 Sumn. 209, Fed. Cas. No. 16740. Such a statute includes what is within its spirit and terms, or a necessary implication arising from its purpose and terms, and nothing more. Bank of Weston v. Thomas, 75 W. Va. 321, 83 S. E. 985; Thompson v. Weller, 85 Ill. 197; Carpenter v. Mitchell, 50 Ill. 471; Lewis' Suth. Stat. Con. (2d Ed.) §§ 568, 573.

[7] Inasmuch as the word "given," used in the statute, has both a technical and a popular meaning, the presumption is that it was used in its popular sense. Mitchell v. Blanchard, 72 Vt. 85, 47 Atl. 98; State v. Jacksonville Terminal Co., 41 Fla. 363, 27 South. 221; Holman v. School District, 77 Mich. 605, 43 N. W. 996, 6 L. R. A. 534;

Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co. v. D'Alemberte, 39 Fla. 25, 21 South. 570. The principal requirement of the rule of strict construction is that the effect given to a statute shall not extend beyond the terms used in it. To allow this statute effect, in the case of a conveyance for valuable consideration, does not violate the rule in this respect. The legislative purpose was modification of the rule in Shelley's Case, in the construction of both deeds and wills. The term "given" was used in the sense of "conferred," "passed," "conveyed," and the like, and for convenience. Such a conveyance is therefore within both the spirit and the terms of the statute. Strict construction of a statute as a whole does not preclude liberal interpretation of some of the terms actually used, to the end that the legislative purpose may be accomplished, and necessary implications arising from the context and other terms carried out.

The terms of the statute accord with a form of grant, bequest, and devise very frequently and generally used from time immemorial, for establishment of certain relations between persons and property, creation of a life estate and a remainder in fee or fee tail to the heirs of the life tenant, immediately and directly after his life estate. There are other forms in which a second life estate is interposed between that of the first taker and right of possession in the remainderman, or in which the first taker is given an estate for the life of a third person. They are equally common and well known in conveyancing, but the Legislature has seen fit so to limit the terms of the statute that they literally apply only to the case of a grant, bequest, or devise to a person for his life, and after his death to his heirs or the heirs of his body. Such a gift or grant is manifestly not the same in character as one to a person for his life, and after his death to another for life and then to the heirs of the first life tenant. If it had been the legislative purpose wholly to abrogate the common-law rule, it could have been abolished by name, for it was well known, or by the use of terms broad enough to include every case falling within it.

Failure to adopt either of the two perfectly plain courses, and the use of terms limited to one class of limitations falling within the rule, argue strongly against intent to effect total abrogation. Statutes so dealing with the rule are universally construed as having modified it, and as not having wholly abolished it. Under the Rhode Island statute, which abolishes the rule in Shelley's Case in any instance in which a person takes an estate for his life, with a remainder in fee to his heirs, the court declined to apply it in any case in which, after a life estate, there was a limitation to the heirs of the body of the first taker. Manchester v. Durfee, 5 R. I. 549; Thurston v. Thurston, 6 R. I. 296;

Cooper v. Cooper, 6 R. I. 261; Andrews v. Lowthrop, 17 R. I. 60, 20 Atl. 97. The New Jersey statute relating to the subject, though much more elaborate in its terms than ours, is held, under the rule of strict construction, not to have wholly abolished the common-law rule, nor to extend beyond its clear terms. Zabriskie v. Wood, 23 N. J. Eq. 541; Lippincott v. Davis, 59 N. J. Law, 241, 28 Atl. 587; Lamprey v. Whitehead, 64 N. J. Eq. 408, 54 Atl. 873.

Under the New York statute (section 54, art. 3, c. 50, Cons. Laws 1909), the courts of that state hold that, under a deed like the one in question here, the words of limitation to the heirs are words of purchase. Monarque v. Monarque, 80 N. Y. 320; Surdam v. Cornell, 116 N. Y. 305, 22 N. E. 450. That interpretation, however, would fall within the terms of the New York statute, which does not define the life estate as ours does. It provides that if a remainder is limited to the heirs, or the heirs of the body, of a person to whom a life estate (any life estate) in the same premises is given, the persons who, on the termination of the life estate, are the heirs, or heirs of the body, of such tenant for life, shall take as purchasers. It is obvious that these terms do not contemplate a single life estate, with a remainder immediately limited upon it, as ours does. Under them, only two things are required, termination of a life estate and a remainder to heirs of the life tenant. Our statute, measured by its terms, contemplates immediate connection between the life estate and the remainder. Fairly interpreted, they exclude dispositions of a different kind, and, obviously, they do not include them by necessary or clear implication.

The deed now under consideration gave to the life tenants a joint estate in the land, for their lives, with the right of survivorship, and remainders in fee to their heirs. The statute saves a right of survivorship expressly created by deed or will. Code, c. 71, § 19 (sec. 3757). Under the rule in Shelley's Case, the deed vested estates in fee simple in Geo. J. and Harrison W. Carter. 2 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 346. The life tenants were seized per mie et per tout. Each of them had a concurrent interest in the whole of the land, not a life estate in a moiety of it, and it could not be divested by the death of his companion. Bl. Com. bk. 2, p. 184. In consequence of this, the heirs of one might or might not have taken immediately after him. It was certain that one set would so take and that the other would not, but altogether uncertain which set of heirs would be in either situation. The statute contemplates a taking by a person for his life and after his death by his heirs. Here one set of heirs were bound to take after a person of whom they were not heirs. Hence the case does not fall within the terms of the statute, even though it may be within its spirit.

Against this conclusion the decision in Irvin v. Stover, 67 W. Va. 356, 67 S. E. 1119, is invoked as a precedent; but that decision proceeds upon the theory of a single life estate in the whole of the land, the life tenants being husband and wife, and each taking a life estate by entirety. They being, in contemplation of law, one person, there was technically and legally only one life estate, and the remainder was given immediately after it to the heirs of the life tenant. If an estate be given to a husband and wife together, they are not, at common law, either joint tenants or tenants in common. Both are seized of the entirety, per tout et non per mie. Bl. Com. bk. 2, p. 182. It is still so in the case of a life estate given to them. Irvin v. Stover, cited. Here there could have been no such life estate. The life tenants did not bear the relation essential to the creation of an estate by entirety. Our conclusion on this branch of the case is that George J. Carter and Harrison W. Carter took by the deed of 1856 estates in fee simple, which afterwards were reacquired by the grantor.

[4-6] All of the estates created by the deed of March 28, 1873, were conditional, and dependent for their future existence upon performance of the condition subsequent, rendition of care, attention, support, and maintenance to the grantors. It cannot be assumed logically that only the life estate was to be paid for by performance of this condition and the remainder in fee was to be a mere gratuity. Both were disposed of upon the same consideration, and maintenance of a hold upon both was essential to the protection of the grantor's right of support. That condition was never performed. Within less than four months, Harrison W. Carter reconveyed the land to his father, who had never been out of possession thereof. It is said there is no evidence of Harrison's failure to perform, since the deed of reconveyance does not recite it. On the contrary, it is said the deed on its face reveals mere mutual dissatisfaction and a cash consideration of $400 as the motive of the reconveyance, and that, in point of law and fact, the transaction was a purchase by George J. Carter. We are of the opinion, however, that it was a rescission, on failure of performance of the condition. This is the only reasonable deduction from the facts disclosed by the deed, and the demurrer does not carry our inquiry beyond it. Harrison had the title for nothing but his covenant. In lieu of performance, he reconveyed for a release from the covenant and $400 in cash. The result was infinitely worse than mere nonperformance. The deed of March 28, 1873, contains no forfeiture clause, nor any clause of re-entry; but such clauses are not essential to the right of rescission in such cases. Glocke v. Glocke, 113 Wis. 303, 89 N. W. 118, 57 L. R. A. 458; White v. Bailey, 65 W. Va. 573, 64 S. E. 1019, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 232. For nonperformance of the condition there was a right of forfeiture, which the grantor could enforce by re-entry, if necessary, and which a court of equity would have protected by a decree quieting the title and canceling the deed. As the grantor was in possession, no re-entry was required or possible, and resort to a court of equity was rendered unnecessary by the reconveyance.

Intent to vest a fee-simple estate in Harrison W. Carter cannot be inferred from the use of the words "to descend," in this deed, for they must be considered in connection with their context. Harrison's estate is expressly limited to the duration of his life. The deed says the property is "to be held and enjoyed" by him "during his life." If this informal clause may be treated as an habendum, it limits the grant to one for life, for the premises grant the land in general terms. In such case, the estate is limited and defined by an habendum saying the grantee shall hold for life. Freudenberger Oil Co. v. Simmons, 75 W. Va. 337, 341, 83 S. E. 995, Ann Cas. 1918A, 873; 2 Min. Inst. (2d Ed.) 629; 2 Lomax, Dig. 215; Humphrey v. Foster, 13 Grat. (Va.) 653. If it is to be regarded as a part of the premises, the limitation is still more obvious. These express terms are not overthrown nor qualified by any presumption that the words "to descend" were used in their technical sense. A mere presumption always yields to the force of express words of negative import.

Nor does the inhibition of sale or disposition of the property clearly or conclusively import intention to grant a fee-simple title. It may have been intended to apply to a mere life estate as well as to a fee-simple estate. In some cases the word "descend" in wills and deeds has been allowed a strongly persuasive influence, in the interpretation of ambiguous or doubtful provisions found in other parts of the instruments or to resolve a doubt as to the intent expressed by an entire instrument. Chippis v. Hall, 23 W. Va. 504; Browning, Petitioner, 16 R. I. 441, 16 Atl. 717, 3 L. R. A. 209; Eaton v. Tillinghast, 4 R. I. 276; Taney v. Fahmley, 126 Ind. 88, 25 N. E. 882. In most, if not all, of these cases, it was invoked and applied in aid or enforcement of the theory of the vesting of fee-simple estates under the rule in Shelley's Case, with which it harmonized. There are many other cases in which it has been held to have been used in its common or ordinary sense, and to have meant the same as the word "go" or "pass." Borgner v. Brown, 133 Ind. 391, 33 N. E. 92; Doren v. Gillum, 136 Ind. 134, 35 N. E. 1101; Halstead v. Hall, 60 Md. 209; Tate v. Townsend, 61

Miss. 316; Jones v. Crawley, 68 Ga. 175; Moore v. Weaver, 16 Gray (Mass.) 305. That is the sense in which it was used in this deed, wherefore the deed vested a life estate in Harrison and a remainder in fee in his heirs, all of which failed by reason of non-performance of the condition subsequent, unless the case differs from what the bills and exhibits purport to make it.

The cause was argued here as if it had been disposed of upon full hearing. Two answers were filed, one of which was brought up as part of the record. The court below dismissed the original and first, second, and third amended bills. Nevertheless the final decree was pronounced on the demurrers to the third amended bill. It did not, in terms nor otherwise, so far as the record discloses, bring the cause on to be heard upon the answers, though they had been filed. Except in so far as it dismissed the bills, it was interlocutory, and was limited to the law arising only upon the allegations of the bills. It retained the answers for the purpose of awarding affirmative relief to the defendants, after dismissal of the bills, on the theory that the latter had fallen by reason of their own infirmities, not because their allegations had been refuted by the answers and proof. Obviously, therefore, the case as presented here does not justify the entry of a final decree. Our order will reverse the decree complained of, and the order of June 5, 1915, sustaining demurrers to the first amended and supplemental bill, overrule the demurrers to the first, second, and third amended bills, remand the cause, and award costs in this court to the appellants.

(85 W. Va. 25)

SIMMONS et al. v. SIMMONS et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 21, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. WILLS §311—IN CONTEST ON ISSUE DEVISAVIT VEL NON JURISDICTION ENDS ON DECREE.

In a suit to contest a will and upon an issue devisavit vel non the jurisdiction of the court ends with the decree adjudicating that issue.

2. ARBITRATION AND AWARD §57—CONFIRMATION OF AWARD OUTSIDE THE ISSUE, AND DECREE VOID.

Where the issue in such suit upon the petition of guardians for infants, filed pursuant to section 5 of chapter 108 of the Code (sec. 4504), is submitted to arbitration, the arbitrators have no authority or jurisdiction to go outside of the issue submitted, and their award beyond such issue and any decree confirming the same are absolutely void and of no effect.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨240—DEFENSE OF INNOCENT PURCHASER MUST BE PLEADED.

The defense of innocent purchaser without notice is an affirmative one and to be availing must be pleaded.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨231(2) — PURCHASER BOUND TO TAKE NOTICE OF RECORD.

Generally whatever is sufficient on the face of the record of title to land to direct a purchaser's attention to the prior rights and equities of third persons will put him upon an inquiry and will amount to notice to him. He is bound to take notice of everything disclosed by the record.

5. LIS PENDENS ⇨11(2)—TO BE PROTECTED AS BONA FIDE PURCHASER UNDER JUDICIAL DECREE, COURT MUST HAVE HAD JURISDICTION.

To be protected as an innocent purchaser from one who has purchased under a judicial decree and before appeal or suit to avoid the decree, upon principles enunciated in Perkins v. Pfalzgraff, 60 W. Va. 121, 53 S. E. 913, and Dunfee v. Childs, 59 W. Va. 225, 53 S. E. 209, the court pronouncing the decree must have the capacity, and by proper pleadings and proof must have acquired jurisdiction, to pronounce the decree.

6. GUARDIAN AND WARD ⇨59 — COMPROMISE BY GUARDIANS MUST HAVE JUDICIAL SANCTION.

To make a compromise by guardians effective against their wards in any case the judicial sanction thereof must be upon a real and not a perfunctory hearing. If such hearing is only formal and intended solely to employ the functions of the court to give validity to the prior agreement, it may be set aside.

7. REFERENCE ⇨18—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT TO VACATION OF AWARD AGAINST INFANTS.

In a suit to set aside an award against infants made in suits contesting the validity of a will and deed, purporting to have been had pursuant to chapter 108 of the Code (secs. 4500-4504), and the decree affirming such award, it is error on setting aside such award and decree, in advance of an adjudication of the issues involved in the contest suits to finally adjudicate the rights of the parties and refer the cause to a commissioner for a settlement of the rents, issues and profits to which plaintiffs may be entitled. Such reference is premature.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

8. ARBITRATION AND AWARD ⇨78 — DECREE SETTING ASIDE AWARD WITHOUT PREJUDICE REINSTATEMENT ORIGINAL SUIT.

In suit to set aside an award against infants, made in suits contesting the validity of a will and deed, purporting to have been had pursuant to Code, c. 108 (secs. 4500-4504), and the decree affirming such award, decree setting aside the award and the decree affirming it without prejudice to defendants, plaintiffs in the original suits, to proceed as advised to attack the will and deed, effected a reinstatement of the original causes on the docket for trial.

9. ARBITRATION AND AWARD ⇨82(6)—DECREE ON AWARD CONCLUSIVE OF CONTROVERSY.

Upon a petition pursuant to Code, c. 108, § 5 (sec. 4504), the result of favorable action would submit the suit or controversy to arbitration, and the judgment or decree on the award necessarily determines such suit or controversy, and should be so construed.

10. ARBITRATION AND AWARD ⇨78—IN SUIT TO VACATE AWARD, WRIT OF POSSESSION PROPERLY GRANTED.

In suit to set aside an award against infants, made in suits contesting the validity of a will and deed, purporting to have been had pursuant to Code, c. 108 (secs. 4500-4504), and the decree affirming such an award, the court, on finding for plaintiffs, properly gave them a writ of possession in advance of the adjudication of their rights upon the issue deviseavit vel non involved in the original suits.

11. ARBITRATION AND AWARD ⇨78—NECESSITY OF REPAYMENT IN SUIT TO VACATE AWARD AGAINST INFANTS.

In such suit, the rights of the plaintiffs could not be in any way conditioned upon repayment of the amount paid by the beneficiaries on the award, of which neither the infants nor their guardians received any part, where there was no request by defendants herein for such order.

12. ARBITRATION AND AWARD ⇨78—ALLOWANCE OF RENTS AND PROFITS IN SUIT TO VACATE AWARD AGAINST INFANTS.

In such suit, wherein defendants made no claim for improvements or taxes paid, there was no error in not decreeing permanent improvements, in view of Code, c. 90, § 32 (sec. 4100).

13. ARBITRATION AND AWARD ⇨78—NECESSARY PARTIES IN SUIT TO VACATE AWARD AGAINST INFANTS.

In such suit, where all the persons who were parties to the arbitration suit were parties to the bills and cross-bill herein, and all persons claiming under the award and decree were properly impleaded and brought into the suit, there was no defect of parties.

14. WILLS ⇨421 — JUDGMENT OF PROBATE CANNOT BE COLLATERALLY ATTACKED.

In the case of wills, the judgment of probate has the force of an adjudication in rem, and is conclusive until set aside in the manner provided by law, and it cannot be collaterally attacked.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Roane County.

Suit by Earle Simmons against W. S. Simmons, Susan Simmons (now Rader), and Lula A. Simmons, with answer and cross-bill by them against W. S. Simmons and others, interpleaded defendants. Decree for plaintiff and defendants Susan Rader and Lula A. Simmons, referring cause to a commissioner for an accounting of rents and profits, and defendants W. S. Simmons and others appeal. Reversed as to the reference, and otherwise affirmed.

Geo. F. Cunningham, of Spencer, Warren Miller, of Ripley, Chas. E. Hogg, of Point Pleasant, S. M. Williamson, of Waynesburg, Pa., and Pendleton, Mathews & Bell, of Point Pleasant, for appellants.

Ryan & Boggess and Harper & Baker, all of Spencer, Smith D. Turner, of Parkersburg, and Geo. E. Price, of Charleston, for appellees.

MILLER, P. The common object of the original and two amended and supplemental bills filed by the plaintiff Earle Simmons and of the answer and cross-bill filed for and on behalf of Susan Simmons and Lula A. Simmons against the defendants interpleaded therein, was to show cause against and have removed as clouds upon their title to the home farm of the late James M. Simmons, their father, given them by his will, two certain decrees made on April 8, 1902, in a certain suit or proceeding purporting to have been begun and prosecuted by petition on behalf of the plaintiff Earle Simmons by H. D. Wells, his guardian, and on behalf of the respondents and cross-bill plaintiffs by P. A. Tallman, their guardian, and by J. P. Thomasson, committee for their mother Minnie B. Simmons, then an insane person, in the circuit court of Roane county, and also certain deeds and leases depending thereon and under which other of the defendants impleaded claimed right and title to said farm or parts thereof. Said petition named no parties defendants, but in the decrees made thereon the case is styled in the name of petitioners versus Z. T. Simmons, W. S. Simmons, M. F. Simmons, F. M. Simmons, G. B. Simmons, T. R. Simmons, Virena Vandevender, Mary E. Ferrell, and said Minnie B. Simmons, an insane person, and Lula A. Simmons, Susan Simmons and Earle Simmons, infants, defendants.

The petition showed that the adults named therein, except the said Minnie B. Simmons, were plaintiffs and contestants, and the said Minnie B. Simmons, widow, and petitioners were defendants and contestees in two certain suits then pending in the said circuit court, the object of one of which suits was to set aside the will, the other the deed of said James M. Simmons, both instruments having been made and executed by the testator and grantor on the same day. The petition also showed that in the suit to contest the will of the testator an issue devisavit vel non had been awarded and that issue had also been made up in the other suit to set aside said deed.

By the first of the decrees made on the petition it was adjudged, ordered and decreed that all the matters involved in said two suits be and the same were thereby referred to the consideration and arbitration of the three arbitrators named therein who were directed to hear proof and consider the pleadings and evidence taken in said two suits and adjust the matters in difference then between the parties thereto and make report of their proceedings thereunder to the court.

The second of said decrees, confirming the report of said arbitrators, copied bodily into the decree and in strict accordance therewith, was that the said Z. T. Simmons and others, the contestants, do take and hold free of all claims of the said Minnie B. Simmons, Susan Simmons, Lula A. Simmons and Earle Simmons the tract of land lying in Smithfield district known as the James M. Simmons home farm and containing about one thousand acres; that they also take and hold the farm known as the Flat Fork Farm described in said will and deed; and that they do within thirty days from the date of the decree pay to J. B. Thomasson, committee of the said Minnie B. Simmons, the sum of three thousand dollars for the use and benefit of his insane ward, and that they do release all other rights, devises and bequests given to each of them under said will, and that in all other regards the said will and deed do stand and remain in full force and effect.

The decrees and proceedings sought to be set aside by the present suit purport to have been had and taken pursuant to section 5 of chapter 108 of the Code (sec. 4504), relating to arbitration. The present bills and cross-bill are predicated on the rights reserved in section 4 of said chapter (sec. 4503) to set aside awards for errors apparent or when procured by corruption or other undue means, or by mistake, or when there has been misbehavior in the arbitrators and the power of courts of equity over awards generally reserved by said section, and also upon the rights given infants by section 7 of chapter 132 of the Code (sec. 4941), within six months after attaining the age of twenty-one years to show cause against said decrees regardless of the provisions of section 4 thereof, which latter section gives the same validity to decrees executed pursuant to judicial decrees and orders on behalf of others as if executed by the parties themselves. So there can be no doubt of the right of plaintiffs to maintain this suit and obtain relief if sufficient cause has been shown therefor in the bills.

The bills and answers thereto are elaborate pleadings. The bills challenge the validity of the decrees and proceedings upon said petition, upon several grounds; first, that the award was void because the arbitrators exceeded their powers in undertaking to partition the home farm to the contestants of the will, when the questions submitted to them were limited to the issues in said two suits, whether the will and deed were the will and deed of said testator and grantor; second, because the judgment on said award was pronounced without a rule to show cause against it at the first term of the court after the parties had been summoned, as required by section 4 of chapter 108 of the Code; third, that said section 5 of chapter 108 conferred no power or jurisdiction upon the court to authorize the guardians to arbitrate the title of the infants to the home farm given them by the will of the testator; fourth, that the award and the whole arbitration proceedings were a nullity for want of jurisdiction of the infants in the arbitration proceeding, as they were not made parties thereto; fifth, because of the misconduct of the arbitrators in failing to give notice of the time and place of hearing, to hold meetings for hearing, to take evidence as required by the order of submission, and because they adopted an award prepared for them by the attorneys for Thomasson and the older set of children; sixth, because the arbitrators themselves did not consider the evidence or act as triers of either the law or the fact, and were mere dummies to cover up a compromise already made between Thomasson and the other set of children, contestants, as agreed; seventh, that on the whole record the award was a gross fraud upon the infants and the result of an unconscientious, inequitable and fraudulent bargain between the contestants of the will and the said Thomasson and the guardians of said infants.

By demurrers and answers appellants question the sufficiency of the bills as bills to review the prior decrees and proceedings in the two suits instituted by them to set aside the will and deed, on several grounds, among them that neither the contents nor the substance of these proceedings are set forth therein, nor any excuse given for not doing so, and generally that the other facts alleged and relied on amount to conclusions and innuendoes.

The reply made to these points is that appellants have misconceived the purpose and scope of the present bills, and besides that all of the proceedings so far as existent were made part of the bill by reference thereto. The allegations and proof respecting the same are that the papers in these suits for the most part had been lost or were unobtainable, and moreover that no final orders or decrees had been entered therein reviewable on petition or bill by anyone, except in so far as the final order or decree made upon the petition in said arbitration proceedings ordered said former suits "dismissed agreed."

We have given very careful consideration to all the many questions presented by the very able and elaborate briefs of learned counsel on both sides of the controversy, but having reached the conclusion that the rights of the parties, including those of the defendants invoking protection as innocent purchasers without notice, depend on the following comprehensive propositions applicable to the facts pleaded and established by proof, in affirming the decree below giving to plaintiffs the decree prayed for, it will be unnecessary to respond to any of the many other propositions sought to be presented by the record.

These propositions are, that the only questions presented by the pleadings in the two original suits and within the jurisdiction of the court to decide and the only questions presented to the arbitrators in the arbitration suit or that could have been lawfully submitted to them was whether the will or deed involved or any part or parts thereof was the will or deed of the testator or grantor; that no power was conferred or could have been conferred on the arbitrators to go outside of the issues involved in these suits to otherwise settle or compromise the rights of the infants to whom the home farm had been devised by said will; that if the will or deed was valid the estate of the testator or grantor would go as devised or granted, if invalid it would go according to the law of descents and distributions.

[1] It is well settled by our decisions that upon an issue devisavit vel non the jurisdiction of the court ends with the decree adjudicating that issue, and that it has no power or authority therein to grant any other relief. Coffman v. Hedrick, 32 W. Va. 119, 9 S. E. 65; Dower v. Church, 21 W. Va. 23; Couch v. Eastham, 27 W. Va. 796, 55 Am. Rep. 346; Ward v. Brown, 53 W. Va. 227, 44 S. E. 488; Mathews v. Tyree, 53 W. Va. 298, 44 S. E. 526; Childers v. Milam, 68 W. Va. 503, 504, 505, 70 S. E. 118 and cases cited.

[2] And nothing is better settled in this state or elsewhere than that arbitrators cannot go outside of the order or contract of submission, and that their award beyond the submission, is absolutely void and of no effect. Hines v. Fisher, 61 W. Va. 565, 56 S. E. 904; Insurance Co. v. Board of Education, 49 W. Va. 360, 38 S. E. 679; Goff v. Goff, 78 W. Va. 423, 89 S. E. 9; Raleigh Coal & Coke Co. v. Mankin, 83 W. Va. 54, 97 S. E. 299; Morse on Arbitration and Award, 181-183.

In the case presented here the arbitrators made no response to the issues in the suits referred to them, but went wholly outside thereof and undertook to award to the contestants in said suits the land given the infants by the will. Where can authority or jurisdiction be found for such procedure? It is alleged, proven and nowhere denied, in fact it is admitted by those who were the actors in presenting and prosecuting the arbitration suit, that the proceeding was an invention to accomplish by indirection what the guardians of the infants and those cooperating with them could not do directly, namely to compromise the infants' rights by the semblance of an arbitration suit begun and prosecuted under section 5 of chapter 108 of the Code. The agreement of compromise preceded those proceedings, and it is manifest from the result that the interests of the infants were not in good faith or properly defended by any one. It is substantially demonstrated by the record that the infants would have fared much better, by eight or nine thousand dollars, if they had gone undefended and the arbitrators had found the issue devisavit vel non in favor of the contestants. The home farm devised to them was estimated to be worth from twenty to twenty-nine thousand dollars, and if the will and deed had been adjudged invalid they would have shared with the others in the whole of the testator's estate, including the farm.

It is argued that the effect of the report of the arbitrators was to find that so much of the will as gave the home farm to the infants was invalid and the residue thereof the valid will of the testator. For the sake of argument let this be conceded; but would that finding have given the farm to the contestants? Certainly not; it would have gone to the heirs of the testator, not to the contestants. The will did not give it to them.

[3-5] As to those who were actors and parties in the previous suits there can be no question that their right and title falls with the affirmance of the decree. But are any of the other defendants protected as innocent purchasers? Some answered defending as such; others made no defense. The defense of innocent purchaser without notice is an affirmative one and must be pleaded. Lohr v. George, 65 W. Va. 241, 248, 64 S. E. 609; Bowly v. De Witt, 47 W. Va. 323, 327, 34 S. E. 919, and authorities cited. The decree does not undertake to set aside and remove as clouds the orders and decrees in the arbitration proceedings and the subsequent deeds and leases on the land except as they affect the right and title of the plaintiffs, and it should be so interpreted. If plaintiffs are entitled to the real estate under the will, the decree of course will go to their whole estate, but if the will shall be adjudged invalid, the decree will protect plaintiffs only to the extent of their rights and interests as heirs.

But can it be said upon reason or authority that any of the defendants were innocent purchasers without notice? The general rule is that whatever is sufficient to direct the attention of the purchaser to prior rights and equities of third persons so as to put him on inquiry to ascertain their nature, will operate as notice to him. Diehl v. Middle States Loan, etc., Co., 72 W. Va. 74, 77 S. E. 549. Here and in Virginia it is held that a purchaser whose title depends on a decree is bound to take notice of everything disclosed by the record. Saffell v. Orr, 109 Va. 768, 775, 64 S. E. 1057; Waldron v. Harvey, 54 W. Va. 608, 620, 46 S. E. 603, 102 Am. St. Rep. 959; Hoback v. Miller, 44 W. Va. 635, 640, 29 S. E. 1014; Oneal v. Stimson, 61 W. Va. 551, 557, 56 S. E. 889; Conrad v. Crouch, 68 W. Va. 378, 385, 69 S. E. 888; Williamson v. Jones, 43 W. Va. 562, 574, 27 S. E. 411, 38 L. R. A. 694, 64 Am. St. Rep. 891.

But are any of the defendants innocent purchasers without notice upon the principles enunciated in Perkins v. Pfalzgraff, 60 W. Va. 121, 53 S. E. 913? The correctness of that decision is challenged so far as it involves the rights of infants under section 7, chapter 132 of the Code. We cannot agree with counsel that that case ought to be overruled; it is well supported by the authorities. The same rule is laid down in Dunfee v. Childs, 59 W. Va. 225, 53 S. E. 209, syl. 8. But we do not think those cases control this case, indeed quite the contrary, for it is held in Perkins v. Pfalzgraff that a decree to be valid must be based on proper pleadings, without which it is void. There was no question in that case as to the jurisdiction of the court depending on pleading and process. The holding was that one who purchases land from a party who held under a decree afterwards reversed is not affected by such reversal if he was a complete purchaser. We hold in this case that the court acquired no jurisdiction, because of want of pleadings sufficient to justify the decree made upon the award of the arbitrators. It is well settled that in order to acquire jurisdiction to pronounce a valid decree or judgment the court must have not only the capacity to hear and determine causes of a class to which a given cause belongs, but actual cognizance of it, obtained by requisite process and pleadings. Ensign Co. v. Carroll, 30 W. Va. 532, 4 S. E. 782; Railway Co. v. Wright, 50 W. Va. 653, 41 S. E. 147; Penna. R. R. Co. v. Rogers, 52 W. Va. 450, 44 S. E. 300, 62 L. R. A. 173; Moore v. Holt, 55 W. Va. 507, 510, 47 S. E. 251.

[8, 9] A number of other points are relied on to reverse the decree. One is that the circuit court in setting aside the award in the arbitration suit and the decree confirming it should have re-established the status quo by reinstating on the docket the original suits contesting the will and deed. It does not appear from the record that appellants made any such request in the court below. But the court of its own motion adjudged that said decree should be without prejudice to the defendants, who were plaintiffs in the original suits, to institute such proceedings as they might be advised, to attack said will and deed. The effect of this decree must be regarded as reinstating the original causes on the docket for trial. It is contended that the petition filed by the guardians for the infants and the committee for the insane wife was a separate and independent suit or proceeding, and that the order therein dismissing the original suits was not an order or decree in those causes. We do not concur in this view. Upon a petition pursuant to section 5, chapter 108, the result of favorable action thereon would submit the suit or controversy to arbitration, and the judgment or decree on the award would necessarily determine such suit or controversy, and should be so construed. Certainly this would be the result of a submission by the parties under section 1 of said chapter (sec. 4500), and why not the proceedings of guardians or committees, under section 5 of that chapter?

[10] Another point is that the court should not have given to plaintiffs a writ of possession in advance of the adjudication of their rights upon the issue devisavit vel non involved in the original suits. But were not the plaintiffs entitled to be restored to the possession taken from them by the decree or order made upon the award against them? What rights can any of the appellants have as against the plaintiffs in this suit to hold possession against them under a void decree? Of course their rights to the whole tract depend on the validity of the will and until finally adjudicated are prima facie only. If conditions have arisen or shall arise pending the litigation calling for the preservation of the property from waste, the law affords adequate relief against such waste.

[11] Another point is that the court should have decreed a return of the three thousand dollars paid by the beneficiaries of the award, the older children, to Minnie B. Simmons. As neither the infants nor their guardians received any part of that sum and there was no request on the part of the appellants or either of them for such order, we see no error in the omission to decree repayment. Certainly there could be no decree against the plaintiffs therefor. The purpose of the present suit by plaintiffs was to show cause against the decree taking away their land. And certainly those rights can in no way be conditioned upon repayment of the three thousand dollars, or any other sum. Poling v. Poling, 61 W. Va. 78, 82, 55 S. E. 993.

[7, 12] Another point to be noticed is, that it was error to order an accounting for rents, issues and profits. The bill alleges and the answers deny the receipt of such rents, issues and profits. Appellants made no claim for improvements or taxes paid. Wherefore there was no error in not decreeing permanent improvements. Code, chapter 90, § 32 (sec. 4100); Fishback v. Ball, 34 W. Va. 644, 12 S. E. 856. But it now occurs to us that the order of reference to a commissioner was premature. If plaintiffs in the contest suit shall prevail in voiding the will and deed, the rights of the parties respecting rents and profits and for permanent improvements, if any, will be controlled by the law applicable to cotenants. We think the decree below should be amended in this particular, so as to postpone the settlement for rents and profits and for permanent improvements until the issues devisavit vel non have been tried and determined. If the will and deed shall prevail over the claims of appellants, the settlement for rents and profits and for permanent improvements must then be had according to the provisions of chapter 91 of the Code (secs. 4107-4121) which should be carefully observed.

[13] Next, as to parties, we can see no defect of parties in the bills and cross-bill. All the persons who were parties to the arbitration suit are parties to these bills, and so far as we can see all persons claiming the home farm or any part thereof under the award and decree of April 3, 1902, have been properly impleaded and brought into this suit.

On Rehearing.

[8] It was argued by counsel that the decree on the award ought to be regarded simply as a confirmation by or approval of the court of the prior compromise agreement between the parties. One objection interposed to this is that the decree was without rule or process against the parties, required by chapter 108 of the Code (secs. 4500-4504). If the rules there prescribed control the court on giving approval to a compromise of infants' rights, process or rule would be necessary, for the remedy being statutory and involving infants' rights should be strictly construed. Process would then be necessary to confer jurisdiction. McGinnis v. Curry, 13 W. Va. 29, 52; Fowler v. Lewis' Adm'r, 36 W. Va. 112, 128, 14 S. E. 447; Hoback v. Miller, supra; Duff v. Core, 27 W. Va. 232, 244. Undoubtedly a statutory proceeding to sell or otherwise dispose of infants' land, as these and other authorities hold, must be strictly complied with, or all rights acquired under them must fail. Millsaps v. Estes, 137 N. C. 535, 50 S. E. 227, 70 L. R. A. 170, 107 Am. St. Rep. 496. Another case in point is Healy v. Isaacs, 73 Ind. 226.

But the decree in the arbitration proceeding does not purport to approve an agreement of compromise, even if a guardian has authority with approval of the court to compromise the rights of infants in land. No agreement of compromise was presented to the court; the facts in relation thereto were not presented to the court, as is always necessary in such cases, and on which the judgment of the court must be founded; the proceedings referred the cases to the judgment of arbitrators, not to the court for approval of a supposed compromise; and it seems to us it would be going a long way for the court to construe its decree as one of approval of a compromise by the parties out of court. It is held by high authority that to make a compromise by guardians effective against infants in any case the judicial sanction must be upon a real and not a perfunctory hearing. If the hearing is merely formal and intended solely to employ the functions of the court to give validity to the prior agreement, it may be set aside. 1 Elliott on Contracts, § 306, p. 516; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Lasca, 79 Kan. 311, 99 Pac. 616, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 338 and note, 17 Ann. Cas. 605. It is conceded and the evidence establishes beyond controversy that the arbitration proceedings were gotten up simply as a means of giving validity to the prior agreement, that the court never acted on the fact of such an agreement, and never undertook to approve it. Indeed we do not think the court could properly have given its consent to a compromise which gave away the whole of the infants' estate in the land and received for them nothing in return. The justification offered by the beneficiaries of the alleged agreement is that the infants will likely inherit from their mother the land and other property conceded to her and that this justified the contract and the award. But would a court of equity accept this as justification for an agreement or order taking away the whole of the estate of infants? This would be a dangerous precedent to recognize.

[14] Another proposition renewed on rehearing is that the award of the arbitrators should be treated as responsive and as a finding that so much of the will as gave the home farm to plaintiffs was invalid, and the will and deed in all other respects a valid disposition of property, thereby allowing the said home farm to go to the heirs according to the law of inheritance. Anciently it was doubted whether the question of title to land was an arbitrable matter. 2 R. C. L. 358, § 9. In the case of wills the judgment of probate has the force of an adjudication in rem, and is conclusive until set aside in the manner provided by law. Harris v. Wyatt, 113 Va. 254, 74 S. E. 189; Woofter v. Matz, 71 W. Va. 63, 76 S. E. 131. It cannot be collaterally attacked. Estate of Carpenter, 127 Cal. 582, 585, 586, 60 Pac. 162.

Our conclusion is that in so far as the decree prematurely referred the cause to a commissioner for an accounting of rents, issues and profits and fixes the principles of such accounting in advance of the final adjudication of the issues presented in the two causes involving the validity of the will and deed, the same must be reversed, set aside and annulled, but that in all other respects, as interpreted by this opinion, the same should be affirmed, with costs to appellants incurred in this court.

(85 W. Va. 23)

BLACK v. CROUCH et al. (No. 3678.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 21, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW. — §89(4), 276 — UNITED STATES. — §94 — ACT OF CONGRESS LIMITING ATTORNEY'S FEES IN COLLECTION OF CLAIMS AGAINST GOVERNMENT VALID.

The provision of Act Cong. March 4, 1915, limiting to 20 per cent. the payments to attorneys and agents, out of moneys appropriated by said act, for payment of certain claims against the United States, is not a denial of due process, or of the liberty of contract, to an attorney who has rendered professional services in the prosecution of one of such claims, under a contract whereby he was to receive a fee equal to 50 per cent. of whatever might be awarded or collected.

2. UNITED STATES. — §119 — FUNDS OF ESTATE ON PAYMENT OF CLAIMS AGAINST GOVERNMENT NOT CHARGEABLE WITH FEES IN EXCESS OF STATUTE.

Funds in the hands of the personal representative of a deceased claimant, in favor of whose estate an appropriation has been made by said act, or in the hands of legatees under his will, cannot be charged with payment of the excess of such fee above the amount allowed by said act.

3. EQUITY. — §427(1), 431 — DECREE TO BE INTERPRETED IN LIGHT OF PLEADINGS.

A decree is to be interpreted in the light of the pleadings in the cause, and in so far as it purports to give relief beyond any foundation therefor laid in the pleadings it is void.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS. — §453 (4) — DECREE IN BILL TO CHARGE PARTICULAR FUND IS TO BE CONSTRUED AS CHARGING SUCH FUND.

A decree founded upon a bill seeking to charge a particular fund derived from, or belonging to, the estate of a deceased person, with payment of a debt, and disclosing no other assets of such estate, is properly interpreted a decree so charging such fund.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Randolph County.

Suit by Mary B. P. Black, administratrix, etc., against Andrew Crouch and others, executors, etc. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded, with leave to amend bill.

Arnold & Arnold and Harding & Harding, all of Elkins, for appellants.

C. O. Strieby, of Elkins, and Chas. F. Con-saul, of Washington, D. C., for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, J. The decree complained of stands upon the theory of partial unconstitutionality of an act of Congress passed in 1915 (Act March 4, 1915, c. 140, 38 Stat. 996) appropriating money for payment of war claims, and limiting to 20 per cent. the payments to be made to attorneys and agents representing the claimants, out of the moneys so appropriated.

[1] Since the entry of the decree the Supreme Court of the United States has rendered a decision in which the statute in question has been held to be valid and constitutional. Capital Trust Co. v. Calhoun, 250 U. S. 208, 39 Sup. Ct. 486, 63 L. Ed. —. It holds that the money appropriated by the act cannot be subjected in any manner to a charge for fees in excess of 20 per cent. In that case, the money, less 20 per cent., had passed out of the federal treasury into the hands of the administrator of the claimant, and the purpose of the suit was to charge that fund with the payment of an amount equal to 30 per cent. of the sum appropriated; the department having previously paid 20 per cent. thereof to the attorney.

[2, 3] In this case the amount appropriated by the same act, to pay the claim of Jacob Crouch, was $3,710. The contracts with the attorneys prosecuting the claim, made by him originally and by his executors after his death, provided for a contingent fee of 50 per cent. Out of the said sum of $3,710 there was paid to the plaintiff herein, administratrix of the attorney, by the Treasury Department, the sum of $742, and the residue thereof went into the hands of the executors of the estate of Jacob Crouch, Andrew Crouch and Newton Crouch, who also were entitled, as residuary legatees in the will of Jacob Crouch, to the money obtained upon the claim. After having paid $500 out of it in satisfaction of another claim for services and expenses, they divided the balance, $2,468, between themselves.

[4] While the decree does not in terms charge the plaintiff's demand, amounting to $1,113, 30 per cent. of $3,710, upon the said sum in the hands of the defendants as executors and legatees, but, on the contrary, adjudges, orders, and decrees "that the plaintiff do recover from the estate of Jacob Crouch, deceased, the sum of $1,113, with interest," and that the defendants, executors as aforesaid, "do pay to the plaintiff the sum of $1,113, with interest," out of any funds that may have come into their hands as such, it must be interpreted and held to be a decree charging the money they received from the appropriation as aforesaid. Upon the inquiry as to its meaning and effect, it must be read in the light of the pleadings. A judgment or decree cannot extend beyond the pleadings. In so far as it does so, it is void. Conrad v. Crouch, 68 W. Va. 335, 69 S. E. 888; Waldon v. Harvey, 54 W. Va. 608, 46 S. E. 603, 102 Am. St. Rep. 959; Hoback v. Miller, 44 W. Va. 635, 29 S. E. 1014. The bill in this cause traces no assets into the hands of the defendants other than this fund. Hence the decree must be deemed to relate to it only, and to charge the defendants on account thereof. Its tenor and purport accord with the subject-matter of its allegations. It claims right in the plaintiff to pursue and charge the fund received from the government. Thus interpreted, the decree is in conflict with the statute, and must fall.

The federal decision to which reference has been made does not construe the statute as invalidating such a contract in so far as it may bind or affect money or property of the claimant, or his estate, derived from sources other than the appropriation. As the plaintiff may be able to find other assets of the estate of Jacob Crouch liable to satisfaction of her claim, or liability on the part of some person by reason of assets descended or distributed, she is entitled to have leave to amend her bill, if she shall be so advised. But nothing is now decided as to her right respecting other funds.

Our conclusion is to reverse the decree and remand the cause, with leave as aforesaid.

(85 W. Va. 54)

McELWAIN v. WOODS et al. (No. 3721.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 28, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS
§—393—TIME FOR RETURN BY TRUSTEE ON SALE OF ASSETS.

The trustee of an insolvent debtor who assigns all his property in trust for the payment of his debts has six months after making sale of the property within which to make a return to the clerk's office of his receipts and disbursements and vouchers therefor.

2. ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS
§—393—SUIT TO COMPEL ASSIGNEE TO SETTLE ACCOUNTS NOT DEFEATING COMMISSIONS.

Where the insolvent assignor and assignee agree that the former shall remain in possession and sell the property and apply the proceeds to the payment of his debts, and he does so remain in possession for a considerable time and sells a portion of the property, but does not apply all the proceeds on his debts, and, ascertaining that fact, the assignee obtains possession of the remaining property, sells it and satisfies the creditors out of the proceeds, the assignor cannot, by bringing a suit to compel the assignee to settle his accounts before the expiration of six months after his sale, defeat his commissions.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Webster County.

Suit by Cora L. McElwain against William G. Woods, assignee, and others. Cause referred to a commissioner in chancery to report settlement of accounts of trustee, exceptions to report overruled, and report confirmed, except in one particular. Decree for W. G. Woods, assignee, and others, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. S. Wysong, of Webster Springs, for appellant.

W. T. Talbott, of Webster Springs, for appellees.

WILLIAMS, J. Cora L. McElwain, a married woman conducting a retail store at Fenwick, Nicholas county, became involved in debt, and on the 18th of September, 1914, made an assignment of all her real and personal property, in which her husband W. D. McElwain joined, to William G. Woods, trustee, for the benefit of her creditors. The stock of merchandise and claims due her were estimated at about $3,200, and the debts owing by her at something over $1,750. The assignor thought her assets were amply sufficient to pay all her debts, and the real purpose of the assignment was to enable her to gain time and make payment by continuing to sell goods at retail in the ordinary way, and an oral understanding was had between her and the trustee at the time of the assignment that she and her husband might remain in possession and continue to sell the goods as before and apply the proceeds to the liquidation of the debts; and in that event the trustee, who was her cousin, was to charge no commissions, nor was she or her husband to charge anything for their services.

The business was carried on under this arrangement for about 13 months, within which time three inventories were taken of the stock of goods, one on the 23d and 24th of September, 1914, showing $2,761.94; another on June 21, 1915, showing $1,548.88; and the third on the 15th of October, 1915, showing the stock of goods then on hand to be worth only $1,305.58. Discovering about that time, as he swears, that the assignor was not applying all the proceeds of sales to the payment of the debts, the trustee demanded possession, and, being refused, procured a lock and key and locked the assignor and her husband out of the store building, and took possession on the 14th of October, 1915, and on the next day sold the stock of goods in bulk to Mrs. A. J. Goff at 75 per cent of the invoice, less $37 discount on account of some damaged articles, realizing therefor $939.41. In the meantime, and prior to June 21, 1915, when the second inventory was taken, the goods were moved by Mrs. McElwain and her husband from Fenwick to Cowen in Webster county, where the trustee sold the remaining portion of the stock.

Prior to making the general assignment, to wit, on the 15th day of August, 1914, Mrs. McElwain, her husband uniting in the deed, conveyed to the same trustee her house and lot in the village of Halo, Webster county, containing one-half acre, in trust to indemnify W. R. Woods and D. C. Hoover as her indorsers on a note for $450, payable to the First National Bank of Webster Springs in three months from the date of said deed, and likewise to indemnify W. R. Woods and Floyd McElwain as indorsers on her note for $250, bearing the same date and payable at the same time and place as the other. These notes were renewed once or twice, and the balances due thereon were finally reduced to judgment and paid by the indorsers. Whereupon they gave notice to the trustee to sell the house and lot. On the 29th of December, 1915, the trustee advertised that he would sell it at public auction on the 29th of January, 1916. Cora L. McElwain then brought the present suit, on the 11th of January, 1916, praying that the trustee be enjoined from selling, and that he be required to settle his accounts as trustee under the deed of general assignment of September 18, 1914, and for general relief. The trustee, W. D. McElwain, plaintiff's husband, and her creditors were made parties defendant to the bill. An injunction was granted as prayed for on the 26th of January, 1916, and the trustee gave notice that he would move to dissolve it. The motion was heard on the 10th of March, 1916, at a special term, upon the bill and exhibits, the demurrer, answer, and cross-bill of the trustee filed in the clerk's office at the March rules, and upon the answers of some of the creditors, general replications thereto, and upon affidavits, upon consideration whereof the motion to dissolve was overruled. On the 7th of October, 1916, the cause was referred to James Woodzell, a commissioner in chancery, to take, state, and report a settlement of the accounts of said trustee with the said Cora L. McElwain and with her creditors. The commissioner filed his report on May 18, 1918, showing that the trustee had accounted for all the personal assets which had come into his hands, and had satisfied all the creditors, except the indorsers on the two aforesaid notes, who were indemnified by the trust deed given by Cora L. McElwain and her husband on her house and lot in Halo, and that he had actually paid on the general debts $48.81 in excess of funds derived from the personal assets. The commissioner found that there was then due W. R. Woods, indorser on the aforesaid notes, a balance of $240.75 on the $450 note, and $154.87 on the $250 note, both as of the 28th of May, 1918, and that A. F. McElwain, one of the indorsers on the $250 note, had been overpaid by $7.07. He further found that the assignee was entitled to $250 as a reasonable compensation for his services, and also to an attorney fee of $50 paid to his attorney, W. T. Talbott.

Plaintiff filed written exceptions to the report, on the ground that it improperly allowed commissions of the trustee, because the trustee had made no settlement of his accounts until he was coerced to do so by this suit, and because the trustee had agreed to serve without compensation, because no appraisal of the assets had ever been made, and lastly because of the allowance of an attorney's fee of $50 paid by the trustee to W. T. Talbott.

A final decree was entered on the 3d of June, 1918, reducing the amount of commissions allowed by the commissioner to $75, overruling the other exceptions, and confirming the report, and decreeing $240.75 to W. R. Woods and D. E. Hoover, $154.87 to W. R. Woods, balance due him on the smaller one of the aforesaid notes, and also decreeing to W. G. Woods, the trustee, $48.81 and $75 as compensation for his services, and decreeing said sums to be liens of equal dignity upon the house and lot, except the item of $75 for the trustee's compensation, which was decreed as part of the costs of the suit.

Cora L. McElwain is the only party complaining, and she insists that the trustee is in default and not entitled to commissions: First, because he failed to have the assets appraised as provided by section 6a, chapter 72, Code 1918 (Code 1913, secs. 3784, 3785), and, second, because he failed to make a report of his receipts and disbursements to a commissioner of accounts as provided in the case of fiduciaries in chapter 87 of the Code (Code 1913, secs. 4026-4060). The commissioner's finding shows that plaintiff herself was responsible, in part at least, for the failure to have the property appraised. He reports that, by agreement between the parties, the plaintiff and her husband were left in possession of the goods for the purpose of selling them and making application of the proceeds of sale to the payment of her debts. She did remain in possession until October 14, 1915, a period of 13 months, before the trustee took possession. The trustee had qualified by giving bond in the manner required by statute on the 21st of September, 1914, but took possession only after he learned that the assignor was not making faithful application to her debts of all the money derived from sales, as she had agreed to do. None of the creditors are complaining, and she certainly cannot be allowed to take advantage of her own wrong. Having broken her own agreement, the trustee was no longer bound not to demand commissions.

[1, 2] Section 6a, chapter 72, Code, requires a trustee of an insolvent debtor, assigning all his property for the benefit of his creditors, to give bond before the clerk of the county court in a penalty double the amount of the ascertained value of the estate, and to take an oath that he will faithfully perform his duties as such trustee to the best of his skill and judgment, and that he will pay over all money that comes into his hands as such trustee. This provision of the statute further provides in such case that appraisers shall be appointed to appraise the estate of the insolvent debtor, in the same manner and by the same authority as appraisers for the estate of decedents are appointed, and that they shall be governed by the same laws and perform the same duties as appraisers of estates of decedents. This was not done in this case for the reason above stated. The same statute also provides in such case that the trustee shall appear before one of the commissioners of accounts of the county court before which he qualified as trustee, and lay before him a report of his receipts and disbursements and his vouchers for the same, in all respects and with like effect as is provided for fiduciaries generally by chapter 87 of the Code. The trustee did not report an inventory of the property sold and an account of the sale made by him to the clerk of the county court, but it was not too late to do so when this suit was brought. Section 3, chapter 87, Code, provides that he shall have six months after making the sale to make return thereof to the clerk's office, and provides that failure to comply therewith shall forfeit his commissions.

Counsel for plaintiff insists that by his failure to comply with this provision of the statute the trustee has forfeited his commissions. A sufficient answer to this contention, we think, is that the time within which he could have made such return had not expired before plaintiff brought this suit. The trustee made his sale on the 15th of October, 1915, and had six months thereafter within which to return his inventory and account of sale to the clerk's office, and this suit was brought on the 11th of January, 1916, less than three months after the sale. Any settlement thereafter had to be made in the suit.

It must be remembered that Cora L. McElwain, the insolvent debtor, is the only person here complaining; and, having brought her suit against the trustee before the expiration of the time allowed him for making a report of the sale to the county clerk's office, and thereby prevented him from doing so within time thereafter, she has no right to insist on a forfeiture of his commissions. We do not say what effect such failure would have upon the rights of creditors; it is enough to say none are here complaining.

It is insisted that the trustee prematurely took the deposition of witnesses before the cause had been referred to a commissioner to settle the trustee's accounts and thereby caused unnecessary costs, which the court erroneously decreed against the appellant. Depositions were not taken until after the trustee had filed his answer and cross-bill in the clerk's office at March rules. They were not prematurely taken, and the decree of reference directed the commissioner to read and consider them in making his report.

We find no error in the decree, and it will be affirmed.

(24 Ga. App. 426)

CREWS v. STATE. (No. 10743.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 7, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)*CRIMINAL LAW ⚡1160—HOMICIDE ⚡255
(2) — EVIDENCE SUSTAINING CONVICTION OF VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

The special grounds of the motion for new trial show no such material error as requires the grant of a new trial in this case. The verdict shows that the jury did not accept the theory of the defense that the accused, under the fears of a reasonable man that a felony was about to be committed on him, shot the deceased, and that they did not believe the statement of the accused. Under the evidence the killing was absolutely without justification, and the lowest grade of homicide of which it would be possible to find the defendant legally guilty under the evidence is that of voluntary manslaughter, and the jury having returned such a verdict, and the trial judge having approved it, this court will allow it to stand. Vernon v. State, 148 Ga. 709 (2), 712 (2), 92 S. E. 76, and cases cited.

Error from Superior Court, Charlton County; J. I. Summerall, Judge.

C. H. Crews was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and he brings error. Affirmed.

John W. Bennett, of Waycross, and Jas. R. Thomas, of Jesup, for plaintiff in error.

A. B. Spence, Sol. Gen., of Waycross, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 385)

WINDOM v. STATE. (No. 10914.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 6, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)*CRIMINAL LAW ⚡594(1) — CONTINUANCE; ABSENCE OF WITNESSES.

Where the defendant in a criminal case moves for a continuance thereof upon the ground of absent witnesses, and, upon the hearing of the motion, shows by uncontradicted testimony that the witnesses are absent because he was misled by the prosecuting solicitor, who told him that he need not have his witnesses or his lawyer present at the trial, as "it would be all arranged," the case is an exception to the rule, as laid down in section 987 of the Penal Code 1910, that it must be shown that the witnesses are not absent by the permission, directly or indirectly, of the movant.

Error from City Court of Carrollton; H. H. Revill, Judge.

Bill Windom was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Reversed.

I. N. Cheney, of Bremen, for plaintiff in error.

Willis Smith, Sol., of Carrollton, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Upon the call of the case the defendant moved for a continuance thereof upon the ground of the absence of three material witnesses. Upon the hearing of the motion the defendant swore that the absent witnesses lived in the county, had been subpoenaed by him, that their testimony was material to his defense, that he expected to have the witnesses present at the next term of court, and that the application was not made for the purpose of delay, but to enable him to have the testimony of the absent witnesses. The defendant further set forth what he expected to prove by the witnesses, and it appears that this testimony would have been material to his defense. The defendant further testified that the witnesses were absent because the prosecuting solicitor had told him that he need not have them at the trial and not to have his lawyer present, as "it would be all arranged." None of this evidence was denied by the solicitor.

Under these peculiar circumstances, we think that this case presents an exception to the rule, as laid down in section 987 of the Penal Code, that it must be shown that the witnesses are not absent by the permission, directly or indirectly, of the movant. In our judgment the court erred in overruling the motion for a continuance, and the subsequent proceedings in the case were nugatory.

Judgment reversed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 260)

PYNETREE PAPER CO. v. WILKINSON
COUNTY BANK. (No. 10525.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 10, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)*1. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡93—PROMISE TO AC-CEPT AN EXISTING BILL IN HANDS OF IN-DORSEE.

The holder cannot sue the drawee on a promise made to accept an existing bill, where the promise was made to the drawer of the bill after it had passed into the hands of the holder, and where the money sued for was paid or advanced by the holder before the promise was made, and not upon the faith of the promise. 8 Corpus Juris, 315, 316, § 485, and authorities cited in note 74; Lugrue v. Woodruff, 29 Ga. 648, 650; 7 Cyc. 766; Parrish v. Taggart-Delph Lumber Co., 11 Ga. App. 772, 76 S. E. 153; Coolidge v. Payson, 2 Wheat. 66, 4 L. Ed. 185;

Exchange Bank v. Rice, 107 Mass. 37, 9 Am. Rep. 1; Carr v. National Bank, 107 Mass. 45, 9 Am. Rep. 6.

2. PROMISE TO ACCEPT EXISTING BILL—SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION.

The amended petition, construed as a whole and most strongly against the pleader, clearly shows that the only money advanced by the plaintiff bank to the drawer of the draft was paid before the promise of the drawee to accept the draft was made, and that it was not paid on the faith of the promise. The petition, therefore, failed to set out a cause of action, and the court erred in overruling the general demurrer.

Error from Superior Court, Wilkinson County; J. B. Park, Judge.

Action by the Wilkinson County Bank against the Pynetree Paper Company. Demurrer to petition overruled, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Strozler & Moore, of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment reversed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 348)

KING v. STATE. (No. 10816.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SUFFICIENCY OF INSTRUCTIONS.

None of the excerpts from the charge of the court complained of, when considered in connection with the charge as a whole, show cause for a reversal of the judgment below.

2. MOTION FOR MISTRIAL.

Under the facts of the case, the court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a mistrial.

3. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The verdict was authorized by the evidence.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; H. A. Mathews, Judge.

Proceeding between Walter King and the State. Judgment adverse to King, and he brings error. Affirmed.

John R. Cooper and W. O. Cooper, Jr., both of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

John P. Ross, Sol. Gen., of Macon, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 349)

THARPE v. STATE. (No. 10818.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW §201—PLEA OF FORMER JEOPARDY INSUFFICIENT.

The accused was indicted for making alcoholic liquors. He pleaded "former jeopardy," alleging "that he pleaded guilty in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Georgia for the offense of violation of the internal revenue laws of the United States; * * * that the offense charged is the very same offense as that he is now charged with; that the United States District Court for the Southern District of Georgia had full jurisdiction to try him." The plea was properly stricken. It shows on its face that he pleaded guilty in a different jurisdiction, and to an indictment which charged a violation of a federal statute, and to the commission of a crime which is entirely different and distinct from the one for which he was indicted and tried in the state court.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; H. A. Mathews, Judge.

M. D. Tharpe was convicted of making alcoholic liquors, and he brings error. Affirmed.

John R. Cooper and W. O. Cooper, Jr., both of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

John P. Ross, Sol. Gen., of Macon, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 353)

BAILEY v. STATE. (No. 10858.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MOTION FOR CONTINUANCE.

Under the facts of the case, the court did not err in overruling the defendant's motion for a continuance of the case.

2. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence amply authorized the verdict, and the court did not err in refusing to grant a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Barrow County; A. J. Cobb, Judge.

Proceedings between J. L. B. Bailey and the State. A judgment adverse to Bailey was rendered, and he brings error. Affirmed.

M. D. Irwin and I. L. Oakes, both of Lawrenceville, for plaintiff in error.

W. O. Dean, Sol. Gen., of Monroe, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 356)

CRAWLEY v. STATE. (No. 10876.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence amply authorized, if it did not demand, the defendant's conviction; and none of the special grounds of the motion for a new trial show cause for a reversal of the judgment below.

Error from Superior Court, Pike County;
W. E. H. Searcy, Jr., Judge.

Nat Crawley was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Redding & Lester, of Barnesville, for plaintiff in error.

E. M. Owen, Sol. Gen., of Zebulon, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 407)

LOVETT v. VICKERS BROS. (No. 10458.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Nov. 6, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

JUDGMENT §342(3)—SUFFICIENCY OF MOTION TO VACATE DEFAULT.

This was a statutory motion to set aside a judgment. Civ. Code 1910, §§ 4358, 5958. It not affirmatively appearing on the face of the statutory motion to set aside the default judgment, nor from the evidence submitted on the hearing of that motion, that it was made during term time, and this being essential to the validity of such a motion, the motion should have been dismissed; and the order of the court overruling the motion will be so construed. Bedgood v. Floyd, 20 Ga. App. 617, 93 S. E. 218.

Error from City Court of Nashville; J. D. Lovett, Judge.

Proceedings between O. F. Lovett and Vickers Bros. to set aside a judgment. A determination adverse to Lovett was rendered, and he brings error. Affirmed.

J. W. Powell, of Adel, for plaintiff in error.
Story & Story, of Nashville, for defendant in error.

SMITH, J. Judgment affirmed.

JENKINS, P. J., and STEPHENS, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 357)

MULLINS v. STATE. (No. 10879.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW §935(1) — CONVICTION ON CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

The defendant was convicted of having, possessing, and controlling intoxicating liquors. The evidence as to her connection with the whisky was entirely circumstantial, and failed to exclude every reasonable hypothesis save that of her guilt, and was consistent with the theory of her innocence. The court therefore erred in overruling her motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Harris County;
G. H. Howard, Judge.

Carrie Mullins was convicted of having, possessing and controlling intoxicating liquors, her motion for a new trial was denied, and she brings error. Reversed.

Geo. C. Palmer, of Columbus, for plaintiff in error.

C. F. McLaughlin, Sol. Gen., of Columbus, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment reversed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 344)

BARCLAY v. STATE. (No. 10796.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1 Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL.

The first and second special grounds of the motion for a new trial are merely elaboration of the general grounds.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §828 — INSTRUCTIONS; NECESSITY FOR REQUEST.

In the absence of a timely and appropriate written request for more particular instructions upon the law of reasonable doubt, the charge upon that subject as given was sufficient.

3. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence authorized the verdict, and the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Pike County;
W. E. H. Searcy, Jr., Judge.

Proceedings between Wade Barclay and the State. A judgment adverse to Barclay was rendered, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Frank L. Adams, of Zebulon, for plaintiff in error.

E. M. Owen, Sol. Gen., of Zebulon, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 325)

WILLIAMS v. STATE. (No. 10741.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1 Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. CRIMINAL LAW §1064(1, 4)—NEW TRIAL; GROUNDS OF MOTION.

A special ground of a motion for a new trial must be complete within itself, and will not be considered by the reviewing court, when it is so incomplete as to require reference to the brief of the evidence, or to some other portion of the record, to make it understandable. In the instant case the first special ground of the motion for a new trial complains that a certain named witness was not allowed to testify, in answer to questions by the defendant, to certain statements alleged to have been made to him (and which are set forth in the ground) by a codefendant, at the time of the arrest of the defendant and his codefendant. The ground does not show, however, whether the witness was upon direct or cross examination, or that the court was apprised of the expected answers of the witness, or that any part of this conversation had already gone to the jury. This ground of the motion is therefore too defective to be considered by this court.

2. NECESSITY OF INSTRUCTIONS.

Under all the facts of the case, the court did not err in failing to instruct the jury that the case was based entirely upon circumstantial evidence.

3. POSSESSION OF STOLEN PROPERTY.

The charge upon the subject of recent possession of stolen property was not erroneous.

4. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The verdict was authorized by the evidence.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; John D. Humphries, Judge.

Proceeding between Mose Williams and the State. Judgment adverse to Williams was rendered, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Tillou Von Nunes, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

John A. Boykin, Sol. Gen., and M. A. Stephens, both of Atlanta, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

WHITE v. STATE. (24 Ga. App. 336)
(No. 10745.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)LARCENY §15(3)—SIMPLE LARCENY; SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The defendant was convicted of the offense of simple larceny. The proof showed that he was a farm hand on a farm; that as such employé he was directed to haul some wood to the house, and, after hauling the wood, to put up the team and do other work; that after hauling the wood he took the team from Monroe county and drove it 42 or more miles away to Macon, and tried to sell the mules, and finally did sell them. He contends that he was not guilty of simple larceny, but if guilty of crime he was guilty of larceny after trust. We do not think so. No such bailment was shown as is necessary to require his conviction of larceny after trust rather than simple larceny. This ruling is not in conflict with Mobley v. State, 114 Ga. 544, 40 S. E. 728. The conviction was demanded. It was not error to overrule the motion for a new trial, which was based solely upon the general grounds.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County;
H. A. Mathews, Judge.

Henry White was convicted of simple larceny, and he brings error. Affirmed.

— For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Thos. Arnold Jacobs, Jr., Olin J. Wimberly, and C. A. Cunningham, all of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

John P. Ross, Sol. Gen., of Macon, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 333)

HUCKEBA v. STATE. (No. 10733.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SUFFICIENCY OF INSTRUCTIONS.

None of the excerpts from the charge of the court excepted to, when considered in the light of the charge as a whole and the facts of the case, contains reversible error.

2. EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

The court did not err in repelling the testimony as complained of in the fifth special ground of the motion for a new trial.

3. DENIAL OF MISTRIAL.

Under the facts of the case the court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to declare a mistrial.

4. CRIMINAL LAW §828—INSTRUCTIONS, NECESSITY FOR WRITTEN REQUEST.

The conviction of the defendant did not depend wholly on circumstantial evidence. The court, therefore, did not err in failing to instruct the jury upon the law of circumstantial evidence, there being no timely and appropriate written request therefor.

5. RAPE §44—EVIDENCE; RELATIONS OF PARTIES.

The admission of the testimony as to the defendant's relations, outside of Polk county, with the female with whom he was charged with having sexual intercourse, was not error, since the court specifically charged the jury as follows: "The court has permitted certain evidence to come before you regarding transactions that did not occur within the county of Polk. The court has no opinion, and expresses none, as to what has been proven in this regard, or as to any facts proven in the case. This evidence was admitted for the purpose of showing, if anything was shown, and you are the judges of what that evidence was or what was shown by this evidence, of the relations between the parties, and in aiding you, in so far as you think it may aid you, in determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant. I charge you that this alone would not warrant a conviction. In other words, you could not convict the defendant for anything that occurred outside the county of Polk, if anything did occur, or if any offense was committed outside of this county, this would not warrant the conviction of the defendant; but, as before stated, this is to aid you in determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant, and to aid you in determining whether the charge in the bill of indictment is true, but it is a circumstance in the case, and you have the right to consider it to this extent only. You must find, in order to find the defendant guilty, that the offense was committed in the county of Polk." Lipham v. State, 125 Ga. 52, 53 S. E. 817, 114 Am. St. Rep. 181, 5 Ann. Cas. 66(3); Nobles v. State, 127 Ga. 212, 56 S. E. 125(3).

6. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The conviction was amply warranted by the evidence, and the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from City Court of Polk County; John L. Tison, Judge.

J. A. Huckleba was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Bunn & Trawick and W. W. Mundy, all of Cedartown, for plaintiff in error.

J. A. Wright, Sol., and E. S. Ault, both of Cedartown, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 346)

GRANT v. STATE. (No. 10810.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §915—OVERRULING DEMURRER TO INDICTMENT NOT GROUND FOR NEW TRIAL.

"The overruling of a demurrer to an indictment cannot properly be made a ground of a motion for a new trial." Veal v. State, 116 Ga. 589, 42 S. E. 705 (1); Brown v. Wilkes, 20 Ga. App. 92, 92 S. E. 553 (1), and cases cited.

2. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

Under the qualifying note of the trial judge there is no merit in the fifth ground of the motion for a new trial.

3. VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

The court did not err in charging the jury on voluntary manslaughter.

4. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence supports the verdict.

Error from Superior Court, Evans County; W. W. Sheppard, Judge.

Steve Grant was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

P. M. Anderson, of Claxton, for plaintiff in error.

J. Saxton Daniel, Sol. Gen., of Claxton, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 336)

CLAYTON v. STATE. (No. 10744.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. SUFFICIENCY OF INSTRUCTIONS.

There is no material error in either of the excerpts from the charge complained of, when considered in the light of the facts of the case.

2. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence amply authorized the verdict, and the court did not err in refusing to grant a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County;
H. A. Mathews, Judge.

Proceedings between Sidney Clayton and the State. A judgment adverse to Clayton was rendered, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Hubert F. Rawls, of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

Jno. P. Ross, Sol. Gen., of Macon, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 345)

POWELL v. STATE. (No. 10803.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL.

The evidence in this case demanded a finding of guilty, and the error complained of (if error it be) in the court's ruling that the defendant by his statement had put his character in issue was harmless. It was not error to overrule the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Macon County;
Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Cobb Powell was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Jno. B. Guerry, of Montezuma, for plaintiff in error.

Jule Felton, Sol. Gen., of Montezuma, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 414)

GROOVER v. TERRELL. (No. 10715.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2 Nov. 6, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)APPEAL AND ERROR §1005(2)—VERDICT APPROVED BY TRIAL JUDGE CONCLUSIVE.

In this case the motion for a new trial contained only the usual general grounds. There was evidence to authorize the verdict; and, the verdict having been approved by the trial judge, we are, under the repeated rulings of the Supreme Court and of this court, powerless to interfere.

Error from City Court of Hinesville; W. C. Hodges, Judge.

Action between Charlie Groover and J. M. Terrell. Judgment for the latter. Motion for new trial overruled, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

Ben A. Way, of Hinesville, for plaintiff in error.

O. C. Darsey, of Hinesville, for defendant in error.

SMITH, J. Judgment affirmed.

JENKINS, P. J., and STEPHENS, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 400)

SIMMONS v. COMMERCIAL BANK OF SAVANNAH. (No. 10397.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2 Nov. 6, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. BILLS AND NOTES §467(2), 497(1)—VALIDITY; PRESUMPTION OF BONA FIDE TRANSACTION FOR VALUE.

The Commercial Bank of Savannah sued Tucker, Pearson, Simmons, and Anderson on a promissory note made by Tucker and payable to the other defendants. The petition alleged that the note was "discounted or sold" by Tucker to petitioner before maturity; that it had been protested for nonpayment; that petitioner had served each of the defendants with the statutory notice of suit in order to collect attorney's fees. The defendant Simmons filed on his own behalf both a demurrer and an answer. The purport of the demurrer was that the petition failed to show whether the note was bought or discounted; that, if bought, it failed to show what was paid for it, and, if discounted, what amount was retained therefor. The answer of Simmons set up that he was merely a surety on the note, and had given the statutory notice to that effect; that the note sued on was a renewal of a similar previous note; that he had signed the original note at the request of Tucker, and upon the faith of Tucker's representations made to him that the other indorsers were responsible; that, prior to his signing the renewal note sued on, the other indorsers "had conveyed their property to their wives, and had apparently prepared to defeat the collection of this debt," which fact, although unknown to defendant, and though known to both Tucker and the bank at the time the renewal note was executed, was not disclosed to him by either of them. Defendant says that by reason of these facts the plaintiff had so increased his risk and liability as to work a discharge in his favor. The court overruled the demurrer, and on motion struck the defendant's answer, except as it related to attorney's fees, and, after hearing evidence upon the issue as to the giving of notice for attorney's fees, rendered judgment against all the defendants as prayed for. Held, the demurrer was properly overruled. The necessary meaning of the petition is that plaintiff became owner and holder of the note before maturity, and the transaction is therefore presumed to have been bona fide and for value. Civil Code 1910, § 4288. The word "discounted," as here used, necessarily has the meaning, and in terms is shown to have been used as synonymous with, "sold," and in such a case it is not required that the purchaser of a note shall state the price paid therefor. McCall v. Herring, 116 Ga. 235, 242, 42 S. E. 468; 3 R. C. L. p. 977, § 187.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Discounted.]

2. BILLS AND NOTES ⇨239—INDORSEMENT; PROCUREMENT BY FRAUD.

There was no error in striking the plea. It does not appear that the bank was guilty of any fraud on its part. The plea sets forth that the original note was signed purely at the request of Tucker, and that the defendant relied only upon Tucker's representations as to the responsibility of the other indorsers. It does not even appear that the bank knew that such representations had been made, or that it knew that defendant was merely a surety. No duty devolved upon the bank to voluntarily furnish information concerning the solvency of the other indorsers or sureties, in order to prevent the renewal by defendant of a note already signed by him purely at the instance of another, and solely upon that person's representations. Broughton v. Lazarus Co., 13 Ga. App. 153, 78 S. E. 1024.

3. JUDGMENT FOR PLAINTIFF.

There was sufficient evidence as to service upon defendant of the required notice to collect attorney's fees, and the court did not err in entering up judgment for the plaintiff.

Error from City Court of Savannah;
Davis Freeman, Judge.

Suit by the Commercial Bank of Savannah against Daniel Simmons and others. Demurrer of defendant Simmons to petition overruled, judgment entered for plaintiff, and defendant Simmons brings error. Affirmed.

W. B. Stubbs, of Savannah, for plaintiff in error.

U. H. McLaws, of Savannah, for defendant in error.

JENKINS, J. Judgment affirmed.

STEPHENS and SMITH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 367)

ABBOTT v. STATE. (No. 10721.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 5, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. JURY ⇨108—COMPETENCY; VIEW AS TO CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

When, in answer to the question, "Are you conscientiously opposed to capital punishment?" a juror upon his voir dire, in a case in which the offense charged may be punished with death, answers, "Not as a principle, but in a case of this character, where a woman is the defendant, I am opposed to capital punishment," it is proper for the court to hold that he is incompetent.

2. CHARGE ON VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

Under the evidence in this case, the court properly submitted to the jury the law of voluntary manslaughter.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⇨956(12) — NEW TRIAL; PREJUDICE FROM ERRONEOUS ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where, in a criminal case, a letter of such a character as to prejudice the minds of the jurors against the defendant has been excluded from the evidence, and by inadvertence is handed by the solicitor general to the jury with the documentary evidence in the case, and remains with the jury until their verdict is returned, the presumption is that the jurors read it before arriving at their verdict, and that the defendant's cause was prejudiced thereby. If all of the jurors testify that they did not read the letter before arriving at their verdict, the presumption is rebutted and a new trial is not required. Where, however, it is not so testified by all of the jurors, the presumption remains and a new trial becomes necessary. This is true even though all the members of the jury testify that the letter did not influence their verdict.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⇨957(5)—CONSIDERATION BY JURY OF EXCLUDED EVIDENCE; FAIR AND IMPARTIAL TRIAL.

In this case a letter, which was unaddressed and signed "B. B.," and which was prejudicial to the defendant, had been offered in evidence by the state, and its admission, upon proper objection, had been refused by the court upon the ground that it "could serve no other purpose than an attack on her character," etc., but by accident or inadvertence it was handed to the jury by the solicitor general with other documentary evidence introduced by the state. Some members of the jury read the letter, and one of them understood that it was written to the defendant; others did not; some did not read it; all say they were not influenced by it. No man can tell with certainty what influences his mind—what evidence or parts of evidence had least or most to do in leading him to a conclusion. While one may be a competent witness when sworn and examined in open court in a case in which he is serving as a juror, no juror can, while the jury are deliberating upon a case properly submitted, introduce evidence in the jury room by reading or submitting to other members of the jury documentary evidence, or anything reflecting upon the character of the defendant, which has been denied admission by the court. When such a state of facts exists, a new trial must be had. For this reason, in this case it was error to overrule the defendant's motion for a new trial. To hold otherwise where, as in this case, a prejudicial letter, which seriously reflected upon the good character of the defendant, found its way into the hands of the jury, would be to permit the jury to base their finding upon evidence not adduced in their hearing in court, and upon a view not authorized by the court. Anything which has the effect of destroying the impartiality, decorum, and decency of jury trial lessens, and in time will destroy, the best safeguard of the liberty and property rights of the people of the state. No defendant charged with crime has had a fair and impartial trial, even though he be guilty, unless the trial was in keeping with orderly legal procedure. See Woolfolk v. State, 81 Ga. 559, 8 S. E. 724; Smith v. State, 122 Ga. 154, 50 S. E. 62; Shedden v. Stiles, 121 Ga. 637, 49 S. E. 719; Killen v. Sistrunk, 7 Ga. 283; Walker v. Hunter, 17 Ga. 364; Griffin v. State, 5 Ga. App. 43, 62 S. E. 635.

5. OTHER ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

The other assignments of error have been considered, and are without merit, or the alleged errors are not likely to recur on the next trial of the case.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. D. Humphries, Judge.

Proceeding by the State against Stella Abbott, and, from the judgment, she brings error. Reversed.

E. W. Martin and Reuben R. Arnold, both of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

John A. Boykin, Sol. Gen., and E. A. Stephens, both of Atlanta, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment reversed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 350)

THOMAS v. STATE. (No. 10819.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS §167—EVIDENCE OF ILLICIT MANUFACTURE.

One who is present at a distillery when whisky is being manufactured, and who personally assists in the manufacture of the same, is guilty of manufacturing whisky, and it is immaterial whether or not he owns the distillery, or whether or not he is hired to work thereat.

2. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

There is no substantial merit in any of the special grounds of the motion for a new trial, the defendant's conviction was authorized by the evidence, and the court did not err in refusing to grant a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; H. A. Mathews, Judge.

L. L. Thomas was convicted of manufacturing whisky, and he brings error. Affirmed.

John R. Cooper and W. O. Cooper, Jr., both of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

John P. Ross, Sol. Gen., of Macon, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 350)

THOMAS v. STATE. (No. 10820.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §292(2) — SUFFICIENCY OF PLEA OF FORMER CONVICTION.

A plea of former conviction is good as against demurrer only when it sets out the record of the former trial and conviction and judgment, and such a state of facts as will show that the former conviction was for the same offense for which the defendant is about to be arraigned. See Blair v. State, 81 Ga. 629, 7 S. E. 855.

(a) It was not error to strike the plea in this case.

2. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence amply authorized the conviction, and there is no error in the charge of the court. For no reason assigned did the court err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; H. A. Mathews, Judge.

L. L. Thomas was convicted of a misdemeanor, and he brings error. Affirmed.

John R. Cooper and W. O. Cooper, Jr., both of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

John P. Ross, Sol. Gen., of Macon, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 314)

WHITE et al. v. STALLINGS. (No. 10452.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)STRIKING PLEA—DIRECTED VERDICT.

The record in this case does not show that the court erred either in striking the plea of the defendants or in thereafter directing a verdict for the plaintiff.

Error from Superior Court, Monroe County; W. E. H. Searcy, Jr., Judge.

Action by W. W. Stallings against E. G. White and others. Defendants' plea stricken, and verdict directed for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

B. H. Manry, of Barnesville, and A. M. Zellner, of Forsyth, for plaintiffs in error.

Jas. M. Smith, of Barnesville, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 344)

BLOOD v. STATE. (No. 10797.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)CRIMINAL LAW §742(1)—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES FOR JURY.

This case is presented here upon the general grounds only. There is evidence to support the verdict. It was the right and province of the jury to credit such witnesses and circumstances as they, under appropriate charge, deemed satisfied them beyond a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt. It was not error to overrule the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Louis Blood was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

C. A. Picquet, of Augusta, for plaintiff in error.

A. L. Franklin, Sol. Gen., of Augusta, and Jno. M. Graham, of Atlanta, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 346)

SMITH v. STATE. (No. 10811.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. SUFFICIENCY OF INSTRUCTIONS.

The single excerpt from the charge of the court complained of, while slightly inaccurate and perhaps inapplicable to a case of assault with intent to rape, does not, under all of the facts of the case and the entire charge of the court, require a new trial. The charge of the court was a very exhaustive and fair presentation of the law of the case, and clearly and fully presented all of the contentions of the defendant, and gave him the benefit of all of the defenses offered, or which could have been offered, by him.

2. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The verdict was amply authorized by the evidence, and the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Wilcox County; O. T. Gover, Judge.

Frank Smith was convicted of assault with intent to rape, and he brings error. Affirmed.

M. B. Cannon, of Abbeville, and Eldridge Cutts, of Fitzgerald, for plaintiff in error.

J. B. Wall, Sol. Gen., of Fitzgerald, and Hal Lawson, of Abbeville, for defendant in error.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 342)

CLEMENTS v. STATE. (No. 10786.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

There is evidence to support the verdict. The motion for a new trial contains no special grounds, and was properly overruled.

Error from Superior Court, Meriwether County; J. R. Terrell, Judge.

Proceeding between Clark Clements and the State. A judgment adverse to Clements was rendered, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Justiss & Hay and R. A. McGraw, all of Greenville, for plaintiff in error.

C. E. Roop, Sol. Gen., of Carrollton, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 337)

CHILDS v. STATE. (No. 10751.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)INSTRUCTIONS AND EVIDENCE.

The court did not err in charging the jury on voluntary manslaughter, there is ample evidence to support the verdict, and the motion for new trial was properly overruled.

Error from Superior Court, Putnam County; J. B. Park, Judge.

John (alias Bully) Childs was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Davidson & Callaway, of Eatonton, for plaintiff in error.

Doyle Campbell, Sol. Gen., of Monticello, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 315)

CLARKE & WOOD v. BROOKE et al.
(No. 10545.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. MOTION TO DISMISS BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—RULING.

The motion to dismiss the bill of exceptions is overruled.

(a) The cases cited and relied upon by defendant in error to sustain the first and second grounds of the motion to dismiss are all prior to the act approved August 21, 1911, and found in Laws 1911, p. 149. See sections 3 and 4 of that act, and Bank of Dalton v. Clark, 19 Ga. App. 729, 92 S. E. 40 (3).

(b) Counsel for defendant in error cites certain cases to sustain the third ground of his motion to dismiss. These were decided prior to the act of 1896 (Laws 1896, p. 45). See Hammond v. Hammond, 135 Ga. 770, 70 S. E. 588 (3); Harnage v. State, 7 Ga. App. 573, 67 S. E. 694 (1).

2. RULING ON CERTIORARI.

The judge of the superior court properly overruled the petition for certiorari.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; W. D. Ellis, Judge.

Action by J. P. Brooke and others, for use, etc., against Clarke & Wood. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

A. E. Wilson, of Atlanta, for plaintiffs in error.

W. H. Lewis, of Atlanta, and J. P. Brooke, of Alpharetta, for defendants in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 347)

WALLER v. STATE. (No. 10815.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The court did not err in charging the jury as complained of in the amendment to the motion for new trial.

2. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

There is ample evidence to support the verdict, and the judgment is affirmed.

Error from City Court of Macon; Du Pont Guerry, Judge.

Proceeding between Rogers Waller and the State. A decision adverse to Waller was rendered, and he brings error. Affirmed.

H. F. Rawls, of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

Will Gunn, Sol., of Macon, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 369)

DAVID v. STATE. (No. 10877.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 5, 1919.)(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INSTRUCTIONS AS TO ALIBI.

The exception to the charge of the court upon the defense of alibi is not subject to the criticism urged against it. It was understandable, not confusing, and correctly charged upon this particular defense. See Smith v. State, 3 Ga. App. 803, 61 S. E. 737.

2. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$ 1159(4)—REVIEW OF QUESTIONS OF FACT ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

The evidence for the state, if believed by the jury, demanded the verdict, which has the approval of the trial judge. This court cannot set a verdict aside where the jury who sees and heard the witnesses give credit to one version rather than the other. The court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Harris County; G. H. Howard, Judge.

Proceedings between the State and E. C. David. A judgment adverse to David was rendered, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Geo. C. Palmer, of Columbus, for plaintiff in error.

C. F. McLaughlin, Sol. Gen., of Columbus, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 338)

JENKINS v. STATE. (No. 10775.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)*INTOXICATING LIQUORS  $\S$ 236(19) — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE; ILLEGAL MANUFACTURE.

The defendant was indicted for distilling, manufacturing and making alcoholic, intoxicating, and spirituous liquors, and malted liquor and mixed liquor and beverages, part of same being alcoholic. The jury were authorized, and did find, that the defendant had in his house an outfit that had been when assembled, and could be, used to distill whisky, and had in his house beer that is used for distillation; that such beer was intoxicating; and that such concoction at the time it was so found was fermenting in a barrel, over the head of which a quilt was placed; that the still outfit had been in recent use, and that "low wine," or the first run of whisky, had been through the still and pipes. Such evidence, under appropriate charge of the court, was sufficient to authorize a verdict of guilty against the defendant. The trial judge having approved the verdict and no error of law being assigned which requires a new trial, the judgment is affirmed.

Error from Superior Court, Lee County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Will Jenkins was convicted of unlawfully manufacturing intoxicating liquors, and he brings error. Affirmed.

W. G. Martin, of Albany, for plaintiff in error.

Jule Felton, Sol. Gen., of Montezuma, for the State.

LUKE, J. The judgment is affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 371)

BALLARD et al. v. MORGAN COUNTY et al.
MORGAN COUNTY et al. v. BALLARD et al.
(Nos. 10732, 10748.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2
Nov. 5, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)*1. COURTS  $\S$ 488(1) — TRANSFER FROM SUPREME COURT TO COURT OF APPEALS OF CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS.

This case, under the writ of error, was transmitted from the superior court to the Supreme Court, and the latter court by a formal order transferred it to this court. From this order it necessarily follows that in the judgment of the Supreme Court the constitutional question attempted to be raised in the case was not properly presented.

2. COUNTIES  $\S$ 183(4)—PROCEEDING TO VACATE VALIDATION OF BONDS.

Where, at a special term of the superior court of Morgan county held on June 28, 1919, upon a petition duly filed, praying for the validation of certain county bonds, all the proceedings appeared on their face to have been regular, including the notice provided for by law, and the court rendered a judgment validating the bonds, and 16 days thereafter, and after the court had adjourned, certain persons filed a petition merely alleging that they were taxpayers and asking that the order validating the bonds be vacated or reopened and that they be heard on the question as to the regularity or irregularity of the election held to authorize the bonds, the court did not err in dismissing the petition on the ground that it came too late.

Error from Superior Court, Morgan County; J. B. Park, Judge.

Proceeding by W. W. Ballard and others against Morgan County and others. Petition dismissed and plaintiffs bring error, and defendants take a cross-bill of exceptions. Af-affirmed on main bill of exceptions, and cross-bill dismissed.

Sam'l H. Sibley, of Union Point, and Orrin Roberts, of Monroe, for plaintiffs in error.

Williford & Lambert, of Madison, and Doyle Campbell, Sol. Gen., of Monticello, for defendants in error.

SMITH, J. Judgment affirmed on main bill of exceptions; cross-bill dismissed.

JENKINS, P. J., and STEPHENS, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 364)

BOATRIGHT v. EASON. (No. 10611.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Nov. 5, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. COURTS  $\S$ 188(8)—JURISDICTION OF MUNICIPAL COURT IN ACTION TO TENANTS.

The city court of Blackshear has jurisdiction of the trial of proceedings to evict a tenant holding over. See Acts 1911, p. 211; Dorrough v. Morris, 21 Ga. App. 477, 94 S. E. 641, and cases cited.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT  $\S$ 294—DETERMINATION OF RIGHT OF POSSESSION.

The proceeding authorized by section 5382 et seq. of the Civil Code (1910) is not for the trial of title to land. The sole purpose of this section and the rights thereunder is to determine the right of possession between one claiming to be a landlord, on one side, and a person claimed by him to be his tenant, on the other side. See Jordan v. Jordan, 108 Ga. 483, 30 S. E. 265; Bullard v. Hudson, 125 Ga. 393, 54 S. E. 132; Grizzard v. Roberts, 110 Ga. 41, 35 S. E. 291; Willis v. Harrell, 118 Ga. 906, 45 S. E. 794.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR  $\S$ 169, 174—QUESTIONS OF LAW NOT RAISED BELOW NOT REVIEWABLE.

Questions of law not raised in the trial court cannot be raised here for the first time.

(a) The warrant in this case was proceeding in the name of a guardian for his ward, and issue was joined by the defendant as such; and the point cannot for the first time be raised here, by the brief of the plaintiff in error, that the guardian did not introduce in evidence his letters of guardianship, no such question having been raised in the trial court by plea as would put the plaintiff in the court below to such proof. See Haslehurst v. Morrison, 48 Ga. 397; Western & Atlantic R. Co. v. Harris, 128 Ga. 394, 57 S. E. 722.

4. EVICTION.

The trial judge, who by agreement heard the case without the aid of a jury, did not err in rendering judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

Error from City Court of Blackshear; W. A. Milton, Judge pro hac.

Action by W. M. Eason, guardian against R. B. Boatright. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

W. W. Bennett, of Baxley, for plaintiff in error.

Memory & Memory, of Blackshear, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 355)

HARRIS v. STATE. (No. 10869.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence did not authorize the conviction of the defendant upon the charge of unlawfully possessing intoxicating liquors. It was error to overrule her motion for a new trial.

Error from City Court of Dublin; R. D. Flynt, Judge.

C. L. Harris was convicted of unlawfully possessing intoxicating liquors, and she brings error. Reversed.

Smyth Burch and W. A. Dampier, both of Dublin, for plaintiff in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment reversed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 360)

KEYS v. STATE. (No. 10887.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INSTRUCTIONS AS TO LARCENY.

The court did not err in failing to charge the jury upon the law of larceny.

2. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$ 938(1)—NEW TRIAL ON GROUNDS OF NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

The alleged newly discovered evidence, which is the basis of the second special ground of the motion for a new trial, is cumulative in character, and is not such evidence as would probably cause a different result upon another trial of the case.

3. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence amply authorized the verdict, and the court did not err in refusing to grant a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Bartow County; M. C. Tarver, Judge.

C. W. Keys was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

W. C. Henson, of Cartersville, and A. L. Henson, of Calhoun, for plaintiff in error.

J. M. Lang, Sol. Gen., of Calhoun, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 326)

WALTON v. STATE. (No. 10708.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ¶762(3)—INSTRUCTIONS; EXPRESSING OPINION AS TO PROOF.

The following excerpt from the charge is complained of: "Assault with intent to commit a rape is an assault made with the intent to have carnal knowledge of a female, forcibly and against her will. If a person should make an assault upon a woman with the intent to have carnal knowledge of her, forcibly and against her will; if he entered upon that assault and should seize the woman with that intention and that was his intention, then if he desisted by reason of fear or from an inability to commit the offense, why then that would not acquit him of the offense of assault with intent to commit a rape." This portion of the charge is not subject to the only exception thereto argued in the brief of counsel for the plaintiff in error, to wit, that the court therein expressed or intimated an opinion as to what had been proved in the case.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ¶1178—APPEAL; ABANDONMENT OF OBJECTIONS.

The other special grounds of the motion for a new trial, not being referred to in the brief of counsel for the plaintiff in error, are treated as abandoned.

3. REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL.

The verdict was authorized by the evidence, and the court did not err in refusing to grant a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Stewart County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Willard Walton was prosecuted for a crime, and from the judgment, and the denial of his motion for a new trial, he brings error. Affirmed.

N. B. Butt and G. Y. Harrell, both of Lumpkin, for plaintiff in error.

Jule Felton, Sol. Gen., of Montezuma, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 379)
TATE v. STATE. (No. 10688.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION ¶186 — NATURE OF MOTION TO QUASH.

A motion to quash an accusation is merely a demurrer to the accusation. Thomasson v. State, 22 Ga. 499 (1).

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION ¶147 — GROUNDS OF DEMURRER.

An accusation is not demurrable for any matter dehors the pleadings and the record. Jackson v. State, 64 Ga. 344 (1).

3. STRIKING MOTION TO QUASH AFFIDAVIT.

Under the above rulings the court did not err in striking the motion to quash the accusation.

Error from City Court of Macon; Du Pont Guerry, Judge.

Proceeding by the State, on accusation against Fred Tate. From a judgment striking his motion to quash the accusation, Tate brings error. Affirmed.

Wallace Miller, of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

Will Gunn, Sol., of Macon, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 357)

HARGETT et al. v. STATE. (No. 10878.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The special ground of the motion for a new trial points out no error which would require the grant of a new trial.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ¶1159(2), 1160—REVIEW OF QUESTIONS OF FACT.

This court is a court for the correction of errors of law alone. "It has no authority to entertain an assignment of error that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, if there is any evidence at all to support the verdict. This ground in the motion for new trial is addressed to the discretion of the trial judge, upon whom is imposed the duty of being satisfied with a verdict before he approves it." Bell v. Aiken, 1 Ga. App. 36, 57 S. E. 1001. On questions of fact the jury is the final arbiter. The trial judge by overruling the motion for a new trial expressed his satisfaction with the verdict, and this court will not interfere.

Error from Superior Court, Harris County; G. H. Howard, Judge.

Proceedings between Charlie Hargett and others, and the State. Judgment adverse to Hargett and his coparties was rendered, and they bring error. Affirmed.

Geo. C. Palmer, of Columbus, for plaintiffs in error.

C. F. McLaughlin, Sol. Gen., of Columbus, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 402)

MARSHALL v. ARMOUR FERTILIZER WORKS. (No. 10453.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2. Nov. 6, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. TIME §9(4)—COMPUTATION OF TIME FOR JUDICIAL SALES.

"Whenever any officer of this state shall have taken possession of any property under process in any case of trover, and neither the plaintiff nor defendant shall replevy such property, and such property remains in the hands of such officer, and is of a perishable nature or liable to deterioration from keeping, or there is expense attending the keeping of the same, the same may be sold under the provisions of section 6068 of the Code." Civ. Code 1910, § 5153; Glisson v. Heggie, 105 Ga. 30, 31 S. E. 118; Our Bank v. Corry, 145 Ga. 385, 89 S. E. 365; Phillips v. Taber, 83 Ga. 565, 10 S. E. 270. Under the provisions of section 6069 of the Code, if the property be live stock, it may be sold as therein provided after three days' notice. Where a sale is advertised on December 25th to take place on December 27th, there is a failure to comply with the legal requirement governing the sale, since where a number of days is prescribed for the exercise of any privilege, or the discharge of any duty, only the first or last day shall be counted. Pol. Code 1910, § 4, par. 8; English v. Ozburn, 59 Ga. 392; Rusk v. Hill, 117 Ga. 722, 726, 45 S. E. 42.

2. JUDICIAL SALES §11, 50(1), 53—PURCHASER AT VOID SALE ACQUIRES NO TITLE.

While it is true that a purchaser of property at a void sale acquires no title thereto (Kirkland v. Gaskins, 20 Ga. App. 235, 92 S. E. 965; Bacon v. Hanesley, 22 Ga. App. 704, 97 S. E. 101), the mere fact that the sheriff had not advertised a sale of personal property had under the provisions of sections 5153, 6068, and 6069 of the Civil Code 1910, for the full three days as therein provided, would not of itself render the sale void. The purchaser at a sheriff's sale depends upon the "judgment, the levy, and the deed," all other questions being between parties to the judgment and the officer; it being sufficient for the purchaser that the sheriff had obtained authority to sell and had executed to him a title. The provisions of law governing the advertisement of the property for a particular time or in a particular way are merely directory to the sheriff, and the effect of any such neglect on his part results in subjecting him to a suit for damages at the instance of the party injured, but does not affect the title of the purchaser unless there was actual fault on the purchaser's part, such as collusion between him and the sheriff. Brooks v. Rooney, 11 Ga. 423, 56 Am. Dec. 430; Civ. Code 1910, § 6059; Hendrick v. Davis, 27 Ga. 167, 73 Am. Dec. 726; Solomon v. Peters, 87 Ga. 251, 256, 92 Am. Dec. 69; Wallace v. Trustees, 52 Ga. 165, 166; Jeffries v. Bartlett, 75 Ga. 230; Conley v. Redwine, 109 Ga. 640, 644, 35 S. E. 92, 77 Am. St. Rep. 898. Even the fact that the purchaser was put upon notice that such a merely directory duty of the officer had not been complied with would not of itself, and in the absence of fraud or collusion on the part of the purchaser, render the sale void and thus impair the title so acquired. Johnson v. Reese, 28 Ga. 353, 355, 73 Am. Dec. 757.

3. JUDICIAL SALES §3—AUTHORITY OF SHERIFF TO SELL.

It being undisputed that the plaintiff in this case had authorized the sheriff to notify the defendant of the plaintiff's intention to apply for leave to sell, this is equivalent to a permission for the sheriff to proceed in the plaintiff's name in obtaining such an order, and it therefore becomes unnecessary in this case to decide whether in such a proceeding the sheriff would ordinarily have the right to proceed in the name of the plaintiff rather than in his own.

4. DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

Under the rulings made in the two preceding paragraphs, the court erred in directing a verdict for the plaintiff.

5. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION §16, 25(3), 34—RECOUPMENT FOR MALICIOUS USE OF LEGAL PROCESS.

The court did not err, however, in refusing to allow the defendant's claim for damages by way of recoupment, in which the defendant sought to thus recover for the alleged malicious use by the plaintiff of the present legal process. There are three essential elements which must appear before one can recover for malicious use of legal process: (1) Malice; (2) want of probable cause; and (3) that the proceeding complained of had terminated in favor of the defendant therein before suit for damages based upon it was brought. Thus, where a plaintiff had instituted a bail trover action against a defendant, the defendant could not in the same case, by way of recoupment, recover damages for such alleged malicious use of the legal process, since the proceeding complained of had not terminated in the defendant's favor. Fender v. Ramsey, 131 Ga. 440, 62 S. E. 527. In point of fact, the record as now presented precludes the possibility of even a future recovery on such a ground, since the judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the trover proceeding, even though erroneous, is nevertheless sufficient to conclusively establish the existence of such a probable cause as will prevent the maintenance of such an action. Short v. Spragins, 104 Ga. 628, 30 S. E. 810; McElreath v. Gross, 23 Ga. App. 287, 98 S. E. 190.

Error from Superior Court, Taylor County; G. H. Howard, Judge.

Action by the Armour Fertilizer Works against C. B. Marshall. Judgment on a directed verdict for plaintiff, new trial was denied, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Armour Fertilizer Works instituted bail trover proceedings against Marshall to recover certain mules to which the plaintiff claimed title. The defendant answered that he had purchased the property at a sheriff's sale had by virtue of a previous bail trover proceeding instituted by the plaintiff against one D. A. Youngblood. He also sought to recoup damages against the plaintiff for malicious use of the present legal process, alleging that the proceeding was instituted and prosecuted maliciously and without probable cause, and that plaintiff was a nonresident corporation. Upon the trial of the case it was disclosed: That on March 23, 1916, D. A. Youngblood was indebted to the Armour Fertilizer Works in the sum of $383, which indebtedness was evidenced by a promissory note payable October 1, 1916, and, to secure the payment thereof, he had executed a bill of sale to the fertilizer works to said live stock. Youngblood having failed to pay the note when due, the Armour Fertilizer Works had instituted bail trover proceedings against him, and the sheriff had seized the property described in the bill of sale. Neither the Armour Fertilizer Works nor Youngblood replevied the property, and the judge of the superior court being absent from the county, the sheriff, after proper notice, applied to the ordinary in the name of the Armour Fertilizer Works, for leave to sell such property as perishable and expensive to keep, under the provisions of the Civil Code 1910, § 5153.

On December 25, 1916, the ordinary granted an order directing the sheriff to sell the property, and the sheriff advertised the same to be sold on December 27, 1916, and did sell it on that date. The attorney for the Armour Fertilizer Works appeared at the sale and entered his objections, stating to the sheriff and to the public, including Marshall, that the property was being sold illegally on account of it not having been properly advertised. The sheriff, despite such objection, proceeded with the sale, and C. B. Marshall, the defendant in the present proceeding, bought the two mules now in controversy, paying therefor the sum of $235.70. The Armour Fertilizer Works then instituted the present bail trover proceedings, claiming title to the property under the bill of sale executed by Youngblood, and contending that the sheriff's sale was void because not properly advertised, and that the defendant, having bought the property with notice of this fact, had acquired no title thereto. After hearing the evidence, the court directed a verdict against the defendant's plea of recoupment, claiming damages for malicious use of legal process, and then proceeded to direct a verdict in favor of the plaintiff on the main branch of the suit in trover. The defendant made a motion for a new trial assigning error upon the several rulings thus made by the court, which motion for a new trial being overruled, defendant now excepts.

Jere M. Moore, of Montezuma, and C. B. Marshall, of Reynolds, for plaintiff in error.

C. W. Foy, of Butler, for defendant in error.

JENKINS, P. J. Judgment reversed.

STEPHENS and SMITH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 327)

DAVIS v. STATE. (No. 10710.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

ROBBERY  $\Rightarrow$  24(5) — EVIDENCE; FORCE AND INTIMIDATION.

The defendant was convicted of the offense of robbery. The evidence failed to show that any force or intimidation was used, or that there was a sudden snatching, taking, or carrying away, such as is defined to be robbery. Pen. Code 1910, § 148; Williams v. State, 9 Ga. App. 170, 70 S. E. 890. His conviction of the offense of robbery was unauthorized by the evidence. A conviction of larceny from the person would have been authorized if he had been indicted for that offense. For the reason that the evidence did not authorize his conviction, his motion for a new trial, upon the general grounds, must be granted.

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; P. W. Meldrim, Judge.

John Davis was convicted of robbery, his motion for a new trial upon the general grounds was overruled, and he brings error. Reversed.

Shelby Myrick, of Savannah, for plaintiff in error.

Walter C. Hartridge, Sol. Gen., of Savannah, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment reversed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 363)

WEATHERS v. STATE. (No. 10523.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 5, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. CRIMINAL LAW §112(4) — VENUE; EMBEZZLEMENT OF CHECKS ISSUED BY BANK PRESIDENT IN ANOTHER COUNTY.

Where the president of a bank, by reason of his official position with it, embezzles its funds by drawing them by checks issued in another county, the venue of the crime is not improperly laid in the county in which the bank is situated. See Mangham v. State, 11 Ga. App. 427-436, 75 S. E. 512(2); Rose v. State, 4 Ga. App. 588, 62 S. E. 117.

2. OVERRULING OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The evidence in this case authorized the verdict, which has the approval of the trial judge, and for no reason assigned did the court err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Berrien County; W. E. Thomas, Judge.

Proceeding by the State against A. H. Weathers, and from the judgment and the denial of his motion for a new trial he brings error. Affirmed.

J. P. Knight and Wm. Story, both of Nashville, W. O. Lankford, of Douglas, and W. W. Bennett, of Baxley, for plaintiff in error.

C. E. Hay, Sol. Gen., of Thomasville, and W. D. Buie, of Nashville, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 338)

RUMPH v. STATE. (No. 10765.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. CRIMINAL LAW §769, 824(10)—INSTRUCTIONS—IMPEACHMENT OF WITNESSES—CORROBORATION.

While "the law is well settled that when a judge undertakes to charge the law on any subject, he must charge all of it upon that subject that is material and applicable to the case" (Harper v. State, 17 Ga. App. 561, 87 S. E. 808 [2]), in this case the charge of the court upon the subject of impeachment of witnesses sufficiently covered all of that subject which was material and applicable.

(a) Several of the state's witnesses were sought to be impeached by proof that on the commitment trial of the defendant their testimony was materially different from what it was on this trial, but none of them admitted that his testimony on the former trial was false; on the contrary they all denied that their testimony on the two trials was different. Under these facts it was not error for the court, in the absence of a timely and appropriate written request, to fail to charge the jury that if a witness willfully and knowingly swore falsely as to a material matter, his testimony ought to be disregarded entirely unless corroborated by circumstances or other unimpeached evidence. Robison v. State, 114 Ga. 446, 447, 40 S. E. 253. See, also, Millen & Southwestern R. Co. v. Allen, 130 Ga. 656, 61 S. E. 541(5).

(b) The excerpt from the charge of the court complained of was not error for any reason assigned.

2. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The verdict was authorized by the evidence, and the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Macon County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Dock Rumph was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

John B. Guerry, of Montezuma, for plaintiff in error.

Jule Felton, Sol. Gen., of Montezuma, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 330)

GOOLSBY v. STATE. (No. 10729.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. EVIDENCE TO SUSTAIN CONVICTION OF ROBBERY.

The evidence in this case authorized the conviction of the offense of robbery.

2. INSTRUCTIONS—INTENT TO STEAL.

The charge of the court is not subject to the criticism that it failed to instruct the jury upon the question of intent to steal being a necessary ingredient of the crime of robbery. The jury was instructed that robbery was charged to have been committed by the defendant, and the elements of robbery were fully charged.

3. OVERRULING OF THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The court fully charged upon the subject of alibi as a defense. The verdict being authorized, and there being no error assigned which entitles the defendant to a new trial, it was proper for the court to overrule the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Oglethorpe County; W. L. Hodges, Judge.

Mose Goolsby was convicted of an offense, his motion for a new trial was denied, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Joel Cloud and Hamilton McWhorter, Jr., both of Lexington, for plaintiff in error.

A. S. Skelton, Sol. Gen., of Hartwell, and Paul Brown, of Lexington, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 370)

GOEN v. STATE. (No. 10904.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 5, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §1064(7) — NEW TRIAL; SUFFICIENCY OF MOTION.

A special ground of a motion for a new trial must be complete within itself. The second special ground of the motion for a new trial in the instant case is as follows: "(2) Because the court failed to charge the law of circumstantial evidence." It is not even alleged in this ground that the defendant's conviction depended wholly upon circumstantial evidence; consequently the ground cannot be considered.

2. LARCENY §64(7)—EVIDENCE; POSSESSION OF RECENTLY STOLEN GOODS.

The evidence failed to show definitely how recent was the possession of the stolen property. It does, however, appear from the record that the goods were stolen in September, 1918, and that the defendant was indicted in January, 1919. The defendant's conviction, however, did not depend entirely upon his recent possession of the stolen goods, but the evidence showed other incriminatory facts, and therefore the defendant's conviction was not contrary to the following ruling in Calloway v. State, 111 Ga. 832, 36 S. E. 63, cited by counsel for the plaintiff in error: "While recent possession of stolen goods unexplained will justify a conviction for larceny, the mere possession of goods several months subsequent to the time they were alleged to have been stolen and the failure to satisfactorily account for such possession will not alone authorize a conviction" (italics ours).

3. OVERRULING MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The verdict was authorized by the evidence, and the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Spalding County; W. E. H. Searcy, Jr., Judge.

Aswell (alias Minor) Goen was convicted of an offense, his motion for a new trial was denied, and he brings error. Affirmed.

C. L. Redman, of Jackson, for plaintiff in error.

E. M. Owen, Sol. Gen., of Zebulon, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 352)

CULBERSON v. STATE. (No. 10852.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW §935(1), 1160—NEW TRIAL; DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—REVIEW.

"In this case the motion for a new trial contained only the usual general grounds. There was some slight evidence authorizing the verdict; and, the verdict having been approved by the trial judge, under the repeated and uniform rulings of this court and of the Supreme Court, a reviewing court is powerless to interfere. When the verdict is apparently decidedly against the weight of the evidence, the trial judge has a wide discretion as to granting or refusing a new trial; but whenever there is any evidence, however slight, to support a verdict which has been approved by the trial judge, this court is absolutely without authority to control the judgment of the trial court." Bradham v. State, 21 Ga. App. 510, 94 S. E. 618, and cases cited.

Error from Superior Court, Harris County; G. H. Howard, Judge.

Proceeding between the State and Addis Culberson, and from the judgment Culberson brings error. Affirmed.

J. B. Burnside, of Thomson, for plaintiff in error.

C. F. McLaughlin, Sol. Gen., of Columbus, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 280)

BURNS et al. v. F. S. ROYSTER GUANO CO. (No. 10690.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

EXECUTION §166 — ILLEGALITY; DISMISSAL OF AFFIDAVIT OF.

This is the second appearance of this case in this court (Proctor v. F. S. Royster Guano Co., 21 Ga. App. 617, 94 S. E. 821), and it is here now on exception to the dismissal of an affidavit of illegality, in which the execution issued upon the judgment in question was attacked on the ground that "it does not appear that the said F. S. Royster Guano Company is either an individual trading under said name, or is a copartnership composed of named individuals, nor is a corporation under the laws of any state of America," etc. The petition shows that the suit proceeded in the name of "F. S. Royster Company, a corporation." The judgment is regular, and the execution issued and proceeded in accordance with the judgment.

There is no merit in the affidavit of illegality, and the court properly dismissed it.

Error from City Court of Millen; G. C. Dekle, Judge.

Proceeding on execution by the F. S. Royster Guano Company against J. M. Burns and others, with affidavit of illegality. From a judgment dismissing the affidavit of illegality, defendants bring error. Affirmed.

A. S. Anderson and Thos. L. Hill, both of Millen, for plaintiffs in error.

Brinson & Hatcher, of Waynesboro, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 342)

KINSEY v. STATE. (No. 10790.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. HOMICIDE  $\S$ 145—EVIDENCE; PRESUMPTION AS TO INTENT.

Under the facts of this case the court did not err in failing to charge the jury on the law of involuntary manslaughter. The accused was charged with murder, the indictment alleging that he "did kill and murder by striking and cutting the said Charlie Clover with a certain heavy piece of timber and club and knife." The evidence showed that the wounds from which the deceased died were made by a scantling, which was three or four inches wide, about three inches thick, and four or five feet long, and by a knife. A witness swore that the defendant cut the deceased "with a knife on the left side of the chin, and on his arm; the cut made a deep gash; I suppose to the bone. He also cut him on the left arm between the shoulder and elbow." Another witness swore that the deceased was "cut on the side of the jaw. The gash was about an inch and a half wide and went to the bone. He was cut to the bone on the chin; * * * his jawbone was broken. * * * He seemed to be crushed in several places, and also three places on the left side of his head was skinned; had rose up kinder; had departed from the skull, and was full of water, soft like. This wound was inflicted by some kind of a blunt instrument. The wound on his chin could have been made by some sort of a knife." "All men are presumed to intend the natural and proximate consequences of their action. When a man kills another by the use of means appropriate to that end, he is presumed to have intended that end. 'When death results from the unlawful use of a deadly weapon, the law by presumption imputes to the slayer an intention to kill.' Gallery v. State, 92 Ga. 463, 17 S. E. 863. 'When one voluntarily shoots at another and the shot kills, the homicide cannot be involuntary.' Smith v. State, 73 Ga. 79 (3). See, also, Stovall v. State, 106 Ga. 444 (3), 447, 32 S. E. 586; Johnson v. State, 4 Ga. App. 59, 60 S. E. 813." Conley v. State, 21 Ga. App. 135, 94 S. E. 261. Counsel for plaintiff in error relies upon Wrye v. State, 99 Ga. 34, 25 S. E. 610. That case is not binding authority upon this point, as appears from the following: "While there cannot be either murder or voluntary manslaughter without an intent to kill, yet where the weapon used by the slayer was a pocketknife, and he stabbed the deceased in the back with it, the intent to kill may be presumed; and it was not necessary that the evidence should affirmatively show that the knife used was a weapon likely to produce death. Johnson v. State, supra. The two cases cited by counsel for the plaintiff in error (Wrye v. State, 99 Ga. 34, 25 S. E. 610, and Warnack v. State, 3 Ga. App. 590, 60 S. E. 288) to sustain their contention that the court should have charged the law of involuntary manslaughter although that theory of defense was raised solely by the defendant's statement, are not binding authorities upon this point, for the reason that the general statements in the decisions of those cases, which apparently so hold, are obiter; it appearing that in the Wrye Case there was a timely written request to give such a charge, and that in the Warnack Case the theory of involuntary manslaughter was raised, not only by the defendant's statement, but also by the sworn testimony." Lott v. State, 18 Ga. App. 748, 90 S. E. 727 (3).

2. HOMICIDE  $\S$ 255(2) — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The verdict of voluntary manslaughter was authorized by the evidence, and the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Laurens County; J. L. Kent, Judge.

Cluck Kinsey was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and he brings error. Affirmed.

J. S. Adams, of Dublin, for plaintiff in error.

E. L. Stephens, Sol. Gen., of Wrightsville, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

$\Leftarrow$  For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

(24 Ga. App. 341)

BARKSDALE v. STATE. (No. 10778.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The court substantially charged as requested by the defendant, and, in view of the evidence, the charge of the court was most fair to the defendant.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §1160—REVIEW OF VERDICT APPROVED BY TRIAL COURT.

The evidence amply authorized the jury to find that the defendant was in possession of many gallons of whisky, and material and equipment for making more. He had in his house clothes and shoes covered with the "slops" from the still, etc. The trial court approved the verdict; no error of law is shown; the defendant had a fair trial by a jury of his people; it was proper to overrule the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Lincoln County; B. F. Walker, Judge.

Sandy Barksdale was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Colley & Colley, of Washington, Ga., for plaintiff in error.

R. C. Norman, Sol. Gen., of Washington, Ga., for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 422)

STARLING et al. v. STATE. (No. 10667.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 7, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. CRIMINAL LAW §1064(1, 4)—NEW TRIAL; GROUNDS OF MOTION.

Even if the assignment of error in the fourth ground of the motion for a new trial was properly made, we do not think the court committed error in admitting the evidence of which complaint is made. However, under previous rulings of this court, we are not called upon to consider this ground of the motion, the opening sentence of which is as follows: "Because the court, over the objection of defendant's counsel, allowed the following testimony, to wit." Then follows the testimony of some witness not named. In Adams v. State, 22 Ga. App. 252, 95 S. E. 877 (1), it is held that "a ground of a motion for a new trial, which complains of the admission of specified testimony, must state the name of the witness whose testimony is complained of. Hayes v. State, 18 Ga. App. 68, 88 S. E. 752; Peeples v. Butler, 21 Ga. App. 310, 94 S. E. 278."

See, also, Hunter v. State, 148 Ga. 566, 97 S. E. 523 (1). Further on in this ground of the motion it is alleged that "defendant's counsel moved the court to exclude the testimony of the several witnesses as to what Gus Odom told Jack Cox, John Robinson, and Charlie McLain." The names of the "several witnesses" are not given. Even if from the language used we could reach the conclusion that the witnesses referred to were Cox, Robinson, and McLain, it would be necessary to search through the entire brief of evidence, to see what each swore, before we could determine whether the evidence was improperly admitted, and this we are not required to do. Both this court and the Supreme Court have held that "grounds of a motion for new trial, which are incomplete, and cannot be understood without resorting to an examination of the brief of evidence, fail to present any question for decision. Head v. State, 144 Ga. 383, 87 S. E. 273; Sims v. Sims, 131 Ga. 262, 62 S. E. 192." Smiley v. Smiley, 144 Ga. 546 (2), 87 S. E. 668; Braxley v. State, 17 Ga. App. 197(4), 86 S. E. 425.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §912½, 1020½—CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS; MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

By the fifth ground of the motion for a new trial it was sought to raise a constitutional question, and this case was sent to the Supreme Court. That court held: "Under the ruling made in Hendry v. State, 147 Ga. 260, 93 S. E. 413 (8), 'a question as to the constitutionality of a law cannot be raised for the first time in a motion for new trial, where it was not made either by demurrer to the pleadings, or by objections to the evidence, or in some other appropriate way pending the trial.' The plaintiff in error in the instant case was accused and convicted of a misdemeanor. In his motion for new trial an attack is made for the first time upon the constitutionality of the statute for the violation of which he was convicted. Under the ruling quoted above, concurred in by a majority of the court, no constitutional question is properly made in the case. The case is not one of which the Supreme Court has jurisdiction, and direction is given that it be transferred to the Court of Appeals, which has jurisdiction to hear and determine the case." Starling v. State, 149 Ga. —, 99 S. E. 619.

3. CRIMINAL LAW §1178 — NEW TRIAL; ABANDONMENT OF GROUNDS.

Grounds 6 and 7 of the motion for a new trial, not having been argued in the brief of plaintiff in error, will be treated as abandoned.

4. KNOWLEDGE OF CONTRACT—CONVICTION.

In the brief of counsel for plaintiff in error the only reason assigned why the verdict should be set aside under the general grounds of the motion for new trial is that "it nowhere appears in the evidence that either of the defendants knew that any of the persons taken from Boyd's employé [employment?] was under a contract of employment." That defendant Odom knew of the contract of employment there can be no doubt, and we think the facts were sufficient to authorize the jury to conclude that Odom was representing Starling in the transaction, and therefore we think that the judgment as to both of them should be affirmed.

Error from City Court of Cairo; L. W. Rigby, Judge.

B. L. Starling and others were convicted of a misdemeanor. Their writ of error to the Supreme Court was by it (149 Ga. —, 99 S. E. 619) transferred to the Court of Appeals. Affirmed.

W. V. Custer, of Bainbridge, for plaintiffs in error.

Ira Carlisle, Sol., and S. P. Cain, both of Cairo, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 345)

KELLEY v. STATE. No. 10805.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §1178—APPEAL; WAIVER OF ERROR.

The exceptions pendente lite cannot be considered, as no error was assigned thereon, either in the main bill of exceptions or in this court by counsel for the plaintiff in error before the case was submitted. Jones v. Ragan, 136 Ga. 653, 71 S. E. 1098 (7).

2. CRIMINAL LAW §915—NEW TRIAL; OVERRULING OF DEMURRER TO INDICTMENT.

It is well settled that the overruling of a demurrer to an indictment or accusation cannot be a ground of a motion for a new trial.

3. ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

The admission of the evidence complained of in the fifth ground of the motion for a new trial was not error for any reason assigned.

4. CRIMINAL LAW §730(1) — ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL CURED BY ACTION OF COURT.

Under all the facts of the case, including the notes of the trial judge, it cannot be said that the court erred in denying the several motions of the defendant to declare a mistrial, because of the various alleged improper and prejudicial remarks of the prosecuting solicitor during his argument to the jury. Some of these alleged prejudicial remarks were proper and authorized by the evidence, and the court specifically instructed the jury that those remarks of the solicitor which were improper were not in the case, and should not be considered by them.

5. PROPRIETY OF INSTRUCTIONS.

While the charge of the court is subject to criticism in several particulars, none of its errors of commission or of omission complained of requires a new trial.

6. CRIMINAL LAW §938(1) — NEW TRIAL; NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

The alleged newly discovered evidence is largely impeaching in its character, and is not such evidence as would probably produce a different result upon another trial of the case.

7. CRIMINAL LAW §510—ACCOMPLICE TESTIMONY NEED NOT BE CORROBORATED IN MISDEMEANOR CASES.

The rule that in a criminal case the defendant cannot legally be convicted upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice does not apply in misdemeanors. In the instant case the verdict was amply authorized by the evidence, and the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from City Court of Greenville; H. H. Revill, Judge.

Robert Kelley was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

N. F. Culpepper and McLaughlin & Jones, all of Greenville, for plaintiff in error.

J. F. Hatchett, Sol., and M. Z. O'Neal, both of Greenville, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 328)

PERKINS v. STATE. (No. 10718.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW §935(1), 1160—REVIEW OF VERDICT APPROVED BY TRIAL JUDGE; DISCRETION IN AWARD OF NEW TRIAL.

While the evidence in this case is rather weak, the court cannot say as a matter of law that the verdict is without evidence to support it. "The verdict having been approved by the trial judge, under the repeated and uniform rulings of this court and of the Supreme Court, a reviewing court is powerless to interfere. When the verdict is apparently decidedly against the weight of the evidence, the trial judge has a wide discretion as to granting or refusing a new trial; but whenever there is any evidence, however slight, to support a verdict which has been approved by the trial judge, this court is absolutely without authority to control the judgment of the trial court." Bradham v. State, 21 Ga. App. 510, 94 S. E. 618, and citations.

Error from City Court of Millen; G. C. Dekle, Judge.

Proceeding by the State against Randall Perkins, Jr. From the verdict and judgment and from the overruling of his motion for a new trial, Perkins brings error. Affirmed.

A. S. Anderson and E. G. Weathers, both of Millen, for plaintiff in error.

Wm. Woodrum, Sol., of Millen, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 351)

PACELEY v. STATE. (No. 10825.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$  1064(1)—NEW TRIAL; GROUNDS OF MOTION.

"Under repeated rulings of this court and of the Supreme Court, a ground of a motion for a new trial must be complete in itself. When it is so incomplete as to require this court to refer to the pleadings or to the brief of evidence, it will not be considered. Bridges v. Griffin, 20 Ga. App. 598 (2), 599, 93 S. E. 170. See, also, Copeland v. Ruff, 20 Ga. App. 217 (2), 92 S. E. 955; Head v. State, 144 Ga. 383, 87 S. E. 273; Smiley v. Smiley, 144 Ga. 546 (2), 87 S. E. 668." Caesar v. State, 22 Ga. App. 796, 97 S. E. 255 (1). Under the rulings in the cases cited neither of the two special grounds of the motion for new trial in this case can be considered by this court.

2. EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT VERDICT.

There is ample evidence to support the verdict.

Error from Superior Court, Dooly County; O. T. Gower, Judge.

Proceeding between the State and Huel Paceley, and from the judgment and the overruling of his motion for a new trial Paceley brings error. Affirmed.

Powell Lumsden, of Vienna, for plaintiff in error.

J. B. Wall, Sol. Gen., and Jesse Grantham, both of Fitzgerald, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 332)
INGRAM v. STATE. (No. 10730.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$  814(17), 1064(4)—REVIEW; GROUNDS OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL; GROUNDS MUST BE COMPLETE; INSTRUCTION ON CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

(a) "A ground of a motion for a new trial, which complains of the admission of specified testimony, must state the name of the witness whose testimony is complained of." Adams v. State, 22 Ga. App. 252, 95 S. E. 877 (1), and cases cited.

(b) "Under repeated rulings of this court and of the Supreme Court, a ground of a motion for a new trial must be complete in itself. When it is so incomplete as to require this court to refer to the pleadings or to the brief of evidence, it will not be considered." Caesar v. State, 22 Ga. App. 796, 97 S. E. 255(1), and cases cited.

(c) "It is only where a case is wholly dependent upon the law of circumstantial evidence that the trial judge is required to give the law of circumstantial evidence." Williamson v. State, 22 Ga. App. 787, 97 S. E. 195, and cases cited.

The above rulings dispose of the special grounds of the motion for a new trial.

2. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$  1160—APPEAL; AFFIRMANCE.

The evidence is sufficient to support the verdict, which has the approval of the trial judge, and, no error of law appearing, the judgment is affirmed.

Error from City Court of Carrollton; Jas. Beall, Judge.

Proceeding by the State against Mollie Ingram. From the verdict, and the denial of her motion for a new trial, she brings error. Affirmed.

Boykin & Boykin, of Carrollton, for plaintiff in error.

Willis Smith, Sol., of Carrollton, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

$\S$  For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

(24 Ga. App. 380)

JOHNSON v. STATE. (No. 10892.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)DRUNKARDS §11—INDICTMENT FOR DRUNKENNESS.

An indictment under section 442 of Penal Code 1910, which charges the defendant with being and appearing drunk upon a certain highway, is subject to special demurrer, unless it contain the further allegation that such drunkenness was caused by "the excessive use of intoxicating wines, beers, liquors, or opiates." In this case it was error to overrule the ground of the demurrer which pointed out this specific defect. There is no merit in the other grounds of the demurrer. The court having erroneously overruled the demurrer, everything thereafter occurring was nugatory.

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; Moses Wright, Judge.

J. L. Johnson was convicted of being drunk on a highway, and he brings error. Reversed.

W. B. Mebane, of Rome, for plaintiff in error.

C. H. Porter, Sol. Gen., of Rome, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment reversed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 428)

SLAUGHTER v. STATE. (No. 10886.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 7, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

We find no merit in any of the grounds of the amendment to the motion for new trial.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §935(1)—NEW TRIAL; VERDICT AGAINST WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

In Hampton v. State, 6 Ga. App. 778, 65 S. E. 816, it was held: "The defendant's guilt of the crime of burglary being wholly dependent upon the inference arising from the possession of stolen goods after the burglary, and this possession being shown by uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony to be consistent with defendant's innocence of burglary, though he may have been guilty of receiving stolen goods, the verdict was contrary to the evidence, and a new trial should have been granted." This ruling was followed in Gibbs v. State, 8 Ga. App. 107, 68 S. E. 742 (2). In discussing the latter case Judge Russell said (8 Ga. App. 108, 68 S. E. 742): "Upon the evidence submitted the conviction of the defendant was not authorized. The corpus delicti was proved, it is true, but the only circumstance connecting the defendant with the perpetration of the offense was the possession of part of the stolen property, and this possession was so explained by uncontradicted testimony as necessarily to rebut the inference arising from possession of the stolen property. The decision must be controlled by the ruling in Hampton v. State, 6 Ga. App. 778, 65 S. E. 816, and similar cases. If the witness who corroborated the defendant's statement had been impeached or discredited in any way, we should not feel authorized to disturb the verdict. If there were any circumstances which would supply a reason why the jury did not believe this witness, we would not interfere. If there had been any testimony that the witness was unworthy of belief, on account of general bad character or of a conflict between portions of the witness' own testimony, if the witness had made contradictory statements either previously or upon the trial, or if there had been any evidence directly or circumstantially in conflict with her testimony, the verdict would be authorized; but a jury cannot arbitrarily disregard testimony which is wholly unimpeached and not contradicted, unless it is in relation to a matter which is unreasonable or impossible. If upon another trial the witness is shown by testimony to be unworthy of credit, for any legal reason or by any method provided by law, the testimony delivered upon this trial might be discredited and the jury authorized to disregard it; but, in the absence of some testimony to this effect upon the trial now under review, it appears to us that the jury merely arbitrarily disregarded uncontradicted and unimpeached evidence, and it is beyond their power to do this in any case." See, also, Williams v. State, 125 Ga. 268, 54 S. E. 166; Brooks v. State, 21 Ga. App. 661, 94 S. E. 810. Applying these rulings to the facts in this case, the judge erred in overruling the motion for new trial.

Broyles, C. J., dissenting.

Error from Superior Court, Terrell County; W. C. Worrill, Judge.

West Slaughter was prosecuted for an offense, and from this judgment and the denial of his motion for a new trial he brings error. Reversed.

W. H. Gurr, of Dawson, for plaintiff in error.

B. T. Castellow, Sol. Gen., of Cuthbert, and R. R. Arnold, of Atlanta, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment reversed.

LUKE, J., concurs.

BROYLES, C. J. (dissenting). I think that the jury were authorized to find that the defendant's explanation of his recent possession of the stolen property was not satisfactory to them. The witness introduced by the defendant to corroborate his statement does not corroborate all of the defendant's explanation as given in the statement, but, on the contrary, contradicts it in material parts. In my opinion the judgment should be affirmed.

(24 Ga. App. 387)

COPELAND v. GILBERT. (No. 10334.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Nov. 6, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨299—DIRECT BILL OF EXCEPTIONS; NECESSITY OF EXCEPTION TO JUDGMENT.

A direct bill of exceptions which excepts to the verdict and to a ruling of the court necessarily controlling the verdict, viz. the direction of a verdict, which is brought up under section 6144, Civil Code 1910, is not subject to dismissal upon the ground that the plaintiff in error failed to except to the final judgment.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨165—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL; BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

A motion for a new trial will not operate to deprive the movant of his right to a direct bill of exceptions, complaining of a ruling of the trial judge that controlled the verdict, when such motion for a new trial had been dismissed before the signing and filing of the bill of exceptions; and such direct bill of exceptions, when tendered in due time, will not be dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff in error had elected to move for a new trial, instead of coming to this court on a direct bill of exceptions. See, in this connection, Wright v. Hollywood, etc., 112 Ga. 884, 893, 894, 38 S. E. 94, 52 L. R. A. 621.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨328(2)—LANDLORD'S LIEN; TROVER BY ONE PURCHASING CROPS FROM TENANT.

The questions of law which were decided in this case upon general demurrer when brought before this court as reported in Gilbert v. Copeland, 22 Ga. App. 752, 97 S. E. 251, have no application to the case as here presented under the evidence. The evidence upon the trial showed that the relation of landlord and tenant existed between the defendant Copeland, as landlord, and a third party by the name of Bell, as his tenant; that the rent was to be paid in kind, the landlord receiving part of the crop; that the crop sued for had been delivered to the landlord by the tenant for the payment of rent for the premises upon which it had grown. As a landlord holds a lien for rent upon all the crops raised by his tenant upon the rented premises, a trover suit, therefore, cannot be maintained by a third party, claiming title under contract with the tenant, to recover the crops raised by the tenant on the rented premises and delivered by the latter to the landlord for the payment of rent, until the lien in favor of the landlord has been discharged. The fact that the tenant was under contract with the third party (plaintiff in trover) to deliver to such third party certain parts of the crop in question, which was raised from seed furnished by plaintiff and the title to which crop, under the contract, was to remain in the plaintiff, would not operate to destroy the landlord's lien for rent on all of the crops raised on his land, including those described in the contract with the plaintiff in trover. The court therefore erred in directing a verdict for the plaintiff.

Error from City Court of Thomasville; W. H. Hammond, Judge.

Trover by D. H. Gilbert against H. C. Copeland. Directed verdict for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Titus, Dekle & Hopkins, of Thomasville, for plaintiff in error.

O. E. Hay and Eldon L. Joiner, both of Thomasville, for defendant in error.

STEPHENS, J. Judgment reversed.

JENKINS, P. J., and SMITH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 329)

STANDIFER v. STATE. (No. 10724.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. CRIMINAL LAW ⇨1064(4)—APPEAL; ERROR IN ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE; GROUNDS OF NEW TRIAL.

Every special ground of a motion for a new trial must be complete and understandable within itself. It is impossible for this court, from a reading of the first special ground of the motion for a new trial, to say whether the court erred in admitting the testimony therein complained of. A reference to the brief of the evidence would be necessary to decide that question. This ground, therefore, cannot be considered.

2. HOMICIDE ⇨223—EVIDENCE; TESTIMONY GIVEN AT CORONER'S INQUEST.

Upon the trial of one charged with murder, it is not permissible for the state to introduce in evidence the sworn testimony of the accused, given as a witness at the coroner's inquest, where the accused, although not then under arrest, was sworn, not on his own motion, but on that of the coroner, and where the accused, although questioned by the coroner in regard to the homicide and his connection with it, was not informed of his right to refuse to answer any question which might tend to incriminate him. Under such circumstances the testimony elicited by the coroner could not be considered as having been voluntarily given. See, in this connection, Adams v. State, 129 Ga. 248, 58 S. E. 822, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 468, 12 Ann. Cas. 158; Tuttle v. People, 83 Colo. 243, 79 Pac. 1035, 70 L. R. A. 33, 3 Ann. Cas. 513.

3. EVIDENCE; TESTIMONY OF ACCUSED AT CORONER'S INQUEST.

Under the foregoing ruling the court erred in admitting in evidence, over the timely and appropriate objections of the defendant, the sworn testimony of the accused, given at the coroner's inquest held upon the body of the deceased.

Error from Superior Court, Jasper County; J. B. Park, Judge.

Henry Standifer was convicted of a crime, his motion for a new trial was denied, and he brings error. Reversed.

W. S. Florence and Greene F. Johnson, both of Monticello, for plaintiff in error.

Doyle Campbell, Sol. Gen., of Monticello, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment reversed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 386)

BROOKS v. PITTS et al. (No. 10329.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Nov. 6, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BANKRUPTCY  $\Leftrightarrow$  423(1), 437—EVIDENCE  $\Leftrightarrow$  817(15)—FRAUD  $\Leftrightarrow$  12—TRIAL  $\Leftrightarrow$  105(2)—DISCHARGE: LIABILITY FOR OBTAINING PROPERTY BY FALSE PRETENSES OR REPRESENTATIONS; HEARSAY EVIDENCE.

While it is true that a discharge in bankruptcy does not release a bankrupt from liability for obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations (Orr Shoe Co. v. Upshaw, 13 Ga. App. 501, 79 S. E. 362[2]; Brandt v. Klement, 20 Ga. App. 664, 93 S. E. 255[1]), and that false representations may consist in the purchasing of goods with no present purpose of paying for them, and in contemplation of a fraudulent insolvency, and that it is a question for the jury to determine from the evidence whether the circumstances adduced, even though they be slight, are sufficient to carry conviction of the existence of fraud perpetrated by false pretenses (Atlanta Skirt Mfg. Co. v. Jacobs, 8 Ga. App. 299, 68 S. E. 1077[2]), still there was in this case no evidence whatever to show that the goods, for the purchase price of which the present suit was brought, were obtained by false pretenses or representations, consisting in the purchase thereof with no present purpose of paying therefor, and in contemplation of a fraudulent insolvency, or the insolvency of the defendant was in fact fraudulent. The mere fact that the defendant procured credit and promised to pay for an ordinary current purchase of goods and subsequently failed to meet his obligation prior to the time that he voluntarily went into bankruptcy (some 34 days thereafter) is not of itself sufficient to bring the case within the ruling above announced, for ordinarily promises to perform some act in the future will not amount to fraud in legal acceptance, although subsequently broken without excuse, and especially is this true of a promise to pay money. Otherwise any breach of contract would amount to fraud. Atlanta Skirt Mfg. Co. v. Jacobs, supra. The statement of the plaintiff that he heard, a week or ten days after the sale, that the defendant was contemplating taking bankruptcy, was hearsay, and, even though admitted without objection, is without probative value. Michigan Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Parker, 10 Ga. App. 697, 73 S. E. 1096(1); Rabon v. Commercial National Bank, 21 Ga. App. 43, 93 S. E. 524(1).

2. BANKRUPTCY  $\Leftrightarrow$  425, 436(3) — DEBTS DISCHARGED; EXCEPTIONS.

Under the provisions of the present National Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544 (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 9585-9656), a discharge in bankruptcy releases a bankrupt from all his provable debts except those specifically mentioned by section 17 of the act (section 9601), which includes those that have not been duly scheduled in time for proof and allowance, with the name of the creditor if known to the bankrupt, unless such creditor had notice or knowledge of the proceedings in bankruptcy. Peterson v. Calhoun, 137 Ga. 799, 74 S. E. 519; Bank of Wrightsville v. Four Seasons, 21 Ga. App. 453, 94 S. E. 649, and cases cited. Thus, the defendant in this case having introduced in evidence a certified copy of his discharge in bankruptcy, and it being admitted by the plaintiff that he had actual knowledge of such bankruptcy proceedings in ample time to have proved his debt against the bankrupt, the evidence demanded a verdict for the defendant, and the superior court erred in dismissing the certiorari upon the ground that there was a disputed issue of fact involved, and that the defendant's remedy was an appeal to a jury in the justice's court. See Toole v. Edmondson, 104 Ga. 776, 31 S. E. 25; Schultes v. Campos, 5 Ga. App. 277, 63 S. E. 23.

Error from Superior Court, Polk County; A. L. Bartlett, Judge.

Action by W. R. and R. O. Pitts, Jr., against W. T. Brooks. Verdict for plaintiffs, certiorari dismissed, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

J. L. Tison, of Cedartown, for plaintiff in error.

Ault & Wright, of Cedartown, for defendants in error.

JENKINS, P. J. Judgment reversed.

STEPHENS and SMITH, JJ., concur.

$\Leftrightarrow$  For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

(24 Ga. App. 358)

WILLIAMS v. CITY OF DUBLIN.
(No. 10882.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — §642(1)—CERTIORARI; FILING OF BOND NECESSARY.

One who seeks a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of a recorder's court of any town or city, and who does not file an affidavit in forma pauperis, must, as a condition precedent to obtaining the writ, file such a bond as is required by law, and this fact must be affirmatively shown by the petition; and it is not so shown by the mere statement in the petition that the bond required by law in such a case has been filed, or words to that effect, such a statement being a mere conclusion of the petitioner.

Where a certified copy of the bond is not attached to the petition, "the petition must set forth all the essential substantive facts which are necessary to enable the judge of the superior court to intelligently decide whether or not the bond given is really such a bond as is demanded by the statute." Hubert v. City of Thomasville, 18 Ga. App. 756, 90 S. E. 720.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — §642(1)—CERTIORARI; NECESSITY OF BOND.

One of the essentials of a bond given by one who seeks to review by certiorari a judgment of a recorder's court of any city or town is that the bond shall be made payable to the municipal corporation under which the court exists. Park's Ann. Code, § 5191(a).

3. BOND IN CERTIORARI.

In the instant case the petition for the writ of certiorari sought to review a judgment of the recorder's court of the city of Dublin. No pauper's affidavit as to the petitioner's inability to give the required bond was filed, and the petition failed to show that the bond given was made payable to the city of Dublin. The court, therefore, did not err in refusing to sanction the writ.

Error from Superior Court, Laurens County; J. L. Kent, Judge.

Petition for certiorari by Elsie Williams against the City of Dublin, to review a judgment of the recorder's court. Judgment for defendant, and petitioner brings error. Affirmed.

W. A. Dampier and J. A. Merritt, both of Dublin, for plaintiff in error.

T. W. Evans, of Dublin, for defendant in error.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 359)

GRIFFIN v. CITY OF DUBLIN. (No. 10880.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)CONTROLLED CASE.

This case is controlled by the decision of this court in Williams v. City of Dublin (No. 10882) 100 S. E. 777, this day decided.

Error from Superior Court, Laurens County; J. L. Kent, Judge.

Petition for certiorari by Ella Griffin against the City of Dublin. Judgment for defendant, and petitioner brings error. Affirmed.

W. A. Dampier, of Dublin, for plaintiff in error.

T. W. Evans, of Dublin, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 359)

POWELL v. CITY OF DUBLIN.
(No. 10881.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — §642(1)—REVIEW; PETITION FOR CERTIORARI.

The petition for certiorari in this case contains the following: "Petitioner avers that he has given the bond as required by law in such cases made and provided, conditioned that he be and appear personally to answer any judgment, order, sentence, or decree of either the recorder's court of the city of Dublin or of the superior court of Laurens county, which bond was duly approved by the chief of police of the city of Dublin, who is clerk of the recorder's court of said city of Dublin, which bond was duly filed with said clerk and chief of police, J. J. Flanders." Section 5191a of Park's Ann. Civ. Code (Acts 1902, p. 106) provides that "any person who shall seek a writ of certiorari to review and correct the judgment of any recorder's court, or of other police court, of any town or city, by whatever name known, shall first file with the clerk of said court or if no clerk, with the judge of said court, except when the defendant is unable from poverty to give bond and a proper pauper affidavit is furnished, a bond payable to the municipal corporation under which such court exists, in amount and with surety acceptable to and approved by the said clerk or judge, as the case may be, conditioned for the personal appearance of the defendant to abide the final order, judgment, or sentence of said court, or of the superior court, in said case." The petition in this case does not show that the bond alleged to have been given was "a bond payable to the municipal corporation under which such court exists," and contains no reference to the amount of the bond. The pauper affidavit provided by the statute was not attached to the petition, nor was a copy of the alleged bond incorporated in the petition or attached thereto. Under the rulings in Hubert v. City of Thomasville, 18 Ga. App. 756, 90 S. E. 720, and Gillespie v. Mayor and Council of Macon, 19 Ga. App. 1, 90 S. E. 970, the judge did not err in refusing to sanction the certiorari. See Williams v. Dublin (No. 10882) 100 S. E. 777, this day decided.

Error from Superior Court, Laurens County; J. L. Kent, Judge.

Petition for certiorari by Cleveland Powell against the City of Dublin. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

W. A. Dampier, of Dublin, for plaintiff in error.

T. W. Evans, of Dublin, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 323)

SUGGS v. STATE. (No. 10680.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION  $\S$ 191(8)—RAPE  $\S$ 13, 16(1), 59(9)—CONVICTION OF "ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO RAPE."

One charged with the crime of rape by having sexual or carnal knowledge of a female child under the age of 14 years may if the evidence authorizes, be convicted of the offense of assault with intent to rape.

(a) The girl alleged to have been raped in this case being 13 years of age, and the evidence only authorizing and the state only asking a conviction of assault with intent to rape, it was not error for the court to give in charge to the jury the act of the Legislature (Georgia Laws 1918, p. 259), which fixes the age at which female children may consent to acts of sexual intercourse.

(b) The crime of assault with intent to rape is committed when a man undertakes to have sexual intercourse with an unmarried female child under the age of 14 years, by attempting to insert his private parts into her private parts, and where penetration of the vagina is not made only because force sufficient is not used, even though the child may have consented to the attempted sexual intercourse.

(c) Since the passage of the act of 1918, supra, the age of consent to sexual intercourse by a female child in this state is 14 years, subject to the sole exception that the person having sexual intercourse with the female child may have been previously married to her.

(d) This case is controlled almost entirely by the construction of the statute referred to. The defendant contends that in this case, if the attempted act of sexual intercourse was without "force" and not against the will of the female child who was over 10 years of age, with no penetration of the vagina, he could not be convicted of the offense of assault with intent to rape; and that the statute was not applicable and was improperly given in charge to the jury. It is an open question in this state, but authority from other states, in the construction of apparently similar statutes, seems to be almost uniform in holding contrary to the position of the defendant. See Callison v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 211, 39 S. W. 300; Loose v. State, 120 Wis. 115, 97 N. W. 526. And see 22 R. C. L.  $\S$  69, p. 1231, and section 71, p. 1233.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Assault with Intent to Commit Rape.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$ 1160—VERDICT APPROVED BY TRIAL COURT.

According to the testimony of the state's witnesses, the defendant was on top of the girl, who was lying down on her back with her legs spread apart, and with her clothes up and his private member exposed to her private parts; and the jury credited these witnesses in preference to the defendant's witnesses, whose testimony, if believed by the jury, would have authorized them to find that no such thing happened. The defendant was represented at his trial and is represented here by able counsel, and a jury of his fellows did not believe his statement or the testimony of the witnesses he offered to overcome the evidence of the witnesses for the state. The trial judge has approved the verdict. For no reason assigned was it error to overrule the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Berrien County; W. E. Thomas, Judge.

Jim Suggs was convicted of a crime. His motion for a new trial was overruled, and he brings error. Affirmed.

J. P. Knight, of Nashville, for plaintiff in error.

Clifford E. Hay, Sol. Gen., of Thomasville, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

$\Leftrightarrow$ For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

(24 Ga. App. 416)

ARNOLD v. BOOTH. (No. 10484.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 7, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)*1. SALES ¶479(2, 15)—RETENTION OF TITLE; RIGHT OF SELLER TO RECOVER IN TROVER.

The seller of personal property on a credit may take a note for the purchase price and retain, as security for the debt, a legal title to the property so sold, and in the same instrument, to better secure the debt, title may be passed by the purchaser to other personal property, and, upon the maturity of the note thus secured, the seller may recover the property in trover. When the vendor elects to take a money verdict, the purchaser, of course, would be entitled to credit for such sums of money as may have been paid upon the note. See Scott v. Glover & Co., 7 Ga. App. 182, 66 S. E. 380.

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ¶6 — CONDITIONAL
SALE CONTRACT OR MORTGAGE.

The instrument whereby title was retained to property sold, and title to other property as additional security was conveyed in this case, was not a mortgage, but was, as properly construed by the court, a conveyance carrying title for the security of a debt. See Ellison & Chew v. Wilson, 7 Ga. App. 214, 66 S. E. 631.

3. EVIDENCE ¶460(11)—IDENTIFICATION OF PROPERTY SOLD.

The court did not err in admitting evidence as between the parties, for the purpose of identifying one animal described in the bill of sale. See Emerson v. Knight, 130 Ga. 100, 60 S. E. 255; Thomas Furniture Co. v. Furniture Co., 120 Ga. 879, 48 S. E. 333; Reynolds v. Jones, 7 Ga. App. 123, 66 S. E. 395. Such testimony did not vary the terms or render conditional the unconditional promise to pay.

4. WITNESSES ¶159(1)—COMPETENCY; TRANS-
ACTION WITH DECEDENT.

The court did not err in excluding from the consideration of the jury testimony of the defendant Arnold with reference to the transaction had with Booth in the present case, which was proceeding in the name of the representative of the estate of Booth. See Dowdy v. Watson & Lewis, 115 Ga. 47, 41 S. E. 266.

5. NEW TRIAL ¶99—NEWLY DISCOVERED IM-
PEACHING EVIDENCE.

The newly discovered evidence, which was cumulative and impeaching in its character, and in addition thereto was contradicted by the counter showing made by the plaintiff, does not require a new trial.

6. CHARGE OF COURT—RULING ON MOTION FOR
NEW TRIAL.

The charge of the court was full and fair, and the verdict was authorized by the evidence. For no reason assigned did the court err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Bartow County; Andrew J. Cobb, Judge.

Action by R. L. Booth, executor, against G. N. Arnold. Judgment for plaintiff, motion for new trial denied, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

G. A. Johns, of Winder, for plaintiff in error.

Wolver M. Smith, of Athens, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., concurs. BLOOD-
WORTH, J., concurs dubitante.

(24 Ga. App. 298)

BARRETT v. MAYNARD. (No. 10469.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2
Oct. 20, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)*1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ¶309—TRIAL, ¶
296(2)—DISPOSSESS PROCEEDINGS; CHARGE.

The various excerpts from the charge of the court, excepted to, when considered with the charge in its entirety and the facts of the case, are not erroneous for any reason assigned.

2. DISPOSSESS PROCEEDINGS — MOTION FOR
NEW TRIAL.

The verdict was authorized by the evidence, and the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

*(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)*3. LANDLORD AND TENANT ¶315 — DISPOS-SESS PROCEEDINGS; QUESTION FOR JURY.

In dispossessory proceedings on ground that tenant had failed to pay rent due, wherein the whole contention was upon an express agreement that certain improvements and repairs were to have been made on the property for which tenant claimed a recoupment or set-off, there was a question of fact for the jury, which was concluded by their verdict.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1001(1)—REVIEW OF QUESTIONS OF FACT.

The general grounds of a motion for a new trial need not be considered where there was evidence to support the verdict.

Error from Superior Court, Hall County; J. B. Jones, Judge.

Action by Mrs. A. E. Maynard against J. M. Barrett. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff, motion for new trial denied and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

H. V. Johnson and Sloan & Sloan, all of Gainesville, for plaintiff in error.

W. M. Oliver, of Gainesville, for defendant in error.

SMITH, J. [1] 1. The fourth and fifth grounds of the motion for a new trial may be considered together. In these grounds the defendant (the plaintiff in error) complains of the language used in the charge to the jury in reference to improvements or repairs which he insisted had been made by him under an agreement with the agent of the plaintiff. He criticizes the use of the language "to make improvements, build fences and fix door knobs, or doors, or hot houses, or cleaning out a well," and insists that there was nothing in the pleadings or in the contentions of the parties, or in the evidence, as to the matter of improvements. There was a contention by him that, under an agreement had by him with the agent of the plaintiff, he did make certain improvements or repairs upon the property, and that he was entitled to recoup this amount. While in the first part of the paragraph of the charge of the court set out in the fourth ground the words used are somewhat inaccurate, yet the latter part and this excerpt from the charge, as well as the excerpt set out in the fifth ground, taken together with the whole charge, shows that the question of improvements or repairs was substantially and clearly presented to the jury. There is no merit in these two grounds of the motion. See section 3699 of the Civil Code, which is as follows:

"The landlord must keep the premises in repair, and is liable for all substantial improvements placed upon them by his consent."

[3] There was no contention or evidence in this case that the premises had become in bad repair and that the landlord had been notified of the defects, and after a reasonable time had failed to make the repairs, but the whole contention was upon an express agreement that certain improvements or repairs were to be made upon the property, and that the defendant claimed a recoupment or set-off for the amount of such repairs. This raised a question of fact for the jury, and was concluded by their verdict.

[2] 2. The sixth and seventh grounds of the motion for a new trial may also be considered together. The complaint made in these two grounds relates to excerpts from the charge where the court adds after the words, "You see, if at the time Mr. Barrett didn't owe anything to Mrs. Maynard his rent was paid up and he wasn't in arrears," the following:

"He was not a tenant holding over and beyond the time for which he had rented, or if there had been no breach of the contract by him by failing to pay rent, if he was over or ahead in payment of rent, in other words, if he wasn't in such position as subjected him to a proceeding of this kind at that time, then you couldn't find in favor of Mrs. Maynard for any amount."

The court further charged:

"If she was entitled to sue out this process at this time, as I stated, when Barrett was a tenant holding over, or his contract had been breached by failure to pay rent, then Mrs. Maynard would recover the full amount of the rent from then down to the time of the trial, down to date, she would recover double that amount."

It is insisted that all the language used in these two excerpts relating to the defendant holding over or beyond the term for which he had rented was error and prejudicial to the defendant. In order to understand the question raised, it is necessary to go back to the pleadings and the evidence. The affidavit to dispossess the defendant was founded upon the single ground that he had failed to pay rent due. The counter affidavit denied that any rent was due, and then went further and denied that he was holding over beyond the term for which he had rented the property. He testified that he had rented the property for one year, the rent being payable monthly at the end of each month. He denied that he owed any rent, and he denied that he was holding the property beyond the term for which he had rented it. The excerpts from the charge of the court set out in these grounds of the motion, so far as they relate to a tenant holding over, were not applicable to the contentions or the evidence in the case; but the charge, taken as a whole, including these excerpts, clearly and fully submitted the real issues to the jury, and the verdict was for the exact amount of double rent from the date of suing out the warrant to dispossess and the date of the trial. Therefore the instructions complained of were not misleading, but mere surplusage.

That amount of the verdict finding the defendant liable for rent prior to the issuance of the dispossessory warrant was written off by the plaintiff in the court below, and so the verdict is cured as to this matter.

[4] 3. The general grounds of the motion for a new trial need not be considered, as there was evidence to support the verdict.

Judgment affirmed.

JENKINS, P. J., and STEPHENS, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 347)

DALTON v. STATE. (No. 10812)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)CRIMINAL LAW ¶1159(1)—REVIEW OF VERDICT.

The defendant was charged with possessing intoxicating liquors in violation of law. The evidence authorized his conviction; and, this being true (there being no error of law complained of), this court is powerless to set the conviction aside.

Error from City Court of Macon; Du Pont Guerry, Judge.

Will Dalton was convicted of possessing intoxicating liquors in violation of law, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Olin J. Wimberly, Thos. A. Jacobs, and C. A. Cunningham, all of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

Will Gunn, Solicitor. of Macon, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 279)

ELDERS v. STATE. (No. 10689.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)HOMICIDE ¶309(4)—INSTRUCTION ON MANSLAUGHTER REQUIRED BY EVIDENCE OF DEFENDANT.

Plaintiff in error was tried for murder and convicted of voluntary manslaughter. The only ground of the motion for a new trial which is argued in the brief of counsel for the plaintiff in error is that one which alleges that the court erred in charging the jury on voluntary manslaughter. In Cain v. State, 7 Ga. App. 24, 65 S. E. 1069, this court said: "It is well settled by repeated rulings of the Supreme Court and this court that on a trial for murder, if there is anything deducible from the evidence or the defendant's statement that would tend to show manslaughter, voluntary or involuntary, it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury fully on the law of manslaughter. Crawford v. State, 12 Ga. 142(6); Jackson v. State, 76 Ga. 473; Wynne v. State, 56 Ga. 113; Bell v. State, 130 Ga. 865, 61 S. E. 996; Strickland v. State, 133 Ga. 76, 65 S. E. 148; Pyle v. State, 4 Ga. App. 811, 62 S. E. 540. In the Crawford Case, supra, the court strongly expresses itself on the subject as follows: 'When a defendant is put upon trial for murder, and there is any doubt as to the grade of homicide of which he is guilty, it is the duty of the court clearly and distinctly to instruct the jury as to the law, defining the several grades of homicide as recognized by the Penal Code, and then leave it to the jury to find from the evidence of what particular grade he is guilty.' In Jackson v. State, supra, the court uses still stronger language, and holds that 'where there is evidence sufficient to raise a doubt, however slight, upon the point whether the case is murder or manslaughter, voluntary or involuntary, the court should instruct the jury upon these grades of manslaughter as well as murder.'" Under these rulings as applied to the facts of this case, the trial judge did not err in charging on voluntary manslaughter.

Error from Superior Court, Colquitt County; W. E. Thomas, Judge.

Isabelle Elders was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, her motion for new trial was denied, and she brings error. Affirmed.

W. F. Way, of Moultrie, for plaintiff in error.

C. E. Hay, Sol. Gen., of Thomasville, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 308)

RINGWALD et al. v. J. R. WATKINS MEDICAL CO. (No. 10370.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ¶47—EXCLUSIVE AGENCY IN CERTAIN TERRITORY.

The determination of this case depends upon the construction of a contract. The part in controversy is as follows: "That for and in consideration of the promises and agreements hereinafter contained, to be kept and performed by the party of the second part, the company promises and agrees to sell and deliver to the party of the second part, free on board cars at Winona, Minnesota, or at its option, at any of its regular places of shipment, any and all medicines, extracts, and other articles manufactured or sold, or which may hereafter be manufactured or sold by it, unless prevented by fire, insurrection, invasion, strikes, or other cause, at the usual and customary wholesale prices, as the party of the second part may reasonably require for sale by him from time to time, from the date hereof until the first day of March 1916, as hereinafter provided, in the following described territory, excepting the incorporated municipalities therein located, to wit: In the state of Georgia, Evans county." The plaintiffs in error (defendants) contend that the court erred in holding that the contract did not grant exclusive rights to the sale of the medicines in the county of Evans, excepting the municipalities in that county. The defendant in error contends that no exclusive right was given to the sale of the medicines in Evans county except the municipalities therein. We are of the opinion that, when the contract is properly construed (especially when the contract as a whole is read), exclusive right to the sale of the medicines, etc., is granted in the county of Evans, excepting the municipalities. The very fact that the municipalities are excepted is a strong indication that it was the purpose and intent of the parties to grant exclusive right of sale in the remainder of Evans county. Of course, by the terms of the contract the purchaser could only expect delivery for sale of such number of articles and amount of goods as he might reasonably require for sale by him from time to time. Differing as we do with the trial judge in his construction of the contract, we hold that it was error to sustain the demurrers to the pleas of the defendants, and in thereafter rendering judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

Error from City Court of Statesboro; Remer Proctor, Judge.

Action by the J. R. Watkins Medical Company against M. O. Ringwald and others. Demurrers to defendants' plea sustained and judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Reversed.

Anderson & Jones, of Statesboro, for plaintiffs in error.

Brannen & Booth, of Statesboro, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment reversed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 319)

DAVIS v. STATE. (No. 10617.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS  $\S$ 143½, New, vol. 2A Key-No. Series — "APPARATUS FOR THE DISTILLING OR MANUFACTURING."

Section 22 of the act of the General Assembly of the state of Georgia at its extraordinary session held in March, 1917 (Laws 1917, p. 18), provides that "it shall be unlawful for any corporation, firm or individual in this state to knowingly permit or allow any one to have or possess or locate on his premises any apparatus for the distilling or manufacturing of the liquors and beverages specified in this article." Under this law an indictment was found against the accused, alleging that he "did unlawfully permit and allow, and did have and possess and locate on his premises, * * * apparatus for the distilling and manufacturing of spirituous, vinous, malted, and fermented and intoxicating liquors and beverages, said apparatus consisting of a complete still and two barrels of 'mash' and 'mobby.'" On the trial of the case a witness testified: "I found a copper still and two barrels of 'mobby' on Mr. Davis' premises. The still was in running order, all except the worm and condenser. I found the body part of the still. To constitute a complete still it takes what we call the 'pot,' or body part of the still (that is the part they put the 'mobby' in), the boiler and a cap (that is the top that goes over the boiler), and worm leading to the condenser, leading through a barrel of water." Held:

Neither "mash" nor "mobby" is a part of the "apparatus for the distilling or manufacturing" of the liquors referred to in the statute.

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS  $\S$ 223(2) — VARIANCE—COMPLETE STILL.

The evidence quoted above does not show that a "complete still" was found on the premises of the accused, and therefore is insufficient to support the allegation in the indictment.

Error from Superior Court, Glascock County; B. F. Walker, Judge.

J. V. Davis was convicted of a violation of the liquor laws, and he brings error. Reversed.

E. T. Shurley, of Warrenton, for plaintiff in error.

R. C. Norman, Sol. Gen., of Washington, Ga., for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment reversed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 414)

AUTREY v. STATE. (No. 10460.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Nov. 7, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$ 1144(14)—PRESUMPTION ON APPEAL; CHARGE AS TO CONTENTIONS OF PARTIES.

In the absence of a certificate by the trial judge to the contrary, the statement in the charge as to the contentions of the parties will be presumed correct. Wilson v. A. & C. Ry. Co., 82 Ga. 386, 9 S. E. 1076(2); Robinson v. State, 109 Ga. 506, 34 S. E. 1017(5); Wrightsville & Tennille R. R. Co. v. Gornto, 129 Ga. 204(2), 206(2), 58 S. E. 769.

2. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$ 772(6)—DEFENSES IN GENERAL.

The contentions of the defense in a criminal case are not confined exclusively to the contentions of the defendant as made in his statement to the jury, but include such contentions as may be made and argued by defendant's counsel before the court and jury.

3. CRIMINAL LAW — 828—INSTRUCTIONS; REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF DEFENDANT'S CONTENTIONS IN WRITING.

Under the preceding rulings and the facts of this case, there is no merit in the special grounds of the motion for a new trial which are based in substance upon the alleged error of the court in misstating the contentions of the defense. The note of the trial judge shows that the contentions of the defense as argued by the defendant's counsel before the court and jury were substantially and in spirit those given in the charge, and that the same counsel orally requested the court to charge the jury upon the principles of law involved in such contentions. Counsel, not having put the request in writing, cannot complain of the particular language employed by the judge in complying with his request. The charges complained of in these grounds of the motion are not erroneous for any other reason assigned.

4. HOMICIDE — 310(2)—SHOOTING AT ANOTHER; INSTRUCTION.

"To constitute the offense of assault with intent to murder, there must be a specific intent to kill. This intent is not necessarily or conclusively shown by the use of a weapon likely to produce death, in a manner likely to produce death. Under the proof in this case, the jury should have been given the discretion to convict of the lower offense included in the higher felony charged, if they believed the evidence did not show a specific intent to kill. The failure of the court to charge as to the statutory offense of shooting at another was error. Fallon v. State, 5 Ga. App. 661, 63 S. E. 806, and cases cited." Ripley v. State, 7 Ga. App. 679, 67 S. E. 834(3). Under this ruling and the facts of the instant case the court properly instructed the jury upon the offense of shooting at another.

5. HOMICIDE — 316—APPEAL; UNAUTHORIZED CHARGE ON MANSLAUGHTER HARMLESS.

Conceding that neither the evidence nor the defendant's statement, nor both combined, authorized a charge upon the law of manslaughter, the error of the court in instructing the jury upon the law of manslaughter does not require a new trial, since the evidence for the state demanded a finding either of assault with intent to murder, or of shooting at another; and the defendant's statement and the evidence introduced by him tended merely to establish that the defendant was not present at the time and place of the shooting, and did not otherwise contradict the testimony for the state. The jury, in their finding, having evidently rejected the defense of alibi (and the evidence authorized them so to find), and having given the defendant the benefit of all the leniency legally possible under the undisputed testimony for the state (undisputed in all respects except as to the alibi), he will not be heard to demand a new trial for alleged inaccuracies in the charge of the court upon the subject of manslaughter. See, in this connection, Fallon v. State, 5 Ga. App. 659, 663, 63 S. E. 806.

6. ABANDONMENT OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The fifth and twelfth special grounds of the motion for a new trial are expressly abandoned in the brief of counsel for the plaintiff in error, and no substantial merit appears in any of the other special grounds of the motion not already dealt with.

7. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE; MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The evidence authorized the verdict, and the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Forsyth County; N. A. Morris, Judge.

V. D. Autrey was convicted of an offense, his motion for a new trial was overruled, and he brings error. Affirmed.

See, also, 97 S. E. 753.

R. B. Russell, of Atlanta, and J. P. Brooke, of Alpharetta, for plaintiff in error.

John T. Dorsey, Sol. Gen., of Marietta, and Wm. Butt, of Blue Ridge, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 371)

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. COLLINS.
(No. 10348.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 6, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence authorized the verdict, which has the approval of the trial judge, and for no error assigned was it error to overrule the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Wayne County; J. P. Highsmith, Judge.

Proceedings between E. C. Collins and the Southern Railway Company. A decision adverse to the railway company was rendered, a new trial denied, and it brings error. Affirmed.

Bennet, Twitty & Reese, of Brunswick, and Jas. W. Poppell, of Jesup, for plaintiff in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 310)

HUDSON v. STATE. (No. 10405.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)CONVICTION OF VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER—EVIDENCE.

The defendant's conviction of voluntary manslaughter was unauthorized by the evidence, and the court erred in refusing to grant a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Glimmer County; N. A. Morris, Judge.

Plato Hudson was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, his motion for a new trial was denied, and he brings error. Reversed.

Herbert Clay, of Marietta, and B. L. Smith, of Blue Ridge, for plaintiff in error. John T. Dorsey, Sol. Gen., of Marietta, and Wm. Butt, of Blue Ridge, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment reversed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 329)

SANDERS v. STATE. (No. 10723.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)EVIDENCE TO SUSTAIN VERDICT.

The evidence did not authorize the verdict, and the judge erred in overruling the motion for new trial.

Error from City Court of Albany; Clayton Jones, Judge.

Proceeding by the State against Joe Sanders. From the judgment after overruling of his motion for a new trial, Sanders brings error. Reversed.

Benton Odum, of Newton, and Peacock & Gardner, of Albany, for plaintiff in error.

S. B. Lippitt, Sol. pro tem., of Albany, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment reversed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 372)

NEWTON v. STATE. (No. 10522.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 6, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)INSTRUCTIONS AS TO REASONABLE FEAR.

Under the facts of this case, in the absence of a timely and appropriate written request, it was not error to fail to charge the law as to reasonable fears. See Alexander v. State, 118 Ga. 26, 44 S. E. 851. Neither the evidence nor the defendant's statement at the trial raised a theory which would require such a charge. The evidence authorized the verdict, which has the approval of the trial judge, and for no reason assigned was it error to overrule the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Madison County; W. L. Hodges, Judge.

Proceedings between Clifford Newton and the State. A verdict adverse to Newton was rendered, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Gordon & Gordon and Berry T. Moseley, all of Danielsville, for plaintiff in error.

A. S. Skelton, Sol. Gen., of Hartwell, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 385)

MILLER v. OGLETHORPE UNIVERSITY. (No. 10361.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Nov. 6, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. SUBSCRIPTIONS ⇐5—CONSIDERATION; EXPENDITURE OF MONEY.

While, as a general rule, a promise to donate money to a charitable purpose is gratuitous and unenforceable unless some consideration therefor exists, a consideration for such a promise is supplied where the promisee, during the life of the promisor and before a withdrawal of the promise and in reliance thereon, expends money and incurs enforceable liabilities in furtherance of the contemplated enterprise, or if such a promise be a mutual subscription for a common object, the promise of the others is a good consideration for the promise of each. Civ. Code 1910, § 4246; Wilson v. First Presbyterian Church, 56 Ga. 554; Owenby v. Georgia Baptist Assembly, 137 Ga. 698, 74 S. E. 56, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 238; Y. M. C. A. v. Estill, 140 Ga. 291, 78 S. E. 1075(3), 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 783, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 136. That the promisor should receive a personal benefit or consideration is not a necessary prerequisite to the validity of such a contract.

2. SUBSCRIPTIONS ⇐21(5) — EVIDENCE OF CONSIDERATION.

The defendant having admitted a prima facie case in favor of the plaintiff and set up as a defense a want of consideration, he thereby assumed the burden of proof, and the duty rested upon him of establishing his affirmative defense by a preponderance of evidence; for, as was said in Red Cypress Lumber Co. v. Perry, 118 Ga. 876, 879, 45 S. E. 674, 675: "When a contract is valid in the absence or existence of certain facts, but otherwise void, it is, in the absence of evidence, presumed to be valid; and the burden of proving the absence or existence of such facts lies upon him who asserts its invalidity.' Greenhood on Pub. Pol. 118, Rule CXXX." See, also, Hyer v. Holmes & Co., 12 Ga. App. 837, 79 S. E. 58. The entire purport of the defendant's evidence going merely to show that he received no personal benefit or consideration from his undertaking, the municipal court did not err in rendering judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and the superior court properly overruled the petition for certiorari.

⇐ For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; W. D. Ellis, Judge.

Action by the Oglethorpe University against F. O. Miller. Judgment for plaintiff, petition for certiorari overruled, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

A. M. Brand, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

Horace Russell, of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

JENKINS, J. Judgment affirmed.

STEPHENS and SMITH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 352)

ADAMS v. STATE. (No. 10851.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$  1160—APPEAL; REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL.

This case is here upon the sole assignment of error that the evidence does not authorize the verdict. The state made a case by the witnesses offered to prove the crime. The defendant by his witness and statement contradicted the evidence offered by the state. The jury believed the witnesses for the state, and convicted the defendant. The trial judge has approved the verdict. The judgment overruling the motion for a new trial must be affirmed.

Error from Superior Court, Harris County; G. H. Howard, Judge.

A. J. Adams was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Henry C. Cameron, of Columbus, for plaintiff in error.

C. F. McLaughlin, Sol. Gen., of Columbus, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 410)

AKIN et al. v. TODD. (No. 10576.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Nov. 6, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE  $\S$  208(5)—CERTIORARI; QUESTION OF FACT NOT REVIEWABLE.

Notwithstanding a petition for certiorari may contain an assignment of error raising a question of law, yet, where the determination of the case depends entirely upon a contested issue of fact, a judgment rendered by the magistrate is not reviewable by certiorari. Therefore the judge of the superior court did not err in dismissing the certiorari sued out by the losing party. See Toole v. Edmondson, 104 Ga. 776, 31 S. E. 25, and cases there cited.

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE  $\S$  208(1)—CERTIORARI; REASON FOR DECISION BELOW.

"It can make no difference for what reason the writ of certiorari was dismissed in this case; the court did right in dismissing the same, and affirming the judgment of the justice." Wilson v. Burks, 71 Ga. 862; McPherson v. Stroup, 100 Ga. 228, 28 S. E. 157(1).

Error from Superior Court, Tattnall County; W. W. Sheppard, Judge.

Proceedings between F. D. Akin and others, receivers, and Louise Todd. From a judgment of the superior court dismissing a writ of certiorari to review judgment of magistrate. Akin and his coparties bring error. Affirmed.

Collins & Stanfield, of Reidsville, for plaintiffs in error.

SMITH, J. Judgment affirmed.

JENKINS, P. J., and STEPHENS, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 357)

MACON v. STATE. (No. 10762.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$  826—REVIEW; REFUSAL TO CHARGE.

The ground of the motion for a new trial based upon the refusal of the judge to comply with the written request to charge cannot be considered, since it does not appear that the request was tendered to the court before the jury retired to consider the case. Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. Barrow, 18 Ga. App. 261, 89 S. E. 383(4).

2. INSTRUCTIONS AS TO MANSLAUGHTER.

Under the facts of the case, the court did not err in instructing the jury upon the law of manslaughter.

3. INSTRUCTIONS TO JURY.

None of the excerpts from the charge of the court excepted to, when considered with the entire charge and the facts of the case, contains material error.

4. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The verdict was authorized by the evidence, and the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Jones County; J. B. Park, Judge.

Proceedings between W. K. Macon and the State. A judgment adverse to Macon was rendered, and he brings error. Affirmed.

E. T. Dumas and J. A. Henderson, both of Gray, and John R. Cooper and W. O. Cooper, Jr., both of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

Doyle Campbell, Sol. Gen., of Monticello, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 344)

JACKSON v. STATE. (No. 10798.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL.

The motion for a new trial in this case contained the usual general grounds only. The evidence authorized the verdict, and the judgment is affirmed.

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Proceedings between Money Jackson and the State. A judgment adverse to Jackson was rendered, and he brings error. Affirmed.

C. A. Picquet, of Augusta, for plaintiff in error.

A. L. Franklin, Sol. Gen., of Augusta, and Jno. M. Graham, of Atlanta, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 349)

SMITH v. STATE. (No. 10817.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence in this case almost demanded the conviction of the defendant, who was charged with burglary. The defendant had the benefit of a fair trial under a most favorable charge of the court. It was not error to overrule the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; H. A. Mathews, Judge.

Lillian Smith was convicted of burglary, and she brings error. Affirmed.

John R. Cooper and W. O. Cooper, Jr., both of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

John P. Ross, Sol. Gen., of Macon, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 371)

WILLIAMS et al. v. HART. (No. 10366.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1. Nov. 6, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES §502—ADMISSIBILITY OF NOTE IN ACTION THEREON.

The defendant having admitted in his plea the execution of the note sued on, it was not error to admit the note in evidence without requiring the plaintiff and holder of the note to prove its execution.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR §1058(2)—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE HARMLESS ERROR.

There is no merit in the assignments of error upon the rejection of evidence, since the brief of evidence shows that subsequently to the rulings complained of such testimony was admitted.

3. ACTION ON NOTES.

The plaintiff had legal title to the note sued upon; the evidence authorized the verdict, which has the approval of the trial judge; and no error of law is complained of which requires a new trial.

Error from City Court of Nashville; J. D. Lovett, Judge.

Action by J. M. Hart against J. C. Williams and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

R. A. Hendricks, of Nashville, for plaintiffs in error.

Jos. A. Alexander, of Nashville, for defendant in error.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 335)

O'NEAL v. STATE. (No. 10740.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)*1. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$  1130(2)—BRIEF; SUFFICIENCY.

The entire brief of the attorney for plaintiff in error is in one sentence, as follows: "He insists on all the grounds of error set forth in his petition for certiorari, and says that the court erred on each and every ground thereof." This is not an argument. It has been repeatedly held by this court and the Supreme Court of the state that assignments of error, not argued in the brief of counsel for plaintiff in error, will be treated as abandoned. Cheek v. State, 22 Ga. App. 788, 97 S. E. 203(5); Sulter v. State, 22 Ga. App. 105, 95 S. E. 532(1); Harbin v. Flannigan, 22 Ga. App. 30, 95 S. E. 320(1); Pelham Phosphate Co. v. Daniels, 21 Ga. App. 549, 94 S. E. 848, and cases cited.

2. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

There is evidence to support the verdict, and the judge of the superior court did not err in overruling the petition for certiorari.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Proceeding between Julius O'Neal and the State. A judgment adverse to O'Neal was rendered, and he brings error. Affirmed.

See, also, 99 S. E. 891.

Loundes Calhoun, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

Lowry Arnold, Sol., John A. Boykin, Sol. Gen., and E. A. Stephens, all of Atlanta, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 361)

SAYLER v. STATE. (No. 10899.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)(Syllabus by the Court.)

AFFIRMANCE OF JUDGMENT.

The special grounds of the motion for new trial are devoid of merit; there is evidence sufficient to support the verdict, which has the approval of the trial judge, and the judgment is affirmed.

Error from Superior Court, Sumter County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Proceeding by the State against Jack Sayler. From the judgment and the denial of his motion for new trial, the latter brings error. Affirmed.

Hixon & Pace, of Americus, for plaintiff in error.

Jule Felton, Sol. Gen., of Montezuma, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 362)

TOWLER v. STATE. (No. 10915.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)*CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$  911, 1156(1)—RULING ON EXTRAORDINARY MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL; DISCRETION; REVIEW.

All extraordinary motions for new trial are addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge, and this court cannot reverse a judgment of a trial judge in overruling such a motion, unless his discretion has been manifestly abused. We cannot say, in view of the precedents of the Supreme Court by which we are bound, that the trial judge, in hearing the showing and counter-showing upon the extraordinary motion, has manifestly abused the discretion with which by law he is charged. See, in this connection, Brown v. State, 141 Ga. 783, 82 S. E. 238, and cases cited. The case as originally made was weak; but there was some evidence to authorize the verdict, and this court affirmed the judgment overruling the motion for a new trial. Necessarily this court must depend upon the trial courts, who have the parties and witnesses before them, to unreservedly approve or disapprove verdicts had in the trial court. The exercise of a discretion by a trial judge where the liberty of a human being is involved is a solemn duty, and where so exercised it must appear that such discretion has been manifestly abused before this court can set a judgment aside which is the result of a conclusion reached in the exercise of such discretion.

Error from Superior Court, Gwinnett County; A. J. Cobb, Judge.

Dint Towler was prosecuted for assault with the attempt to rape, and, from the judgment and the denial of his extraordinary motion for a new trial, he brings error. Affirmed.

See, also, 100 S. E. 42.

Kelley & Kelley, O. A. Nix, and W. L. Nix, all of Lawrenceville, and John R. Cooper, of Macon, for plaintiff in error.

W. O. Dean, Sol. Gen., of Monroe, and N. L. Hutchins, of Lawrenceville, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 377)

GOOLSBY v. STATE. (No. 10722.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 6, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)DIVORCE ¶326 — INVALIDITY OF FOREIGN DIVORCE.

The defendant in this case was convicted of bigamy. The evidence was conclusive that he had a living wife at the time of marrying another as alleged in the indictment. He claimed to have been divorced from his first wife by a decree of the circuit court of the Fifth judicial circuit of Randolph county, state of Alabama. The evidence authorized the jury to find that he was a resident of the state of Georgia at the time he instituted his divorce proceeding in Alabama against his wife, who also was a resident of Georgia at the time of the institution of that proceeding; and that service of the divorce proceeding was had only by the constructive service of publication in Alabama. The conviction of the defendant was proper. The divorce decree relied upon by him was a nullity. See Matthews v. Matthews, 139 Ga. 123, 78 S. E. 855; Solomon v. Solomon, 140 Ga. 379, 78 S. E. 1079. The court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Heard County;
J. R. Terrell, Judge.

Ed Goolsby was convicted of bigamy, his motion for new trial was overruled, and he brings error. Affirmed.

M. U. Mooty, of La Grange, for plaintiff in error.

C. E. Roop, Sol. Gen., of Carrollton, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 284)

WEAVER v. STATE. (No. 10701.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Oct. 14, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)CRIMINAL LAW ¶510 — ACCOMPLICE; CORROBORATION OF IN MISDEMEANOR CASE.

The only point argued in the brief of counsel for the plaintiff in error is that the defendant was illegally convicted, because the only testimony connecting him with the offense charged was that of uncorroborated accomplices. The rule of law that the defendant in a criminal case cannot legally be convicted upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice does not apply to misdemeanor cases.

Error from City Court of Millen; G. C. Dekle, Judge.

Tom Weaver was convicted of a misdemeanor, and he brings error. Affirmed.

A. S. Anderson and Earle V. Norman, both of Millen, for plaintiff in error.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 372)

BARNES v. STATE. (No. 10552.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 6, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. HOMICIDE ¶127 — INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION ¶110(17), 189(8)—VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER; SUFFICIENCY OF INDICTMENT.

The indictment in its formal parts followed section 954 of the Penal Code of 1910. It also named the accused, showed the date and venue of the offense, and further alleged that the accused "did * * * unlawfully and with malice aforethought kill and murder [a named decedent] by shooting him * * * with a pistol." Such an indictment sufficiently charges the offense of murder. Thomas v. State, 71 Ga. 47, 48 (5). It also embraces the minor offense of voluntary manslaughter. Reynolds v. State, 1 Ga. 222 (1); Watson v. State, 116 Ga. 607, 43 S. E. 32. Notwithstanding the language of the Code sections defining these offenses, it is not necessary to allege in the indictment that the accused was "of sound memory and discretion," or that the person killed was "a human being," or was "in the peace of the state." Dumas v. State, 63 Ga. 600 (1); Sutherland v. State, 121 Ga. 591, 49 S. E. 781 (1). The demurrer to the indictment was therefore properly overruled.

2. BAIL ¶42—ADMISSION TO BAIL IN DISCRETION OF COURT.

Pending a motion for a new trial by one who has been indicted for murder and been convicted of voluntary manslaughter, it is within the sound discretion of the presiding judge to grant or refuse admission to bail upon application therefor by the movant. Crumley v. Gibbs, 149 Ga. —, 99 S. E. 297.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ¶377—GENERAL CHARACTER OF ACCUSED PRESENTED IN STATEMENT.

While the prisoner alone can put his general character in issue in any criminal case, yet he can do so as effectively by his statement to the court and jury as by sworn testimony introduced in his behalf. Jackson v. State, 76 Ga. 551; Doyle v. State, 77 Ga. 515 (2); Crawley v. State, 137 Ga. 777, 74 S. E. 537 (1).

4. CRIMINAL LAW ¶378, 683(1)—EVIDENCE IN REBUTTAL OF GOOD CHARACTER OF ACCUSED.

Evidence may be offered by the state in any criminal case to rebut any material fact asserted by the prisoner in his statement to the court and jury. Doyle v. State, 77 Ga. 515 (2); Goolsby v. State, 133 Ga. 427, 66 S. E. 159 (2). Good character is such a fact (Shropshire v. State, 81 Ga. 589, 8 S. E. 450), and an assertion of good character by the prisoner in his statement, or a narrative therein of facts, with an argument deduced therefrom to show his general good character, authorized the introduction of evidence to the contrary.

5. ISSUE AS TO GOOD CHARACTER OF PERSON ACCUSED OF CRIME.

In view of the principles announced in the two preceding paragraphs, that portion of the prisoner's statement set out in the record put his general character in issue, and authorized the introduction of evidence to the contrary.

6. INSTRUCTIONS IN CRIMINAL CASES.

It was not error to refuse the request to charge on disparity of size. See Strickland v. State, 98 Ga. 84, 25 S. E. 908; Alexander v. State, 118 Ga. 26 (3), 28, 44 S. E. 851. (Luke, J., dissenting.)

7. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

All the assignments of error have been considered, the evidence authorized the verdict, and for no reason assigned was it error to overrule the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, McDuffie County; Henry C. Hammond, Judge.

J. M. Barnes was convicted of murder, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Sam L. Olive, of Augusta, B. J. Stevens, of Thomson, and Hines, Hardwick & Jordan, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

A. L. Franklin, Sol. Gen., of Augusta, John M. Graham, of Atlanta, and John T. West, P. B. Johnson, and J. B. Burnside, all of Thomson, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., concurs.

LUKE, J. I concur in each of the rulings of the majority of the court, except the ruling announced in paragraph 6 of the decision. The plaintiff in error was indicted by the grand jury of McDuffie county for the offense of murder; it being alleged in the indictment:

"That the said John M. Barnes, in the county aforesaid, on the 3d day of February, 1919, with force and arms, did then and there unlawfully and with malice aforethought kill and murder one J. O. J. Lewis, by shooting him in the body with a pistol, contrary to the laws of said state, the good order, peace, and dignity thereof."

To that indictment the accused demurred generally, contending that no offense was set forth, and specially because it was not alleged that at the time of the homicide the accused was "of sound memory and discretion," or that the decedent was "in the peace of the state." The demurrer was overruled, and exceptions pendente lite were taken. Upon trial the accused was convicted of voluntary manslaughter. He then moved for a new trial and applied for admission to bail. His application for admission to bail being denied, he excepted pendente lite; and his motion for a new trial being overruled, he brings the case here for review. Other facts, in so far as they are material here, will be set out in connection with the points decided.

1, 2. The first and second headnotes need no elaboration.

3-5. After the prisoner had made his statement, the court permitted a number of witnesses to testify as to his general bad character, and particularly as to his character for violence. This evidence was admitted on the theory that the prisoner's statement had raised the issue, and was admitted over the objections, first, that the issue could not be so raised; and, second, that the issue had not been so raised, even if, under the law, it could be done. Numerous grounds of the amended motion for a new trial complain of the judgment of the court admitting such evidence over the objections stated. That portion of the prisoner's statement here in point was as follows:

"My residence in this community covers a period of nearly 40 years after I became of age, and during that entire period I have never had a fight with any one, nor was there even a semblance of a fight with any one, with the exception of a trivial affair with the late Ira Farmer, in which he struck me, and in which no weapons were drawn upon either side. Afterwards I became postmaster at Thomson, and held the place for years. During all that time I was not engaged in any quarrels, broils, or fights. Later I was United States marshal, under Judge Emory Speer, and for about nine years was marshal and revenue officer, in which positions there is so likely to be conflicts with lawbreakers and with others, and in which shootings and killings so often occur in the course of what the marshal and his deputies consider the performance of duty. I was so extremely careful of human life that it was never necessary for me to lay the hand of violence upon a human being. Never did it become necessary for me to even point a pistol at any one, much less to fire it. I stood so well as a man and as a citizen that the controlling powers in the county placed my name on the grand jury list, and the grand jury itself, composed entirely of Democrats, had repeatedly chosen me for foreman, although it was well known that I was a Republican. Gentlemen, as I may have told you before, I have always lived among you. I challenge any respectable member of this community, who is not my embittered and deadly enemy, to say whether I have been guilty of dirty work of any kind, whether I have not always stood for what I considered clean, honest, and upright, and whether I have not always taken sides with the poor and oppressed. If you think that such a man would have no more sense and no more manhood than to commit deliberately a cold-blooded murder upon an unarmed man, you will, of course, find me guilty. But I again challenge the prosecution to prove me a man of this character."

In view of the principles announced and the authorities cited in the headnotes, the trial court was clearly right in holding that the portions of the prisoner's statement above set out put his character in issue and authorized the introduction of the evidence of which complaint is now made. The prisoner may, as a matter of right, make to the court and jury such statement "as he may deem proper in his defense" (Penal Code, § 1036); but he cannot, as a matter of right, prevent the jury from hearing from the other side of the case upon the subject-matter which he thereby injects into the case.

6. The prisoner, in his statement, claimed that the homicide was justifiable; that he acted solely in self-defense, under the fears of a reasonable man that his eyesight was about to be destroyed and that his life was in danger. The court fully and fairly instructed the jury as to the principles of law applicable to such a killing. By way of showing a basis for the reasonable fears and the consequent justification which he claimed, the prisoner further stated that he was surprised and unexpectedly assaulted by the decedent, who was a powerful young man, in the prime of health and life, while he, the accused, was an old man, whose eyesight had become dim from age, whose left arm had been useless since childhood, and who was at the time of the homicide, and for a long time had been, suffering from a double hernia of such a nature that any physical struggle on his part might likely result in his death from strangulation of the hernia. The statement of the prisoner as to the disparity in size and strength of the combatants was partly corroborated by the sworn testimony. The court nowhere instructed the jury that they might consider, along with the other evidence in the case any inequality found by them to have existed in the relative size and strength of the combatants, in arriving at the real truth of the case. But the prisoner's counsel duly requested in writing, and the court refused to give, an instruction as follows:

"In determining whether the defendant was justified in shooting the deceased in self-defense, or under the influence of reasonable fears, you can take into consideration any inequality of the relative sizes of the defendant and the deceased, and difference between the physique and strength of the defendant and the deceased, and any rupture from which the defendant was suffering, if such things appear from the evidence."

I cannot say that such a charge, if given, would or would not have affected the verdict returned. But under the facts of this case it was the prisoner's right to have the jury instructed in accordance with his request, or in other appropriate language; and having done all in his power to obtain that right, and having nevertheless failed to obtain it, a new trial, in my opinion, should be granted, so that the jury's application of the law to the facts as they believed them to be may not be left as a matter of conjecture; and for this reason alone I dissent to the affirmance of the judgment of the trial court.

(24 Ga. App. 369)

FORDHAM v. STATE. (No. 10763.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 5, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. HOMICIDE  $\S$  309(4) — VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER; NECESSITY OF INSTRUCTION.

In this case some of the evidence showed that, immediately preceding the killing, the deceased and the defendant had a quarrel and a tussle, and cursed each other, that each secured a pistol, and that the defendant shot and killed the deceased while the latter, with his hand on a pistol in his pocket, was advancing on the defendant. Under this evidence the jury were authorized to infer a mutual intent to fight on the part of both parties, and the court did not err in charging the law of voluntary manslaughter.

2. RULING ON MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The court did not err, as complained of, in excluding certain evidence. For no reason assigned was it error to overrule the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Bleckley County.

Henry Fordham was convicted of crime, his motion for a new trial was overruled, and he brings error. Affirmed.

J. M. Bleckley, of Cochran, and M. H. Boyer, of Hawkinsville, for plaintiff in error.
W. A. Wooten, Sol. Gen., of Eastman, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

$\Leftarrow$  For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

(24 Ga. App. 411)

DYSUN v. SELLERS. (No. 10587.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Nov. 6, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)*EVIDENCE  $\Leftrightarrow$  471(21) — EVIDENCE; CONCLUSIONS OF WITNESS.

There is no merit in the assignment of error that the trial judge permitted a witness to testify positively that he measured certain logs and there was a certain number of feet therein. Such testimony was not based on opinion from observation, but was based on facts known to himself. The ruling is not in conflict with Allison v. Wall, 121 Ga. 822, 49 S. E. 831. The evidence amply authorized the judgment, and the court did not err in overruling the certiorari.

Error from Superior Court, Grady County;
W. M. Harrell, Judge.

Action between T. F. Dyson and R. W. Sellers. Judgment for the latter, certiorari overruled, and the former brings error. Affirmed.

L. W. Rigsby, of Cairo, for plaintiff in error.

Ira Carlisle, of Cairo, for defendant in error.

SMITH, J. Judgment affirmed.

JENKINS, P. J., and STEPHENS, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 307)

SOUTHERN EXPRESS CO. v. STATE.
(No. 10132.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)*1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS  $\Leftrightarrow$  138 — TRANSPORTATION AND DELIVERY BY EXPRESS COMPANY TO PHYSICIAN.

This case came to the Court of Appeals and a decision was rendered therein. 23 Ga. App. 376, 98 S. E. 272. By writ of certiorari the case was carried to the Supreme Court and the finding of the Court of Appeals reversed; the Supreme Court holding as follows:

"1. The act of 1917 (Acts Ex. Sess. 1917, p. 7), amending and supplementing the prohibition laws of this state, authorizes a common carrier to transport and deliver to a practicing physician, who is the sole proprietor of a drug store, pure alcohol for medicinal purposes, under certain conditions specified in the act, from one point within the state to another point within the state of Georgia."

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS  $\Leftrightarrow$  138, 139 — TRANSPORTATION BY CARRIER OF ALCOHOL TO PHYSICIAN.

"2. Under the facts of this case, it was error to hold that the common carrier was guilty of a misdeemeanor for transporting pure alcohol shipped by a wholesale druggist living at a point within this state to a practicing physician living at another point within this state, where it appeared that such physician had an office and kept drugs therein for the purpose of compounding his own medicine, and where such alcohol was to be used for medicinal purposes only, and all the conditions of the act relative to receiving and delivering the alcohol had been complied with by the physician and the common carrier. Nor was it illegal under the act of 1917 for such common carrier, under such circumstances, to have pure alcohol in its possession."

See full opinion of the Supreme Court, 149 Ga. —, 100 S. E. 709.

In view of these rulings of the Supreme Court, the clerk of this court is directed to enter an order vacating the original judgment affirming the judgment of the court below in this case, and the judgment of that court is reversed.

Error from Superior Court, Mitchell County;
W. M. Harrell, Judge.

The Southern Express Company was convicted of unlawfully transporting and of having control and possession of intoxicating liquors, and it brings error. Original judgment of the Court of Appeals, affirming the conviction, vacated, and judgment of the court below reversed, in conformity to opinion of the Supreme Court (149 Ga. —, 100 S. E. 709).

Pope & Bennet, of Albany, and Robt. C. & Philip H. Alston, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

R. C. Bell, Sol. Gen., of Cairo, and F. A. Hooper, of Atlanta, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Reversed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 313)

HUMPHRIES v. STATE. (No. 10424.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)*BURGLARY  $\Leftrightarrow$  41(4) — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE TO SHOW BREAKING AND ENTERING.

The motion for a new trial in this case contained the usual general grounds only. The sole question for determination was whether or not the evidence was sufficient to show that there had been a breaking and entering of the house alleged to have been burglarized. The members of this court thought the evidence sufficient to establish the burglary, but the decision in Lester v. State, 106 Ga. 371, 32 S. E. 335, seemed to forbid such a finding. This court therefore certified to the Supreme Court the following questions: "(1) Is the foregoing evidence [the evidence in this case] sufficient to authorize a finding that there had been a breaking and entering of the house? (2) Is the decision in Lester v. State, 106 Ga. 371, 32 S. E.

335, that the evidence there was not sufficient to show a breaking and entering, a correct ruling?" The Supreme Court answered both questions in the affirmative, holding that "the evidence set forth in the question propounded by the Court of Appeals is sufficient to authorize a finding that there had been a breaking and entering of the house, and this is not in conflict with the decision in the case of Lester v. State, 106 Ga. 371, 32 S. E. 835, where it was held that the evidence was not sufficient to show a breaking and entering. An examination of the record in the case just referred to discloses that certain material facts do not appear in the official report of that case; but, when these facts are considered, the ruling made by the court was undoubtedly correct." 149 Ga. —, 100 S. E. 637.

2. AFFIRMANCE.

There being evidence to authorize the verdict, the judgment is affirmed.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; H. A. Mathews, Judge.

Will Humphries, alias E. K. Davis, was convicted of burglary, and on error the Court of Appeals certified questions to the Supreme Court. Affirmed, in conformity to answers of the Supreme Court (149 Ga. —, 100 S. E. 637) to certified questions.

Park & Stone, of Blakely, and Hubert F. Rawls, of Macon, for plaintiff in error.
John P. Ross, of Macon, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 351)

JOYCE v. STATE. (No. 10839.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §919(5) — ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL, NOT OBJECTED TO, NOT GROUND FOR NEW TRIAL.

A new trial will not be granted because of alleged improper remarks made by counsel, when it does not distinctly appear from the record that the remarks were heard by the court, and when no objection was made by the opposite party, and no action of the court invoked in reference to the remarks. O'Dell v. State, 120 Ga. 152, 47 S. E. 577, and cases cited.

2. REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL.

The second special ground of the motion for a new trial is disapproved by the trial judge, and no error in the trial of the case is shown by the other special grounds of the motion.

3. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence amply authorized the defendant's conviction of bigamy, and the trial judge, approving the verdict, properly overruled the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, De Kalb County; C. W. Smith, Judge.

P. J. Joyce was convicted of bigamy, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Ernest G. Bentley and Walter A. Sims, both of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

Geo. M. Napier, Sol. Gen., of Atlanta, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 352)

WOODS v. STATE. (No. 10846.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL.

The motion for a new trial contained only the usual general grounds. There was some slight evidence which authorized the verdict, and the court did not err in refusing to grant a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Talbot County; G. H. Howard, Judge.

Proceedings between Palm Woods and the State. A decision adverse to Woods was rendered, and he brings error. Affirmed.

J. H. McGehee and J. A. Smith, both of Talbotton, for plaintiff in error.

C. F. McLaughlin, Sol. Gen., of Columbus, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

☞ For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

(24 Ga. App. 834)

RAFE v. STATE. (No. 10734.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. HOMICIDE — 137 — INDICTMENT; SUFFICIENCY OF INDICTMENT FOR MURDER.

An indictment for murder is sufficient, and not subject to demurrer upon the ground that it "wholly omits to disclose the death of the alleged injured person, in that such death was caused or brought about by the alleged act of the defendant," where the indictment charges that the defendant did "with force and arms wrongfully, unlawfully, and with malice aforethought, kill and murder one Jeff Peoples, a human being in the peace of the state then and there being, by then and there striking the said Jeff Peoples with a certain heavy brick and rock, and thereby inflicting upon the said Jeff Peoples a mortal wound," etc.

2. REOPENING CASE FOR INTRODUCTION OF TESTIMONY.

The trial judge did not abuse the discretion with which he is by law charged, in allowing the state to reopen the case and introduce other testimony after the defendant closed his evidence.

3. INSTRUCTIONS AS TO MANSLAUGHTER.

It was not error, under the evidence in this case, for the court to charge upon the law of voluntary manslaughter. The evidence authorized the verdict, which has the approval of the court, and for no error assigned did the court err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Morgan County; J. B. Park, Judge.

Gus Rafe was convicted of murder, and he brings error. Affirmed.

E. W. Butler and M. C. Few, both of Madison, for plaintiff in error.

Doyle Campbell, Sol. Gen., of Monticello, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 339)

FINCH v. STATE. (No. 10777.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ABANDONMENT OF GROUNDS OF NEW TRIAL.

The first special ground of the motion for a new trial is expressly abandoned in the brief of counsel for the plaintiff in error.

2. CRIMINAL LAW — 828 — INSTRUCTIONS; NECESSITY OF REQUESTS.

In the absence of a timely and appropriate written request, the court did not err in failing to charge the jury specifically that the burden was on the state to establish the guilt of the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt. The charge of the court on the subject of a reasonable doubt sufficiently informed the jury that that burden was on the state. Thomas v. State, 129 Ga. 419, 59 S. E. 246 (4).

3. INSTRUCTIONS AS TO ALIBI.

The charge upon the subject of alibi contained no material error.

4. CRIMINAL LAW — 778(3), 828 — INSTRUCTIONS; PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE.

In a criminal case it is error for the judge, even in the absence of a timely and appropriate written request, to fail to charge the jury substantially to the effect that the defendant enters upon his trial with the presumption of innocence in his favor, and that this presumption of innocence remains with him throughout the trial, until his guilt is established by proof. Gardner v. State, 17 Ga. App. 410, 87 S. E. 150, and cases cited. In the instant case the court erred in failing to charge the jury substantially to the above effect, and, under all the facts of the case, this error requires a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Clarke County; Andrew J. Cobb, Judge.

Rosa Finch was convicted of illegally possessing intoxicating liquor, and she brings error. Reversed.

L. O. Rucker and Austin Bell, both of Athens, for plaintiff in error.

W. O. Dean, Sol. Gen., of Monroe, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. [4] The fourth headnote alone needs elaboration. The holding there is not in conflict with the ruling in Roberts v. State, 92 Ga. 451, 17 S. E. 262 (3), which is as follows:

"Alleged errors in 'failing to charge as to the legal presumption of innocence,' and in 'failing to explain the legal meaning of reasonable doubt,' there being no proper requests to charge on these subjects; in 'making the charge in argumentative form,' without stating how; in withdrawing or admitting evidence, without plainly and distinctly setting forth what the evidence was; in 'expressing an opinion as to the effect of certain documentary evidence,' without stating what the expression was—and other like assignments of error, are too vague, indefinite, and uncertain to be considered, and afford no cause for a new trial."

In our opinion the Supreme Court there, notwithstanding the clauses, "there being no proper requests to charge on these subjects," and "and afford no cause for a new trial," did not intend to pass upon the merits of the assignments of error, but merely intended to hold that they were so fatally defective in form (in that they were "too vague, indefinite, and uncertain to be considered") that the assignments of error were not reviewable by the Supreme Court, and therefore afforded no ground for a new trial. We are strengthened in this view by an examination of the original record in the Roberts Case, of file in the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court, which shows that the particular assignment of error now being considered was merely as follows:

"Because the court erred in failing to charge the jury as to the legal presumption of innocence."

In the instant case the assignment of error was:

"Because the court erred in failing to charge the jury that the defendant entered upon the trial with the presumption of innocence in her favor, and that that presumption remained with her throughout the trial, until her guilt was established by proof."

Nor is the present ruling in conflict with the decision of this court in Mauldin v. State, 23 Ga. App. 537, 99 S. E. 50. In that case the same omission in the charge of the court as is now under review was excepted to, and it was there held, in substance, that the failure of the court to specifically so charge was not error, since the principle of the law was substantially and sufficiently given by the explicit and comprehensive charge on the subject of reasonable doubt, together with the further charge that—

"Clarence Mauldin [the defendant] pleads not guilty, and that puts upon the state the burden of proving his guilt, and satisfying your judgments beyond a reasonable doubt that he is guilty of this charge, in order to overcome the presumption that he is innocent, before you could find a verdict of guilty" (italics ours).

The charge in the instant case did not contain any specific reference whatever to the subject of the presumption of innocence, and the instructions given upon the subject of reasonable doubt were not alone sufficient to meet the requirements of the law. "Even Homer sometimes nods," and we think in this instance the learned and upright trial judge committed reversible error, and that another trial of the case is required. We have reached this conclusion the less reluctantly because of the fact that the great preponderance of the evidence was in favor of the defendant, and the evidence which authorized her conviction was slight and unsatisfactory. Judgment reversed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 341)

FINCH v. STATE. (No. 10776.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

COMPANION CASE.

This case is a companion one to that of Finch v. State, 24 Ga. App. —, 100 S. E. 793, and is controlled by the opinion in that case.

Error from Superior Court, Clarke County; Andrew J. Cobb, Judge.

Rosa Finch was convicted of illegally selling intoxicating liquor, and she brings error. Reversed.

L. C. Rucker and Austin Bell, both of Athens, for plaintiff in error.

W. O. Dean, Sol. Gen., of Monroe, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment reversed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 404)

COLLINS v. HARRISON. (No. 10455.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2.
Nov. 6, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT §252(2)—CROPS: RIGHTS OF BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

"A bona fide purchaser, without notice, of a crop grown on rented premises, will be protected against the lien, general or special, of the landlord for rent." Thornton v. Carver, 80 Ga. 397, 6 S. E. 915.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT §270(14)—LIEN FOR RENT; RIGHT OF BONA FIDE PURCHASER OF CROPS.

In the record it is alleged that the court erred in charging the jury as follows: "If the defendant in fi. fa. were indebted to the plaintiffs in fi. fa. for rent of the land on which the alleged crops were raised for the year in which they were raised, and sold such crops to the claimant without paying the rent, and claimant bought such crops without notice that said rent had not been paid, the claimant took such property subject to the plaintiff's claim of rent, due for the premises as aforesaid, and under such circumstances such property would be subject to the fi. fa. for whatever amount may still be due for such rent." This is clearly error, under the ruling made above and under the particular facts of this case.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR §928(1)—PRESUMPTIONS; APPLICABILITY OF INSTRUCTIONS.

The two excerpts complained of in the second and third grounds of the amendment to the motion for a new trial are as follows: "Notice sufficient to excite attention and party on inquiry is notice of everything to which it afterwards found such inquiry might have led." "If, at the time claimant purchased the property in dispute as contended by him, the defendants in fi. fa. were due the plaintiffs rent for the premises on which said property was raised as alleged by plaintiff, and at the time of such purchase the circumstances were sufficient to put the claimant on notice that such rent was due and unpaid, then such property would be subject for whatever amount is due plaintiff for such rent." These instructions contain correct abstract statements of the law, and, in the absence of the entire charge (which is not specified in the bill of exceptions or brought up in the record, and which does not affirmatively appear to have been reduced to writing and to be therefore available to this court), it must be assumed by this court that these instructions, when considered in connection with the remainder of the charge, were applicable to the case. Corbin v. McCrary, 22 Ga. App. 472, 96 S. E. 445(4).

Error from Superior Court, Montgomery County; E. D. Graham, Judge.

Proceeding on a distress warrant, M. A. Harrison against three parties, with claim to property in dispute by J. C. Collins. Judgment for plaintiff, and claimant brings error. Reversed.

A. C. Saffold, of Vidalia, for plaintiff in error.

M. B. Calhoun, of Mt. Vernon, for defendant in error.

SMITH, J. This case grew out of a distress warrant proceeding instituted by the defendant in error against three named parties for rent due upon certain described premises. On the levy of the distress warrant J. C. Collins filed a claim to the property in dispute. The trial of the claim case resulted in a verdict finding the property subject. The claimant admitted that the rent was due as alleged in the distress warrant, but contended that he was a bona fide purchaser for value of the crops levied upon before the levy was made, and that he had no notice that the rent was not paid.

The case was tried upon the following agreed statement of facts:

"It is admitted as true that A. M. Moses rented the land described in the distress warrant proceeding to W. J., J. W., and R. A. Whitlock, and they executed notes for said rent, and that the notes were transferred by him to M. A. Harrison, and that the sum distrained for is due and unpaid by said Whitlocks for the rent of said land for the year 1916, as in the affidavit alleged. It is further admitted as true that the corn and hay, as shown by the entry of the levying officer, was grown upon the premises described in the distress warrant proceedings the year 1916, and that at the time of the suing out of the distress warrant there was no crops on the rented premises, the same having been, prior to the levy, disposed of by W. J., J. W., and R. A. Whitlock, and that said Whitlocks were insolvent and had no property out of which the rent claimed could be realized.

"J. C. Collins, claimant, sworn in his own behalf testified as follows: I am the son-in-law of W. J. Whitlock, having married his daughter, and J. W. and R. A. Whitlock are my brothers-in-law. I own the corn and hay levied upon. I bought it from W. J. Whitlock before the distress warrant proceeding was sworn out. Mr. Whitlock hauled this corn to my place, putting a part of it in the barn and the balance in the smokehouse. The hay I had Mr. Whitlock put in the barn on the premises of Mrs. Lou C. Gibbs. I didn't pay for this corn and hay as soon as it was placed, but I had paid Mr. W. J. Whitlock for it before it was levied on. I paid him in the barber shop in Uvalda, in the presence of Mr. B. F. Hart and Mr. C. B. Anderson, and I asked them to witness the payment of the money. I give one dollar a bushel for corn, and $17 per ton for hay. I bought it to speculate on, and in 1917, in early spring, Mr. W. J. Whitlock's sons hauled some of this corn and hay from my house. I sold it to them for more than I gave for it, and I also sold some corn and hay to other parties in the neighborhood. I practiced medicine and paid for the corn and hay with money I made in that way and from the farm. I knew when I bought the corn and hay that it was grown on land rented by W. J., J. W., and R. A. Whitlock, but did not know that the rent had not been paid; never asked anything about this; didn't know but what they were selling the corn and hay to pay rent. I bought the corn and hay in good faith and paid for the same as I had agreed to.

"B. F. Hart, sworn for the claimant, testified as follows: A few days before the corn and hay levied upon was seized, Dr. J. C. Collins stated to me that he wanted me to witness the payment by him to Mr. W. J. Whitlock, some money that he (Collins) owed Whitlock for some corn and hay that he had bought, and I saw Mr. Collins deliver to Mr. Whitlock a considerable sum of money; I don't know how much. 'This money,' J. C. Collins said, when he gave it to Whitlock, 'is what I owe you for corn and hay I bought from you.' This was in the barber shop in Uvalda one Saturday night. Mr. C. B. Anderson was present also.

"C. B. Anderson, sworn for the claimant, testified: Before the corn and hay was levied on, the claimant, Dr. J. C. Collins, came to me in Uvalda, Ga., one Saturday night, and said to me that he wanted me to witness his payment to Mr. W. J. Whitlock some money that he owed for some corn and hay. I saw Dr. J. C. Collins deliver to W. J. Whitlock on this occasion quite a sum of money, I don't know how much. J. C. Collins said to W. J. Whitlock at the time he paid it, 'This is the money for the corn and hay that I bought from you.' Mr. B. F. Hart was also present when this money was paid."

It is not necessary to add anything further to the rulings in the headnotes.

Judgment reversed.

JENKINS, P. J., and STEPHENS, J., concur.

NOTE BY THE COURT.—After the judgment of this court in this case had been pronounced and entered upon the minutes, and the remittitur issued and transmitted to the trial court, and there received, information came to this court that a mistake had been made by the clerk of the court below in transcribing the record, and that in fact the court below in the charge to the jury did not use the word "without," which appears in the excerpt set out in the second headnote of the foregoing decision, but did use the word "with." An adjudication was had upon the record as certified by the clerk of that court. No mistake or error, even by inadvertence, was made by this court in arriving at its judgment, nor by its clerk in transmitting the remittitur. This court lost jurisdiction of the case after its judgment had been rendered and entered on the minutes, and the remittitur transmitted to the court below and there received; and consequently this mistake of the clerk of the court below cannot be corrected. But in justice to the trial judge this court takes pleasure in adding this note to the decision. See Knox v. State, 113 Ga. 929, 39 S. E. 330; Seaboard Air Line Railway v. Jones, 119 Ga. 907, 47 S. E. 320.

(24 Ga. App. 365)

RIVERS v. STATE. (No. 10669.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 5, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)HOMICIDE  $\S$ 309(3)—INSTRUCTION ON MANSLAUGHTER ERRONEOUS WHERE IT WAS NOT IN ISSUE.

Under the evidence and the defendant's statement, the law of manslaughter was not involved, and the court erred in instructing the jury upon that law.

Error from Superior Court, Clay County; W. C. Worrill, Judge.

Proceedings between Charlie Rivers and the State. A judgment adverse to Rivers was rendered, and he brings error. Reversed.

P. C. King, of Ft. Gaines, and A. L. Miller, of Edison, for plaintiff in error.

B. T. Castellow, Sol. Gen., of Cuthbert, and R. R. Arnold, of Atlanta, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment reversed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 361)

BRIDGES v. STATE. (No. 10913.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 4, 1919.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. CHARGE OF COURT—EXPRESSION OF OPINION.

The excerpt from the charge of which complaint is made in the special ground of the motion for new trial does not express or intimate the opinion of the presiding judge "as to what has or has not been proved or as to the guilt of the accused," and, when read in connection with the entire charge, contains no error which requires this court to reverse the judgment of the trial court.

2. EVIDENCE TO SUSTAIN VERDICT.

The verdict rendered is approved by the trial judge, and there is ample evidence to support it.

Error from Superior Court, Terrell County; W. C. Worrill, Judge.

Proceeding by the State against George Bridges. From the judgment, the latter brings error. Affirmed.

C. W. Worrill, of Cuthbert, and W. B. Parks, of Dawson, for plaintiff in error.

B. T. Castellow, Sol. Gen., of Cuthbert, and R. R. Arnold, of Atlanta, for the State.

BLOODWORTH, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 320)

BRITT v. STATE. (No. 10707.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$ 278(2), 507(7), 510 — PLEA IN ABATEMENT THAT ONLY WITNESS WAS PARTY TO FORNICATION BAD.

A plea in abatement to the indictment, which charged fornication, was properly stricken, when the ground thereof was that the only witness before the grand jury was the other party to the illicit intercourse. While the other party was an accomplice (Solomon v. State, 113 Ga. 192, 38 S. E. 332 [1]), yet fornication is a misdemeanor, and in such cases the law allows a conviction on the evidence of a single witness, even though that witness be an accomplice. (Pen. Code 1910, § 1017).

2. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$ 1064½ — GROUND OF AMENDMENT TO MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL NOT REVIEWABLE.

The fourth ground of the amendment to the motion for new trial will not be considered, as the trial judge refused to approve it.

3. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$ 918(5) — WITNESSES  $\S$ 248(1) — EXAMINATION OF WITNESS IN COURT NOT GROUND FOR NEW TRIAL.

The remaining special grounds of the motion are without merit, especially when considered in the light of the qualifying note of the presiding judge. "The court may properly propound questions to a witness on the stand, with a view to elicit the truth of the case; and if in such examination the court does not express or intimate an opinion as to the credibility of the witness, or as to what has or has not been proved, the mere fact that competent testimony of the witness so elicited may be detrimental to the interest of a party will not be cause for granting him a new trial. The questions which the court asked the witness, as set out in the motion for a new trial in the present case, were not calculated to impress the jury with the idea that the judge believed the party who gained the case in the court below should prevail." Johnson v. Leffler Co., 122 Ga. 670, 50 S. E. 488 (7).

4. CRIMINAL LAW  $\S$ 1159(2)—REVIEW; EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT VERDICT.

Counsel for plaintiff in error insists that the verdict in this case is without evidence to support it, because the evidence shows that the defendant was guilty of rape, instead of fornication. He made a timely and appropriate request in writing that this issue be submitted to the jury, and the presiding judge certifies that this was done. On questions of fact the jurors are the final arbiters. This court is a court for the correction of errors of law alone. Where the jury passes upon issues of fact, this court cannot say as a matter of law that the verdict is contrary to law, if there is any evidence at all to support the verdict. The jury have said that this defendant is guilty of fornication; there is evidence to support such a finding, the verdict has the approval of the presiding judge, and the judgment is affirmed.

Error from Superior Court, Appling County; J. P. Highsmith, Judge.

Randolph Britt was convicted of fornication, his motion for a new trial was denied, and he brings error. Affirmed.

W. W. Bennett, of Baxley, for plaintiff in error.

Alvin V. Sellers, Sol. Gen., of Baxley, for defendant in error.

BLOODWORTH, J. Affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and LUKE, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 379)

MAY v. STATE. (No. 10742.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Nov. 6, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ABANDONMENT OF SPECIAL GROUND ON MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The first special ground of the motion for a new trial is virtually abandoned in the brief of counsel for the plaintiff in error.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §918(10, 11)—NEW TRIAL; APPLAUSE AT TRIAL.

In the light of the note of the trial judge there is no merit in the special ground of the motion for a new trial which complains of alleged applause and demonstration against the defendant by the audience during the progress of the trial. Moreover, no motion for a mistrial was made, nor any ruling invoked upon which error is assigned. In this connection, see Harrison v. State, 20 Ga. App. 157, 92 S. E. 970(6), and cases cited.

3. CRIMINAL LAW §867—MISTRIAL; EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

"Where, in answer to questions propounded by the solicitor general certain evidence was elicited from a witness, but upon objection from counsel for the accused such evidence was excluded and the presiding judge instructed the jury that it was withdrawn from their consideration, and should have no weight with them, and should be given no consideration by them, there was no error in declining to grant a mistrial upon motion because such evidence had been heard by the jury." Withrow v. State, 136 Ga. 337, 71 S. E. 139(3); Esa v. State, 19 Ga. App. 14, 90 S. E. 732(3); Biggers v. State, 19 Ga. App. 604, 91 S. E. 919(1, 2). Under this ruling the court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to declare a mistrial.

4. CRIMINAL LAW §1064(4) — NEW TRIAL; SUFFICIENCY OF GROUNDS.

The ground of the motion for a new trial which complains of the exclusion of an alleged statement made by the defendant to another person in regard to the homicide, near the body of the person he had killed, is too incomplete to be considered. The ground alleges that the statement was admissible as a part of the res gestæ, and yet the ground does not show how near to the time of the homicide the statement was made. "It should appear from the ground itself that they [the statements] were 'so nearly connected [with the homicide] in time as to be free from all suspicion of device or after-thought.'" Reeves v. State, 22 Ga. App. 628, 97 S. E. 115(5). The allegation in the ground now under consideration that the statement was made "as movant insists the evidence shows immediately after the homicide, to the first person to enter the building after the homicide," does not show this necessary fact, but is a mere argumentative conclusion of the movant, without sufficient facts upon which to base it; and a reference to the brief of the evidence would be necessary to decide this question.

5. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

In the light of the notes of the trial judge the fifth, ninth, twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth special grounds of the motion for a new trial are without merit.

6. QUESTION TO WITNESS.

The court did not err in propounding the question to the witness, as complained of in the sixth special ground of the motion for a new trial.

7. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The seventh and eighth special grounds of the motion for a new trial are without substantial merit.

8. CRIMINAL LAW §1178—APPEAL; ABANDONMENT OF OBJECTION IN BRIEF.

The tenth special ground of the motion for a new trial is not referred to in the brief of counsel for the plaintiff in error, and will be treated as abandoned.

9. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

There is no merit in the eleventh special ground of the motion for a new trial.

10. MISCONDUCT OF JURORS.

In the light of the note of the trial judge, and the counter showing made by the state, there is no merit in the fifteenth and sixteenth special grounds of the motion for a new trial which complain that some of the jurors, during a recess of the court and while quartered in an hotel, talked over the long-distance telephone.

11. CRIMINAL LAW §655(1), 918(10, 11) — REMARK OF COURT TO JURY; FAILURE TO OBJECT.

It was improper for the court, in the presence of the jury and during the progress of the trial, on a Saturday afternoon, to inquire if it would be agreeable to counsel (addressing counsel for both sides) to allow the jury to attend church services on the following Sunday. However, as shown by the note of the trial judge, "no motion or objection of any kind was made to such inquiry or suggestion of the court, or any ruling invoked concerning the same until the above-stated ground of the motion." Under these facts this inadvertent impropriety of the court does not require a new trial.

12. CHARGE OF COURT.

None of the excerpts from the charge of the court, as complained of in the eighteenth, nineteenth, twentieth, twenty-first, twenty-second, twenty-third, and twenty-fourth special grounds of the motion for a new trial, when considered in connection with the charge as a whole, and the facts of the case, shows cause for a new trial.

13. HOMICIDE ⚡309(4) — VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER; INSTRUCTIONS.

The court did not err in instructing the jury upon the law of voluntary manslaughter. (Luke, J., dissenting.)

14. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡830 — REQUEST TO CHARGE; SERIES OF PROPOSITIONS.

It was not error to refuse the request to give in charge to the jury a series of propositions presented en bloc, since some of the propositions were unsound and inapplicable to the facts of the case. Although not all of the propositions were on the same sheet of paper, all of the sheets containing the propositions were attached together and so presented to the judge, and the only request to charge was on the first sheet of paper, and the request was that the court "charge the jury each and all of the following written requests, to wit," and then followed eight propositions of law, numbered first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Owens, 23 Ga. App. 169, 98 S. E. 116(5), 118(5), and authorities cited. As a matter of fact, however, the legal propositions that were sound and applicable to the case were sufficiently covered by the charge given.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

15. HOMICIDE ⚡309(4)—EVIDENCE AUTHORIZING CHARGE ON VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

The law of voluntary manslaughter may properly be given in charge on trial of one indicted for murder, where, from the evidence or from defendant's statement to the jury, there is anything deducible which would tend to show manslaughter, voluntary or involuntary, or which would be sufficient to raise a doubt as to whether the homicide was murder or manslaughter.

16. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡554—JURY'S RIGHT TO PASS ON DEFENDANT'S STATEMENT.

It is the prerogative of the jury to accept the defendant's statement as a whole, or to reject it as a whole, to believe it in part, or disbelieve it in part, and in the exercise of this discretion they are unlimited.

Error from Superior Court, Decatur County; W. M. Harrell, Judge.

R. H. May was convicted of crime, his motion for a new trial was denied, and he brings error. Affirmed.

E. E. Cox, of Camilla, R. L. Cox, of Donalsonville, A. E. Thornton, and Hartsfield & Conger, all of Bainbridge, and Pottle & Hofmayer, of Albany, for plaintiff in error.

R. C. Bell, Sol. Gen., of Cairo, F. A. Hooper & Son, of Atlanta, and M. E. O'Neal, of Bainbridge, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. [13] The thirteenth head-note alone needs elaboration. While there was no eyewitness to the homicide, the defendant in his statement to the jury admitted that he killed the deceased, under the following circumstances, as narrated by him: The deceased came into the defendant's office in the bank of which the defendant was cashier, and demanded that the defendant sign a certain paper (which was a release by the bank of certain assets of the deceased held as collateral security), which the defendant refused to do, and upon the defendant telling the deceased that he (the defendant) was going to leave the building, the deceased said, "No, you are not going to leave this building until you sign this paper." The defendant then closed the doors of the bank's vault, and, as he backed out of the vault and was closing the "gate" of the vault, to use his own language:

"I heard Mr. Richardson [the deceased] behind me; he came up, and he says—the words I heard, he says, 'God damn you; you have ruined me, and I will fix you' * * * and I turned around, and he was coming to me just in this position (illustrating). I was standing there at that end of the door, that little gate, fixing to pull it in, and I looked back, and the picture I saw of Mr. Richardson was that piece of iron—of course I will call it a crank: I didn't know at the time what it was—but he had this piece of iron, and he made this threat, and he was just in this position, as best I remember, and he had made this threat, and he was right on me then practically close enough to hit; gentlemen, I have had a lot of tussles with Mr. Richardson. He was an athlete; he was an awfully strong fellow; anybody will tell you that; and when he came on to me like that, of course I couldn't see anything but death. I jumped back as far as I could into that vault door; it was the only way of escape. This door here I couldn't have gotten out there, and I went back into the vault door as far as I could, and I remember falling back in there, and I remember shooting one time. Now, when I shot Mr. Richardson he was just in this motion, and the picture I drew of Mr. Richardson after I shot one time went around this way over that desk, that slanting desk, and, as I say, just as I shot the first time, and he in this position (indicating). The last picture I saw of him he went right over this way, and of course I don't remember anything about the shots."

The defendant further said in his statement that he told the first man that came into the building after the homicide:

"Mr. Deese, I have had to kill Mr. Richardson. I says, 'He was trying to kill me, and I had to kill him in defense of my own life.'"

The evidence showed that an automobile crank was found, shortly after the homicide, on the floor near the body of the deceased.

[15, 16] It is well settled by numerous rulings of the Supreme Court and of this court that the law of voluntary manslaughter may properly be given in charge to the jury on the trial of one indicted for murder, where, from the evidence or from the defendant's statement to the jury, there is anything deducible which would tend to show that he was guilty of manslaughter, voluntary or involuntary, or which would be sufficient to raise a doubt as to whether the homicide was murder or manslaughter. Reeves v. State, 22 Ga. App. 629, 97 S. E. 115. It is likewise well settled that it is the prerogative of the jury to accept the defendant's statement as a whole, or to reject it as a whole, to believe it in part, or disbelieve it in part. In the exercise of this discretion they are unlimited. Brown v. State, 10 Ga. App. 50 (1), 54, 55, 72 S. E. 537.

Under the above rulings the jury were authorized to disbelieve the following part of the defendant's statement (which was really an argument and a conclusion on his part):

"And when he come on to me like that, of course I couldn't see anything but death."

The jury were also authorized either to reject that part of the statement which showed that the defendant stated to a third person, some time after the killing, "I have had to kill Mr. Richardson. I says, 'He was trying to kill me, and I had to kill him in defense of my own life;'" or, if they believed he had made this self-serving declaration, to disbelieve the truth of it. With these portions of the defendant's statement eliminated, the remainder of the statement authorized the jury to infer that, or at least made it a doubtful question whether, the defendant killed the deceased without any malice, either express or implied, and not under the fears of a reasonable man that a felonious assault was about to be committed upon him. The evidence did not show that the automobile crank which the defendant alleged the deceased used in the assault was a weapon likely to produce death, but merely that it was a weapon with which death could be produced. However, conceding (but not deciding), as argued by able counsel for the plaintiff in error, that this court should take judicial cognizance of the fact that an automobile crank is such a weapon as would likely produce death, the defendant's statement (the evidence is silent on this question), as disclosed by the record, does not demand a finding that the deceased, at the time of the assault, was using this weapon in a way calculated to take human life, or in such a manner as would arouse the fears of a reasonably courageous man that a felonious assault was about to be committed on him. The record does not disclose how or in what manner the deceased attempted to use the weapon. The deceased made no threat to kill the defendant, or to commit a felony upon his person; the only threat being that he was going to "fix" him. The record is silent as to what the defendant meant by the word "fix." Was he going to "fix" the defendant by killing him, or committing a felony upon his person, or by merely giving him such a beating as would not have amounted to a felonious assault? While it is probably true that the jury were authorized to infer that the deceased, by his threat to "fix" the defendant, meant that he intended to kill him, or to commit a felonious assault upon him, such an inference was not demanded. The portions of the defendant's statement which the jury, as shown by their verdict, evidently believed, authorized them to find that, immediately preceeding the homicide, the deceased made an actual assault upon the defendant, accompanied by threats and menaces, but that the weapon employed by the deceased in making the assault (conceding that it was a weapon likely to produce death) was not being used by the deceased at the time of the assault in a way calculated to take human life; that the defendant, in killing the deceased, was not actuated by malice, either express or implied, but that the homicide was the result of a sudden and violent heat of passion aroused in the defendant by the unprovoked assault made upon him by the deceased. From what has been said it follows that the court was authorized to instruct the jury upon the law of voluntary manslaughter.

The verdict was authorized by the evidence, and has been approved by the trial judge; no reversible error of law appears to have been committed upon the trial; and the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Judgment affirmed.

BLOODWORTH, J., concurs.

LUKE, J. I concur in every conclusion reached by a majority of the court, except the ruling announced in the thirteenth headnote. I do not think that under the evidence the court should have instructed the jury upon the law of voluntary manslaughter.

(21 Ga. App. 389)

HARRELL v. SHEALEY. (No. 10392.)(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 2
Nov. 6, 1919.)(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ARMY AND NAVY  $\S$ 34—DEFAULT JUDGMENT; FAILURE TO FILE AFFIDAVIT THAT DEFENDANT IS NOT IN MILITARY SERVICE.

Article 2,  $\S$  200, of the Act of Congress approved March 8, 1918, c. 20, 40 Stat. 441 (U. S. Comp. St. 1918,  $\S$  3078 $\frac{1}{4}$ bb), and known as the "Soldiers' and Sailors' Relief Act," provides: "That in any action or proceeding commenced in any court if there shall be a default of an appearance by the defendant the plaintiff before entering judgment shall file in the court an affidavit setting forth facts showing that the defendant is not in military service. \* \* \* If any judgment shall be rendered in any action or proceeding governed by this section against any person in military service during the period of such service or within thirty days thereafter, and it appears that such person was prejudiced by reason of his military service in making his defense thereto, such judgment may, upon application, made by such person or his legal representative, not later than ninety days after the termination of such service, be opened by the court rendering the same and such defendant or his legal representative let in to defend; provided it is made to appear that the defendant has a meritorious or legal defense to the action or some part thereof." Under the provisions of this act, a default judgment cannot be opened for failure to file such affidavit, unless it appears from the record that the person against whom the judgment was rendered was as a matter of fact in the military service. The court therefore erred in opening the default judgment against the defendant in this case, notwithstanding the plaintiff did not make and file the affidavit provided for in this act, since neither his motion to vacate nor the record as a whole showed that he was engaged in the military service of his government at the time judgment was rendered.

2. COURTS  $\S$ 189(15)—CITY COURT; CONTROL OVER JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS.

"Under the act creating the city court of Thomasville (Acts 1905, p. 383), as amended by the act approved August 22, 1907 (Acts of 1907, p. 238), it is the duty of the trial judge to call the appearance docket, and, if no defense is filed on or before the call of the docket, the judge must, upon sufficient proof submitted by the plaintiff, render a judgment in his favor. There is nothing, however, in the provisions of the act creating the city court of Thomasville, or in its amendments, which abrogate the general rule that during the term the court has plenary power over all of its judgments and orders, and may modify or vacate them for good cause shown." But "where, under the provisions of the act creating the city court of Thomasville, no defense is filed within the time required by the act, and judgment is rendered in favor of the plaintiff, such a judgment will not be vacated, even during the same term, at the instance of a defendant who shows no reason good in law for his failure to appear and file his defense within the time required by the act. The discretion vested by law in the trial judge is a legal discretion and will be exercised only in cases where the defendant shows a legal reason for its exercise." Florida Central R. Co. v. Luke, 11 Ga. App. 290, 75 S. E. 270 (1 and 2). No such reason having been shown in this case, the judge erred in vacating the judgment.

Error from City Court of Thomasville;
W. H. Hammond, Judge.

Action by W. H. Harrell against D. W. Shealey. Default judgment against defendant, and, from an order vacating it, plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

W. V. Custer and Hartsfield & Conger, all of Bainbridge, for plaintiff in error.

J. M. Austin, of Thomasville, for defendant in error.

SMITH, J. Judgment reversed.

JENKINS, P. J., and STEPHENS, J., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 390)

COLUMBUS POWER CO. v. PUCKETT. (No. 10393.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 6, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ELECTRICITY  $\S$ 15(2), 18(2)—MAINTAINING HIGH-TENSION WIRE; DANGER TO TELEGRAPH EMPLOYEES.

An electric company which, after the erection of a telegraph company's line, erects and maintains over and across the line of telegraph wires, or in close proximity thereto, a high-tension wire which carries a dangerous current of electricity, is bound to exercise ordinary diligence in the erection and maintenance of its poles and wires so as to permit an employé of the telegraph company, who ascends a pole of his company in the discharge of his regular duties, to perform his work in reasonable safety; and an employé of the telegraph company, while in the exercise of ordinary care for his own protection, has the right to assume that such high-tension wires are properly placed and insulated so as to render them reasonably safe. See Ridgeway v. Sayre Electric Co., 258 Pa. 400, 102 Atl. 123, L. R. A. 1918A, 991, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 4, and notes, for a full discussion of the law applicable to this case. See, also, Atlanta Con. St. Ry. Co. v. Owings, 97 Ga. 663, 25 S. E. 377, 33 L. R. A. 798; City of Dawson v. Smith, 18 Ga. App. 603, 90 S. E. 76; Trammell v. Columbus Railroad Co., 9 Ga. App. 98, 70 S. E. 892.

2. ELECTRICITY  $\S$ 18(3), 19(12)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where one, especially one who is experienced in his business, has the choice of two ways of doing a given piece of work, the one safe and the other dangerous, he is under a duty to select the former; and if, instead of so doing, he voluntarily selects the latter, when he knows or ought in the exercise of due care on his part to know of the danger, he is guilty of a lack of ordinary care (Columbus Railway Co. v. Dorsey, 119 Ga. 363, 366, 46 S. E. 635; Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Skipper, 125 Ga. 368, 54 S. E. 110 [5]); but, under the facts alleged in the petition in this case, it was for the jury to determine from the evidence whether or not there were two ways, one safe and the other dangerous, in which the plaintiff could have performed the work in which he was engaged, and, if so, whether or not he voluntarily selected the dangerous way with actual or imputable knowledge of the danger incident to doing the work in that way.

3. ELECTRICITY ⇐19(12)—NEGLIGENCE ⇐
136(14, 26)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE FOR JURY.

While it is true that, if the plaintiff could, by ordinary care, have avoided the consequences to himself caused by the defendant's negligence, he is not entitled to recover (Civil Code of 1910, § 4426), still questions as to diligence and negligence, including contributory negligence, are questions peculiarly for the jury, and the court will decline to solve them by decision on demurrer, except in plain and undisputable cases. Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Gladman, 1 Ga. App. 259, 58 S. E. 249(8); International Cotton Mills v. Webb, 22 Ga. App. 309, 96 S. E. 16(4). Applying these principles of law to the petition in this case, it cannot be said that the facts disclosed show, as a matter of law, that no other legal conclusion could be reached save that the plaintiff was guilty of a lack of ordinary care, or that he was injured by reason of his own negligence. So long as it can reasonably be said that fair-minded men might disagree upon these questions, the propriety of the plaintiff's conduct under all the circumstances alleged is a question for determination by the jury, and not by the court.

4. ELECTRICITY ⇐19(2)—INJURY TO THIRD PERSON; SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION.

The plaintiff having originally brought his action jointly against his master, the telegraph company, and the defendant electric company, and having subsequently by amendment stricken the telegraph company as a party defendant, the doctrine known as the "master and servant rule" is not involved. Thus, after the plaintiff had alleged that he did not know and could not by the exercise of ordinary care have discovered the danger to which he was exposed, the further allegations as contained in paragraphs 35, 36, 37, and 38 of the amendment, to the effect that the plaintiff did not know and had no opportunity of knowing that his master had furnished to him an unsafe place to work, and that he did not have equal means with his master of knowing or discovering that the place was dangerous, or of knowing or discovering that the place had been rendered dangerous in which to work, were immaterial and irrelevant to the issues involved, and the special demurrer should for this reason have been sustained. Otherwise the petition as amended, and construed as a whole, was not subject to the demurrers interposed, and the court did not err in so holding.

5. CASES DISTINGUISHED.

The facts presented in the cases of Columbus Railroad Co. v. Dorsey, 119 Ga. 363, 46

S. E. 635, Dorsey v. Columbus Railroad Co., 121 Ga. 697, 49 S. E. 698, and Zachery v. Mayor and Council of Madison, 18 Ga. App. 490, 89 S. E. 594, while in some respects similar, are distinguishable from the allegations made by the present petition, and the rulings there made are not in conflict with what is here decided. Some of the distinguishing features, which are likewise here applicable, are pointed out in the case of City of Dawson v. Smith, 18 Ga. App. 603, 605, 90 S. E. 76. In this case it is alleged that the danger existing by reason of defective insulation was in fact unknown to petitioner, and that after inspection from the ground could not be ascertained, nor was it discoverable by petitioner while in the act of climbing the pole. This court cannot say, as a matter of law, that the defects as described in the petition were patent. It is also alleged in this case, while it does not so appear in the cases just cited, that certain rules were of force requiring that the high-tension wire of defendant should be placed a specified safe distance from the underlying telegraph wires, and that an inspection of same, as made by plaintiff, would and did fail to disclose their dangerous proximity. We are not prepared to say, as a matter of law, that this allegation is necessarily untrue.

Error from Superior Court, Muscogee County; G. H. Howard, Judge.

Action by James G. Puckett against the Columbus Power Company to recover for personal injury. General demurrer and special demurrers to petition overruled, and defendant brings error. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part, with direction.

James G. Puckett brought an action against the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company and the Columbus Power Company jointly to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by him. Subsequently he amended his petition by striking therefrom the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company as a party defendant. The allegations of the petition as amended are substantially as follows:

That on or about the 13th day of December, 1916, at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, petitioner was in the employ of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company in the capacity of a lineman, when he was injured as is hereinafter more fully set forth, while he was then and there engaged about the business of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company; that M. C. Welch was at the time employed by the telegraph company in the capacity of district foreman of maintenance of lines for the states of Georgia and Florida, having then and there general supervision and direction of petitioner as well as other employes of the telegraph company while engaged in the prosecution of the work of said company; that on the occasion referred to petitioner, together with Jonah Puckett, D. Harrison, and two negro laborers whose names petitioner does not know, were under the direction, charge, and control of and working under the supervision of said district foreman, C. M. Welch, then and there engaged in taking down certain wires of the telegraph company, which wires were suspended on poles running along Front street near the Georgia end of the lower concrete bridge in the city of Columbus, which bridge spans the Chattahoochee river leading from Georgia to Alabama, when your petitioner was horribly, seriously, dangerously, and permanently injured, as is hereinafter more fully set forth.

The petition further alleges that at the time petitioner was injured, in obedience to a command of M. C. Welch, he had climbed one of the telegraph company's high telegraph poles, which pole is approximately 50 feet high, and is located at the intersection of Ninth and Front streets in the city of Columbus. As petitioner reached the cross-arms of said telegraph wires at the top of the pole, he was seized, as hereinafter more fully described, he being then and there in the exercise of all ordinary care and diligence, by a strong current of electricity of approximately 11,000 volts, drawing him across the double cross-arms at the top of said pole and along and over a span of telegraph wires of the telegraph company, with his left foot and leg near or against a high-powered wire of the defendant, which wire was carrying 11,000 volts of electricity, with his right arm between the elbow and shoulder resting on one of the telegraph wires, and his left hand on another wire of the telegraph company, and in this position, lying on his back across said telegraph wires with his left leg near or in actual contact with said high-powered wire, and the bottom of his right foot against one of said wires, your petitioner lay for some 15 minutes with the aforesaid current of 11,000 volts of electricity passing through his body and limbs; that your petitioner lay in this position until an officer of the defendant arrived on the scene after having been telephoned that petitioner was caught in said current, and until the officer could telephone the power plant of the defendant to cut off the current. This required about 15 minutes. In the meantime petitioner was being literally burned and cooked to death as he lay on said wires with the aforesaid high voltage current passing through his body, and by reason of which he was injured as is described in the petition.

It is further alleged that at the time petitioner was injured the high-powered wire of the defendant crossed over and above the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company's wires, which petitioner had gone up the pole to cut down, about 3 feet north of the telegraph pole; that the high-powered wire carried 11,000 volts of electricity, and was suspended only 5¼ inches above the telegraph wires; that at the time of the injury, petitioner, together with other employes of the telegraph company already mentioned, was engaged in cutting down the telegraph wires and removing a "lead" of telegraph wires and poles from the west side of Front street to near the curb on Front street so as to comply with the requirements of a city ordinance of the city of Columbus; that the number of volts carried by said high-powered wire was not known to petitioner; and that the telegraph wires were ordinarily only charged with a light current of electricity and were harmless.

It is further alleged that several weeks previous to the injury the telegraph company was notified that the high-powered wire of the defendant was so close to the telegraph company's wires as to render their position unsafe and make dangerous the place at the top of the telegraph pole for the telegraph company's employes to work; that during the morning of the day on which petitioner was injured, up until about 10 o'clock, the employes of the defendant were at work on the high-powered line and poles bearing said line; that the telegraph company's wires were fastened to double arms at the top of the telegraph pole to arms on either side of the pole, with the telegraph wires fastened to insulators on both arms; that the telegraph wires and line had been standing at this point for about ten years, and the high-powered wires of the defendant had been suspended by defendant over the telegraph wires for about three years; that the high-powered wire had been placed by defendant dangerously near, that is to say, 5¼ inches above, the telegraph wires, and had remained in this condition for about three years; that petitioner was a stranger in the city of Columbus, and had only been at work in Columbus not quite two days when he was injured.

It is further alleged that the petitioner, being in the exercise of all ordinary care and diligence before climbing the pole, made the usual examination of the pole and wires, that is to say, he looked up the telegraph pole and examined visually from the ground, the pole, cross-arms thereon, and wires at and near the top of the pole, and also the relative height of the poles on either side of the telegraph pole on which the high-powered wires were strung, and, from the foot of said pole, the pole and cross-arms appeared to be safe, and both the wires of the telegraph company and the defendant appeared to be properly spaced, and having no reason to apprehend that the high-powered wire was improperly spaced from the telegraph wires, petitioner proceeded, he being then and there in the exercise of all ordinary care and diligence, to climb the pole for the purpose of cutting down the wires; that, after he had ascended the pole some 7 or 8 feet, he called out to a negro helper, whose name petitioner does not know, to throw him a rope, which the negro did, and as the negro threw the rope petitioner reached out with both hands and caught it; that petitioner cannot remember drawing his body back to the pole or placing his hands on the pole again, and from that moment until he regained consciousness in the hospital many days thereafter he suffered, on account of the injury sustained, a complete lapse of memory, and his mind is still blank as to everything that transpired from the moment he caught the rope until he regained consciousness in the hospital; that after he caught the rope he proceeded to climb on up towards the top of the pole in the performance of his duties, he being then and there in the exercise of all ordinary care and diligence, and when he came in contact with the telegraph wires at the top of the pole, which were ordinarily charged with a light current of electricity and harmless, being then and there in the exercise of all ordinary care and diligence, he was seized by a current of 11,000 volts of electricity which was being transmitted from the high-powered wire to the telegraph wires.

It is further alleged that where said wires crossed there were a number of wires, some 20-odd wires, some of which were on the telegraph pole, and the remainder of which were resting on the high-powered poles standing on either side of and adjacent to the high telegraph pole; that the wires attached to the high-powered pole crossed the telegraph wires about at right angles thereto, and the crossing of the wires was about midway between the two poles of the high-powered line; that several weeks previous to petitioner being injured the defendant was notified that its high-powered wire was so close to the telegraph wires as to render their position unsafe and make dangerous the place at the top of the telegraph pole for the telegraph company's employes to work; that, unknown to petitioner at the time he climbed the pole, the high-powered wire was so near the telegraph wires as that in swinging a current of electricity intermittently flowed therefrom to the telegraph wires at the top of the pole; that on the occasion aforesaid the telegraph company ordered petitioner to go to the top of said telegraph pole to cut down its telegraph wires, and that the defendant knew of and had actual knowledge of the dangerous condition of said wires and their proximity each to the other and of said wires to the top of the telegraph pole several weeks before petitioner was assigned to the work of cutting down the telegraph wires; that as petitioner climbed up said pole to and against the telegraph wires, he being then and there in the exercise of all ordinary care and diligence, his back was to the high-powered wire, and for this reason he could not and did not see the high-powered wire, and did not and could not know of its close proximity to the telegraph wires and their dangerous position; that in order to climb said pole it was necessary to do so by the use of spurs fastened to petitioner's feet and lower legs, and to accomplish the climbing of the pole it was necessary to stick the spurs by jabbing or kicking them into the pole, and thereby supporting the weight of his body as he climbed the pole on the spurs as he stuck them into the pole; as he climbed it was necessary to pull the spurs out of the pole and jab them higher, and thus, with his hands around the pole and his eyes on his feet and on the pole to select suitable and safe places to stick his spurs, as his duties required him to do, he being then and there in the exercise of all reasonable care and diligence, he performed the difficult task of climbing to the top of the pole up to and against the telegraph wires with his back to the high-powered wire, not knowing or having any opportunity to know of the aforesaid proximity of said telegraph wires to the high-powered wires, or their unsafe position and condition as aforesaid; that the telegraph pole was crooked and twisted, and had what is commonly known among linemen as a "belly" and a "back"; that petitioner climbed the back of the pole, which was the usual, ordinary, and safe way of climbing the pole, it being unsafe and insecure to climb the belly of the pole, for, among other reasons, the spurs worn on the linemen's feet were liable to slip out of the belly of the pole and precipitate the lineman to the ground, and petitioner, while climbing the back of the pole, climbed between the telegraph wires on the north side of the telegraph pole.

The petition further alleges that it was the duty of the defendant to warn petitioner that the high-powered wire was dangerously near to the telegraph wires which he was ordered to and required to cut down; that the rules of the telegraph company, and which were known to the defendant, required that no high-powered wire should be strung and maintained at a distance less than 42 inches above its telegraph wires, and that the defendant, through its agents and employes, knew that said wires were much closer together than 42 inches; that they knew that these wires were approximately only 5½ inches apart, and had been in that close proximity for several weeks or months prior to the time petitioner was injured; that petitioner did not know and had no opportunity of knowing that he was encountering any danger in going to the top of the telegraph pole to cut down the wires.

It is further alleged that petitioner did not know and had no opportunity of knowing that his master, the telegraph company, had furnished to him an unsafe place to work; that he did not have equal means with his master of knowing or discovering that the place was dangerous, or of knowing or discovering that the place had been rendered dangerous in which to work; that petitioner did not know and had no means or opportunity of knowing of the aforesaid unsafe proximity of said high-powered wire to the telegraph wires, and at the time aforesaid petitioner's attention was directed to the difficult work of climbing the pole; that he did not see and had no opportunity of seeing or discovering the unsafe proximity of the high-powered wire to the telegraph wires, and that it was not discoverable by him while in the exercise of ordinary care he was engaged about his duties as aforesaid; that he climbed the pole in the line of his duties, he being then and there in the exercise of all reasonable and ordinary care and diligence, to discharge the labors he had been ordered to do, apprehending no danger whatever.

The petition further alleges that the defendant was negligent in that when said high-powered line was originally constructed the high-powered wires were placed within a closer distance to the telegraph wires than 42 inches, and allowed its high-powered wire gradually during the three years to sag until it had come within  $5\frac{1}{4}$  inches of said telegraph wires; that the defendant knew, or in the exercise of ordinary care and diligence should have known, that its high-powered wire, being suspended within  $5\frac{1}{4}$  inches above the telegraph wires, rendered the telegraph wires dangerous, and also made dangerous the wires attached to the telegraph pole, and dangerous to the telegraph company's men who chanced to work on said wires; that he did not see the high-powered wire sagging down, for the reason that his attention was directed to the work of climbing the pole, and that it was not discoverable by him while in the exercise of ordinary care he was engaged about his duties; that it was no part of petitioner's duty to inspect said wires to ascertain their relation to each other; that he climbed to the top of said pole as he had been ordered to do, assuming, as he had a right to do, that it and its wires were in a safe condition; and that he had never climbed or been on said telegraph pole before.

It is further alleged that it was the duty of the defendant from time to time to inspect said wires, which it negligently failed to do, and to see to it that said wires were not placed or allowed to sag dangerously near the telegraph wires, so as to protect the employes of the telegraph company from harm while they were engaged about their duties of working on the telegraph pole and wires as aforesaid; that the defendant knew at the time it strung its wire only  $5\frac{1}{4}$  inches from the telegraph wires that it would be necessary for the employes of the telegraph company to ascend said pole to keep its wires, cross-arms, and insulators in repair, as well as to string new wires and take down old wires; that the defendant did know that the employes of the telegraph company were engaged in taking down the telegraph wires on the date petitioner was injured, and likewise knew that they would be exposed, while so engaged, to the danger of the aforesaid current of 11,000 volts which was being carried on its high-powered line being transmitted from the high-powered wire to the telegraph wires and from the telegraph wires to the bodies of the telegraph company's employes while they were engaged at work on said pole and telegraph wires; that the defendant was further negligent in that it failed to warn petitioner of the unsafe condition of said wires, and permitted him, although the employes of the defendant knew that the wire had sagged down and thereby made it extremely dangerous, to go to the top of the pole for the purpose of cutting down the wires, without giving petitioner any warning of their dangerous condition.

It is further alleged that the double cross-arms on the telegraph pole were fastened to the pole about 7 or 8 inches from the top thereof; that the double cross-arms were about 8 feet long, and supported three wires on either side of the pole, and each of these wires was fastened to a pair of insulators on the double cross-arms; that, in order to get in a position to cut down the telegraph wires, it was necessary for petitioner to climb up between the wires next to and adjacent to the pole, and while he was climbing between these wires, with his back to the high-powered wire, he received the electric shock and was injured; that the defendant owed to the employes of the telegraph company the duty to have its high-powered wire properly and efficiently insulated, and, failing in this, to place its high-powered wire a sufficient distance, not less than 42 inches, away from and above the telegraph wires, so as to give reasonable protection to the telegraph wires against the high-powered current, and to prevent the telegraph wires from coming in contact with the high-powered wire, as well as to provide reasonable safety for the telegraph company's employes, against danger of its high-powered current while they were working in and about the performance of their duties at or near the top of the telegraph pole; that the high-powered wire of the defendant company was an insulated wire; that the defendant was negligent in that at the point where the current was transmitted from its high-powered line to the telegraph wires the insulation on the high-powered line was defective, and in two places was blistered or swollen, so as to permit, while petitioner was climbing up between the telegraph wires at or near the top of the pole, with his back toward the high-powered wire, as a result of the telegraph wires shaking and swinging, being caught on the clothes or tools of petitioner, and raised so that the telegraph wires came close enough to the high-powered wire for the current to arc from the high-powered wire at the point of the defective insulation thereon to the telegraph wires and thence into petitioner's body, injuring him as stated, which defects in the insulation were unknown to petitioner, and not discoverable or discernible by him from the ground or from the telegraph pole upon which he was at work; that the defects in the insulation were latent defects, and were not discoverable by petitioner whilst in the exercise of all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence he was engaged in the performance of his duties; that the defendant was negligent in that it allowed the insulation on its high-powered wire to become defective as aforesaid. The petition further alleges that at the time of the injury petitioner was 24 years old; that by reason of the injuries thus sustained he had been damaged in the sum of $100,000, and for this sum he prayed judgment.

To the petition as amended the defendant demurred on the general grounds that no cause of action was set out; that the facts alleged show that the petitioner, by the exercise of ordinary care on his part, could have avoided the injuries alleged to have been sustained, and that, if the high-powered wire was in unsafe proximity to the wires of the telegraph company, the petitioner by the exercise of ordinary care on his part could have known thereof before he received his injuries; that it does not appear from the facts alleged that the negligence of the defendant was the proximate cause of the injury; and that it appears that the cause of petitioner's injuries was his own negligence.

Defendant also specially demurred to the petition on the grounds: That it is not alleged that the high-powered wire ever came in contact with the wires of the telegraph company, caused by the negligence of the defendant; that it is not alleged that the petitioner made any effort to see or discover the distance the high-powered wire was from the wires of the telegraph company after he had started to ascend the pole, and no fact is alleged to show that he could not see the alleged unsafe proximity of said wires to each other by the exercise of ordinary care on his part; that the allegations of the petition that the plaintiff exercised ordinary care and diligence in performing his duties, or in ascending the pole which he did ascend, are merely conclusions of the pleader, and no facts are alleged to show that he did so exercise ordinary care and diligence; that it does not appear from the facts alleged that any act of negligence on the part of defendant was the proximate cause of the injury to the plaintiff; that no facts are alleged to show how or in what manner the petitioner "was seized" by a current of electricity, and the allegations that he was so "seized" are too indefinite and vague to enable this defendant to make its defense. The defendant also specially demurred to that portion of the petition wherein it is alleged that the high-powered wire was so near the wires of the telegraph company as that in swinging a current of electricity intermittently flowed from said high-powered wire to the telegraph wires, upon the grounds: (a) Because it is not alleged how near the high-powered wire was to the telegraph wire; (b) because said allegation is too indefinite; (c) because said allegation is a mere conclusion of the pleader, and does not sufficiently definitely set forth facts as to the distance apart of the wires of the two companies to enable the defendant to make its defense. Defendant demurred specially to the allegations of the petition that the plaintiff could not see the high-powered wire, and could not know of its close proximity to the telegraph wires and their dangerous position, upon the grounds: (a) Because no facts are alleged to show why petitioner could not see the high-powered wire and why he could not know of its close proximity to the telegraph wires and their dangerous position; (b) because said allegations are mere conclusions of the pleader. Defendant also demurred specially to paragraph 31 of the amendment to the petition, which alleged that "petitioner climbed said pole in the usual and ordinary and safe way," upon the grounds: (a) Because it is not alleged what was the usual and ordinary and safe way of climbing the telegraph pole; (b) because said allegations are mere conclusions of the pleader, and do not set forth facts specifically enough to enable this defendant to make its defense. In paragraphs 46 and 47 it is alleged:

"The telegraph pole was crooked and twisted and had what is commonly known among linemen as a 'belly' and a 'back.' Petitioner climbed the back of the pole, which was the usual, ordinary, and safe way of climbing the pole; it being unsafe and insecure to climb the belly of the pole."

Defendant also demurred specially to that portion of paragraph 34 of the amendment to the petition wherein it is alleged that "petitioner did not know and had no opportunity of knowing that he was encountering any danger in going to the top of said telegraph pole to cut down said wires," upon the grounds: (a) Because no facts are alleged to show why he had no such opportunity; (b) because said allegation is a mere conclusion of the pleader. Defendant demurred specially to paragraphs 35, 36, 37, and 38 of the amendment to the petition, which alleged that the plaintiff did not know and had no opportunity of knowing that his master had furnished to him an unsafe place to work; that he did not have equal means with his master of knowing or discovering that the place was dangerous, or of knowing or discovering that the place had been rendered dangerous in which to work, upon the ground that said paragraphs are immaterial, irrelevant, and surplusage. Defendant also demurred specially to the petition upon the grounds: That no facts are alleged to show why the plaintiff did not know, discern, and why he did not discover the defective insulation, or why he could not have known, discerned, or discovered the defective insulation; that it does not appear from any facts alleged why the defects were latent, and because it does appear that the defects were not latent. Defendant also demurred both generally and specially upon the ground that it appeared from the facts alleged that the plaintiff had the choice of two ways of doing the work which he was endeavoring to do at the time he was injured, and immediately before the time he was injured, the one safe and the other dangerous, and that, instead of doing it in the safe way, he voluntarily selected the latter or unsafe way, when he knew or ought to have known of the danger.

After hearing argument of counsel, the trial court overruled both the general and special demurrers, and to this judgment the defendant excepts.

F. U. Garrard, A. S. Bradley, and A. W. Cozart, all of Columbus, for plaintiff in error.

Atkinson & Born, of Atlanta, and Ed Wohlwender, of Columbus, for defendant in error.

JENKINS, J. Judgment affirmed in part and reversed in part, with direction that the costs be taxed against the plaintiff in error.

STEPHENS and SMITH, JJ., concur.

(125 Va. 565)

BLACKSBURG MINING & MFG. CO. v.
BELL et ux.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS §55(8) — AMBIGUOUS DESCRIPTION OF MINERAL DEED JURY QUESTION.

Question whether deed, conveying minerals on land lying "north of Toms creek and on Brush mountain," described only such land as was on the mountain or included a tract of about 100 acres lying between the creek and the mountain, held for jury; the description being ambiguous and the question being one of intention as to actual location of disputed line.

2. MINES AND MINERALS §55(8) — BURDEN OF PROOF ON PLAINTIFF TO LOCATE LANDS CLAIMED BY IT.

In action of ejectment by plaintiff claiming under mineral deed against successors of grantors, involving issue of whether land in dispute was included in description, burden was on plaintiff to locate land claimed by it and to show that such land was within the lines of the title papers upon which it relied.

3. ADVERSE POSSESSION §80(2) — DEED NOT COLOR OF TITLE TO MINERALS ON LAND NOT INCLUDED IN DESCRIPTION.

Where there was a dispute as to whether a certain tract of land was included in ambiguous mineral deed description, grantor's successors could not acquire by adverse possession title to minerals on the land of which they were not in actual possession; they having no color of title if deed did not cover land.

4. ADVERSE POSSESSION §68 — BEYOND ACTUAL OCCUPANCY MUST BE UNDER COLOR OF TITLE.

Adverse possession to extend beyond limits of actual occupancy must be under color of title; mere claim of title being insufficient.

5. ADVERSE POSSESSION §71(2), 80(2) — INSTRUMENT TO BE COLOR OF TITLE MUST DESIGNATE LAND WITH CERTAINTY.

It is immaterial that the title paper relied upon as color of title is defective, or even void as passing title, but the paper to constitute color of title must designate the land with certainty; the principal office of color of title being to define boundaries.

6. EVIDENCE §258(1) — POWERS OF PRESIDENT TO BIND CORPORATION BY DECLARATIONS.

In absence of proof to the contrary, president of a corporation is not presumed to have authority to bind corporation by declarations as to claims of the corporation with respect to location of disputed boundary.

7. EVIDENCE §244(2) — DECLARATIONS OF PRESIDENT OF CORPORATION TO BOUNDARY DISPUTE BINDING.

Where president of corporation was in general charge of the lands of the corporation and actively looking after the establishment of boundaries, his declarations as to what the corporation claimed with reference to a disputed boundary line was binding on corporation.

8. ADVERSE POSSESSION §31 — NOTICE TO LESSEE BY DEFENDANTS NOT IN PRESENCE OF REPRESENTATIVE OF PLAINTIFF.

In ejectment, where defendants claimed title by adverse possession, evidence of a conversation in which defendant told plaintiff's lessee that the land belonged to the defendants was inadmissible, where conversation was not in presence of any agent or representative of plaintiff, and did not appear to have been communicated to plaintiff, and where there was no evidence that lessee was plaintiff's agent, since notice to lessee was not notice to plaintiff.

9. WITNESSES  $\Leftrightarrow$  158 — COMPETENCY AS TO TRANSACTION WITH PLAINTIFF THROUGH DECEASED AGENT.

In ejectment involving question of location of boundary under description in deed and also question of whether defendant had acquired title by adverse possession, incompetency of defendant to testify as to compromise agreement with plaintiff through its deceased agent, under Code 1904, § 3348, did not render witness incompetent to testify as to adverse possession; the two matters being separate and distinct and neither being collateral to the other.

10. BOUNDARIES  $\Leftrightarrow$  36(5) — NOTES OF SURVEY ADMISSIBLE.

In ejectment involving boundary dispute, a paper in handwriting of deputy county surveyor, containing notes of survey which evidence showed was made for purpose of locating division line in controversy in the presence and under the supervision of plaintiff's agent and defendant, held admissible.

Error to Circuit Court, Montgomery County.

Action by the Blacksburg Mining & Manufacturing Company against William A. Bell and wife. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Hall, Wingfield & Apperson, of Roanoke, for plaintiff in error.

Harless & Colhoun, of Christianburg, for defendants in error.

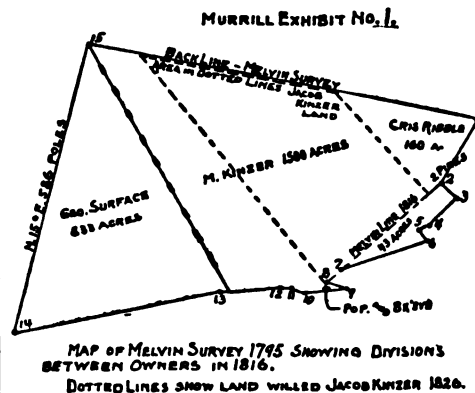

KELLY, J. This is an action of ejectment in which the plaintiff and the defendants trace title from a common source. The plaintiff, the Blacksburg Mining & Manufacturing Company, claims under a deed from one Jacob Kinser, conveying the coal and minerals in and upon a tract of land lying "north of Toms creek and on Brush mountain." The defendants, Bell and wife, who have succeeded to whatever title remained in Kinser after making the foregoing deed, contend that the plaintiff is claiming the coal and minerals on a part of the Kinser land not embraced in that conveyance.

The base of Brush mountain lies a short distance north of Tom's creek. The land between the creek and the mountain, comprising about 100 acres, is the land in dispute. The final and decisive question is whether the descriptive words, "north of Toms creek and on Brush mountain," must be construed as confining the conveyance to lands on the mountain, thereby excluding the 100 acres in controversy. The answer to this question depends, as we shall see, upon a number of considerations, some of which appear in the deed and others of which are shown by extrinsic evidence.

The jury found for the defendants and to a judgment upon their verdict this writ of error was awarded.

Prior to 1816, Michael Kinser, the father of Jacob Kinser, owned a large boundary of land containing several thousand acres situate on the waters of Tom's creek, and on which he resided. This land all lay south of the creek, with the exception of about 60 acres on the north extending in the direction of but not as far as the foot of Brush mountain.

By deed dated September 13, 1816, Kinser acquired from Ebenezer Melvin an additional tract of 43 acres adjoining on the north the boundary already owned by him. This purchase by Kinser covered the intervening territory between his then northern line and the base of the mountain, and gave him about 100 acres north of Tom's creek. The 43 acres thus acquired by him was a part of a large tract of land owned by Melvin, containing in all about 2,500 acres, which was originally embraced in one survey and grant from the commonwealth to a predecessor in title of Ebenezer Melvin. The greater part of this tract was on Brush mountain. Shortly after the acquisition by Michael Kinser of the 43 acres above mentioned, Ebenezer Melvin conveyed the residue of the 2,500-acre boundary to Michael Kinser, Christopher Ribble, and George Surface, and in a division of the same among the latter it appears that Michael Kinser got 1,500 acres, Christopher Ribble 160 acres, and George Surface 833 acres. The accompanying map shows the exterior lines of the original 2,500-acre tract and the subdivision here mentioned. The controversy in this case, as indicated above, involves the coal and minerals in and upon about 100 acres lying between Tom's creek (not shown on the map), on the south, and the upper line of the 43-acre Melvin tract on the north.

It thus appears that in 1816 Michael Kinser was the owner of a very large estate in land situated on both sides of Tom's creek, and he continued to hold the same until his death, in 1826. By his will, which was probated in August, 1826, Michael Kinser disposed of all his real estate, making the following provisions material to the present controversy:

"Item: I give and bequeath to my beloved wife, Hester Kinser, during her natural life, part of the land whereon I now live, viz.: the orchard and pasture lots, being the same comprehended below the cross fence running from Kipp's line near my mill house N. 30 E. poles passing a big white oak between the mill house and the still house, crossing the creek to a swamp Spanish oak below the mill dam; thence up the creek N. 47 W. to a black oak near the mill dam; thence up the creek to a hollow leading up back of the barn; thence crossing the mill dam, a northwest course, till it strikes the back line of the big survey, thence with said survey an easterly course to the extent of that survey, till it strikes the line or lines of John Robinson's old orchard to a large white oak in a line between my old tract and the above mentioned Robinson; thence a south course to a cross fence, the furthest from my dwelling house, and with said fence across the field to a white oak near the fence, between twenty-five and thirty poles leading between my house and John McDonald's, and thence to the beginning. * * * (Italics added.)

"Item: To my daughter Katherine I give * * * four hundred acres of my mountain land, beginning at a white oak in the Miami hollow, and running with Keister Bank and Henry Price, and corners opposite the widow Cromer's old sawmill, and from thence to the back line supposed to contain four hundred acres. * * *

"Item: To my son Jacob I give and bequeath all the landed property which I have devised to my wife for life, being the first bequest in this my last will and testament * * *

"Item: I * * * also give and bequeath to my sons Jacob, George and Christian about four hundred acres of my mountain tract of land running with the line mentioned in the devise to my son Jacob to the back line of said survey, and thence down the Miami hollow, and thence to the beginning." (Italics added.)

Thereafter by partition proceedings or otherwise, Jacob Kinser acquired the interest of his brothers George and Christian in the mountain land. Upon the death of his mother, Hester Kinser, he became the owner, inter alia, of all the land north of Tom's creek in which she had been given a life estate. The evidence does not make entirely clear just what were the boundaries of the land north of Tom's creek which Jacob Kinser got in fee and as remainderman, respectively; but it is certain that from both sources he acquired under the will of his father all of the land in controversy in this suit, and quite a good deal in addition thereto, and that he did not acquire any land north of Tom's creek from any other source.

By deed dated February 19, 1853, Jacob Kinser and wife conveyed to George Falconer and William H. Peck "all their right, title, interest and claim in and to all the coal, iron and all other mineral substances lying or being in, upon or under the ground, upon, within or under the boundaries of his the said Kinser's tract of land lying in the county of Montgomery, north of Tom's creek and on Brush mountain, the said survey supposed to contain one thousand acres, upon which there is a coal bank opened, being land formerly owned by his father, the late Michael Kinser."

By deed of April 27, 1853, Falconer and Peck conveyed to the plaintiff, the Blackburg Mining & Manufacturing Company, the coal and minerals acquired by them under the deed of February 19, 1853, from Jacob Kinser and wife.

Jacob Kinser died without a will, leaving two children, one of them being Sarah E. Bell, wife of William A. Bell, and the other Kizzie Payne, wife of Charles H. Payne. These two children inherited all the real estate owned by their father, and by deed of December 15, 1886, Charles H. and Kizzie Payne conveyed their interest to William A. and Sarah E. Bell, the defendants in the present action.

A number of very interesting questions arise upon the record, and they have been presented both in the oral arguments and in the briefs with the clearness and force characteristic of the distinguished counsel representing the respective sides of the controversy.

The defendants relied upon: (1) Failure of the plaintiff to show that the Jacob Kinser deed embraced the land in dispute; and (2) adverse possession in the defendants and those under whom they claim for the statutory period. The assignments of error fall naturally into three general divisions, the first relating exclusively to the plaintiff's claim of title; the second exclusively to the defendants' claim of adverse possession; and the third, in some measure, to both aspects of the case.

1. The plaintiff requested the court to give an instruction designated in the record as instruction 1, which reads as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that the legal effect of the deed of January 19, 1853, from Jacob Kinser and wife to George Falconer and William H. Peck, under which the plaintiff derived title, was to convey to Falconer and Peck the iron, coal, and other mineral substances and under all of the land of the said Jacob Kinser in Montgomery county lying on the north of Tom's creek, which was formerly owned by Jacob Kinser's father, the late Michael Kinser, the survey of said land being supposed to contain 1,000 acres, and this is true regardless of how Jacob Kinser derived title to said land; that is to say, whether he got it under the clause of the will giving a life estate to Hester Kinser, with remainder to Jacob Kinser, or whether he got it under the clause of the will making the joint devise to Jacob Kinser and his two brothers, or whether he got it under the clause of the will giving to Jacob Kinser all the balance of the tract not already devised on the south side of the plantation on which Michael Kinser lived."

The court refused to give this instruction as offered, but amended it by substituting for the words, "lying on the north of Tom's creek," the words, "lying on the north of Tom's creek on Brush mountain," thus following the descriptive language of the deed except as to the important omission of the word "and" appearing in the latter. The instruction as thus amended was given over the objection of the plaintiff, and is known in the record as instruction No. 1a.

We are of opinion that both instructions were wrong. The description in the deed taken on its face is ambiguous, and may plausibly be understood to mean either: (1) All the land, extending northward from Tom's creek and running up on Brush mountain which was owned by Jacob Kinser and acquired by him from his father; or (2) all the land on Brush mountain which was owned by Jacob Kinser and acquired by him from his father.

Many circumstances of more or less significance are relied upon by each party to the controversy to sustain the construction or meaning of the deed as respectively contended for by them. We need not undertake to recount them all. Conspicuous among them on the part of the plaintiff are the following: That the deed referred to a coal bank as having been opened on the land, whereas, according to plaintiff's assertion, no coal bank had been opened north of the northern line of the 43-acre tract; that the deed reserves the right to dig and use coal for the grantor and his family, whereas, according to the plaintiff's assertion, the coal outcrop was below the northern boundary of the Melvin tract, and there was practically no coal above that tract; that the deed reserved the right to use the lands for agricultural purposes, whereas none of the land north of the Melvin line was cleared or fit for agricultural purposes, and practically all below that line was in cultivation; that if the land in dispute is embraced in the deed, the specified area of 1,000 acres will be about covered thereby, whereas a shortage of 100 acres will exist if the land in dispute is not held to be within the description; that Jacob Kinser owned no land north of Tom's creek except what his father owned, and that he owned all of such land, having acquired the same either by direct devise in fee or as remainderman after his mother's death.

On the other hand, and on behalf of the defendants, some of the considerations relied upon as showing that the description in the deed was not intended to embrace the land between the creek and the mountain are as follows:

That the reference in the deed to "his the said Kinser's tract of land" * * * being land formerly owned by his father the late Michael Kinser meant the separate tract which he acquired in fee under the will of his father, and did not mean any part of the adjoining tract which fell to him as remainderman after the death of his mother; that he conveyed one tract and not a part of two tracts; that the true location of the line in dispute was the northern line of the land in which his mother was given a life estate; that such northern line was the northern line of the Melvin 43-acre tract, because, as averred by defendants, Michael Kinser considered his lower or farm lands—not his mountain lands—"the big survey," and because it was necessary to treat the northern line of the 43-acre tract as "the back line of the big survey" in order to satisfy the description in the will calling for "an easterly course to the extent of that survey until it strikes the line or lines of John Robinson's old orchard"; that the plaintiff has not mined or tried to mine to any extent below, and has mined for a number of years above the Melvin tract, which lies at the foot of the mountain, thus showing that it has recognized and acquiesced in the line as now claimed by the defendants.

[1] 1. Practically all these claims and counterclaims, and others of like general character, rest upon questions of fact, or of opinion and judgment upon facts, affecting the meaning of the language used by the parties in describing the land. In other words, the final question is one of intention as to the actual location of the disputed line, and thus falls properly within the province of the jury.

"The construction of a deed is for the court, but if the language of the deed will permit more than one inference to be drawn from it, and such inferences depend on controverted facts, the jury is to pass on the deed, and if the construction is dependent upon the meaning of the parties attached to the words, or upon extrinsic facts in connection with the deed, the question is a mixed one of law and fact. If the description is ambiguous, a disputed question of fact as to the grantor's intention, it is one for the jury, and so it is a question of fact if the ambiguity is created by a collateral matter. * * *

It is the duty of the court to construe a deed according to its legal effect in the absence of ambiguity. Where there is ambiguity, however, the question should be submitted to the jury. The interpretation may in some cases be a mixed question of law and fact." 2 Devlin on Deeds (3d Ed.) § 835, pp. 1505, 1506.

"Evidence aliunde is admissible in all cases where there is a doubt as to the true location of the survey, or a question as to the application of a grant to its proper subject-matter. It is not a question of construction, but of location. It is a question of fact, to be determined by the jury by the aid of extrinsic evidence." Reusens v. Lawson, 91 Va. 228, 235, 21 S. E. 347, 349.

"As a general rule, the construction of all written documents in evidence belongs to the court exclusively, but it is equally well settled that the location of a disputed boundary line is a question of fact for the jury." Wheaton v. Doughty, 116 Va. 566, 574, 82 S. E. 94, 97.

In Walker v. Gateway Milling Co., 121 Va. 217, 227, 92 S. E. 826, 829, the same principle was recognized in the following statement:

"The true meaning of the terms of the contract depends upon controverted facts and conflicting evidence, and the question was therefore one for the jury, upon proper instructions, to determine. Camp v. Wilson, 97 Va. 265, 270, 83 S. E. 591; Strause v. Richmond, etc., Co., 109 Va. 724, 729, 730, 65 S. E. 659, 132 Am. St. Rep. 93."

We agree, therefore, with the contention of counsel for the defendants that the question of the location of the land embraced in the deed was within the province of the jury, and that instruction No. 1, if it had been given, would have improperly taken that question from the jury by peremptorily instructing them that the deed was intended to convey the coal and mineral on all of the Jacob Kinser land lying north of Tom's creek.

But we are further of opinion that the court injected exactly the same error into the amendment. Instruction No. 1 absolutely disregarded Brush mountain as having any possible significance, and observance of its terms would have compelled the jury to find for the plaintiff. Instruction No. 1a made it equally imperative upon them to disregard every consideration in the location of the land except Brush mountain, and compliance with it necessitated a verdict for defendants.

The court should have submitted to the jury the question of the true location of the land as described, with an instruction to the general effect that they had the right to take into consideration in determining that question all the facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence which tended to throw light upon the intention of the parties.

Instruction 2 for the defendants was as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that if they believe from all the evidence that the boundaries of the mineral interest in the land conveyed by the deed under which plaintiff claims are in such doubt and uncertainty that they cannot say whether or not they embrace the land in controversy, they must find for the defendants."

[2] The giving of this instruction is made the ground of one of the assignments of error; and, while we do not think it could be made the basis of a reversal, we are of opinion that some slight modification would have presented more clearly the legal proposition involved. The instruction as given is perhaps equivalent to telling the jury that the burden was on the plaintiff to locate the land claimed by it, and to show that the same was within the lines of the title papers upon which it relied. This is the law. 4 Michie's Dig. 904; Wood v. Phillips, 117 Va. 878, 881, 86 S. E. 101, and cases cited. But it would have been better to instruct the jury more nearly in the language of the proposition as we have here stated it.

With the important and vital exception of the error as to instruction No. 1a, we perceive no substantial errors in the instructions given at the trial in so far as they affect the question of the plaintiff's original title to the land in controversy.

2. This brings us to the defendants' claim of title by adverse possession. The judgment must be reversed for the error already pointed out, but some of the questions presented under this second branch of the case will probably arise if the case is tried again, and it is proper that we should decide them now. The most important and far-reaching of these questions is involved in the plaintiff's contention that in no view of the case can the defendants claim title by adverse possession beyond the limits of their actual coal openings and mining operations, for the alleged reason that they had no color of title whatever to the coal and minerals. The argument is this: If the line in dispute is, as defendants contend, the northern line of the Melvin 43-acre tract, then the plaintiff itself has no shadow of title to the coal and minerals south of that line, and no question of adverse possession arises, for the obvious reason that the defendants themselves have the very title against which the adverse possession would have to operate; and if, on the other hand, the line in dispute is, as plaintiff contends, at Tom's creek, the defendants, who lay no claim to any paper title by descent cast or otherwise, except under Jacob Kinser, from whom they got whatever title they have, are wholly without any color of title. If this argument is sound, then the case in respect to the defense of adverse possession was tried upon an erroneous theory, and practically all of the instructions in regard thereto were wrong.

[3] We are unable to see upon what theory the defendants can claim any color of title in this case. They either have an absolutely and decisively good paper title or no paper title at all. Both parties claim under Jacob Kinser, and the sole question, so far as the title papers are concerned, is one of boundary. It is no answer to the argument to say that perhaps the jury found the line as claimed by defendants, and that if so the deed covered the land and would constitute color of title. If the jury did so find there was no room in the case for any color of title or any adverse possession, and no question as to either was involved. The plaintiff must prevail, if at all, purely by reason of the fact that its deed covered the land in dispute. On the other hand, the defendants must prevail, if at all, either (1) because the plaintiff has failed to show title, or (2) because the defendants themselves have shown adverse possession. If they prevail under the former defense, they have shown title by descent to all the land south of the Melvin line. If they fail as to the first and are forced to rely upon the second defense, it is plain that they cannot claim any color of title from Jacob Kinser, simply because in this view of the case his title to the minerals stopped at the Melvin line. To express the idea differently, the title they derived from Kinser either did or did not cover the land in controversy. If it did, no question of color of title or adverse possession arises or can arise; if it did not, they are solely dependent upon their defense of adverse possession, they are wholly without color of title under Kinser, and, having shown none from any other source, they are limited under that defense to their actual possession of the minerals.

[4, 5] It is well settled that there can be no constructive possession of real estate under a mere claim of title, that adversary possession to extend beyond the limits of actual occupancy must be under color of title, and that the principal office of color of title is to define the boundaries. It is immaterial that the title paper relied on as color is defective or even void as passing title. Indeed, as already indicated in what we have said, and as stated in Baber v. Baber, 121 Va. 740, 755, 94 S. E. 209, 213—

"It is inherent in color of title that the title claim thereunder is invalid—is in fact no title—and the writing may indeed be absolutely void."

This is necessarily true because color of title is only important in cases of claim under adverse possession, and the occasion to invoke adverse possession never arises where the party in possession has the superior paper title. A failure in description, however, is fatal to any paper as color of title. A description "which contains sufficient terms to designate the land in question with such certainty that the boundaries thereof can be ascertained by the application of general rules, governing the location of land conveyed by any deed" is absolutely essential. There can be no color of title to land not described in the paper relied on as color. These propositions have been the subject of much consideration and discussion, and are now too well settled to require or warrant further elaboration. See discussion of Color of Title, by Judge Sims (1896) 2 Va. Law Reg. 551; Graves' Notes on Real Property, § 141 and notes; Stover v. Stover, 60 W. Va. 285, 292, 54 S. E. 350; Creekmur v. Creekmur, 75 Va. 430, 438; Chilton v. White, 72 W. Va. 545, 78 S. E. 1048; Goad v. Walker, 73 W. Va. 431, 80 S. E. 875; 2 Minor on Real Property, § 1041, p. 1119; section 1042, p. 1122; 1 Cyc. 1089, 1090; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. (2d Ed.) 858, 864, 865.

We are of opinion that the instructions as to adverse possession, in so far as they were based on the theory that the defendants had color of title, were erroneous, and should have been refused.

[6, 7] 3. We come now to the assignments of error based upon the admission of testimony.

The witness, W. F. Wall, was allowed to testify over the objection of the plaintiff, that at one time while he was making a survey of a line some two miles west of the land involved in this suit, Col. Newlee, then the president of the plaintiff company, said that he did not claim anything south of the Melvin line. It is contended by the plaintiff, that this alleged remark of Col. Newlee related, not to the Melvin land here involved, but to another tract. We do not think this contention is correct, and are of opinion that the reference was to the Melvin line involved in this case. In the absence of proof to the contrary, the president of a corporation is not presumed to have authority to bind it by declarations of this character. The evidence here, however, sufficiently shows that Col. Newlee, as president of the company, was in general charge of its lands, and was actively looking after the establishment of the boundaries. Under these circumstances he must be regarded as the authorized spokesman of the company, and his declarations in disparagement of its title, like those of an individual owner, are admissible in evidence.

[8] The witness, C. W. Schaeffer, was allowed to testify, over the objection of the plaintiff, that his father, Solomon Schaeffer at one time leased a mine from the plaintiff company, and had started to mine coal south of the Melvin line, when the defendant, Bell, told him that he was working on his (Bell's) land, and would have to stop, and that the father of the witness accordingly stopped and moved to a point above the Melvin line. This conversation did not take place in the presence of any agent or representative of the plaintiff, and does not appear ever to have been communicated to the company in any way. So far as the record shows, Schaeffer was merely a lessee, and not an agent of the company. Notice to him was not notice to the company. This evidence should have been excluded.

The witness, H. P. Smith, was allowed, over the objection of the plaintiff, to testify that he had a conversation with Col. Newlee, in which the latter stated that he and Bell had made a settlement regarding the line in dispute. The mention made by this witness of a settlement may perhaps fairly be construed as referring to the running of the line by Surveyor Peck, as testified to by the witnesses Sibold and Fizer. In that view the statement which Smith attributed to Newlee, in which the latter is alleged to have said that the line was settled and he was glad of it, would be a statement in conflict with the position of the company in the instant case, and therefore admissible upon the same ground as that upon which we have held that Wall's testimony was properly received.

Section 3348 of the Code, invoked by plaintiff, did not render Smith incompetent as a witness because he was not a party to the transaction within the meaning of that section.

By far the most important as well as the most interesting question arising with reference to the admission of evidence is that which involved the testimony of the defendant W. A. Bell. This witness was offered in an attempt to prove that there had been a compromise agreement entered into between Col. Newlee and Bell, fixing the Melvin line as the southern boundary of the plaintiff's mineral interest in the land. Since it appeared that Col. Newlee, the agent who was alleged to have acted for the plaintiff corporation in this transaction, was dead, the plaintiff objected to his testimony on the ground that he was an incompetent witness under section 3348 of the Code. That section is as follows:

"And where such contract or transaction was personally and solely made or had with an agent of one of the parties thereto, and such agent is dead or otherwise incapable of testifying, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor or in favor of a person having an interest adverse to the principal of such agent, unless he be first called to testify on behalf of said principal or some person claiming under him, or the testimony of such agent be first read or given in evidence by his principal or other person claiming under him, or unless the said principal has first testified."

The witness testified to some extent in regard to the alleged compromise agreement with Col. Newlee, but did so with the understanding that the court was reserving its ruling on the competency of the witness, and the court subsequently took action in regard thereto as indicated by the following statement which was incorporated in the record:

"Now, gentlemen, in regard to the evidence of Mr. Bell and the motion made by counsel for the plaintiff, I want the record to show that the motion of the plaintiff by counsel was sustained by the court. Whereupon, the defendant, by his counsel, moved the court to strike out the foregoing evidence of Mr. Bell from the record so far as it pertains to the establishment of the line between the plaintiff company and the defendant, as had with Col. Newlee, or Dr. Black, both of whom are dead, which motion the court allowed, and to which action of the court the defendant by counsel excepted, and the court instructed the jury not to regard the evidence of Mr. Bell with reference to the establishment of said line nor to consider any part thereof.

"And the plaintiff by counsel objected to the witness being allowed to testify at all in the case; having been rendered incompetent in the case for one purpose, he is incompetent for all; but the court overruled the objection of the plaintiff, and permitted the witness to testify, over the objection of the plaintiff, to which action of the court the plaintiff excepted."

Thereafter the witness Bell was recalled, and was permitted to testify, over the objection of the plaintiff, at some length with regard to the acts of adverse possession of the defendants. The point made against the admissibility of this evidence is that the witness, having been shown to be incompetent for one purpose, could not be permitted to testify as to any fact in the case. This objection is based upon the authority of Mason v. Wood, 27 Grat. (68 Va.) 783; Grigsby v. Simpson, 28 Grat. (69 Va.) 348; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Oliver, 95 Va. 485, 28 S. E. 594, and cases of that type.

[9] The question here presented is not free from difficulty. The cases relied upon in support of the objection, or some of them, undoubtedly in terms declare that a witness incompetent for one purpose cannot be permitted to testify to any fact in the case. See Ely v. Gray, 125 Va. —, 100 S. E. 660. We believe, however, that all of these cases have involved single indivisible contracts or subjects of investigation upon which alone the result of the litigation necessarily depended. In the instant case, from the defendants' standpoint, two distinctly separate subjects of investigation are involved, namely: (1) The question of boundary under the description in the Peck and Falconer deed; (2) the claim of adverse possession on the part of the defendants. These are two wholly separate and distinct matters, and neither is merely collateral or incidental to the other. In this view of the case it seems to us that the witness Bell might very properly have been held incompetent to testify as to any matter relating to the true location of the disputed line, and at the same time competent as to any matters relating to adverse possession. His testimony, however, upon the subject of adverse possession was, as we have seen, put to an improper purpose, because, when viewed in the light of the instructions, it would have tended to establish by adverse possession title to the entire boundary in dispute, when as a matter of fact the actual possession by the defendants, as testified to by Bell, affected only a small part of the minerals, and no color of title to the residue was shown. In our opinion it was proper to permit Bell to testify as to the acts of adverse possession which he mentioned in his evidence, but the jury should have been given to understand that, in the absence of color of title, the defendants could not hold any part of the land in dispute by adverse possession, except such as they had acquired title to by virtue of their mining operations for the statutory period. Of course their possession of the surface does not affect the case because if the deed from Jacob Kinzer to Peck and Falconer covered the land in dispute, that deed effected a severance of the title to the surface from the coal and minerals.

[10] The remaining objection to evidence

(126 Va. 72)

JOHN P. PETTYJOHN &amp; SONS v. BASHAM.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

involves the admission of a paper in the handwriting of a deputy county surveyor, C. D. Peck, marked "Survey of the Part of the Melvin Tract which the Coal Company is Interested in," and containing the notes of a survey which the evidence tends to show was made for the purpose of locating the division line in controversy here in the year 1889, in the presence and under the supervision of Col. Newlee and Mr. Bell. There was no error in admitting this paper. Va. Coal & Iron Co. v. Ison, 114 Va. 144, 153, 75 S. E. 782; 5 Cyc. 965-967.

For the reasons indicated in the course of this opinion, the judgment complained of must be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial to be had not in conflict with the views herein expressed.

Reversed.

(126 Va. 178)

DICKINSON v. ARMSTRONG et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 23, 1919.)

ELECTIONS ¶51 — ELECTORAL BOARD; APPOINTMENT OF ELECTION OFFICIALS.

Under Code 1904, § 117, it is the duty of the electoral board of each city and county to appoint the judges and clerks of elections, who are to hold all elections to be held in their respective precincts for one year, beginning on the 1st day of June following appointment; but the statute does not inhibit the appointment of the same person from year to year.

Petition for a writ of mandamus. Judgment reversed.

PER CURIAM. The court is of the opinion that it is the duty of the electoral board of each city and county, under the provisions of section 117 of the Code (1904), to appoint the judges and clerks of election who are to hold all elections to be held in their respective election precincts for one year beginning on the 1st day of June following their appointment, or until their successors are appointed; that this duty is required to be performed by said boards in the month of May in each year, and that the appointments should be made annually as contemplated by the statute; but that as the statute does not inhibit the appointment of the same man to the same position from year to year, and as it does not appear that there are any vacancies to be filled, the mandamus prayed for, if granted, would accomplish no useful or beneficial result, and hence should be refused.

Reversed.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1011(1)—REVIEW OF FINDING OF COURT AFTER DISAGREEMENT OF JURY.

Finding by the court to which the cause was submitted after disagreement of the jury, being supported by evidence, is unassailable on appeal.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1008(2)—REVIEW OF FINDINGS BY COURT AFTER DISAGREEMENT OF JURY.

Where the jury was discharged because of inability to agree, and questions of fact submitted to trial court, the decision of the trial judge is not entitled to the same weight as if case had been submitted without intervention of jury.

3. NEGLIGENCE ¶32(1)—DUTY TO LICENSEES DEFINED.

An occupant of land is charged with knowledge of the use of his premises by a licensee, and while not chargeable with the duty of provision or preparation for the safety of the licensee, he is chargeable with the duty of lookout.

4. NEGLIGENCE ¶32(1)—DUTY TO INVITEES DEFINED.

An occupant of land owes to an invitee, to the extent of the invitation, the duty of provision, preparation, and lookout, and must use ordinary care to see that his premises are in a reasonably safe condition.

5. NEGLIGENCE ¶32(2)—WHEN INVITATION AND LICENSE WILL BE INFERRED.

Usually an invitation will be inferred where the visit is of common interest or mutual advantage to the parties, while a license will be inferred where the object is the mere pleasure or benefit of the visitor.

6. TRIAL ¶105(1) — EVIDENCE; EFFECT OF FAILURE TO OBJECT.

That no exception was taken to the admission of testimony merely affects its admissibility, and does not give it any greater weight than it would have had if exception had been taken.

7. NEGLIGENCE ¶32(2)—SCOPE OF INVITATION.

Where the general contractor employed a subcontractor to do the plumbing in the building, an employé of the subcontractor, who had a safe and easy method of access to the roof through a dormer window, cannot recover for his injuries received when a scaffold built by the general contractor for its carpenters broke when he was attempting to use it to reach the roof; his use of the scaffold being that of a licensee and not an invitee.

Sims, J., dissenting.

Error to Law and Chancery Court of City of Roanoke.

Action by one Basham against John P. Pettyjohn & Sons. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Reversed.

Staples & Cocke, of Roanoke, and Wilson & Manson, of Lynchburg, for plaintiffs in error.

Jackson & Henson, of Roanoke, for defendant in error.

BURKS, J. John P. Pettyjohn & Sons contracted with the owners to build an addition to Hotel Roanoke, in the city of Roanoke. They employed the Roanoke Sheet Metal Company, as a subcontractor, to do the plumbing on the addition, and the plaintiff was an employé of this subcontractor. In the course of the construction of the building the defendants, who were doing the carpenter's work themselves, erected a scaffold along the face of the south gable of the building for the purpose of enabling their workmen to "case" certain window frames in the gable and to put the cornices thereon. This work had been completed, but the scaffold had not been taken down. The work for which the scaffold was primarily designed did not require the workmen to go beyond the west face of the last window on the west from which the support for the scaffold projected. The supports for the scaffold upon which the floor of the scaffold rested are spoken of by the witnesses as "pudlocks." They were 2x12 inch joists, set on edge, run out of the window, and nailed at the other end to uprights run from the scaffold below. The floor of the scaffold consisted of loose boards laid on the pudlocks, but not nailed thereto. This floor extended a short distance beyond the last pudlock. The carpenter's work on the gable had been completed and the scaffold had proven safe and satisfactory for the purpose for which it was constructed. The plaintiff came out upon the scaffold through the east window in the face of the gable, walked the length of the scaffold the west end thereof, and, while endeavoring to climb from the scaffold over the eaves onto the roof where his work was to be done, the scaffold gave way and precipitated him to the ground causing a compound comminuted fracture of one leg and breaking one of his arms. For this injury, the present action was brought. The case was submitted to a jury; but, being unable to agree upon a verdict, they were discharged, and, by consent of the parties, it was then submitted to the judge of the trial court upon the evidence which had been adduced before the jury, and the trial court gave judgment for the plaintiff for the sum of $2,000.

The declaration alleged negligence on the part of the plaintiff in error: (1) In the use of defective materials; (2) in the failure to nail the floor of the scaffold; and (3) in the failure properly to construct and brace the scaffold. The first two of these allegations were abandoned at the hearing in this court. The plaintiffs in error defended on the ground that they had not been guilty of any negligence in the construction of the scaffold, and, if they had, the defendant in error was a mere licensee who took things as he found them, and they did not owe him the duty of making the scaffold safe for the use made of it by him.

[1, 2] The evidence is not clear as to how much of the scaffold fell down, and the parties advanced different theories as to how and why it fell. It is admitted, however, that it fell while the defendant in error was upon it in the discharge of his duties as a plumber. It was claimed by the defendant in error that the pudlock was not properly nailed and braced at the end next to the gable, while the plaintiffs in error claimed that the defendant in error fell from the roof to the scaffold, causing the latter to give way, or that he walked out on the ends of the boards of the floor beyond the last pudlock, causing them to tilt and give way, or that his efforts to climb upon the roof from the scaffold caused a lateral pressure upon the scaffold, which the latter was not built to sustain. There was evidence tending to sustain each of these theories, and verdict in favor of either could not have been said to have been clearly against the evidence, or without evidence to sustain it. The trial court, sitting in place of a jury, found for the defendant in error, and its finding on this point cannot be disturbed. Generally, where questions of fact are submitted to the decision of the trial judge, without the intervention of the jury, his decision thereof is entitled to the same weight as the verdict of a jury. Delaware L. & W. R. Co. v. Cotten, 113 Va. 563, 565, 75 S. E. 122. But where the jury have been discharged because of their inability to agree upon a verdict, the decision of the trial judge upon the same testimony which was submitted to the jury is not entitled to the same weight as it would otherwise have had.

[3] The position of the plaintiff in error, however, is that Basham was a mere licensee and assumed the risk of danger from the scaffold if it was defectively constructed. He was not a servant of Pettyjohn & Sons, but of a metal company by whom he was employed. As to Pettyjohn & Sons he was a mere third person, and third persons can only come upon the permanent premises of another in the capacity of trespassers, licensees, or invitees. But there is a marked difference between the duties which the occupant of land owes to trespassers, licensees, and invitees, respectively. Trespassers and bare licensees, as a rule, take the risk of the place as they find it. Generally, the owner or occupant of the soil does not owe to a trespasser the duty of prevision, preparation, or lookout, but only the duty not to injure him intentionally or wantonly. If, however, the trespass is of such nature and so frequent as to charge the occupant with notice thereof, and of the danger likely to ensue to the trespasser, then the owner is chargeable with the duty of lookout for such trespasser, with such equipment and appliances as he is then using in the ordinary conduct of his business; but he does not owe him the duty of prevision or preparation.

In the case of licensees, the occupant is charged with knowledge of the use of his premises by the licensee, and, while not chargeable with the duty of prevision or preparation for the safety of the licensee, he is chargeable with the duty of lookout, with such equipment as he then has in use to avoid injury to him at the time and place where the presence of the licensee may be reasonably expected. The duties of the occupant to the licensee and to the known frequent trespasser are the same, but the licensee is exempt from responsibilities of a trespasser.

[4] The duties of the occupant to the invitee are entirely different. The latter comes by invitation, express or implied, and may reasonably expect to come with safety. The invitation, however, is rarely, if ever, unlimited, and especially when implied, but to the extent of the invitation the occupant owes to the invitee the duty of prevision, preparation, and lookout. He must use ordinary care to see that his premises are in a reasonably safe condition for the use of the invitee in the manner, and to the extent, that he has invited their use. The cases on the subject of the duty to trespassers, licensees, and invitees, respectively, are very numerous, and there is very little conflict in the holdings. We cite by way of illustration a few of them from this jurisdiction. Those from other jurisdictions are too numerous to cite, but will be found in any well considered article on negligence. Many of them are referred to in the cases hereinafter cited. Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. Joyner, 92 Va. 354, 23 S. E. 773; Lunsford v. Colonial Coal & C. Co., 115 Va. 346, 79 S. E. 348; Walker v. Potomac, etc., R. Co., 105 Va. 226, 53 S. E. 113, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 80, 115 Am. St. Rep. 871, 8 Ann. Cas. 862; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. De Board, 91 Va. 700, 22 S. E. 514, 29 L. R. A. 825; Blankenship v. Ches. & O. Ry. Co., 94 Va. 449, 27 S. E. 20; Ches. & O. Ry. Co. v. Rogers, 100 Va. 324, 41 S. E. 732; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Wood, 99 Va. 156, 37 S. E. 846; Williamson v. Southern Ry. Co., 104 Va. 146, 51 S. E. 195, 70 L. R. A. 1007, 113 Am. St. Rep. 1032; Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Farrow, 106 Va. 137, 55 S. E. 569, 10

Ann. Cas. 12; Nichols v. Washington, O. & W. R. Co., 83 Va. 99, 5 S. E. 171, 5 Am. St. Rep. 257; Richmond & M. R. Co. v. Moore, 94 Va. 493, 27 S. E. 70, 37 L. R. A. 258; Clark v. Fehlhaber, 106 Va. 803, 56 S. E. 817, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 442. We express no opinion as to the rights of the house guests or the duties owing to them.

[5-7] Upon the evidence, viewed from the standpoint of a demurrer to the evidence, we must hold that the scaffold was improperly and insecurely constructed for the use to which it was put by the plaintiff. If Basham was a mere licensee, then he took upon himself the risk of the scaffold as he found it, and cannot recover; but if he was an invitee, and the invitation extended to that use of the scaffold, then Pettyjohn & Sons are liable to him for the injury sustained in consequence of its fall. But it is sometimes difficult to determine whether the circumstances make a case of invitation, in a technical sense, or of mere license. Usually, an invitation will be inferred where the visit is of common interest or mutual advantage to the parties, while a license will be inferred where the object is the mere pleasure or benefit to the visitor. Bennett v. Railroad Co., 102 U. S. 577, 26 L. Ed. 235. The extent of the invitation also is not free from difficulty, where the invitation is implied.

In the case at bar, the evidence fails to show that the use of the scaffold by Basham for getting upon the roof was for the common interest and mutual benefit of both parties. It was built for use in doing work on the face of the gable, and was never intended to be used as a means of access to the roof. There were communicating doors between all the rooms in this part of the building, and there were two dormer windows in the roof affording safe, convenient, and easy access to the roof at a point not more than three or four feet distant from the point at which the plaintiff would have landed if he had succeeded in his efforts to climb upon the roof from the scaffold. There was no work that the plaintiff could have done while standing on the scaffold. His work was on the roof and not on the gable. If the scaffold was attractive, the plaintiff was not a child, and temptation was not invitation. If simply convenient, the use of it was as a licensee and not as an invitee. The attempted proof of a custom or usage of trade for subcontractors to use scaffolds left in place by the general contractors was unsuccessful; even if it could have affected the result in a case where the use was not necessary. The only testimony on this subject was that of two members of the firm by which Basham was employed at the time of his injury. No foundation was laid as to either of them for proving a general custom or usage of trade, or any knowledge on the part of Pettyjohn & Sons of either a general or special usage in such case. The entire testimony of these witnesses on this subject was as follows:

D. P. McGann: "Q. In a case of that kind, where a contractor has entered into a contract to do work or erect a building, and a subcontractor contracts with him to do the plumbing work, or other portion of the work, I will ask you to state what is contemplated, in a situation of that sort, in referring to who shall furnish the scaffolding that is necessary for the employe of the subcontractor to do the work?"

"A. We always use the scaffolds for executing the work that were there."

D. E. Argenbright: "Q. What is the custom and what is in contemplation by the parties as to the erection and use of scaffolding in cases of that kind?"

This question was objected to, but the objection was overruled. The examination then proceeded:

"A. Most of the work we do is specification work; we work under specifications.

"Q. I asked you what is contemplated by the parties and what is the custom in regard to the use of the scaffolds?"

"A. The general contractors generally build the scaffolds or do the scaffolding work."

There was no other testimony on this subject. The fact that no exception was taken to this testimony simply affected its admissibility. It did not give it any greater weight than it would have had if exception had been taken thereto.

This is far from proving a usage of trade to the extent and for the purpose of showing that the plaintiff was invited to use the scaffold upon which he had no work to do as a means of access to the roof. The language of this court in Southwest Va. M. Co. v. Chase, 95 Va. 50, 57, 27 S. E. 826, 829, is entirely apposite to the situation here. It is said there:

"It has been doubted in some cases whether one witness is sufficient to prove a local custom or usage, but it seems now to be settled that a jury may be justified in regarding the usage as established by one witness where it appears that he has full knowledge and long experience on the subject about which he speaks, and testifies explicitly to the duration and universality of the usage, and is not contradicted. Robinson v. United States, 15 Wall. 363 [20 L. Ed. 653]; Jones v. Hoey, 128 Mass. 584; 1 Greenleaf on Ev. § 260 and note. There is nothing in the record to show that this witness, who was an interested party, had any such knowledge or experience on the subject as would enable him to prove the custom. Neither does he prove, as the law requires, that it was an established usage or custom, general and notorious in that locality. Hansborough v. Neal, supra [94 Va. 722, 27 S. E. 593]."

The evidence does not establish a custom or usage of business, general and notorious in that locality. As applied to the case at bar, the evidence does not establish anything more than a permissive use of the scaffold, a use as a licensee, or, if it can be so extended as to amount to an invitation, the invitation is limited to a use for work to be done while standing on the scaffold. If an invitation is to be implied at all, it is restricted to such a use as was reasonably necessary, and is not extended to uses not contemplated nor reasonably to be expected, though apparently convenient. It would place too great a burden upon the general contractor to hold him responsible for any use of the scaffold that was simply convenient to the plaintiff. In order for the plaintiff to occupy the position of invitee, it must appear that the use was not merely convenient, but reasonably necessary for the work to be done. If it could not have been reasonably anticipated that any such use would have been made of the scaffold, an invitation to make such use will not be implied. Mere convenience is not invitation. There are cases where convenient access is prepared for the use made of it, and in such case the preparation of the convenience amounts to an invitation. Such was the case of Nichols v. Washington, O. & W. Co., supra. But this case does not belong to that class.

The evidence before us shows that perfectly safe, easy, and convenient access to the roof was afforded by two dormer windows, and Basham admitted on his cross-examination that such access would have placed him on the roof at a point not more than three or four feet from where he would have landed if he had succeeded in climbing over the eaves. It is true that he seeks to show that access by the dormer windows was not equally as convenient as by the scaffold, and that he "couldn't have gotten to the stack from there." But no amount of reasoning on the subject can overcome the force of his admission that access from the dormer window would have placed him within three feet of the very gable around which he was going to climb. There was no necessity, therefore, for his going upon the scaffold. It may have been a "convenient and easy" mode of access, but it was not reasonably necessary. But it was urged upon us both in the oral argument and in the brief that an invitation to use the scaffold was implied because such use was "an easy, convenient, and apparently safe way * * * to reach the roof," and it was insisted that subcontractors and their employes had the right to use the scaffolds "wherever and whenever it is necessary or convenient for them to do so." This right is insisted upon because "this scaffold afforded a convenient and easy method of reaching the roof." The trial court apparently took this view, but we cannot concur therein. The fact that access by way of the scaffold was "easy and convenient" did not warrant the implication of an invitation to use it, when another means of access existed that was perfectly safe, easy, and convenient. No authority is cited for such a position, and we have not been able to find any. Indeed, the cases on somewhat similar questions seem to hold to the contrary. In Morrissey v. Boston & Me. R. Co. (1918) 230 Mass. 171, 119 N. E. 675, the defendant contracted with several contractors for the erection of a building. The steel work was to be done by McClintock, Marshall & Co. by whom the plaintiff was employed. The masonry and carpenter's work was to be done by the Pike Company. Masons of the Pike Company left a ladder in place against one of the walls. The plaintiff was ordered by one of the foremen of the McClintock, Marshall & Co. to go to the roof. He went by way of the ladder, and getting on the ladder to return he fell and was injured. Suit was brought against the Boston & Maine Company and the Pike Company. It was held that, while the ladder was placed where it was found by employees of the Pike Company, the evidence would not warrant a finding that the plaintiff was invited to use it. There were other ways of reaching the roof, and there was nothing to show that the ladder was placed there for the use of the employees of McClintock, Marshall & Co., and hence the plaintiff did not use it by invitation of the Pike Company, but in using it was merely a licensee.

In Smith v. Trimble (1901) 111 Ky. 861, 64 S. W. 915, a paper hanger was injured by stepping onto a balcony leading from an upper porch to an adjacent room, when the balcony fell, precipitating him to the ground. It was not necessary to use the balcony in going to or from the rooms upon which he was at work, but he did use it, without the knowledge or consent of the appellee, for his (appellant's) greater convenience in calling to a fellow workman below. The court said:

"We are of opinion, and so hold, that appellant, while engaged in that work in using such parts of the appellee's premises as were reasonably necessary to enable him to do his work, was on the premises under the assurance in law by appellee that such parts so necessarily used were reasonably safe for the purposes of such use. But beyond that appellee owed appellant no duty greater than to a stranger or trespasser. And when appellant, without invitation or knowledge of the owner, went into or upon other parts of the premises, not necessary for the performance of his labor, he assumed all the risk of doing so. He was neither required, expected, nor allured to be at the place where he was injured, consequently appellee was under no duty to him to provide there a place of safety." (Italics supplied.)

In Hutchinson v. Cleveland Cliff Co. (1905) 141 Mich. 346, 104 N. W. 698, the plaintiff was employed to cover pipes in the defendant's mill, and fell through an open unguarded hatchway. His work did not call him nearer than within 20 to 40 feet of the hatch-way, and he had to step over a steam pipe a foot high from the floor to get there. He had no call to go there and no invitation. His excuse for going there is that it was near night, and he wished to ask the foreman whether he should mix another quantity of plastic. He had seen the foreman go in a northwesterly direction from him and disappear from his sight around a still, a few feet from him. The mill was in operation and was lighted by electricity. Plaintiff testified that the light was dim. He started in the same direction and went around the still, ultimately walking into the trap, which he did not see or notice. The railing had been removed to facilitate the raising of the cumbersome machinery. The foreman was not produced as a witness. It was defendant's contention that it owed no duty to plaintiff, who had not been invited to enter that portion of the mill, and that he was guilty of contributory negligence. It was held that the defendant owed him no duty of protection.

In Vaughan v. Transit Development Co. (1917) 222 N. Y. 79, 118 N. E. 219, the plaintiff was a motorman of the defendant company. He went into the toilet room of one of the company's power plants, as had been the custom of himself and other employees of the defendant for years, without objection from the defendant. Plumbers had been working just inside the door and had left open a trapdoor in the floor. The plaintiff fell into the opening and was hurt. It was held that there could be no recovery as he was there as a licensee only, and that the defendant did not owe to him the duty of active vigilance to see that he was not injured while upon its premises for his own convenience. It was said that the plaintiff was there by permission for his own convenience and his status was that of a bare licensee; that long-continued acquiescence in such did not become an invitation; and that the law does not so penalize good nature or indifference, nor does permission ripen into right.

In Ryan v. Toop, 114 App. Div. 165, 99 N. Y. Supp. 590, a subcontractor for the plastering in the building in process of construction ordered his servant to plaster along a stairway, and he attempted to do so by standing on iron treads on the stairs, which treads were not built or intended to work on, but were to serve merely as a sheathing for stone treads. One of the treads gave way and the plaintiff was injured. It was held that the contractor was not liable, as the plaintiff was not there by invitation.

In Holbrook v. Aldrich, 168 Mass. 15, 46 N. E. 115, 38 L. R. A. 493, 60 Am. St. Rep. 364, the plaintiff, a child under seven years of age, entered defendant's shop with her father, who was going to make a purchase. She intended to buy some candy, but in the first place accompanied her father to a part of the shop some distance from the candy counter, and went to the coffee grinder. He let go her hand to get his money and she went over to the coffee grinder, put her hand up the spout out of which the ground coffee came, hoping to get some whole kernels, and lost her fingers. It was held that the defendant was under no obligation to look out for the child and to see that it did not injure itself by placing its fingers in the grinder. It was said that the plaintiff was not within the scope of the defendant's implied invitation, and therefore was not entitled to protection against possibility of harm to herself, and that even if she had been buying coffee the rule would have been the same; that the defendant's invitation in that case would have been for due care for the safety of those working in the neighborhood while simply moving about, but it would not have been to look out or prevent wrongful acts by the plaintiff. Temptation is not always invitation.

In Maguire v. Magee (Pa. 1888) 13 Atl. 551, Magee was contractor for all the walls, brickwork, etc., and had charge of the scaffolding. The residue of the work was done by the owners. All of the workmen, whether employed by Magee or the owners, used the scaffolds to pass from one part of the building to the other. Magee was a laborer employed by the owners of the building and not by the contractor, and was engaged in painting the crib work on the building. While working on the scaffold he stepped on what proved to be a trap in the scaffold and fell and was injured. The court held that there could be no recovery against the contractor; that the plaintiff was a bare licensee; that the scaffold was of temporary character; and that the defendant did not owe him the duty of having it in safe condition for his use.

See, also, Plummer v. Dill, 156 Mass. 426, 31 N. E. 128, 32 Am. St. Rep. 463; Kidder v. Sadler, 117 Me. 194, 103 Atl. 159; Blackstone v. Chelmsford Foundry Co., 170 Mass. 321, 49 N. E. 635; Eldred v. Mackie, 178 Mass. 1, 59 N. E. 673.

The fact that the scaffold was repaired after the accident is no evidence that it was left in place for the plumbers. The walls of the building had been erected, and the roof was ready for the slate; but there is no evidence that any painting had been done, and it is probable that the repairs were made for the use of the painters or some other workmen who had to stand upon it to do work on the gable.

An effort was made to prove an invitation to use the scaffold, which was on the south gable, by showing that a similar use had been made of the scaffold on the north gable, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the defendants. But the evidence shows that there were no dormer windows on the north side, from which access to the roof could be had with safety and convenience as there were on the south side, and that if such use was made of the scaffold on the north gable it was a reasonably necessary use, and that the scaffold on that gable had stood the test.

We are of opinion that Basham, the defendant in error, went upon the scaffold as licensee of the plaintiff in error and not as an invitee, and hence is not entitled to recover of the plaintiff in error for the injury sustained by him in the fall off the scaffold. The judgment of the court of law and chancery will therefore be reversed, and this court will enter judgment for the plaintiff in error as that is the judgment which should have been entered by the trial court.

Reversed.

SIMS, J. (dissenting). I cannot agree with the majority opinion on the subjects mentioned below.

1. The opinion states that—

"The evidence fails to show that the use of the scaffold by Basham for getting upon the roof was for the common interest and mutual benefit of both parties. It was built for use in doing work on the face of the gable and was never intended to be used as a means of access to the roof. * * * The attempted proof of a custom or usage of trade for subcontractors to use scaffolds left in place by the general contractor was unsuccessful. * * *"

There follows the quotation of extracts from the testimony of two witnesses for the plaintiff, both members of the subcontracting firm which employed him; the first question and answer quoted being from the testimony of one of such witnesses and the second question and answer quoted being from the other of such witnesses. Later on in the opinion it is said:

"The evidence does not establish a custom or usage of business, general and notorious in that locality. As applied to the case at bar, the evidence does not establish anything more than a permissive use of the scaffold, a use as a licensee, or, if it can be so extended as to amount to an invitation, the invitation is limited to a use for work to be done while standing on the scaffold."

The opinion also states that the right of the plaintiff to use the scaffold is insisted upon, "because 'this scaffold afforded a convenient and easy mode of reaching the roof.' The trial court apparently took this view, but we cannot concur therein."

It seems plain to me from the record and briefs in the case that the plaintiff did not seek recovery in the trial court, nor did the trial court rest its judgment on the ground that because the scaffold was a convenient and easy mode of access to the roof therefore the plaintiff was an invitee and was not a mere licensee in making such use thereof. The issue on this subject as made by the declaration was distinctly this: That the use of the scaffold in question was "reasonably necessary," and that when the contract between the defendants, the general contractors, and the employers of the plaintiff, the subcontractors, was entered into, and under that contract, "it was contemplated by the parties that the servants of the" (subcontractors, amongst whom was the plaintiff) "who should be engaged in the performance of (the) plumbing work, should use the scaffold * * * whenever it became reasonably necessary. * * *." And it appears throughout the record that the case was tried and decided in the court below in favor of the plaintiff upon that issue.

Now the testimony aforesaid, quoted in the opinion of Judge BURKS, was introduced by the plaintiff as tending to show the understanding aforesaid, and that the true construction of the contract between the general and subcontractors was that contended for by the plaintiff, when such contract is read in the light or the custom or usage mentioned. And, as I see it, this testimony was not introduced to prove a mere local custom or usage, but a general custom or usage on the subject, prevailing everywhere. And the testimony, in the absence of any objection thereto (and there was none), or of any evidence in any way limiting its effect (of which there was none), was amply sufficient to prove such general custom or usage. Indeed, this is in effect admitted in the concluding brief for the defendant, where it said:

"We submit that while there was evidence tending to show that it was customary for such employes to use such scaffolding when necessary, there was no proof at all of such custom attending mere convenience."

As the case comes before us, therefore, with the decision of the trial court in favor of the plaintiff, we must, as I think, regard the fact as concluded that under the contract between the defendants and the employers of the plaintiff, when construed in the light of the general custom or usage of the trade of the subject, it was contemplated by the parties that the plaintiff should use the scaffold in question, as he did, for access to the roof of the building, if it was reasonably necessary for him so to do in the progress of his work thereon as a plumber. That is to say, it must be taken to have been within the contemplation of the defendants when they contracted for the plumbing work with the employers to the plaintiff, that the plaintiff would use the scaffold as he did, if it became reasonably necessary for him so to do in the progress of such work; and hence the plaintiff was in such case an invitee in such use of such scaffold and the consequent duties of reasonable prevision and care to make the scaffold at that place reasonably safe for such use devolved upon the defendants. See note of Judge Freeman to Griffin v. Jackson Light Co. (Mich.) 92 Am. St. Rep. 551, and there are many other authorities to the same effect.

2. I think, too, that the question whether the use made of the scaffold by the plaintiff, as a means of access to his place of work on the roof, was a reasonably necessary use, is concluded in favor of the plaintiff by the decision of the court below.

On this question the evidence is very conflicting.

The evidence for the defendants, it is true, is to the effect that such use was not reasonably necessary but merely a convenient use. That evidence is in substance that there was only one way of ascent to the roof provided by the defendants for the carpenters employed by them, and also for the plumbers employed by the subcontractors, and that was (in so far as such way is material in this case) through one of the two dormer windows on the west side of the roof over the south gable of the building (such window being the window nearest the valley of the roof, the exit from this window being some distance to the north of the vent or stack pipe on which the plaintiff was about to place a collar and lower down on the roof than such pipe), thence northward and away from such vent pipe to and up the valley of the roof, on a 2x12 timber with cleats on it, to the comb or ridge of the roof (a still greater distance away from the vent pipe), thence back, southward, on the comb or ridge of the roof until a point was reached immediately above the vent pipe, thence down the steep roof to the vent pipe—a much longer and more difficult route to travel on the roof than the route by way of the scaffold where the plaintiff was traveling when the accident occurred, and one which, it is apparent from the plan of the building in evidence, was a more dangerous route to travel and would have caused a considerable loss of time for the plaintiff to traverse, as compared with the route which he in fact took, namely, through a window on the east side of the south gable of the building on the scaffold standing there, which according to the evidence for plaintiff was on a level above the sills of the windows in such gable, to wit, above half-way up on or about the center of such windows, thence along the scaffold westwardly to the cornice on the western edge of the roof over the gable, thence, but a step, over the cornice on to a board that extended along the roof below but within reach of the vent, or stack pipe, without having to climb up or down, or climb or slide down on the steep roof.

The evidence in the record does not definitely locate the dormer windows or the vent pipe aforesaid on the roof, but sufficiently so to indicate approximately the respective routes on the roof aforesaid, the former route being indicated by dotted lines ( . . . ) and the latter route by dash lines ( - - - ) on the following sketch:

It is true there was testimony for the defendants to the effect that the roof was not steep—that a wheelbarrow could be rolled about on it. But the testimony for the plaintiff was to the contrary; and the plan of the roof in evidence refutes this contention of the defendants, as will appear from the following tracing from the elevation of such roof as shown from the front of the south gable (on which the location of the scaffold and route of the plaintiff aforesaid are also indicated by the solid and dash lines):

An important question of fact in the case was whether the scaffold was on a level with the bottom sills of the dormer windows in the roof or higher up. This involved the question of whether if the plaintiff had gone through the dormer window, A, shown on the above sketch, he would have reached the roof on the same level as by the scaffold route, the testimony for the defendant being that the scaffold was on the same level as the sills of the south gable and the sills of the dormer windows. But the testimony for the plaintiff was in direct conflict with that for the defendants on that point, and was very positive and definite to the effect that the scaffold level was about halfway up on the south gable windows and that the level thereof when projected around on the roof was the same elevation above the sills of the dormer windows aforesaid.

And just here is the turning point in the case, as I see it, on the question of whether the route or way taken by the plaintiff was a reasonably necessary route to his place of work, namely, the question whether the scaffold was or was not on the same level with the dormer window sills; for, if so, as contended by the defendants, the plaintiff by going through the dormer window, A, would have been, when emerging from that window and as he stood on its sill, at its south corner, within three or four feet from a point directly underneath the vent pipe, and on the same level as he was when he stood on the scaffold at the cornice aforesaid, and he could have thus stepped to the board aforesaid on the roof leading to the vent pipe and thence reached such pipe as readily as he could have done so by using the scaffold route. But the testimony being in conflict, as aforesaid, on this point, this question of fact is concluded against the defendants by the finding of the court below; so that the fact must be regarded by us as being that by going through the window, A, the plaintiff would not have been within reach of the vent pipe or of the board on the roof beneath it, but would have had to climb the steep roof from the window sill to a point within reach of the vent pipe, and the plaintiff expressly testified on this subject as follows:

" * * * When you got out there, the climbing of this steep part of the roof, * * * you couldn't make it up there." (Record, p. 30.)

And, indeed, the testimony for the defendants is not that the route through the dormer window, A, was that provided for the plaintiff, but the route through the dormer window, B, as shown on the sketch above which, as aforesaid, is a far more circuitous, a farther and more difficult and dangerous route on the roof than that by the scaffold, the latter requiring, as the plaintiff testified, only one step on the roof after reaching it from the scaffold ("just a step on the roof," page 30, Record), and that step being on the board aforesaid, which ran "across there from the Mansard" (page 36, Record), by which he would have attained a point directly underneath his place of work and within reach of it by standing there on such board.

And, as tending to weaken the testimony for the defendant to the effect that the dormer window, B, route was provided by them as the route or way to the roof for all workmen on the building, it was shown by the testimony for the plaintiff that the plumbers did not use that way in putting the collars on the vent or stack pipes, on the roof of the north gable (which preceded the work about which the plaintiff was engaged when the accident occurred), but used for that work a scaffold there erected. And further: One of the carpenters who had worked on the erection of the building, a witness for the defendants, disclosed in his testimony on cross-examination that the scaffold which fell with the plaintiff had been theretofore frequently used by the carpenters, who were employes of the defendants, in descending from the roof. This witness testified that he himself had made such use of this scaffold "many a time." If so used for descending from the roof, no good reason is perceived why the same use of it should not have been made as a reasonably necessary use (and doubtless was made of it), for ascending to the roof by all workmen on the building being at or near that end of the building and having occasion in the progress of their work to go upon the roof. And it would seem that the most ordinary forethought and prevision of the defendants would have led them to anticipate this. Their consequent duty seems to me to have been plain, namely, to have exercised reasonable care that the scaffold in question should have been so constructed as to have been reasonably safe for such use.

3. The testimony of the plaintiff is very explicit on the point as to what the defect was in the construction of the scaffold which caused it to fall with the plaintiff. That was to the effect that it was not braced at all underneath the end of it which fell, and that such bracing was reasonably necessary to support the scaffold for the use of it aforesaid by the plaintiff and other workmen as a means of ascent to the roof.

Such being the case as shown by the record, I feel that there was no error in the action of the trial judge in finding for the plaintiff, and I am unwilling to disturb his decision.

(126 Va. 729)

PICKARD v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS §6(1)—PRACTICING WITHOUT CERTIFICATE.

One who announced that he was ready to examine human beings physically, to diagnose their ailments, and furnish, for compensation, a remedy which would relieve the same, and did engage in the business of examining persons, diagnosing their ailments and furnishing medicine which he claimed would relieve them, violated the statute prohibiting the practice of medicine without obtaining a certificate, although such person claimed that he did not charge for the diagnosing, but only for the medicine, and that the diagnosing was for the purpose of advertising his medicine.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §1172(1)—HARMLESS ERROR IN INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the appellate court can see from the entire record that no other verdict could rightly have been found under correct instructions, or that the accused could not have been prejudiced by erroneous rulings of the trial court, it will not reverse the judgment and set aside the verdict.

Error to Corporation Court of Roanoke.

One Pickard was convicted for practicing medicine without having obtained a certificate from the State Board of Medical Examiners, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Willis, Adams & Penn and A. B. Coleman, all of Roanoke, for plaintiff in error.

Jno. B. Saunders, Atty. Gen., J. D. Hank, Jr., Asst. Atty. Gen., and F. B. Richardson, of Richmond, for the Commonwealth.

WHITTLE, P. This was a prosecution against the plaintiff in error, a colored man, residing in the city of Roanoke, for practicing medicine without having obtained a certificate from the state board of medical examiners. He was convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of $250, and to confinement in jail for three months.

Accused for a number of years had been engaged in the business of selling, through the agency of a drug store, certain proprietary medicines of his own manufacture. He maintained an office in the city, where his patrons would resort to consult him, and he would advise them which of his remedies, if any, was suited to their case, and direct them to the drug store where it could be bought. Subsequently he had his business incorporated, and sold his medicines direct to the trade without the intervention of a druggist. He describes his general course of business substantially as follows: When a customer would call for a particular medicine, he would sell the remedy wanted, while others would describe their symptoms, and he would prescribe which of his medicines would suit the case.

In such instance he stated that he made no charge for advice and only received the price of the medicine.

A witness for the commonwealth testified that her son, five years of age, was ill, and she took him to the office of the accused for medical advice and treatment; that he placed the child on a table and felt his pulse and examined his tongue for a few minutes, and said: "Well, I tell you this child has the kidney trouble, and has it right bad, and if I didn't attend to it right away it would go into meningitis or something bad." Witness then became alarmed, and asked: "Doctor, can you cure the child?" To which inquiry he replied: "I can; with 10 or 15 days' treatment I think it will be all right." He also told her that he thought the case would "go into something bad," if he did not attend to it. Witness then requested him to prepare the right medicine for the child; but he said it would take him a long time, and told her to come back the next day. She returned accordingly and paid him $2 for the medicine. She had heard that he could tell what was the matter with the child as soon as he saw it, and went to his office to consult him as a physician. He did not tell her the name of the remedy, but said he would prepare a medicine that would be suitable treatment. After giving the medicine the child grew worse, and she called the accused to the phone and told him of the child's condition. He advised her to give him one or two table-spoonsful of Syrup of Figs until it acted, and then give him his medicine again. The accused, in essentials corroborated the testimony of the witness. He admitted that he diagnosed the case and prescribed for the patient, and compounded and supplied the remedy for compensation. He moreover acknowledged that he had done and was then doing the same thing for numerous other patients; that he claimed and announced to the public generally his ability to diagnose diseases and compound and furnish remedies for their cure. Yet he qualified his statement by alleging that he did these things, not as a doctor, but to advertise his medicine, and charged for the medicine, and not for examinations and advice. He confessed that he had never been examined by the board of medical examiners, and held no certificate from them, and had no right to practice medicine in the state.

The only instruction requested by the Commonwealth, and granted, was that—"If the defendant * * * within twelve months prior to July 30, 1917, in the city of Roanoke, announced in any way to the public that he was ready to examine human beings physically, to diagnose their ailments, and furnish for compensation a remedy which would relieve the same, or did within said period engage in the business of examining human beings physically, diagnosing their ailments and furnishing medicine which he claimed would relieve them, and receive pay for the same, then he is guilty as charged, and the jury should so find, fixing his punishment at a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500, and in addition thereto may impose * * * confinement in jail for not more than six months."

This instruction is practically in the language of the statute, and the verdict of the jury is fully sustained by the evidence.

[1] The law does not recognize the mental reservations of the accused, by which he bunglingly attempted to escape the consequences of his flagrant and habitual violations of the law. The object of the statute is to protect the public against just such impostors.

[2] A number of exceptions were taken by the accused during the progress of the trial to rulings of the court, chiefly in denying prayers for instructions in his behalf; but they do not call for special notice, since the case plainly comes within the settled rule that, where the appellate court can see from the entire record that no other verdict could rightly have been found under correct instructions, or that the accused could not have been prejudiced by the rulings of the trial court, it will not reverse the judgment and set aside the verdict. Burks' Pl. & Pr. § 267, and cases cited in Standard Red Cedar Chest Co. v. Monroe, 125 Va. —, 99 S. E. 589.

We find no reversible error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

BURKS, J., absent.

(126 Va. 15)

JOHNSON v. JOHNSON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. DIVORCE $\S$ 133(1)—EVIDENCE OF DESERTION.

In a husband's suit for divorce, evidence held to prove the charge of desertion against the wife.

2. DIVORCE $\S$ 129(16)—EVIDENCE OF ADULTERY.

In a husband's suit for divorce, evidence held insufficient to prove the charge of adultery against the wife.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Russell County.

Suit for divorce by Aaron S. Johnson against his wife. From an adverse decree, the wife appeals; both parties assigning error. Affirmed.

W. W. Bird and A. G. Lively, both of Lebanon, G. B. Johnson, of Honaker, and C. C. Burns, of Lebanon, for appellant.

Finney & Wilson, of Lebanon, for appellee.

PRENTIS, J. Aaron S. Johnson instituted his suit for divorce, alleging that his wife had willfully abandoned him, and that she had been guilty of adultery. Her answer denies all of the allegations of the bill, charges him with having willfully abandoned her, and with cruelty, and prays that her answer may be treated as a cross-bill, and for a divorce from bed and board.

The decree of the trial court acquits the wife of the charges of adultery, but is in favor of the husband for divorce from bed and board upon the ground of desertion. From this decree she appealed, and both parties assign error.

There is much testimony, disclosing conflict and disagreement which could have been avoided if each had been generous to the faults of the other, and which has resulted disastrously for both. The wife in her answer and evidence charges her husband with lack of appreciation, coldness, oppression, penuriousness, cruelty for many years, and recently with accusing her of having committed adultery culminating in his desertion. She produces no witness, however, in support of these more serious charges, and her case depends upon her own testimony. The only witnesses she introduces are two, by whom she undertakes to discredit the testimony of Noah Maxfield by showing that because of the construction of the house he could not have seen her or P. H. Smith, the man with whom she was charged with having committed adultery, as they came down a stairway from the upper floor of the store building. The evidence is insufficient for the purpose for which it was introduced, because its whole basis is that the witness Maxfield stood immovably fixed in a particular place in the store, whereas his evidence cannot fairly be construed. Then she introduced one Fielding Combs, who testified in substance that after the suit was instituted the husband told him that he could not prove anything against his wife—evidently alluding to the charge of adultery—and then Peter R. Smith, who sold her his interest in the business, for the purpose of showing that the husband did not participate in the negotiations, whereas he testified that he did so participate; and Bertha Nash, who testified to grossly offensive remarks made by the husband to his wife in the presence of his children after the suit was instituted, and that after the separation he said that he did not intend to return to her. This, with the exception of the testimony of P. H. Smith and her own, constitutes the entire evidence upon which she relies. On the other hand, the husband introduces 24 of his friends and neighbors, who were also her neighbors, for she had been born and reared in the same community and had lived her entire married life there. These witnesses testify as to various phases of the controversy, and their testimony all tends to sustain the husband's allegations. The wife has a father, mother, sister, and brother, and although it appears from the husband's testimony that he had discussed their troubles with her relatives, that her mother and brother had talked to her on the subject, that her father sent a friend to her to talk to her, and from her testimony that her father has himself cautioned her to be careful in her conduct, none of these relatives are introduced to support her upon any point.

These incidents precede the controversy: The wife purchased a one-half interest in a stock of goods in a country store, within about one-half mile of her home. The other half was retained by the vendor, who was the father of P. H. Smith. Young Smith was to stay in the store, in his father's interest, and as a salesman. He was also to board with her, and she was to have general supervision of and to give such time to the business as seemed to her necessary. The vendor, however, required security, and hence her husband indorsed her notes for the unpaid purchase money. Shortly after that her husband voluntarily gave her $300 to put in the business, which prospered, and she gave more and more time to it. Certain occurrences aroused the husband's jealousy of Smith. The first one was when he unexpectedly returned to the store, and he thought that she appeared to be unaccountably excited and confused. That night he called her attention to the circumstances and asked her for an explanation. She gave a perfectly natural explanation of the situation, and requested him to go to the store to examine Smith and to make certain other investigations for confirmation of her statement. This he declined to do, but apparently in perfect good faith accepted her statements as true. From time to time, as he thought, and as others also thought, she indicated a greater pleasure in Smith's society than in his own, and he proposed to buy the other half interest in the store for himself. This proposition she refused to entertain, the reason alleged being that she knew that he was anxious to get possession of her interest and to control the business. Afterwards, however, with her husband's assistance, he indorsing her notes and giving the security which the vendor required, she bought this other half interest and became the sole owner of the store. It is apparent that in this the husband was trying to break up her growing intimacy with Smith which so disturbed him. His disquietude and disapproval were justified because, while the evidence fails to sustain his charge of adultery, it is perfectly manifest that many in the neighborhood suspected that there were improper relations between Smith and his wife. They were frequently alone at the store, sometimes after dark. As time went on, she spent more and more time there with him and less at the home which her husband had provided for her. So widespread was this suspicion and so common the talk, that two little boys testified that because of what they had heard they cautiously entered the store on one occasion for the purpose of spying on them. Her father sent a friend of the family to talk to him on the subject, and this friend testifies that, when he attempted to do so, the husband exhibited great distress and refused to discuss the matter. Notwithstanding this situation so likely to arouse suspicion and to excite gossip, and in spite of her husband's jealousy of which she knew, she kept Smith in the store three months after she became sole owner. After he left there she conducted a correspondence with him—not an improper correspondence, as is apparent from the letters introduced, which relate only to the unfinished business of the old firm. During this correspondence, however, no one but she and Smith knew the subject thereof. He came to see her two or three times thereafter, and he also from time to time ordered articles of clothing from her.

Smith's reputation in the community had suffered because a young unmarried woman had accused him of being the father of her child, and there is evidence tending to show that Mrs. Johnson's attitude towards him was due to her benevolent wish to practice what she professed and to prove to those whom she thought too censorious that, "While a man may be down, he is never out." She testified that until after Smith left the immediate neighborhood she had never heard of this gossip which reflected upon her, but, if she had not, her husband and her neighbors had, and she had been told a year before that time by her husband of his dissatisfaction. She certainly knew of this neighborhood gossip after Smith left, and yet she continued her intercourse with him in such a way as to excite further comment.

Her husband testified that she became colder to him as her apparent fondness for Smith increased, and that she finally denied him access to her bed and his marital rights in the spring of 1915. The evidence shows that in the following July, two nights before Smith left their home, the husband commenced sleeping at his mother's, which is within half a mile of their residence and within 100 yards of the store, though he continued to take some of his meals at his home to cultivate his farm, and to see his children. On the two nights before Smith left, he stayed at his home until all had retired. He continued to sleep at his mother's until some time in December, when he returned to his home to sleep. He was then again denied access to his wife's bed, and sent to a separate room upstairs, and she was at that time preparing to move with their three children to the store. They quarreled and differed over this, but she went against his will, claiming that she could not attend to the store business during the winter months and at the same time properly look after her little children unless she did make this move. It is substantially proved by three or four witnesses who helped her to move that one of her motives, as expressed by her, was to rid herself of her husband. He followed her to the store, evidently persisting in his desire for a reconciliation. Her account of this is that she agreed to such reconciliation only upon condition that he would stop charging her with adultery with Smith, and that as he continued to make that charge she refused to become reconciled. At any rate, she still refused to renew her marital relations with him, required him to stay in a separate room, and after three months he moved to his mother's house about 100 yards away.

[1] Whatever the husband's shortcomings, it is abundantly shown that he always desired and repeatedly sought reconciliation. He gave her money and he indorsed her notes, whereby she was enabled to acquire and to prosecute her business during the very period in which she is charging him with the grossest sort of cruelty, penuriousness, and indifference to her rights and feelings. She complains of his failure to supply herself and his children with clothing, and yet, upon the few occasions when he sought to do so, his efforts are ridiculed by her. That she suffered for nothing in this respect is perfectly apparent from the fact that he had accounts with the local merchants from whom she could obtain goods on his credit, and that she had saved some money before her marriage which she still has; that she always had her separate purse; and that in her domestic economies, especially in the raising of chickens, she had $300 of her own in bank at the time she bought an interest in the store; and he says that she told him that she preferred to buy her clothes and the children's. That he supplied her and their children with a home furnished properly, judged by the neighborhood standard, and with food, and that until Smith appeared upon the scene, so far as their intimate friends could perceive, they lived as happily as married people usually do, is apparent from the evidence. It is also manifest that upon the question as to which of the two has willfully abandoned or deserted the other, their friends and neighbors, as indicated by their evidence, and her own relations, as shown by their silence, have adjudged her to be most at fault. The trial judge could not have found otherwise from the testimony.

[2] Upon the charge of adultery her husband has failed. While if her heart had rested upon him, she could not have been as indifferent to his happiness as is shown in this record, the evidence is insufficient to prove this charge, and the trial court rightly acquitted her thereof.

The case has peculiar features, in that, notwithstanding all the evidence of desertion, the parties now live within a stone's throw of each other. Their duty to their children and to society requires that they should ignore the antipathies engendered by this litigation and become reconciled.

Affirmed.

KELLY, J., absent.

(126 Va. 10)

HUNDLEY v. REYNOLDS et al.(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Sept. 17, 1919.)1. FRAUD  $\S$ 58(1) — EVIDENCE; CLEAR AND CONVINCING.

Fraud must be shown by clear and convincing proof, and grave suspicion is not enough to sustain finding of fraud.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER  $\S$ 341(3)—FRAUD; NOT SHOWN BY EVIDENCE.

In an action by purchasers for compensation for deficiency in acreage, evidence held insufficient to show fraud on the part of defendant.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Floyd County.

Bill by one Reynolds and others against one Hundley. Decree for complainants, and respondent appeals. Reversed.

Jno. P. Lee, of Rocky Mount, and Samuel A. Anderson, of Richmond, for appellant.

Sowder & Howard, of Floyd, for appellees.

BURKS, J. The appellees filed their bill in equity against the appellant, alleging that they had purchased of the appellant a tract of land represented as containing 120 acres, but which in fact contained only 100 acres, and praying compensation for the deficiency at the rate paid per acre, with interest from the date of purchase. The bill alleges that the sale was by the acre, and that the discrepancy occurred by reason of fraud or mistake on the part of the appellant. The appellant answered, denying that he had ever represented the tract as containing 120 acres, and, on the contrary, alleging that the land was conveyed by metes and bounds, that he had sold it to the appellees as 100 acres at $16.50 per acre, that they well knew the quantity of land purchased by them and the price to be paid therefor, and that the mistake in the deed to the appellees, in stating that the boundary contained 120 acres, was the mistake of the scrivener of the deed, but did them no harm, as they well knew the quantity of land in the boundary, and that it had been sold to them by the appellant as and for 100 acres. Respondent prayed that, if need be, his answer be treated as a cross-bill, and his deed to appellees be reformed, so as to declare that the boundary conveyed contained only 100 acres. The appellees answered the cross-bill, denying its material allegations. Depositions were taken, and, upon the hearing, a decree was rendered, granting the complainants (the appellees here) the relief prayed. From that decree this appeal was taken.

[1] It is conceded by the parties that this is a proper case for equity jurisdiction, and the controversy is entirely upon the merits as developed by the evidence. If not conceded, it is clearly established by the evidence that the appellant at all times well knew that the tract of land contained only 100 acres, so that the case is not one of mutual mistake. The case resolves itself, therefore, into the question of whether or not the appellant perpetrated a fraud on the appellees. The evidence is of the most conflicting and contradictory nature, composed very largely of oral testimony given by ignorant and illiterate witnesses of verbal admissions made by the respective parties 5 or 6 years before they testified, and of contradictions of one witness by another as to statements made by them. It could serve no useful purpose to review the testimony in detail. It must suffice to say that even grave suspicion is not enough to sustain a charge of fraud, and if fraud has been committed in the case in judgment, it has not been shown by that clear and convincing proof necessary to establish it.

[2] The appellant had acquired this tract of land by exchange with H. L. Keaton, and in the deed of exchange the land conveyed to Keaton is described as "containing some 120 acres, more or less," and the land received by Hundley is described as two "tracts or parcels of land adjoining each other and containing in the aggregate 100 acres," and the metes and bounds are given. By agreement of all parties, J. W. Walton, a justice of the peace of the neighborhood, was engaged to write the deed from the appellant to the appellees, and, in order to enable him to describe the land to be conveyed, he was furnished with the deed of exchange aforesaid, which not only gave the metes and bounds, but also stated the quantity of land in the boundary. He copied the metes and bounds accurately, but mistated the quantity. No explanation is given by any witness of how this mistake was made, but it is suggested that the eye of the scrivener fell on the figures "120" in the deed of exchange, and that he inserted them, without reading the deed carefully, supposing that they represented the quantity in the tract to be conveyed. This suggestion seems probable, as he does not appear to have been a very careful draftsman. He failed to retain a lien in the deed for the deferred payments of purchase money, as had been agreed upon by the parties, and mentioned the retention of the lien in one of the bonds for the deferred payments, and failed to mention it in the other two. He states in his testimony that he does not recollect that he had any instructions as to how to write the deed. When the deed was delivered by the appellant to one of the grantees, he also delivered to him the deed under which appellant derived his title, which plainly stated that the tract contained 100 acres. None of the witnesses who were present at the time the deed was prepared say that the appellant said that the tract contained 120 acres, or that he gave any direction to the scrivener to so state in the deed. T. H. Reynolds, one of the grantees, was present, but makes no such claim. Appellant and his wife and Peter Claytor, who were present, state that appellant instructed the scrivener to make the deed like the old deed under which appellant claimed title. Appellees paid taxes on the land for 6 or 7 years thereafter, assessed as on 100 acres, before this suit was brought. There was also much parol testimony tending to sustain his claim. On the other hand, there was much parol testimony tending strongly to sustain the contention of the appellees that the tract was represented as containing 120 acres, and explaining why the tax tickets did not furnish evidence that the tract contained only 100 acres. In addition to this, the deed stated that there were 120 acres, and 17 months after the deed was made the appellees, at the instance of the appellant, executed an instrument under seal by which they gave the appellant a vendor's lien for the balance of his purchase money, in which the land is again described as containing 120 acres, which deed the appellant admits was read to him. But appellant explains this by saying that he only felt concerned about the security for his purchase money, and hence paid no attention to the reading of other parts of the deed. As already stated, the parol testimony is of such character as to be entitled to but little, if any, weight; but, whether we weigh it or not, the evidence, taken as a whole, is not sufficient to establish fraud on the part of the appellant, and for that reason the decree of the circuit court must be reversed.

Reversed.

(126 Va. 49)

NICHOLS et al. v. NICHOLS et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

WILLS  $\Leftrightarrow$  635—OPENING VESTED INTEREST TO LET IN AFTER-BORN CHILDREN.

Where testatrix gave a fund to trustees for the period of 10 years for the use of her grandchildren, share and share alike, and any after-born grandchildren to come into distribution, with directions that at the expiration of the 10 years the trust estate should be divided between grandchildren then living, the issue of any dead to take the share of the parents, the principal of the trust fund vested beneficially on the testatrix's death in the grandchildren then born, subject to open and let in after-born grandchildren, but they were not entitled to share in the income distributed.

Appeal from Corporation Court of Roanoke.

Suit between one Nichols, as trustee, and others, and one Nichols and others, for construction of the will of Mrs. S. E. Nichols, deceased. From the decree, the trustee and others appeal. Reversed.

Hoge & Darnall, of Roanoke, for appellants.
H. M. Fox, of Roanoke, for appellees.

WHITTLE, P. This appeal is from a decree of the corporation court of the city of Roanoke construing the third clause of the will of Mrs. S. E. Nichols, deceased. So much of the clause as is necessary to be stated is as follows:

"All the rest and residue of my estate consisting mainly of bonds, stocks and such investments, I give and bequeath in trust to my said sons, Geo. S. Nichols and J. R. Nichols, * * * to be held, controlled, invested and reinvested from time to time as may be necessary or judicious and proper, for the period of ten years, for the use and benefit of my respective grandchildren, share and share alike, and any after-born grandchild or grandchildren to come into the distribution. The net income of said trust fund during said period of ten years shall be paid to my respective grandchildren. * * * At the expiration of said ten years then the principal of said trust estate shall be divided between my grandchildren then living, and if any shall have married and died leaving issue, said issue is to take the parent's share. * * * My intention is that my grandchildren, including those after-born, shall share in the income of my estate during life to the expiration of said ten years after my death, but that upon dying before that period, unmarried and without lawful issue, then the share or shares of any one or more dying shall remain a part of said trust estate for division among those living and entitled as hereinbefore directed.

"And I give authority to my said trustees, or the one acting, if they or he shall deem it judicious, to pay to any adult grandchild before the expiration of said ten years, the then share of such grandchild in the principal fund, provided that as a condition to such payment of any grandchild, he or she shall execute a proper bond with good surety to account for and pay back of the amount received, its pro rata share of what may thereafter come due to any after-born grandchild. And upon the expiration of said ten years and at the regular division of said principal trust fund, like bond and surety for such refunding shall be required from or on behalf of the respective legatees or distributees unless my said trustees, or the one acting, shall deem it wholly unnecessary."

The ten years period referred to in the third clause of testatrix's will expired on February 10, 1917, since which date another grandchild of testatrix, Ralph St. George Nichols, has been born. The principal of the trust fund is still undistributed, and the sole question for our determination is whether under the terms of the third clause of the will this after-born grandchild is entitled to share in the trust fund.

This appeal is from a decree of the trial court resolving that question adversely to the after-born grandchild.

Read in its entirety, we find no ambiguity or obscurity in the third clause of the will. There seems no escape from the conclusion that the objects of testatrix's bounty with respect to the trust fund were her grandchildren, both born and after-born, as a class. To hold otherwise we should be forced to ignore the repeated declarations of testatrix that any after-born grandchild or grandchildren were "to come into the distribution" with those in esse, "share and share alike"; and the provision authorizing the trustee to pay to any adult grandchild, before the expiration of the ten-year period, his or her share of the principal trust fund, upon the execution of "bond with good surety to account for and pay back of the amount received its pro rata share of what may thereafter come due to any after-born grandchild"; and the provision as to refunding bonds upon the regular division of the principal trust fund after the expiration of the ten years period. The established rule is that, even where the testator's intention is ambiguous or obscure, that construction should be adopted that will dispose of the property in a just, natural, and reasonable manner, such as will bring about an equal distribution among the beneficiaries when that is the manifest purpose. And a fortiori must that principle obtain where the intention is unambiguous and clear.

In Woodruff v. Pleasants, 81 Va. 37, testator gave certain property in trust to his grandchildren by three of his sons, "now born or hereafter born, to be divided equally between them, my sons acting as trustees, each for his own family, * * * and dividing out to each child, as he or she may come of age or marry, his due share of said estate. * * * Held: * * * The property vested beneficially, on testator's death, in the grandchildren then born, subject to open and let in after-born grandchildren." See, also, Buford v. North Roanoke Land & Imp. Co., 90 Va. 418, 18 S. E. 914; Bayly v. Curlette, 117 Va. 253, 259, 84 S. E. 642.

We think this will falls in the class that, where the intention of the testator is clearly expressed and his meaning plain, there is no occasion to resort to rules of construction. The will in such case speaks for itself.

We are furthermore of opinion that the infant appellant, Ralph St. George Nichols, is not entitled to share in the net income of the estate paid out to living grandchildren or their parents or guardians during the ten-year period. The will in terms limits the net income of the trust fund during that period to grandchildren living at that time and not to those who might be born afterwards.

Our conclusion is to reverse the decree of the trial court and remand the case for further proceedings to be had therein not in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion.

Reversed.

LITTON v. WOLIVER.

(126 Va. 32)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. SEDUCTION  $\S$ 16 — DECLARATION; "DEBAUCH."

A declaration alleging that defendant debauched and carnally knew the daughter of plaintiff is an allegation that defendant seduced the woman; the word "debauch" meaning to corrupt with lewdness or to seduce.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Debauch.]

2. SEDUCTION  $\S$ 8, 20—DAMAGES; WOUNDED FEELINGS.

Notwithstanding the provisions of Code 1904,  $\S$  2896, dispensing with the need of proof of actual loss of services in case of an action by a parent for the seduction of a daughter who was a member of his family, the parent cannot recover damages for wounded feelings and affections because of defendant's mere sexual intercourse with the daughter, where there was no actual seduction; this being true, though the loss of services is at common law the basis of the action.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR  $\S$ 1066—PREJUDICIAL ERROR; INSTRUCTIONS IN SEDUCTION CASE.

Where there was evidence by defendant tending to show that, while he had sexual intercourse with plaintiff's daughter, there was no seduction, the giving of an instruction allowing the recovery of damages for wounded feelings and affections, without any proof of actual seduction, was prejudicial error.

Error to Circuit Court, Lee County.

Action by one Litton against one Woliver. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed, and new trial granted.

This is an action by a father, the defendant in error, who was plaintiff in the trial court, against the plaintiff in error, who was defendant in the trial court, to recover $10,000 damages for the alleged seduction by the latter of the daughter of the plaintiff and for certain expenses of nursing, etc., alleged in the declaration. The parties will be hereinafter referred to in accordance with their positions in the court below.

The declaration is in the usual form, alleging seduction at common law, being practically copied from the form given for such a declaration in 1 Barton's Law Pr. pp. 401, 402. There was a trial by jury, and a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $2,500 damages, upon which the judgment was entered which is under review.

There is ample evidence in the record to sustain the verdict of the jury in finding the existence of sexual intercourse of the defendant with the daughter; that it resulted in the birth of a child; that, although the daughter was over 21 years of age, she was still a member of the family of the plaintiff, so that the relation of master and servant existed between the plaintiff and the daughter; and to sustain a verdict of the jury for such actual damages as the plaintiff may have suffered in the premises from loss of the services of the daughter and to reimburse the plaintiff certain incidental expenses alleged in the declaration. But the evidence is conflicting on the question of whether the sexual intercourse was accomplished by means of a promise of marriage, as the testimony for plaintiff tended to show was true, or whether such intercourse took place without seduction—that is to say, without the aid of any promise of marriage or other artifice, but was consented to by the daughter in gratification of her sexual passion merely, as the testimony for the defendant tended to show was the case.

In this state of conflict of the testimony, the trial court, over the objection of the defendant, gave the following instructions:

First for the Plaintiff, No. 1.

"The court instructs the jury if they believe, from a preponderance of the evidence in this case, that the defendant had carnal intercourse with the plaintiff's daughter, Polly Woliver, and at the time of such intercourse the relation of master and servant existed between plaintiff and his said daughter, you will find for the plaintiff, and assess his damages at such amount as you believe he had sustained under the evidence, so that the same does not exceed $10,000.

"And the court instructs the jury that, if they find for the plaintiff in this case, they may, in estimating the injury the plaintiff has sustained, take into consideration the wounded feelings and affections of the plaintiff, the wrongs done to him in his domestic and social relations, the stain and dishonor he sustained, and the grief, affliction, and mental anguish, if any, suffered in consequence of the acts complained of, and give damage accordingly."

Second for Plaintiff, No. 2.

"The court instructs the jury, if they find for the plaintiff in this case, you may, in addition to finding the actual damages sustained by the plaintiff, also find punitive or exemplary damages; that is to say, the jury need not be limited to the mere compensation for the actual damages sustained by the plaintiff, but you may award such further damages as you may think right, in view of all the facts and circumstances proved at the trial, as a punishment to the defendant and as a wholesome and salutary example to others to deter them from offending in like manner, and if you believe from a preponderance of the evidence that said carnal intercourse with the plaintiff's daughter was accomplished by means of a prior promise of marriage, you may take this fact into consideration as an aggravation of such damages, and in fixing such damages the jury may take into consideration the financial worth and ability of the defendant."

J. C. Noel and Pennington & Pennington, all of Pennington Gap, for plaintiff in error.

B. H. Sewell and Davidson & Robnett, all of Jonesville, for defendant in error.

SIMS, J. (after stating the facts as above). The single question we need to pass upon, among those raised by the assignments of error, is the following:

[1] 1. Was the trial court in error in instructing the jury that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, because of mere sexual intercourse of the defendant with his daughter, not accomplished by seduction under the promise of marriage or by other artifice, damages for wounded feelings and affections, etc., and punitive or exemplary damages, as set forth in the instructions above copied, in addition to compensatory damages for loss of the services of the daughter and for the expenditures alleged in the declaration?

This question must be answered in the affirmative. The declaration is in proper form for a declaration alleging seduction at common law. 1 Barton's Law Pr. pp. 401, 402; 4 Robinson's Pr. pp. 625, 626; 2 Greenl. on Ev. (14th Ed.) § 571; Fry v. Leslie, 87 Va. 269, 12 S. E. 671. The allegation in the declaration that the defendant "debauched and carnally knew" the daughter is an allegation, not merely of sexual intercourse, but of such intercourse accomplished by seduction—that is, by aid of enticement through "arts, promises, or deception." State v. Whalen, 98 Iowa, 662, 68 N. W. 554. That is to say, "to debauch" means to seduce and violate a woman. Koenig v. Nott, 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 323, 329. Or, as defined in the Century Dictionary, "debauch" means "to corrupt with lewdness; bring to be guilty of unchastity, deprave, seduce, as to debauch a woman." But the instructions in question fall short of the allegation of the declaration on the subject under consideration. They allow recovery of punitive damages and damages for wounded feelings and affections, etc., as injuries resulting from the mere sexual intercourse with the daughter, taking place without any seduction.

[2] It is true that loss of services is at common law the basis of the action for seduction, and a plaintiff is entitled to maintain such an action and recover for loss of services, and for incidental expenses incurred by him, resulting from the mere act of sexual intercourse of the defendant with the daughter. 35 Cyc. 1304; 25 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) p. 191. The statute in Virginia (section 2896 of the Code), dispensing with the need of proof of actual loss of services has not changed that rule. Lee v. Hodges, 54 Va. (13 Grat.) 726. But, as said in the work last cited (25 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law), at page 218:

"It is, however, well settled that in cases where sexual intercourse has taken place without seduction—that is, without the aid of flattery and artifice—no recovery can be had by the father beyond compensation for the loss of services and reimbursement of incidental expenses."

See, also, to same effect, 35 Cyc. p. 1326.

The only authority cited for the plaintiff which in the holding sustains his contention that other than compensatory damages may be recovered in a case of mere sexual intercourse—that is, of such intercourse not accomplished by seduction—is that of Barbour v. Stephenson (U. S. C. C., Dist. of Ky.) 32 Fed. 66. The report of that case gives only the charge of the trial judge. There is frequent reference in the charge to the case being one of "seduction," to the "person seduced," "the wrongful act of seducing her," "such an injury," etc. The only issue in the case seems to have been over the identity of the person who seduced the daughter, and not over the question of whether the intercourse was accomplished by seduction. It is true, however, that in the course of the charge language is used to the effect that seduction was not necessary to sustain a recovery of damages because of the "wounded feelings" of the plaintiff, but no authority is cited to sustain that proposition, and, as we have seen above, the case is in direct conflict with the holding of all the other authorities on the subject which have been called to our attention; and in our view such case is on this point unsound in principle and we cannot give it our approval.

The case of Lipe v. Eisenlerd, 32 N. Y. 229, cited for plaintiff, was one of seduction so far as the report shows, and what is said in the case as reported assumes it to have been such a case, referring to the "seduction," etc.; and there was no issue in the case involving the question we have under consideration, nor was there any deliverance of the court, even as dictum, on the subject. The same is true of the cases of Lee v. Hodges, 54 Va. (13 Grat.) 726, White v. Campbell, 54 Va. (13 Grat.) 573, Clem v. Holmes, 74 Va. (33 Grat.) 722, 36 Am. Rep. 793, and Fry v. Leslie, 87 Va. 269, 12 S. E. 671, which are cited for the plaintiff.

[3] Since there was testimony for the defendant in the case before us which, if credited by the jury, was sufficient to have shown that he was not guilty of the seduction charged in the declaration all consideration of which evidence was taken from the jury by the instructions in question, the giving of such instructions constitutes reversible error.

Therefore the case must be reversed, and a new trial granted to the defendant, to be had not in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion.

Reversed.

LUFTY v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION $\S$ 110(6)—FOR ATTEMPTED RAPE; FOLLOWING STATUTORY LANGUAGE.

An indictment, alleging that defendant with force and arms upon a female child under the age of 15 feloniously did make an assault, and did feloniously attempt to carnally know and abuse, is sufficient to charge the offense of attempt to rape; conforming substantially and almost literally with Code 1904, § 3680, denouncing the crime of rape, and section 3888, prescribing the punishment for attempted crimes.

2. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 594(1) — CONTINUANCE; ABSENCE OF WITNESS.

In prosecution for an attempt to rape, where defendant, in accordance with Code 1904, § 4016, was tried at the term at which the indictment was found, the denial of a continuance because of the absence of a witness who was too unwell to appear, and who it was stated was familiar with defendant's high character and knew the character of prosecutrix and her mother, held not error; it appearing that the witness' testimony would be only cumulative as to defendant's high character and standing, and it not appearing that the witness, if permitted, would testify that the character of the prosecutrix and her mother was bad.

3. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 765, 834(5)—GOOD CHARACTER; INSTRUCTIONS.

The refusal of requested instruction that the character of the accused when proven is a fact to be considered, and if the jury have any doubt as to the guilt of accused, evidence of his good character should "resolve" that doubt in his favor, was proper; the court correctly substituting an instruction charging that the character of accused is a fact to be considered, and if the jury have any reasonable doubt as to guilt they should acquit, the requested instruction practically taking the case from the jury, by use of the word "resolve."

4. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 829(4)—INSTRUCTIONS; REPETITION.

In a prosecution for attempt to rape, an instruction held not erroneous as failing to ignore the defense, which was not guilty; the instructions given at defendant's instance fully covering his theory.

5. RAPE $\S$ 59(19)—INSTRUCTIONS; IGNORING ELEMENTS OF CRIME.

In prosecution for attempt to rape, an instruction that, if the female was under 15, if defendant attempted by force to have intercourse with her, and, if he did any overt act toward carrying out that purpose, he would be guilty of attempted rape, held not objectionable as failing to recognize the essentials of an attempt to commit a crime, which are the intent and an ineffectual act towards its commission.

Error to Corporation Court of Roanoke.

M. Lufty was convicted of an attempt to commit rape, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Hairston & Hairston, of Roanoke, for plaintiff in error.

Jno. R. Saunders, Atty. Gen., J. D. Hank, Jr., Asst. Atty. Gen., and Morton L. Wallerstein, of Richmond, for the Commonwealth.

KELLY, J. Lufty was indicted for an attempt to commit rape. He was tried and convicted of an assault, and sentenced to six months in prison and the payment of a fine of $200. There are four assignments of error.

[1] 1. The indictment charges that—

The defendant "with force and arms in and upon one Ethel Garrison, she being then and there a female child under the age of 15 years, to wit, of the age of 10 years, feloniously did make an assault, and her, the said Ethel Garrison, then and there did feloniously attempt to carnally know and abuse."

The defendant demurred to the indictment and moved to quash the same "on the grounds that it insufficiently stated the crime of attempted rape." The court overruled the demurrer and motion to quash, and its action in doing so, though excepted to, was plainly right. That the defendant himself fully understood the charge against him is manifest from the very words in which he assailed it. The indictment conforms substantially, and almost literally, with the language of sections 3680 and 3888 of the Code, the former defining the crime of rape, and the latter prescribing punishment for attempted crimes.

In Cunningham v. Commonwealth, 88 Va. 37, 13 S. E. 309, the charge was that—

The accused, "with force and arms, in and upon one Martha Hartsock, violently and feloniously made an assault, and her, the said Martha Hartsock, feloniously did attempt to ravish and carnally know."

The indictment was held good, and the opinion of the court in that case conclusively meets and answers the objection to the indictment in the present case. And we may add, that the word "ravish" appeared in the indictment in the Cunningham Case, and omitted therefrom in the instant case, was not necessary to either.

In Christian's Case, 23 Grat. (64 Va.) 954, cited by counsel for the accused, and conceded in the brief for the commonwealth to have held that the word "ravish" must appear in an indictment for rape, it is true that the opinion delivered by Judge Anderson did announce that proposition, but a majority of the court, while concurring in the reversal of the sentence on other grounds, were of opinion that the indictment was good. Of course, the word "ravish" is not necessary in a case like this where the prosecutrix is under the age of consent.

[2] 2. The defendant was tried at the same term of court at which he was indicted. Upon calling his case he moved for a continuance, because of the absence of a witness, Mrs. Ayers, who had been duly summoned, but was unable to appear because too unwell, as shown by the certificate of her family physician. The motion was overruled, and the defendant excepted. So far as the record shows, the facts which this witness was expected to prove were:

"That she lived in the same block where the offense was alleged to have been committed and knew the defendant well; had been in his store frequently where the crime was said to have been committed, and knew that he was a young man of high character and standing; and that she also knew the character of the girl and her mother, who made this charge."

Section 4016 of the Code provides that the person indicted for felony shall be tried at the same term at which the indictment is found, unless good cause be shown to the contrary. Whether good cause is shown upon a motion for a continuance is a question which rests largely in the discretion of the trial court; and, while the exercise of such discretion is reviewable, the judgment of the trial court in that respect will not be reversed unless plainly erroneous; and to warrant a continuance for the absence of a witness, the evidence of such witness must be more than merely cumulative. C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Newton, 117 Va. 260, 263, 85 S. E. 461, and cases cited.

In this case the defendant introduced ten witnesses, who testified to his good character. Seven of these were mothers living in the immediate vicinity of the alleged crime, who testified that they and their young daughters had frequently made purchases in the defendant's store, and always found him polite and well behaved. No attack was made by the commonwealth upon these witnesses, and no effort to rebut their evidence. The testimony of Mrs. Ayers, therefore, could have been only cumulative as to the defendant's character. As to the character of the girl and her mother, it does not appear whether Mrs. Ayers, if permitted to testify at all on the subject, would have said that their character was bad, nor even that she knew anything about their reputation for truth and veracity. The character of the girl and her mother was not in issue except as witnesses.

We find no error, therefore, in the refusal of the court to continue the case.

[3] 3. The defendant asked for four instructions, all of which were given as asked, except No. 2, which was as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that the character of the accused when proven in a case, whether good or bad, is a fact to be considered by them, and if the jury from the evidence have any doubt as to the guilt of the accused, then the evidence of his good character should resolve that doubt in his favor, and you should acquit him."

The court refused to give this instruction, and substituted the following:

"The court instructs the jury that the character of the accused when proven in a case, whether good or bad, is a fact to be considered by them, and if the jury from the evidence have any reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused, you should acquit him."

The defendant cites Phillips on Instructions, § 995, par. 3, asserting that instruction No. 2, as requested, "is copied almost verbatim" from that authority. The instruction found in the section of Phillips on Instructions here cited is taken from Wadley's Case, 98 Va. 810, 35 S. E. 452, and is in the following language:

"The court instructs the jury that the burden of proof is on the commonwealth to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, every essential ingredient necessary to constitute the offense charged in the indictment, and if the jury from the evidence have any doubt as to the guilt of the accused, then evidence of his good reputation may be allowed to resolve the doubt in his favor."

It is manifest, not only from the language of the instruction last quoted, and cited by the defendant in support of his original instruction No. 2, but also as an independent proposition, that there was no error in the court's refusal of No. 2 as asked, and its action in giving the same as modified in the manner above shown. A "reasonable doubt" always entitles a defendant in a criminal prosecution to an acquittal, and it is proper in a case where there is "any doubt" as to his guilt to tell the jury that evidence of his good reputation "is a fact to be considered by them," or "may be allowed to resolve the doubt in his favor"; but it is not proper to practically take the case from the jury by instructing them that upon such evidence "they should resolve the doubt in his favor and should acquit him." The instruction as given in this case was substantially the same as the one approved in Wadley's Case, and in Phillips on Instructions, cited supra.

[4] 4. The court gave the following instruction on behalf of the commonwealth:

"The court instructs the jury that if you believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that Ethel Garrison is under 15 years of age, and if you further believe from the evidence beyond reasonable doubt that the accused, Moses Lufty, attempted by force to have intercourse with her, and that he did any overt act toward carrying out that purpose, such as taking hold of her, or throwing her down, then he would be guilty of attempted rape as charged in the indictment in this case."

It is claimed that this instruction ignored the defendant's view of the case. His view simply was that he was not guilty, and the instruction expressly recognized that view by imposing upon the commonwealth the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that he did the things which were recited in the instruction, and the doing of which plainly rendered him guilty of attempted rape. The instructions given at his own instance were without conflict with that of the commonwealth, and fully covered and guarded the defendant's theory. The issue was merely that of his guilt or innocence.

[5] The further objection, that the instruction given for the commonwealth failed to recognize the two essential elements of an attempt to commit a crime—(1) the intent, and (2) some ineffectual act done towards its commission—is answered by the language of the instruction itself. Both elements are clearly embodied therein.

5. The last assignment of error is based upon the refusal of the court to set aside the verdict as contrary to the law and the evidence. It is earnestly insisted that the testimony of the prosecutrix, corroborated by that of her 8 year old girl companion, is incredible and unbelievable. It may be conceded that the story as told by them appears improbable. Upon a careful examination of all of the evidence, however, we are of opinion that the case is one in which we cannot interfere with the verdict of the jury.

We find no error in the judgment complained of, and the same must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

BURKS, J., absent.

(126 Va. 54)

NICKELS' ADM'R v. HORSLEY et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⇐35(19)
—REVOCATION OF APPOINTMENT NOT REVIEWABLE UNLESS PLAINLY WRONG.

An appellate court will not review an order granting a motion under Code 1904, § 2687, for the revocation of the appointment of an administrator, except where manifest injustice has been done, or where it is plain that proper case has not been made for the exercise of the discretionary power of removal.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⇐35(2)—
REMOVAL FOR ADVERSE INTEREST.

Where a surviving partner, who was appointed administrator of his deceased copartner, failed to return any inventory within the time required by statute, and it appeared from his conduct that he was hostile and adversely interested to the distributees, his appointment was properly revoked.

3. PARTNERSHIP ↔258(2)—DEATH OF PARTNER; ADMINISTRATOR'S RIGHT OF ACTION AGAINST SURVIVOR.

Unless there be exceptional circumstances, the administrator of a deceased partner is the only one entitled to sue to recover from surviving partners any balance due the estate of the deceased partner.

Error to Circuit Court, Scott County.

Motion by one Horsley and others for the revocation of the appointment of J. C. Parrish, as administrator of J. C. Nickels, deceased. From an order granting the motion, the administrator brings error. Affirmed.

S. H. Bond, of Gate City, and Will H. Nickels, of Bristol, for plaintiff in error.

W. S. Cox, of Gate City, for defendants in error.

PRENTIS, J. This is a motion under section 2687 of the Code for the revocation and annulment of the powers of J. C. Parrish as administrator of J. C. Nickels, deceased, made by the surviving husband and children of Margaret Horsley, who was the daughter of the decedent. The trial court sustained the motion, and the plaintiff in error is here complaining of the order revoking and annulling his appointment.

[1] The rule which controls this court in such cases is stated in Reynolds v. Zink, 27 Gr. (68 Va.) 31. The statute vests the court, under the order of which the fiduciary derives his authority, with the right and duty to revoke and annul his power whenever from any cause it is proper, and this is said:

"There must, of necessity, be vested in that court a very large discretion; and while it is a legal discretion, to be exercised in a proper case, an appellate court ought not to interfere, except in a case where manifest injustice has been done, or where it is plain that a proper case has not been made for the exercise of the powers which the Legislature has specially conferred upon that court, from which the fiduciary derives his authority." Snavely v. Harkrader, 29 Gr. (70 Va.) 128.

[2, 3] It is clear that the discretion of the trial court was properly exercised. The record shows that the administrator was appointed with the concurrence of his wife who is a daughter of the decedent, and of the other distributees who together are entitled to three-fourths of the estate. The other one-fourth belongs to the defendants in error. The administrator is the surviving partner of the decedent. He failed to return any inventory or appraisal within four months of the date of his qualification as required by the statute. The partnership appears to have been engaged in farming and stock-raising. He sold a large portion of the assets as surviving partner, in which he claims a one-half interest after payment of certain debts. The total net balance arising from the sale of these copartnership assets is shown to be $16,471.04. Of this amount the administrator claims one-half, or $8,235.52, by virtue of his interest in the partnership, and he charges against a like amount representing his deceased partner's interests in the partnership assets the sum of $7,006.62, leaving for the estate of his deceased partner, as representing his interest in these assets, only the sum of $1,228.90. This large debit against his deceased partner is nowhere explained. Then there are two sums, one of $385.74 and one of $385.64, paid apparently on different dates to his wife, Nannie E. Parrish, out of the estate of the deceased, whether on account of her distributive share therein, or in settlement of a debt or debts, does not appear, and the accounts as shown by the record need much explanation. On the date of the sale of the partnership property, which he appears to have sold both as administrator and as surviving partner, he had others bidding on his account, and, when his son made a bid, he complained to him and told him that the previous bid was made in his (the administrator's) interest.

Nannie E. Parrish, his wife, and others instituted a partition suit for a division of the real estate belonging to the decedent, in which it is alleged that in some of the land her husband has a one-half interest, although the legal title is in the name of her father, the decedent, and he, the administrator, in his own right filed an answer to that bill, signed by two of counsel who also represented the complainants, admitting the allegation that he owned the interest in the land as stated in the bill, averring that it had been paid for with partnership funds, and that the reason the deed was taken in the name of the deceased instead of in the partnership name was because he was a notary public and desired to save the expense of having another notary take the acknowledgment.

There are other matters shown by the record which make it difficult to separate the individual from the copartnership property, and it is clear that there are conflicting interests between the administrator, claiming in his own right as surviving partner of the decedent, and the heirs at law and distributees claiming under the decedent. In this state of affairs there should be an administrator who should thoroughly investigate the partnership affairs, ascertain just the nature of the partnership and the true state of the accounts, so as to make the proper distribution of the assets as between the surviving partner and the distributees of the estate of the decedent.

In 2 Schouler on Wills, etc. (5th Ed.) § 1104, p. 1016, this is said:

"One may be considered unsuitable for the appointment who holds already some other trust whose interests decidedly conflict with those of the estate in question. Or who is largely indebted to the estate, especially if the amount due has not been ascertained. Or who was partner of the deceased at the time of his death. Or who is hostile to another of the next of kin. Or who is otherwise so adversely interested to heirs, creditors, or other kindred, as to prejudice the due settlement of the estate, if it be placed under his charge. For the administrator should be interested in settling the estate, not unfaithfully or partially, but faithfully, for the welfare of all concerned."

In Cornell v. Gallaher, 16 Cal. 367 (construing a statute), Heward v. Slagle, 52 Ill. 336, and Estate of Brown, 11 Phila. 127, it is determined that a surviving partner of an intestate ought not to be appointed administrator of his deceased partner's estate.

Where there are antagonistic interests, and the probability that the administrator will be called on to conduct litigation between himself individually and himself as administrator of the decedent, it is clear that he should not be appointed; and, if these antagonisms develop after the appointment, he should be removed. It is upon this principle that it has been decided that the surviving partner of an intestate ought not to be appointed his administrator. 11 R. C. L. p. 50. It may well be doubted whether a surviving partner should ever be appointed administrator of his deceased copartner, but certainly in this instance, where sharp conflicts as to their respective rights have arisen, he should be removed, for the surviving partner, while having full control over the partnership assets, is the debtor of his deceased copartner for any balance due to his estate and unless there be exceptional circumstances the administrator only can sue for such balance. Tennant v. Dunlop, 97 Va. 234, 33 S. E. 620; Conrad v. Fuller, 98 Va. 16, 34 S. E. 893; Reager's Adm'r v. Chappelle, 104 Va. 14, 51 S. E. 170.

The order appealed from is plainly right. Affirmed.

(126 Va. 39)

LOYD CORPORATION v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

TAXATION @406—ASSESSMENT OF OMITTED PROPERTY.

Where a corporation disclosed to the commissioner of revenue all of its assets and gave the commissioner information from which he could have determined the value of the assets, held that, though the commissioner undervalued the assets, consisting largely of corporate stocks, and such valuation was not changed for several subsequent years, the corporation, in view of Code 1904, § 491, was entitled to the benefit of section 508, as amended by Acts 1916, c. 491, and was not liable as for omitted taxes because of the undervaluation.

Error to Circuit Court, Washington County.

Motion by the Loyd Corporation against the Commonwealth to be relieved against an assessment for omitted taxes alleged to be erroneous. The court relieved the Corporation of taxes for the year 1910, but refused to relieve it for the other years, and the Corporation brings error, and the Commonwealth assigns cross-errors. Reversed.

F. S. Kirkpatrick, of Lynchburg, and J. Irby Hurt, of Abingdon, for plaintiff in error. Jno. R. Saunders, Atty. Gen., J. D. Hank, Jr., Asst. Atty. Gen., and F. Briggs Richardson, of Richmond, for the Commonwealth.

BURKS, J. The Loyd Corporation made a motion before the circuit court of Washington county to be relieved from an assessment of omitted taxes for the years 1910 to 1914, both inclusive, which it alleged to be erroneous. The court relieved it of the taxes for the year 1910, but refused to relieve it for the other years. To this action of the court the corporation excepted, and its action is brought under review by this writ of error.

The Loyd Corporation was chartered in 1910, with its chief office at Abingdon, in Washington county. Its assets consisted wholly of choses in action which had belonged to the estate of William H. Loyd, deceased, which had been previously listed for taxation in the city of Lynchburg, where Loyd resided at the time of his death. The company had been chartered as a holding company to keep together the estate of the decedent. The assets turned into the company consisted of stock in the banks of Lynchburg, stock of the Western Union Telegraph Company, stocks in sundry coal companies, and bonds and notes of private persons for money loaned them. These coal stocks were very closely held, and it could hardly be said that they had a market value, but in the organization of the company they were listed at prices much in excess of any sales that had been made thereof.

In January, 1910, S. M. Loyd, the president of the company, went to Abingdon, and interviewed the commissioner of the revenue with reference to furnishing him a list of the assets of the company for taxation. This interview lasted over two hours, and Loyd furnished the commissioner a complete itemized list of all the stocks, bonds, and other property liable to taxation, and answered every question put to him by the commissioner. This list, however, did not affix any values to the several stocks listed, though it named the several companies in which stock was held, and correctly stated the number of shares held in each. There is no controversy here over the value placed upon any of the property except the coal stocks. The bonds and notes above mentioned were listed at their face value. The commissioner was informed by Mr. Loyd that Mr. Snead, the commissioner in the city of Lynchburg, could give the proper amounts at which the bank stock should be assessed, and this information was obtained from Mr. Snead, and the bank stock was listed accordingly. Loyd informed the commissioner that he did not know the value of the Western Union stock, but thought it was selling for about 70. He said, however, that the stock was listed on the New York Stock Exchange, and he could ascertain its value from almost any daily paper. The commissioner listed this stock at 50. There is a conflict of testimony as to what took place with reference to the valuation of the coal stocks, but the preponderance of the testimony is that Loyd told the commissioner that Mr. Snead, the commissioner in Lynchburg, had assessed some of these stocks at over $200 per share. The commissioner listed one group of them at $50 per share, another at $75 per share, and two others at $100 per share, and asked Loyd if these values were satisfactory, and he replied that they were. The par value of these stocks was $100 per share, and the actual values of most of them not less than $250 per share. The stock of the Western Union Telegraph Company was worth at least $70 per share, but was listed by the commissioner at $50 per share. Tangible personal property of other persons was listed at about three-fourths of its value. For the years subsequent to 1910 no further conferences were held with the commissioner, but each year the Loyd Corporation furnished the commissioner written lists of the number of shares of stock held by it in these same coal companies, annexing the same values to each that the commissioner had annexed to them in 1910. It does not appear that there was any change in such values during the years mentioned. Subsequently the examiner of records for the district listed these stocks for omitted taxes for the years 1910 to 1914, both inclusive, and in this list he valued the Western Union stock at $71.50 per share, and increased the assessment on 19 shares of coal stock from $50 per share to $75 per share, and 80 shares from $100 a share to $200 a share, and 50 shares from $100 a share to $250 a share, and 100 shares from $75 a share to $250 a share. These were the changes made for the year 1910. In the subsequent years the lot of 100 shares had been listed by the corporation at par. It is not claimed that the valuations of the examiner are excessive.

It is not claimed by the commonwealth that the Loyd Corporation has concealed any of its assets, or that it has failed to furnish a complete itemized list thereof. The entire controversy arises over the valuation of the four groups of coal stocks. The commonwealth contends that it was as much the duty of the corporation to give the value of these stocks as it was to give the names of the companies and the number of shares held in each, and that, having failed to state the fair cash value thereof, the corporation has not made a "full disclosure" of its assets, and hence is not entitled to the benefit of section 508 of the Code, as amended by act of March 22, 1916 (Acts 1916, p. 826). The president of the corporation told the commissioner that he did not know the value of the stocks, as they were not quoted on any market and were closely held, and, as already stated, the preponderance of the testimony is that he told the commissioner that some of them had been assessed by the commissioner in Lynchburg at over $200 a share. We think it also sufficiently appears that the commissioner knew that these stocks formerly belonged to a citizen of Lynchburg, and had been there listed by a commissioner of the revenue who stood very high in the estimation of the taxing officers of the state.

While it is the duty of the citizen to return a list of his personal property and the value thereof, it is made the duty of the commissioner by section 491 of the Code (1904) to call upon him for such list, and if he neglects or refuses to give it, the commissioner is given ample power and authority by that section to obtain the needed information from other sources. The commissioner could readily have gotten the value of the Western Union stock, as he admits, from the newspapers circulating in his home town, and, according to the preponderance of the testimony, he was furnished with information from which he could have readily ascertained the fair value of the coal stocks for the purpose of assessment. He did not consult either. The circuit court exonerated the corporation for the year 1910, but refused exoneration for the other years. If the corporation was entitled to exoneration for 1910, we do not perceive any good reason why it was not also entitled to exoneration for the other years. There was no change in the value of the stock, according to the testimony, between 1910 and 1914, and if it was correctly valued in 1910 it was correctly valued for the other years. In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the officers of the corporation had the right to assume that the commissioner would place the same value on the stock in the subsequent years that he placed on them in 1910, and the valuations submitted by the corporation became the valuations of the commissioner when accepted by him and placed on the tax list. He was not bound by the valuations submitted by the corporation, and if not satisfied with them he should have placed a proper valuation thereon. As said in Union Tanning Co. v. Commonwealth, 123 Va. 610, 96 S. E. 780, commissioners of the revenue "act and are required by statute, indeed, to act upon their own knowledge, or upon any means of information they may have, that is, upon their own opinion based upon such information as they may have; and although it is their duty to receive and they should not arbitrarily disregard the lists of the returns and statements of property owners, they are not bound thereby."

The commonwealth makes no charge of fraud against either the commissioner or the officers of the corporation, but only that these coal stocks were assessed at "less than the law required." At the first interview the president of the corporation had not asked or suggested a low assessment, but only that his company be treated as other citizens. The commissioner was pleased that the corporation had selected Abingdon as its home office, and readily agreed that such treatment should be accorded. All other personal property in the district, except loans of money, was assessed at much less than its actual cash value, and the commissioner, without adequate investigation and inquiry, assessed the stocks at far below their cash value. The president of the corporation naturally acceded to his valuations and said they were acceptable. The taxes at these valuations were regularly paid from year to year, and it only remains to inquire whether, under these circumstances, there has been that "full disclosure" which entitled the corporation to the benefit of the provisions of section 508 of the Code (1904) as amended.

Section 508 of the Code (1904), as amended by the act of 1916 (Acts 1916, p. 826), is as follows:

"If the commissioner of the revenue * * * ascertain that any person, or any real or personal property, or income, or salary, or license tax has not been assessed for taxation for any year by the state, county, district, city or town, or that the same has been assessed at less than the law required, for any year, * * * it shall be the duty of the commissioner of the revenue * * * to list the same, and assess persons, property (real, personal and mixed) and levies at the rate prescribed for that year, adding thereto interest at the rate of six per centum per annum. Provided however. * * *

"7. In the case of omitted taxes whenever the taxpayer has made full disclosure of his taxable property (real estate, tangible or intangible personal property, money and income), and in cases of tangible and intangible personal property, money and income, as enumerated on his returns the items thereof, and there has been an assessment made in good faith by the tax officer, although made under misapprehension of the law, such assessment as to the valuation of such property shall be final; but in cases in which there has not been a full disclosure and enumeration of his tangible and intangible personal property, income and money, whether intentional or otherwise, such assessment shall not be considered final, but in contested cases the burden shall be upon the taxpayer to show that he has made a full disclosure."

The first part of this section down to the proviso is substantially the same as it was before amendment, so far as it affects the question here at issue. But it is manifest that the Legislature intended to make very substantial changes in the law in the interest of the taxpayer. It is a matter of common knowledge that personal property of all kinds had for years been assessed at less than its actual cash value, and it was the purpose of the Legislature to make the question of the values returned by the commissioner final in cases within the purview of proviso 7 above quoted. The substance of that proviso is that in case of omitted taxes, wherever the taxpayer has made a full disclosure of his taxable property, and the items thereof, and there has been assessment in good faith by the tax officer, although made under a misapprehension of law, such assessment as to the valuation of such property shall be final. In the case at bar it is admitted that the corporation did furnish the commissioner a complete list of all of its property "and the items thereof," but it is claimed that the statute is inapplicable because the list did not give the actual cash value of each item. If the list furnished had given the actual cash value of the stocks, there would have been nothing to correct, and to hold that the statute was only applicable to that class of cases would be to render the statute wholly nugatory in that respect. It is true that the first part of the section, which was the old law, does provide that, if the commissioner or examiner of records shall ascertain that any property "has been assessed at less than the law required for any year," it shall be his duty to list the same at the rate prescribed for that year, adding interest at 6 per cent., and there may be cases falling within these terms and not within the terms of proviso 7 (a question not now decided), but if there is conflict between the two, then the proviso must prevail, as the later expression of the legislative intent. We are of the opinion, however, that the Lloyd Corporation made a full disclosure of all of its taxable property, and of the items thereof, for the years 1910 to 1914, both inclusive, within the meaning of the statute, that the assessment thereof was made in good faith, and that therefore the valuation thereof by the commissioner is final, and cannot now be disturbed.

In Union Tanning Company v. Commonwealth, supra, omitted taxes from 1908 to 1915 were assessed, and it appeared that no return of any kind was made for the year 1908, and that for the years 1909 to 1915, inclusive, the returns—

"did not enumerate the items of bark or hides composing its intangible property listed on such returns, but gave only what was listed as the aggregate fair cash values thereof for the respective years. * * * The only information on the subject given by the company to the commissioner of the revenue to whom such returns were made and who made such assessments was 'the amount and value of the bark and hides' aforesaid, read from the books of the company."

It was there said that—

"This evidence is obscure as to whether the number of hides or pounds of bark were read to the commissioners of the revenue from the books of the company, or just what 'amount' or what 'value' was so read. We do not think that such character of proof is sufficient to show that there was 'a full disclosure' of such bark and hides to the commissioners of the revenue."

The facts of that case are radically different from these in the case at bar.

The commonwealth assigns as cross-error the action of the circuit court in exonerating the plaintiff in error from the payment of omitted taxes for the year 1910. For the reason hereinbefore stated, we are of opinion that the circuit court committed no error in this respect, but that it did err in failing to exonerate the corporation also from such taxes for the years 1911 to 1914, inclusive, and that for this error its judgment must be reversed.

Reversed.

(126 Va. 715)

MARTIN et al. v. COMMONWEALTH (two cases).

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. COURTS ⇨97(5) — DECISION OF FEDERAL SUPREME COURT BINDING ON STATE COURT.

Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States upon all questions involving interstate commerce are conclusive upon the state courts.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⇨560—DEGREE OF PROOF.
Suspicion of guilt cannot be substituted for proof.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⇨308 — PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE.

All men will be presumed to be innocent until their guilt has been established beyond a reasonable doubt.

4. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⇨138—TRANSPORTATION OF LIQUORS THROUGH STATE NOT VIOLATION OF PROHIBITION LAW.

Employees on an interstate train passing through the state were passengers, and could not be convicted under the State Prohibition Law by proof that more than one quart of liquor was found in their possession, in the absence of evidence that they intended to dispose of the same while in the state; such employees being protected by the Commerce Clause of the federal Constitution, and the Reed Amendment (U. S. Comp. St. 1918, § 8739a) to the Webb-Kenyon Act March 1, 1913 (U. S. Comp. St. § 8739), not prohibiting the transportation of liquor through a state.

5. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⇨138—TRANSPORTATION THROUGH STATE NOT PROHIBITED.

Acts 1916, c. 146, does not prohibit the transportation of liquor through the state, nor a passenger passing through the state from having liquor in his possession while on the train of an interstate carrier passing through the state.

6. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⇨224—BURDEN OF PROOF; POSSESSION OF LIQUOR.

An employé on a train of an interstate carrier passing through the state did not have the burden, under Acts 1916, c. 146, to prove that he was on an interstate journey through the state; although ardent spirits in excess of one quart were found in his possession, the evidence for the state showing that the liquor was found upon the train itself.

Sims, J., dissenting.

Error to Corporation Court of Roanoke.

Martin and White were convicted for violation of the Prohibition Law, and bring error. Reversed.

Hoge & Darnall and Hairston & Hairston, all of Roanoke, for plaintiffs in error.

Jno. R. Saunders, Atty. Gen., and J. D. Hank, Jr., Asst. Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

PRENTIS, J. The accused were jointly indicted, tried, convicted, and sentenced for violation of the prohibition law (Acts 1916, p. 215). The indictment was comprehensive, as is authorized under the Virginia statute, and charged them with the possession and transportation of intoxicating liquor in violation of the state law.

There is no conflict in the testimony, and the facts shown are that the accused were both employes on a dining car, part of an interstate train, running from New York City to Memphis, Tenn.; that while this train stopped for a few minutes in the city of Roanoke, Va., the police officers boarded the train, arrested the accused while they were in the discharge of their duties upon said dining car, before either had left the train or indicated any purpose to do so; and that they were going through the state of Virginia on that train in the performance of their duties. Upon a search of the car and of certain parts of it to which the accused had access, a quantity of liquor in excess of the amount then allowed by the Virginia statute was found in their possession.

[1] A mere statement of these facts seems sufficient to show, under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, the final arbiter upon all questions involving interstate commerce, that these convictions cannot be sustained.

It is claimed for the commonwealth that while the general rule is that no state law can operate upon the subjects of interstate commerce, various acts of Congress have been adopted which remove the inhibition as to intoxicating liquors transported in interstate commerce, and authorize the enforcement of penalties imposed by state laws for illegal traffic in such liquor.

The first of these statutes, generally spoken of as the Wilson act, was passed following the decision in Lelsy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 10 Sup. Ct. 681, 34 L. Ed. 128, in which the court held that ardent spirits being recognized by the usages of the commercial world as property, and subjects of exchange, barter, and traffic, therefore no state could burden interstate commerce in that commodity, and that, whether prohibited by state law or not, the right of transportation of intoxicating liquors from one state to another, included the right of the consignee to sell such imported liquor in violation of state law in unbroken packages at the place where the transportation ended, and that it was only after the transportation was completed and the liquor was mingled with and became a part of the general property of the state that state regulations with reference thereto could be enforced.

The Wilson Act of August 8, 1890 (26 Stat. L. 313, ch. 728; Comp. Stat. § 8738) subjected intoxicating liquors transported in interstate commerce to the exercise of the police power of the state, just as if it had been produced in such state, and whether introduced therein in original packages or otherwise. This act was construed in Wilkerson v. Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, 11 Sup. Ct. 865, 35 L. Ed. 572, and in Rhodes v. Iowa, 170 U. S. 412, 18 Sup. Ct. 664, 42 L. Ed. 1088. The practical effect of this statute, as construed, was to allow persons to continue to receive intoxicating liquors from other states, notwithstanding the inhibitions of state laws, but prohibited the sale of such liquors, although in the original packages, contrary to such state laws.

Then, in further aid of the prohibition laws of the states, the Webb-Kenyon Act of March 1, 1913, was passed. 37 Stat. L. 699, ch. 90; Comp. St. § 8739. This act prohibits the transportation of intoxicating liquors from one state into any other state, either in original packages or otherwise, in violation of any such law of such state. This statute was reviewed and construed by the Supreme Court of the United States in Adams Express Co. v. Kentucky, 238 U. S. 190, 35 Sup. Ct. 824, 59 L. Ed. 1267, L. R. A. 1916C, 273, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1167, and in James Clark Distilling Co. v. Western Maryland Ry. Co., 242 U. S. 311, 37 Sup. Ct. 180, 61 L. Ed. 326, L. R. A. 1917B, 1218, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 845. Mr. Chief Justice White, in the last-named case, said that this act was intended simply to extend that which was done by the Wilson act—"that is to say its purpose was to prevent the immunity characteristic of all interstate commerce from being used to permit the receipt of liquor through such commerce in states, contrary to their laws, and thus, in effect, afford a means by subterfuge and indirection to set such laws at naught." These acts provide that state laws should operate upon intoxicating liquors introduced into a state in violation of the state law, but it was still no violation of state and federal law to transport such liquors through a state in interstate commerce.

Then what was known as the Reed Amendment (39 Stat. L. 1069, c. 162; Comp. St. 1918, § 8739a) was adopted March 3, 1917, which imposes a penalty for ordering, purchasing or causing the transportation of intoxicating liquors in interstate commerce (except for scientific, sacramental, medicinal or mechanical purposes) into any state or territory which prohibits the manufacture or sale therein of intoxicating liquor, for beverage purposes. This later act has been construed by the Supreme Court of the United States in two recent cases, United States v. Dan Hill, 248 U. S. 420, 39 Sup. Ct. 143, 63 L. Ed. 337, where it is decided that although the laws of the state of West Virginia expressly authorize the transportation and use of a limited quantity of liquor for beverage purposes, the transportation of any quantity of liquor into West Virginia in violation of Reed Amendment is punishable under that act; and in the case of United States v. Gudger, 249 U. S. 373, 39 Sup. Ct. 323, 63 L. Ed. 653, where it is decided that the Reed Amendment, while it prohibits transportation of intoxicating liquor in interstate commerce "into" any state or territory, the laws of which prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, does not prohibit the movement through such a state as a mere incident to the transportation into another state, whether such transportation be by personal carriage or by common carrier. In that case the conceded facts were that the accused was a passenger on a railroad train from Baltimore, Md., to Asheville, N. C., and that while the train was temporarily stopped at the station at Lynchburg, Va. he was arrested, his baggage examined, and it was found that he had in his possession seven quarts or more of whisky; that he had no intention of leaving the train at Lynchburg or any other point in Virginia; and that his sole intention was to carry the liquor with him into the state of North Carolina, to be there used as a beverage. The charge in the indictment that the accused caused to be transported liquor to Lynchburg, in the state of Virginia, had no other foundation than the fact that he was arrested while the train was stopped at the railroad station at Lynchburg, Va., and while he was en route to Asheville, in the state of North Carolina. Upon this state of facts, the Supreme Court of the United States determined that the judgment of the trial court quashing the indictment was clearly right, because of opinion that there is no ground for holding that the prohibition of the statute against transporting liquor in interstate commerce into any state or territory the laws of which state or territory prohibit the manufacture, etc., includes the movement in interstate commerce through such a state to another. This is said by way of conclusion:

"No elucidation of the text is needed to aid cogency to this plain meaning, which would, however, be reinforced by the context if there were need to resort to it, since the context makes clear that the word 'into,' as used in the statute, refers to the state of destination, and not to the means by which that end is reached—the movement through one state as a mere incident of transportation to the state into which it is shipped. The suggestion made in argument that, although the personal carriage of liquor through one state as a means of carrying it beyond into another state violates the statute, it does not necessarily follow that transportation by common carrier through a state for like purpose would be such violation, because of the more facile opportunity in the one case than in the other for violating the law of the state through which the liquor is carried, is without merit. In last analysis it but invites, not a construction of the statute as enacted, but an enactment by construction of a new and different statute."

What the Congress has done then is to withdraw the protection of commerce clause of the Constitution from intoxicating liquors which are transported in violation of the laws of the state into such state. None of these acts, however, contain any suggestion that a state law can operate upon intoxicating liquor as the subject of interstate commerce while being transported through such state. The purpose of the Congress is avowed and apparent, and that is to prevent the citizens of one state, under the cover of interstate commerce, from violating the prohibition laws of another state by the introduction of intoxicating liquors therein. There is no suggestion anywhere, either in these statutes or decisions, that state can lawfully prohibit the transportation of intoxicating liquor through such state. The Legislature of Virginia, in enacting the prohibition law, fully recognized this accepted doctrine, and has never claimed the right to prohibit such transportation through the state. The Virginia act by express language and clear implication prohibits the introduction of the liquor into the state, but does not prohibit its transportation through the state in interstate commerce.

[2-5] Under the facts of this case then, unless suspicion is to be substituted for proof, and the rule that all men are presumed to be innocent until their guilt has been established beyond a reasonable doubt is to be ab-rogated, it is clear that the commonwealth has failed to establish the guilt of the accused. As employes on an interstate train passing through the state, they were passengers, and there is no indication in the evidence of any use or distribution of the liquor in the state of Virginia. It is not contended that the state laws could operate upon liquor in the possession of a common carrier while being transported through the state, and under the facts of this case these defendants are equally protected by the commerce clause of the Constitution. Under the decision in United States v. Gudger, supra, we are of opinion that the question is not an open one, for the state statute prohibiting the introduction of intoxicating liquor into the state in violation of its laws should receive the same construction as the like prohibition in language of similar import contained in the Reed Amendment. At the time this alleged offense was committed, it was not a violation of either federal or state law to transport intoxicating liquor through the state of Virginia in interstate commerce.

[6] It is contended that, inasmuch as ardent spirits in excess of one quart were found in the possession of each of the accused, the burden was upon them to prove that they were on an interstate journey, and Lucchesi v. Commonwealth, 122 Va. 872, 94 S. E. 925, is cited to sustain this contention. A sufficient reply to this is that in the Lucchesi Case the commonwealth proved that the accused had left the train in Richmond, where he resided, and was found in possession of a quantity of liquor in excess of that allowed by law. His defense was that he was on his way to his room, and that he intended to leave Richmond on an early train, and thus to continue his journey to North Carolina. The commonwealth, in that case, having established a prima facie case, it was properly said that the burden was upon the accused to prove his defense. In this case, however, the commonwealth had not proved a prima facie case; indeed, in our view of the evidence, it had proved facts from which but one fair inference could be drawn, and that is that the defendants were upon an interstate journey, carrying the liquor with them and had violated no statute of Virginia.

Other questions are discussed in the briefs, but as they have been decided and sufficiently discussed in previous opinions of this court, we think it unnecessary to prolong this opinion by repeating what has been recently said in Pine & Scott v. Commonwealth, 121 Va. 812, 93 S. E. 652; Pettus v. Commonwealth, 123 Va. 800, 96 S. E. 161; Sickel v. Commonwealth, 124 Va. —, 97 S. E. 783; Burton v. Commonwealth, 122 Va. 847, 94 S. E. 923. Reversed.

SIMS, J. (dissenting). The majority opinion deals with the case as if it were one merely of interstate transportation of liquor. It is upon this point that I am constrained to dissent.

The liquor was found and seized under search warrants regularly issued and executed in accordance with the prohibition act, hereinafter more particularly referred to. And the vital fact proved in the case by the commonwealth is that liquor in excess of the quantity allowed by law to be transported within the state was found in the possession of the accused within the state in a place other than the home of the accused. The liquor consisted of 15 pints of whisky belonging to the accused, Martin, and 3 quarts 2 pints and 1 pint bottle two-thirds full belonging to the accused, White, and was found in the city of Roanoke on the "Memphis Special" train, in the dining car thereof, in places therein occupied by the accused respectively. The first-named liquor was in a grip, upon a pantry shelf, covered by a coat belonging to Martin, who first denied that there was any whisky on the car, but who after such liquor was found admitted that it was his. The other liquor was in a locker occupied by White on a high shelf in the pantry near the top of the car, and White admitted after the liquor was found that this liquor was his. Further, $49 was found upon the person of Martin, all consisting of one dollar bills, except three two dollar bills; and $145 was found on the person of White, consisting of denominations of probably one twenty-dollar bill and of ten, five, and one dollar bills, but mostly one dollar bills.

Section 28 of the prohibition act of the state (Acts 1916, at page 232), so far as material, provides as follows:

"Whenever ardent spirits shall be seized in any room * * * car or other place, searched under the provisions of this act, the finding of such ardent spirits * * * in any such place, shall be prima facie evidence of the unlawful selling, keeping and storing for sale, gift, or use, by the person or persons occupying such premises, * * * and the * * * person in charge of the premises where such ardent spirits are found, * * * shall be tried on the charge of selling, and keeping and storing for sale unlawfully, such ardent spirits, under the indictment and form prescribed in section seven of this act. * * *

Section 65 of the same act, so far as material, provides as follows:

"The possession by any person of any ardent spirits, at any place other than his home, except as provided in this act, * * * shall, in any proceeding or prosecution under this act, be prima facie evidence that such person possesses such distilled liquors * * * for the purpose of sale. * * *

It will be observed that section 28 above quoted goes beyond section 65, also above quoted, in its effect, and makes the finding of the liquor in such a place as it was found in the case in judgment not merely prima facie evidence of the purpose of sale of it, but such evidence of the factum itself of the "unlawful selling, keeping and storing for sale, gift or use by the person or persons occupying such premises" of such ardent spirits.

The indictment in the case in judgment is under section 28 and not section 65 aforesaid, and is in the form prescribed by section 28, and charged the accused with the said offenses mentioned in said section 28.

The verdict of the jury found both of the accused guilty as charged in the indictment.

In view of the facts above mentioned, which were proved by the commonwealth, there can be no doubt that there was ample evidence to sustain the verdict of the jury in finding as they did, in effect, that the accused were guilty of the "unlawful selling, keeping and storing for sale, gift or use" of ardent spirits on said train in the city aforesaid and within the state of Virginia, contrary to the provisions of said statute; even if the accused had testified that they had the liquor with them for the sole purpose of the interstate transportation of it, or had offered or there had been other evidence in the cause tending to rebut the prima facie case to the contrary made against them by the evidence for the commonwealth as aforesaid. As a matter of fact, however, neither of the accused testified in explanation of their possession of the liquor aforesaid; and there was no evidence in the case, or offered, even tending to show that the accused were not guilty of the "unlawful selling, keeping and storing for sale, gift or use" of the liquor as aforesaid, except the sole circumstance that the accused were themselves on an interstate journey. Now manifestly the fact that the accused were themselves on an interstate journey was not in itself conclusive of the fact that the liquor was on such a journey. It may or it may not have been. That was a question of fact for the jury upon all the evidence in the case when such evidence was weighed as prescribed by said statute. It was for the jury to say whether the prima facie case made by the evidence for the commonwealth, as aforesaid, was rebutted by the mere fact that the accused were themselves on an interstate journey under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence. And under the statutory rule applicable to the evidence, as it must be regarded in this court after verdict, it is plain, as it seems to me, that the verdict aforesaid cannot be disturbed by us.

Of course, if there were no provision of statute, such as that aforesaid, giving to the finding of the liquor, as aforesaid, the effect of the prima facie evidence aforesaid, the case would be different. But that statute is a police regulation, and applies to all ardent spirits in excess of the quantity allowed by law to be carried with them by travelers, when seized and found within the state, as in the case in judgment. And the fact that one found in possession of the liquor so seized is himself on an interstate journey is manifestly immaterial, if the liquor itself is not on such a journey. If the liquor is being sold, or kept or stored for sale, gift, or use within the state, as the traveler passes through it, the interstate character of the journey of the traveler cannot be rightly held to exempt him from punishment for violation of the statute of the state prohibiting such sale, keeping, and storing for sale, gift, or use. Hence the statute aforesaid applies the prima facie presumption aforesaid to the finding of the ardent spirits within the state under the circumstances aforesaid, regardless of the nature of the journey of the person or persons in whose possession it may be found; and in such case, under the statute, the liquor is prima facie not on an interstate journey—the case is not prima facie one of interstate transportation of liquor—although the person found in possession of it may himself be an interstate traveler.

And but slight reflection makes it apparent that a different holding, such as that of the majority opinion, must result in nullifying the statute aforesaid to the extent of rendering its provision as to prima facie evidence aforesaid inapplicable to all violators of the law who may adopt the device of doing so as interstate travelers. All that such an one need do is to become an interstate traveler, and he will thereby become exempt from the rule of evidence aforesaid to which all intrastate travelers are amenable; and he may sell, keep, and store for sale, gift, or use ardent spirits as he passes through the state, and be exempt from punishment, unless the commonwealth should chance to be able to produce evidence of an actual unlawful sale, gift, or use thereof. By such construction of the law interstate travelers are put in a class by themselves, exempting them from the operation of a very important and vital provision of the state statute—so vital, indeed, that, as experience has shown, the statute will be rendered practically nugatory as to such travelers. I cannot give my assent to such a construction of the law. I am of opinion that under our system of government interstate travelers are as much subject and amenable to all the police statutes of a state as are intrastate travelers and citizens of the state; and there is no decision of any of our courts, state or federal, to the contrary, of which I am aware, nor can be in accordance with true legal principles.

In the case of United States v. Gudger, 249 U. S. 373, 39 Sup. Ct. 323, 63 L. Ed. 653, cited in the majority opinion as controlling the case in judgment, the fact affirmatively appeared on the trial that that was a case merely of interstate transportation of liquor—a case where the “sole intention” (of the accused) “was to carry the liquor with him” from without, thence, through the state of Virginia, into another state, “to be there used as a beverage.” That was the fact conclusively appearing against the commonwealth in that case. If such had been the fact in the case in judgment, the Gudger Case would have been controlling of it, but not otherwise. And, as we have seen, such fact did not conclusively appear in the case in judgment. It was in issue before the jury, and was found against the accused upon ample evidence to sustain the verdict.

I am therefore of opinion that there was no error in the refusal of the trial court to set aside the verdict, and on this point I am constrained to dissent from the majority opinion.

(126 Va. 141)

WASHINGTON-VIRGINIA RY. CO. v.
DEAHL.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. EVIDENCE §244(15)—ADMISSIONS BY CARRIER'S CLAIM AGENT.

Where a passenger on an electric railway car which collided with a truck claimed that she was injured as the result of the collision, testimony that the claim agent of the railway company who investigated the passenger's claim and the circumstances surrounding the accident told the passenger that the controller was broken, and that was the reason the motorman could not stop the car, is admissible, despite the rule against hearsay; the declaration being within the scope of the claim agent's authority.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR §236(2)—OBJECTIONS IN LOWER COURT; VARIANCE WAIVED.

In an action by a passenger injured when an electric railway car collided with a motor-truck, where the declaration alleged that the company ran its train negligently without having the same under proper control, and without a timely application of the brakes, defendant cannot complain of the admission over objection of evidence that the controller was broken, and that that was the reason the motorman could not stop the car, for the court might readily have required the amendment to the declaration and no continuance was requested on the ground of surprise.

3. EVIDENCE §123(11)—DECLARATIONS AS RES GESTÆ.

In an action by a passenger for injuries received when the electric railway car on which she was riding collided with a motor truck, testimony by other passengers, that immediately after the collision the motorman stated to the driver of the truck that this was the third time the driver had tried to pass in front of the car and that he had gotten him, held admissible as part of the res gestæ.

4. DAMAGES §171—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE OF PLAINTIFF'S POVERTY.

In an action for personal injuries received by a plaintiff hurt when the electric car on which she was riding collided with a motor truck, testimony as to poverty of plaintiff is not admissible for any purpose, and cannot be received even to show her mental suffering due to her alleged physical inability to make a living and her lack of funds.

5. TRIAL  $\S$  79—OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE; WAIVER BY FAILURE TO REPEAT.

Where, in action for injuries to passenger, defendant strenuously objected to admission of testimony as to poverty of plaintiff, defendant did not waive the objection because he permitted plaintiff to allude on cross-examination to her poverty without at the moment objecting to the allusions.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR  $\S$  1053(2)—HARMLESS ERROR; CURE OF ERROR BY INSTRUCTION.

Error in the admission of improper evidence may be cured by a proper instruction to disregard it.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR  $\S$  1053(4)—HARMLESS ERROR; CURE OF ERROR BY INSTRUCTION.

In an action by a passenger for injuries, where testimony as to her poverty was improperly admitted, held, that the error was not cured by an instruction that the jury could not allow the passenger more damages than would compensate her for the injuries actually received, and that if her present condition was due in part to hysteria or previous trouble they should take into consideration the existence of such diseases.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR  $\S$  1050(1)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE PREJUDICIAL ERROR WHERE VERDICT EXCESSIVE.

In a passenger's action for injuries, admission of testimony as to her poverty was prejudicial error, where it was contended that she underwent mental suffering because of her physical inability to earn her living, coupled with her poverty, and defendant attacked the verdict of $5,000 as excessive.

Error to Circuit Court, Alexandria County.

Action by Miss Anna E. Deahl against the Washington-Virginia Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Moore, Keith, McCandlish & Hall and Jno. S. Barbour, all of Fairfax, for plaintiff in error.

Henry I. Quinn, of Washington, D. C., and Leo P. Harlow and J. K. M. Norton, both of Alexandria, for defendant in error.

KELLY, J. An electric railway car, owned and operated by the Washington-Virginia Railway Company collided with a motortruck owned and operated by the Washington Brick & Terra Cotta Company at a point where a private road leading from the latter company's brick plant crosses the tracks of the railway company. Miss Anna E. Deahl was a passenger on the electric car and claimed that as a result of the collision she sustained physical injuries for which she brought an action against both companies. There was a verdict and judgment in her favor against the railway company for the sum of $5,000, and to that judgment this writ of error was awarded.

[1] 1. The plaintiff as a witness in her own behalf was permitted, over the objection of the railway company, to make the following statement:

"After I got home from that accident the claim agent, Mr. Travers, came and he said the controller broke on the car and that was why the motorman could not stop the car."

The chief objection urged against this statement as evidence is that it violates the rule against hearsay. The soundness of this objection depends upon the relationship which the declarant bore to the defendant, and the capacity in which he was acting at the time he made the statement. He was not present when the accident occurred and only knew of the circumstances attending it by information obtained from others. If he was not acting in a representative capacity and within the scope of his agency, then his statement was pure hearsay and not admissible. If, however, the statement related to a matter within the sphere of his authority, and was made in the course of an investigation or negotiation concerning that matter, then, regardless of how he derived his knowledge, he spoke as and for his principal, and his statement was admissible.

It appears that Travers was the claim agent of the defendant company and had called on Miss Deahl to see her in regard to the accident itself and the manner in which she was hurt. The evidence does not show just what his duties were, but the general scope and purpose of a railway claim agent's business are matters of common knowledge. There can be no doubt that he called to see Miss Deahl in connection with an investigation of the accident and a determination of the company's attitude and probable liability as to any claim she might make. It is true that he had nothing to do with the operation of the car, and was not in any way a participant in the occurrence; but the investigation and settlement of the plaintiff's claim against the company for personal injuries necessarily involved the acquisition on his part of accurate information and knowledge as to the cause of the action. Such information and knowledge were peculiarly essential to his branch of the company's business, and his declarations made in regard thereto in the course of his negotiations with the plaintiff fall easily and plainly within the rule permitting proof of declarations made by agents within the realm of their agency, and during the transaction of business in which they are employed. Lynchburg Telephone Co. v. Booker, 103 Va. 594, 604, 50 S. E. 148, and cases cited.

[2] It is further urged that the statement in question ought not to have been admitted because there was no allegation of negligence in the declaration sufficiently broad to embrace a defective condition of the controller. The charge of negligence in the declaration is that—

The company "did not use due and proper care that the plaintiff should be safely and securely carried by the said train on the said journey, but wholly neglected to do so and ran its said train carelessly and negligently across and over the said roadway and without having the said train under proper control * * * and without a timely application of the brakes."

It may be rather remote to say that proof of the fact that the controller broke tends to prove these allegations as to proper control of the car and timely application of the brakes, but we do not think the objection here relied upon ought to be seriously regarded in this court. The objection was made in the court below, and it would perhaps have been more regular if the court had required the plaintiff to amend the declaration. If this had been done, however, the motorman who had charge of the car and who was alleged to have made the statement was present, and it would have been proper to proceed at once with the trial. No continuance was asked for on the ground of surprise.

[3] 2. The court permitted, over the objection of the railway company, the following testimony:

(a) By the witness Joshua Hardy that he was at the scene of the accident immediately after the collision and heard the railway company's motorman, just after getting out of his car, say to the driver of the truck:

"This is the third time you have run across me like this, and I have got you this morning."

(b) By Hugh Lion that he was on the running board of the truck when the collision occurred, and heard the above-mentioned declaration made just as the motorman stepped from the car.

(c) And by the witness Cornelius Lion, the driver of the truck and the man to whom the motorman was speaking, that the declaration was made under the circumstances described by the following extract from his testimony:

"Q. Did you see the motorman when he got off his car?

"A. Yes, sir. I was standing right there at the time. I got down and was standing there when he jumped out. I was out there first though, and he walked up to me and asked me—

"Q. (Interposing.) Did he walk straight from the motor when he got out?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. He walked straight from the motor when he got out?

"A. Yes, sir. I was the first one he spoke to.

"Q. What did he say?

"A. He asked me why did I cross, and I asked him why did not he blow, and I told him that I did not see him, and he said he did blow and I contradicted him, and he said that was the third time I had tried that and that time he got me."

None of the witnesses undertook to measure in seconds or minutes how much time elapsed between the collision and the conversation; but we think it perfectly clear that the interval was very brief, and that the conversation not only followed almost immediately upon the collision, but that it stood in immediate causal relation thereto. It followed under the immediate spur of the main fact, and bears no evidence of reflection or deliberation on the part of the actors. It appears to have been a spontaneous, undesigned, and illustrative incident and part of the litigated act. These are the tests of admissibility under the res gestæ rule. The rule itself is incapable of any precise definition. Its application to a particular case depends upon the circumstances of that case, and necessarily rests at last in every instance upon the discretion and judgment of the trial court. Such discretion and judgment, of course, may be the subject of review; but in doubtful cases there ought to be and is a presumption in favor of the action of the court below.

It is not always easy to apply the rule correctly, because not always easy to say whether the statement or declaration in question is merely a recital of a past occurrence or is a verbal act forming a part of the occurrence itself. We have deemed sufficient in the present case to state generally the essential characteristics of the rule above, and to concur in the holding of the trial court that the evidence under consideration was properly admitted.

A case which perhaps goes as far as any Virginia case has gone in excluding declarations of this character is Blue Ridge Light Co. v. Price, 108 Va. 352, 62 S. E. 938, wherein this court held that the statements of a motorman made just after the accident to the plaintiff, Miss Price, were not admissible. There was very little discussion of the res gestæ rule in that case, the opinion being directed mainly to the proposition that the motorman could not bind the defendant company on the score of agency. We have no difficulty in reaching the same conclusion in this case under the agency rule, and so far as the res gestæ doctrine is involved we are of opinion that the case in judgment is fairly distinguishable in its facts and circumstances from the case cited. Miss Price, who seems to have been knocked down by a car which she was attempting to board, had gotten up after the accident and had gone into the car, and at least an appreciable time had elapsed between the accident and the conversation which was excluded. Moreover, the statement of the motorman in that case was dissimilar in its character and in its general setting from the excited declarations of the motorman in the case at bar.

Another case cited for the defendant is Vicksburg & Meridian R. Co. v. O'Brien, 119 U. S. 99, 7 Sup. Ct. 118, 30 L. Ed. 299. The opinion in that case, by Mr. Justice Harlan, shows that the statement of the engineer which was held inadmissible was made from 10 to 30 minutes after the accident; and even in that case four members of the court—Chief Justice Waite, and Justice Miller, Field, and Blatchford—were of opinion that the engineer's statement ought to have been admitted as part of the res gestæ.

The general nature of the res gestæ rule is so well understood, and has been illustrated by so many adjudicated cases, that we do not feel warranted in prolonging the discussion of this branch of the case. The pertinent authorities are comprehensively collected under the title "Res Gestæ" in 11 Mich. Dig. 907, 931, and in the later volumes of that work, 14, 15, 16, and 17, under the same title.

We do not overlook the contention made by counsel for the railway company that the testimony of a witness named Downham, who was a fellow passenger with plaintiff, shows that a considerable interval of time elapsed between the collision and the declaration of the motorman to the truck driver. We do not think the testimony of the witness can be given the effect claimed for it in this connection. He is not very definite as to the time, but clearly shows that the conversation he heard was just after the accident had happened. Moreover, this witness was not permitted, because of his inability to fix the time definitely, to testify as to the conversation, and we must be governed as to the admissibility of the declaration by what the witnesses who did testify thereto said as to the time and circumstances.

For the reasons stated, we find no error in the admission of the evidence complained of in the first and second assignments.

[4] 3. Miss Hofman, a trained nurse, testifying on behalf of the plaintiff, was asked the following questions and gave the following answers over the objection of the defendant company:

"Q. Have you any knowledge of Miss Deahl's financial condition?

"A. I certainly have.

"Q. What is it?

"A. During the winter she did not have anything but what she got from me, the room rent, and when I was in I always boarded with them, and that was all she had, except once in a while her brother would give her a little something."

This testimony was clearly illegal, and should have been excluded. There was no claim of punitive or exemplary damages involved in this case, and the general rule supported by the great weight of authority is that compensatory damages are not affected by the financial standing of either party to the action, and that it is error to admit evidence on that subject. Watson on Damages for Personal Injuries, § 620; Sutherland on Damages (3d Ed.) § 1254; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. (2d Ed.) p. 640; 13 Cyc. p. 197; 17 Corpus Juris, § 181, p. 827, and cases cited note 68; Penn. Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 457, 26 L. Ed. 141; C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Ghee, 110 Va. 527, 533, 66 S. E. 826.

In the case of C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Ghee, supra, evidence was admitted by the trial court on behalf of the plaintiff to the effect that the deceased, for whose death damages were sought, owned ten acres of land at the time of his death and did not have any other property or estate; and the admission of this evidence was one of the errors for which the judgment in that case was reversed. Judge Cardwell, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"We are of opinion that this evidence was irrelative and improper, and should have been excluded, since it was not material to any issue in the case. Such evidence was calculated to excite the sympathy of the jury, or as stated by some of the courts, to stimulate their sympathy, and this sympathy [was] well calculated to influence the jury not only as to the quantum of damages they should allow, but in the determination of the question whether the case upon the evidence was for the plaintiff or for the defendant. The principle that such evidence is presumed to have wrongfully affected the verdict seems to be settled by the decisions of this court."

It is contended on behalf of the defendant in error that in this case the foregoing evidence was admissible at least for the purpose of enabling the jury to fix a proper sum for the mental suffering of Miss Deahl due to the contemplation of the financial distress which would necessarily come upon her by reason of her lack of funds and her alleged physical inability thereafter to make a living. No such distinction as this is recognized by the law in Virginia or elsewhere so far as we know, but, even if there were such distinction, there was nothing at all in this case to limit the jury's consideration of the evidence in question to that particular purpose.

[5] It is further contended that, if the evidence was improperly admitted, the error was harmless because subsequently and during the course of her cross-examination by counsel for the brick company, Miss Deahl stated, without objection on the part of the railway company, that she had no support herself, that she had been supporting her mother for 20 years, and that she was worrying about these things. The argument here is that the former error of the court in admitting the evidence as to Miss Deahl's financial condition was waived and rendered harmless by the subsequent admission without objection of other testimony to the same effect. The general rule here invoked is well settled, but in order to be applicable there must be some reasonable and just foundation for holding that there was in fact a waiver. An application of the rule in this case would be a distortion of its purpose and a sacrifice of the principle upon which it rests. The record shows that the testimony as to Miss Deahl's financial condition was made the subject of a serious objection which was thoroughly argued before the trial court and deliberately passed upon and overruled. There was everything to charge the trial judge and the opposing counsel with knowledge of the fact that the railway company was earnestly relying upon this objection, and had no idea of waiving the same. It is true that counsel for the railway company did not at the moment object to the allusions of the witness to the support of herself and mother; but during the very cross-examination by counsel for the brick company in which she made these allusions, and after some of them had been made, counsel did again specifically remind the court of his objection and motion to exclude all references to the plaintiff's financial condition. And at a still later stage, when Mrs. Elizabeth Deahl, the plaintiff's mother, was on the stand, the court, while properly ruling out all references which had been made to Mrs. Deahl's dependence upon and support by the plaintiff, reaffirmed its ruling in admitting the evidence as to the poverty of the plaintiff herself.

Under these circumstances, we think it clear that the objection to the evidence in question was not waived.

In the case of Virginia Ry. & P. Co. v. Davidson, 119 Va. 313, 321, 89 S. E. 229, 230, a similar question of practice arose, and we said:

"We do not think the objection was waived. The bill of exceptions which sets forth the testimony of the witness Walton, on this point, shows that at the very first offer of the plaintiff to prove the motorman's general reputation the defendant specifically and earnestly objected on the ground that such evidence 'was immaterial and irrelevant, and that the defendant was only responsible to the plaintiff for the act of the motorman at the time of the accident complained of, and that any general reputation he may have for either carelessness or carefulness was not properly admissible. The court heard argument of counsel upon the question and then admitted the evidence. In this state of the record we have no hesitancy in holding that the subsequent cross-examination of the other witnesses on this subject, without formally repeating the objection, and the introduction of rebuttal evidence of the defendant, did not waive the previous objection, and that the motion to exclude was a timely and proper method of further saving the point.

"Objection to the erroneous admission of evidence is not waived by introducing rebutting evidence, although it be of the same kind, or by cross-examination in relation to the objectionable matter. * * * Where an objection to evidence is distinctly made and overruled, it need not be repeated to the same class of evidence to save the objection, although the question is asked of another witness.' 38 Cyc. 1398, 1399, and many authorities there cited."

[8, 7] It is further argued that the objection to this testimony was rendered harmless by instruction J given at the request of the defendant railway company, as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that, even if they should find for the plaintiff, they cannot under the law allow her more damages than they believe from the evidence would actually compensate her for the injuries actually sustained as the direct result of the accident, and the burden is on the plaintiff to prove her damages by a fair preponderance of the evidence with a reasonable certainty, and if they believe that her present condition is due, in part, to nervousness, hysteria, or any trouble with internal organs, which originated prior to August 10, 1916, they must take into consideration the previous existence of such diseases and troubles and not assess any damages therefor."

This instruction was not sufficiently specific as a direction to disregard the illegal evidence which had been admitted, if, indeed, it even remotely had such evidence in view. The rule is well settled that the error in the admission of improper evidence may be cured by a proper instruction to disregard it. Southern Ry. Co. v. Simmons, 105 Va. 651, 661, 55 S. E. 459; Taylor v. Commonwealth, 122 Va. 886, 894, 94 S. E. 795. But as appears from the authorities just cited, the withdrawal of the illegal evidence from the jury must be in direct and explicit terms. It can hardly be said that the instruction above quoted could have led the jury to suppose that the evidence in question was being thereby withdrawn. Especially is this true in view of the fact that plaintiff's instruction No. 4 told the jury that they might take into consideration "her station in life," and twice mentioned her "mental suffering" as proper elements upon which to base a recovery; the latter element according to plaintiff's theory, being necessarily aggravated by her lack of means.

[8] But it is said that the verdict of $5,000 was not excessive, and that the error under consideration was therefore harmless. It is true that we are not asked to set aside the verdict on the specific ground that the damages allowed were excessive, and it is also true that, if the case had gone to the jury without the evidence in question and their verdict had been for the same amount, we would not be able to interfere with it on account of its size; but the fact remains that a motion was made in the lower court for a new trial on the express ground that the verdict was excessive, and very grievous complaint is made in this court of the size of the recovery. The position taken before us is stated thus in the petition upon which this writ of error was awarded:

"Your petitioner contends that the damages awarded in this case are out of all proportion to the extent of the injuries sustained, and that in fixing the amount of damages the jury was largely influenced by this line of testimony as to the financial condition of the parties."

It is apparent, therefore, that the real question is whether the size of the verdict may not have been materially augmented by improper testimony. The authorities cited above establish the rule that evidence of the character here complained of is presumed to have wrongfully affected the verdict. That it may have done so in this case seems rather more than a probability, and, at any rate, its admission compelled the defendant to submit to the result of a trial had in violation of a settled rule of evidence which it invoked and had the right to have enforced. The admissibility of the evidence was so earnestly insisted upon both in this court and in the court below that there is little reason to suppose that the able and ingenious counsel for the plaintiff failed to make effective use of it before the jury.

For the error in admitting the testimony with reference to Miss Deahl's financial condition, the case must be reversed and remanded for a new trial, and this fact makes it unnecessary to deal with the remaining assignments of error. They involve questions that are not likely to arise at the next trial, except the motion to set aside the verdict on the ground that the evidence was not sufficient to support it, and as to this it would not be proper, under our practice, for us to express any opinion at this time.

Reversed.

(126 Va. 1)

HENRY'S EX'X v. PAYNE.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⇨139—LIEN; NOTICE OF MORTGAGEE OF CLAIM OF THIRD PERSON.

Mortgagee in a chattel mortgage given to secure prior indebtedness, even though considered a deed of trust, acquired no lien where he had prior notice that grantor had previously executed a bill of sale to another.

2. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⇨219—GENERAL CREDITORS; SALES WITHOUT DELIVERY.

Code 1904, § 2465, providing that every bill of sale of goods and chattels, when the possession is allowed to remain with the grantor, shall be void as to subsequent purchasers for valuable consideration without notice until duly admitted to record, a creditor without a lien stands on no higher footing than his debtor, and cannot successfully invoke the benefit of the statute.

3. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⇨154(1)—RETENTION OF POSSESSION; FAILURE TO RECORD BILL OF SALE.

One to whom a bill of sale of property was executed was not estopped to claim the property by reason of having failed to record the same as provided by Code 1904, § 2465, although he left the property in the hands of the prior owner and a third person extended credit to such former owner by reason of his possession and claim of ownership, there being no claim of purchaser's fraud or knowledge that third person was extending credit on faith of prior owner's continuing ownership.

4. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⇨154(1)—RETENTION OF POSSESSION; FAILURE TO RECORD BILL OF SALE.

In view of Code 1904, § 2465, a landlord may acquire a lien by distress warrant, or by execution levied on property in the hands of his tenant, even after learning that the tenant has given a bill of sale therefor, and can defeat the rights of the true owner of the property, if such lien is acquired before the bill of sale is recorded.

Appeal from Corporation Court of Roanoke.

Suit between one Payne and the executrix of R. R. Henry. From an adverse decree; the latter appeals. Reversed.

The controversy in this suit in equity between the appellee, Payne, claiming the right to have sale of certain personal property, consisting of a certain law library, under a writing which is in effect an equitable chattel mortgage, executed by Randolph Henry, at a time when he was in possession of the library, conveying same to secure the payment of a certain note of the latter given to cover certain accrued and past-due office rent, owing by him to appellee, and the appellant, who claims that her testator, R. R. Henry, was the owner of the library by purchase from said Randolph Henry, as evidenced by a bill of sale which was unrecorded at the time of the execution of said chattel mortgage, appellant claiming, however, that appellee had actual notice of such ownership of R. R. Henry prior to the execution of the chattel mortgage.

There is no question of fraud in the case. The facts are undisputed that R. R. Henry was the bona fide purchaser for value of the library of Randolph Henry, as evidenced by said bill of sale, some 4½ years prior to the execution by the latter of the chattel mortgage and several years prior to the beginning of the renting by latter of a certain law office of the appellee, from which the indebtedness aforesaid secured by the chattel mortgage arose. The library was left by the said vendee in the possession of the vendor thereof, the said Randolph Henry, and the latter, on renting a law office of appellee (first of one room, later of two rooms), moved the library therein. There is some question raised in the examination of appellee on cross-examination by Randolph Henry, acting as attorney in the case, as to just what representations the latter made to appellee as to the ownership of the library at the time the law office rental contract was entered into. The appellee, however, testifies positively that such debtor told him, at the time of said renting and before the debt for rent aforesaid was incurred and also subsequently along during the tenancy, which continued for somewhat over a year, that the library "was his library," that he owned it, and that it was on the faith of this representation that appellee rented the premises aforesaid to said debtor and allowed him to continue to occupy the premises and incur said indebtedness. Randolph Henry on the same day and again about three months later gave his depositions in the cause, in which he nowhere contradicts the said testimony of the appellee. Hence the testimony of the latter on this subject must be taken to be true.

However it is admitted by the appellee in his testimony that on the same day of and prior to the execution of said chattel mortgage by Randolph Henry, the latter said to appellee:

"I am going to give you a deed of trust on this library and furniture; the library belongs to my father; but he will have no objection to my giving a deed of trust on it."

The record shows that that was the first intimation that appellee had that the library belonged to R. R. Henry, the father of said debtor, and that it did not belong to the debtor.

The debtor, having given the chattel mortgage aforesaid, vacated the premises aforesaid, moving the library into another building in the same city, but within the jurisdiction of the same court, which is the court below.

The fact that the chattel mortgage was given by the son never came to the knowledge of the father, nor was his consent thereto ever asked or given. In explanation of this, the record shows that the said debtor did not see his father subsequently to the giving of said chattel mortgage until about two months thereafter, when the father was in the said city at federal court, but was busy, and the debtor had no opportunity to talk to him then, as the debtor testifies. The father lived some distance away in another part of the state, and went home from said court sick, and this illness lingered, gradually getting worse, until he died in October, 1915, some six months after the chattel mortgage aforesaid was given. The son and debtor, during the last-named period, saw the father only once, which was in his home in August, when the father was not expected to live, was unconscious most of the time, and was almost speechless during his lucid intervals, so that, as the son testifies, it was impossible to discuss any business matter with him. The son never saw the father alive after that.

There is no evidence in the record that the father, the owner of the library, at any time knew that the son and debtor aforesaid was representing to the appellee or to any one else that the library was his (the son's) property, or that the latter was obtaining credit of the appellee on the faith of such ownership.

Notwithstanding the prior notice given appellee as aforesaid of the true ownership of the library, the appellee accepted the chattel mortgage aforesaid, and promptly recorded it.

Appellee did not sue out and have levied on the library any distress warrant for said rent indebtedness, nor did he have any execution levied thereon.

Appellee did later obtain a judgment against said debtor for the amount of said indebtedness, with interest and costs of the action, but meanwhile the bill of sale aforesaid had been duly recorded in the lifetime of the said R. R. Henry, namely, on August 13, 1915, about two months prior to the death of the latter, it being taken from among the papers of R. R. Henry by the appellant and sent to said debtor for recordation, and it would therefore have taken precedence of any lien that could have been thereafter acquired by appellant by having execution issued upon said judgment and levied upon the library.

The appellee, prior to the recordation of said bill of sale, seems to have relied wholly upon the representation of the debtor made just before the execution of the chattel mortgage as aforesaid, and the hope thus engendered that the father would have no objection to the "deed of trust" on the library. Upon the death of the father, without having consented to the mortgage being given, that hope failed. But it was then too late for appellee to obtain a lien for his debt by distress warrant for rent, or by obtaining judgment and levy of execution ahead of the bill of sale aforesaid, which had been recorded as aforesaid. Hence appellee was compelled to depend and rest his case, and does rest his case in this suit upon his rights as a purchaser under the chattel mortgage.

By the decree under review the court below held that the lien and claim of the appellee upon the library and furniture is superior to the claim of appellant.

There is no controversy in the cause as to the correctness of such decree as to the furniture, which was the property of the debtor, Randolph Henry. The sole controversy is over the library, which was not the property of the latter, but of appellant's testator as aforesaid.

Randolph Henry and Thos. M. Darnall, both of Roanoke, for appellant.

J. H. Stuart and C. R. Williams, both of Roanoke, for appellee.

SIMS, J. (after stating the facts as above). The material facts of the case are set forth in the statement preceding this opinion. It is one of grave hardship upon the appellee, as we feel compelled to decide it; but we may not allow our feeling that it is a hard case lead us to disregard well established rules of law.

[1] 1. Appellee does not controvert that, in so far as his claim of lien is concerned, his position is the same as that of any creditor the payment of whose debt is secured by a deed of trust, namely, that of a purchaser from the grantor of such a deed of trust. Appellee takes the position that the chattel mortgage under which he claims a lien on the library is in truth a deed of trust, and by his pleading he seeks to have it enforced as a deed of trust. Appellee, therefore, being a purchaser from the grantor of said chattel mortgage, could not and did not acquire any lien on the library by virtue of such mortgage, because, as appears from the statement of facts preceding this opinion, he took the mortgage with prior notice that the library did not belong to his grantor, but to another, namely, the grantor's father, appellant's testator.

[2] 2. Appellee relies upon section 2465 of the Code as rendering the bill of sale held by appellant's testator void as against the appellee, a creditor of Randolph Henry, the grantor in such bill of sale. So far as material such section provides as follows:

"Every * * * bill of sale * * * of goods and chattels when the possession is allowed to remain with the grantor * * * shall be void as to subsequent purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, and creditors, until and except from the time that it is duly admitted to record. * * *"

But the appellee, as we have seen, was not such a purchaser, and the creditors who are entitled to the benefit of this statute are lien creditors only. A creditor without a lien stands on no higher footing than his debtor, and cannot successfully invoke the benefit of this statute. McCandlish v. Keen, 54 Va. (13 Grat.) 615; Dulaney v. Willis, 95 Va. 606, 29 S. E. 324, 64 Am. St. Rep. 815. As we have seen above, appellee acquired no lien on the library by the chattel mortgage aforesaid. It is not claimed that he is a lien creditor in any other right. Therefore section 2465 of the Code has no application to the case.

[3, 4] 3. But appellee contends that—"The supposed claimant, R. R. Henry, and the defendant, Randolph Henry, will not be permitted by a court to sit down and suppress knowledge of the claim of the said R. R. Henry to the ownership of the property until the defendant, Randolph Henry, had become involved to the extent he did, as shown in this record, in debt to appellee, and then come in and deprive the appellee of his rights to proceed against said property when it is clearly shown in the record of the cause that the credit was given to the defendant, Randolph Henry, on the faith of his absolute ownership of the books and office furniture which was in appellee's, George W. Payne's, building, and the testimony of the defendant, Randolph Henry, shows that his father, R. R. Henry, was here during the time that these books were in the building of the appellee, and that nothing was said or done by either R. R. Henry or Randolph Henry to assert any claim for the benefit of the said R. R. Henry to the said books or to any interest therein, and the said George W. Payne, the appellee, was all along relying upon the said books and furniture as security for his debt, and was carrying the said defendant, Randolph Henry, on the faith of his unconditional and absolute ownership of said property as shown by the record in the case."

This position erroneously assumes that appellee had the right "to proceed against said property" at a time when he had acquired no lien thereon, and ignores the absence of any proof in the record of fraud, or that R. R. Henry had any knowledge at any time that appellant contemplated or was extending or had extended credit to Randolph Henry on the faith of the absolute ownership by the latter of the library. The record therefore fails to make out a case of estoppel against the appellant and in favor of the appellee or to otherwise sustain the position of appellee under consideration.

We can readily see how the possession and apparent ownership of tangible personal property in one, while the actual ownership undisclosed by any matter of record, is in another, may mislead third persons to extend credit to the former to their possible financial loss, especially when the apparent owner represents himself to be the true owner. But this is permitted at common law, for independent of statute a creditor stands in the shoes of his debtor, and can subject no greater rights of property than the debtor in truth has, whatever may be the apparent property rights of the debtor; and whether such status of relative rights shall be allowed to continue to exist must be determined by another department of government than the judiciary. It is solely within the province of the Legislature to act in the premises. So far the Legislature has enacted no statute prohibiting such severance of the real from the apparent ownership of property, where it results from a bona fide sale and purchase for value and no lien creditor of the vendor is affected. And there may be good and sufficient reasons of public policy why the Legislature has not extended the registry statutes so as to protect nonlien as well as lien creditors in such a situation as that under consideration. And in the instant case, indeed, the law as it exists afforded ample remedy to have given the appellee the relief he now desires, if he had acquired a lien by distress warrant or by execution levied on the library prior to the recording of the bill of sale, instead of relying on the hope that plaintiff's testator would consent to the chattel mortgage and thus make that a valid lien.

For the foregoing reasons we are constrained to reverse the decree under review in so far as it holds the library aforesaid subject to the lien of appellee's debt; the appellant will be decreed to be entitled to the library free of all claim of the appellee, and the cause will be remanded for further proceedings concerning the sale of the furniture. Reversed.

(85 W. Va. 60)

HOUSEMAN et al. v. TOWN OF ANAWALT et al. (No. 3763.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 28, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §51—WRIT OF ERROR LIES TO REVIEW DISSOLUTION OF CORPORATION.

This court has jurisdiction by writ of error to review the judgment of a circuit court, proceeding according to section 2 of chapter 47 of the Code of 1918 (Code 1918, § 2383), annulling its charter and dissolving a municipal corporation.

2. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF §57—SIGNED AND CERTIFIED, PART OF THE RECORD.

A bill of exceptions regularly signed by the judge, and certified to the clerk by an order made within thirty days after the adjournment of the term at which the trial was had, becomes a part of the record notwithstanding such order may not have been actually spread upon the order book until after that time.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §51—REVIEW OF FINDINGS OF CIRCUIT COURT ANNULING CHARTER.

This court will not in such a case set aside findings of the circuit court made in lieu of a jury, or reverse the judgment thereon annulling the charter and dissolving a municipal corporation, unless such findings are plainly not supported by the evidence or the judgment is not warranted by law.

Error to Circuit Court, McDowell County.

Proceeding by W. H. Houseman and others against the Town of Anawalt and S. T. Spencer and others to forfeit its charter and to dissolve the corporation. Judgment for petitioners, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Free & Capehart and Litz & Harman, all of Welch, for plaintiffs in error.

Salé & Tucker, of Welch, for defendants in error.

MILLER, P. This is a proceeding begun by petitioners, citizens of this State and inhabitants of the town of Anawalt, against said town and S. T. Spencer and others acting or pretending to act as councilmen during the preceding two years, to forfeit its charter and to dissolve the corporation, pursuant to section 2, chapter 47, of the Code of 1918 (Code 1918, § 2383).

The answer of respondent puts in issue the material facts. Among the grounds alleged for the relief sought, and those which the circuit court found established by the evidence, and upon which it predicated the judgment complained of, were: That the municipality had no bonded indebtedness; had failed for one year to exercise its corporate powers and privileges; and for a like time had failed to keep its roads, streets and alleys in good order and repair.

[1] The jurisdiction of this court to review the judgment of the circuit court annulling the charter and dissolving the corporation is challenged by the petitioners, upon the principles laid down in In re Town of Union Mines, 39 W. Va. 179, 19 S. E. 398; Elder v. Incorporators of Central City, 40 W. Va. 222, 21 S. E. 738; Bloxton v. McWhorter, Judge, 46 W. Va. 32, 32 S. E. 1004; Summers County Court v. Monroe County, 43 W. Va. 207, 27 S. E. 307; McWhorter v. Dorr, 57 W. Va. 608, 50 S. E. 838, 110 Am. St. Rep. 815; Morris v. Taylor, 70 W. Va. 618, 74 S. E. 872. These decisions support the general proposition first affirmed in In re Town of Union Mines, that the judgment of the circuit court in the exercise of the legislative and quasi-judicial authority, delegated by said chapter, to incorporate towns and villages was not subject to the appellate jurisdiction of this court.

But the jurisdiction here invoked is not to reverse the judgment of the circuit court granting the charter and incorporating the municipality, but one annulling the charter and dissolving the corporation, quite a different proposition from any affirmed in the decisions cited.

The jurisdiction of the circuit court to annul charters and dissolve municipal corporations was first conferred by chapter 54, Acts of 1907, amending and re-enacting section 2 of chapter 47 of the Code. By that amendment the circuit court was given jurisdiction to hear and determine all matters relating to forfeiture and dissolution of all such charters, upon the petition of one or more of the inhabitants of a municipality or of any ten freeholders of the county in which such municipality is located. But this calls for the exercise, not of legislative jurisdiction only, but of judicial powers which theretofore could have been initiated only by the State through its attorney general or some other deputed authority to take away vested rights in such charter. Hornbrook v. Town of Elm Grove, 40 W. Va. 543, 21 S. E. 851, 28 L. R. A. 416; South Morgantown v. Morgantown, 49 W. Va. 729, 40 S. E. 15. The jurisdiction to annul charters and to dissolve corporations conferred by the amended statute involves the ascertainment of the necessary facts and the exercise of judicial powers, not simply the granting of municipal authority, and partakes in every way of strictly judicial functions. As in the case of private corporations, the municipality continues to exist notwithstanding the causes of forfeiture, until the State intervenes and by proper judicial procedure has ascertained and adjudged the causes of forfeiture to exist. Moore v. Schoppert, 22 W. Va. 282; Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Supervisors, 3 W. Va. 319, 324. Of such judgments this court has jurisdiction by writ of error to review them. This is so notwithstanding the legislature may have the right by amendment to take away the charter. Though the jurisdiction here conferred may be to some extent administrative, it involves the exercise of judicial power, reviewable here. Morris v. Taylor, supra, 70 W. Va. 626, 627, 74 S. E. 872, and cases cited.

[2] Another objection interposed to our consideration of the case on its merits, is that the bill of exceptions certifying the evidence and the rulings of the court thereon was not certified to the clerk within the time after the adjournment of the court to make it a proper bill of exceptions. This is without merit. The record with the stipulation of counsel shows that the certificate of evidence or bill of exceptions was signed by the trial judge in vacation on September 23, 1918, within thirty days from the adjournment of the court, which occurred on August 24, 1918. And notwithstanding the order certifying the bill of exceptions to the clerk was not actually spread on the order book until October 15, 1918, in term time, it appears on its face, and the endorsement by the judge on the back of the original order shows, that the bill of exceptions was actually signed and the order directed on September 23, 1918. A more formal certificate by the judge is not required. Wells v. Smith, 49 W. Va. 78, 38 S. E. 547; Fink v. Thomas, 66 W. Va. 487, 66 S. E. 650, 19 Ann. Cas. 571. And we have decided that if the judge actually certifies the bill of exceptions within the limitation prescribed by the statute, it is not required that it be also entered on the record book within the thirty days prescribed for the certification. Ketterman v. Dry Fork R. R. Co., 48 W. Va. 606, 37 S. E. 683; Wells v. Smith, 49 W. Va. 78, 38 S. E. 547.

[3] The only other point submitted for our consideration is that on the merits, the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding of the court upon which the judgment of annulment and dissolution was predicated. Without going into the details of the evidence, which we have examined with care, it satisfies us that for the past two years no municipal elections were held, and this without justifiable excuse; that some of the members of the council were not eligible, some resigned or refused to serve; and that the mayor and recorder were removed, and others substituted in the most irregular way. If there were any regular meetings of the council, the minutes are incomplete, and kept, if at all, in the most haphazard way. The record shows that after this suit was begun one of the members of the council, not the recorder, secured an outsider to record in the minute book supposed minutes dictated by him. True, he says this was done from notes kept by some one in a tablet, but not identified otherwise, and admittedly not complete. From the minutes, no taxes appear to have been levied for municipal purposes, and none of any consequence collected. The so-called minutes are wanting in any showings of levies of taxes. No delinquent lists are produced, though there is some evidence that a delinquent list was made out by some and returned to the auditor. No one was put in charge of streets and alleys, and during all the two years preceding the suit nothing worthy of mention was done toward keeping up or maintaining the streets and alleys in good repair. There is much evidence that the police force, consisting of one man, was a bootlegger and keeper of a house of ill fame, and was inefficient and unreliable, and that one or more members of the council violated the law in renting business for unlawful purposes, and that there had been no attempt to enforce the law of decency, violated not only by others, but by those assuming official authority. The evidence satisfies us that this semblance of municipal organization and authority was employed simply as a cloak for violators of the law rather than to enforce it and maintain decent and proper municipal government.

In our opinion the findings and conclusions of the circuit court were fully justified and that the judgment below should be affirmed.

(85 W. Va. 1)

FERRELL et al. v. DEVERICK et al.(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 21, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. INFANTS ⇨81—APPOINTMENT OF CLERK OF COURT AS GUARDIAN AD LITEM VALID.

A decree will not be reversed solely because the court rendering it appointed its clerk guardian ad litem to represent infant defendants in the cause then pending before it

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⇨109—No VESTED RIGHTS ON RULES OF EVIDENCE.

A party to a suit prosecuted under sections 24b.(1)–24b.(12), c. 71, Code (sections 3766–3777, Code 1913), is not deprived of any constitutional right by that provision of section 24b.(7) which authorizes the court to hear evidence in the cause in open court, so long as he is accorded a fair opportunity to present his side of the case and to submit all the facts necessary to a just determination of the controversy. The law recognizes no such thing as a vested right in rules of evidence.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⇨278(7) — DECREE AUTHORIZING LEASE ON LAND SUBJECT TO CONTINGENT REMAINDERS NOT WANTING IN DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

Where a suit is instituted under the provisions of sections 24b.(1)–24b.(12), c. 71, Code (sections 3766–3777, Code 1913) for the purpose of obtaining a decree authorizing an oil and gas lease on land subject to contingent remainders, and the suit in effect validates a prior lease made by the present life tenant of such land and others, the life tenant is not deprived of property without due process of law, although the final decree gives him fewer and less valuable rights than were his by virtue of the former lease; it appearing that the prior lease accorded him greater rights than he was entitled to, and that the decree gave him as great a return therefrom as he could properly have claimed under the terms of any lease within the power of the lessors to grant.

4. LIFE ESTATES ⇨12—DECREE AUTHORIZING LEASE NOT VIOLATION OF RIGHTS OF LIFE TENANT.

Nor was such decree of lease beyond the power of the court to grant, on the ground that it was made without the consent of the life tenant as holder of a vested estate or interest in the land; his consent to the prior lease being sufficient evidence of his willingness and consent to enter into such a lease, and the purpose of the suit being merely to validate such prior lease.

5. ASSIGNMENTS ⇨90—"ASSIGNS" DEFINED.

The word "assigns" generally comprehends all those who take either immediately or remotely from or under the assignor, whether by conveyance, devise, descent, or act of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Assigns.]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Roane County.

Suit by T. J. Ferrell, in his own right and as guardian of his minor children, Fannie M. Ferrell, his wife, and others, against C. H. Deverick, such minor children, and others. From two decrees entered in the cause in favor of plaintiff United Fuel Gas Company, defendant C. H. Deverick appeals. Affirmed.

Thos. P. Ryan, of Spencer, for appellant.
Carl C. Douthitt, of Huntington, and R. G. Altizer, of Charleston, for appellees.

LYNCH, J. C. H. Deverick, believing his interests imperilled thereby, has appealed to this court to review and reverse two decrees entered March 5, 1918, in the chancery cause brought by T. J. Ferrell, in his own right and as guardian of the minor children of himself and his wife, Fannie M. Ferrell, coplaintiff with him and others, against Deverick, the minor children of the Ferrells, and others, codefendants, the chief object of which was the validation or legalization of an oil and gas lease executed by the plaintiffs, Deverick, and others January 1, 1916, to United Fuel Gas Company, covering a tract of 115 acres of land in Roane county. The title to the land leased, so far as now concerned, originated in a deed dated January 3, 1899, by Harrison B. Smith, acting as special commissioner and in his own right, to Fannie M. Ferrell, the wife of Thomas J. Ferrell, and their children, then and now minors, whereby Fannie M. Ferrell acquired a freehold estate for her life in the land, and the children of herself and her husband who should survive her an estate therein in remainder. Mrs. Ferrell and her husband are now living and are the parents of the infant defendants named in the bill in this cause. The language of the granting clause is:

"Doth grant unto the said Fannie M. Ferrell, wife of Thomas J. Ferrell, during the term of her natural life, remainder at death to such children of the said Fannie M. Ferrell by her husband, Thomas J. Ferrell, as may survive her."

The life tenant and her husband, no doubt acting in the utmost good faith, on February 20, 1906, undertook to convey the fee-simple title to the land to A. T. and S. R. Ferrell, neither grantee being a contingent remainderman, but reserved one-third of all oil, gas, and minerals underlying the tract with operating rights and privileges and all rentals and royalties arising from the one-third of all oil, gas, and minerals. The futility of that instrument to accomplish the object contemplated by the grantors, who deemed themselves competent thereby to pass the fee-simple title to the land to the grantees, prompted them, when advised of the lack of power to effect the purpose intended, to institute in the circuit court of Roane county the summary proceeding authorized by chapter 83 of the Code (sections 3961-3978, Code 1913) to obtain permission to do what they had vainly essayed to do without such permission, with the result that the court empowered the guardian of the contingent remaindermen to execute to the grantees in the unauthorized deed what it was assumed would be a valid conveyance of the fee-simple title to the 115 acres of land, and the guardian did make, execute, and deliver to the grantees a deed, dated September 25, 1912, such as the court granted him permission to make, subject, however, to the reservations contained in the deed of February 20, 1906.

The grantees in these deeds, A. T. Ferrell and S. R. Ferrell, the one by the life tenant and her husband alone, the other by her husband as the father and guardian of their infant children, joined in a deed dated October 1, 1912, purporting to grant to C. H. Deverick, appellant, the fee-simple title to the 115-acre tract, reserving, however, "two-thirds ( $\frac{2}{3}$ ) of the oil, gas, and other minerals, with-in and underlying said tract of land, which is hereby reserved and excepted from the operation of this deed." And on January 1, 1916, A. T. and S. R. Ferrell, C. H. Deverick, Fannie M. Ferrell, the life tenant, and T. J. Ferrell, her husband and the guardian of their children, joined in executing to the United Fuel Gas Company an oil and gas lease covering the 115 acres.

To remove such doubt as may have existed as to the efficacy of this lease to accomplish the end aimed at by the parties thereto, and to obtain a judicial confirmation thereof, so as to render it invulnerable from attack for lack of competency on the part of the lessors, plaintiffs instituted this suit and obtained the decrees now here for review upon appeal.

Of the 16 specific assignments in the petition for the writ, only 11 of which are mentioned in appellant's brief, the points really demanding attention are the sufficiency of the bill, and the right of the court (a) to appoint its clerk guardian ad litem; (b) to allow proof to be taken at the bar of the court and in its hearing, and to read and consider the proof, when so taken, in passing upon the merits of a cause brought and prosecuted, as this is, under the authority of section 24b. (1) et seq. c. 71, Code; (c) to lease land without the consent of an adult interested therein with contingent remaindermen, and thereby annul a lease already executed by him to the proposed lessee. These grounds of error we propose to discuss briefly and dispose of in the order stated; first, however, announcing our purpose not to enter upon a consideration of the merits of the cause, for the purpose of adjudging the extent of the interests of Fannie M. Ferrell, the life tenant, under the deed of January 3, 1899, as affected by the subsequent deeds and lease in which she joined, or of A. T. and S. R.

Ferrell, the grantees of herself and husband in the deed of February 20, 1906, as affected by the subsequent deed and lease in which they also joined, or of C. H. Deverick, grantee of the deed of October 1, 1912, as affected by the lease of January 1, 1916, in which he likewise joined. The rights of these parties these instruments definitely fixed and they have acquiesced in the shares as so established. But we do discover and in another connection later note a concession to Deverick in the lease of January 1, 1916, in excess of the interest allowed him by the decrees complained of—indeed, in excess of the interest to which he is entitled, even in the aspect of the case most favorable to him.

[1] We look in vain for defects in the bill, and counsel for Deverick points to none such as warrant a ruling on the demurrer thereto different from that shown in the decree overruling it. Nor do the decisions cited sustain the proposition stated by him as to the right of a court to appoint its clerk guardian ad litem for an infant who is a defendant in a cause pending therein. They do not question the propriety or legality of such an appointment, except inferentially, and say only that—

"Where an infant is not able to obtain a responsible guardian, or where no one will consent to act for him, and in other proper cases, the court may appoint one of its own officers" (22 Cyc. 652), or, "if none can be found to accept the appointment or appear for the infant, it is the duty of the court to appoint one of its officers, whom they can control, and see that he enters an appearance" (Greenup v. Bacon, 1 T. B. Mon. [Ky.] 108).

In Fisher v. Lyon, 34 Hun, 183, the question was not whether the court lawfully could appoint its clerk guardian ad litem, but whether it could dispense with the security required by statute of such guardians. In Brown v. The Henry Pratt, 4 Fed. Cas. 334, the decision rested on a rule of court requiring guardians ad litem to give security for costs the same as if personally the parties in interest, the court saying:

"As a general rule guardians ad litem cannot, in admiralty, be excused from giving the ordinary stipulations, and if it be necessary to assign a guardian by the court, the party not being able to produce a responsible person, the court would confer the trust on some standing officer, and then discharge him of the liability for costs."

There appears to us no sound reason, and appellant advances none, and no authority cited or found states any, for reversing a decree solely because the court rendering it appointed its clerk to represent the infant defendants and safeguard their rights and interests in the litigation.

[2] As to the right to permit testimony to be taken at the bar of the court and to consider it in determining the rights of the parties to a cause prosecuted under the sections of the statute cited, nothing further scarcely need be said than that the statute itself—section 24b.(7), c. 71, Code—amply warrants such procedure. There is no longer any doubt as to the right of the Legislature to prescribe or create rules of evidence to be observed by judicial tribunals, limited only by constitutional guaranties or declaration of a contrary rule upon the same subject. If thereby a party to a litigation is not deprived of a fair opportunity to present his defense, and for that purpose to submit all the facts necessary to a just determination of the controversy, what cause he has for complaint is not evident. 10 R. C. L. 863; 12 C. J. 982. The law recognizes no such thing as a vested right in rules of evidence. As they relate only to the remedy, the Legislature may change them without invading the legal or vested rights of the parties. State v. King, 64 W. Va. 546, 593, 63 S. E. 468. Besides, so far as disclosed, Deverick did not object, but presumably was present and acquiesced, and likely participated, in the necessary preliminary inquiry prior to the entry of the decrees of which he now complains, and there is now no suggestion by him or by any other person interested of any prejudice resulting from the action of the court in so hearing the evidence.

[3, 4] Just what foundation there is for the implication underlying the criticism that the decrees reviewed purport to lease the property of appellant without his consent, and thereby to effect the annulment of a lease on the same land theretofore executed by him and others to the same lessee, is not clearly apparent. Complaint is made that the decrees give Deverick fewer and less valuable rights than were his by virtue of the lease of January 1, 1916. Though these decrees may give him less than the prior lease authorized, his return under the latter being the one-third of all moneys therein named or due thereunder, yet the former is not erroneous because of that reduction, for the lease gave him a greater right than he was entitled to, but the decrees give him as much as he could properly have claimed under the terms of any lease within the power of the lessors therein to grant.

An examination of the estates conveyed by the respective deeds and lease shows the correctness of these decrees. By the deed of January 3, 1899, Mrs. Ferrell acquired only a life estate in the tract of 115 acres, giving her no right to any part of the corpus of the estate, but as incidental thereto merely a right to interest on the royalty oil and gas well rentals from such wells as should be authorized and drilled subsequent to the commencement of her life estate. Wilson v. Youst, 43 W. Va. 826, 28 S. E. 781, 39 L. R. A. 292; Ammons v. Ammons, 50 W. Va. 390, 40 S. E. 490; Eakin v. Hawkins, 52 W. Va. 124, 43 S. E. 211. See, also, Minner v. Minner, 100 S. E. 509, recently decided, where the authorities are collected and discussed. Wherefore she could not and did not by her deed of February 20, 1906, pass to her grantees an interest greater than she possessed. Her attempted reservation of one-third of all oil, gas, and other minerals underlying the tract, and all rentals and royalties from that one-third, was more than her rights as life tenant embraced, and therefore more than she was entitled to reserve. As life tenant she could claim only the interest on the proceeds from the royalty oil and gas well rentals; the property being undeveloped and unleased as to those minerals, so far as the record discloses, prior to January 1, 1916, the date of the first lease to United Fuel Gas Company. It is unnecessary to determine whether her attempted reservation of more than was her right is sufficiently broad to admit of construction as a reservation of her right to the interest on the proceeds from the royalty oil and gas well rentals. Assuming the correctness of such construction and the power thus to reserve that interest from the operation of the deed, she has then conveyed to her grantees only a life estate in the surface of the tract, without regard to the underlying minerals; treating them, as they must be, as a part of the corpus thereof. The summary proceeding to sell the contingent interests of the infant remaindermen in aid of the deed of 1906, being instituted under chapter 83 of the Code, and not under section 24b.(1) et seq., c. 71, relating to the sale or lease of land subject to contingent remainders, such as this was, the deed of T. J. Ferrell, guardian of the infant children, to the same grantees gave them no greater right than they possessed by virtue of Mrs. Ferrell's deed of 1906, except that it bestowed upon them the contingent estate in remainder of the infant children, with the exception of one-third of the oil, gas, and other minerals, which was reserved. The interests of A. T. and S. R. Ferrell in the tract then embraced the life estate of Mrs. Ferrell and the contingent estate in remainder, including two-thirds of the oil, gas, and other minerals. This interest their deed of October 1, 1912, conveyed to Deverick, but reserved the two-thirds of the minerals just referred to.

In the lease of January 1, 1916, in which, among others, Mrs. Ferrell, the former life tenant, and C. H. Deverick, the present holder of that estate, joined as lessors, it was stipulated that the latter was to receive "one-third of all moneys herein named or due under the lease." This was more than he as life tenant was entitled to receive, since the corpus of the estate, including the royalty oil and gas well rentals, belonged to the remaindermen, when ascertained according to the terms of the deed of 1899, or, if the condition of that instrument should not be fulfilled, then to the heirs at law, and further because, as we have assumed, Mrs.

Ferrell has reserved her right as life tenant to interest on the proceeds from such royalty and rentals. However, by joining in the lease as lessor, and thus consenting to the disposition therein made to Deverick of one-third of the moneys due under the lease, she has authorized to be included therein her right so reserved in the former deed, thus giving to Deverick the one-third of the interest on the proceeds from the royalty oil and gas well rentals, when and as produced from the land during her lifetime, and not thereafter. On the other hand, if we assume that the attempted reservation in the deed of 1906 cannot be so construed, and that Mrs. Ferrell's right to such interest passed by virtue of the deed to Deverick, the latter, by joining in the lease of 1916, has consented to receive the share therein stipulated.

Under either construction the decrees give him all that he could properly take under the lease. They correctly recognize that the whole of the proceeds from the well or wells drilled on said land and from the royalty oil are the property of such children of Mrs. Ferrell by her husband, Thomas J. Ferrell, as may survive her, or of their assigns, and provide that such proceeds shall be invested and kept at interest during the life of Mrs. Ferrell, and that the interest therefrom shall be paid "to the owners of the life estate aforesaid, or their assigns," specifically giving to Deverick in a preceding sentence a one-third share, thus giving him all that the lease of January 1, 1916, passed and could pass to him.

But Deverick further insists that, in the absence of his consent as holder of a vested estate or interest in the land, the court was without power to decree a sale or lease thereof. Without discussing the effect of the proviso contained in section 24b. (8), c. 71, making such consent unnecessary where the property to be leased is oil, gas, or other volatile or fugitive substance, in danger of being withdrawn or drained away, has not the appellant already expressed his consent and willingness to make such a lease by entering into the prior lease of 1916? It is true he did, as he insists, object to the curtailment by any decree entered in the cause of the rights and interests claimed by him in the leased premises as specified in the lease to the United Fuel Gas Company of January 1, 1916. But what boots it if he did object on that ground alone? He did not express an intention or purpose or desire not to lease the land for oil and gas purposes at all, or to any particular lessee, but merely an unwillingness to accept less than the lease he had already executed saved to him. Had he declined to enter into any contract respecting the oil or gas contained in the land, as was done in Brown v. Brown, 83 W. Va. 415, 98 S. E. 428, that case might apply to his relief here. But his willingness to lease the land to the proposed lessee for the production of oil and gas appears from the fact that he first united as lessor in a contract of that kind, one which this suit was brought to correct and validate, in order to make it legally binding and justly efficacious in the accomplishment of the purposes contemplated by the parties thereto. In other words, he prefers to stand upon the terms of a contract that purports to give him what he cannot lawfully insist upon, and refuses to be bound by a contract between the same parties, touching the same subject-matter, and conceding to him all that he can lawfully exact under the circumstances of this case, and that, too, in a suit, to which he is a party, brought to perfect his title to and interest in the land. In no event, however, could he prevent the execution of a lease directed by the court in such a cause as this is, in so far as concerns the interests of the contingent remaindermen, though perhaps he might prevent operations thereunder.

The death of one of the children of Mrs. Ferrell and her husband and the birth of others during the period of her life estate cannot and does not alter the respective rights and relative interests of the parties thereto in any degree. The provisions of that deed remain unalterable as to the rights of the parties thereto or their assigns until the termination of the life estate. When that occurs as the result of the death of Mrs. Ferrell, the child or children born to her and her husband who survive her, whether one or all of them, or their assigns, take the entire fee in the land in controversy, unless in the meantime it is sold or leased, as here, under the provisions of chapter 71 of the Code, and, if it is, the purchaser will acquire an indefeasible title thereto, and the lessee the right to operate thereon, under the terms of the lease; but the proceeds of the sale or lease are to be substituted for and held intact in lieu of the land during the continuance of the life estate, with this qualification: That the life tenant or her assigns of the whole or any part of such estate, as the case may be, are entitled to the whole or the relative part of the interest on such proceeds during her life.

[5] To the extent the decrees provide for the collection and distribution or disposal of the delay rentals and the proceeds derived from the operation of the leased premises, and the interest thereon, until the termination of the estate for the life of Mrs. Ferrell, they are not subject to criticism. The same thing is true as to the directions given therein respecting the revenues to accrue from the lease after the death of the life tenant, and the provision for the payment thereof to such of her children as may survive her, if then of age, or to their assigns. The word "assigns," as used in the decree, comprehends all those who take either immediately or remotely from or under the assignor, whether by conveyance, devise, descent, or act of law (Erichsen v. Tapert, 172 Mich. 457, 138 N. W.

330; Brown v. Crookston Agricultural Ass'n, 34 Minn. 545, 547, 26 N. W. 907; Glenn v. Caldwell, 74 Miss. 49, 52, 20 South. 152; Smith v. Baxter, 62 N. J. Eq. 209, 49 Atl. 1130; 5 C. J. 1310), and therefore includes within its scope such persons as have acquired or may acquire the interests of the infant contingent remaindermen by virtue of proper legal proceedings instituted under statutory authority.

Under this construction the decrees correctly dispose of the case, so far as this appellant is concerned, and will be affirmed.

(85 W. Va. 64)

COVERT et al. v. CHESAPEAKE & O.
R.Y. CO. (No. 3687.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 28, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. WITNESSES  $\S$ 252—SURVEYOR'S BLUEPRINT ADMISSIBLE FOR EXPLANATION OF HIS TESTIMONY.

A map or blueprint made by a surveyor, though not evidence independently of his testimony, is properly admitted in connection therewith for illustration and explanation of his evidence.

2. EVIDENCE  $\S$ 474(11)—OPINIONS OF NON-EXPERTS AS TO DAMAGES TO RIPARIAN OWNER.

The opinions of non-expert witnesses acquainted with the facts and with opportunity and occasion to observe the action of flood waters in a stream, that damages done thereby to the property of a riparian owner were the result of the obstruction placed by defendant in the channel of such stream, is competent and admissible in evidence on the trial of an action for such damages.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES  $\S$ 178(2)—RECOVERY FOR OCCASIONAL DAMAGE TO LANDS OF RIPARIAN OWNERS.

Where a railroad company or other person by temporary or permanent structures or fills built in a stream obstructs the channel and thereby diverts the regular flow of the waters therein resulting in occasional damages to the lands of a riparian owner, such damages in contemplation of law are impermanent, continuous and temporary, as distinguished from permanent damages, and recovery therefor is limited to the damages as from time to time they occur.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES  $\S$ 179(3)—TEMPORARY DAMAGES BY OBSTRUCTION OF STREAM.

In the trial of an action for such impermanent damages it is error to admit evidence of prospective or future damages liable to be sustained by such riparian owner.

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES  $\S$ 179(5)—INSTRUCTION AS TO LIMITATION OF RECOVERY FOR TEMPORARY DAMAGES.

An instruction to the jury in such an action, on the subject of damages, which does not limit recovery to such impermanent or temporary damages as have accrued, constitutes reversible error.

Error to Circuit Court, Boone County.

Action by C. R. Covert and others against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company. Verdict and judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Judgment reversed, verdict set aside, and defendant awarded a new trial.

Fitzpatrick, Campbell, Brown & Davis and C. W. Strickling, all of Huntington, for plaintiff in error.

L. Fulton, of Madison, for defendants in error.

MILLER, P. Plaintiffs sued defendant for damages to their six houses and four lots (sub-divided) in Laurel City addition to the town of Clothier, located on the east bank of Spruce Fork of Little Coal River, in Boone County, and obtained a verdict and judgment for one thousand dollars, of which the defendant complains.

The declaration, in one count, we think good, and the demurrer thereto was properly overruled. The gravamen of the action is that plaintiffs, before or during the progress of the work doing the injury, constructed six houses on said lots; that the defendant owned and operated on the west bank of said river the Spruce Fork Branch of its railway; and that beginning in the early spring of 1915, it filled in with stone and earth a large part of the main channel on the west side of the river opposite their lots located on the east bank; whereby the said river during freshets therein was turned out of its regular channel and thrown over against the east bank, whereby plaintiffs' lots were washed by the waters and caused to fall in and do them the damages for which redress is sought at the hands of the railway company. Their theory was that the fill on the west bank crowded the main channel, forced the waters back and over into the secondary channel opposite their lots, thereby depriving them of the right to have the waters flow in their natural course undisturbed, unless compensated in damages by the defendant company for the injuries sustained thereby.

[1] The first complaint is that the court over defendant's objection admitted improper evidence. A part of this evidence consisted of a map or blueprint made by one of the surveyors, not claimed by him to be entirely accurate, but used and referred to by him to illustrate and apply his evidence to the conditions on the ground, and admitted in evidence for that purpose. Of course the map itself was not evidence independently of the testimony of the witness, but it was properly admitted in connection therewith to illustrate and make his testimony clear to the jury. For such purpose it was admissible, and there was no error. State v. Harr, 38 W. Va. 58, 17 S. E. 794; Poling v. Ohio River Railroad Co., 38 W. Va. 645, 18 S. E. 782, 24 L. R. A. 215; King v. Jordan, 46 W. Va. 106, 32 S. E. 1022.

[2] Another point on the admission of evidence is that certain of plaintiffs' non-expert witnesses were permitted to give in evidence their opinions that the alleged damages to plaintiffs' property were the result of the fill made by defendant in the river. We do not think there is any substantial merit in this point. The witnesses so examined were residents of the village or neighborhood and acquainted with the conditions before and after the fill was made, and their opinions based thereon were competent to go in evidence to the jury for what they were worth. This rule is well established by our decisions. Walker v. Strosnider, 67 W. Va. 39, 67 S. E. 1087, 21 Ann. Cas. 1; Kunst v. Grafton, 67 W. Va. 20, 67 S. E. 74, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1201; Cline v. N. & W. Railway Co., 69 W. Va. 436, 438, 71 S. E. 705.

[3, 4] Another point involving, it is claimed, more serious consequences, is that plaintiffs were permitted over defendant's objection to prove by a number of witnesses as the basis of recovery the market value of their property immediately before and the value thereof after the fill and the resulting injury up to the time of the institution of this suit, but not including any probable damages or injury from subsequent actions of the river. The theory upon which plaintiffs proceeded at the trial and on which the case was submitted to the jury was that the damages were not permanent but impermanent or continuous and recurrent, and that they were properly limited in their recovery to damages accrued up to the time of the bringing of the suit, and on this theory the railway company as well as the trial court seems to have concurred.

The law laid down by prior decisions of this court is that where a railroad company or other person by structures built in a stream, whether permanent or temporary, changes the current of the stream and causes it from time to time as freshets come to wash away the land of a riparian owner and do him injury, such injury is not of a permanent nature in law, but intermittent, recurrent and continuous, so that damages once for all cannot be recovered. Eells v. Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co., 49 W. Va. 63, 38 S. E. 479, 87 Am. St. Rep. 787; Pickens v. Coal River Boom & Timber Co., 51 W. Va. 445, 41 S. E. 400, 90 Am. St. Rep. 819; Id., 66 W. Va. 10, 65 S. E. 865, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 354; McHenry v. City of Parkersburg, 66 W.

Va. 533, 66 S. E. 750, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860. In the second of the Pickens Cases cited Judge Brannon re-examined the questions with reference to our prior decisions and cases cited from other states, and reaffirmed the proposition as to the character of such damages and the doctrine of the prior decisions. The test according to these authorities is whether the whole injury results from the original tortious act or from the wrongful continuance of the state of facts produced by those acts. As Judge Brannon says (66 W. Va. 17, 65 S. E. 868, 24 L. R. A. [N. S.] 354):

"We do not test the matter only by the permanent or impermanent character of the structure, but by the damage. Does it all occur at once or come occasionally or as time goes on?"

We agree with counsel on both sides of the case that the facts proven call for the application of the rule relating to impermanent or continuous and recurrent damages. But the point of error urged by counsel for defendant is that conceding the character of the damages, the court admitted evidence of permanent damages. The evidence of plaintiff C. R. Covert and of a number of his other witnesses on this subject was that prior to the filling in of the river by defendant, the value of the entire property, consisting of the four lots and six houses, was $5,500.00 to $6,000.00. Following which the question put to each of these witnesses, substantially was: "Leaving out of consideration the question of future damages to the property from washings, what would you consider the fair market value of the property as it existed on September 20, 1916, the date of the institution of the suit?" The answers generally were, about $3,500.00, the difference, $2,000.00, being the estimated damages. We see nothing particularly wrong with this evidence, if in their estimate the witnesses limited themselves to the elements properly entering into such impermanent damages, such as loss of rental value, the value of the land actually taken or washed away, interference with egress and ingress to the property, or other physical damage thereto, if any. There was some evidence of loss of rental value, but none except as may have been covered by the evidence relating to the value of the property before and after the building of the work as to the value of the land washed away. There was some evidence of interference with egress and ingress to the rear ends of the lots. The character of the questions propounded to these witnesses was very like the questions allowed in Cline v. N. & W. Railway Co., supra, relied on by plaintiffs in this case. In the case here, however, the plaintiffs and some of their own witnesses were permitted to depart from these elements of damages and to introduce elements of permanent damages. For example, plaintiff C. R. Covert testified that he would not want to make investments in the property under present conditions, that he did not consider the property safe on account of the fill, and that he would not want to put his money in something that was not safe, showing that he had in mind permanent and future damages. Another witness seems to have taken into consideration the fact that plaintiffs did not own the lots above theirs where any work would have to be done to protect their lots. Besides, an instruction to the jury to be hereafter disposed of shows that the case as submitted to the jury did not properly limit them to temporary damages, as did the instructions in the Cline Case.

Counsel for defendant rely on the rule in McHenry v. City of Parkersburg, supra, and Pickens v. Coal River Boom & Timber Co., 68 W. Va. 10, 65 S. E. 865, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 354. In the McHenry Case it was held to be reversible error in a case of impermanent or recurring damages to admit evidence of the difference between the value of the property before it was subjected to the injury and its value afterwards. But in that case the witnesses were not called upon, as here and in the Cline Case, to exclude prospective or future damages.

[5] The next point of error involves the instructions to the jury, given and refused. Defendant's instruction number 1, a peremptory instruction to find for the defendant, was properly refused. It was probably based on the theory that the fill did not cause the damages. But on this point the evidence was conflicting, and the fact was one for the jury. Instructions numbers 2, 4½ and B., on the theory of want of negligence in the construction of the work by the defendant, were properly refused. Plaintiff did not allege or rely on, or attempt to prove negligent construction of the work, but the damaging of their property for public use without just compensation by defendant. Defendant's instruction Z would have limited plaintiffs in their recovery simply to loss of rental value of the property. This is not the law. Certainly if entitled to recover anything, they would be entitled to damages for land actually taken and sustained by physical invasion of their property up to the time of the suit.

Of plaintiffs' instruction number 1, based on the theory of a diversion of the waters from their natural course by the defendant and causing the cutting away of a portion of their lots, it tells the jury if they so find, they should also find for the plaintiffs. This instruction is good as far as it goes, although it does not limit them in the amount of damages or define the rule of measurement to govern them in their findings.

Instruction number 2 is plainly bad in so far as it told the jury that the measure of damages was the difference between the market value of the property immediately before the first washing of the property after the fill was built, as given in evidence, and its market value on September 20, 1916. It did not exclude prospective or future damages, and as there was some evidence of permanent and future damages admitted, the instruction based thereon was calculated to mislead the jury into an improper finding. Such an instruction is condemned by the McHenry Case. In the Cline Case the instruction given was properly confined to damages accrued to the date of the suit and excluded prospective or future damages.

It is argued that the verdict was excessive, but as there is to be a new trial, it is not proper to consider that question.

Our conclusion is to reverse the judgment, set aside the verdict, and award the defendant a new trial.

(85 W. Va. 37)

CURTIS et al. v. CURTIS et al. (No. 3720.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 28, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. WITNESSES ⇐140(7), 146—HEIR INCOMPETENT TO TESTIFY AS TO MENTAL CAPACITY OF GRANTOR.

One who would inherit an interest in land, in case a deed, which is attacked upon the ground of lack of capacity of the grantor, is set aside, is incompetent to testify as to the mental capacity of the grantor in such deed, and this disqualification extends to the wife or husband of such person.

2. WITNESSES ⇐176(1) — WHERE GRANTEE TESTIFIES TO COMPETENCY OF GRANTOR ADVERSE PARTIES CAN TESTIFY.

Where, however, the grantee in such deed testifies as to the mental capacity of the grantor therein, those seeking to overthrow the same become competent witnesses upon that question under the exception contained in section 23 of chapter 130 (sec. 4879) of the Code of 1913.

3. DEEDS ⇐211(4)—PRIMA FACIE PROOF OF UNDUE INFLUENCE.

Proof that the grantor in a deed was feeble, both in body and mind, reposed great confidence and trust in her son, the grantee therein, who acted as her agent under a power of attorney giving him full authority to manage, dispose of, and convey her estate, that he procured his attorney to prepare the deed conveying all of the grantor's estate to him for an insubstantial consideration to the exclusion of another son and a daughter, who were left entirely unprovided for, and which deed was executed while the grantor was living with the grantee in his home, without any independent advice being obtained by the grantor or any opportunity for obtaining such advice, establishes prima facie the charge of undue influence by the son; and, where such prima facie case is not overthrown by clear evidence that the grantor was of sound mind and acted independently and upon her own judgment in executing such deed, the same will be set aside.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Upshur County.

Suit by Clinton A. Curtis and Mollie E. McNemar against I. R. Curtis and others, to cancel a deed. Decree for plaintiffs, and the named defendant appeals. Affirmed and remanded to take the accounts prayed for in the bill.

C. N. Pew and H. Roy Waugh, both of Buckhannon, for appellant.

Young & McWhorter, of Buckhannon, for appellees.

RITZ, J. The plaintiffs, Clinton A. Curtis and Mollie E. McNemar, and the defendant I. R. Curtis are children of Katherine E. Smith, who was twice married, her first husband being Isom Curtis, the father of the plaintiffs and the above-named defendant. After the marriage of Mrs. Smith to her last husband she resided with him on a farm in Upshur county until the spring of 1912, when their house was destroyed by fire. They then for something like a year lived with various of the children of Mr. Smith by his first wife. Early in the year 1913 they acquired a house in the town of Buckhannon, in what is known as the Liggett addition, which was conveyed to Mrs. Smith, although paid for by her husband, in consideration that she release her contingent right of dower in some other lands owned by him. The Smiths continued to reside at this place until the death of the husband in the latter part of July, 1915. At that time it is conceded by all parties that Mrs. Smith was in a very feeble physical condition, and it is contended by the plaintiffs that her mental faculties were very much impaired, if not entirely destroyed. After the funeral of Mr. Smith, and on the same day, the plaintiffs say that at the instance of their brother I. R. Curtis they entered into an arrangement for taking care of their mother. According to their contention it was agreed among them that her mental and physical condition was such that she was not able to take care of herself or of her property, and they agreed that she should live with that one of her children that she might select, and that such one should receive reasonable compensation for caring for her out of her property, and at her death what remained should be divided equally among them. She was allowed to remain at her home for a few days after her husband's death in charge of Mr. and Mrs. Queen, who were employed for the purpose of caring for her. She was then removed to the home of her daughter Mrs. McNemar in Lewis county, where she remained until about the 25th of September, 1915. At that time she was taken back to Buckhannon and placed in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Queen, where she remained until about the 3d of October, when she was taken to the home of I. R. Curtis, also in the town of Buckhannon, where she remained until her death on the 19th of December, 1915. On the 30th day of July, 1915, the defendant I. R. Curtis procured from his mother a power of attorney, authorizing him to transact her business, sue for, and recover any moneys that might be due her from any one, collect the same, to compound or compromise for the same and give discharges therefor, make settlement of her interest in the estate of her late husband Phillip Smith, and also of her interest in the estate of her deceased father, Randolph Jackson, to sign any bond, deed, obligation, contract or other paper, to indorse promissory notes and renew the same from time to time, to draw any money she might have out of any banks, to sell or lease any part or parts of her real estate, and to make all necessary deeds of conveyance, with all necessary covenants of warranty and assurances of title, and sign, seal, and acknowledge the same, and to do all other acts and things in relation to all or any part of her affairs that she might do herself. This power of attorney he had recorded in the office of the clerk of the county court of Upshur county. On the 17th day of November, 1915, a deed was executed by Mrs. Smith, conveying to I. R. Curtis all of her real estate, consisting of her house and lot in the town of Buckhannon, and her interest in her father's farm in Lewis county. This deed was also placed upon the record on the same day that it was executed and acknowledged, but the plaintiffs say that they had no actual knowledge of it until after the death of their mother in December. Shortly after their mother's death they instituted this suit for the purpose of setting aside and canceling said deed, upon the ground that it was in violation of the agreement had between the plaintiffs and the defendant I. R. Curtis in regard to taking care of their mother, and the division of the property, and upon the further ground that she was without capacity to make such deed at the time she made the same, and that it was procured from her by undue and fraudulent influence. Much evidence was taken upon the question of the capacity of the grantor to make this deed, and to show the relationship of the various parties to the transaction. The circuit court entered a decree canceling the deed, holding that Mrs. Smith did not have capacity to execute the same, and that it was procured from her by the undue influence of the grantee. From this decree this appeal is prosecuted.

[1, 2] In support of the allegations of their bill that their mother did not have capacity to make the deed sought to be overthrown, both of the plaintiffs, as well as their respective spouses, testify as to the mental capacity of Mrs. Smith. There was no objection made to their testimony in this regard at the time it was introduced, nor was it objected to for this reason at any time in the lower court, but it is now for the first time suggested that they were not competent to testify as to the mental capacity of the grantor in that deed, for the reason that it would be in effect testifying to personal communications with the deceased grantor. It is well settled in this jurisdiction that the one claiming under a deceased person cannot, in a suit affecting his estate, give his opinion as to the mental capacity of such deceased person, as such opinion must be based upon communications had with the deceased. Impressions or conclusions reached by the witness as to the sanity or insanity of a deceased party must be arrived at from observations of the conduct of, or from communications had with, such deceased person, and in either event they fall within the inhibition of the statute. Trowbridge v. Stone, 42 W. Va. 454, 26 S. E. 363; Freeman v. Freeman, 71 W. Va. 303, 76 S. E. 657. And it is likewise true that where a witness is disqualified to testify as to such personal communications, his spouse is under like disability. Freeman v. Freeman, supra; Kilgore v. Hanley, 27 W. Va. 451.

But the plaintiffs say that, while these witnesses were not competent to testify at the time their evidence was taken, they became competent before any objection was made thereto, or before their evidence was ever read by the chancellor, because the defendant and his wife, who were under the same disability, testified as to the mental condition of Mrs. Smith. It is quite true that the defendant and his wife both testify at length as to the mental capacity of the grantor in the deed, and give their opinions in regard thereto. It is insisted that this was testifying in regard to the same communications or transactions to which the testimony of the plaintiffs was directed. It may be said that the observations of the grantor by the witnesses extend practically over the same period of time, they were of the same general character, and the opinions formed are conclusions reached from the same communications or transactions with the deceased party, and if one of the parties testifies in regard to such communications or transactions, under the exception contained in section 23 of chapter 130 (sec. 4879) of the Code, the other interested party is authorized to give his version of the transactions or communications. This was the conclusion reached by this court in the case of Wooldridge v. Wooldridge, 69 W. Va. 554, 558, 72 S. E. 654, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 653. Our conclusion, therefore, is that, while the plaintiffs and their spouses were not competent witnesses at the time their testimony was taken, still by the action of the defendant in introducing himself and his wife to testify in regard to the mental condition of his mother he made this evidence competent, and he cannot now complain that it was considered by the chancellor in reaching his conclusion.

[3] As before stated, much evidence is taken by the parties to this suit to establish the mental condition of the grantor in the deed. A number of the children of Phillip Smith, the second husband of Mrs. Smith, were introduced. They had had long acquaintance with Mrs. Smith, and were nearly of the same age, Phillip Smith being many years older than his wife; it appearing that he was past the age of 90 years when he died, while his wife was only about 68. These children testify that they had known Mrs. Smith for many, many years; that in the year 1912, when the house in which the Smiths lived was destroyed by fire, Mrs. Smith suffered from a severe shock of some kind, which seemed to very seriously depress her; that her physical and mental condition continued to grow worse from that day until the day of her death. They testify that during the last illness of their father they were at the house of the Smiths frequently, some of them almost constantly for quite awhile; that Mrs. Smith was at that time in a very deplorable physical and mental condition; that she did not appreciate the gravity of her husband's illness, and did not understand that he had died. It is insisted that these witnesses were biased and prejudiced against the defendant I. R. Curtis, and that little credence should be given to their testimony. After a careful perusal of the record we cannot see any justification for this conclusion. They certainly had the means of knowledge, and we see nothing in the record to indicate that their testimony was fabricated because of ill feeling toward the defendant. They had frequent communications with Mrs. Smith after her husband's death, up until the time she died, and they are all of the opinion that for a considerable time before her death her mental condition was such that she did not know what she was doing. Other witnesses are introduced who also testify in the same way. Mr. and Mrs. Queen, who were at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Smith before Mr. Smith's death, and who nursed both of them during that time, and stayed there with Mrs. Smith for a short time after the funeral of Mr. Smith, and at whose house Mrs. Smith stayed after her return from her daughter's in Lewis county in the fall of 1915, testify as to her condition during the time they were at the Smith residence with her and during the time she was at their house in the fall of 1915. They testify that she was incapable of understanding what she was doing during that time. They say that at the time the power of attorney was executed she did not realize what she had done, and that after her son had procured her signature to this paper she inquired of them at frequent intervals what it was that she had executed. They say that while she was at their house she thought she was at her own residence, and called attention to the fact that some trees that were formerly in her yard were not there now; that she frequently did not recognize her close friends and associates of long standing. It is also testified by witnesses that on some occasions she did not recognize her own children. Two physicians testify on behalf of the plaintiffs, one who attended Mrs. Smith while she was at her daughter's in Lewis county, and the other who attended her for some time at Buckhannon. The first of these only saw her on two or three occasions, but he attended her professionally at those times, and says that he found her suffering from paralysis, that she was mentally incapacitated, and that there was in his judgment no possibility of her improving, but that he was reasonably certain that she would continue to grow worse until her death. The other physician saw her on many more occasions, and his conclusion was about the same. However, two physicians testify on behalf of the defendant, and their opportunities were equally as good as those of the physicians above mentioned. One of these only saw her, however, on one occasion, and that was on the very day she executed the deed. He says that he was present for about 30 minutes, and went there for the purpose of making an examination; that she answered his questions intelligently, and he saw nothing to indicate that there was anything wrong with her mind; that in his judgment she was suffering from locomotor ataxia, which disease does not necessarily affect the mind. The other physician who testified for the defendant had attended Mrs. Smith from a short time before her husband's death until her death, with the exception of the time that she was in Lewis county at her daughter's. He testifies that he saw her on many occasions during that time, and that he believes she was suffering from locomotor ataxia, which does not necessarily affect the mind until shortly before death, and that he did not believe that Mrs. Smith's mind was seriously affected until three or four days before she died, although he admits that during all of the time she was weak, both in body and mind. Other witnesses testify that they had seen Mrs. Smith both before and after her husband's death, on various occasions; that she always knew them, conversed with them intelligently, and seemed to clearly understand what she was doing.

That her mind was affected there is no doubt. Whether it was affected to the extent that the disposition she made of her property under the circumstances thereof was not in fact her own act is the question we have here. The defendant I. R. Curtis was intrusted by her with the full management of all of her property by the power of attorney before referred to. This conferred upon him large powers, even to the extent of selling and conveying any of her estate. It shows that she had the utmost confidence in him. In fact it may be said that it is strong evidence that he exercised a controlling influence with her even at that time. It is also worthy of remark that at the time he procured this power of attorney he said nothing about it to either his brother or sister, and they had no knowledge of it until after their mother's death. He contends, of course, that he believed his mother was entirely capable of conducting her own affairs, and that he only took this power of attorney from her for the reason that she was physically weak and unable to get around to look after her business, but why did he incorporate in it authority to sell and convey her real estate if she was entirely competent for the purpose of making a deed? It would have required no physical exertion upon her part to have done this. Then, too, he lived many miles away in another part of the state, and if his mother's convenience was his only motive, this would have been better served by conferring the power upon his brother who lived in the same town with the mother. There is another significant fact in connection with this power of attorney, and that is this recital in it: "I am doing this because I am physically unable to look after these matters, but yet of sound mind." Both of the plaintiffs and the wife of Clinton A. Curtis all testify that on the day of Phillip Smith's funeral they and the defendant I. R. Curtis agreed among themselves that Mrs. Smith was mentally incapable of transacting her business; that this was I. R. Curtis' own suggestion, and that they assented to it because it was a fact. They introduced two letters written by the defendant I. R. Curtis on the 31st of August, 1915, one to his sister, and the other to his brother. In the letter to his sister he insists on their getting together and agreeing on how his mother shall be taken care of, and insists that his sister be compensated for her care and attention to her, and also states that anything that is left of the mother's estate after they have provided for her they will divide equally among themselves. He also makes the suggestion in this letter that there is no necessity of worrying their mother about it, for she in all her suffering cannot have a clear conception of what she wants, but that he is sure she will want all of her children to share equally. Substantially the same statements are made in the letter written on the same day to his brother. These letters, it is urged, are inconsistent with the statement that he believed his mother's mental condition was sound, and that she was competent to take care of her affairs. Pursuant to these letters he did come to the home of his sister in Lewis county where his mother was then staying, and removed her to Buckhannon. He claims that he did this because his mother desired it, she complaining that her daughter's children disturbed her. The defendant then kept her at his house in Buckhannon until she died in December. It appears that on the 15th of November he had the deed prepared which is sought to be set aside in this case. He says that he did it at the repeated solicitations of his mother. It conveys all of her property to him, in consideration that he support and maintain her during her life. It was reasonably certain that she could live but a short time. This is shown clearly by the medical testimony, and while he says that he was reluctant to have his mother execute this deed, it does not appear that he ever suggested that she consult with her other children in regard to it, or in fact with any one else, nor is there any evidence that she ever did consult with any one else in regard to it. At the time the deed was acknowledged it was not read over to her, the defendant making the statement that he had read it to her the day before, and she knew what was in it. The officer who took the acknowledgment and the witness who was present and witnessed her mark say that she assented to this statement, and when she was asked if she acknowledged the deed expressed herself in the affirmative, and that this was all that passed at the time of the execution of the paper. It is rather significant that on this very day, not only the doctor who had been attending her, but another doctor who had never seen her before, and who was never called to attend her afterward, called to examine her just a short time after she executed the deed. While the defendant placed this deed on record on the same day that it was procured, he never said a word to his brother about it, although they lived right in the same town, and saw each other practically every day, nor did he ever mention the matter to his sister. Mrs. Smith, it cannot be doubted, reposed the utmost confidence in her son, the defendant. She was feeble, not only in body, but in mind. He acted as her agent. Under the power of attorney which she had given him he was her other self, and we do not hesitate to say that a deed executed by her, conveying to him all of her estate, practically without consideration, without any advice or consultation from any one else, is prima facie evidence of undue influence in the procurement of it. Sperry v. Johnson, 80 W. Va. 142, 92 S. E. 574; Turner v. Hinchman, 72 W. Va. 384, 79 S. E. 18; Samuel v. Marshall, 3 Leigh (Va.) 567; Hartman v. Strickler, 82 Va. 225; Whitelaw v. Sims, 90 Va. 588, 19 S. E. 113; Leonard v. Burtie, 226 Ill. 422, 80 N. E. 992; In re Hess's Will, 48 Minn. 504, 51 N. W. 614, 31 Am. St. Rep. 665, and note at page 670, etc.; Underhill on Wills, § 137. This prima facie case is not overcome by the other evidence. In fact we are of opinion that it is strengthened thereby. There are many cases in this jurisdiction in which wills and deeds have been attacked for want of capacity upon the part of the grantors therein. One case furnishes very little light in the determination of another. The relationship of the parties and the conditions which surround them are always different, and the motives which actuate men in the transaction of business are so influenced by these peculiar conditions and circumstances that the decision in one case furnishes little assistance in the determination of another. In this case the learned judge of the trial court has found that Mrs. Smith did not have mental capacity to make this deed, and that the same was procured by undue influence. His findings were based upon a careful review of all the evidence, and we will not reverse the same unless convinced that they are not supported by the showing made. We cannot say that in this case.

Our conclusion, therefore, is to affirm the decree complained of, and remand the cause for the purpose of taking the accounts prayed for in the bill.

(85 W. Va. 46)

BROWNING v. BROWNING et al.
(No. 8533.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 28, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS §130(2)—APPLICATION OF STATUTE AUTHORIZING NEW ACTION AFTER DISMISSAL.

The statute (section 19, c. 104, Code [sec. 4432]) which saves to a plaintiff the right to bring a new action on the same cause within one year after the dismissal, for any cause which could not be pleaded as a bar thereto, of a prior action brought in time, "notwithstanding the expiration of the time within which a new action or suit must otherwise have been brought," applies only to those causes of action which, under the general statute of limitation applicable thereto, would otherwise be barred before the new action is commenced, and lengthens rather than shortens the period of limitation prescribed by the general statute. If there is no such bar, or if there is one whose limitation has not yet run against the cause of action, the section has no application, and nothing except laches or the running of such limitation will prevent the institution and maintenance of a second suit.

2. EQUITY §71(1)—LACHES IN ENFORCEMENT OF RIGHT OF ACTION.

Whether laches does or does not operate to defeat enforcement of a right asserted is not always to be determined merely by a consideration of the time that has elapsed since the accrual of the right to sue.

3. EQUITY §71(1)—POSTPONEMENT OF ASSERTION OF CLAIM NOT DEFEATING EQUITABLE RELIEF.

Unless accompanied by circumstances affording a reasonable basis for presuming an intention on the part of the plaintiff to abandon the claim asserted in the suit, or such as render the transaction out of which the claim arose obscure, or render difficult, if not impossible, the production of evidence to defeat the claim and thereby prevent injustice, the mere postponement of the assertion thereof does not ordinarily warrant refusal of relief in equity.

4. EQUITY §83—EXCUSABLE LACHES IN ENFORCEMENT OF CLAIM.

Where in the meantime defendant or those claiming under him have recognized or acknowledged directly or impliedly the existence of the right asserted by plaintiff, such recognition generally excuses the delay of the plaintiff in suing to enforce such right.

5. PLEADING §214(1)—DEMURRER AS AN ADMISION.

A demurrer admits to be true the material facts set up in a pleading and all reasonable inferences or necessary presumptions fairly attributable to such facts.

6. PLEADING §48—SUFFICIENCY ON DEMURRER.

A pleading is sufficient upon demurrer if it informs defendant of the nature of the demand made upon him, and states such facts as will enable the court to say that, if they are proved as alleged and in the light of all reasonable inferences fairly attributable thereto, they establish a good cause of action.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Logan County.

Suit by Jesse V. Browning against Minerva Browning and others. Demurrer to bill sustained, and suit dismissed, without reservation, plaintiff's bill of review for error apparent on the face of the record dismissed on defendant's demurrer, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, demurrers overruled, and cause remanded.

J. B. Wilkinson and Butts & Minter, all of Logan, for appellant.

LYNCH, J. By three successive, but vain, efforts made in 1912 and in June and November of 1918, plaintiff endeavored to obtain a decree declaring a deed made by him to his brother, David T. Browning, for 50 acres of land in Logan county, to be a mortgage to secure the payment of $600 to the grantee, rather than a grant to him of the land in fee simple absolute, as on its face it purports to be. The deed, the acknowledgment, and recordation thereof bear date as of August 7, 1903; the consideration expressed therein being "one dollar and other considerations" in hand paid, the receipt of which is acknowledged. Some time during the early part of October, 1912, it appears from the allegations of the bill demurred to, plaintiff tendered defendant $600 and the interest that had accrued thereon in the meantime, and demanded a reconveyance of the land "pursuant to the agreement and understanding" had between them in 1903, but the grantee declined to accept the money tendered and to execute the reconveyance demanded. Thereupon ensued the first suit, which on November 4, 1912, plaintiff voluntarily dismissed, reserving in the dismissal order the right to institute and prosecute another suit based upon the same cause and for the same relief. This dismissal, according to the allegations of the bill, was due to the intercession of the father of the grantor and grantee, with the expectation of effecting a compromise and amicable settlement of the matters in controversy between them, but which they failed to consummate. Plaintiff then brought this suit at July rules, 1918, and to the bill then filed defendant demurred, and the court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the suit without reservation. Later in the same year plaintiff filed a bill of review for error apparent upon the face of the record, which terminated likewise upon defendant's demurrer thereto. Hence this appeal.

[1, 2] The only ground assigned as cause of demurrer to the second bill, as appears from the order of dismissal, and the only one assigned in argument by counsel, is "that at the institution of this suit more than one year had expired since the dismissal of a former suit on the same cause of action between the same parties"—this upon the supposition that section 19, c. 104, Code (section 4432), is decisive of the question here involved. The applicability of this section to a suit brought to impress upon a deed absolute on its face the character of a mortgage and to decree accordingly does not seem apparent. This is not an unusual, but a common, provision. It appears in many limitation statutes substantially embodied in the same language. It saves to the plaintiff the right to bring an action within one year after the abatement of a prior action brought in time for any of the reasons therein mentioned, or the reversal or arrest of a judgment therein recovered on a ground not preclusive of a new action on the same cause, or a dismissal for want of security for costs or for any other cause which could not be pleaded as a bar to the action, "notwithstanding the expiration of the time within which a new action or suit must otherwise have been brought." The enlarged remedy thereby provided applies in this state as well to suits in equity as to actions at law (Hevener v. Hannah, 59 W. Va. 476, 53 S. E. 635); but not so, it seems, in Virginia (Dawes v. N. Y. P. & N. R. Co., 96 Va. 733, 32 S. E. 778). But obviously, as the language quoted above indicates, a statutory bar must exist and the necessity for invoking the exemption therefrom sufficiently appear before the privilege is available by way of extending the right to sue. If there is no such bar, or if there is one whose limitation had not run against the cause of action, nothing except laches will prevent the institution and maintenance of a second suit, especially where, as here, the order of dismissal reserved to plaintiff the right to renew his suit to obtain the relief sought by him in the first instance, though such reservation may not always be necessary in such case. Section 19 applies only to those causes of action which, under the general statute of limitation applicable thereto, would otherwise be barred before the new action is commenced, and lengthens rather than shortens the period of limitation prescribed therein. There is no statute of limitations in this state applicable to a suit such as this, and hence if plaintiff's right to sue is not barred by laches, but still exists, section 19 did not operate to effect a termination of such right to sue at the end of one year from the decree of dismissal. Instead such right continued and still continues, unless barred by laches.

[3, 4] Whether this equitable doctrine does or does not apply to defeat enforcement of the right asserted is not always to be determined merely by a consideration of the time that has elapsed since the accrual of the right to sue. Cranmer v. McSwords, 24 W. Va. 594; Depue v. Miller, 65 W. Va. 120, 64 S. E. 740, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 775. Unless accompanied by circumstances affording a reasonable basis for presuming an intention on the part of the plaintiff to abandon the claim asserted in the suit, or such as makes the transaction out of which the claim is said to have arisen obscure, or renders it difficult, if not impossible, to produce evidence to defeat the claim and thereby prevent injustice, the mere postponement of the assertion of the claim does not ordinarily warrant refusal of relief in equity. Tazewell v. Saunders, 13 Grat. (Va.) 354; Tidball v. Shenandoah Nat. Bank, 100 Va. 741, 42 S. E. 867. If no substantial obstruction probably will appear to defeat a fair investigation of the merits of the claim preferred, and a just ascertainment of the rights of the parties with respect thereto, the doctrine of laches does not apply. Whitlock v. Johnson, 87 Va. 323, 333, 12 S. E. 614. While it is a sound and salutary rule that he who resorts to a court of equity to enforce his rights must do so within a reasonable time, all things considered, and if he negligently, unreasonably, and unjustifiably delays the prosecution of his demand until there is such a change or alteration in the condition or situation of the parties, as by death or loss of evidence incident thereto, or such as may work injustice to either interested party by reason of insolvency or other untoward circumstances, or where to enforce the claim would operate to the prejudice of purchasers for value without notice, actual or constructive, the bar does apply (Smith v. Thompson, 7 Grat. [Va.] 112, 54 Am. Dec. 126; Despard v. Despard, 53 W. Va. 443, 44 S. E. 448), yet the rule is not inflexible.

Such procrastination, continued for seven years, was held in Pethtel v. McCullough, 49 W. Va. 520, 39 S. E. 199, to be insufficient to warrant the dismissal of a suit on the ground of lack of due diligence in prosecuting it, where the parties to the transaction still survived; and in some cases the same rule may apply, though one or both parties thereto may be dead. Alexander v. Byrd, 85 Va. 690, 8 S. E. 577; Beverly v. Rhodes, 86 Va. 415, 10 S. E. 572. And while it is undoubtedly true that equity will refuse to enforce demands that have become stale by reason of the lapse of time, and where the claimant, by his inaction continued during many years, inferentially has abandoned the prosecution of his claim, as held in numerous cases cited in 9 Michie's Digest, 99, yet if in the meantime defendant or those claiming under him acknowledged directly or impliedly the existence of the right asserted by plaintiff, such recognition, the authorities say, excuses the delay of the plaintiff in suing in equity to enforce such right. Griffin v. Macaulay, 7 Grat. 476, 582; Applegate v. Wellsburg Banking, etc., Co., 68 W. Va. 477, 69 S. E. 901; Southern Railway Co. v. Gregg, 101 Va. 308, 43 S. E. 570.

Was there such a recognition of the validity of the claim of the plaintiff as these authorities say excuses the delay now relied on to defeat the relief sought by plaintiff in this suit? David T. Browning, the grantee in the deed, seems to have died sometime in the year 1915 (see Record, p. 28), leaving surviving Minerva Browning, his widow, and Millard F. Carson, Oakley, Dewey, Tweel, and John R. Browning, his children and heirs at law, all of whom are defendants to this suit; the five children last named being infants and represented by Ira P. Hager, guardian ad litem duly appointed by the court.

Though David T. Browning did refuse in 1912 to accept the money tendered him by the plaintiff, and to reconvey the land when such conveyance was demanded by the plaintiff, according to the allegations of the bill, yet it likewise appears from the bill that plaintiff was required to join, or for some reason did join, in the execution of a deed conveying a railroad right of way through the 50 acres to Cole and Crane in February, 1913. This he did inferentially, as we may presume, because of the claim now set up respecting the nature and purpose of the negotiation terminating in the deed of August 7, 1903, between the two brothers. Indeed, plaintiff's joining in the execution of the Cole and Crane deed, 10 years after the deed of 1903, is not and perhaps cannot be explained on any other hypothesis than that he then insisted upon his right to the consideration agreed upon by the parties to that transaction. That he did so at that time and for that reason and none other is emphasized by the further fact that the $600 paid by Cole and Crane for the right of way granted to them was deposited, presumably by and with the advice and consent of all the parties interested, and permitted to remain in the hands of J. Cary Alderson "on account of the contention * * * regarding the ownership of said land and the right to redeem by Jesse V. Browning," the plaintiff in this suit and appellant here.

[5] A demurrer admits to be true the material facts set up in a pleading and all reasonable inferences or necessary presumptions fairly attributable to such facts. Clark v. West, 193 N. Y. 349, 86 N. E. 1; Pollitz v. Wabash R. R. Co., 207 N. Y. 113, 128, 100 N. E. 721; Wills v. Coal Co., 52 Or. 70, 96 Pac. 528; Oregon Home Builders v. Eisman, 88 Or. 611, 172 Pac. 114; Goshen Milling Co. v. Bailey, 186 Ind. 377, 114 N. E. 869; Klemix v. Jewelry Co., 122 Minn. 380, 142 N. W. 871; Preiss v. Zins, 122 Minn. 441, 142 N. W. 822; Klann v. Minn., 161 Wis. 517, 154 N. W. 996; 31 Cyc. 336, and cases cited. Besides, the bill explicitly charges and the demurrer admits that the $600 paid to Alderson was "to be held by him in trust and eventually paid to the party legally adjudicated to be the rightful owner of said lands," and that, although later directed by the court to be paid to Minerva Browning, the widow and administratrix of David T. Browning, said sum and the interest thereon accrued and to accrue is the money of the plaintiff, and to be accounted for to him or credited upon the debt secured by the deed from him to his brother treated as a mortgage, when the amount thereof is ascertained.

[6] As said in Depue v. Miller, 65 W. Va. 120, 64 S. E. 740, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 775:

"If the right of the plaintiff is clear and not dependent upon oral evidence, and no injury or prejudice to the defendant has resulted from the delay, as by the death of parties, change of conditions, loss of evidence, or the like, the cause of action is not barred by laches, unless the lapse of time and circumstances are such as to raise a presumption of intent, on the part of the plaintiff, to abandon or relinquish the right."

Here the death of the grantee in the deed of 1903 out of which has arisen this controversy operates to some extent alike to the prejudice of both parties. Neither of them can explain the circumstances under which the negotiations leading up to the deed occurred or the purposes which it was intended to serve, that is, whether it is what it purports to be, a conveyance of the fee-simple title without any inconsistent contemporaneous agreement qualifying its apparent purpose, or a mortgage, as plaintiff contends it is. Death has closed the mouth of one and the statute (section 23, c. 130, Code [sec. 4879]) the mouth of the other, so that neither can speak of the transaction itself or the negotiations between them preliminary thereto. Nor can we say the plaintiff's rights depend wholly or for the most part upon oral testimony. Nothing in the bill shows whether the alleged agreement qualifying the transaction was or was not documentary; and no rule of pleading requires more than is necessary to show a good cause for relief. A pleading is sufficient upon demurrer if it informs defendant of the nature of the demand made upon him and states such facts as will enable the court to say that, if they are proved as alleged and in the light of all reasonable inferences fairly attributable to such facts, they establish a good cause of action. Snodgrass v. Wolf, 11 W. Va. 158; Hortenstein v. Virginia, etc. Ry. Co., 102 Va. 914, 47 S. E. 996; Virginia Portland Cement Co. v. Luck, 103 Va. 427, 49 S. E. 577; Stonegap Colliery Co. v. Hamilton, 119 Va. 271, 89 S. E. 305, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 60.

And while David T. Browning and his wife on January 15, 1915, granted to the defendant A. J. Dalton another part, but not all, of the residue of the tract, and they alone joined as grantors therein, the bill alleges and the demurrer admits that Dalton had full knowledge and notice that plaintiff claimed title to the tract subject only to the payment of the debt to his brother. If plaintiff can by proof establish the fact to be as he has alleged, Dalton cannot complain if he loses the benefit of his purchase, for such knowledge effectually disqualifies him to invoke the aid of the rule which seeks to protect a purchaser for value without notice.

The observations respecting laches are to be understood only as made in the light of the allegations of the bills considered upon defendant's demurrers. What the proof may develop, if the cause proceeds to final hearing upon the merits, we cannot of course foresee, and therefore do not pretend to say whether the laches of the plaintiff, if any, is such as precludes the grant to him of the relief he seeks. We are therefore of opinion to reverse the decrees entered in the cause, the first at the October term, 1918, the second on February 4, 1919, of both of which plaintiff complains, overrule the demurrers to the original bill and bill of review, and remand the cause for further proceedings.

(85 W. Va. 82)

MILLER v. AMERICAN BANK & TRUST CO. et al. (No. 3762.)(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 4, 1919.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. PLEDGES  $\S$ 56(2) — SALE AFTER DEFAULT AND UPON NOTICE.

The pledgee of mortgage bonds of a private corporation, and of individual negotiable notes pledged by such corporation, to secure a debt owing by it, may sell the same to the highest bidder, after default, upon due notice to the pledgor of the time and place of sale, when authorized so to do by the collateral agreement.

2. CORPORATIONS  $\S$ 549—RESTRAINING SALE OF MORTGAGE BONDS AND OTHER COLLATERAL BY PLEDGEE.

An unsecured creditor or stockholder who brings a suit against such corporation, after notice of such sale, praying for the appointment of a receiver to administer its assets and wind up its affairs, on the ground of its insolvency, is not entitled to have the sale of the bonds so pledged enjoined.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Cabell County.

Representative suit for injunction by James I. Miller against the American Bank & Trust Company and another, asking for appointment of a receiver of the Glass Brick Company. Injunction granted, and defendants demurred to the bill, and their motion to dissolve the injunction was sustained, and from such order plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. H. Strickling, of Huntington, for appellant.

John H. Meek, Deegan & Boman, Thomas R. Shepherd, and Warth & McCullough, all of Huntington, for appellees.

WILLIAMS, J. The Glass Brick Company, a domestic corporation, having its principal office and place of business at Huntington, W. Va., being largely indebted, issued $100,000 of bonds secured by deed of trust on its plant, and deposited $33,800 of said bonds and a note of $10,000 executed by it to C. B. Lawton and indorsed by him and others, with the American Bank & Trust Company as collateral to secure a debt of $33,900 which it owed said bank. It also deposited with the Ohio Valley Bank $16,000 of said mortgage bonds to secure a debt which it owed the bank of $12,000. These debts becoming due and not being paid, the aforesaid banks published notice in the Huntington Advertiser, a newspaper published in said city of Huntington, that they would sell the collateral so held by them to the highest bidder, the former on the 18th and the latter on the 16th of October, 1918. Thereupon James I. Miller, an unsecured creditor and stockholder of said Glass Brick Company, brought this suit on behalf of himself and all other stockholders and unsecured creditors who chose to become parties plaintiff thereto and help defray the expenses thereof for the purpose of enjoining said sales and having a receiver appointed to administer the assets of said corporation, alleging its insolvency, and that it was compelled to cease operation because its business was not essential to the prosecution of the war; that it has no capital nor the ability to acquire any, with which to resume operations; that there is no market for its bonds; and that, if the sale is permitted to be made as advertised, it will result in great sacrifice of the company's assets to the injury of all unsecured creditors.

The bill prays for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the assets of said company and collect the claims and demands due it, and for an injunction prohibiting said sales from being made as advertised. The judge of the circuit court, in vacation, on the 18th of October, 1918, granted the injunction as prayed for. Both of said banks demurred to the bill, and gave notice that on the 31st of October, 1918, they would move the judge of said court in chambers to dissolve the injunction. The motion was heard on the 2d of November, 1918, the parties appearing by their respective attorneys, and the plaintiff by counsel joining in the demurrers and resisting the motion, on consideration whereof the court sustained the motion and dissolved the injunction, and from that order the plaintiff has appealed.

[1, 2] The only question is whether or not the pledgees have a right to sell the bonds pledged to them to secure their respective debts, pending a suit by an unsecured creditor and stockholder brought to wind up the business and administer the assets of the pledgor, an insolvent corporation. Section 58, c. 53, Code 1913 (sec. 2890), and Waggy v. Jane Lew Lumber Co., 69 W. Va. 668, 72 S. E. 778, and Parr et al. v. Blue Ridge Coal Co., 72 W. Va. 174, 77 S. E. 894, are cited as authority for staying the hands of the secured creditors, and requiring them to come into the suit and await its determination. The citations do not sustain the proposition. In the Waggy Case an unsecured creditor of the insolvent corporation sought to obtain an advantage over other creditors by procuring a judgment against the debtor after a receiver had been appointed. This, of course, a creditor could not do when the assets of the insolvent debtor were in custodia legis. The principal question decided in the latter case was that, where a suit had been brought to wind up the affairs of an insolvent mining corporation operating under a lease, the court had a right to prevent the lessor from declaring a forfeiture of the lease. This was for the purpose of protecting the property of the insolvent corporation for the benefit of its creditors, who, if the lease had been forfeited, would have received nothing. The lease constituted the chief asset of the mining company, and the right of the lessor to declare a forfeiture was primarily intended as a security for his rents and royalties, and if they were paid or secured he had no right to complain. Equity will generally relieve against a forfeiture.

In the present case the bonds were pledged with the banks before the suit was brought, and the debts for which they were pledged had become due and payable. It is well-settled law that a pledgee has the right to sell the property pledged, without judicial process, upon proper notice to the pledgor, when authorized by the pledgor to do so, even if the pledge consists of commercial paper past due or presently to become due. When authorized to sell such paper, the pledgee is under no obligation to hold and collect rather than sell it and apply the proceeds on his debt. 21 R. C. L. 688. The bill avers that the banks have served notice on the directors of the Glass Brick Company that on the dates above named they will proceed to sell the said collateral securities "under and by virtue of the terms of the collateral notes executed as aforesaid by the said defendant Glass Brick Company to the said banks."

It thus appears that the sale was authorized, and that the pledgees are violating no agreement with the pledgor in proceeding to sell the bonds and notes, and their right to sell, without judicial process, upon proper notice to the pledgor, is too well settled to require discussion. 21 R. C. L. 687; Alex., Loud. & Hamp. R. R. Co. v. Burke et al., 22 Grat. (Va.) 254; and Richardson v. Insurance Co. of Valley of Virginia, 27 Grat. (Va.) 749.

We find no error in the decree, and must affirm it.

LYNCH, J., absent.

(24 Ga. App. 545)

WILLIAMS v. STATE. (No. 10935.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Dec. 9, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

The court did not err in admitting the physical evidence as complained of in the special ground of the motion for a new trial. This evidence was a circumstance in the case, and was admissible for what it was worth.

2. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence amply authorized the defendant's conviction, and the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Brooks County; W. E. Thomas, Judge.

Proceeding between the State and Tom Williams. From the judgment, and the denial of his motion for a new trial, Williams brings error. Affirmed.

Bennet & Harrell, of Quitman, for plaintiff in error.

C. E. Hay, Sol. Gen., of Thomasville, for the State.

BROYLES, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

LUKE and BLOODWORTH, JJ., concur.

(24 Ga. App. 545)

SPENCER v. STATE. (No. 10933.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1.
Dec. 9, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

DENIAL OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The evidence in this case amply warranted the conviction of the defendant. For no reason assigned was it error to overrule the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Terrell County; W. C. Worrill, Judge.

Tobe Spencer was convicted of an offense, his motion for a new trial was denied, and he brings error. Affirmed.

R. R. Jones, of Dawson, for plaintiff in error.

B. T. Castellow, Sol. Gen., of Cuthbert, and R. R. Arnold, of Atlanta, for the State.

LUKE, J. Judgment affirmed.

BROYLES, C. J., and BLOODWORTH, J., concur.

(85 W. Va. 70)

JOHNSTON v. METROPOLITAN LIFE INS. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INSURANCE §448—RECOVERY WHERE BENEFICIARY MURDERED INSURED.

The beneficiary in a policy of life insurance, who murders the insured, will be denied the right to recover thereon upon grounds of public policy.

2. INSURANCE §594—ASSIGNMENT BY BENEFICIARY WHO MURDERED INSURED.

Where the beneficiary in a policy of life insurance murders the insured, and subsequently assigns his interest in the policy to another, such assignee will acquire no better right than his assignor, and will not be entitled to recover upon the policy.

3. INSURANCE §448—LIABILITY OF INSURER ON MURDER OF INSURED BY BENEFICIARY.

Where the beneficiary in a life insurance policy murders the insured, the doctrine of public policy will extend no further than to denying to such beneficiary the right to recover. The liability of the insurance company to pay the fund is not thereby extinguished, and ordinarily a recovery will be allowed upon such policy in the name of the personal representative of the insured for the benefit of his estate.

4. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION ¶51—DEVOLUTION OF PROPERTY ON MURDER OF DECEASED.

Under our law prohibiting the forfeiture of estates upon conviction of crime, the estate of one who is murdered will pass by devolution to the person designated by law to take the same, notwithstanding such person may have been guilty of murder in taking the life of the one from whom he inherits.

5. INSURANCE ¶448—RECOVERY BY PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE ON MURDER OF INSURED BY DISTRIBUTE.

The personal representative of one who is murdered may not recover the amount of a policy of insurance on his life, where the murder was committed by the party who is the sole distributee of such insured person.

Error to Circuit Court, Cabell County.

Action by James E. Johnston, administrator, etc., against the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. Judgment in the court of common pleas in favor of defendant, and on writ of error the circuit court reversed, and rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed, and judgment of court of common pleas affirmed.

Fitzpatrick, Campbell, Brown & Davis, of Huntington, for plaintiff in error.

Daugherty & Riggs, of Huntington, for defendant in error.

RITZ, J. The defendant, for the consideration of certain premiums to be regularly paid, issued a policy of insurance by which it agreed to pay to one Frank Pickens the face value of the policy in case he was living at the end of 20 years from the date of issue, or to pay to his beneficiary, Susie Pickens, his wife, an equal sum in case of his death before the expiration of said 20 years. The premiums were regularly paid until the time of Pickens' death. Some years after the issuance of the policy the insured was murdered by his wife, the beneficiary therein. She was convicted of the crime and sentenced to the penitentiary for life. Shortly after the commission of the murder she assigned all of her right under the policy to D. B. Daugherty and H. W. Shields. Pickens left no children surviving him, and owed no debts at the time of his death. The defendant company declined to pay the policy, either to the beneficiary, or to her assignees, or to the administrator of the estate of Pickens, and this suit was brought by the administrator to recover thereon. The court of common pleas rendered a judgment in favor of the defendant, and upon a writ of error to that judgment the circuit court of Cabell county reversed the same and rendered judgment for the plaintiff for the amount of the policy, to review which this writ of error is prosecuted.

[1, 2] That Susie Pickens, the beneficiary, has no right to recover upon this policy of insurance can scarcely be doubted. The liability of the company became fixed by the death of the insured, and this was brought about by the felonious act of the beneficiary. It would be monstrous for the courts to lend their aid to any one for the purpose of enriching himself by the commission of murder, and to entertain suit on behalf of the beneficiary to recover upon this policy of insurance would be doing that very thing. It is against the policy of our law to reward one for the commission of crime, and whenever the effect of the enforcement of a right which one would otherwise have would be to give him an advantage by reason of his felonious act, the courts will decline to entertain it. This is well established by the authorities. New York Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 591, 6 Sup. Ct. 877, 29 L. Ed. 997; Cooley's Briefs on the Law of Insurance, 3153; 14 R. C. L. p. 1228, title Insurance, § 409, and authorities there cited. Nor can the assignees of the beneficiary stand on any higher ground than the beneficiary herself. At the time she made the assignment to them she had nothing to transfer. She had voluntarily placed herself in a status which disqualified her to be beneficiary under the policy. Consequently the assignment to Daugherty and Shields was ineffectual to transfer any interest in the fund.

[3] This denial of the right of the beneficiary or her assignees to recover under such circumstances is not, however, based upon lack of liability of the insurer to pay. The policy of insurance is not avoided for such cause by its express terms, and there is no reason why such an exception should be read into it when the interest of other parties is affected. This doctrine of public policy will not be carried by the courts any further than is necessary to prevent resort to them for the purpose of effecting a fraudulent purpose. It is not for the purpose of relieving the insurance company from liability, and if there is any person without fault who has a right to the benefit of the policy the same will be enforced. In other words, there is no condition in the policy avoiding it in case of the murder of the insured, and the liability of the company is just the same where death is the result of murder as where it is produced by any other cause. The only difference is that in case the murderer is the beneficiary named in the policy he is denied recovery, not because the company is not liable, but because he has placed himself in such a position that he cannot invoke the aid of the courts. But does the fact that the beneficiary named in the policy cannot recover discharge the company from liability in all cases? It is very generally held that where the specific beneficiary named in a policy of life insurance dies the policy of insurance nevertheless remains in force, and recovery may be had thereon by the personal representatives of the insured upon his death for the benefit of his estate. What is the effect when the beneficiary by some act of his puts himself in a position where he cannot invoke the aid of the courts to enforce his claim? He forfeits his right to claim the money to which he would otherwise be entitled. The rule of public policy, as before stated, will not be extended further than is necessary to prevent a felon from reaping benefit from his crime, and it may be said that when by this rule the murderer, who is the beneficiary, is deprived of his right to recover, the doctrine is extended as far as is warranted. This would leave in the hands of the insurer a fund or estate created by the insured. The insurance company is not entitled to it, and the party that the insured desired to have it cannot take it. He forfeited his right to it. What, then, is the result? Naturally it becomes the property of the estate of the insured, very much in the same way as an estate which is left by will to a particular devisee or legatee passes by laws of descents and distributions upon the failure of such legatee, and it has been held that, where a legatee in a will murders the testator, the legacy provided for him in the will will pass to the heirs of the testator under the statutes of descents and distributions. Riggs v. Palmer, 115 N. Y. 506, 22 N. E. 188, 5 L. R. A. 340, 12 Am. St. Rep. 819. And it is likewise very uniformly held, and it occurs to us upon sound reason, that where the beneficiary in a policy of life insurance is denied the right of recovery upon grounds of public policy, a trust results in favor of the estate of the insured, and ordinarily the personal representative of the insured can maintain a suit to recover the fund for the benefit of that estate. Schmidt v. Northern Life Association, 112 Iowa, 41, 83 N. W. 800, 51 L. R. A. 141, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323; Cleaver v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, L. R. 1 Q. B. 1892; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Davis, 96 Va. 737, 32 S. E. 475, 44 L. R. A. 305; Supreme Lodge, Knights and Ladies of Honor, v. Menkhause, 209 Ill. 277, 70 N. E. 567, 65 L. R. A. 508, 101 Am. St. Rep. 239; Sharpless v. Ancient Order of United Workmen, 133 Minn. 35, 159 N. W. 1086, L. R. A. 1917B, 670; McDonald v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 178 Iowa, 863, 160 N. W. 289; Equitable Life Assurance Society v. Weightman (Okla.) 160 Pac. 629, L. R. A. 1917B, 1210.

[4] In this case, however, the defendant insists that the personal representative should not be allowed to recover for the reason that such recovery would be for the benefit of the murderess. The insured had no children, and his widow under the law of descents and distributions is the sole distributee of his personal estate. The fact that the courts will not on grounds of public policy permit her to bring suit to recover this fund does not bar her from taking the estate of her deceased husband. Under our law there is no longer corruption of blood or forfeiture of estates upon conviction of crime, and there is no exception in our statutes of descents and distributions precluding one from inheriting in a case like this. The laws governing the devolution of property are an expression of the public policy of the state contained in its Constitution and legislative acts, and the courts are not justified in attaching to these acts exceptions or limitations which have not been placed thereon by the lawmaking bodies. It therefore follows that if the personal representative of the insured in this case is permitted to recover this fund, the beneficiary will accomplish by indirection that which she could not do directly. That the property of one who has been murdered will devolve upon the murderer where such is the course of distribution provided by law seems to be well settled in most of the American states. McAllister v. Fair, 72 Kan. 533, 84 Pac. 112, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 726, and note, 115 Am. St. Rep. 233, 7 Ann. Cas. 973; Shellenberger v. Ransom, 41 Neb. 631, 59 N. W. 935, 25 L. R. A. 504, and note; Kuhn v. Kuhn, 125 Iowa, 449, 101 N. W. 151; Carpenter's Appeal, 170 Pa. 203, 32 Atl. 637; 29 L. R. A. 145, 50 Am. St. Rep. 765; Owens v. Owens, 100 N. C. 240, 6 S. E. 794; Ellerson v. Westcott, 148 N. Y. 149, 42 N. E. 540; Deem v. Millikin, 6 Ohio C. C. 357, affirmed on appeal 53 Ohio St. 668, 44 N. E. 1134.

[5] Will the courts then allow themselves to be used for the purpose of bringing into existence an estate which will by operation of law devolve on one who because of his conduct is not entitled to it? The administrator has no interest in the subject-matter. It is agreed here that the insured left no debts, and it follows that every dollar of the fund recovered by the administrator in his representative capacity must go to the murderess. The suit is simply in his name for the benefit of the one who feloniously caused the insured's death. The case of McDonald v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 178 Iowa, 863, 160 N. W. 289, is very much like this case in its facts. In that case the administrator of the insured brought the suit to recover on the policy of insurance. It appeared that the sole distributees of the insured's estate were her father and mother, and that they had assisted in a criminal operation which produced her death. The court held that the administrator, if such facts were shown, would not be entitled to recover, for it would be for the benefit of those who are by the public policy of the law denied such right. The theory relied upon to defeat recovery is substantially the same as that asserted in the cases of Dickinson v. Colliery Co., 71 W. Va. 325, 76 S. E. 654, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 335, and Swope v. Coal Co., 78 W. Va. 517, 89 S. E. 284, L. R. A. 1917A, 1128. In these cases the basis of recovery was the wrongful employment of plaintiffs' decedents, they being of an age which made their employment in mines a violation of the law. The liability of the defendant was sustained by the court in each case, but recovery was denied to the administrator, not because the defendant was not liable, but for the sole reason that the father, who in each case would have been sole distributee of any recovery, procured the employment of the minor. His act in securing his minor child to be employed in violation of law created a situation which rendered necessary the denial of a recovery, because the party who would receive it had forfeited his right thereto. There was no fault on the part of the one killed, and recovery would have been allowed, but for the fact that the person who would take the fund as sole distributee had united with the defendant in the commission of the wrongful act, and the court denied him the right to take advantage of his own wrong.

The principle invoked here is the same as the principle involved there. In some of the cases we have above cited permitting a recovery by the administrator of the insured, where the beneficiary had caused the death, it was suggested that part of the fund might go to the beneficiary under the law of descents and distributions, but that was held not to defeat recovery. That may be true where only part of the fund goes to the guilty party. It may be that the courts would not allow the innocent to be deprived of the property to which they are entitled for the sole reason that to enforce their rights would also confer a benefit upon a guilty party. However, that question does not arise here, and we express no opinion thereon. We are of opinion, however, that where the guilty party would take the whole of the recovery in case one is allowed, the policy of our law as effectually denies recovery as it would were the suit brought in the name of the guilty party himself.

It follows from what we have said that the judgment of the circuit court will be reversed, and the judgment of the court of common pleas affirmed.

(85 W. Va. 85)

LINDAMOOD v. POTOMAC LIGHT & POWER CO. (No. 3821.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. NEW TRIAL §104(2)—NEWLY DISCOVERED CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE.

Evidence adduced by affidavits, on a motion for a new trial, in an action against a corporation, for damages for wrongful death alleged to have been occasioned by its negligent use of electricity, as having been first discovered after a trial resulting in a verdict for the defendant, and tending to prove the breaking of one of its high voltage wires, as to which no evidence had been adduced on the trial, and resultant contact of such wire with its service wires, at such a place and in such manner as would have caused the high voltage of the broken wire to enter the building in which the decedent came to his death by means of an electric shock, at or about the time of his death, is not cumulative.

2. ELECTRICITY §19(3)—NEW TRIAL §108 (4)—EVIDENCE SUFFICIENT TO PRODUCE DIFFERENT RESULT.

Under the operation of the rule res ipsa loquitur, the introduction of such evidence would make the defendant company in such case liable, if the break in the wire was the proximate cause of the injury, in the absence of proof by it of proper construction of the wires at the place of the break and due inspection of its lines, wherefore it is of such character as ought to produce a different result upon a new trial, if its effect should not be avoided in some way.

3. NEW TRIAL §102(5)—DILIGENCE REQUIRED IN SEARCH FOR NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

The duty to exercise reasonable diligence in his search for evidence, before trial, imposed upon a litigant by the law, does not require him to interview witnesses not known by him to possess any knowledge at all respecting his case, nor to have been so situated at any time as to render it likely or probable that they obtained such knowledge. To make it incumbent upon him to interview a person for evidence, he must have some reason to believe or suspect that the person has some knowledge of the transaction, situation, or facts involved in the litigation.

4. NEW TRIAL §90, 150(3)—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE OF OMISSION BY WITNESS OF MATERIAL FACT.

Though ordinarily a new trial cannot be had upon the affidavit of a witness showing omission from his testimony of a material fact, by reason of his failure to recollect it while testifying, however important it may be, such an affidavit may be read in aid of those of other witnesses to the same fact, whose knowledge thereof was not discoverable by the exercise of reasonable diligence before the trial, when the omitted subject is new and the matter set forth in the affidavit will be decisive, if found to be true and its force and effect are not avoided in some way.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR §1015(5)—FINDING AS TO NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE NOT DISTURBED.

The finding of a trial court on an issue of fact as to whether matter relied upon in support of a motion for a new trial is new and after discovered will not be disturbed by the appellate court, when the evidence of lack of prior knowledge thereof is clear and positive and the opposing evidence uncertain, indefinite, and inconclusive.

6. NEW TRIAL. @102(3)—NECESSITY OF WIDE AND MINUTE INVESTIGATION BEFORE TRIAL.

Though the injured party is under a duty, before suing for redress, to make a reasonably diligent effort to ascertain by what wrongful act the injury was inflicted, he is not required at all hazards to discover obscure matters or such as cannot be found otherwise than by a wide, thorough and minute investigation, and he may rely upon them in a motion for a new trial, if discovered before entry of judgment.

Error from Circuit Court, Berkeley County.

Action for wrongful death by Cora B. Lindamood against the Potomac Light & Power Company. Verdict for defendant set aside on the ground of newly discovered evidence, and it brings error. Affirmed.

Martin & Seibert, of Martinsburg, for plaintiff in error.

H. H. Emmert and J. O. Henson, both of Martinsburg, for defendant in error.

POFFENBARGER, J. This writ challenges the correctness of an order setting aside a verdict for the defendant in an action predicated on allegations of wrongful death, on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

A statement in detail of the evidence adduced upon the trial and the procedure in the action is unnecessary. Plaintiff's decedent, her husband, was killed in the plant of the Dunn Woolen Company, while there engaged in work as an employe of that company, by an electric current or by a fall occasioned in some unknown way. He was alive but unconscious, when found, and died immediately afterward. There is no living eyewitness to the fatal accident, and the evidence of negligence adduced was largely, if not entirely, circumstantial. The action is against the Potomac Light & Power Company by which electricity for lighting purposes was furnished to the plant in which he was working, not against his employer. Hence the law of master and servant does not govern the rights of the parties. The plaintiff proceeds upon the hypothesis of a defect in the wires or plant of the defendant company, negligently permitted, by reason of which an unusual and undue charge of electricity entered the plant of the Dunn Woolen Company over the service wires, and caused the injury complained of. The theory of the defendant is that, on account of the situation in which the decedent was and defectiveness of the electrical appliances in the room in which he worked, for which it was not in any way responsible, they being no part of its plant or system, the electric current contemplated and furnished for the factory, 110 volts, was sufficient to kill the employe, if he came into contact with it by his own negligence or through the negligence of his employer, and did either kill him or knock him down in such manner that in his fall he received fatal injury, he having come into contact with it by reason of his own or his employer's negligence.

His surroundings, his hands, the materials he was handling, and no doubt his clothing were all damp, and the electrical appliances used unsafe on account of these conditions. He operated what is known as a drying machine, through which he passed wet wool and shoddy taken from the vats in the dye-house of the factory. It was of steel construction, new and set in concrete, at a point about 18 inches from a partition wall, in a room the floor of which was new concrete not yet thoroughly dry. On it, there were three pulleys, each carrying a 3-inch belt. It had an air door which stood open at an angle of about 45 degrees with the steel edges turned up. Near this door and over one of the pulleys there was a thermometer, and near it a drop electric light on a cord, used for lighting the dark space around the thermometer. The pulleys, bolts, and steel door were unprotected by any guard or safety device. The wiring and sockets were unsuitable and bad for such a place, the wires not having been put in tubes, as experts say they should have been, and the sockets having been brass instead of porcelain. The workman's hands, feet, and clothing and the floor on which he worked were all damp and the air necessarily moist. Between 9:30 and 10 o'clock of the night of February 26, 1917, he was found lying in the narrow space between the machine and the partition, in a puddle of blood. One of the belts was off, the steel door open, and the light unextinguished. In his right temple, there was a wound from which blood was flowing, and which the examining surgeon said went deep into the tissue of the head, although it looked like a superficial injury.

[1] Appreciating and admitting the application, force, and effect of the rule res ipsa loquitur, the defendant, after the plaintiff had proved, prima facie, death from an electric shock, previous good health of the decedent, and sufficiency of 110 volts to kill, introduced evidence proving, in the absence of contradiction, that its transformer reducing the high voltage, 2,200, to low voltage, 110, was in a safe condition, and bore no evidence of disturbance by an unusual shock and that its wires in the streets in the neighborhood of the Dunn Woolen Company were so arranged and insulated by insulators on the poles and air spaces between the wires as to make them safe. Then it proved the defectiveness and unsuitableness of the wiring and fixtures in the room in which Lindamood was working, and by expert testimony that under such conditions the ordinary voltage was sufficient to kill one coming into contact with it. Proof was introduced also to the effect that none of the wiring or fixtures in the room or building bore any evidence of their having been subjected to the heavy voltage carried by the high tension wires supplying electricity to the service wires through the transformer, and that the secondary or service wires and the wires and fixtures in the building could not carry the high voltage of the primary wires without injury or, in some instances, destruction.

In rebuttal, the plaintiff introduced testimony tending to prove the service wires would carry 1,100 or 2,200 volts for a short time, without any manifestation of its presence until a socket or wire would come in contact with something that would ground the current; that on the night of the accident wires were sparking at the corner of Stephen street and Maple avenue, at about 9:30 o'clock, on account of a limb that had blown over the secondary wires leading into the residence of one Barnard; that on the morning after the accident a woman was knocked down by electric current in a house near the Barnard residence while using an electric iron; that a man helping to remove Lindamood received a severe shock in the back by reason of his coming into contact with the socket at the machine; and that another workman, a few minutes later, got a severe shock from taking the socket in his hand.

The new evidence discovered after the trial, which induced the trial court to set aside the verdict for the defendant, as interpreted by the attorneys for the plaintiff, was that, on the night of Lindamood's injury and death, at about 8 o'clock, in front of the county jail, and not far from the Dunn Woolen Company's building, one of the wires smoked, burned, sputtered, and then broke, at a point about six feet from one of the poles, and fell among the other wires; that the defendant company was immediately notified by telephone; that it sent a man to that place, who tied the long end of the broken wire around a pole; that on the next morning a man came and spliced and repaired the wire; and that after the trial, and nearly a year after the date of the accident, a splice was found in the defendant's primary or high voltage wire, strung above other wires, at a point a few feet south of the pole in front of the county jail.

This interpretation of the affidavits of the witnesses is vigorously assailed in the briefs filed for the defendant. The two Millers, the jailer, and his son do not say the wire broke on the night of the accident, but, fairly read, both affidavits place the date of the occurrence near that night. They say they resided in the jail on that date and saw the broken wire. M. S. Miller says he is unable to say whether the break occurred on the night of Lindamood's death. His son says he was at a hospital, visiting his wife, when a message was received, calling a physician to attend a man at the Dunn Woolen Mills, who he afterwards learned was Lindamood, but does not say both incidents occurred on the same night. Affiant Hough, a policeman, says he saw the broken wire in front of the jail on the morning after the accident. He testified on the trial, without mention of the broken wire at the jail, but that argues nothing against the plaintiff's interpretation of the affidavits considered as a whole, on the question of identity of the time of the two occurrences.

As to the relation of the broken wire to the service wires and the Dunn Woolen Mills, the joint affidavit of J. O. Henson and H. H. Emmert and that of Shade suffice. Henson and Emmert say the break at the jail was on the lines from the transformer serving the Dunn Woolen Mills, and that they are informed and believe the high voltage wires at that point are above the secondary or service wires coming from the same transformer. Shade says the spliced wire was a primary wire and on the top cross-arm. Hence the secondary wires must have been below it.

[2] If the plaintiff is not precluded from reliance upon this evidence for a new trial by lack of diligence in the discovery thereof, it sustains the grant of a new trial by the court. It is not cumulative, for no evidence at all concerning the break of the wire at the jail was introduced by her. She adduced no evidence of any defect in the defendant's wires that could have caused the injury. The limb across them at another place was a wholly distinct matter, having only slight probative value. If there was such a break at the jail as the witnesses describe in their affidavits, it was a circumstance of such character as would have carried the case to the jury and ought to have called for a verdict for the plaintiff, in the absence of proof of any other circumstance avoiding its legal effect. It would have imposed upon the defendant, under the operation of the rule res ipsa loquitur the burden of proving proper construction of its wires at that point and due inspection thereof, if nothing more, by way of precaution against their giving away and causing injury to somebody. Edmonds v. Traction Co., 78 W. Va. 714, 90 S. E. 230; Snyder v. Wheeling Electric Co., 43 W. Va. 661, 28 S. E. 733, 39 L. R. A. 499, 64 Am. St. Rep. 922.

[3] On the question of diligence on the part of the plaintiff, the defendant takes two positions, one of which is that the plaintiff was bound to discover this evidence before trial or lose the benefit of it. M. S. Miller, an officer of the court and an after-discovered witness, was in the courtroom during a part of the trial, and could easily have been interviewed, and his son, the other party who saw the break, was accessible. Hough had been a witness in the case, and testified to the disturbance caused by the limb across the wires near Barnard's residence. In his affidavit filed after the trial he says he had forgotten the broken wire at the jail, when interviewed by the plaintiff's attorneys as to what he knew of electrical disturbances, and did not think of it until his attention was called to it later by one Smith. Omission to interview the Millers is excusable, if the plaintiff had no reason to believe or suspect that they had the knowledge they now disclose. If the location of the break and the presence of the Millers at the time had been known, there would have been reason to suspect their knowledge of the occurrence, and failure to interview them would have been fatal. Jacobs v. Williamson, 67 W. Va. 377, 67 S. E. 1113; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Virginia-Western Power Co., 81 W. Va. 298, 84 S. E. 372. But there is no authority holding failure to interview a witness not known to have any knowledge of the subject-matter of the litigation to be fatal to the use of his affidavit disclosing after-discovered evidence. But the affidavits of the Millers leave a link supplied only by that of Hough, who was known to have some knowledge of some of the defendant's wires on the morning after the accident, namely, the time of the break of the wire at the jail. Boyd's affidavit as to it gives only hearsay evidence. Culpability in the matter, if any, rests upon Hough only. Plaintiff and her attorneys swear they diligently sought evidence to sustain their client's case. The attorneys say they interviewed various members of the police force, of whom Hough was one, and Hough swears they interviewed him and would have obtained all of his knowledge but for his failure of recollection. Ordinarily, the forgetfulness of a witness is no ground for a new trial, because he is supposed to have been diligently interviewed and called upon to remember the facts and state them. Dulgan v. Wyatt, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 385; McQueen v. Stewart, 7 Ind. 535. But, if it appears that he has been diligently interviewed, and that the matter to which his evidence relates is new and decisive in its import, and other witnesses will testify to it in such manner as to make its existence highly probable, we are of the opinion that his affidavit may be used, and read in aid of the other testimony. The purpose of the requirement of diligence is not defeat or prevention of new trials, and it should be applied in a reasonable and fair way. Bonyng v. Waterbury, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 534. Only reasonable diligence is required. Smith v. McLain, 11 W. Va. 668, citing many cases. Manifestly such diligence has been exercised, as regards these witnesses, if the plaintiff had no knowledge of the evidence she now relies upon.

[4] It is insisted, however, that the plaintiff was aware of the knowledge of the Millers and Hough, before the case went to trial. Unfortunately, she started into this litigation under embarrassment. One set of attorneys investigated the case and found the evidence in question, under the impression that she intended to employ them, created by representations of one Smith, a justice of the peace, who professed to have interviewed her respecting her case and the employment of attorneys to represent her. Afterward, she employed other attorneys, to whom this information was not given, and she swears she never employed the attorneys who obtained and held it, and that it was never communicated to her. Her affidavit is very full and definite on this subject, completely excluding any transaction between them and her, direct or indirect, and denying all knowledge of their possession of the evidence. She denies that she ever had any conversation with any member of the firm relative to her suit. One of them says he called upon her to discuss the case, under the impression that his firm was to be retained, but was informed that she had employed no attorney and would not do so until her brother arrived, and that thereupon he left, without discussing the matter further. Another member of the firm represented to one of the attorneys for the defendant that the plaintiff knew of the witnesses whose affidavits had been taken; that she had employed his firm; that M. S. Miller told them of the sputtering wire the day after Lindamood's death; and that he and another member of his firm continued their investigation of the case for about a week, when they were informed that other attorneys had been employed. The attorney filed his affidavit, admitting the representations imputed to him, and saying he had acted under the belief that he had been employed, but had ascertained that he had not been, and denying that he had ever had any conversation with the plaintiff.

[5] The conduct of the parties clearly overcomes the inferences the attorneys for the defendant set up on the admissions made by Boyd. His firm did not appear in the case. This fact effectually negatives the existence of the relation of attorney and client at that time. If it had previously existed, it is morally certain that the attorneys did not disclose to the plaintiff the evidence they had found. If they had, it would undoubtedly have been used in the trial, for it was obviously much more substantial and probative in its import and nature than any that was introduced. Both she and the attorneys representing her in the trial had strong reason for using it, and none for its omission, if it was within their knowledge. Boyd's representation about the plaintiff's knowledge of the witnesses was not very definite. He evidently did not make it upon his personal knowledge, for he says he never conversed with her. She denies that he ever did, and his associates say they never discussed the case with her. Only one of them had seen her, and he denies having done so. All say there was no contract of employment. Hence the trial court was justified in finding lack of a prior relation of attorney and client, which might or might not have imputed to the plaintiff the knowledge possessed by her former attorneys. In point of quality as well as quantity, the preponderance of evidence accords with the court's finding. No reason is perceived why review of this finding as to a question of fact should be governed by a rule different from the one ordinarily applied.

[6] It is urged also that, if she had caused the wires to be inspected, she would have discovered the break or evidence of it, which would have suggested probable knowledge of the fact on the part of Miller and others residing in the neighborhood thereof. Before bringing an action for an injury, the injured party ordinarily and necessarily makes an effort to ascertain by what wrongful act it was inflicted, and is deemed to have known what was obvious or ascertainable by reasonable diligence. But there is no rule of law or practice requiring previous ascertainment of obscure matters, or such as cannot be found otherwise than by a wide, thorough and minute investigation. The plaintiff made an effort to find evidence of noticeable manifestations of defects in the defendant's wires and appliances, and found some, but not the most important one, if she is correct in her representations. That broken wire, if any, was repaired the next morning, before many persons could see it, and while her husband lay dead in her home and she was no doubt overwhelmed with grief and unable to give her attention to matters of the kind involved here. After it was repaired, the wire likely showed only such evidence of the occurrence as was discoverable by close inspection. Moreover, a splice in a wire, without more, might not have aroused inquiry if it had been discovered. The circumstances of this case bear very slight resemblance, if any, to those of Frymier v. Lorama Railroad Co., 78 W. Va. 96, 85 S. E. 26.

Upon these principles and conclusions, the order complained of will be affirmed.

LYNCH, J., absent.

(85 W. Va. 75)

PRICE et al. v. FITZPATRICK et al.
(No. 3930.)

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §84 — CITY COUNCIL ELECTION CONTEST.

The council of a city, town, or village to which one, whose seat is contested, is elected, is the proper tribunal to try such contest, and not the council in office at the time of the election.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §84 — TRIBUNAL FOR CITY COUNCIL ELECTION CONTEST.

Where by law the duty devolves upon a certain person or tribunal to try and determine a question, and no provision is made for substituting another person or tribunal in case of disqualification of such person or tribunal, by reason of interest, and there is no other mode provided for the trial of such controversy, such interested person or tribunal must of necessity proceed with the trial thereof to the extent, and to the extent only, that there is no other person or tribunal provided for the performance of the duties devolved upon him by law.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §84 — APPEAL TO CIRCUIT COURT OF JUDGMENT ON ELECTION CONTEST.

Where a contest of the right of a member of a city council to hold his seat is heard and determined by the council going out of office at the time his term of office begins, the circuit court on appeal will have no jurisdiction to try such contest de novo upon a writ of certiorari to the judgment rendered by such council. Nothing more can be done than to reverse the judgment of the tribunal acting without jurisdiction, and remand the case to be tried before the tribunal having jurisdiction.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §84 — REVIEW ON APPEAL FROM ELECTION CONTEST.

In contest of right of member of city council to hold his seat, the question that the notice did not give the time required by law is one which must be passed upon, first by the tribunal having jurisdiction, and, until that is done, neither the circuit court nor the Supreme Court of Appeals can give judgment thereon.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR §776 — DISMISSAL OF WRIT OF ERROR.

A plaintiff in error has a right at any time to dismiss a writ of error so long as no right of the adverse party will be affected thereby, and also has the right at any time before such motion is made and sustained by the Supreme Court of Appeals to change his mind and withdraw the same.

Error from Circuit Court, Fayette County.

Election contest by S. W. Price and others against J. E. Fitzpatrick, Henry C. Darling.

ton, Thomas Garrett, W. H. Johnson, T. T. Lewis, S. E. Hester, and Arnold Brabbin. Judgment before the town council of Scarbro in favor of contestants, and case removed by contestees by writ of certiorari to the circuit court, wherein the judgment of the council was reversed, and on a trial de novo there was a finding for contestees, Fitzpatrick and Garrett, and for part of the contestants, and from the judgment, contestees, Johnson, Lewis, Hester, and Brabbin, bring error. Reversed and remanded for a trial of the contest before the proper tribunal.

W. R. Bennett and George Love, both of Fayetteville, for plaintiffs in error.

Dillon & Nuckolls, of Fayetteville, for defendants in error.

RITZ, J. At the election held in the town of Scarbro in the month of January, 1919, the following persons were candidates for the municipal offices of said town on the Citizens' Ticket, to wit: For mayor, S. W. Price; for recorder, Henry J. Smith; and for councilmen, V. P. Spradling, C. R. Heerman, L. Douglass, Joseph H. Blake, and Charles S. Thomas. These candidates at that time constituted the common council of said town, their terms expiring with the month of January, 1919, and they being candidates for the respective offices they were then filling. At said election the Citizens' Labor Ticket had candidates for said offices as follows: For mayor, J. E. Fitzpatrick; for recorder, Henry C. Darlington; and for councilmen, Thomas Garrett, W. H. Johnson, T. T. Lewis, S. E. Hester, and Arnold Brabbin. Upon a canvass of the returns of the election, it was found that for the office of mayor Fitzpatrick received a majority of the votes, and for councilmen, Garrett, Johnson, Lewis, Hester, and Brabbin each received a majority of the votes cast, and certificates of election were accordingly issued to them. A contest, however, was at once instituted by their opponents upon the ground, among others, that parties voted for them in said election who were not entitled to vote in said town. Notice of this contest was served upon the contestees on the 28th of January, 1919, to be heard on the 31st of that month, the day before the commencement of the term of office of the new mayor and councilmen. In view of the fact that the council then in office were all contestants, and the council to come into office on the 1st of February were all contestees in said proceeding, the old council determined to create a new and disinterested tribunal for the trial of said contest by each resigning his office and electing a successor to hold the unexpired term, so that on the 31st of January, when the contest came on for trial, there was an entirely new council, selected, however, by the contestants, for the purpose of trying this contest. Objection was made by the contestees, but all objections were overruled, and a hearing had, and the contestants found to be legally elected, and on the following day they were inducted into office. This proceeding was removed by the contestees by writ of certiorari into the circuit court of Fayette county, where the judgment of the council was reversed, and a trial de novo had therein, which resulted in a finding that Fitzpatrick was elected mayor, that the contestee Garrett was elected as one of the councilmen, and that the contestants Heerman, Douglass, Blake, and Thomas were elected as the other four councilmen, and judgment rendered by said court accordingly, from which judgment the contestees Johnson, Lewis, Hester, and Brabbin prosecute this writ of error.

[1, 2] It is insisted that the circuit court did not have jurisdiction to try the contest upon the writ of certiorari for two reasons: First, that it had never been tried by the tribunal having jurisdiction to try it in the first instance, and that until it had been so tried no jurisdiction could be acquired by the circuit court; and second, that the notice was void because it was not served 10 days before the time fixed for the hearing, as it is insisted the statute requires.

Did the tribunal which tried the contest as the council of the town of Scarbro have any jurisdiction to try the same? In the case of Trunick v. Town of Northview, 80 W. Va. 9, 91 S. E. 1081, we held that the council to which a member is elected, whose right to hold the office is contested, is the tribunal to try the contest, and not the council in office at the time of the election. Under this holding, of course, the council which tried the contest here had no jurisdiction to try the same. While it was not made up of the same men who composed the council at the time of the election, it was in fact the same council, the men being selected to fill vacancies caused by the resignation of those then in office, and their terms expired with the terms of those who were in office at the time of the election.

It is, however, insisted that this case is not controlled by the case of Trunick v. Town of Northview, for the reason that the right of all of the new council to hold office is contested, and that to allow that body to try the matter would be permitting them to sit in their own case, and that to permit the council who were in office at the time of the election, who were all contestants, would likewise be permitting them to sit in a case in which they were personally interested, so that the only way to get an unbiased and unprejudiced body was for them to resign and appoint their successors for the unexpired term, and allow the contest to be tried by the body thus constituted. We see very little difference in principle in a litigant sitting on his own case, and in selecting, without his adversary having a voice therein, the judge who is to sit in it. We do not think there was any jurisdiction in anybody to try this contest until the new council came into office on the first day of February. It is undoubtedly true that to permit this council to try this contest would be requiring them to sit and vote upon a matter in which they had a personal interest; there being no provision for substituting another tribunal for the trial of such a contest where the majority of the councilmen are interested therein. Of course, if the seats of less than a majority were contested, then the majority whose seats were uncontested would sit and try the contest, and their right to do so could not be questioned; but where the seats of the whole body are contested, and there is no provision made for substituting any other tribunal for the trial thereof, it would seem that by the law of necessity they would be required to sit and hear and determine the contest, even though the seats held by them were in dispute. If this were not the case, there would be no way to secure a trial of such a contest. The Legislature evidently never contemplated that a situation would arise where the seats of all the members of a town council would be contested, and has made no special provision for the trial of such a contest. It is undoubtedly true that it is against the spirit of our laws for one to act as judge in his own case, and he will not be allowed to do so when he has the slightest pecuniary interest therein, unless there is absolute necessity therefor. Forest Coal Co. v. Doolittle, Judge, 54 W. Va. 210, 46 S. E. 238; Findley v. Smith, 42 W. Va. 299, 26 S. E. 370. But where there is a contest like this which must be decided, and in which the only tribunal provided by law for its trial and determination is interested, the necessity of the case requires that such tribunal proceed to judgment therein, and such judgment, where the necessity for such action appears, will be as binding as though the parties rendering it were not at all interested in the controversy unless the same is reversed on appeal. It must be understood that this doctrine of necessity can be carried no further than is absolutely necessary. In the case of Forest Coal Co. v. Doolittle, Judge, supra, it was held that, because of the interest of the judge in that case, he could not hear the controversy and determine it, but that he might call in a judge from another circuit to hear it, or cause an election of a special judge, as provided by law, for the purpose, notwithstanding his interest, because there was no other way provided by statute for securing a hearing of the cause; and in the case of Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal, 3 House of Lords Cases, 759, it was held that the Lord Chancellor, although peculiarly interested in the controversy, might grant an appeal, even though to do so would require passing to some extent upon the merits of the controversy, because there was no other way provided by law for securing such appeal, but that after such appeal had been granted the Lord Chancellor, because of his interest, could not hear the same, for the reason that, under the law, it might be heard by the Vice Chancellor, who had no interest therein. It will thus be seen that while the courts recognize the necessity of a judge sometimes acting in a case in which he has a personal interest, because there is no other method provided by law to procure a determination thereof, it will be resorted to and permitted only when there is an absolute necessity therefor, and, just as soon as the proceeding reaches that point where some other person or tribunal can take jurisdiction of it under the law, the right of such interested judge or tribunal will cease. In the Matter of Application of David R. Ryers, 72 N. Y. 1, 28 Am. Rep. 88; Butcher v. Kunst, 65 W. Va. 384, 64 S. E. 967; Commonwealth v. Ryan, 5 Mass. 90; Pearce v. Atwood, 13 Mass. 324; Great Charte v. Kennington, 2 Strange, 1173; The Mayor of London v. Markwick, 11 Modern, 164.

[3] It is insisted, however, that inasmuch as this case was tried de novo by the circuit court upon appeal, the fact that it was tried below by a tribunal without jurisdiction will make no difference. The same contention was made in the case of State ex rel. Porter v. Studebaker, 80 W. Va. 673, 93 S. E. 755, wherein it was held that the circuit court upon appeal had no jurisdiction to try the matter until it had first been tried by the tribunal having jurisdiction to try the same in the first instance. The only power possessed by the circuit court was to reverse the judgment rendered by the tribunal which acted without jurisdiction, and remand it for a hearing before the tribunal which was authorized by law to try the same in the first instance, and that is the only jurisdiction we possess. It may be that when this case is tried by the tribunal provided by law for the trial thereof neither party will have cause for complaint. At any rate, until the judgment of that tribunal is had upon the matters involved neither this court nor the circuit court has jurisdiction to consider what judgment should properly be rendered between the parties.

[4] It is urged that this court should dismiss this proceeding for the reason that the notice did not give the time required by law. This question is one that must be passed upon first by the tribunal having original jurisdiction, and until that is done neither this court nor the circuit court can give judgment thereon.

[5] A motion is filed on behalf of one of the plaintiffs in error asking to dismiss the writ of error so far as he is concerned, but subsequent to the time he authorized the making of such motion it seems that he changed his mind and desired to continue the prosecution of this writ. Of course, a plaintiff in error has a right at any time to dismiss his writ of error so long as no right of the adverse party will be affected thereby; but he also has the right at any time before such motion is made and sustained by this court to change his mind and withdraw the same.

As to whether or not two of the plaintiffs in error are qualified to hold the office of councilmen, that question will likewise have to be determined in the first instance by the council to which they were elected, and should any interested party be dissatisfied with the decision of that tribunal thereon the same may be reviewed in the manner provided by law.

It follows from what we have said that the judgment of the circuit court complained of will be reversed, and the cause remanded for a trial of the contest before the proper tribunal.

(85 W. Va. 96)

OHIO VALLEY BANK v. BERRY et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 4, 1919.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR §966(2)—CONTINUANCE §7, 23, 26(3)—MOTION FOR CONTINUANCE IN DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

A motion for the continuance of a cause is always addressed to the sound, but not arbitrary, discretion of the court, and when based on the absence of a witness depends on the diligence employed to obtain his presence and the materiality of his evidence, and a judgment denying such motion must plainly appear to be erroneous, to justify a reversal thereof.

2. CONTINUANCE §45, 46(5)—DILIGENCE IN OBTAINING PRESENCE OF MATERIAL WITNESS NECESSARY.

There is no presumption of due diligence in such cases, from the mere suing out of summons for an absent witness. Diligence to obtain his presence must be affirmatively shown, as well as the materiality of his evidence if present, and that it will not be merely cumulative of other evidence, must also affirmatively appear.

3. TRIAL §253(5) — RELIANCE ON FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS NECESSARY FOR RECOVERY.

An instruction to the jury intended to propound the law of fraud and deceit interposed as a defense to the action on the contract sued on, which omits to submit in connection with the theory of alleged fraudulent representations, the question whether defendants relied thereon and were actually misled to their injury, is erroneous and is properly rejected by the trial court.

Error to Circuit Court, Cabell County.

Action by the Ohio Valley Bank against J. E. Berry and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

W. W. Smith and S. E. Love, both of Huntington, for plaintiffs in error.

Warth & McCullough, of Huntington, for defendant in error.

MILLER, P. In an action on a note of defendants in favor of plaintiff, dated June 19, 1917, payable ninety days after date, for the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars, given in renewal of a prior note of J. E. Berry, dated January 2, 1917, for three thousand dollars, payable to G. G. Brown, four months after date, and endorsed in blank by Herman Moore, and discounted by plaintiff, the plaintiff on September 17, 1918, obtained the judgment complained of for twenty-six hundred dollars, as found by the jury, with interest and costs.

The point first urged to reverse the judgment is that the court erroneously denied defendants' motion, made in May, 1918, at which time the case was brought to trial, based on the absence of several witnesses, particularly the absence of G. G. Brown, the payee of the original note for three thousand dollars. The record shows a continuance of the case, on defendants' motion, on February 9, 1918, but on what ground does not appear except from the admissions of counsel in their briefs, who say that it was because of the absence of the witness Brown, who, though summoned, did not appear until after the case had been continued, and it had thereby lost its place on the docket for that term and could not be reached for trial.

[1] A motion to continue is always addressed to the sound, not arbitrary, discretion of the court, and when based on the absence of witnesses, depends on the diligence used to secure their presence, and the materiality of their testimony as it may be disclosed by affidavits or other evidence in the case; and to reverse the judgment of the trial court thereon, it must appear to be plainly erroneous. Doane v. Parsons Pulp & Lumber Company, 77 W. Va. 545, 87 S. E. 859; State v. Jones et al., 90 S. E. 271.

[2] On the question of diligence it is conceded that a continuance was taken at the previous term because of the absence of Brown. This was sufficient to put the defendants on notice that diligent effort to obtain his presence at the next term was obligatory on them. There is no evidence of any effort on their part to have Brown or any of the other witnesses referred to present, other than the ex parte affidavit of Berry that he had had them summoned, but when, nor how long before the trial, does not appear. The affidavit says that the return of the officer shows that Brown, Carr,

Compton and Pool were not found. The process and return are not found in the record. For anything appearing in the record, defendants may have waited until a day or two before the trial before having the summonses issued, and they may have been directed only to the sheriff of Cabell county where the witnesses did not reside, and not in time to be executed before the trial. The witnesses may have resided outside of the State and beyond the process of the court, in which case due diligence required that their depositions should have been taken. Proper diligence is not shown by the record, and we can not see any abuse of the discretion of the trial court. The motion was properly denied on this ground alone. There is no presumption of diligence from the mere suing out of summonses not served; diligence is affirmative matter, to be shown on the motion for a continuance. Cicerello v. C. & O. Railway Co., 65 W. Va. 439, 64 S. E. 621. In the case just cited we held that a summons not served, procured only six days before the trial, did not show diligence under the circumstances of that case and that there was no abuse of the court's discretion in denying the motion for a continuance.

As to the materiality of the evidence of the witnesses, the only plea filed by defendants, except the general issue, was a special plea to the effect that defendants had been induced to execute the note sued on, and the original note of which it was a renewal, by M. J. Ferguson, vice president and active manager of the plaintiff bank, for the purpose of furnishing working capital for the Detroit Improved Backwall Company, the proceeds of which note were to have been paid to said Brown for that purpose, upon the terms that they were to receive five hundred shares of the capital stock of said company, which were to be and were in fact delivered into the hands of said Ferguson as trustee to hold as security for them against loss, but that in truth and fact the proceeds of said note, or a large part thereof, were used to liquidate prior indebtedness of said Brown to said bank, amounting to ten thousand dollars, and were not used to market the product of said company as defendants were led to believe they would be, by said Ferguson, vice president as aforesaid; that said company whose stock said Ferguson represented to be good security, was in fact insolvent, and its stock worthless, and said defendants were induced to execute said note as accommodation makers, by the false representations of said Ferguson, unknown to the defendants at the time of making said original and renewal notes, wherefore the consideration for said note had wholly failed etc.

What defendants expected to prove by said Brown was; first, that Brown was indebted to the plaintiff seventy-five hundred dollars, and that they, without knowledge of the facts, were induced to execute said note by Brown and Ferguson that Brown might repay a part of his obligations to the bank, by their representation that the proceeds thereof would be used for the purpose of marketing the products of the Detroit Improved Backwall Company; second, that at the time defendants were so induced to execute said note, and said stock was placed in the hands of said Ferguson as trustee, said company had ceased to exist and said stock was worthless, which fact was known to Ferguson but withheld from defendants, and that Brown was compelled by Ferguson to pay sixteen hundred dollars on account of his indebtedness wherefore he was unable to market the product of his company and unable to pay said note as he had agreed.

And defendants expected to prove by the witness Carr that at the time of the execution of their notes Brown was deeply involved financially; that Carr had endorsed for him for money loaned Brown by said bank, which had not been paid, but was long past due, as was known to Ferguson but was unknown to defendants; and that the witness Pool would testify to substantially the same facts.

Respecting the witness Brown, we think it more than doubtful that he would have admitted fraud and deceit on his part in obtaining defendants' indorsements, and conspiracy with Ferguson to obtain said notes. It is most unlikely that he would have confessed a crime of that kind. As to the amount of his indebtedness to the bank, it was proven by Ferguson that Brown owed the bank at that time seventy-five hundred dollars. Nor do we think it likely that Brown would have added to his offense by swearing that his company had ceased to exist and that its stock was worthless. Besides, defendants appear to have known that the company had no plant and was depending selling additional stock to obtain money to get goods manufactured and to put its inventions on the market, and also to pay a note from Brown and wife for fifty-five hundred dollars in favor of them, which if paid carried a profit to them of twenty-five hundred dollars for obtaining for him the three thousand dollars on the original of the note sued on. Ferguson swore on the trial that no part of the proceeds of said notes or of either of them went to pay any indebtedness of Brown to the bank, and that the bank still holds his notes unpaid. There must have been other employees of the bank who could have been summoned to prove the facts.

Defendants were examined as witnesses in their own behalf, and Ferguson was examined, and they had opportunity on cross-examination to call for the books of the bank but did not do so. In so far as Brown or either of the other witnesses would have corroborated them, their evidence would have been cumulative, and their absence, so far as such evidence is concerned, is not good ground for a continuance.

[3] Another point of error relied on to reverse, is that the court rejected defendants' two instructions to the jury. Number one purported to propound to the jury the law of fraud and deceit, applicable to the evidence in the case, and by which defendants represented they were induced to sign the notes involved in the transaction, was defective in omitting to submit to the jury, in connection with the question of the alleged fraudulent representations, the question of the defendants' reliance thereon, and whether they were actually misled thereby to their injury. 3 Brickwood's Sackett on Instructions, p. 2345, § 3645; 3 Thomp. on Trials (2d Ed.) p. 1385, § 1947; 10 Stand. Enc. Proc. pp. 63, 64, and note; 20 Cyc. 129; Staker v. Reese, 82 W. Va. 764, 97 S. E. 641, point 4 of the syllabus.

And what we have said in criticism of instruction number one may be said of instruction number two; it may be said of both that the false representations assumed must not alone have been "calculated" to mislead, as the instructions submit; they must in fact have been relied on and actually misled the defendants. We find no error in the refusal of defendants' instructions.

It is next argued as an additional ground for reversal that the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence. Assuming the law to be as affirmed by defendants, and for which they cite many decisions, the fact of misrepresentations and of fraud and deceit were denied. Ferguson, a witness for the plaintiff, flatly contradicted the alleged misrepresentations on his part, and we think the note for fifty-five hundred dollars and the contract between Brown and defendants, of January 1, 1917, tend to corroborate his evidence rather than defendants on the theory of fraud and deceit, set out in the plea and in their testimony, as well as some other matters testified to by them. But whether so or not, the facts in controversy were submitted to the jury and must be regarded as having been found against the defendants' contentions. And this includes the theory of defendants that Ferguson, representing the plaintiff bank, and in the interest of the bank, and by false representations, procured them to endorse or make their note for one purpose, in order to get the money to apply to the indebtedness of Brown to the bank. The fact that any of the money was so applied, is denied, and not proven by defendants. Indeed Ferguson swears positively that the defendants made their contract with Brown without his previous knowledge, or any advice by him, as to the solvency or honesty of either Brown or his company. The jury heard the testimony of both sides and found for plaintiff, and we can not say their findings are against the evidence.

The judgment must therefore be affirmed.

(178 N. C. 722)

STATE v. LITTLE. (No. 401.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1919.)

HOMICIDE ~~§~~244(3), 250—DEFENSES REDUCING CRIME TO SECOND DEGREE MURDER OR MANSLAUGHTER.

Where defendant undertook to reduce the killing to second degree murder, or to manslaughter, he was only required to satisfy the jury of the truth of the facts upon which he relied, and an instruction upon defendant's having a reasonable apprehension that he must kill deceased in order to save himself required defendant to satisfy the jury of such facts beyond a reasonable doubt was erroneous.

Appeal from Superior Court, Anson County; Shaw, Judge.

Doll Little was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. New trial granted.

McLendon & Covington and B. V. Henry, all of Wadesboro, and A. M. Stack, of Monroe, for appellant.

Jas. S. Manning, Atty. Gen., and Frank Nash, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROWN, J. The prisoner was convicted of the murder of one Will R. Honeycutt on the 19th of September, 1918, and the record of the trial presents 16 exceptions; 1 to the refusal to admit testimony, 10 to the judge's refusal to charge as requested, and 5 to his charge as given. We will consider only 2.

The homicide occurred at a cotton gin at Morven in Anson county. The evidence tended to prove that the prisoner and the deceased had an altercation about priority in getting under the sheds and to the gin with their wagons. There is no evidence that the deceased was armed. All the evidence proved that the defendant drew a pistol and shot the deceased, and that the deceased was struck four times and died from the wounds. There was much evidence introduced which it is unnecessary to set out.

The prisoner requested the court to charge the jury that there was no evidence of murder in the first degree. We cannot sustain this exception, but will not discuss the evidence, as it might prejudice the prisoner on another trial.

In the charge to which the defendant excepted, the court told the jury, among other things:

"In passing upon the question, you can put yourselves in the position of the defendant and see whether or not he reasonably apprehended it was necessary to shoot in order to save his own life or himself from great bodily harm, and if he has satisfied you from all the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, if he has satisfied you that he did not provoke the difficulty and did not enter into it willingly, and after getting into it that he used no more force than was reasonably necessary, the court instructs you that if you find these to be the circumstances under which he killed him, it would be justifiable homicide, and it would be your duty to return a verdict of not guilty."

This instruction was erroneous, and well calculated to injure the prisoner. The burden of proof is always upon the state to satisfy the jury beyond a reasonable doubt in order to convict of a criminal offense. But where the defendant undertakes to reduce the killing to murder in the second degree or to manslaughter, he is only required to satisfy the jury of the truth of the facts upon which he relies. This is elementary now in this state. In the brief of the learned Assistant Attorney General, he admits that the expression, "beyond a reasonable doubt," is plainly error, but contends it is a mere slip of the tongue, and that it was corrected in the charge.

We fail to see that it was immediately corrected and so explained to the jury. It is a very important rule of evidence, as there is quite a difference between satisfying the jury of the truth of a fact and of convincing it beyond a reasonable doubt.

We think the prisoner is entitled to a new trial.

New trial.

(178 N. C. 435)

GORDON v. PINTSCH GAS CO. (No. 411.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1919.)

1. JUDGMENT ¶17(9)—DENIAL OF VACATION OF DEFAULT FOR NEGLIGENCE.

Where service was duly made on defendant's agent, although it was not properly named, held that where defendant upon its own part failed to give the matter that amount of attention which a man of ordinary prudence usually gives to his important business, it is not entitled to set aside a default judgment for excusable neglect.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶958—DISCRETION AS TO AMENDMENTS NOT REVIEWABLE.

Discretion of court as to amendments vested in trial court by Revisal, § 507, will not be disturbed on appeal, except in case of palpable abuse.

3. PARTIES ¶95(5)—POWER OF COURT TO ALLOW AMENDMENT OF NAME OF DEFENDANT.

On motion, several years after default, to correct by substituting "Compressing" for "Gas" in the corporate name of defendant, the latter being its generally known name, held, allowance of amendment was within the discretion of the court.

4. CORPORATIONS ¶48—EFFECT OF MISNOMER.

Misnomer is immaterial, if the identity of the corporation intended is apparent.

Walker and Allen, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Richmond County; Lane, Judge.

Action by J. R. Gordon against the Pintsch Gas Company. After default judgment was rendered, plaintiff moved to correct the pleadings, process, and judgment by inserting the word "Compressing" in the name of the defendant instead of the word "Gas." From a judgment correcting the record, the defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This action was instituted against the Pintsch Gas Company in 1913 to recover damages for sewage emptying on the lot of the plaintiff in the town of Hamlet, N. C. Judgment by default, and inquiry was taken at December term, 1913, for want of an answer. At March term, 1918, the inquiry was instituted, and the jury found in response to the issue submitted, "What damages, if anything, is the plaintiff entitled to recover of the defendant in this action?" "$2,975," and thereupon judgment was entered for that sum.

On June 26, 1919, the counsel for the plaintiff gave notice of a motion in due form that at the next term of the superior court of Richmond to be held on Monday July 14, 1919, motion would be made in said court that the court should "amend process, pleading and judgment in the case of J. R. Gordon against the Pintsch Gas Company so as to read and to be J. R. Gordon v. Pintsch Compressing Co., said cause having been tried and judgment rendered at March term, 1918, of the superior court of Richmond." This notice was served on the superintendent and manager of the defendant Pintsch Compressing Company on July 2, 1919, and affidavits were filed by the plaintiff and others. The plaintiff introduced the record of the judgment by default and inquiry at December term, 1913, and of the verdict and judgment, final at March term, 1918.

The affidavit of M. R. Sharpe was filed that in 1912 and 1913 he was manager and superintendent of the defendant's plant at Hamlet, N. C., and that the summons in this case of J. R. Gordon against the Pintsch Gas Company was served upon him, and he immediately sent the copy left with him by the sheriff to the general office of the defendant, who employed resident counsel to represent them; that there was no other plant in Richmond county in the business of manufacturing gas and its allied products in 1912 and 1913; and that the summons was served on him the latter year.

A. B. McDonald filed an affidavit that the plant of the defendant at Hamlet was built about 1897; that the "defendant was always known by the name of, and as, Pintsch Gas Company; that it was recognized and known at all times by such name; that the first time that this affiant ever knew, or even heard, that the defendant was named Pintsch Compressing Company was after judgment final had been recovered against it in this action"; that M. R. Sharpe was superintendent and manager of the defendant at Hamlet during the years 1912 and 1913 and for many years prior thereto; and that it was the only person or corporation in said county known by the name of either Pintsch Compressing Company or Pintsch Gas Company; and that he has been many years deputy sheriff of Richmond county, and at all times the defendant has been known, recognized, and acting as the Pintsch Gas Company.

The plaintiff, J. R. Gordon, in his affidavit reiterated the above statement of fact, and added that, after the death of the original counsel employed by the defendant in this action the defendant employed another resident counsel to represent it, and that M. R. Sharpe its superintendent knew that said action had been brought, and was intended to be brought, against the company which he represented; that it had no other name posted at the entrance of its plant or elsewhere, as its true name, as required by law, and that it was recognized as the Pintsch Gas Company, and paid bills and accounts charged against it in such name; that it was the only plant doing such business in said county or owning or operating a line of sewage upon the land of the defendant, and it never made any contention that it "was not sued in the right name" until the statute of limitations had run against the plaintiff's cause of action, although it knew it was the real party sued, and knew of each and every proceeding and move made in said trial thereof, and it has not been misled in any particular herein, being at all times fully informed as to the real and true contention of the plaintiff. The affidavits filed by the defendant's general superintendent (in New York) did not deny any of the above statements, but rested its contention upon the ground that after the summons in the action of the plaintiff against the Pintsch Gas Company was sent to it by the local superintendent, Sharpe, it employed counsel to look after the matter, Maj. John D. Shaw and after his death the company retained Mr. John P. Cameron, and added that his recollection was that a second summons had been served in the same action in the name of the "Pintsch Gas & Compressing Company," and that the matter had been left to counsel, and after the death of the second counsel the defendant employed Mr. Bynum, through whom it is resisting this motion.

The motion was continued from time to time by consent of parties till September term, 1919, at which term the court rendered judgment—

"correcting the pleadings, process, and judgment in such matter by inserting the word 'Compressing' in the name of the defendant Pintsch Gas Company instead of the word 'Gas,' and thereby correcting the same to speak the true defendant, Pintsch Compressing Company, who were in court under process issued, and were represented from the time of the institution of said action until final judgment was signed and until the present time, and it further appearing to the court that said motion, notice, and other processes were made, served, and properly executed," it was decreed that the motion should be granted, and that "said process, pleadings, issues, and judgments be, and the same and each thereof is, amended by inserting the word 'Compressing' instead of the word 'Gas,' making the name of defendant read 'Pintsch Compressing Company,' instead of 'Pintsch Gas Company.'"

From this judgment, the defendant appealed.

Fred W. Bynum, of Rockingham, for appellant.

Lorenzo Medlin, of Rockingham, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. [1] The defendant upon its own showing failed "to give the matter that amount of attention which a man of ordinary prudence usually gives to his important business," and therefore would not be entitled to set aside the judgment for excusable neglect even if such motion had not been barred by the lapse of more than a year. Sluder v. Rollins, 78 N. C. 271; Roberts v. Allman, 106 N. C. 394, 11 S. E. 424, and citations thereto in Anno. Ed.

[2, 3] The case stands, therefore, upon the power of the court, in its discretion, to allow the amendment asked for. Revisal, § 507, provides that—

The "judge or court may, before and after judgment, in furtherance of justice, and on such terms as may be proper, amend any pleading, process or proceeding, by adding or striking out the name of any party; or by correcting a mistake in the name of a party, or a mistake in any other respect," etc.

The language of the statute itself shows that this is a discretionary power, and it has always been held that the granting or refusal of amendments in the cases named is not reviewable by appeal except in cases of palpable abuse. See citations to Pell's Revisal, § 507. Also Sheldon v. Kivett, 110 N. C. 411, 14 S. E. 970 and cases there cited.

The evidence in this case fully warranted the findings of fact in the judgment and the grant of the leave to amend. There is no question upon the affidavits on both sides that the Pintsch Compressing Company was the party charged with committing the tort sued on; that the general manager of the Compressing Company was served with summons; that he sent it to the general office in New York, which employed counsel, and at his death employed another counsel, and later, on the death of the latter counsel, employed another; that the company sued was known generally by the name mentioned in the summons, which is held sufficient, even as to defendants in an indictment, subject to plea in abatement in which the defendant must give its true name. The general manager in New York in his affidavit states that his recollection is that a second summons was served, giving the name of defendant as the Pintsch Compressing & Gas Company. There is no indication that the defendant suffered any prejudice by reason of the misnomer, and it has waived any objection by not giving its true name by plea in abatement.

[4] A misnomer does not vitiate, provided the identity of the corporation or person with that intended by the parties is apparent, whether it is in a deed (Asheville Division v. Aston, 92 N. C. 584), or in a judgment or, in a criminal proceeding (McCrea v. Starr, 5 N. C. 252).

The judgment by default and inquiry in December, 1913, and the judgment final in March 1918, upon the verdict of the jury were both taken regularly, "according to the course and procedure of the courts." There is no question that this appellant had the fullest knowledge that the action was against itself and that it had the amplest opportunity to defend.

The amendment rested in the discretion of the court.

Affirmed.

WALKER, J. (dissenting). There was no serious denial by the defendant of the right to have the record amended by inserting the correct name of defendant for the incorrect one; that is, the Compress Company for the Gas Company, two names radically different in pronunciation, and not coming under the rule of idem sonans. The power of amendment was not the real point raised by the defendant, but his right to answer, if the power was exercised and the amendment made. My opinion is that he should have been granted that right. If the plaintiff could enforce his judgment, the amendment was not necessary, and the fact that it was made shows that plaintiff and the court considered it necessary in order to enforce the judgment. It was therefore a material amendment, and not merely formal. The plaintiff was asking for a favor from the court, and when he received it, it does not come with good grace from him to question defendant's right to be heard. But I do not regard it as a mere favor the defendant is asking of the court, but a right to which he is entitled. In Atwood v. Landis, 22 Minn. 558, the court went beyond the position I now take, and held the judgment in a similar case to be void, the process not having been served on the party by his right name. It is not necessary that we should go so far, as defendant only asks leave to answer. The facts of that case were precisely like those in this record, as the man upon whom the summons was served was the one who owed the debt. Farnham v. Hildrich, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 277, is directly in point. It was decided as follows:

(1) "The judgment and execution must describe the party whose property is sought to be taken, and it is not enough that the right man is made to pay a debt."

(2) "The sheriff can only execute the process against the person or property of the individual named."

(3) "Where a defendant, sued by a wrong name, fails to appear in the action, he does not waive his right to object to the misnomer, after judgment and execution"—citing many authorities.

This decision was approved in the Minnesota case, which we cited above. See, also, Cole v. Hindson, 101 English Rep. (Reprint) 528 (S. C. 6 Term Rep. 234). All these cases decide beyond any doubt that if plaintiff is permitted to amend, the defendant should be allowed to answer or demur as if there had been no judgment.

But aside from authority upon this question, it would seem to be fair and just that defendant should be allowed to answer to the merits. If plaintiff's amendment is necessary in order that he may enforce the judgment, it is substantial, and no reason in that view can be discovered why defendant should not be entitled to plead or answer in the case; the judgment being set aside for that purpose. The defendant was not by the law called upon to answer a defective complaint filed under defective process, nor was it required to come into a suit, appear and plead, when it had not been properly summoned to do so. When process was served upon the Compress Company, even if the same was defective, it had the right to retain counsel to investigate and protect its interests, and this cannot be used to its prejudice. A person would be very imprudent and unwise to pursue any other course. It did not appear, because it was not required to do so, and waive its rights in favor of the plaintiff. If one is served with process by one name, he is not bound to answer if that is not his true name, but is quite different. He is not bound to correct the plaintiff's or the sheriff's mistake. It appears, or at least was stated in the argument, that the lot in question was not worth over $700, and the plaintiff offered to sell it for $800, and yet the damages were assessed at four times that much, or $2,975. This is a large recovery in any case, but especially so, and also a very unjust one, when the defendant has properly had no day in court. A plaintiff must not only intend to sue the one whom he alleges to be liable to him, but he must actually do so, and a suit against the Gas Company is not a suit against the Compress Company. Hassell v. Daniels, etc., Steamboat Co., 163 N. C. 296, 84 S. E. 363.

The judgment by default and inquiry was rendered at December term, 1913, and the inquiry was not executed until March term, 1918. In the meantime, the two attorneys who represented the defendant successively in Richmond county for many years have died.

ALLEN, J., concurs in this dissenting opinion.

(178 N. C. 658)

JOHNSON v. COVINGTON et al. (No. 415.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶627(2)—TRANSCRIPT: REFUSAL OF CERTIFICATE OF MOTION TO DISMISS.

Where the transcript of appeal was not docketed in the time required, and the appellee prepared the certificate required by court rule 17 (81 S. E. ix) for motion to dismiss, and forwarded it to clerk of trial court, with a request that he sign the same, the clerk had no right to decline to sign and return the certificate because plaintiff's counsel had two weeks previously paid him $20 on account for the making out of a transcript and requested that he prepare the same.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶628(2)—TRANSCRIPT OF RECORD; LACHES IN BRINGING UP.

Appellant was in laches for putting off his application for the transcript of record until just before the time when it should have been sent up for hearing at the fall term, though the appeal was taken in the previous March, and he was further in laches that, when the clerk delayed in making out the transcript, he did not take steps to have it made out himself and certified by the clerk, and if there was any valid excuse the appellant should have filed his application for certiorari, and, being guilty of laches, the motion to dismiss under court rule 17 (81 S. E. ix) must be granted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Richmond County.

Action by Edith Johnson against L. S. Covington and others. On motion of the defendants, the plaintiff was nonsuited at the close of the evidence, and she appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion allowed.

This is a motion by the defendants to docket and dismiss the appeal of the plaintiff under rule 17 of this court (81 S. E. ix).

McIntyre, Lawrence & Proctor, of Lumberton, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. This case was tried at March term, 1919, of Richmond. On motion of the defendant, the plaintiff was nonsuited at the close of the evidence, and appealed. The case on appeal was agreed and filed in the office of the clerk of the superior court of Richmond some months ago.

[1] The transcript on appeal, not having been docketed here in the time required at this term, the appellee prepared the certificate required by rule 17 (81 S. E. ix) for this motion, and forwarded the same to the clerk of Richmond with request to sign the same. The clerk of Richmond telephoned the defendant's counsel, who reside in Robeson, that the plaintiff's counsel had two weeks previously come to his office and paid him $20 on account for making out the transcript, and requested him to prepare the same, and declined to sign and return the certificate.

This action of the clerk was entirely without authority, and the appellee was entitled to said certificate upon application and payment of the costs of the certificate. It was for this court, and not for the clerk below, to decide upon the rights of the parties as to the motion to dismiss. If this were not true, it would be in the power of a clerk below to control the course of appeals to this court.

[2] It would seem that the appellant was in laches for putting off his application for the transcript of the record until just before the time when it should have been sent up, though the appeal was taken in March last, and he was further in laches that, when the clerk delayed in making out the transcript, he did not take steps to have it made out himself and certified to by the clerk. If there was any valid excuse, the appellant should have filed his application for a certiorari, in apt time, in this court, or have answered the motion to dismiss under rule 17 by showing cause.

The rights of the appellee cannot be thus denied, and the motion to dismiss under rule 17 must be granted.

Motion allowed.

(178 N. C. 659)

WATT v. SHAPLEIGH HARDWARE CO. (No. 443.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 19, 1919.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ¶999(1)—REVIEW; QUESTION OF FACT NOT REVIEWABLE.

Where the only question involved in an appeal of a civil action is one of fact on which the jury were properly instructed, no error is shown.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; Adams, Judge.

Action by W. W. Watt against the Shapleigh Hardware Company. Judgment for plaintiff, defendant's motion to set aside the verdict overruled, and defendant appeals. No error.

Civil action tried upon these issues:

(1) Is the defendant indebted to the plaintiff? "Yes."

If so, in what amount? Answer: "$2,943.66."

(2) Has the defendant tendered to the plaintiff any payment upon plaintiff's alleged indebtedness? If so, what is the amount of the tender and the date thereof? Answer: "Yea, $1,493.61, on 26th day of August, 1918."

From the judgment rendered, the defendant appealed.

A. B. Justice, of Raeford, for appellant.

E. R. Preston and Clarkson, Tallafarro, & Clarkson, all of Charlotte, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. Upon an examination of the record in this case, the court is of opinion that the only question involved is one of fact which has been determined by the jury in favor of the plaintiff under a clear charge free from error.

No error.

(178 N. C. 442)

In re SKINNER'S ESTATE. (No. 251.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1919.)

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION  $\Leftrightarrow$  35—PERSONAL PROPERTY; CLAIMANTS OF THE HALF BLOOD.

Under statute of distribution, claimants of the half blood are entitled to share equally with claimants of the whole blood in the distribution of personal property.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Allen, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Charles W. Skinner. Controversy without action between Mrs. Sarah S. Snow, and Eliza Skinner McGehee and others. Judgment for the former, and the latter except and appeal. Affirmed.

The controversy is to determine the rights of respective claimants of the whole and half blood to participate in the personal estate of Charles Worth Skinner, deceased intestate, and now in the hands of Joseph B. Cheshire, Jr., administrator.

There was judgment in favor of Mrs. Snow. The claimant of the half blood and the claimants of the whole blood excepted and appealed.

L. P. McGehee, of Chapel Hill, for appellants.

E. W. Ewbank, of Hendersonville, for appellee.

HOKE, J. In the case agreed, the family connection and blood relationship of the parties to this proceeding are given as follows:

"I. Thomas E. Skinner, formerly of Raleigh, N. C., married, first, Ann Eliza Halsey, of which marriage there were children, as follows:

"(a) Sarah Halsey Skinner, who intermarried with Samuel Snow, and who is a party to this proceeding, said Samuel Snow being dead; and

"(b) Thomas Skinner who died without issue, and whose wife is now dead. There was no other issue from this marriage.

"II. The said Thomas E. Skinner married, second, Ann Stuard Ludlow, of which marriage there were children, who survived infancy as follows:

"(a) Eliza Mary Skinner, who intermarried with George B. McGehee, and who is a party to this proceeding, the said George B. McGehee being now dead.

"(b) J. Ludlow Skinner, who intermarried with Octavia Winder. The said J. Ludlow Skinner is now dead, leaving issue John Cox Winder Skinner only, who is a party to this controversy.

"(c) Charles Worth Skinner, who is now dead, and his duly qualified administrator, Joseph B. Cheshire, Jr., is party to this controversy. Said Charles Worth Skinner never married.

"No other children of this marriage survived infancy."

It further appeared that the estate consisting of personal property to the amount of $44,000, less some valid payments made by the administrator, devolved upon Charles Worth Skinner, the intestate under a settlement of his grandfather John R. Ludlow, by which the property was given to the mother, Ann Stuard Skinner-Ludlow, for life, and then to her children, etc.

It seems to have been definitely settled in the English courts, at least as early as 1690, that there is no distinction in the rights of claimants of the half and the whole blood to share in the distribution of personal property. Crook v. Watt, 2 Vernon, 124. This decision, rendered on February 11, 1690, was affirmed in the House of Lords at or near the beginning of the Easter Term following and does not seem to have been afterwards questioned as the correct construction of the statute applicable to the subject. 2 Ventris, 317, 23 English Reprints, 689. The same position has prevailed with great uniformity in the American courts, unless affected by some change in the different state statutes on the subject. Prescott v. Carr, 29 N. H. 453, reported also in 61 Am. Dec. 652; Anderson v. Bell, 140 Ind. 375, 39 N. E. 735, reported in 29 L. R. A. 541; McKinney v. Mellon, 8 Del. (3 Houst.) 277; Deadrick et al. v. Armour, 29 Tenn. (10 Humph.) 588; Ector v. Grant, 112 Ga. 557, 37 S. E. 984, 53 L. R. A. 723. The authoritative textbooks, so far as examined, are in accord with the decisions. 2 Blacks. 515; 2 Kent, 428; Williams on Personal Property, p. 362; 9 R. C. L. 32, 33; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. (2d. Ed.) 315.

In the citation to Williams, supra, it is said:

"In tracing the degrees of kindred in the distribution of the intestate's personal estate, no preference is given to males over females; nor to the paternal over the maternal line; nor to the whole over the half blood," etc. "The degrees of kindred are reckoned according to the civil law."

In 9 R. C. L., supra, it is said:

"The rule is nearly uniform that brother and sister of the half blood are included in the statutory provision for descent to brother and sister, unless a contrary intention appears, and the phrase 'of the blood' is held to include half blood, and the term 'next of kin' is construed to include the half blood, especially where the degrees of kinship are reckoned according to the civil law, by which they are equally next of kin."

The precise question as to personal property does not seem to have been presented in this state, but our statute of distribution in the terms appertaining to the question is the same or substantially similar to the English law which had been construed as above stated. It contains throughout nothing which affects any change in reference to this especial subject, and on authority we must approve the ruling of his honor in awarding her proportionate and equal share to the claimant of the half blood.

There is no error, and the judgment of the superior court is affirmed.

(178 N. C. 441)

KORNEGAY et al. v. PRICE. (No. 224.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1919.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE  16—POSSESSION BY HUSBAND ON VOID DEED FROM WIFE NOT ADVERSE.

Where a deed from the wife to the husband was void for noncompliance with Revisal 1905, § 2107, requiring the approval of the probating officer, etc., the husband could not hold under it as color of title adversely to the wife during coverture.

Appeal from Superior Court, Duplin County; Gulon, Judge.

Action by Hezekiah Kornegay and another against Eden Price. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Judgment reversed, and new trial granted.

Civil action tried upon these issues:

(1) Is the plaintiff the owner of the lands described in the complaint?

Answer: Yes, second tract only.

(2) Does defendant wrongfully withhold the same from the plaintiff?

Answer: Yes, as to second tract.

Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appealed.

John A. Gavin, Jr., of Kenansville, for appellants.

Stevens & Beasley, of Kenansville, for appellee.

BROWN, J. It is admitted that Margaret Price was the owner in fee of the land in controversy, and that the plaintiff is her only heir at law. Margaret Price was the wife of the defendant, Eden Price. They were married prior to the 15th day of May, 1897, and lived together as man and wife until the 18th day of July, 1916, when Margaret Price died. No children were born of said marriage. On the 15th day of May, 1897, Margaret Price executed to her husband, the defendant, a deed which was void under Revisal 2107. The defendant claimed that this deed was color of title and that he had had adverse possession against his wife of the 44½-acre tract for a period sufficient to ripen the color into a good title. The court directed the jury that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the 44½-acre tract of land; that, if the evidence is to be believed, he acquired title by color of the deed from his wife and by adverse possession against her.

We think the learned judge erred in holding that the husband can acquire the wife's land by adverse possession under color of title. It is admitted that the deed of Margaret Price to the defendant is void because not probated in accordance with the statute and that it did not pass the title.

It seems to be well settled that, owing to the unity of husband and wife, adverse possession cannot exist between them so long as the coverture continues. But where the marital relations have been terminated by divorce or abandonment, it seems that one may acquire title from the other by adverse possession. I. A. & E. Ency. p. 820, § 11. In First National Bank v. Guerra, 61 Cal. 109, it is held that a wife cannot claim adversely to her husband or those claiming under him so long as he remains the head of the family. It is held further in Hendricks v. Kasson, 53 Mich. 575, 19 N. W. 192, that the husband cannot hold, adversely to his wife, premises belonging to her. Joint possession by husband and wife held under the wife's claim of title inures to her benefit. Templeton v. Twitty, 88 Tenn. 593, 14 S. W. 435. In Vandevoort v. Gould, 36 N. Y. 639, it is held that the possession of premises by husband belonging to his wife can in no sense be deemed adverse. In the note to A. & E. Ency., supra, a large number of cases is cited sustaining the text. See, also, Union Oil Co. v. Stewart, 158 Cal. 149, 110 Pac. 313, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 570 and notes.

The possession of the husband of land conveyed to him by the wife under a void deed becomes adverse only after her death and against her heirs. Berkowitz v. Brown, 3

Misc. Rep. 1, 23 N. Y. Supp. 792. There are authorities which hold that the possession of the husband does not become adverse against the wife's heirs until a demand is made for possession. See, also, R. C. L. 755, § 83, where it is said:

"It is well settled that neither a husband nor a wife can acquire title by adverse possession as against the other of land of which they are in the joint possession."

The judgment of the superior court is reversed.

New trial.

(178 N. C. 470)

GORDON v. STEHLI SILKS CORPORATION. (No. 389.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 19, 1919.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §234(1) — UNPROTECTED MACHINERY; INJURY TO SERVANT FROM.

A spinning machine operative, not warned of the uncovered cogwheel of a motor, which caught her dress when she passed it on her way out, held not negligent in using the aisle in which the motor was placed.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT §121(5) — UNPROTECTED MACHINERY; NEGLIGENCE OF MASTER.

An uncovered cogwheel is a danger, and it is negligence to leave it uncovered, even temporarily, without notice to operatives passing it on their way from work.

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Lane, Judge.

Action by Ida B. Gordon against the Stehli Silks Corporation. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. No error.

This action is to recover damages for personal injuries caused by the negligence of the defendant, who had taken the hood off of a certain cogwheel in the factory where the plaintiff worked, leaving it exposed so that the plaintiff had her dress caught in the cogs sustaining injuries. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

Justice & Broadhurst and King & Kimball, all of Greensboro, for appellant.

John A. Barringer, of Greensboro, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. The plaintiff had been working in the defendant's factory for some five years, and it was her duty to go from one machine to the other and take out the bad bobbins. There were 16 spinning frames all set in rows parallel to each other, but separated by aisles. There were little motors in the aisles at the end of each spinning frame, around which the plaintiff went to get the defective work and bring it to the redrawing machine. The motors were geared to the spinning machines, the gearing being covered. The cover which fitted over the gearing of this particular motor had been taken off for repairs, and the cogs were left unprotected. When the plaintiff started to supper at 11:30 at night, she went down the aisle to ask another girl to go with her, as was her custom. The wind, through an open window, blew her dress as she was passing this unprotected cogwheel, and her dress was caught in the cogs and pulled off of her, and she was drawn down so that the calf of her left leg was caught and seriously injured by the cogs. She testified that she did not know that the cover was off the motor.

[1] Taking the evidence, as we must, in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, the motion to nonsuit was properly refused. It was the duty of the defendant to furnish a safe place for the plaintiff to work, and it was negligence to leave the cogwheel unprotected. It was not negligence barring recovery by the plaintiff for her to go the way she did, unless she had been warned of the uncovered cogwheel. The court properly refused the prayer to charge the jury that she could not recover because she might have avoided going near that particular motor with the open cogwheel.

[2] An uncovered cogwheel is a danger, and it was negligence to leave it uncovered, even if temporarily, without notice. The jury under proper instructions have found that this negligence was the proximate cause of the injuries sustained by the plaintiff. Hardy v. Lumber Co., 160 N. C. 113, 75 S. E. 855, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 759, and citations to that case in Anno. Ed.

No error.

(178 N. C. 724)

STATE v. CAIN et al. (No. 346.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1919.)

1. HOMICIDE §30(2) — PRINCIPALS; FIRST DEGREE MURDER.

If defendants formed a common design and purpose to go to the house of deceased and assault him with guns and pistols or to inflict any bodily harm upon him or the inmates of his house, and in pursuance of such common design and purpose came to door of deceased's house, and some one of the party shot him and killed him, and this was done after it had been premeditated and deliberated upon by them, and they did it with malice, they would all be guilty of murder in the first degree.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §1172(7)—APPEAL; OMISSION IN INSTRUCTION FAVORABLE TO DEFENDANT.

That the words, "You will specify, of course, which one," were omitted before the word, "because," in instruction, "If you find any of the defendants guilty of murder in the first degree, you will specify of course which one. If you find any one of the defendants guilty of murder in the second degree, because only one defendant could be guilty of murder in the second degree"—if error, was error in favor of defendants.

3. HOMICIDE §307(4) — INSTRUCTIONS; EXCLUDING CONSIDERATION OF MANSLAUGHTER AND SECOND DEGREE MURDER.

In view of evidence of threats and preparation of weapons and concerted attack simultaneously made with firearms late at night by defendants firing simultaneously, the judge properly instructed that there was no evidence of manslaughter, and might have gone further and instructed that there was no evidence of murder in the second degree; there being only one question in the case, the identity of the parties.

4. HOMICIDE §232 — CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE; PREMEDITATION.

Premeditation and deliberation, like any other fact, may be shown by circumstances, and in determining whether there was premeditation and deliberation the jury may consider the entire absence of provocation and all the circumstances under which the homicide is committed.

5. HOMICIDE §9 — EVIDENCE; MURDER IN THE FIRST DEGREE.

If the circumstances show a formed design to take the life of deceased, the crime is murder in the first degree.

Appeal from Superior Court, Surry County; Lane, Judge.

Joe Cain, Joe Bowles, and Gardner Cain were convicted of murder in the first degree, and they appeal. No error.

Folger, Jackson & Folger, of Mount Airy, and J. C. Biggs, of Raleigh, for appellants.

The Attorney General and Assistant Attorney General, for the State.

CLARK, C. J. There was evidence of motive that the prisoners were operating an illicit still in the vicinity of Riley Easter's home, and that the deceased and his son, James Easter, knew of it, and that the prisoners accused Riley Easter and his son of giving information which caused the still to be captured and destroyed; that they made threats and sent him a message that if it was not replaced there would be trouble, and there was evidence that Walter Cain, son of Joe Cain, went to the Easters and gave him notice that the other defendants were enraged at his having had the still taken, and unless put back by Sunday night they would do some injury or violence to him. There was evidence that the still was not returned by Sunday night, and that on the next night Riley Easter was slain. There was also evidence that one Andy Martin was induced by John Hicks, one of the defendants, to go to Easter and warn him to put the still back. There was much other evidence to the same purport, and that on the Monday night in question Joe Bowles, Joe Cain, Gardner Cain, and John Hicks were seen and identified by the inmates of Riley Easter's house and also by Riley Easter himself; that they knew these men, having lived in that community for some months, seeing them frequently; that these men had come to Riley Easter's house often and spent much time there; that on this Monday night Mrs. Easter and her daughter were out of doors, it being a moonlight night, the moon well up, and about 10 or 11 o'clock at night, as they testified, these four men came up near the house; one of them testified that she knew Joe Cain's voice; Mrs. Easter and her daughter, Mrs. White, ran to the house, and as they got in the door they exclaimed that these four men were out there, calling them by name; the son, Jimmie Easter, was in the house, and Riley Easter went to the door, thinking it was revenue officers, and said, "Hello," and invited whoever it was to "come in"; that there was then the simultaneous report of four guns, and a bullet struck Riley Easter, entering his body and subsequently causing his death; that at that time it was so bright that Riley Easter was able to recognize the men out there; that the firing became rapid, from four guns, and Mrs. Easter testified that she saw flashes coming from four weapons of some kind in the hands of these four men; that she was able to recognize the three defendants who were convicted and Walter Cain; that a number of shots were fired into the room or side of the house, some going into the room or side of the house, and that these men then made a rush for the door; that James Easter then got his pistol and fired two shots; that the inmates closed the door to keep the assailants out, but the door failed to close fully, leaving a sufficient opening to see out; that these men were pushing against the door, and Mrs. Easter saw Joe Cain appearing through it, seeing him plainly; that one of her daughters from another door had also seen these men and recognized them, and other inmates of the house say they saw these men and identified them. One of the women said, "You have killed pap and my baby." Then these men got off the steps at the door and went away. There were a large number of shots fired, as appeared by the bullet holes on the door facing and door as testified to by officers and other persons. A shotgun and pistol were found next day at Walter Cain's, and there was also evidence that Gardner Cain owned a repeating rifle and a pistol, and that Joe Cain also had guns and pistols. These weapons which were found at their houses, or known to have been owned by them and found in their vicinity, were put in evidence.

Riley Easter stated to Dr. Hollingsworth when he first came in that he was going to die. Though the doctor told him he was not, Riley Easter repeated the statement that he was going to die and said that these men, naming the defendants and Walter Cain, had killed him. He said they were all shooting. The judge found as a fact that Riley Easter made these statements under an impending sense of death, and admitted them as dying declarations, with proper instructions. Riley Easter died 10 a. m. after the night he was shot.

There were exceptions to the admission of evidence and to some two alleged errors in reciting the contention of the parties, but they do not require discussion. The evidence shows that Riley Easter, notwithstanding the remark of the doctor that he would not die, repeated that he would, and subsequently made his declaration that these prisoners had shot him in the manner above detailed. The doctor testified that he thought then Riley would die. The two alleged errors in the recital of the evidence by the judge are very slight, and he told the jury that they must take their own recollection of the testimony.

[1] The two exceptions chiefly relied upon are the following statements in the charge:

"Now, if the jury shall find from the evidence in this case, beyond a reasonable doubt, that these defendants, Joe Cain, Gardner Cain, Joe Bowles, Walter Cain, and John Hicks, formed a common design and a common purpose to go to the house of Riley Easter and assault him with guns and pistols, or to inflict any bodily harm upon him or the inmates of his house, and if you further find beyond a reasonable doubt that, in pursuance of this common design and purpose, entered into and agreed to by all of them, that they were there, and that when Riley Easter came to the door some one of them fired a shot into his body from a weapon and killed him, and that this was done in pursuance of the common design entered into by all of them, and death was caused to him in that way, after it had been premeditated and deliberated upon by them, and they did it with malice, then all would be guilty of murder in the first degree."

There was evidence of the motive and of the threats of these prisoners that they came up about 11 o'clock at night armed with deadly weapons, and all four of them firing simultaneously at Easter and into the house, and evidence by the inmates identifying the prisoners. In this instruction there was no error.

When the officers sought to arrest the three defendants who were convicted and went to Joe Cain's house, his wife said he was not at home; but he was found in the loft in which there was no floor and to which there was no access by ladder or steps. The officers found Gardner about 300 yards from his house in the woods lying between two logs with his pistol tucked under some leaves near his head. Joe Bowles was found covered up in bed with all his clothes on. A shotgun and his clothes were found in a tree not far from Gardner Cain's house. Walter Cain and John Hicks, who alone of the prisoners went upon the stand, testified that they were not present at the shooting, and were acquitted. Walter Cain testified, however, that he was at the Easters' Sunday morning and told them that they had better take that thing back to keep down trouble, for his father (Joe Cain) and Gardner Cain were mad about it, and that he had seen a shotgun at Gardner's house like the one that was found near there.

John Hicks also testified that he told Andy Martin that he thought the Easters were going to get into trouble, and to tell them to take the still back.

The court charged the jury explicitly:

"By premeditation and deliberation is meant the forming of a design, a purpose weighing it in the mind, thinking it over, deliberating upon it, turning it over in the mind, as it were."

[2] There was no exception to this nor to the definition of "malice" or any other part of the charge as to these prisoners except the following:

"If you find any of the defendants guilty of murder in the second degree, because only one defendant could be guilty of murder in the second degree."

This assignment of error is defective because it is a mere paragraph taken out of a longer sentence, but, taking the whole sentence to make it intelligible, it reads as follows:

"If you find the defendants guilty of murder in the first degree, then your verdict will be guilty of murder in the first degree; if you find any of the defendants guilty of murder in the first degree, you will specify, of course, which one; if you find any one of the defendants guilty of murder in the second degree because only one defendant could be guilty of murder in the second degree."

It is apparent that there was a typographical error in omitting before the word "because" in the last paragraph, "You will specify, of course, which one." Otherwise, the sentence excepted to is insensible. If error, this was error in favor of the prisoners.

The only other exception to the charge is to the following:

"The state contends, therefore, that you should find from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that he (Walter Cain) was a party to the common purpose and design entered into by all of them that they do injury or death to Easter."

Walter Cain was acquitted. Neither of the defendants except Walter Cain and John Hicks went upon the stand, both of whom were acquitted.

[3] The judge properly instructed the jury that there was no evidence of manslaughter. He might have gone further and told them that there was no evidence of murder in the second degree, for upon this evidence of a concerted attack simultaneously made with firearms, late at night upon Riley Easter and the house by the prisoners firing simultaneously, and approaching in a body, taken in connection with the threats and the preparation of weapons, if believed, there could only be one question—the identity of the parties. But the judge left to the jury the question as to whether the killing was murder in the second degree, but charged that if it “was by premeditation and deliberation and malice, done in pursuance of a common design entered into, common enterprise entered into by all of them, after it had been premeditated and deliberated upon by them, and they did it with malice, then they would be guilty of murder in the first degree.”

[4, 5] The evidence against the prisoners was fuller and more complete than above set out, but sufficient is recited to point the exceptions taken. The law is thus clearly stated in a recent case by Brown, J., State v. Walker, 173 N. C. 782, 92 S. E. 328:

“Premeditation and deliberation, like any other fact, may be shown by circumstances, and in determining as to whether there was such premeditation and deliberation the jury may consider the entire absence of provocation and all the circumstances under which the homicide is committed. State v. Roberson, 150 N. C. 837 [64 S. E. 182]; Carr on Homicide, § 72. If the circumstances show a formed design to take the life of the deceased, the crime is murder in the first degree. This subject is so fully discussed in the many cases in our reports that it is useless to pursue the matter further.”

The facts were carefully stated to the jury and the law laid down according to the precedents. It would be difficult to find any set of facts which, if believed by the jury, would more completely constitute malice, premeditation, and deliberation than those testified to in this case, and which the jury found to be true under the charge of the court.

In the oral argument here, counsel for the prisoners presented objections to the charge which are not set out in the exceptions taken on the trial or in the assignments of error. In a matter of this importance it may be that, if exceptions of importance were omitted by oversight, the court would by amendment allow the assignment of error to be entered here; but we have examined the alleged errors and find no merit in them.

After the fullest consideration of the evidence and the charge and the argument of counsel, we find in the conduct of the trial nothing prejudicial to the rights of the prisoners.

No error.

ALLEN, J. (concurring in result). I think there are several errors in the charge as it appears in the record, but they are not excepted to, presumably because the charge was not transcribed correctly by the stenographer, and as there is no error in the exceptions taken, and it appears to me that the prisoners began firing simultaneously when the deceased appeared at the door of his house and could have had but one intent, and that was a common purpose to kill, I agree to the judgment of the court. As I read the record, the question in controversy was one of identity, and that has been decided against the prisoners under instructions which are free from criticism on the controverted issue. I do not wish to animadvert on the judges of the superior court, knowing as I do the many duties they have to perform; but they owe it to themselves and to the public to scrutinize the records we are called on to review.

In this case the judge is placed in the attitude of charging that the burden was on the defendants to show matters in mitigation beyond a reasonable doubt, when he doubtless charged “not beyond a reasonable doubt, but to the satisfaction of the jury.” This was not excepted to.

In another case at this term, one of the most learned judges on the superior court bench appears to have held that the vendor of personal property has a vendor's lien for the purchase money which deprived the vendor of his personal property exemption as against the purchase money, because he signed a judgment hastily for the accommodation of parties not knowing the question was raised.

Much of the difficulty about records arises from the extension of the statutory time for making up the case on appeal; and, while I would not favor withdrawing from counsel the right to extend the time by consent, I am of opinion a rule ought to be adopted that there shall be no further extension of the time entered upon the record without the written approval of the judge, before whom the action is tried, as in this way he may have the opportunity of settling the case before he has left the district or has overlooked many of the incidents of the trial.

(178 N. C. 424)

McLEAN, Com'r, et al. v. CALDWELL.
(No. 302.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1919.)

1. REMAINDERS ⇐16—SALE UNDER ORDER OF COURT; REINVESTMENT.

Under Revisal 1905, § 1590, court may order sold for reinvestment land devised for life with remainder in fee to life tenant's oldest daughter, if any, and, if no daughter, then to the oldest son, or should he die without issue then to another in fee simple, where the land was in best business district and too valuable to be used for residence purposes, and there was only one small dwelling on the land and no appreciable revenue therefrom, and tenant and contingent remaindermen were without funds to pay taxes or improve the property, or to pay inheritance taxes assessed, and the best interest of all concerned would be subserved by a sale for reinvestment.

2. REMAINDERS ⇐16—SALE UNDER ORDER OF COURT; PRIVATE NEGOTIATION.

A sale of land for reinvestment may be effected by private negotiation, under Revisal 1905, § 1590, subject to the approval of the court, when it is properly made to appear that the best interest of all the parties so requires.

3. REMAINDERS ⇐16—SALE UNDER ORDER OF COURT; DISPOSITION OF PURCHASE PRICE MONEY.

A purchaser of land sold for reinvestment under Revisal 1905, § 1590, is not charged with duty of looking after the proper disposition of the purchase money, but when he has paid his bid into court or to the parties authorized to receive it by the court's decree, he is acquitted of further obligation concerning it.

4. REMAINDERS ⇐16—SALE UNDER ORDER OF COURT; PROVISION IN DECREE FOR SAFETY OF FUND.

The proper care and safety of the fund, where land is sold for reinvestment under Revisal 1905, § 1590, can be provided for in the final decree of the court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Robeson County; Calvert, Judge.

Controversy without action by J. Dickson McLean, Commissioner, and others against S. F. Caldwell. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The controversy is to determine the right to enforce collection of a bid for real estate, sold for reinvestment under section 1590 of Revisal. There was judgment that the title offered was a good one, and that the defendant, the purchaser at judicial sale, comply with his bid. Defendant excepted and appealed.

McIntyre, Lawrence & Proctor, of Lumberton, for appellant.

McLean, Varner, McLean & Stacy, of Lumberton, for appellees.

HOKE, J. The facts pertinent to the inquiry, and showing the action of the superior court thereon, are very satisfactorily stated in the appellant's brief filed in the cause, and are as follows:

"Fannie Peterson, owner in fee simple of a lot in the business portion of Lumberton, died leaving a will wherein she devised said lot to Eugene Bond for life, with remainder in fee to his oldest daughter, if any, or if no daughter, then to his oldest son, or should he die without issue then to Allen Bond in fee simple. In said will she also directed her executors to purchase another lot, adjoining the lot then owned by her, the title to which lot, when so purchased, to be held for the same persons and subject to the same conditions and limitations as set forth in the will with respect to the lot owned by her at her death. Pursuant to such direction, her executor acquired title of said lot, and the two lots together, embracing one acre of land which is the subject of this action.

"Eugene Bond, the life tenant, is living and above the age of 25, but is unmarried. The contingent remaindermen, Victor Bond and Allen Bond, are living, above the age of 21, but are unmarried.

"In 1917, Eugene Bond, the life tenant, instituted an action in the superior court of Robeson county to have said land sold for reinvestment under section 1590 of the Revisal. Victor Bond, Allen Bond, R. S. Bond, executor of Fannie Peterson, and the unborn children of Eugene Bond, Victor Bond, and Allen Bond were defendants in this action, and summons was duly served upon them. Upon application the judge appointed a guardian ad litem to represent the unborn children of the life tenant and devisees and all contingent remaindermen. A verified complaint was filed, alleging that the land was in the business district of Lumberton, and too valuable to be used for residence purposes; that there was only one small dwelling on the land, and there was no appreciable revenue therefrom; that the life tenant and living contingent remaindermen were without funds to pay taxes or improve the property, or to pay inheritance taxes assessed, and that the best interest of all concerned would be subserved by a sale for reinvestment. The guardian ad litem filed answer, admitting the allegations of the complaint. At December term, 1917, Judge Bond entered a decree of sale, appointing J. Dickson McLean as commissioner, and authorizing him to secure private bids and submit same to the court. Thereafter S. F. Caldwell, defendant in this action, addressed a written bid to the commissioner, offering him $25,000 for a 'good, perfect, and indefeasible title in fee simple' to said lands. The commissioner filed report, recommending the acceptance of this bid, whereupon at September term, 1919, his honor, Judge Calvert, signed a decree, authorizing acceptance of the bid and directing the commissioner to execute a deed conveying said land to the purchaser in fee simple upon payment of the purchase money, the decree further providing that the proceeds of sale should be deposited in bank at interest until such time as a decree for reinvestment of the proceeds of sale could be entered. The commissioner thereupon tendered a deed in the usual form of a commissioner's deed to said Caldwell, who declined to accept same or pay the purchase money, for that he was advised by counsel that there was doubt as to the power of the court to decree a sale of said lands, and for that there was doubt as to whether, upon the face of the record of said proceedings, the deed of the commissioner would convey a good, perfect, and indefeasible title in fee simple to said lands.

"This action was thereupon instituted by the commissioner and the living devisees and executor of Fannie Peterson against said S. F. Caldwell, for the purpose of requiring said Caldwell to comply with his bid, receive the deed from the commissioner, and pay the purchase money. There being no dispute whatever as to the facts, the cause was submitted to the court below upon a case of agreed facts. The court being of opinion that upon the face of the record the court had the power to decree a sale of said lands, and being of opinion that the deed of the commissioner would pass a good, perfect, and indefeasible title in fee simple to the purchaser, judgment was entered, requiring defendant to comply with his bid and pay the purchase money, to which judgment defendant excepted and appealed."

[1-4] In several recent cases before us, the questions presented were fully and directly considered, and the decisions are in full support of his honor's ruling in the premises. Dawson v. Wood, 177 N. C. 159, 98 S. E. 459; Pendleton v. Williams, 175 N. C. 248, 95 S. E. 500; Thompson v. Rospigliosi, 182 N. C. 145, 77 S. E. 113. From a perusal of these cases and the authorities cited therein, it will clearly appear: (1) That on the facts presented the court had full power to order a sale for reinvestment under the statute. (2) That the same can be effected by private negotiation, subject to the approval of the court, when it is properly made to appear that the best interest of all the parties so requires. This was the course pursued and directly approved in Dawson's Case, supra. (3) That ordinarily and on the facts of this record the purchaser is not charged with duty of looking after the proper disposition of the purchase money, but when he has paid his bid into court or to the parties authorized to receive it by the court's decree, he is "quit of further obligation concerning it" (Dawson v. Wood, supra; Pendleton v. Williams, supra); and as said further in the Dawson Case, the proper care and safety of the fund can be provided for in the final decree.

It may be well to call attention to two recent statutes in reference to the care and proper investment of funds arising by reason of these sales for reinvestment. Laws 1919, c. 17; Laws 1919, c. 259.

On the record, the judgment of the superior court is affirmed.

Affirmed.

(178 N. C. 447)

SHANNONHOUSE et al. v. FLEETWOOD.
(No. 34.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 19, 1919.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — 138(1)—
SALE WITH WIDOW'S APPROVAL.

Where the will authorized sale of unremunerative property in the discretion of executor, subject to a provision requiring him to secure consent of the widow, he had power to sell unprofitable land and reinvest proceeds, where she in writing consented thereto.

Appeal from Superior Court, Perquimans County; Bond, Judge.

Submission of controversy without action by W. T. Shannonhouse, executor, and others, against J. Fleetwood. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Controversy without action submitted to Bond, J., in the superior court of Perquimans county, August, 1919. The plaintiffs contracted to sell to the defendant a certain tract of land at a certain price. The defendant is willing to take the land and pay the money, but avers that the title is not good. The court held that the title was not good and adjudged that the defendant be not required to pay the purchase money. Plaintiffs appealed.

William T. Shannonhouse, of Norfolk, Va., for appellants.

Charles Whedbee, of Hertford, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The title to the land depends upon the construction of the will of H. T. Shannonhouse, deceased. It is admitted that if the executor, William T. Shannonhouse, acting in connection with the wife of the testator, has power to sell the land under the terms of the will, then the proffered title is good and the defendant may justly be required to pay the purchase money. The will contains the following provisions:

"I hereby appoint my brother, Wm. T. Shannonhouse, to be and act as my sole executor, and that he shall furnish good and sufficient bond.

"I hereby impose upon my executor, as part of his duties hereunder, that in all matters he shall consult and secure the consent in writing of my wife, Annie H. Shannonhouse, regarding all matters of purchase, or sale and reinvestments.

"I hereby desire and will to my wife, Annie H. Shannonhouse, all of my life insurance, to be paid her immediately upon settlement of same with the Insurance Companies, said sum to belong to her in full and in fee.

"No. 2.

"I will and devise to my wife, Annie H. Shannonhouse, during her lifetime all of my properties of all and every kind.

"I hereby appoint and authorize my brother, Wm. T. Shannonhouse, to act as manager, and have full power of handling all property for my wife, Annie H. Shannonhouse, subject to paragraph three on sheet No. 1.

"It is my will and desire that any property that I may own at the time of my death, and any of same should be found to be not profitable or remunerative, that same shall, in the discretion of my brother, Wm. T. Shannonhouse, subject to paragraph three of sheet No. 1, be sold, and the proceeds of same reinvested in good and substantial stocks, bonds or real estate.

"I will and devise that all revenue from my property of all kinds (No. 3 sheet) be paid to my wife, Annie H. Shannonhouse."

It is stated in the case that in the opinion of W. T. Shannonhouse, executor, concurred in by Annie H. Shannonhouse, by her consent in writing, the said farms are not profitable or remunerative, and it would be for the best interest of all that a sale be made of all the farms and proceeds reinvested in good substantial stocks, bonds, or real estate.

We are of opinion that, under the will, the power of sale is conferred upon the executor subject to the approval of the widow. A certain discretion is vested in the executor subject to such approval to determine whether or not any of the property of the testator proves to be unprofitable and unremunerative. In such case, the executor is charged with the duty of selling the same and reinvesting the proceeds in "good and substantial stocks, bonds or real estate." The power of the executor is restricted, always, throughout the entire will, by requiring him to have the approval of the widow. She seems to be the first object of the testator's care and is given practically all the revenues of the estate. It is declared by the executor and the widow that the farms are not profitable or remunerative, and that it would be for the best interest of all concerned that a sale be made of all the farms and the proceeds reinvested according to the terms of the will.

We think this provision of the will speaks for itself and is couched in plain and simple terms. It is not unreasonable. On the contrary, it may be a wise provision, by which the income of the widow may be increased.

We are of opinion that the proffered title is good, and that the defendant should be required to accept the deed and pay the purchase money.

Reversed.

(178 N. C. 429)

MORRISON & HILD v. MARKS. (No. 392.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1919.)

1. TRIAL  $\S$ 140(1)—CREDIBILITY OF EVIDENCE JURY QUESTION.

Credibility of evidence was for jury.

2. SALES  $\S$ 418(1)—NOMINAL DAMAGES; ACTION FOR NONDELIVERY.

In buyer's action for seller's refusal to deliver, where there was evidence to establish a sales contract and a breach thereof by seller, buyer was entitled to recover at least nominal damages.

3. DAMAGES  $\S$ 40(2)—PROFITS; LOSS FROM BREACH OF CONTRACT.

Profits cannot be recovered as damages unless such damages are such as may fairly be supposed to have been contemplated by parties when making contract and might naturally be expected to follow its violation, and are certain both in their nature and in respect to the cause from which they proceed.

4. DAMAGES  $\S$ 176—LOSS OF PROFITS; MATTERS TO BE CONSIDERED.

In ascertaining what profits may be recovered as damages within the rule that such damages may be recovered when within contemplation of parties and certain, it is proper to consider relation of parties, subject-matter of contract, the business of the party, the knowledge of the defendant, and other relative circumstances.

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Lane, Judge.

Action by Morrison & Hild against A. H. Marks. Judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff excepts and appeals. Reversed.

This is an action to recover damages for breach of contract. At the conclusion of the evidence, his honor entered judgment of nonsuit, and the plaintiff excepted and appealed.

John A. Barringer, of Greensboro, for appellant.

King & Kimball, of Greensboro, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. The plaintiff alleges that on January 10, 1917, the defendant contracted to sell him three cars of gum lumber for $12 per thousand and to deliver the same on the cars at Chapel Hill, and that the defendant failed to perform said contract to his damage $360.

These allegations are denied by the defendant.

The plaintiff introduced evidence tending to prove that he was in the lumber business; that M. S. Satterfield was in his employment; that he sent Satterfield out to buy lumber, and he returned and delivered to him memorandum of contract for three cars of gum lumber to be delivered at Chapel Hill for $12 per thousand, signed by the defendant.

Satterfield testified that he went to the home of the defendant and saw him, and said, among other things:

"I bought the three cars of gum. That is a copy of the contract that he signed."

There was also evidence as to the minimum and maximum number of feet in a car of lumber and that the defendant had failed and refused to deliver any of the lumber.

[1, 2] The credibility of this evidence was for the jury, and, if believed, it establishes a valid contract and a breach by the defendant, which would entitle the plaintiff to recover at least nominal damages. Hassard-Short v. Hardison, 114 N. C. 486, 19 S. E. 728.

[3] The measure of damages is not now before us, but it is well to note that profits cannot be recovered as damages except subject to two conditions:

"The damages must be such as may fairly be supposed to have entered into the contemplation of the parties when they made the contract, that is, must be such as might naturally be expected to follow its violation; and they must be certain, both in their nature and in respect to the cause from which they proceed." Wilkinson v. Dunbar, 149 N. C. 23, 62 S. E. 750.

[4] In ascertaining what damages come within the rule, it is proper to consider the relation of the parties, the subject-matter of the contract, the business of the parties, the knowledge of the defendant, and other relevant circumstances. Johnson v. R. R., 140 N. C. 557, 53 S. E. 362.

Reversed.

(178 N. C. 481)

BILYEU v. BECK. (No. 412.)

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 19, 1919.)

PARENT AND CHILD §13(1)—PARENT'S LIABILITY; NEGLIGENT DRIVING OF AUTOMOBILE BY CHILD.

The liability of a defendant, mother, for personal injuries caused by the negligent driving of an automobile by her daughter, past 21 years of age, depends, not upon ownership of the machine, but upon agency express or implied; and, in the absence of evidence that the daughter was on any mission or performing any service for defendant, a nonsuit was proper.

Appeal from Superior Court, Moore County; Shaw, Judge.

Action by Joseph Bilyeu against Mrs. Florence Beck. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This is an action to recover damages for personal injury, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant.

The plaintiff was riding a bicycle along a public road on the 23d of March and was injured by being run over by an automobile, driven by the daughter of the defendant, who was over 21 years of age and an experienced driver.

The plaintiff examined the defendant before the trial under section 864 et seq. of the Revisal, and this examination was introduced in evidence on the trial to prove that the defendant was the owner of the car.

The defendant was not in the car at the time of the injury, and there is no evidence that the car was being used on any business or mission of the defendant.

At the conclusion of the evidence, his honor entered judgment of nonsuit, and the plaintiff excepted and appealed.

Hoyle & Hoyle, of Sanford, and G. H. Humber and L. B. Clegg, both of Carthage, for appellant.

U. L. Spence, of Carthage, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. The evidence of the negligence of the daughter, who was driving the automobile, is not satisfactory; but conceding that it was sufficient to be submitted to the jury, and also that there is evidence that the defendant was the owner of the automobile, these facts alone would not establish the liability of the defendant for the injuries which the plaintiff has sustained.

This was expressly decided in Linville v. Nissen, 162 N. C. 99, 77 S. E. 1098, where it is said:

"The owner of an automobile is not liable for personal injuries caused by it, merely because of his ownership."

And again:

"Even if the son had been the servant of his father in driving the machine, the father would not be liable for his negligence unless his son was at the time acting in the scope of his employment and in regard to his master's business."

The responsibility of the parent for the negligence of the child of mature years and of experience as a driver is not dependent on the ownership of the machine, but upon the principles of agency, express or implied, and in this case there is no evidence that the daughter was on any mission or performing any service for the defendant, her mother.

The two cases on which the plaintiff chiefly relies, Williams v. May, 173 N. C. 78, 91 S. E. 604, and Wilson v. Polk, 175 N. C. 490, 95 S. E. 849, are easily distinguishable.

In the first it was in evidence that the father bought a car for the use of his family, and employed one Orendorff to teach his minor child to run it, and while in this employment the plaintiff was injured, and in the second there was evidence that the owner was in the car at the time of the injury and that it was going on a mission to her farm for her.

In our opinion, the motion for judgment of nonsuit was properly sustained.

Affirmed.

(118 S. C. 84)

JOWERS v. DYSARD CONST. CO.
(No. 10289.)

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 11, 1919.)

1. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT ¶47—NONSUIT AS TO ITEMS OF ACCOUNT OR SEPARATE ELEMENTS OF DAMAGES.

A nonsuit cannot be granted as to items of an account or separate elements of damages, but the remedy is by a request to charge that the objectionable items and elements of damage are not recoverable.

2. CONTRACTS ¶322(2) — EVIDENCE; PERFORMANCE.

In an action by subcontractor against the contractor to recover for work done in constructing manholes and flush tanks in a sewer system for a city, where plaintiff had testified that his work was satisfactory to the city and its inspectors, evidence by the city engineer, as to whether plaintiff's work was satisfactory, was improperly excluded.

3. DAMAGES ¶124(4)—BREACH OF CONTRACT; ELEMENTS.

Where plaintiff subcontractor had performed part of the work under a contract for the construction of manholes and flush tanks in sewer system in subservience to defendant's contract with the city, the value of plaintiff's services in the performance of the contract was an item to be considered in the cost of performance.

4. EVIDENCE ¶318(4)—HEARSAY; REPORT OF CITY INSPECTOR INADMISSIBLE.

In a subcontractor's action against a contractor to recover for the construction of certain manholes and flush tanks in sewer system, where plaintiff had testified that his work was satisfactory to the city, a report of a city inspector was properly excluded as hearsay.

Hydrick, Watts, and Gage, JJ., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court, of Richland County; R. W. Memminger, Judge.

Action by J. M. Jowers against the Dysard Construction Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, and new trial ordered.

Nettles & Tobias, and J. Fraser Lyon, all of Columbia, for appellant.

W. N. Graydon, of Columbia, for respondent.

FRASER, J. The respondent in his argument on appeal makes the following statement of the facts:

"J. M. Jowers made a contract with the Dysard Construction Company to build certain manholes and flush tanks in the city of Columbia. Dysard Construction Company had a contract with the city of Columbia to build these things and hired Jowers to do certain parts of the work. The contract was in writing and specifically stated the price of the manholes and flush tanks as so much per foot. The testimony showed there were 84 manholes and 173 flush tanks to be built.

"Jowers commenced work on the contract and bought a mule, and wagon, cement, brick, and other material, and built four manholes and eleven tanks, when the defendant drove him off of the work and refused to allow him to finish the contract. The plaintiff then commenced this action, and demanded judgment for the sum of $1,674 damages for breach of the contract and $96.91 for work already done.

"He expressly sought damages for the profits he alleged he would have made on the work, basing his estimate on the amount he had made on the work already done.

"The answer of defendant was a general denial and an allegation that plaintiff had voluntarily abandoned the work and that it had paid him for the work already done."

The judgment was for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed upon eight exceptions.

[1] I. The first three exceptions complain of error in refusing a nonsuit as to separate items of the account. These exceptions cannot be sustained, as there is no provision for a nonsuit as to items of an account, or separate elements of damages. The remedy is a request to charge that the objectionable items and elements of damage are not recoverable.

[2] II. The next objection is that the witness T. K. Legare was not allowed to answer the question, "Was Jowers' work satisfactory to your inspectors and yourself?"

The witness was the city engineer. The plaintiff, when on the stand, said:

"I knew the work would be under the city engineer, and that his inspector would check me up and report to the city. I knew the work would have to come up to city specifications. My work was satisfactory to the city and its inspectors."

The contract of the plaintiff and defendant was a subcontract, made in subservience to the contract between the defendant and the city. The testimony of the city engineer was competent. The fourth exception is sustained.

III. The appellant complains of error in the exclusion of a report of city inspector,

J. W. Burdell. The report was excluded on the ground that the city was not a party to the action. The plaintiff had testified that his work was satisfactory to the city inspectors. We have seen that the city contract was in question and the testimony was competent to disprove his statement.

[3] IV. His honor, the presiding judge, charged the jury that the value of the contract was the difference in the cost to the plaintiff of performing the unfinished part of the contract and the price which the defendant had agreed to pay to the plaintiff to perform it. The appellant asked his honor to charge the jury that the value of the plaintiff's service in the performance of the contract was an item to be considered in the cost of performance. This his honor refused to do, and in this he was in error. This is a contract for construction and not a contract for personal service.

The last two exceptions complain of matters that are incident to the trial complained of, and, as a new trial must be ordered, these exceptions need not be considered.

The judgment is reversed and a new trial ordered.

GARY, C. J., concurs.

HYDRICK, WATTS, and GAGE, JJ.
[4] We concur, except as to the disposition of the third point considered. We think the report of Burdell was properly excluded, because it was hearsay.

(113 S. C. 22)

COLE v. JEFFERSON STANDARD LIFE
INS. CO. (No. 10284.)

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 21, 1919.)

INSURANCE §152(3), 360(3)—DISTRIBUTION
OF PROFITS TO PREVENT FORFEITURE; POLICY.

In an action on a life insurance policy issued March 1, 1911, where it appeared insured died May 24, 1918, and premium due March 1, 1918, was not paid, exclusion of evidence as to the amount of profits earned by the policy at the end of 5 years, on the ground that the policy provided for a distribution of profits only at the end of 20 years, was improper, the Insurance Commission having, before the policy was issued, forbidden a distribution period of more than 5 years; for, whatever the expressed language of the policy might be, the law would read it to provide for a 5-year and not 20-year distribution period.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Anderson County; George E. Prince, Judge.

Action by Mollie E. Cole, administratrix of the estate of William H. Cole, against the Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant on a directed verdict, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and new trial ordered.

K. P. Smith and A. H. Dagnall, both of Anderson, for appellant.

Brooks, Sapp & Kelly, of Greensboro, N. C., and Lee & Moise, of Sumter, for respondent.

FRASER, J. This is an action on a policy of insurance on the life of William H. Cole, issued by the Greensborough Life Insurance Company on March 1, 1911, and assumed by the Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Company on September 20, 1912.

William H. Cole died on May 24, 1918. The deceased had borrowed on his policy the sum of $309. The premium due on March 1, 1918, of $91.92 was not paid. The policy provided for a distribution of the profits only at the end of 20 years. The plaintiff offered to prove the profits at the end of 5 years. The evidence was excluded by the court.

The failure of evidence to prove that there was sufficient funds in the hands of the company was, of course, manifest, and the presiding judge directed a verdict for the defendant. From the judgment entered upon this verdict, the plaintiff appealed.

Before this policy was issued, the Insurance Commission of South Carolina had issued an order forbidding a distribution period of more than 5 years. This policy violated that order making its distribution period 20 years, instead of 5 years.

On the trial of the cause, the plaintiff offered to prove the amount of profits earned by this policy. The defendant objected on the ground that the policy provided for a distribution period at the end of 20 years and that no profits could be claimed before the end of 20 years. This objection was sustained, and from this ruling the plaintiff appealed.

1. This ground of appeal must be sustained.

The insurance commissioner required as a condition precedent to the issuance of a license, that no policies should be issued with a longer distribution period than 5 years. To this the Greensborough Life Insurance Company promised compliance and accepted its license. The state is a party, and a controlling party, to all contracts. Whatever the expressed language of the policy may be, the law reads that contract to provide for a 5-year and not a 20-year distribution period. The testimony was competent, and its exclusion was error.

II. There was evidence from which waiver might be inferred, and that question should have been submitted to the jury.

The judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

GARY, C. J., and HYDRICK, WATTS, and GAGE, JJ., concur.

(112 S. C. 39)

GILL v. WALKER et al. (No. 10286.)

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 11, 1919.)

1. HABEAS CORPUS  $\S$ 99(3) — CUSTODY OF CHILD; BEST INTERESTS AS DETERMINING ELEMENT.

While the legal and moral claims of claimants to custody of a child may not be ignored in disposing of such custody, the paramount consideration of the court is the welfare of the child, and as a general rule it should be placed where its best interests will be subserved.

2. HABEAS CORPUS  $\S$ 85(1) — CUSTODY OF CHILD; EVIDENCE.

In habeas corpus by the sister of an infant against its grandparents to determine the right of custody, evidence held to sustain a finding that the custody was properly awarded petitioner.

Fraser, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Chester County; R. W. Memminger, Judge.

Habeas corpus by Bessie Gill against Neely Walker and others, to determine the right to custody of Mattie Ree Meeks, an infant. Judgment for petitioner, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Marion & Marion and Gaston & Hamilton, all of Chester, for appellants.

Hemphill & Hemphill and S. E. McFadden, all of Chester, for respondent.

HYDRICK, J. This is a proceeding in habeas corpus to determine who is entitled to the custody of Mattie Ree Meeks, the infant daughter of Mattie Meeks, deceased, who was the daughter of Neely and Mattie Walker, and the sister of Bessie Gill. After hearing the evidence, the circuit court awarded the custody of the child to Bessie Gill.

In 1911, Mattie, the deceased, married Sam Meeks, and they lived in the house with her parents, until she died, in 1915, leaving two children, Seretha and Mattie, the subject of this controversy, who was only five days old when her mother died. About two months after the death of its mother the child was turned over to Bessie Gill, who kept it until October, 1918, when it was taken from her and delivered to its grandparents, under an order of the probate court, appointing them guardians of its person and property.

The evidence is conflicting as to the agreement under which Bessie took the child. That introduced by her tends strongly to show that her mother, Mattie Walker, asked her to take it, because it was sickly and puny and required more care and attention than she could give it on account of her advanced age, physical infirmities, and the other cares and duties incumbent upon her, especially the care and attention which she was obliged to bestow upon the older child, Seretha, and for these reasons, after obtaining the consent of her husband, she agreed to take it and raise it as one of her own—she has five of her own—and did so until it was taken from her; that she has become very much attached to it, having taught it to call her mother, and has bestowed upon it the utmost care and attention, without which it would have died; that it was carried to her house by Sam, who expressed his consent that she should have it and his delight that it had found so good a home.

On the other hand, the testimony on the part of the grandparents tends to show that the arrangement with Bessie was intended to be only temporary, and that they compensated her, at least in part, for her care and attention to the baby.

[1] While the legal and moral rights of the claimants to the custody of a child may not be ignored, in disposing of its custody the paramount consideration of the court is the welfare of the child, and as a general rule it should be placed where its best interests will be subserved.

[2] Without going into a detailed consideration of the evidence, which would serve no useful purpose, but giving due weight to everything that has been pressed upon our attention for and against the contentions of the respective parties, we are of the opinion that the decision of the circuit court was right, and it will be affirmed, with this reservation: That the grandparents and sister of the child must have reasonable opportunity to visit it and have it visit and be with them on proper occasions and at reasonable intervals. The parties live in the same community, very near to each other, and the litigation does not seem to have disturbed the paternal and filial relations between them, and there is no reason why they should not be able to agree amongst themselves about the matter, but if they cannot they may apply to the court for its directions.

Judgment affirmed.

GARY, C. J., and WATTS and GAGE, JJ., concur.

FRASER, J. I dissent. First. The record shows that the appellants applied to the probate court for an appointment as guardians of the infant in dispute; that there was an order that the petitioner show cause why the appointment should not be made permanent. This rule seems to have been ignored. This the petitioner had no right to do. If authority for this is deemed necessary, it will be found in Ruling Case Law, vol. 7, p. 1087, where it is said:

"It is a familiar principle that, when a court of competent jurisdiction acquires jurisdiction of the subject-matter of a case, its authority continues, subject duly to the appellate authority, until the matter is finally and completely disposed of, and no court of co-ordinate authority is at liberty to interfere with its action. This is applicable both to civil cases and to criminal prosecutions."

In Ex parte Townes, 97 S. C. 56, 81 S. E. 278, it was held that it is the duty of a citizen to heed the mandate of a court even where the court was without jurisdiction of the person of the defendant. I do not think the petitioner had the right to ignore the mandate of the probate court, or that this court should entertain these proceedings.

Second. I do not think a court should determine so important a question as the permanent guardian of an infant on habeas corpus proceedings. In these proceedings the evidence is by affidavit, and in this very case the petitioner in her argument feels the handicap, and asks this court to make allowances for it. The courts are slow to fix any permanent rights on affidavits. How much more careful should they be in fixing the physical, intellectual, and moral environment of a child at its most impressionable period.

Unquestionably habeas corpus is a proceeding at law. The appointment of a guardian is the highest prerogative of the court of chancery, and the shorthand proceeding at law should not be allowed to oust the jurisdiction of chancery.

In Ex parte Richards, 2 Brev. 376, it was said that by legislative act the courts of common pleas, then a court of law only, was given concurrent jurisdiction of appointment of guardians with courts of equity.

Third. On the merits. Much has been said in this case about the hardship of depriving the parties to this proceeding of the custody of the child. That has nothing to do with this case. The respondent seeks by this proceeding to have the presence of this child in her house. She, however, is not in supreme control of her home. Her husband, William Gill, is the head of that household, not only in law but in fact. There is testimony against William Gill as to drunkenness, violence of disposition, and general crookedness. This court should not find against him on either charge from this record, nor by any number of affidavits. There is no word of testimony to show that the environment at the home of the grandparents would endanger the person or morals of the infant. The infant may go to one of two places; one is safe, the other at least doubtful. In this condition of affairs, I do not think this court should hesitate for a minute to send the child to the safe place. The proof is not conclusive, but it may be that William Gill does get drunk on liquor, not allowed by law, and is a man of violence and in his rage, drunk or sober, does beat his wife and pursue her with a shotgun, when in his tantrums. If these things are true and the court has been warned of them, then William Gill's house is not a safe place for that child. Mattie Ree Meeks is not the child of William Gill, nor is she blood kin to him. William Gill may be all he ought to be. There is evidence that he is not, and evidence enough to warn me not to take the risk.

There is evidence that William Gill has said that he would relinquish all claim to the child for $300. That may not be true either. Unless I can know that it is not true, I cannot consent to commit the child to what is really his custody.

Fourth. To my mind there is another objection to the appointment of the petitioner that is insuperable. Mattie Ree Meeks has no brother and only one sister, and this sister is to remain with her grandparents. In my judgment the appointment of the petitioner as guardian separates these two sisters. I do not take the view that the separation will be only nominal. The appellants, it appears, did not take a deed to Mattie, because they thought it treated their granddaughter as a chattel. If this is an index to their characters, then they will not feel at liberty to visit at the house of a son-in-law whom they and their affidavits have denounced as dangerous and unworthy, because they must be, to the head of the house, unwelcome guests. I fully concur in the finding that from what appeared in court there is no antagonism between the appellants and the respondents. There is ill feeling in the case on the part of William, and I think the separation of these two children will be even more complete than if they lived farther apart.

In my view the appointment of the petitioner is manifest error.

For these reasons I dissent.

.

